℣. 7. Then David sent home to Tamar, &c.] Who perhaps was not in the king's palace, but at her brother Absalom's house, ℣. 20. saying, Go now to thy brother Amnon's house; who also had a separate house and equipage, being the king's son, and his eldest son: and dress him meat; such as he may desire, and his stomach will bear.

℣. 8. So Tamar went to her brother Amnon's house, &c.] In obedience to the king's commands, and in affection to her brother, with an innocent breast, having no suspicion of any design upon her chastity: (and he was laid down;) upon a couch or bed in his chamber, as being sick as was pretended, into which she was introduced: and she took flour, and kneaded it; made it into a paste: and made cakes in his sight; a kind of flitters of them, as in the Talmud [y]: and did bake the cakes; or fried them in a frying-pan, in oil.

℣. 9. And she took a pan, and poured them out before him, &c.] Out of the frying-pan, in which they were, into another dish; and all this was done in his presence, that he might see and know of what, and in what manner it was made, that his stomach might not recoil at it: but he refused to eat; for that was not what he wanted: and Amnon said, Have out all men from me; as if company was troublesome

[s] See the Universal History, vol. 3. p. 519. Ed. fol.
[t] In Flaccum, p. 977.
[u] Poem. admon. v. 203, 204.
[w] בבקר בבקר in mane in mane, Montanus.
[x] Fecit amor maciem—— Ovid Metamorph. l. 11. fab. 11. v. 793.
[y] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 21. 1.

bleſome to him, and he wanted reſt, &c. and they went out every man from him; at his orders, that he might get ſome ſleep, as he ſeemed deſirous of it.

℣. 10. And Amnon ſaid unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, &c.] An inner chamber, at a greater diſtance, where they might be more ſecret, and out of the reach of the hearing of any of his domeſtics: that I may eat of thine hand; this he pretended, though his deſign was of another kind: and Tamar took the cakes which ſhe had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon her brother; being quite innocent herſelf, and having no ſuſpicion of a brother having any ill deſign upon her; ſhe made no ſcruple of going into an inner chamber alone with him.

℣. 11. And when ſhe had brought them unto him to eat, &c.] Not only into the chamber, but to the ſide of the bed or couch where he had laid himſelf, or ſat, in a proper poſition to anſwer his purpoſe: he took hold of her; by the arm, or threw his hands about her: and ſaid unto her, Come lie with me, my ſiſter; one would think the relation he obſerves ſhe ſtood in to him, would have checked him from making ſo vile a motion.

℣. 12. And ſhe anſwered him, Nay, my brother, &c.] Which carried in it a reaſon ſufficient for her denial, that he was her brother, and ſhe his ſiſter, and therefore ſhould not offer ſuch an indignity to her: do not force me; which was another forbidding expreſſion, ſignifying ſhe would never freely yield to his will; and to force her, to defile her againſt her will, to commit a rape upon her, would be very criminal indeed: for no ſuch thing ought to be done in Iſrael; among God's profeſſing people, who were better taught and inſtructed; and to give into ſuch impure practices would bring a diſhonour upon them, and upon the religion they profeſſed; ſhe urges the honour of religion, and the reputation of Iſrael, and the glory of the God of Iſrael: do not thou this folly; as all ſin is, eſpecially ſuch an impure and indecent action as this.

℣. 13. And I, whither ſhall I cauſe my ſhame to go? &c.] She deſires him to conſider her reputation, which would be loſt; was ſhe to go into a corner, into a place the moſt private and retired, yet ſhe would bluſh at the thought of the crime committed; and ſtill leſs able would ſhe be to lift up her face in any public company; nor could ſhe ever expect to be admitted into the matrimonial ſtate; in ſhort, her character would be entirely ruined: and as for thee, thou ſhalt be as one of the fools in Iſrael; as the vileſt and baſeſt and moſt abandoned in the nation; who ought of all men to be moſt careful of his reputation, being a prince in Iſrael, and heir apparent to the throne: now therefore, I pray thee, ſpeak unto the king; to give me to thee in marriage: for he will not withhold me from thee; this ſhe ſaid, either as ignorant of the law, which forbids ſuch marriages, or as ſuppoſing the king had a power to diſpenſe with it, and rather than he ſhould die for love, would; though ſhe ſeems to ſay this, and any thing that occurred to her mind, to put him off of his wicked deſign for the preſent, hoping then ſhe ſhould be delivered from him; beſides, ſhe was not his ſiſter by the mother's ſide, and, as the Jews ſay, was born of a captive woman before ſhe was proſelyted and married to David, and ſo was free for Amnon [z]; and others ſay [a], ſhe was the daughter of Maacah by a former huſband, and not by David.

℣. 14. Howbeit, he would not hearken unto her voice, &c.] His luſt was ſo enflamed and enraged, that he could not attend to any arguments, though ever ſo forcible, that were offered to him: but being ſtronger than ſhe, forced her, and lay with her; whether ſhe cried out or no, as the law directs in ſuch caſes, Deut. xxii. 25, 26, 27. is not ſaid; ſhe might, and no body hear her and come to her aſſiſtance; or ſhe might not chuſe to expoſe her brother to his ſervants.

℣. 15. Then Amnon hated her exceedingly, &c.] Having gratified his luſt, his conſcience ſtung him for it, that he could not bear the ſight of the object that had been the inſtrument of it; and it may be the ſharp words ſhe had uſed, repreſenting him as one of the fools in Iſrael, and perhaps ſhe uſed ſharper words ſtill after he had abuſed her, filled him with hatred to her: ſo that the hatred wherewith he hated her, was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her; a like inſtance of love being changed into hatred, after the gratification of luſt, we have in Honorius towards his ſiſter Placidia [b]: and Amnon ſaid unto her, Ariſe, be gone; without calling her by her name, or owning the relation ſhe bore to him, uſing her as the baſeſt and vileſt of creatures. This conduct was very brutiſh, as well as imprudent, and fooliſh to the laſt degree; had he had any regard to his own reputation, he would never have turned her out of doors ſo ſoon, and in ſuch a public manner; but ſo it was ordered by Divine Providence, that his ſin might be made known, and ſo the murder of him for it by Abſalom was brought on, and both were ſuffered as a correction and chaſtiſement to David for his ſins of adultery and murder.

℣. 16. And ſhe ſaid unto him, There is no cauſe, &c.] For ſuch treatment as this: this evil in ſending me away, is greater than the other that thou didſt unto me; not that this was a greater ſin, but it was a greater evil or injury to her, that being done ſecretly, this openly; being turned out in that open manner, it might look as if ſhe was the aggreſſor, and had drawn her brother into this ſin, or however had conſented to it; had it been kept a ſecret, ſhe would not have been expoſed to public ſhame and diſgrace, and ſhe might have been diſpoſed of in marriage to another; it would not have been known to the grief of her father, to the revenge of Abſalom, and to the diſhonour of religion; beſides, the ſin of Amnon might have been more eaſily excuſed, if any excuſe could be made for it, as that it aroſe from the force of luſt, and a ſtrong impure affection, but this from barbarity and inhumanity: but he would not hearken unto her; but inſiſted upon her immediate departure.

℣. 17. Then he called his ſervants that miniſtred unto him, &c.] His domeſtic ſervants that waited on him: and ſaid, Put now this woman out from me; ſhe not willing to depart at once, he ordered her to be put out immediately by force; uſing her and ſpeaking of her in a very rude and ſcandalous manner, calling her this, leaving it to be ſupplied, as they would underſtand it, this baſe woman, this ſtrumpet, &c. and bolt the door after her; that ſhe might not return; this was more diſgraceful ſtill.

℣. 18. And ſhe had a garment of divers colours upon her, &c.] Of embroidered work, which made her the more obſervable, and her ſhame the more manifeſt. Whether this was interwoven with threads of divers colours, or embroidered with figures

4

[z] Maimon. Hilchot Melacim, c. 8. §. 8. Kimchi in 2 Sam. xiii. 1.
[a] R. Moſes Kotzenſis, pr. affirm. 122.
[b] Olympiodorus apud Grotium in loc.

figures of flowers, animals, &c. and wrought with the needle, or was painted with different colours, or made up of pieces of various colours, is not certain. See the note on Gen. xxxvii. 3. but according to Braunius [c] it was neither, and so the coat of Joseph, but was a garment with sleeves, reaching down to the ancles, and pieced at the borders with fringe; and indeed, garments of flowers and divers colours were such as in other nations, as in Athens, harlots wore [d], and not virgins, as follows: for with such robes were the kings daughters that were virgins apparelled; which they wore to distinguish them both from common people, and from married persons of the same quality: then the servants brought her out, and bolted the door after her; laid hold on her, and brought her out by main force; thrust her out of doors, and turned the key upon her.

℣. 19 And Tamar put ashes on her head, &c.] In token of sorrow and distress; see Josh. vii. 6. and rent her garment of divers colours that was on her; signifying that her virginity was rent from her in a forcible manner, or that she was ravished: and laid her hand on her head; through grief and shame; see Jer. ii. 37. and went on crying; from Amnon's house to her brother Absalom's, as one abused and injured.

℣. 20. And Absalom her brother said unto her, &c.] Either meeting her in the street, or rather when come to his house: Hath Amnon thy brother been with thee? been rude with thee, and lain with thee, which is the meaning of this modest expression; which he guessed at, having heard of her being sent to his house, and knowing his lustful disposition, and seeing her in such a forlorn condition: he calls him Aminon, for so it is in the Hebrew text, and not Amnon, by way of contempt, as Kimchi observes: but hold now thy peace, my sister; be silent, take no notice of this matter, say nothing of it to the king, nor any other, keep it in thine own breast, and make thyself easy: he is thy brother, regard not this thing; it is thy brother that has done it, and not so disgraceful as a meaner person, done in the heat of lust, and a youthful one, and should be forgiven; besides, to divulge it would bring disgrace upon the whole family, and no recompence would be obtained by telling the king of it, since he was his son, his first-born, and heir to the crown; this he said not out of love of Amnon, but as desirous of gratifying private revenge upon him for it when opportunity should serve. So Tamar remained desolate in her brother Absalom's house; not seeing any company, being filled with grief and shame, and none applying to her as a suitor, knowing she was vitiated; how long she continued here, or lived after this, is not certain; no mention is made of her afterwards.

℣. 21. But when king David heard of all these things, &c.] Of Amnon's ravishing Tamar, and turning her out of doors in that inhuman manner he did, and of her distress upon it: he was very wroth; with Amnon; but we read not of any reproof he gave him, nor of any punishment inflicted on him by him. Abarbinel thinks the reason why he was not punished, was because his sin was not cognizable by a court of judicature, nor was punishable by any way, or with any kind of death inflicted by the Sanhedrim, as stoning, burning, &c. nor even by scourging, because there were no witnesses; but the punishment of it was cutting off, i. e. by the hand of God. The Jews say [e] a law was made on this, that virgins or unmarried persons should not be alone; for if this was done to the daughter of a king, much more might it be done to the daughter of a private man; and if to a modest person, much more to an impudent one.

℣. 22. And Absalom spake unto his brother Amnon neither good nor bad, &c.] That is, said nothing at all to him about the rape of his sister; not that he was sulky with him, and would not converse with him at all; for then Amnon would have mistrusted that he was meditating revenge, and therefore would have been upon his guard; but on the contrary he talked freely, and in appearance friendly, on other things, the better to dissemble his hatred of him, and his design to avenge the injury of his sister: for Absalom hated Amnon; or, though [f] he hated him, yet he behaved in this manner towards him: because he had forced his sister Tamar; who was so by father and mother's side, and so near and dear unto him, and therefore resented the injury done her.

℣. 23. And it came to pass after two full years, &c.] Two compleat years after the rape was committed; so long Absalom kept it in his mind, and was contriving how to avenge it; he let it alone so long, that it might be thought by the king and Amnon, and all the family, that it was quite worn out of his mind, and entirely forgotten by him, and therefore might the more safely confide in him: that Absalom had sheep-shearers in Baal-hazor, which is beside Ephraim; though a prince, the son of a king, he had his flocks, and attended to the care of them, and had shearers to shear them at the proper time of the year, which it now was. The Chinese shear their sheep three times a year, in the spring, summer, and autumn; but the first time of shearing yields the best wool [g]. The place of shearing them was, no doubt, near where they were kept in Baal-hazor, in the plain of Hazor, as the Targum, and so some versions; which was a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 25. and near to Ephraim; not that it was a city in the tribe of Ephraim, as Josephus says [h]; but it was near to another city called Ephraim, perhaps the same as in 2 Chron. xiii. 19. and in John xi. 54. it lay to the north east of Jerusalem as you go to Jericho, and is thought by Reland [i] to lie between Bethel and Jericho; and according to Eusebius [k], it was eight miles from Jerusalem; though Jerom [l], through mistake, says twenty; and both these places, according to Bunting [m], were eight miles from Jerusalem; it seems to be the same place that was spoken of in the Misnah [n], called Ephraim in the valley, and which is said to be the second place in the land of Israel for fine flour, and might have its name from its fruitfulness: and Absalom invited all the king's sons; to the sheep-shearing; that is, to the feast which was usually made at such times, and still is; see Gen. xxxviii. 12. 1 Sam. xxv. 2. 8. 11. 36.

℣. 24. And Absalom came to the king, &c.] At Jerusalem, to invite him in person; and said, Behold now, thy servant hath sheep-shearers; persons employed in shearing his sheep; and this being a time of entertainment and joy, let the king, I beseech thee, and his servants, go with thy servant; he invited the king and the whole royal family to go with

[c] De Vest. sacerdot. Heb. l. 1. c. 17. §. 21. [d] Suidas in voce Εταιρων.
[e] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 21. 1.
[f] כי quamvis, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Pool & Patrick.
[g] Semedo's history of China, part 1. ch. 3.
[h] Antiqu. l. 7. c 8. § 2. [i] Palestina illustrat. tom. 1. p. 377.
[k] Apud Reland, ib. & p. 490. & tom. 2. p. 705. [l] De loc. Heb. fol. 91. A. [m] Travels, &c. p. 143. 363.
[n] Menachot, c. 8. §. 1.

with him to Baal-hazor, and partake of the ſheep-ſhearing feaſt; for by his ſervants are not meant the king's domeſtic ſervants, his guard and retinue, but his ſons, as appears by what follows.

ẏ. 25. And the king ſaid to Abſalom, Nay, my ſon, let us not all now go, &c.] He did not object to the invitation entirely, he was willing ſome of the family ſhould go, but not all; it ſeems probable that he particularly excepted himſelf and his eldeſt ſon, the heir to his crown, for the reaſon following: leſt we be chargeable unto thee; one or two perſons more, ſuppoſing them to be private perſons, would have added but little to the expence, if any; but as David was a king, he muſt have come with the retinue of a king, with a large number of ſervants and guards, and muſt be entertained as ſuch; and Amnon, his eldeſt ſon, and heir apparent to the crown, muſt make a figure ſuitable to his quality, which would have conſiderably raiſed the expence; and perhaps Abſalom's eſtate he had to live upon might be but ſmall, which David knew, and therefore choſe not to be burdenſome to him: and he preſſed him; urged him to go; not that he expected he would, or really deſired he ſhould, but this he did to hide his intention, that he might have no ſuſpicion of his deſign againſt Amnon; or otherwiſe he might think he would not have been ſo preſſing upon him to go with him: howbeit he would not go, but bleſſed him; thanked him for the invitation he gave him, and wiſhed him much happineſs and pleaſure at his entertainment with his friends.

ẏ. 26. Then ſaid Abſalom, If not, &c.] If it is not thy pleaſure to go with me, if I cannot have the honour of thy company: I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us; let me have the next mark of honour that can be given me, the preſence of the king's eldeſt ſon and heir to the crown; he ſeems to expreſs affection for him, and a particular deſire of his company, as if all ill will towards him was removed from him, and this would be a public declaration of reconciliation between them: and the king ſaid unto him, why ſhould he go with thee? he particularly, he more than any other; David ſeems to have ſuſpected ſome deſign, and it is ſtrange he ſhould not; and yet if he had, it is much, notwithſtanding the preſſing arguments uſed, he ſhould let him go; or he might think it would be more expenſive to have him than the reſt, and therefore aſks why he ſhould deſire his company above all others.

ẏ. 27. But Abſalom preſſed him, &c.] Which one would think would have increaſed his ſuſpicion, if he had any, or have raiſed it in him; but his mind was blinded, that Amnon's inceſt might be puniſhed, and the threatening to David and his houſe be fulfilled on account of the affair of Uriah and Bathſheba: and he let Amnon and all the king's ſons go with him; if he had any ſuſpicion at all, he might chuſe they ſhould all go, that they might protect and defend him, if any attempt was made upon him; or, as others think, that no exceptions might be taken, as might be, if Amnon had gone alone.

ẏ. 28. Now Abſalom had commanded his ſervants, &c.] Before he and his gueſts were ſet down to the entertainment: ſaying, mark ye now, when Amnon's heart is merry with wine; as he was determined to make him if poſſible, and as he ſuppoſed he would be, knowing his inclination to drink: and when I ſay unto you, ſmite Amnon, then kill him; ſmite him that he die, and be ſure he is dead before you leave him: fear not, have not I commanded you? who am your lord, the king's ſon, and will then be heir to the crown; fear not, I'll protect you; let all the blame be laid to me, if any; I'll be anſwerable for it, you have nothing to do but to obey my commands: be courageous, and be valiant; ſhow yourſelves to be men of courage and valour, not fearing the king's ſons, or any in company, or what will be the conſequences of it; do your buſineſs effectually, and leave all with me; it is very reaſonably ſuppoſed, that Abſalom had not only in view to revenge the rape of his ſiſter, but to get himſelf next heir to the crown.

ẏ. 29. And the ſervants of Abſalom did unto Amnon as Abſalom had commanded, &c.] They ſmote him, and killed him, when he gave the word: then all the king's ſons aroſe; from the feaſt, imagining they were all deſigned to be ſlain: and every man gat him up upon his mule, and fled; creatures much uſed in Judea inſtead of horſes, which though they might not be bred, might be uſed [o].

ẏ. 30. And it came to paſs while they were in the way, &c.] On their road homewards, before they got to Jeruſalem: that tidings came to David; perhaps brought by one who was at the entertainment, who upon ſeeing Amnon ſmitten, immediately roſe up and fled with the news of it to David: ſaying, Abſalom hath ſlain all the king's ſons, and there is not one of them left; which he might ſuppoſe was the deſign of Abſalom, and was done before that time; however, ſo it was ordered in providence, that David, that rejoiced at the news of the death of Uriah might be terrified with the tidings of the death of all his ſons; and for a while it was as if it was really ſo, which occaſioned the following behaviour in him.

ẏ. 31. Then the king aroſe, and tore his garments, &c.] In token of extreme grief and ſorrow, as Jacob did when he was ſhewn the coat of Joſeph, ſuppoſing him to have been ſlain, as David thought all his ſons were, Gen. xxxvii. 34. and lay on the earth; on the bare ground, another token of mourning; ſo Job did on hearing the death of his ſons, Job i. 20. and all his ſervants ſtood by with their clothes rent; did as David did, in imitation of him, joining with him in expreſſions of ſorrow; theſe were his courtiers, miniſters of ſtate, and principal officers in his houſhold.

ẏ. 32. And Jonadab the ſon of Shimeah David's brother, &c.] The ſame that adviſed Amnon to feign himſelf ſick, to get Tamar ſent to him, that he might enjoy her, ẏ. 3. anſwered and ſaid; ſaid in anſwer to the report brought to the king, which threw him into ſuch an agony: Let not my lord ſuppoſe that they have ſlain all the young men the king's ſons; he did not believe it himſelf, and would not have the king entertain ſuch a thought, and diſtreſs himſelf with it: for Amnon only is dead; he is very poſitive, and ſpeaks with great aſſurance; it looks as if he was in the ſecret, and knew of the plot againſt Amnon's life; and if ſo, he muſt be a very wicked man, firſt to form a ſcheme whereby Amnon might come at Tamar to raviſh her, and then be acceſſary to the murder of him, as he muſt, if he knew of the deſign againſt his life, and did not acquaint him and the king of it; and this ſeems to be confirmed by what follows: for by the appointment of Abſalom this hath been determined, from the day that he forced his ſiſter Tamar; that is, the ſlaying of Amnon; the meaning is, either that Abſalom had had given orders to his ſervants to ſlay him, whenever they had an opportunity; or it was in the mouth of Abſalom[p], as it may be rendered; he uſed to declare it to his intimate friends, that it was the purpoſe and reſolution of his heart to kill Amnon ſome time or another; and this he had taken up from the time of his ſiſter Tamar's being forced, and becauſe of that, of which Jonadab had intelligence by ſome means or another; and who ſpeaks of this rape without any ſeeming emotion, as if he had no concern at all in it.

[o] Vid. Miſn. Celaim, c. 8. §. 1.

ver. 33. Now therefore let not my lord the king take the thing to his heart, &c.] Neither ſuppoſe it, nor be troubled for it: to think that all the king's ſons are dead; which was not to be thought, nor could any good reaſon be given for ſuch a ſuppoſition: for Amnon only is dead; he repeats it again with great aſſurance, which ſeems to confirm the ſuſpicion of him before ſuggeſted; though ſome think he ſaid this not from certain knowledge, but by conjecture.

ver. 34. But Abſalom fled, &c.] He who promiſed his ſervants protection could not protect himſelf, and who no doubt fled with him; he knew what he had done was death by law, and that there was no city of refuge for ſuch ſort of murder as this, and he had no reaſon to hope the king would ſuffer ſo foul a crime as this to paſs unpuniſhed: and the young man that kept the watch, lift up his eyes, and looked; to the way that led from Abſalom's houſe to Jeruſalem, to ſee if he could ſpy any other meſſenger on the road from thence: and behold, there came much people by the way of the hill-ſide behind him; that is, behind the watchman, who looking round him, ſaw them; theſe people were the king's ſons and their attendants, who, being at ſome diſtance, the young man could not diſcern who they were; they did not come the direct road from Abſalom's houſe, but came a round about way, for fear, as R. Iſaiah rightly conjectures, leſt Abſalom ſhould purſue, or ſend purſuers after them, and ſlay them; though others, as Kimchi thinks, this refers to the hill, and that the ſenſe is, that the watchman ſaw them coming from the way which was behind the hill, and began to ſee them when they came to the ſide of it, which was the way that led to the city, ſurrounded by mountains, ſee Pſ. cxxv. 2.

ver. 35. And Jonadab ſaid to the king, Behold, the king's ſons come, &c.] For as they came nearer, it was plainly diſcovered that they were the king's ſons, ſeen on the ſide of the hill: as thy ſervant ſaid, ſo it is; he ſeems to applaud himſelf, and exult at his penetration and foreſight.

ver. 36. And it came to paſs as ſoon as he had made an end of ſpeaking, &c.] As ſoon as the above words were out of his mouth: that behold the king's ſons came; into the palace, and into the apartment where the king was: and lift up their voice and wept; not being able to tell the ſorrowful news with their mouths, but declared it by geſtures: and the king alſo and all his ſervants wept very ſore; they joined the king's ſons in weeping, and were the more moved to it by their weeping, and the rather, ſince hereby the news of Amnon's murder was confirmed.

ver. 37. But Abſalom fled, &c.] As before related, but here repeated for the ſake of what follows: and went to Talmai the ſon of Ammihud king of Geſhur; his mother's father, ſee ch. iii. 3. where he might hope for protection and ſafety: and David mourned for his ſon every day; or all the days[q], i. e. of the three years Abſalom was in Geſhur, about the end of which he was comforted concerning Amnon, as the following verſes ſhew. Some think it was for Abſalom he mourned, but rather for Amnon. The reaſon why he mourned for him, when he did not for his child by Bath-ſheba, who died, becauſe that was an infant, this a grown man, and heir to his crown, and was ſlain by the ſword of his brother, and ſo fulfilled a threatening to himſelf on account of his own ſin, which hereby no doubt was brought freſh to his mind.

ver. 38. So Abſalom fled, &c.] This is the third time it is mentioned, and the reaſon of it here Abarbinel thinks is, that when he firſt fled to his grandfather, he uſed to ſtand openly in the court of his palace, and go with him wherever he went from place to place; but when he underſtood that his father mourned ſo for the death of Amnon, he was afraid he would ſend ſome perſon to lay hold on him, and take vengeance on him; and therefore he would go no more with the king from place to place, but went and abode in Geſhur always, which was a fortified city, as it follows: and went to Geſhur, and was there three years; and never went out of it, until he was fetched by Joab, as the next chapter relates; nor is there any thing in this and the preceding verſe diſturbed and mutilated, as Spinoſa[r] intimates, but the whole is very expreſſive and emphatical.

ver. 39. And the ſoul of king David longed to go forth unto Abſalom, &c.] In like manner it is ſupplied and paraphraſed in the Targum, becauſe the word rendered longed is feminine; though it may be uſed to denote the effeminateneſs of David's diſpoſition and carriage on this occaſion. Aben Ezra thinks the word wife ſhould be ſupplied, and then the ſenſe is, that the wife of king David, the mother of Abſalom, made ſupplication to him to ſend forth one of the young men to fetch Abſalom, and that by her importunity to him, ſhe ſtirred up a longing deſire in David after him. Abarbinel obſerves from another writer of theirs, that all the three years David was mourning for his ſon, he went out continually to ſeek to take vengeance on Abſalom; but after that time, the mother of Abſalom, or Tamar his ſiſter, or his daughter, was importunate with the king, and reſtrained him from going forth to ſeek vengeance on Abſalom; and when he was comforted concerning Amnon, that woman found means to reſtrain him from going out, and he reſtrained his ſervants from going forth againſt Abſalom; and ſo he obſerves the word is uſed for withholding or reſtraining in Pſ. xl. 10. and this agrees with ſeveral antient verſions, as the Vulgate Latin, "King David ceaſed to perſecute Abſalom;" and the Septuagint, "king David ceaſed to go out to Abſalom;" and the Syriac verſion, "and king David abſtained from going out after Abſalom:" for he was comforted concerning Amnon, ſeeing he was dead; and could not be brought back from the grave, though Abſalom might be from his exile, to which he had an inclination; but he knew not how to do it, conſiſtent with juſtice and his own honour.

[p] על פי אבישלום in ore Abſalom, V. L. Vatablus. Pagninus, Montanus.

[q] כל הימים cunctis diebus, V. L. omnibus diebus, Pagninus, Montanus.

[r] Tractat. Theolog. politic. c. 9. p. 176.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter relates, that Joab, perceiving David's inclination to bring back Abſalom, employed a wiſe woman of Tekoah to lay before him a feigned caſe of hers, drawn up by Joab, whereby this point was gained from the king, that murder might be diſpenſed with in her caſe, ℣. 1—20. which being applied to the caſe of Abſalom, and the king finding out that the hand of Joab was in this, ſent for him, and ordered him to bring Abſalom again, though as yet he would not ſee his face, ℣. 21—24. and after ſome notice being taken of the beauty of Abſalom's perſon, particularly of his head of hair, and of the number of his children, ℣. 25, 26, 27. it is related, that after two full years, Abſalom was uneaſy that he might not ſee the king's face, and ſent for Joab, who refuſed to come to him, till he found means to oblige him to it, who, with the king's leave, introduced him to him, ℣. 28—33.

℣. 1. Now Joab the ſon of Zeruiah, &c.] The general of David's army: perceived that the king's heart was towards Abſalom; and longed to have him returned, though he knew not how to bring it about with credit to himſelf, his crime being ſo foul and worthy of death. This Joab perceived by ſome words he now and then dropped, and by his conduct, not ſeeking by any ways and means to bring him to juſtice, and being now reconciled to the death of Amnon; wherefore Joab deviſed a way to make known to him his own mind, and the ſenſe of the people, which would ſerve to encourage him to reſtore him; and the rather Joab was inclined to take ſuch a ſtep, as he knew it would eſtabliſh him in the king's favour, and ingratiate him into the affection of Abſalom, the next heir to the crown, as well as pleaſe the people, whoſe darling he was. Though Abarbinel is of opinion that Joab proceeded upon another view of things, not becauſe he ſaw the heart and affection of David were towards Abſalom, but the reverſe; that tho' David reſtrained himſelf and his ſervants from going out after Abſalom, yet Joab knew that the heart of the king was againſt him, and that his heart was to take vengeance on him, though he did not go out to ſeek him; he perceived there was ſtill enmity and hatred in his heart to take vengeance on Abſalom, and therefore he took the following method to remove it, and reconcile his mind to him, and ſo the Targum, "and Joab the ſon of Zeruiah knew that the heart of the king was to go out againſt Abſalom;" and it may be obſerved, that when Joab had ſo far prevailed upon him as to admit him to bring him back to Jeruſalem, he would not ſuffer him to ſee his face, nor did he for two years after.

℣. 2. And Joab ſent to Tekoah, &c.] Which Kimchi ſays was a city in the tribe of Aſher, and others in the tribe of Benjamin, but it ſeems rather to be in the tribe of Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 5, 6, according to Jerom [s], it was twelve miles from Jeruſalem, though in another place [t] he ſays it was but nine; of this place was Amos, and ſome think [u] the woman after-mentioned was his grandmother. It was proper to lay the ſcene of the affair to be propoſed to the king at ſome diſtance, that it might not ſoon and eaſily be enquired into: and fetch thence a wiſe woman; one much advanced in years, as Joſephus ſays [w], whoſe years had taught her wiſdom by experience; a woman of good ſenſe, and of a good addreſs, apt at expreſſion and reply, and knew how to manage an affair committed to her; and among other things, perhaps, was famous for acting the part of a mourner at funerals, for which ſometimes women were hired; however, ſhe was one that was talked of for her wiſdom and prudence, and Joab having heard of her, ſent for her as one for his purpoſe. The Jews [x] ſay, that Tekoah was the firſt place in the land of Iſrael for oil, and becauſe the inhabitants were much uſed to oil, wiſdom was found among them: and ſaid unto her, I pray thee, feign thyſelf to be a mourner; a woman of a ſorrowful ſpirit, and in great diſtreſs, and ſhew it by cries and tears: and put on now mourning-apparel; black clothes, ſuch as mourners uſually wore: and anoint not thyſelf with oil; as uſed to be done in times of feaſting and rejoicing, to make them look ſmoth, and gay, and chearful, and of which there might be much uſe at Tekoah, if ſo famous for oil; but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead; her countenance pale and foul with weeping, her mourning clothes almoſt worn out, &c.

℣. 3. And come to the king, &c.] At his palace, in the above condition and circumſtances: and ſpeak on this manner unto him; ſomething to the following purpoſe he dictated to her: ſo Joab put the words into her mouth; the ſubſtance of what ſhe ſhould ſay; the fable ſhe was to deliver as her own caſe, might be framed by Joab, and which ſhe delivered word for word exactly as he put it, and the application of it; but as he knew not what queſtions the king would aſk her, ſo he could not dictate to her what to reply, unleſs he ſuppoſed this and the other, and ſo formed anſwers; but this he left to her prudence, and for the ſake of which he choſe a wiſe woman to manage this affair.

℣. 4. And when the woman of Tekoah ſpake to the king, &c.] Or after ſhe had ſpoken to him, being introduced by Joab, as is probable; when ſhe had ſaluted him with God ſave the king, or may the king live, or ſome ſuch like expreſſions: ſhe fell on her face to the ground, and did obeiſance; to him as her king, in reverence of his majeſty: and ſaid, Help, O king; ſignifying that ſhe was in great diſtreſs, and came to him for aſſiſtance and deliverance.

℣. 5. And the king ſaid unto her, What aileth thee? &c.] Or what is thy caſe? What is the condition, and what the circumſtances that thou art in, which require help and aſſiſtance? intimating that he was ready to grant it on knowledge thereof; however, he was ready to hear what ſhe had to ſay: and ſhe anſwered, I am indeed a widow woman; of a truth a widow, as the Targum; ſhe was really one, a widow indeed, as in 1 Tim. v. 3. 5. not one that was ſeparated from her huſband, he being alive, or divorced from him on any account; and therefore ſhe adds, and mine huſband is dead; and has been a long time; this ſhe ſaid to move move the pity and compaſſion of the king, who as the ſupreme magiſtrate in God's ſtead, was a father of the fatherleſs, and the judge of the widow.

[s] Proem. in Amos, & Comment. in Jer. 6. 1. [t] De loc. Heb. in voce Elthei, fol. 91. 4. P. [u] In Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 78. 1. [w] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 8. §. 4. [x] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 85. 2.

℣. 6. And thy handmaid had two ſons, &c.] Two are obſerved, that her caſe might ſuit with Amnon and Abſalom: and they two ſtrove together in the field; they quarrelled and fought in the field, where there were no witneſſes of what they did to each other; whereby ſhe would ſuggeſt that Amnon was killed in the field, of which there were no witneſſes, and therefore Abſalom ought not to die; whereas it was in Abſalom's houſe, at his table, and where the reſt of the king's ſons were preſent, and witneſſes of it: and there was none to part them; which had there been, might have prevented the ſad diſaſter; this, as Abarbinel thinks, is pointed at David, who when Amnon forced Tamar, did not correct him for it, nor ſeek to make peace between the brethren, and hence followed what had happened: but the one ſmote the other, and ſlew him; as ſay the accuſers of him that is living; for the fable ſuppoſes there was none with them; however, ſhe ſuggeſts, as the above writer obſerves, that one gave the firſt blow, and ſo was the aggreſſor; and that he that was ſmitten roſe up in his own defence, and in his paſſion ſlew him that ſmote him; which is obſerved to leſſen the crime, and to intimate that Amnon was the aggreſſor, who firſt began the ſin and quarrel, in raviſhing Tamar, and ſo reproaching Abſalom; and therefore his blood was upon his own head.

℣. 7. And behold the whole family is riſen againſt thine handmaid, &c.] Who had ſheltered her ſon, that ſlew his brother, from the avenger of blood; and not only the next akin, the avenger of blood, but even all the kindred and relations of the deceaſed, thoſe of her huſband's family roſe up as one man, demanding juſtice: and they ſaid, deliver him that ſmote his brother, that we may kill him for the life of his brother whom he ſlew; pretending great regard to the deceaſed, and a zeal for juſtice, when the main thing aimed at was to get the inheritance into their own hands, as appears by what follows: and we will deſtroy the heir alſo; and hereby ſhe would inſinuate to the king, that the reaſon why the reſt of the king's ſons ſpake againſt Abſalom to him, and ſtirred him up to puniſh him with death, was becauſe he was heir to the crown, and they thought by removing him to make way for themſelves: and ſo they ſhall quench my coal that is left; ſhe had but one ſon, as ſhe repreſents her caſe, who was like a coal left among aſhes, in the ruins of her family; the only one to ſupport her, keep alive her family, and bear up and continue her huſband's name; and as the Targum, "they ſeek to kill the only one that is left;" and ſo the family be extinct: and ſhall not leave to my huſband neither name nor remainder upon the earth; ſhould he be delivered up to them and ſlain; but herein the fable or apologue differed greatly from the caſe it was intended to repreſent; for had Abſalom been put to death, as the law required, David had ſons enough to inherit his throne, and keep up his name.

℣. 8. And the king ſaid to the woman, go to thine houſe, &c.] Go home and make thyſelf eaſy: and I will give charge concerning thee; intimating that he would enquire into her caſe; and if it was as ſhe had repreſented it, he would give orders that ſhe ſhould not be diſturbed, or be obliged to deliver up her ſon, and that he ſhould be ſafe from thoſe that ſought his life.

℣. 9. And the woman of Tekoah ſaid unto the king, my lord and king, &c.] With much vehemence, and yet with great reſpect, fearing an inquiſition into her caſe; which it would not bear, being a fable, and being very deſirous of having ſentence on it immediately pronounced: the iniquity be on me and on my father's houſe; let the crime be imputed to me and my family, and puniſhment inflicted on us for it, if I have miſrepreſented the caſe, told lies, and deceived the king: and the king and his throne be guiltleſs; let neither he nor his kingdom be charged with any ſin, or ſuffer any damage on that account: or elſe the ſenſe is, ſuppoſing that the king through much buſineſs ſhould forget and neglect this affair; and her ſon ſhould be put to death, through the violence and rage of the family; then ſhe wiſhes, that the fault and puniſhment of ſuch neglect, might not fall upon the king and his kingdom, but upon her and her family: in this form ſhe put it, for the honour of the king, and becauſe ſhe would not be thought to wiſh ill to him and his kingdom; yet tacitly ſuggeſts, that ſhould this be the caſe, he and his kingdom muſt expect to anſwer and ſuffer for it.

℣. 10. And the king ſaid, whoever ſaith ought unto thee, &c.] Demanding her to deliver up her ſon to juſtice, and reproaching her for not doing it: bring him to me; give him in charge to a proper officer to be brought before me, and I'll chaſtiſe him for it: and he ſhall not touch thee any more; give her any farther trouble, by words or deeds.

℣. 11. Then ſaid ſhe, I pray thee, let the king remember the Lord thy God, &c.] Who is a God gracious and merciful, and imitate him in ſhewing mercy to the diſtreſſed; pitying their caſe, having compaſſion upon them, and relieving them, as ſhe hoped he would commiſerate her caſe, and provide for the ſafety of her ſon. Some think ſhe deſires not only to give his word, but his oath, for her ſon's ſafety; remember the Lord thy God; i. e. make mention of him, as men do when they ſwear by him; ſwear to me by the Lord thy God: that thou wouldſt not ſuffer therevengers of blood to deſtroy any more, leſt they deſtroy my ſon; or, from multiplying the avenger of blood °; that there might not riſe one after another to deſtroy her ſon; her meaning is, that the king would ſwear to her, and give out a general prohibition, an univerſal edict, that no one ſhould ſlay her ſon; otherwiſe if only the avenger of blood that was next of kin was forbidden, others would riſe up one after another, ſo that he would never be in ſafety: and he ſaid, as the Lord liveth; if ſhe deſired an oath, he granted her requeſt, and ſwore by the living God: there ſhall not one hair of thy ſon fall to the earth; ſo far ſhall his life be from being touched, or taken away, that the leaſt hurt ſhall not be done him, as this proverbial expreſſion ſignifies.

℣. 12. Then the woman ſaid, let thine handmaid, I pray thee, ſpeak one word unto my Lord the king, &c.] Having gained her point, and gotten a decree from him confirmed by an oath, that her ſon though he had killed his brother ſhould not die; ſhe proceeds to accommodate the parable, and apply it to the caſe of Abſalom, and improve it in his favour: and he be ſaid, ſay on ; gave her leave to ſay what ſhe had farther to obſerve to him ; ſee Luke vii. 40.

° מהרבית גאל הדם a multiplicando redemptorem ſanguinis, Montanus; ſo the Tigurine verſion.

℣. 13. Wherefore then haſt thou thought ſuch a thing againſt the people of God, &c.] That they would be ſo wicked as to ſlay my ſon, or that they are the people of God that would ſlay Abſalom ; people ſo cruel could not be reckoned ſuch, as the king's ſons ; ſo Abarbinel ; who gives it as the ſenſe of Ephodæus, that by the people of God are meant Abſalom, and his men ; or Abſalom only, one man being ſometimes called people, Exod. xxi. 8. and ſhe expoſtulates with the king how he could entertain ſuch a thought, as to ſeek to take away his life, when he had ſo fully expreſſed himſelf in her caſe on behalf of her ſon, who had ſlain his brother : or rather the meaning is, why he ſhould think of doing ſuch a thing as this, ſo contrary to the will of the people of Iſrael, the people of God, who would be greatly offended and grieved at it ; ſo contrary to their wiſhes, which were to ſee him fetched back from an heatheniſh court and country, where he was in danger of being corrupted, and to be reſtored to his father's favour and to his country, that he might be upon the ſpot at his death, to ſucceed in the throne and kingdom ; for the provocation that Abſalom had to kill Amnon, had greatly leſſened the evil in the eſteem of the people : for the king doth ſpeak this thing as one which is faulty ; he contradicts and condemns himſelf, in ſwearing that her ſon who had killed his brother ſhould not die, nor an hair of his head be hurt, but ſhould be in the utmoſt ſafety ; and yet he ſought to put his own ſon to death for a like crime, as the next clauſe explains it : in that the king doth not fetch home again his baniſhed ; meaning Abſalom, who was in a foreign country, an exile, and in danger of falling into idolatry ; not daring to come home, leſt his father ſhould order him to be put to death ; and which he might juſtly fear he would, ſhould he return without leave, ſince he ſought not by any means to fetch him back.

℣. 14. For we muſt needs die, &c.] As all muſt, herſelf, the king, and his ſons, and indeed all men ; this is the common caſe and lot of men ; particularly ſhe inſinuates that David muſt die, and that there muſt be a ſucceſſor named, and perhaps a diſpute would ariſe about one ; which might be fatal, if Abſalom was not recalled in his life-time ; and that Amnon muſt have died in a little time if he had not been killed by his brother ; and Abſalom, he muſt die alſo quickly, and therefore what ſignifies taking away his life ; he may as well live a little longer ; this however plauſible, was but bad reaſoning in the caſe of a malefactor : and are as water ſpilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again ; which ſinks into the earth, and can't be got out of it again ; ſo men when they die, are buried in the earth, and can't be gathered or reſtored to life again, until the reſurrection of the dead ; and ſince Amnon is dead, and he can't be brought to life again, it is beſt to be eaſy, and not ſeek to take away the life of another ; which is to bring him into the ſame irrecoverable ſtate and condition : neither doth God reſpect any perſon ; the words in the original are, God doth not take away the ſoul or life [p] ; of every offender, but ſpares them notwithſtanding the crimes they have committed ; and therefore it became the king to be ſparing and merciful to offenders, and particularly to his own ſon ; and perhaps ſhe may tacitly have reſpect to David himſelf, who had been guilty both of murder and adultery, either of which deſerved death ; and yet God had not taken away his life, but in his great mercy had ſpared him ; and therefore ſince he had received mercy, he ſhould ſhew it : or God hath not taken away his ſoul or life ; the life of Abſalom ; he had not cut him off himſelf by his immediate hand, nor ſuffered the king's ſons to take away his life, nor any other to ſeize upon him, and bring him to juſtice, whom David might have employed ; but had by his providence protected and preſerved him ; ſo that it ſeemed to be his will and pleaſure, that he ſhould not be put to death : yet doth he deviſe means that his baniſhed be not expelled from him ; from his word, worſhip, and ordinances, as Abſalom was ; and by protecting him by his providence, it looked as if it was his will, and he would find out ways and means for bringing him back to his country, his father's court, and the ſanctuary of the Lord ; even as by the law concerning the cities of refuge for the manſlayer, proviſion was made that at the death of the high-prieſt the exiled perſon might return to his country.

℣. 15. Now therefore that I am come to ſpeak of this thing unto my lord the king, &c.] Of the caſe of Abſalom, under a feigned one of hers : it is becauſe the people have made me afraid ; having heard of their whiſperings, murmurings, and uneaſineſs among them, becauſe Abſalom was not ſent for home, fearing there would be an inſurrection in the nation, or an invaſion of it by Abſalom at the requeſt of his friends ; in which he might be ſupported by the king of Geſhur ; or however that diſputes would ariſe about the ſucceſſion, at the death of David ; on theſe accounts ſhe determined to ſpeak to the king, and hint them to him in the manner ſhe had done ; though ſome underſtand this of the diſcouragement the people laid her under, telling her the king would not hear her ; nevertheleſs ſhe was reſolved to make trial : and thy handmaid ſaid, I will now ſpeak unto the king ; it may be the king will perform the requeſt of his handmaid ; not only with reſpect to her own ſon, as feigned ; but with reſpect to Abſalom, the grand thing in view.

℣. 16. For the king will hear, &c.] She was fully perſuaded of it, as now he had heard her : to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man that would deſtroy me and my ſon together out of the inheritance of God ; he had given his word and his oath, that he would deliver her ſon from the avenger of blood, that neither he nor any other ſhould deſtroy him ; which would have been the deſtruction of her and her whole family out of the land of Iſrael, the land which God had choſen for his inheritance, and had given to the people of Iſrael to be theirs ; and ſince the king had heard her, and granted her this favour, ſhe doubted not but that he would deliver his own ſon from death, and reſtore him to the inheritance of the land, where he might worſhip the Lord God of his fathers, of which he was now deprived.

℣. 17. Then thine handmaid ſaid, the word of my lord the king ſhall now be comfortable, &c.] Or, for reſt [q] ; what will give eaſe and ſatisfaction not only to her, but to all the people of Iſrael, when they ſhall hear of the king's intention and reſolution to bring back Abſalom : for as an angel of God, ſo is my lord the king ; as they are very wiſe, knowing, and

[p] ולא ישא אלהים נפש & non tollet Deus animam, Montanus ; ſo the Tigurine verſion.

[q] למנחה ad requiem, Pagninus, Montanus ; ad tranquillitatem, Tigurine verſion ; ad quietem, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

and underſtanding creatures, ſo was David: to diſcern good and bad; to hear both the one and the other, and to diſcern the difference between them, and chuſe and purſue what is right, as in all other things, ſo in the preſent caſe: therefore the Lord thy God ſhall be with thee; as to counſel and adviſe, ſo to aſſiſt in performance, and to proſper and ſucceed; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord thy God ſhall be for thine help."

℣. 18. Then the king anſwered and ſaid unto the woman, &c.] Underſtanding plainly what ſhe meant by all this, that the caſe ſhe brought was a feigned one, and that the intention of it was to let him know the ſenſe of the people with reſpect to Abſalom, and the recall of him: hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I ſhall aſk thee; he ſuſpected that this was not a ſcheme of her own, but ſome conſiderable perſon had formed it, and made uſe of her to execute it, which was what he deſired to know: and the woman ſaid, let my lord the king now ſpeak; aſk what queſtion he pleaſes, I am ready to anſwer.

℣. 19. And the king ſaid, is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? &c.] That is, is not this done by the advice, aſſiſtance, and direction of Joab? did not he form this ſcheme for thee, and direct thee to this method, and put thee upon proſecuting it? and the woman anſwered and ſaid, as thy ſoul liveth, my lord the king; what I am about to ſay is as ſure as thou art alive; though this may be only a wiſh, that he might long live and be happy; nothing is more deſireable than thy valuable life: none can turn to the right hand or the left from ought that my lord the king hath ſpoken; he has hit upon the truth of the matter; there is no diſſimulation or prevarication to be uſed; the thing cannot be denied: for thy ſervant Joab he bade me, and put all theſe words in the mouth of thine handmaid; he ſent for me, and laid his commands on me, and directed me what to ſay to the king, and how to conduct this affair.

℣. 20. To fetch about this form of ſpeech hath thy ſervant Joab done this thing, &c.] Feigned a ſtory in ſuch form and manner, as had been delivered to the king, that it might be accommodated and applied to the caſe of Abſalom, and to transfer it in a figure to the king, to uſe the apoſtle's phraſe, 1 Cor. iv. 8. and my lord is wiſe, according to the wiſdom of an angel of God; as not only to underſtand the deſign of this fable or parable, but of ſuch ſagacity and penetration, as to find out the author of it; and even to know all things that are in the earth; either in the whole world, or rather in the land of Iſrael; and it is to be underſtood not of all actions natural and moral done by men in it, which would be to aſcribe omniſcience to him; but of all political things, all things reſpecting civil government; that he had ſuch a ſpirit of diſcerning of men and things, that nothing could be ſaid or done, or ſcheme formed, but he got intelligence of it, and inſight into it; and which was carrying the compliment to a great height.

℣. 21. And the king ſaid unto Joab, &c.] Who was preſent, or but at a little diſtance, waiting the iſſue of this affair: behold now I have done this thing; have agreed to recal Abſalom, at the ſuit of this woman, which thou haſt put her upon; or according to the textual reading, thou haſt done this thing[r]; contrived this ſcheme, to let me know the mind of the people with reſpect to Abſalom, or to repreſent to me the propriety of ſending for him home: go therefore bring the young man Abſalom again; I give my conſent to it, and you may ſend for him, or fetch him as ſoon as you pleaſe; it is thought he calls him a young man, to extenuate his crime, that it was done in youthful heat and paſſion, and therefore he ſhould paſs it over.

℣. 22. And Joab fell to the ground on his face and bowed himſelf, &c.] Or bowed ſo low as to the ground, in reverence of the king: and thanked the king; for giving him leave to fetch Abſalom home, as if it was a favour done to himſelf: or bleſſed[s] him; wiſhed all happineſs and proſperity might attend him, in conſequence of this grant, which he knew would be acceptable to the people: and Joab ſaid, to-day thy ſervant knoweth that I have found grace in thy ſight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the requeſt of his ſervant; he might preſume upon this, that as the king had given orders at his requeſt to recal Abſalom, who had murdered his brother, which was tacitly giving him a pardon; ſo he would forgive him the murder of Abner, and think no more of it; ſince he perceived now, which he had not ſo clearly perceived before from that time, that he found grace in his ſight, or ſhared in his favour and good-will, as now he ſaw he did.

℣. 23. So Joab aroſe and went to Geſhur, &c.] Where Abſalom was with his grandfather, the king of the place; ſee ch. xiii. 37, 38. and brought Abſalom to Jeruſalem; from thence, which according to Bunting[t] was the diſtance of 88 miles from it.

℣. 24. And the king ſaid, &c.] Very probably to Joab, when he informed him of Abſalom's being come to Jeruſalem: let him turn to his own houſe; depart from the king's palace, where Joab had brought him, and go to his own houſe, which was in Jeruſalem; for here he had one, before he fled to Geſhur; ſee ch. xiii. 20. and let him not ſee my face; which he ordered, partly to ſhew his deteſtation of the crime he had been guilty of, and ſome remaining reſentment in his mind at him on account of it; and partly for his credit among ſome of the people at leaſt, who might think it was a crime ſo great as not to go unpuniſhed, though others were of a different mind; and alſo for the greater humiliation of Abſalom, who, the king might think, had not been ſufficiently humbled for his ſin, or had not truly repented of it: ſo Abſalom returned to his own houſe, and ſaw not the king's face; in obedience to his father's orders.

℣. 25. But in all Iſrael there was none to be ſo much praiſed as Abſalom for his beauty, &c.] Which is obſerved to account in ſome meaſure for the intereſt he had in the affections of the people, both now and hereafter: from the ſole of his foot to the crown of his head, there was no blemiſh in him; not any ſpot, freckle, wart, ſcurf, or ſcab; nothing deficient or ſuperfluous in him; no diſproportion of parts, nor any diſagreeable feature; but an entire ſymmetry, and perfect comelineſs, which made him very reſpectable. The Talmudiſts[u] make him to be of a gigantic ſtature.

℣. 26. And when he polled his head, &c.] Or cut off the hair of it; for that was one thing, a good head of hair which he had, that made him look very comely and beautiful: for it was at every year's

[r] עשית feciſti, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[s] ויברך & benedixit, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[t] Travels, &c. p. 146, 148.
[u] T. Bab. Niddah, fol. 24. 2.

year's end that he polled it; or cut it off once a year; but the Jews say [w] he was a perpetual Nazarite: because the hair was heavy upon him, and therefore he polled it; it grew so very thick and long in one year's time, that he was obliged to cut it; and what might add to the weight of it, its being oiled and powdered; and, as some say, with the dust of gold, to make it look yellow and glistering: he weighed the hair of his head at 200 shekels, after the king's weight; and a shekel being the weight of half an ounce of averdupois weight, as bishop Cumberland [x] has shewn from various writers, the weight of his hair must be 100 ounces; which was a very great weight indeed on his head. Some think that the price it was sold at, and not the weight of it, is meant; which they suppose was sold to women for ornament about their temples, and the money given either to the poor, or for the use of the sanctuary; and reckoning a shekel at two shillings and six-pence, as some do, the value of it came to 25 pounds of our money; but the above-mentioned writer [y] reduces it to about two shillings and four-pence farthing; which makes the value somewhat less; but inasmuch as it is not so probable, that a person of such rank should sell his hair, nor does it appear that any such use was made of hair in those times as suggested; and this being said to be according to the king's weight or stone, by which all weights were to be regulated, it is best to understand this of the weight, and not of the price of his hair; which, according to Josephus [z], was 5 pounds; but, according to the above account, it must be six pounds and a quarter. The Jews say [a] this weight was according to what the inhabitants of Tiberias and Zippore used, but don't tell us what it was.

ver. 27. And unto Absalom there were born three sons, &c.] Who very probably died young; and the rather it may be thought so, since their names are not given, and more especially since it is said that Absalom had no sons, and therefore erected a pillar to keep up the remembrance of his name; unless it can be thought that that was set up before he had any sons, which is not so likely; see ch. xviii. 18. and one daughter whose name was Tamar; and whom he named after his sister Tamar, who was ravished by Amnon; the Septuagint version in some copies adds, "and she became the wife of Reboboam, the son of Solomon, and bore to him Abia;" and so says Josephus [b]; see 1 Kings xv. 22. 2 Chron. xi. 20. she was a woman of a fair countenance; as was her aunt, after whom she was named, ch. xiii. 1. by this it appears, that she lived to woman's estate, though the sons of Absalom died young.

ver. 28. So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, &c.] After his return from Geshur: and saw not the king's face; all that time; which was owing either to the king's resentment of the fact committed by him, or to state-policy.

ver. 29. Therefore Absalom sent for Joab, to have sent him to the king, &c.] To introduce him into his presence, being uneasy to be thus confined at his own house, and not suffered to come to court: but he would not come to him; knowing the king's mind, and being unwilling to disoblige him by a troublesome solicitation: and when he sent again the second time, he would not come; knowing his business with him; and perhaps between the first time of his sending and this, he had sounded the king about it, and found it was not agreeable to him to admit him to access to him as yet.

ver. 30. Therefore he said unto his servants, &c.] That did his business for him in the field, in keeping his flocks, and tilling his ground: see, Joab's field is near mine; for great personages in those days attended to husbandry: and he hath barley there, go and set it on fire; it being ripe, and so capable of being fired, and therefore must be some time in March or April, when barley-harvest began; he served Joab as Samson did the Philistines, Judg. xv. 4. which shews him to be a bold, and revengeful, and ungrateful man, to use his friend, and the general of the king's army, after this manner: and Absalom's servants set the field on fire; as their master had bid them, and which is no wonder; for as they murdered Amnon at his command, they would not stick at burning Joab's field, when he bid them do it; see ch. xiii 28, 29.

ver. 31. Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom unto his house, &c.] Provoked at what he had done, and to know the reason of it; and which was answering Absalom's end: and said unto him, wherefore have thy servants set my field on fire? which was not only injurious to his property, but a malicious action.

ver. 32. And Absalom answered Joab, &c.] Neither denying the fact, nor being ashamed of it, nor asking pardon for it; but endeavouring to vindicate it, by giving a reason as he thought sufficient for it: behold, I sent unto thee, saying, come hither, that I may send thee to the king; which was assuming great authority over a person in such an high office as Joab was; had he been king, he could not have used more, to send for him, and command his attendance, and send him on what errand he thought fit, as here: to say, wherefore am I come from Geshur? why did the king send for me? why did not he let me alone, where I was? to what purpose am I brought hither, since I am not admitted to court? it had been good for me, to have been there still; and better, where he lived in a king's court, and had honour and respect shewn him, suitable to his rank; and where he had his liberty, and could go where he pleased; and where this mark of his father's displeasure, not suffering him to see his face, would not be so manifest as here, and so less disgraceful to him: now therefore let me see the king's face; that is, speak to the king, and intercede for me, that I may see his face; which he was so importunate for, not from affection to the king; but that being at court, he might be able to ingratiate himself among the courtiers and others, and carry the point which his ambition prompted him to, supplant the king, and seize the crown: and if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me; signifying he chose to die, rather than to live such a life he did: but of being put to death, he was not much afraid; presuming partly upon his innocence, thinking that the killing of his brother was no crime, because he was the aggressor, had ravished his sister, and for it ought to die; and since justice was delayed, and not done him, he had committed no iniquity in putting him to death; and partly on his father's affection to him, which he was sensible of; at least he had reason to believe he would not now put him to death; for had he designed that, he would have ordered it before now, since he had had him so long in his hands.

ver. 33.

[w] Maimon. & Bartenora in Misn. Nazir, c. 1. §. 2. Bemidbar Rabba, §. 9. fol. 194. 3. Gloss. T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 10. 2.
[x] Scripture-Weights and Measures, ch. 4. p. 103. [y] Ibid. p. 104. [z] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 8. §. 5.
[a] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 10. 2. [b] Ut supra.

℣. 33. So Joab came to the king, and told him, &c.] What Abſalom had ſaid to him: and when he had called for Abſalom; ſent meſſengers to his houſe to order him to come to him: he came to the king, and bowed himſelf on his face to the ground before the king; made a very reverend bow to him, according to the cuſtom of thoſe times, throwing himſelf at his feet in great ſubmiſſion to him: and the king kiſſed Abſalom; in token of his reconciliation to him; which laid the foundation of his after-troubles from him, related in the following chapters.

CHAP. XV.

THIS chapter relates, how that Abſalom by various artful methods ſtole away the hearts of the people of Iſrael, ℣. 1—6. that pretending a vow he had made, he got leave of the king to go to Hebron to perform it, ℣. 7, 8, 9. where he formed a conſiderable conſpiracy, ℣. 10, 11, 12. of which David having information, thought it adviſeable to depart from Jeruſalem, both for his own ſafety, and the good of the city, which he did with his family, and guards, and much people, ℣. 13—18. though he would have perſuaded Ittai the Gittite to have returned, but could not prevail upon him, ℣. 19—23. however, he ſent back the prieſts and the Levites with the ark, leſt any hurt ſhould come to that, ℣. 24—29. and as he and the people went up the mount of Olives weeping, it was told him that Ahithophel was among the conſpirators, on which he put up a prayer that his counſel might be infatuated, ℣. 30, 31. and Huſhai the Archite coming to him at that juncture, he ſent him back to Jeruſalem to defeat the counſel of Ahithophel, and to ſend him word by the prieſts what he ſhould hear there from time to time, ℣. 32—37.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs after this, &c.] After the reconciliation of David and Abſalom, and the latter was admitted to court again: that Abſalom prepared him chariots and horſes; to make himſelf look grand and reſpectable among the people; perhaps he got theſe from his grand-father at Geſhur in Syria: and fifty men to run before him; which added to his pomp and magnificence; and ſuch great perſonages in after-time have had; Nero the Roman emperor never went a journey with leſs than 1000 calaſhes, and a great number of men that ran before him [c]: and this was tacitly ſetting himſelf up for king, at leaſt preparing for it, as Adonijah afterwards did in the ſame way and manner, 1 Kings i. 5.

℣. 2. And Abſalom roſe up early, &c.] Every morning, to ſhew how diligent and induſtrious he ſhould be, and cloſely apply himſelf to buſineſs, was he in any office under the king, and eſpecially when he ſhould be king himſelf; this he did to ingratiate himſelf into the affections of the people: and ſtood beſide the way of the gate; either of the king's palace, ſo Joſephus [d], or of the city, where courts of judicature are held: the former ſeems moſt probable by what follows: and it was ſo, that when any man that had a controverſy came to the king for judgment; that had a controverſy with another man on any account, and came to the king to have it decided according to law, or the rules of juſtice and equity: then Abſalom called unto him, and ſaid, of what city art thou? which queſtion he aſked, only to lead on to ſome further diſcourſe: and he ſaid, thy ſervant is of one of the tribes; that is, of one of the cities of the tribes of Iſrael, and not of a city of another nation.

℣. 3. And Abſalom ſaid unto him, &c.] After ſome farther talk, and finding he had a ſuit at law to bring on, and either ſeeing it drawn up in writing, or hearing his account of it, at once declared, without hearing the other party: ſee, thy matters are good and right; thy cauſe is a good cauſe, and if it could be heard by proper perſons, there is no doubt but things would go on thy ſide, and thou wouldſt carry thy cauſe: but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee; the king is grown old himſelf, and his ſons are negligent, and don't attend to buſineſs, and there are none beſides them appointed to hear cauſes; and he ſuggeſted, as appears by what follows, that he was not in commiſſion, but if he was, or ſhould be appointed a judge, he would attend to buſineſs, and people ſhould not go away after this manner, without having juſtice adminiſtred unto them.

℣. 4. Abſalom ſaid moreover, &c.] To the ſame perſons, at the ſame time: oh that I were made judge in the land; by which it appears that he had no office under the king; partly either becauſe of his crime, and ſo not thought fit, and partly becauſe he appeared to be an ambitious aſpiring man, and ſo it was thought not ſafe to put him into any office: that every man that hath any ſuit or cauſe might come unto me, and I would do him juſtice; at once, without any farther trouble, or coming often, and in vain, and to no purpoſe.

℣. 5. And it was ſo, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeiſance, &c.] To pay his reſpects, and bow to him, as being the king's ſon, a prince of the blood, and heir to the crown, as was ſuppoſed: he put forth his hand, and took him, and kiſſed him; he put out his hand and ſhook hands with him, or took him about the neck and kiſſed him, and by this free, familiar, affable, and courteous manner, ſtrangely won upon and gained the affections of the people, as follows. Fortunatus Schacchus [e] thinks, he put forth his hand to be kiſſed by them, and then kiſſed them, which was more than was uſual.

℣. 6. And in this manner did Abſalom to all Iſrael that came to the king for judgment, &c.] Told them there was none to be had, wiſhed that he was in office to adminiſter it to them, and behaved in the above loving manner towards them: ſo Abſalom ſtole the hearts of the men of Iſrael; got the affections of the people in a private and clandeſtine manner, and robbed the king of them, who had the beſt right unto them.

℣. 7. And it came to paſs after 40 years, &c.] Or four years; ſo long it was from the reconciliation of Abſalom to David, as Joſephus [f] ſays; and ſo read Theodoret on the place, the Syriac and Arabic

[c] Suetonius in vit. Neron. c. 30. Vid. Senecæ, Ep. 87. & 123. Myrothec. l. 3. c. 34. col. 964.
[d] Antiq. l. 7. c. 9. §. 1.
[e] Elæochriſm.
[f] Antiq. l. 7. c. 9. §. 1.

bic verſions: but ſome ſay it was either forty years from the time Iſrael firſt had a king; and which might be an æra of reckoning with the Jews, as the æra of Seleucidæ was with the Greeks, on the like account; or from the time Saul ſlew the prieſts at Nob, as Jerom[g]; or from the time of David's being anointed by Samuel; or this was the year of Abſalom's age, or of David's reign: but theſe, and other attempts made to account for this paſſage, are not entirely ſatisfactory; and therefore one may be tempted to conclude there muſt be a miſtake in the copy, of Arbaim for Arbæ, forty for four; which makes it quite eaſy, and confirms the firſt ſenſe: that Abſalom ſaid unto the king, I pray thee, let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the Lord, in Hebron; not what he vowed in Hebron; for according to his own account he had vowed it in Geſhur, as in the following verſe; but his requeſt is, that he might pay it in Hebron; which place he fixed upon, being his native place, and where David was anointed king; and which, being about 20 miles from Jeruſalem, was at a proper diſtance to lay the ſcene of his conſpiracy in, and bring it to perfection.

℣. 8. For thy ſervant vowed a vow while I abode at Geſhur in Syria, &c.] When at his grand-father's court there: ſaying, if the Lord will bring me again indeed to Jeruſalem; which he might be ſincerely deſirous of: then I will ſerve the Lord; but it is a queſtion, whether he ever made a vow to this purpoſe, or concerned himſelf about ſerving the Lord; but it rather may be, this was a lie of his, now framed in order to get leave of the king to go to Hebron.

℣. 9. And the king ſaid unto him, go in peace, &c.] He gave him leave to go, and wiſhed happineſs and proſperity might attend him: ſo he aroſe and went to Hebron; with a company of men, whoſe number is after mentioned.

℣. 10. But Abſalom ſent ſpies throughout all the land of Iſrael, &c.] To ſound the diſpoſition of the people towards him, to inſinuate things into their minds in favour of him, and to improve every opportunity of recommending him to their eſteem and affections: ſaying, as ſoon as ye hear the ſound of the trumpet; in any place; and which it is probable he employed men to ſound in many places: that ye ſhall ſay, Abſalom reigneth in Hebron; which is the cauſe of the trumpet's ſounding; and by this means they would learn how the people ſtood affected to him, whether the news was grateful or no.

℣. 11. And with Abſalom went 200 men out of Jeruſalem, that were called, &c.] Invited by him to go with him, and partake of his peace-offerings, as the payment of his vow in Hebron; part of which was made a feaſt of for his friends, whomſoever he ſhould think fit to invite, as he did to the number of 200, and for the entertainment of whom a large proviſion ought to be made; the Jews[h] have a tradition, that he had leave of his father only to invite two to go with him, and that he aſked two more unknown to the firſt, and ſo on, two after two, until they amounted to two hundred: and they went in their ſimplicity; to partake of the feaſt of the peace-offerings, to which they were invited; being quite harmleſs and upright in their intentions, having no thought of diſloyalty and rebellion in their breaſts: and they knew not any thing; of an intended conſpiracy; howbeit, doubtleſs many of them were drawn into it when got thither; and as theſe may be ſuppoſed to be ſome of the principal men of Jeruſalem, it was a great weakening of David's intereſt, and laid a conſiderable foundation for Abſalom to begin upon.

℣. 12. And Abſalom ſent for Ahithophel, the Gilonite, David's counſellor, &c.] To adviſe with about this treaſonable affair he was engaged in, and to get out of him David's ſecrets, who was reckoned the beſt counſellor in the land; and he might rather hope he would come to him, if he was the grandfather of Bathſheba, as ſay the Jews, ch. xi. 3. and xxiii. 34. ſince he might be diſguſted with and reſent David's adultery with Bathſheba his grand-daughter, and the murder of her huſband Uriah: him he ſent for, from his city, even from Giloh; a city in the tribe of Judah, in the mountainous part of it, near to Hebron, where Abſalom now was; and, according to Bunting[i], 20 miles from Jeruſalem, ſee Joſh. xv. 48, 51, 54. while he offered ſacrifices; not Ahithophel, but Abſalom, his peace-offerings at Hebron, to which he invited Ahithophel to come and partake of: and the conſpiracy was ſtrong; or there was a great number in the conſpiracy, who were aſſembled together: for the people increaſed continually with Abſalom; being drawn to him by the comelineſs of his perſon, his affable behaviour, the pomp and magnificence in which he appeared, the great number of the principal inhabitants of Jeruſalem with him, and he the king's eldeſt ſon, and ſo heir to the crown; whereas it might begin to be rumoured about, that David deſigned Solomon, a ſon of Bathſheba, a young prince, to be his ſucceſſor, which did not meet with general approbation at firſt.

℣. 13. And there came a meſſenger to David, &c.] Perhaps one of the 200 that went with Abſalom, ignorant of his deſign; which, when diſcovered, he diſapproved of, and got away from him, and came to David, and informed him how things were: ſaying, the hearts of the men of Iſrael are after Abſalom; to make him king.

℣. 14. And David ſaid unto all his ſervants that were with him at Jeruſalem, &c.] His courtiers and miniſters of ſtate, the officers of his houſhold, as many of them as were with him in the city; for ſome of them very probably were in the country, as Ahithophel was, and ſome might be along with Abſalom, whom he had invited to his peace-offerings: ariſe, and let us flee; it is much that a man of ſuch courage and valour as David, ſhould be ſo intimidated at once, as to meditate a flight as ſoon as he heard of a conſpiracy forming againſt him: for we ſhall not elſe eſcape from Abſalom; his fears ran ſo high, that he fancied he would be upon them preſently: make ſpeed to depart, leſt he overtake us ſuddenly; which ſtill more clearly ſhows the panic he was in: and bring evil upon us; kill them, or make them priſoners: and ſmite the city with the edge of the ſword; the inhabitants of it, ſhould they make reſiſtance.

℣. 15. And the king's ſervants ſaid unto the king, &c.] In anſwer to him, and to ſhew that they were quite conformable to his pleaſure: behold, thy ſervants are ready to do whatſoever my lord the king ſhall appoint; or chooſe[k], whether to prepare to fight, and defend him and the city, or to depart and make their eſcape.

℣. 16,

[g] Trad. Heb. in 2 lib. Reg, fol. 78. M. p. 149.
[h] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 9. fol. 194. 4.
[i] Travels, &c.
[k] בחר elegerit, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

ẏ. 16. And the king went forth, &c.] Which determined the caſe: and all his houſhold after him; his family and his court; they followed his example, and attended him in his flight: and the king left ten women, which were concubines, to keep the houſe; not to defend it, which they were unable to do, but to look after the houſhold-goods and furniture, that they were not damaged by the conſpirators; though one would think they could be of little ſervice, and may wonder what he ſhould leave them behind for; but this ſeems to be ordered by the over-ruling providence of God, to bring about what was threatened him, ch. xii. 11. and it is much he had not thought of it; but it was hid from his eyes that it might be fulfilled.

ẏ. 17. And the king went forth, &c.] From Jeruſalem; which is repeated, that it might be obſerved in what a hurry and fright he was: and all the people after him; his family, court and ſervants, and as many of the people of Jeruſalem as choſe to go with him: and tarried at a place that was afar off; when they had got at ſome diſtance from the city, they ſtopped and ſtayed a while; it could not be a great way from it, for they had not as yet paſſed over the brook Kidron, ẏ. 23.

ẏ. 18. And all his ſervants paſſed on beſide him, &c.] Or at his hand or ſide; his houſhold-ſervants walking perhaps ſome on one ſide of him, and ſome on the other, ſee ch. xvi. 6. and all the Cherethites, and all the Pelethites; which were his body-guards, ſee ch. viii. 18. and all the Gittites, 600 men which came after him from Gath; which either came with him from Gath, when he conquered that city, and took it out of the hands of the Philiſtines, ch. viii. 1. compared with 1 Chron. xviii. 1. and who might become proſelytes, and be incorporated into the commonwealth of Iſrael, and into David's army, a troop of men, of which Ittai, after-mentioned, was captain; or elſe theſe were Iſraelites, ſo called, becauſe with David they ſojourned in Gath a while, when he fled from Saul; and ſo Joſephus [1] ſays, they were companions of him in his firſt flight, when Saul was living; and this number is juſt the number of the men that were with him at Gath, 1 Sam. xxvii. 2, 3. and it may be David kept a troop of men always of the ſame number, to whom he gave this name in memory of them, having been a ſett of truſty and faithful men to him: theſe, with the Cherethites and Pelethites, paſſed on before the king; in this form and manner David and his men marched in their flight.

ẏ. 19. Then ſaid the king to Ittai the Gittite, &c.] Who was over the band of Gittites, the 600 men, ẏ. 22. wherefore goeſt thou alſo with us? one ſhould think the king ſhould not have diſcouraged any from joining and following him, when his numbers were not very large, and he in ſuch fear on account of Abſalom: return to this place; to Jeruſalem, where his ſtation was: and abide with the king; with Abſalom, who ſet himſelf up for king, and whom the people perhaps had proclaimed as ſuch in Hebron, where the conſpiracy began: for thou art a ſtranger, and alſo an exile; not a native of Iſrael, but of another nation, and at a diſtance from it, and therefore not altogether under the ſame obligations to attend David in his troubles as others were; and by this it ſeems that he was a Gittite by nation, whatever the 600 men were, and rather favours the firſt ſenſe given of them in the preceding verſe.

ẏ. 20. Whereas thou cameſt but yeſterday, &c.] From Gath, or from an expedition he and his men had been on: ſhould I this day make thee go up and down with us? wander up and down from place to place with David, when he was but juſt come off a journey, weary and fatigued: ſeeing I go whither I may; where it will be moſt ſafe for me, I know not where; may be obliged to flee here and there, which would be very inconvenient to Ittai in his circumſtances: return thou, and take back thy brethren; the 600 men under him, and whom David could ill ſpare at this time, and yet conſulting their eaſe, adviſes to return to Jeruſalem with them: mercy and truth be with thee; the Lord ſhew mercy and kindneſs to thee, in that thou haſt ſhewn favour and reſpect to me, and and make good all his promiſes to thee, who haſt been true and faithful to me.

ẏ. 21. And Ittai anſwered the king, and ſaid, &c.] With an oath, as follows: as the Lord liveth, and as my Lord the king liveth; which he took to confirm what he after ſays, and to put an end to the debate between them: ſurely, in what place my lord the king ſhall be, whether in death or life, even there alſo will thy ſervant be; ſignifying that he would attend him where-ever he went, hazard his life in his cauſe, and live and die with him.

ẏ. 22. And David ſaid unto Ittai, go, and paſs over, &c.] It being his reſolution to abide with him, he urged him no more to depart, but bid him paſs over the brook Kidron before him: and Ittai the Gittite paſſed over, and all his men; the 600 Gittites that were under his command: and all the little ones that were with him; that belonged to him and his men, and no doubt their wives alſo.

ẏ. 23. And all the country wept with a loud voice, &c.] The people that came out of the country villages round about, upon the report of the king's leaving Jeruſalem, becauſe of his ſon's conſpiracy againſt him; theſe wept when they ſaw him in the circumſtances in which he was, obliged to fly from a rebellious ſon: and all the people paſſed over; the people that were with David paſſed over Kidron, and ſo the Cherethites and Pelethites: the king alſo himſelf paſſed over the brook Kidron; this explains what place it was they paſſed over, which is not before mentioned, but is particularly named in the account of the king's paſſing over it; over which ſame brook the Meſſiah, his antitype, paſſed a little before his ſufferings and death; of which brook ſee the note on John xviii. 1. It is often by Joſephus [m] called a valley, ſometimes a brook, it having little water, except in winter; Mr. Maundrel [n] ſays, it ran along the bottom of the valley of Jehoſhaphat, a brook in the winter-time; but without the leaſt drop of water in it all the time, ſays he, we were in Jeruſalem; and ſo Reland [o], that in ſummer-time it ceaſes to be a river, and has the name of a valley; and Le Bruyn ſays [p], it is at preſent dried up; it runs along the valley of Jehoſhaphat, and is not above three paces broad; it has no other but rain-water, which flows from the adjacent hills: and all the people paſſed over to the way of the wilderneſs; which lay between Jeruſalem and Jericho.

ẏ. 24. And lo, Zadok alſo, &c.] The prieſt, as he is called, ẏ. 27. and all the Levites were with him; with Zadok, or with David, and indeed with both; but the former is rather meant here, being the immediate antecedent: bearing the ark of the cove-

[1] Ut ſupra, §. 2. c. 6. §. 1.
[m] Antiq. l. 8. c. 1. §. 5. & l. 9. c. 7. §. 3. De Bello Jud. l. 5. c. 2. §. 3. c. 4. §. 2.
[n] Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 102.
[o] Paleſtin. Illuſtrat. tom. 1. p. 294, 351.
[p] Voyage to the Levant, ch. 48. p. 188.

covenant of God; these were the Kohathite Levites, whose business it was to bear the ark when carried from place to place, Numb. iii. 31. and iv. 15. and vii. 9. called the ark of the covenant because the law, which was the covenant between God and the people, was put into it: and they set down the ark of God; from off their shoulders, on which they carried it: and Abiathar went up; who was the high-priest, and whose business it was to attend the ark, and enquire before it, as occasion required; he went up very probably to the mount of Olives, after-mentioned: until all the people had done passing out of the city; for from the top of that mountain he could see the city of Jerusalem, and the people as they passed out of it, and observe when they were all come out, or however ceased coming, and so knew when it was a proper time to march forward.

℣. 25. And the king said unto Zadok, carry back the ark of God into the city, &c.] The reason of which is not easy to account for, since being carried back, it would fall into the hands of the conspirators; and now the priests were with it to take care of it, and there might be occasion to enquire at it before the Lord; but David thought it being a sacred thing would not be violated by Absalom and his men, and that it would be safest in its own habitation or tabernacle, which David had built for it; for, that the reason of it should be, what Procopius Gazæus suggests, cannot be given into, that he could not bear to carry about him the law, which accused of adulteries and murders: if I shall find favour in the eyes of the Lord; if he will appear for me, be on my side, and deliver me from those who have risen up against me: he will bring me again; to Jerusalem, and to his palace there: and shew me both it, and his habitation; the ark, and the tabernacle he had erected for it, ch. vi. 17.

℣. 26. But if he thus say, I have no delight in thee, &c.] As a king, or in his temporal prosperity, though he might and had delight in him as a chosen vessel of salvation, as a saint and child of God, and in his spiritual and everlasting welfare: behold, here am I; his humble servant, ready to be, and do and suffer whatever is his pleasure: let him do to me as seemeth good unto him; strip me of all the ensigns of royalty, dispossess me of my crown and kingdom, and dispose of me as seems good in his sight; who is a sovereign being, and has a right to do with his creatures what he pleases.

℣. 27. And the king said unto Zadok the priest, art not thou a seer? &c.] A prophet, as well as a priest, see 1 Sam. ix. 9. or a seeing, knowing man, one that can penetrate into men and things, and so might be of more service to David at Jerusalem than with him: wherefore he said to him, return, into the city in peace; to the city of Jerusalem with peace, quietness and satisfaction of mind; where he doubted not, at least hoped and wished, he would be in safety and prosperity, being one of the Lord's priests: and your two sons with you, Ahimaaz thy son, and Jonathan the son of Abiathar; the one was of the line of Eleazar, and the other of the line of Ithamar.

℣. 28. See, I will tarry in the plain of the wilderness, &c.] Towards the way of which, David and the people went, when they came over Kidron, ℣. 23. until there come word from you to certify me; of the truth of the conspiracy, of the number of the conspirators, and who they are, what progress they have made, whether come to Jerusalem, and how they behave there, if come; or of any thing relative hereunto, he could get intelligence of.

℣. 29. Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jerusalem, &c.] That is, ordered it to be carried, and took care that it was carried, by the Kohathite Levites, and they themselves attended it: and they tarried there; at Jerusalem; though their two sons that went with them entered not into the city, but stayed at a place called En-rogel, at some little distance from it, ch. xvii. 17.

℣. 30. And David went up by the ascent of mount Olivet, &c.] So called from the olive-trees that grew upon it, which is often mentioned in the New Testament, and where our Lord Jesus Christ, the antitype of David, often was, in his state of humiliation, and from whence he ascended to heaven after his resurrection; it was about a mile from Jerusalem, to the east of it: and wept as he went up; thinking perhaps of the wickedness and rebellion of his son, of his own hard case to be obliged to quit his metropolis and palace, and make his flight afoot; and perhaps also of his own sins, which were the cause of his calamities: and had his head covered; with his mantle, with which he enwrapped himself as a mourner, ch. xix. 4. so the Egyptians used to cover their heads in mourning, and the Romans in after-times [q]; so Megara in sorrowful circumstances is represented as having her head covered with a garment [r]: and he went barefoot; in token of mourning also, and like one forlorn, and going into captivity, see Is. xx. 2. Mic. i. 8. and all the people that was with him, covered every man his head; as David did, and in imitation of him, and sympathizing with him; and which was sometimes done when men were ashamed and confounded, Jer. xiv. 3, 4. and they went up weeping as they went up; the mount of Olivet, grieved for their king, and the distresses and calamities that were coming upon them.

℣. 31. And one told David, &c.] That came either from Hebron or from Jerusalem: Ahithophel is among the conspirators with Absalom; Absalom sent for him, and it seems he came to him, and continued with him, see ℣. 12. and David said, O Lord, I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness; either suffer him to give foolish counsel, or confound the schemes projected by him, and let them not be carried into execution; for God can, and sometimes does, disappoint crafty counsellors, that they can't perform what they devise, but they are taken in their own craftiness, and their counsel is carried headlong, Job v. 12, 13. this prayer was answered, ch. xvii. 14, 23.

℣. 32. And it came to pass, that when David was come to the top of the mount, &c.] Of the mount of Olives: where he worshipped God; by prayer and praise; here very probably he composed and sung the third psalm, which, as the title shews, was made when he fled from Absalom: behold, Hushai the Archite came to meet him, with his coat rent, and earth upon his head; in token of mourning, and as a bringer of bad tidings, see ch. i. 2. perhaps he was an inhabitant of Archi, at least originally, which lay on the borders of the tribe of Ephraim, Josh. xvi. 2. from whence he had his name.

℣. 33. Unto whom David said, &c.] After he had heard what he had to say, and what tidings he brought: if thou passest on with me; in his march march and flight: then thou ſhalt be a burden to me; being to be maintained by him; and David having but ſcanty proviſions, and ſo could not receive uſeleſs perſons, as Huſhai might be, perhaps an old man, that could be of no ſervice to him, and unfit for travelling, and ſo would rather be an hindrance than an help unto him.

[q] Vid. Solerium de Pileo, §. 2. p. 14, 19.

[r] Senec. Hercul. furens, act. 2.

℣. 34. But if thou return to the city, &c.] To the city of Jeruſalem, from whence it ſeems he came: and ſay unto Abſalom, I will be thy ſervant, O king; as he was by uſurpation, and by the proclamation of the people with him. David directs him to addreſs him thus, that he might have no ſuſpicion of him, having been an old friend of his: as I have been thy father's ſervant hitherto; perhaps in the character of a counſellor, as it ſhould ſeem, ſince as ſuch he was afterwards employed by Abſalom: ſo will I now alſo be thy ſervant; in whatſoever thou ſhalt pleaſe to employ me under thee: then mayeſt thou for me defeat the counſel of Ahithophel; for being taken into Abſalom's ſervice, and made one of his counſellors, he would be privy to the advice of Ahithophel, and ſo be able to counter-work him.

℣. 35. And haſt thou not there with thee Zadok and Abiathar the prieſts? &c.] To aſſiſt in forming ſchemes directly oppoſite to Ahithophel's, or to whom he could communicate the ſecrets of Abſalom's court: therefore it ſhall be that what thing ſoever thou ſhalt hear out of the king's houſe; Abſalom's, who had now got poſſeſſion of the houſe and palace of David: thou ſhalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar the prieſts; to whom he might have recourſe without ſuſpicion, pretending he had buſineſs with them as prieſts, on religious accounts, to offer ſacrifices for him, &c.

℣. 36. Behold, they have there with them two ſons, Ahimaaz, Zadok's ſon, and Jonathan, Abiathar's ſon, &c.] As in ℣. 27. not that they were in the city with them, but they were near it, ch. xvii. 17. with whom they had a communication: and by whom ye ſhall ſend unto me every thing that ye can hear; that is, by the ſons of the prieſts; he telling the prieſts how things were at court, and they ſending their ſons with meſſages to David; which was a good ſcheme to get intelligence, and eaſy to be put into execution.

℣. 37. So Huſhai David's friend came into the city, &c.] The city of Jeruſalem, by the direction and perſuaſion of David, and in obedience to him, in order to ſerve him to the uttermoſt: and Abſalom came into Jeruſalem; juſt at the ſame time; ſo that he knew not that Huſhai had been out of it, and been with David, and which alſo appears from what he ſaid to him, ch. xvi. 17.

CHAP. XVI.

IN this chapter is an account of Ziba, the ſervant of Mephiboſheth, getting his inheritance by miſrepreſentation of him, and by preſents to David, ℣. 1—4. and of Shimei's curſing David as he paſſed along, which David bore patiently, and would not ſuffer others to avenge it on him, ℣. 5—14. and of Huſhai's offer of his ſervice to Abſalom, who admitted him to be of his privy-council, ℣. 15—19. and of the counſel which Ahithophel gave, ℣. 20—23.

℣. 1. And when David was a little paſt the top of the hill, &c.] Of the mount of Olives, the aſcent of which he is ſaid to go up by, and to come to the top of it, ch. xv. 30, 32. behold, Ziba, the ſervant of Mephiboſheth met him; of whom ſee ch. ix. 2. with a couple of aſſes ſaddled; and ſo fit to ride on, but for the preſent he uſed them to another purpoſe: and upon them 200 loaves of bread; 100 on each aſs very probably: and an 100 bunches of raiſins; or dried grapes, as the Targum: and 100 of ſummer-fruits; not in tale, but in weight, as apples, pears, plumbs, apricots, &c. ſo the Targum, an hundred pound of figs: and a bottle of wine; a caſk or flagon of wine; for a bottle, ſuch as is in uſe with us, would have ſignified nothing in ſuch a company.

℣. 2. And the king ſaid unto Ziba, what meaneſt thou by theſe? &c.] Are they to be ſold, or are they preſents? and Ziba ſaid, the aſſes be for the king's houſhold to ride on; for himſelf, his wives and children, his courtiers, and the principal officers of his houſe; it being uſual in thoſe times and countries for great perſonages to ride on aſſes, ſee Judg. v. 10. and the bread and ſummer-fruits for the young men to eat; the king's menial ſervants, his guards and his ſoldiers: and the wine, that ſuch as be faint in the wilderneſs, may drink; where no water was to be had, that their fainting ſpirits might be revived, and they be able whether to fight or march.

℣. 3. And the king ſaid, and where is thy maſter's ſon? &c.] The ſon of Saul, who was Ziba's maſter, meaning Mephiboſheth: and Ziba ſaid unto the king, he abideth at Jeruſalem; as there was reaſon for it, ſince he was lame of both his feet, though he could have rode upon an aſs, and followed the king, as he propoſed to do; but his ſervant deceived him, and carried off the aſſes to ſerve a purpoſe for himſelf, ſee ch. xix. 26. for he ſaid, to-day ſhall the houſe of Iſrael reſtore unto me the kingdom of my father; his father Saul; which was far from his thoughts, and a moſt wicked ſuggeſtion of his ſervant to blacken his character, and get his eſtate from him; nor was there the leaſt probability of the kingdom coming to him, but all the reverſe; for let it go how it would with David, Abſalom, and not Mephiboſheth, ſtood fair for the kingdom.

℣. 4. Then ſaid the king to Ziba, behold, thine are all that pertaineth to Mephiboſheth, &c.] Being forfeited to the king by an overt-act of treaſon, as they had been before by the rebellion of Iſhboſheth, but had been graciouſly reſtored to Mephiboſheth; and had it been true what Ziba ſuggeſted, it would have been a righteous thing to have taken them from him; though it ſeems to be too haſty a ſtep in David to take and give them away without farther enquiry: and Ziba ſaid, I humbly beſeech thee, that I may find grace in thy ſight, my lord, O king; he had found favour already, but ſeems not to be ſufficiently thankful for it, and ſatisfied with it, but craved more and other favours, when opportunity ſhould ſerve.

℣. 5. And when king David came to Bahurim, &c.] The Targum is, Alemath, perhaps the ſame that is ſaid to be a city of the Levites, given unto them out of the tribe of Benjamin, 1 Chron. vi. 60.

for the man next described, who was of this place was a Benjaminite, ch. xix. 16. see the note on ch. iii. 16. David was not yet come to the city itself, but into the neighbourhood of it, the fields adjacent to it: behold, thence came out a man of the family of Saul; a descendent of a branch of his family, who had entertained a private grudge and secret enmity against David, to whom he imputed the fall of the family of Saul: whose name was Shimei, the son of Gera; which might be a name common in the tribe of Benjamin, one of Benjamin's sons being named Gera, Gen. xlvi. 21. Some say [s] he was the same with Nebat, the father of Jeroboam; but he was of the tribe of Ephraim, this of Benjamin: he came forth, and cursed still as he came; he came out of Bahurim, of which place he was, and all the way he came, continued cursing David, until he came near unto him.

℣. 6. And he cast stones at David, and at all the servants of king David, &c.] Not that he was within the reach of them, or could hurt them, by casting them at them; but this he did to shew his contempt of them, and to intimate, that they deserved to be stoned, and especially David, at whose adultery he might point by it: and all the people, and all the mighty men were on his right-hand, and on his left; that is, of David; which is observed, not so much to indicate the safety of David's person, as the impudence and madness of Shimei, to cast stones at David when so guarded.

℣. 7. And thus said Shimei, when he cursed, come out, come out, &c.] Or rather, go out, go out [t]; that is, out of the nation, where he deserved not to live, as he judged, and out of the kingdom which he had usurped, as he supposed; and the repeating the words, not only denotes his vehement desire to have him gone, but the haste he should make to get out, or he was liable to be overtaken by Absalom and his forces; upbraiding him also with the hurry he was in, and the speedy flight he was making: thou bloody man, and thou man of Belial; or wicked man; perhaps referring by these characters in the one to the murder of Uriah, and in the other to his adultery with Bathsheba; and these crimes coming fresh into David's mind hereby, might make him more mild and humble under his reproaches.

℣. 8. The Lord hath returned upon thee all the blood of the house of Saul, &c.] Which he would suggest was shed by David, or however, that he was the cause of its being shed; as if he had stirred up the Philistines to that battle in which Saul and his sons were slain, and had an hand secretly in the deaths of Ishbosheth and Abner, all which were false insinuations; and it may be the seven sons of Saul before this time, though after related, were delivered into the hands of the Gibeonites to be hanged, to which respect may be had: in whose stead thou hast reigned; not by right, but by usurpation he suggests: and the Lord hath delivered the kingdom into the hand of Absalom; in this he seems to contradict himself; for if David had got the kingdom by usurpation, it would rather have been delivered by the Lord into the hand of one of Saul's family, and not of David's: behold, thou art taken in thy mischief; punished for his sins; the mischief he had brought on others was retaliated to him: because thou art a bloody man; guilty of slaying, as the Targum, of shedding innocent blood, and so worthy of death.

℣. 9. Then said Abishai the son of Zeruiah unto the king, &c.] A sister's son of his, and a general in the army, who could not bear to hear the king abused in this manner: why should this dead dog curse my lord the king? be suffered to do it with impunity; a dog he calls him, because of his vileness and baseness, and because of his impudence, and on account of his reproachful and abusive language, aptly signified by the snarling and barking of a dog; and a dead dog, as being useless, detestable and abominable: let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head; go over the plain where David and his men were, to the hill on which Shimei was, and strike off his head with his sword; which he could easily do, and soon put an end to his cursing.

℣. 10. And the king said, what have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? &c.] It seems as if Joab, the brother of Abishai, joined with him in this request to have leave to take off the head of Shimei; and though David had to do with them as his relations, his sister's sons, and as they were generals in his army; yet in this case he would have nothing to do with them, would not take their advice, nor suffer them to take revenge on this man for his cursing him: or what is it to me, or to you? "what signifies his cursing, it will neither hurt me nor you? so let him curse; go on cursing after this manner; don't restrain him from it, or attempt to stop his mouth: or, for he will curse [w]; so is the textual reading; you will not be able to restrain him, for the following reason: because the Lord hath said unto him, curse David; not by way of command, or a precept of his; for to curse the ruler of the people is contrary to the word and law of God, Exod. xxii. 28. nor by any operation of his Spirit moving and exciting him to it; for the operations of the Spirit are to holiness, and not to sin; but by the secret providence of God ordering, directing and over-ruling all circumstances relative to this affair. Shimei had conceived enmity and hatred to David; God left him to the power of this corruption in his breast, opened a way in providence, and gave him an opportunity of exercising it on him: it was not a bare permission of God that Shimei should curse David, but it was his will, and he ordered it so in providence, that he should do it; which action was attended with the predetermined concourse of divine providence, so far as it was an action; though as a sinful action, it was of Shimei, sprung from his own heart, instigated by satan; but as a correction and chastizement of David, it was by the will, order and appointment of God, and as such David considered it, and quietly submitted to it: who shall then say, wherefore hast thou done so? for though Shimei might justly be blamed, and reproved for it, yet the thing itself was not to be hindered or restrained; it being according to the will and providence of God, to answer some good end with respect to David.

℣. 11. And David said to Abishai, and all his servants, &c.] In order to make them easy, and reconcile them to this usage of him: behold, my son, which came forth of my bowels, seeketh my life; meaning Absalom: how much more now may this Benjamite do it? who was not only of the same tribe that Saul was, but of the same family, and so bore an ill will to David because of his succession in the throne: let him alone, and let him curse; do nothing to restrain him, not even by words, and much

[s] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 79. B.

[t] יצא יצא egredere, egredere, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

[u] מה לי ולכם quid mihi & vobis, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus.

[w] כי quia, Montanus.

much leſs by any violent actions, and ſtill leſs by taking away his life: for the Lord hath bidden him; in the ſenſe explained in the preceding verſe.

℣. 12. It may be that the Lord will look on mine affliction, &c.] Through the rebellion of his ſon, and now aggravated by the curſing of Shimei; that is, with an eye of pity and commiſeration, and deliver him out of it: or look upon my eye [x]; for there is various a reading; the tear of mine eye, as the Targum; ſo Jarchi and R. Iſaiah; the tears in it, which fell plentifully from it, on account of his troubles, and particularly the curſes and reproaches of Shimei: and that the Lord will requite me good for his curſing this day; he does not ſpeak with aſſurance, yet with hope; he knew his ſins deſerved ſuch treatment, but alſo that God was gracious and merciful, and pitied his children, and reſented all ill uſage of them; and therefore hoped he would favour him with ſuch intimations of his love, as would ſupport him, comfort, refreſh him, and do him good, ſee Rom. viii. 28.

℣. 13. and as David and his men went by the way, &c.] In the high road that led to Bahurim, taking no notice of the curſing of Shimei, which made him bolder and more impudent; here is a large pauſe in the Hebrew text, in the midſt of this verſe: Shimei went along on the hill ſide over-againſt him; as David and his men walked in the plain, he went on a range of hills that ran along right againſt them: and curſed as he went; continued his curſes and imprecations, to which he was the more emboldened by the behaviour of David and his men: and threw ſtones at him, and caſt duſt; in a way of contempt, though the ſtones recoiled on his own head, and the duſt flew in his own face, as the conſequence of things ſhewed; and now David compoſed and penned the 7th pſalm.

℣. 14. And the king, and all the people that were with him, came weary, &c.] With their journey, and through grief and trouble at what they met with: and refreſhed themſelves there; that is, at Bahurim, with food and reſt; which revived their ſpirits, and put as it were new life and ſoul into them, as the word uſed ſignifies. Joſephus [y] ſays, when David came to Jordan, he refreſhed his weary men.

℣. 15. And Abſalom and all the people, the men of Iſrael, came to Jeruſalem, &c.] At the ſame time that David and his people came to Bahurim; which, as Joſephus [z] ſays, was a place near to Jeruſalem; and, according to Bunting [a], was little more than a mile from it; though elſewhere [b] he makes it three miles; ſo that had not David made the haſty flight he did, he had fallen into the hands of Abſalom: and Ahithophel with him; a famous counſellor, and who had been of David's privy-council, and chief in it, ſee ch. xv. 12, 31. and whom David refers to in Pſ. lv. 12—14.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs that when Huſhai the Archite, David's friend, was come unto Abſalom, &c.] Who came into Jeruſalem at the ſame time that Abſalom did, and who no doubt took the firſt opportunity to make his court to him, ch. xv. 37. that Huſhai ſaid unto Abſalom, God ſave the king, God ſave the king; or may the king live [c], live long, and his kingdom be permanent; theſe words are very ambiguous, he might mean David, who was true and lawful king, tho' he would have them underſtood of Abſalom, who was king by uſurpation, in which he uſed great deceit and flattery; and that he might not be ſuſpected of it, but be thought to be ſincere and truly loyal to Abſalom, he repeats the wiſh.

℣. 17. And Abſalom ſaid to Huſhai, is this thy kindneſs to thy friend? &c.] Meaning to David; though he would not mention his name, nor his title, nor even the relation of a father he ſtood in to him, only ſpeaks of him as Huſhai's friend: Huſhai had profeſſed great friendſhip to David, and David had been a friend to Huſhai, had raiſed him to great honour in making him a counſellor, and had beſtowed many favours and benefits on him, as Abſalom knew full well; and therefore to try his integrity, he puts this queſtion, not as diſpleaſed with him, but overjoyed that ſuch a truſty friend of David, and a wiſe counſellor of his, had deſerted him, and come over to him and his party; nor does he mean to charge him with ingratitude, which he could not do without reproaching himſelf; on whom it might be juſtly retorted, is this thy kindneſs to thy father that begot thee, and has always expreſſed ſuch a ſtrong affection for thee, as to rebel againſt him? why wenteſt thou not with thy friend? with David, when he went out of Jeruſalem; for Abſalom knew not that Huſhai had been with David, but thought he ſtayed behind at Jeruſalem, when David fled, which made him leſs ſuſpicious of him.

℣. 18. And Huſhai ſaid to Abſalom, &c.] In anſwer to his queſtions: nay, but whom the Lord, and his people, and all the men of Iſrael chuſe; here again he ſpeaks very ambiguouſly; for this circumlocution, or deſcriptive character of the king of Iſrael, better agrees with David, whom he might bear in mind, than with Abſalom; for the Lord had choſen David, and he was anointed by his order, and all the people of Iſrael had choſen and anointed him likewiſe; but as for Abſalom, it was only a part of them that had declared for him, nor was there any evidence of the Lord's chuſing him; though Huſhai undoubtedly would be underſtood of him, and as interpreting the voice of the people to be the voice of God: his will I be, and with him will I abide; tho' he deſigned no ſuch thing, which was a great piece of diſſimulation and hypocriſy; and if he meant David, it was a piece of deceit and equivocation: there is a various reading in the firſt clauſe; we follow the marginal reading, לו to him or his, but the textual reading is לא not; and both may be taken in by rendering the words by an interrogation, ſhall I, or ſhould I not be his? [d] I will; that is, be his ſervant, faithfully obey his commands, be cloſely attached to him, and continue with him as a loyal ſubject.

℣. 19. And again, whom ſhould I ſerve? &c.] Or ſecondly [e], a ſecond reaſon is here given for ſerving Abſalom; the firſt was the choice of God, and the people, the ſecond follows: ſhould I not ſerve in the preſence of his ſon? as I have ſerved in thy father's preſence, ſo will I be in thy preſence; he ſignifies, that as the kingdom was not tranſlated into another family, but continued in ſucceſſion in David's houſe, the alteration made was of no great conſequence; it was indifferent to him whom he ſerved, the father or the ſon; and he could as freely, and would as faithfully ſerve the ſon as the father; nor did he think it any breach of friendſhip to David, nor would David reſent it, that he ſhould ſhould ſerve his ſon, and do the beſt offices, and give him the beſt counſel he could; and he ſeems to beſpeak the office of a counſellor, in which he had been to David, that he might be admitted into the preſence of Abſalom, and be of his privy-council, and have the opportunity of giving his beſt advice.

[x] בעיני in oculum meum, Montanus; oculum meum lachrymantem, Munſter. [y] Antiq. l. 7. c. 9. §. 4. [z] Ibid. [a] Travels, &c. p. 144. [b] Ib. p. 150. [c] יחי המלך vivat rex, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [d] לא אהיה non ero, Montanus; non eſſem ejus? Junius & Tremellius. [e] השנית ſecunda, Montanus, Munſter, Vatablus; ſecundo, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 20. Then ſaid Abſalom to Ahithophel, &c.] Having two ſuch able counſellors as he and Huſhai, he directs his ſpeech to Ahithophel, as being his firſt and chief counſellor: give courſel among you what we ſhall do; he orders them to form a council, conſult among themſelves what was proper to be now done at Jeruſalem, whether it was right to ſtay here, or purſue after David and his men. Abſalom did not ſend to the high-prieſt to aſk counſel of God, by Urim and Thummim before the ark, but wholly confided in his privy-council.

℣. 21. And Ahithophel ſaid unto Abſalom, &c.] Either immediately of himſelf, without conſulting with others; or after a conſultation had been held between them, he as the preſident of it, and their mouth, gave the following advice; though the former ſeems righteſt: go in unto thy father's concubines, which he hath left to keep the houſe; and lie with them; there were ten of them, ch. xv. 16. and all Iſrael ſhall hear that thou art abhorred of thy father; this fact will be ſo abominable to him, and he will ſo highly reſent it, as never to forgive thee, and be reconciled unto thee: then ſhall the hands of all that are with thee be ſtrong; he intimates, that they were now weak, and did not act with ſpirit; they were fearful that David and Abſalom would be reconciled, and then they ſhould be reckoned traitors, and fall a ſacrifice to David's vengeance, for their treaſon againſt him; but by Abſalom's taking ſuch a ſtep as this, which would make him for ever the object of his father's hatred, their hands and hearts would be ſtrengthened, and their fears removed, and they would not have the leaſt jealouſy of a reconciliation between them, and of their being left to the reſentment of David. Some think this was not his only reaſon for giving this counſel, but alſo to revenge David's abuſe of Bathſheba, his ſon's daughter, as ſhe is ſuppoſed to be, ch. xv. 12. however, it was ſo ordered in providence, that this advice ſhould be given and taken, to fulfil the prophecy of the Lord to Nathan, ch. xii. 11.

℣. 22. So they ſpread Abſalom a tent on the top of the houſe, &c.] On the top of his father's palace; this, as houſes in Jeruſalem and Judea were, was built flat, Deut. xxii. 8. and it was on the very ſpot from whence David had a ſight of Bathſheba, and conceived an impure luſt after her. The Targum renders it, a canopy; which Kimchi deſcribes as conſiſting of four pillars, upon and round about which curtains were hung: and Abſalom went in unto his father's concubines in the ſight of all Iſrael; they ſaw the tent or canopy erected, and ſaw him go into it, and might reaſonably conclude he lay with his father's concubines, or half-wives, in it; and this being done in ſo public a manner, fulfilled the prophecy, which ſaid it ſhould be done in the ſight of the ſun, and of all Iſrael, ch. xii. 11, 12. this ſhows how corrupt the people of Iſrael were at this time, at leaſt thoſe that were with Abſalom, that there ſhould be none to object to the counſel Ahithophel gave, nor any to remonſtrate againſt the execution of it, but all ſeemed to look upon it with pleaſure; nor even did Huſhai, David's friend, oppoſe it; perhaps he ſaw it was to no purpoſe.

℣. 23. And the counſel of Ahithophel, which he had counſelled in thoſe days, &c.] Both in the days of David, and in the days of Abſalom, before and ſince the rebellion: was, as if a man had enquired of the oracle of God; ſuch an opinion was entertained of it, ſo well ſatisfied were they with it, and as confident of ſucceſs in taking it, as if the Lord himſelf had been conſulted by Urim and Thummim; this is a very great exaggeration of Ahithophel's counſel, and is obſerved as a reaſon why it was ſo readily taken, though ſo bad in the preceding inſtance: ſo was all the counſel of Ahithophel, both with David and with Ahithophel; Ahithophel was a crafty man, a time-ſerver, that temporized with princes, and knew how to ſuit his counſels with their tempers and intereſts: to David he gave good counſel what was acceptable with him, and to Abſalom, bad counſel, which was pleaſing to him.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter relates the advice Ahithophel gave to march out ſpeedily with a number of men in purſuit of David, which at firſt ſeemed agreeable, ℣. 1—4. but Huſhai's opinion being aſked, and he giving counſel to raiſe a larger army, which required time, and was taken to, hereby the counſel of Ahithophel was defeated, ℣. 5—14. upon which he hanged himſelf, ℣. 23. theſe different counſels being communicated by Huſhai to the prieſts, they found means to tranſmit them to David with an inſtruction to him to paſs over Jordan immediately; which he did, and pitched in Gilead, and whither he was followed by Abſalom, ℣. 15—26. and where he met with a ſupply of proviſions for his army from ſome eminent perſons in and near that place, ℣. 27—29.

℣. 1. Moreover, Ahithophel ſaid unto Abſalom, &c.] Either at the ſame time, or quickly after he had given the foregoing advice: let me now chuſe out 12,000 men; out of thoſe that were with Abſalom, which ſhows their number to be large; and 12,000 are pitched upon with reſpect to the 12 tribes of Iſrael, 1000 from every tribe; Joſephus has only 10,000: and I will ariſe and purſue after David this night; he took upon him to be general of the army, as well as a counſellor; or this he ſaid to ſhew, how confident he was of the ſucceſs of his counſel, that if Abſalom, or any other, ſhould decline the conduct of the army upon it, as a hazardous attempt, he would undertake it himſelf; or rather it may be, he was not willing that Abſalom ſhould go out in perſon with the army, not ſo much for his own ſafety, as leſt through his affection for the king he ſhould ſpare him, when he fell into his hands, or they two ſhould be reconciled; he propoſed to do it that night, partly for expedition, no time being to be loſt, and partly for the greater ſurprize of David, and his men.

℣. 2. And I will come upon him while he is weary, &c.] With travelling, and with grief, and when endeavouring to get ſome reſt by ſleep, and ſo ſurprize him unawares, when not on his guard, and in no poſture of defence: and weak-handed; while the

the number of men with him is ſmall, and before the people from different parts can come to his aſſiſtance: and will make him afraid; ſtrike terror into him and his men, by ſurprizing them ſuddenly in the night with ſuch a number of men: and all the people that are with him ſhall flee; one one way, and another another, for their own ſecurity, and leave David alone: and I will ſmite the king only; diſpatch him, and let the people flee without purſuing them.

℣. 3. And I will bring back all the people, &c.] Meaning not the people only that were with David, that he would make them priſoners, and bring them with him; for he before propoſed to let them make their eſcape; but to reduce all Iſrael to the obedience of Abſalom at once, by executing this ſcheme which he had formed: the man whom thou ſeekeſt is as if all returned; meaning David, whom he ſpeaks of contemptibly, and whoſe life it ſeems Abſalom ſought, as well as his crown; and he being dead, it would be all over at once with the people; they would immediately repair to their own habitations, and yield obedience to Abſalom as the rightful heir and ſucceſſor; all depended on his death he intimates: from whence it appears that Abarbinel is wrong in ſuggeſting, that Abſalom did not deſign to take away the life of his father, only to ſecure the kingdom to himſelf in his father's life-time, who he underſtood had diſpoſed of it by his will to Solomon; but here Ahithophel plainly declares the intention of Abſalom, nor would he have propoſed in plain terms to take away the king's life, had Abſalom been averſe to it; and it is plain by what follows, that the thing was pleaſing to him: ſo all the people ſhall be in peace; both parties coaleſce under the government of Abſalom, and live peaceably under it, and ſo an entire end of the war.

℣. 4. And the ſaying pleaſed Abſalom well, and all the elders of Iſrael.] That were of the privy-council; for it was a well-contrived ſcheme to ſurprize David and his men by night, in the condition they were in; nothing like ſeizing an opportunity, and making quick diſpatch in executing a villainous deſign; only it is ſtrange, that Abſalom could ſo eaſily come in to a ſcheme to take away the life of ſo indulgent a father, which is only to be accounted for by his ambition; but it is ſtranger ſtill, that the elders of Iſrael ſhould be pleaſed with it, and agree to and determine upon the death of a prince, who had ſo many years ruled them with juſtice and equity, clemency and mercy; had fought their battles for them, and raiſed their nation to ſuch a pitch of glory it never had before.

℣. 5. Then ſaid Abſalom, call now Huſhai the Archite alſo, &c.] For it ſeems he was not at the council-board at this time; whether he was as yet admitted to it, is not certain: there is ſomthing very remarkable in the providence of God, to incline Abſalom to have the opinion of Huſhai upon this point, when the counſel of Ahithophel was ſo univerſally approved of; and Huſhai alſo being well known to have been an intimate friend and confident of David's, and not ſo ſettled and eſtabliſhed in the intereſt of Abſalom, and ſuch a ſworn friend of his as Ahitophel was; this can only be aſcribed to the will of God, to defeat the counſel of Ahithophel, and the wiſdom of divine providence in blinding the mind of Abſalom with reſpect to his counſel, and inclining it to take the opinion of Huſhai: and let us hear likewiſe what he ſaith; which he might ſay without any diffidence about the counſel given, but knowing that in the multitude of counſellors there is ſafety; and Huſhai being a wiſe and good counſellor, he might hope and expect that he would give the ſame advice, and ſo ſtrengthen and confirm it.

℣. 6. And when Huſhai was come to Abſalom, &c.] Into the council-chamber very probably: Abſalom ſpake unto him, ſaying, Ahithophel hath ſpoken after this manner; and then related the counſel he had given as before: ſhall we do after this ſaying? is it right to proceed on this ſcheme, and carry it into execution? if not, ſpeak thou; thy mind freely, without any reſerve, or fear of giving any offence.

℣. 7. And Huſhai ſaid to Abſalom, &c.] Having leave to give his opinion freely: the counſel that Ahithophel hath given is not good at this time; he owns that Ahithophel was a good counſellor, and that the counſel he gave was for the moſt part, if not always, good, but what he gave at this time was not ſo; the wiſeſt of men may ſometimes be miſtaken. Abarbinel thinks he reſpects his former counſel, particularly that that was good, adviſing him to defile his father's bed; but this was not, for which he gives the following reaſons.

℣. 8. For (ſaid Huſhai) thou knoweſt thy father and his men that they be mighty men, &c.] Men of courage and valour, and not ſuch weak-handed and weak-hearted men, and ſo eaſily intimidated as Ahithophel ſuggeſts: and they be chafed in their minds; or bitter in ſoul[f]; not merely filled with trouble and anguiſh, and depreſſed in their ſpirits on account of that, as the phraſe ſometimes ſignifies; but enraged and full of wrath, at the rebellion raiſed againſt their prince, which obliged them with him to quit their habitations; and now being deſperate, their all lying at ſtake, their wives and children, their families and eſtates, they would fight furiouſly in the defence of the king and themſelves, and not ſo ſoon flee as Ahithophel had repreſented: as a bear robbed of her whelps in the field; a bear is a very furious creature, and eſpecially a ſhe-bear, and the more when it has whelps, and more ſo when deprived of them[g], when it ranges about in the field, and in its fury attacks whomſoever it meets with; ſee the note on Hoſ. xiii. 8. and thy father is a man of war; not only bold and courageous, but expert and ſkilful in all the arts of war, and not eaſy to be ſurprized and circumvented, as Ahithophel intimated: and will not lodge with the people; in the camp, but at ſome diſtance from it; partly to prevent any traiterous deſign upon him in it, and partly that he might not be ſurprized by the enemy, knowing that their chief view was to ſeize his perſon; and therefore as it would not be eaſy to find him where he was, he could not be ſmitten alone, as Ahithophel propoſed.

℣. 9. Behold, he is hid now in ſome pit, or in ſome other place, &c.] Some lurking place, as he was acquainted with many when he fled from Saul, and where he preſerved himſelf from him; ſo that he could never take him, as he would now from Abſalom, as he inſinuates: but this is not all; not only only by this means he would ſhelter himſelf, and be in ſafety; but lying thus concealed with others, and in ambuſh, there would be danger of his ſtarting out of his hiding place when opportunity ſhould offer, and falling on ſome of Abſalom's troops unawares: and it will come to paſs, when ſome of them be overthrown at the firſt; that is, ſome of Abſalom's party, on whom David and his men coming out of an ambuſh ſhould fall, and make a ſlaughter among them firſt, before they could do any thing of conſequence; and ſo having got the firſt advantage, it would ſerve to animate them, and diſhearten their enemies: that whoſoever heareth it; at that time, or the next day: will ſay, There is a ſlaughter among the people that follow Abſalom; there has been a defeat of them, and that may cauſe a defection.

[f] מרי נפש amari animo, Pagninus, Montanus; amaro animo, V. L. Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[g] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 6. c. 18. & 9. 1.

℣. 10. And he alſo that is valiant, whoſe heart is as the heart of a lion, ſhall utterly melt, &c.] That is, whoever ſhould hear of Abſalom's forces, or a part of them, being routed, would be intimidated, though ever ſo courageous, or of ſuch a lion-like temper and diſpoſition; and even Ahithophel himſelf, notwithſtanding all his boaſted courage, his heart would fail, he would melt like water [h], Joſh. vii. 5. ſhould he meet with ſuch a rebuff at firſt ſetting out. A lion is well known for its courage as well as ſtrength, and has not only a fierce countenance, hence we read of lion-like men in their faces, ch. xxiii. 20. 1 Chron. xii. 8. but has a courageous heart, and from thence it is thought to have its name Labi, from Leb, which ſignifies the heart; ſo Hercules is repreſented by the poet as having a lion's heart [i], and others alſo; though Leo Africanus [k] relates of ſome lions in Africa that are ſo naturally fearful, that they will flee at the cry of children, particularly at a place called Agla; hence it became a proverb with the inhabitants of Fez, to call bluſtring cowards the lions of Agla; and he ſpeaks of great numbers of lions elſewhere [l], who are eaſily driven away with a ſmall ſtick by the moſt timorous perſons; but for the moſt part lions are very bold and daring, as well as ſtrong, to which the alluſion is here. Some apply this to David himſelf, who was a valiant man, and whoſe heart was like that of a lion, and ſo read the laſt clauſe with an interrogation: Shall he utterly melt? no, he will not; he is not to be made afraid ſo eaſily as Ahithophel has intimated: for all Iſrael knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and they which be with him are valiant men; this is ſo univerſally known that it cannot be denied.

℣. 11. Therefore I counſel, &c.] My advice is as follows: that all Iſrael be generally gathered unto thee, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba, as the ſand that is by the ſea for multitude; not all the inhabitants of the land, but ſuch as are fit to bear arms, or that were ſoldiers, employed in military affairs, in keeping garriſons, guarding the coaſts, &c. even the militia of the nation, from the extreme boundary of it on the north to the extreme boundary of it on the ſouth; in ſuch a direction lay Dan and Beer-ſheba. This is oppoſed to the counſel of Ahithophel, which was only to ſelect 12,000 men, and ſend them againſt David at once; and this is deſigned chiefly to gain time, ſince ſuch a collection could not be made ſoon, and ſo David would have more time to get farther off, and to prepare the better for his defence; and this advice might be the more agreeable to Abſalom, as it promiſed a greater certainty of ſucceſs thro' numbers, and might feed the vanity and ambition of that prince to have ſuch a large army under him, as well as ſuggeſted that all Iſrael were on his ſide, and at his command, and might eaſily be gathered to him: and that thou go to battle in thine own perſon; this was another part of his advice oppoſed to the counſel of Ahithophel, who propoſed to have the command of the 12,000 men himſelf, and to leave Abſalom at Jeruſalem; now Huſhai ſuggeſts, that it would be more to his intereſt and his honour to take command of the army himſelf, and go in perſon into the field of battle; ſince this would ſerve to animate his ſoldiers, when they ſaw their prince at the head of them, and he would have the glory of the victory, which he might inſinuate hereby, Ahithophel ſought to deprive him of: it is in the Hebrew text, that thy face or faces go to battle [m], where he might be ſeen in perſon, and have the overſight and direction of things himſelf; the Targum is, "and thou ſhalt go at the head of us all;" and this advice Huſhai was directed to give, and which was taken, that Abſalom might fall in battle.

℣. 12. So ſhall we come upon him in ſome place where he ſhall be found, &c.] For ſuch a numerous army, which would be ſpread abroad, could not well fail of finding him out, let him be in what lurking-place he would; whereas, he might lie concealed, and eſcape ſo ſmall a number as 12,000 men: and we will light upon him as the dew falleth upon the ground; whoſe drops are innumerable, and cover all the ground where they fall; and the phraſe not only expreſſes their numbers, but the irreſiſtible force they ſhould come with, and the manner, ſecretly, unawares, opportunely; the Romans had a ſort of ſoldiers, called from the dew Rorarii, who carried light armour, and fought firſt in the battle, from whence they had their name, becauſe dew falls before it rains [n]: and of him, and of all the men that are with him, there ſhall not be left ſo much as one; ſo that for the future Abſalom would ſit eaſy upon the throne, there being none left to moleſt him.

℣. 13. Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, &c.] A ſtrong fortified place, thinking to ſecure himſelf there, where he might hold out againſt thoſe that were riſen againſt him; the former part of the account ſuppoſes him in the field, where he would ſoon be detected, if hidden in a pit or any other place, or if he appeared openly, would quickly be overthrown by the numerous forces of Abſalom; and here it ſuggeſts, ſhould he betake himſelf to a city for ſhelter, then ſhall all Iſrael bring ropes to that city; ſcaling ropes, and thereby get upon and over the walls of it, and take it by ſtorm; or engines worked with ropes, uſed for the demoliſhing of cities; ſo Tacitus ſpeaks of vincula tormentorum, the bands or ropes of engines, as Grotius obſerves; the Targum renders it by armies, thus, "all Iſrael ſhall be gathered againſt the city, and ſurround it with armies," beſiege it in form, and ſo begirt it, that David could not poſſibly make his eſcape out of it, nor could it hold out long againſt ſuch numerous forces; or this is an hyperbolical expreſſion, as Kimchi calls it, ſignifying that their numbers would be ſo many, that they could ſoon and eaſily demoliſh it: and we will draw it into the river; by the ſide of which it was built, or the ditch or trench around

[h] ——πυτε λειβεται υδωρ, Moſchi Idyll. 2. ℣. 45. ℣. 279. Vid. Heſiod. Theogoniam prope finem.
[i] Θυμολεοντα, Homer. Iliad. 5. ℣. 639. Iliad. 7. ℣. 228. Odyſſ. 11. ℣. 611.
[k] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 3. p. 400.
[l] Ib. p. 474.
[m] פניך הלכים facies tuæ euntes, Montanus, facies tua vadat, Pagninus.
[n] Valtrinus de milit. Roman. l. 3. c. 3.

around it, or the valley near it, that being built on an hill; and by this boaſting, bragging, hyperbolical expreſſion he ſignifies, that they ſhould be able eaſily and utterly to deſtroy its walls, buildings, and towers, as if a number of men were to faſten a rope about any thing, and by their main ſtrength, and through their numbers, draw it down whither they pleaſed: until there be not one ſmall ſtone found there; and this being the caſe, David and his men muſt inevitably fall into their hands, and none eſcape.

℣. 14. And Abſalom and all the men of Iſrael ſaid, &c.] That is, the elders, who before approved of the counſel of Ahithophel, ℣. 4. The counſel of Huſhai the Archite is better than the counſel of Ahithophel; it appeared to them moſt plauſible, and moſt likely to be attended with ſucceſs: for the Lord had appointed to defeat the good counſel of Ahithophel; for ſo it was to Abſalom and his party the beſt and wiſeſt that could be given them; but it was the Lord's will it ſhould be defeated, and therefore the minds of Abſalom and of the elders of Iſrael were blinded: to the intent that the Lord might bring evil upon Abſalom; his perſon and cauſe; that his cauſe might be ruined, and he himſelf ſlain in battle; ſee Prov. xix. 21.

℣. 15. Then ſaid Huſhai unto Zadok and to Abiathar the prieſts, &c.] After he was returned from the council-board, he immediately went to theſe prieſts, who he knew were in the intereſt of David, and to whom he was to communicate, and by them tranſmit, what paſſed at Jeruſalem, ch. xv. 35, 36. Thus and thus did Ahithophel counſel Abſalom and the elders of Iſrael; relating to them in expreſs words what he adviſed to: and thus and thus have I counſelled; telling them in what manner he had given his counſel.

℣. 16. Now therefore ſend quickly, and tell David, &c.] What has been adviſed to on both ſides: ſaying, Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderneſs; which reached to Jericho; this advice he gave, becauſe he knew not whether his counſel would be abode by, though preferred; Abſalom and the elders of Iſrael might change their minds, and Ahithophel might, by the ſtrength of his oratory, prevail upon them after all to follow his advice; and therefore, to guard againſt the worſt, he judged it moſt prudential in David to make all the haſte he could from that place where he was, and not continue a night longer in it; for if Ahithophel's counſel ſhould take place, he would be in purſuit of him that very night: but ſpeedily paſs over; the river Jordan: leſt the king be ſwallowed up, and all the people that are with him: be deſtroyed by the forces Ahithophel ſhould bring with him, which he would not be able to withſtand.

℣. 17. Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz ſtayed by Enrogel, &c.] Who were the ſons of the prieſts; theſe did not go into the city of Jeruſalem with their parents, when they were ſent back by David, ch. xv. 27. but ſtayed by their direction at this place, which was near Jeruſalem, and is called in the Targum the fuller's fountain, where they waſhed their cloths; and as Kimchi and Jarchi ſay, by treading them with their feet, whence it had the name of Rogel, of which ſee the note on Joſh xv. 7. (for they might not be ſeen to come into the city:) having been charged by their parents to continue there for the ſake of carrying intelligence to David, or becauſe ſuſpected by Abſalom's party of carrying on ſuch an intrigue: and a wench went and told them: what Huſhai had communicated to the prieſts, and what was his advice to David; this girl is ſuppoſed by Kimchi and Abarbinel to be of the family of Zadok, by whom ſhe was ſufficiently inſtructed to tell her meſſage, and of whom there would be no ſuſpicion: and they went and told king David; the ſons of the prieſts went and related to him all that had been tranſmitted to them.

℣. 18. Neverthelefs, a lad ſaw them, and told Abſalom, &c.] Saw them converſing with the girl, and departing for David's army; according to Joſephus [o], they were ſome horſemen that ſaw them about two furlongs from Jeruſalem, and acquainted Abſalom with it: but they went both of them away quickly; made all the haſte they could with their meſſage to David: and came to a man's houſe in Bahurim; where very probably they had been informed David had been, whither he came weary, and had refreſhment, ch. xvi. 14. or rather, perceiving they were diſcovered and purſued, they turned in hither, the firſt place they came to, for ſafety: which had a well in his court; which they obſerved, and was the reaſon of their turning in: whither they went down; to hide themſelves from their purſuers, it being dry, as ſometimes wells were in the ſummer-time: Joſephus ſays [p], a woman let them down by a rope.

℣. 19. And the woman took and ſpread a covering over the well's mouth, &c.] This woman, very probably, was the man's wife of the houſe, as Abarbinel notes; who took a cloth, and ſpread it over the well's mouth, that it could not be ſeen, or known that there was a well there: and ſpread ground corn thereon; juſt taken out of the mill, before it was ſifted, whilſt in the bran; or corn unhuſked, or juſt thraſhed out, in order to be dried in the ſun, and then parched; or wheat bruiſed for that purpoſe: Joſephus ſays [q], they were locks of wool ſhe ſpread: and the thing was not known; that the young men were in the well.

℣. 20. And when Abſalom's ſervants came to the woman to the houſe, &c.] Who were ſent after them, had intelligence which way they took, and into what houſe they turned: they ſaid, Where are Ahimaaz and Jonathan? calling them by their names, being perſons well known, and as to them, ſo to the woman of the houſe, as they ſuppoſed: and the woman ſaid unto them, They be gone over the brook of water; the river Jordan; ſo the Targum, "they have already paſſed over Jordan;" this was a lie ſhe told them, which is not to be juſtified; the Vulgate Latin verſion, "they paſſed over haſtily, having drank a little water;" and ſo Joſephus [r] in ſome copies: and when they had ſought and could not find them; not only ſearched that houſe, but very probably others in Bahurim: they returned to Jeruſalem; to give an account what ſucceſs they had.

℣. 21. And it came to paſs after they were departed, &c.] The ſervants of Abſalom: that they came up out of the well; the ſons of the prieſts, being informed by the woman that they were gone; Joſephus [s] ſays they were drawn up by the woman with a rope: and went and told king David; who was now in the plain of the wilderneſs, perhaps near Jericho, and not a great way from Jordan, to whom they related the whole of their meſſage: and ſaid unto David; as they were directed: ariſe, and paſs quickly over the water; the river Jordan: for thus thus hath Ahithophel counſelled againſt you; to come with 12,000 men, and fall upon him that very night; and it was not certain his counſel would be rejected, and therefore it was adviſeable for David to prepare againſt the worſt.

[o] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 9. §. 7. [p] Ibid. [q] Ibid. [r] Antiq. l. 7. c. 9. §. 7. Hudſon. not. in ib. [s] Ibid.

℣. 22. Then David aroſe, and all the people that were with him, and paſſed over Jordan, &c.] Taking the advice of Huſhai: by the morning-light there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan; they travelled all night, and before it was morning they had all paſſed the river in boats, or through the fords, and not one was loſt in the paſſage, nor any deſerted, ſee John xvii. 12. and now perhaps David penned the 42d and 43d pſalms.

℣. 23. And when Ahithophel ſaw that his counſel was not followed, &c.] But that of Huſhai: he ſaddled his aſs; or ordered it to be ſaddled: and aroſe, and gat him home to his houſe, to his city; which was Giloh in the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 12. and put his houſhold in order; made his will, and diſpoſed of his eſtates, ſee Iſ. xxxviii. 1. or commanded his houſe or houſhold [t]; gave orders and inſtructions, both relating to himſelf when dead, where and how he ſhould be buried, and to his family, how they ſhould behave to one another and among their neighbours, and towards their ſuperiors; and particularly, the Jews ſay [u], he gave them this charge, not to rebel againſt the government of the houſe of David: and hanged himſelf; ſo to his other ſins added that of ſuicide, which was done deliberately, as the preceding clauſe ſhews; this he did, partly becauſe his proud ſpirit could not bear it, that his counſel ſhould be ſlighted, and that of another be preferred to it; and partly, becauſe he plainly foreſaw that the cauſe of Abſalom would be ruined by neglecting his counſel, and following that of Huſhai's, whereby he himſelf would fall into the hands of David, and be put to death by him as a traitor; and he choſe to die by his own hand, and not his; and the rather, to prevent the confiſcation of his goods and eſtates as a traitor, and his heirs being deprived of them; tho' ſome think he died of a diſeaſe, by ſtrangling or ſuffocation in the throat, was choaked through grief and trouble; ſo R. Elias obſerves [w], that ſome ſay that this diſeaſe came upon him through the greatneſs of his grief of mind and trouble of ſoul, becauſe his counſel was not taken, and he died of ſtrangling; and they ſay this, becauſe they reckon it an abſurdity for ſo wiſe and underſtanding a man as he was to hang himſelf; but the caſe ſeems very clear that he did deſtroy himſelf; the Jews ſay [x] he was but 33 years of age when he died; for being a bloody and deceitful man, he did not live out half his days, Pſ. lv. 23. which pſalm was penned on his account; but one ſo young could hardly be a counſellor of David, and ſo famous for his wiſe counſel; and beſides, if ſo young, could not be the grandfather of Bath-ſheba, as the Jews ſay: and died, and was buried in the ſepulchre of his father; though he died an ignominious death, he had an honourable burial; it perhaps not being uſual in thoſe times to put any mark of infamy on thoſe that deſtroyed themſelves, by refuſing them interment in the common burying-places of their friends and neighbours.

℣. 24. Then David came to Mahanaim, &c.] A city on the other ſide Jordan in the tribe of Gad, Joſh. xiii. 26, 30. famous for its being the place where the angels of God met Jacob, Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. and was for ſome time the ſeat of Iſhboſheth the ſon of Saul, ch. ii. 8. and Abſalom paſſed over Jordan, he, and all the men of Iſrael with him; not directly after David, but ſome time after, when, according to the counſel of Huſhai, he had gathered all the warlike men of Iſrael to him that he could, and with this army purſued his father; not content to drive him to the other ſide Jordan, ſought to ſeize his perſon, and take away his life, and ſo ſecure the crown and kingdom to him, of which he made no doubt, having ſuch a numerous army, on which he relied.

℣. 25. And Abſalom made Amaſa captain of the hoſt inſtead of Joab, &c.] Who was along with David: which Amaſa was a man's ſon, whoſe name was Ithra, an Iſraelite; he is called Jether the Iſhmaelite, 1 Chron. ii. 17. either becauſe he was an Iſhmaelite by birth, and being proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, was called an Iſraelite; or rather he was an Iſraelite by birth, and having ſojourned in the land of Iſhmael ſome time, was called an Iſhmaelite, as Uriah the Hittite, and others; and when Amaſa is called a man's ſon, it means a great man, as Kimchi obſerves: that went in to Abigail, the daughter of Nahaſh, ſiſter to Zeruiah, Joab's mother; ſo that Joab and Amaſa, the generals of David and Abſalom, were own couſins, ſiſters children, and David uncle to them both; for Abigail and Zeruiah were David's ſiſters, 1 Chron. ii. 16. children of Jeſſe, whoſe name is here called Nahaſh, having two names, or this was his ſurname; though others think Nahaſh is the name of a woman, the wife of Jeſſe, and that theſe two ſiſters had two mothers, but one father; it ſeems by this expreſſion, went in to, as if Amaſa was not begotten in the conjugal ſtate, but was illegitimate.

℣. 26. So Iſrael and Abſalom pitched in the land of Gilead, &c.] Which belonged to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; here the Iſraelites that were with Abſalom encamped, in order to give battle to David and his men.

℣. 27. And it came to paſs when David was come to Mahanaim, &c.] When he firſt came thither, ℣. 24. that Shobi the ſon of Nahaſh of Rabbah of the children of Ammon; who was either the ſon, or rather the brother of Hanun king of the Ammonites, that uſed David's ambaſſadors in ſo ſhameful a manner, whom David overcame and depoſed, and ſet up this brother in his room; who had ſhewed his diſlike of his brother's conduct, and now makes a grateful return to David for his favours; though ſome ſay this was Hanun himſelf, as Jarchi, now become a proſelyte, which is not ſo likely; others take this man to be an Iſraelite that continued in Rabbah, the metropolis of the Ammonites, after it was taken by David: and Machir the ſon of Ammiel of Lo-debar; the ſame that brought up Mephiboſheth, from whom David received him, and took him off of his hands, for which now he requited him, ſee ch. ix. 5. and Barzillai the Gileadite of Rogelim; a place that lay under the hills of Gilead [y]; it had its name from the fullers who dwelt here for the convenience of fountains of water to waſh their clothes in.

℣. 28. Brought beds, &c.] For David and his men, who, fleeing from Jeruſalem in haſte, could bring none with them, and therefore were ill provided whilſt in the plains of the wilderneſs; the Septuagint

[t] יצו אל ביתו præcepit ad domum ſuam, Montanus. & David de Pomis, Lexic. fol. 148. 2.
[u] T. Hieroſ. Sanhedrin, fol. 29. 1.
[w] In Tiſhbi, p. 129.
[x] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 106. 2.
[y] Fuller's Piſgah-View, b. 2. c. 5. §. 10. p. 94.

Septuagint verſion ſays there were ten of them, and that they were of tapeſtry, wrought on both ſides, and ſuch the antients uſed [z], ſee Prov. vii. 16. and ſo ten baſons in the next clauſe: and baſons, and earthen veſſels; to put their food and liquors in, and eat and drink out of, and for other ſervices: and wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn; or Kali, which was made of the above corn ground into meal, and mixed with water or milk, and eat with honey or oil, as there was another ſort made of pulſe after-mentioned: and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulſe; or Kali, made of theſe in the above manner. Some think [a] coffee is meant, but without reaſon.

℣. 29. And honey, and butter, &c.] Honey was much in uſe with the antients; Homer [b] ſpeaks of it as a part of the proviſions at a feaſt, and as food with which perſons were nouriſhed and brought up; and the antient Scythians lived on milk and honey [c]; and this and butter were pretty much the food of the people in Judea; ſee Iſa. vii. 15—22. and ſheep; with which and goats the land of Gilead abounded; ſee Cant. iv. 1, 2. and cheeſe of kine; made of the milk of cows, as it commonly is: for David, and for the people that were with him, to eat; and no doubt they brought wine with them for them to drink; the men that brought theſe, ſome brought one ſort, and ſome another, or however different parcels of the ſame, and did not join in one preſent; for they came from different parts: for they ſaid, The people is hungry, and weary, and thirſty in the wilderneſs; where they had been ſome time, and out of which they had juſt come, and ſo weary with travelling, and therefore brought beds to lie down and reſt upon; and being hungry and thirſty, through want of bread and water in the wilderneſs, they brought them both eatables and drinkables; for though the latter is not expreſſed, it is to be underſtood, as the word thirſty ſuppoſes.

CHAP. XVIII.

IN this chapter is an account of David's review of his army, preparing it for battle with Abſalom, and thoſe with him, ℣. 1—5. and of the defeat and flight of the rebels, ℣. 6, 7, 8. and of the death of Abſalom, and the manner of it, and of his burial, ℣. 9—18. and of the news of it brought to David by different perſons, ℣. 19—32. and of his great grief and ſorrow on that account, ℣. 33.

℣. 1. And David numbred the people that were with him, &c.] Which Joſephus ſays [d] were 4000; but one would think there ſhould be more by what follows: and ſet captains of thouſands, and captains of hundreds over them; he divided his army into companies, which conſiſted ſome of a thouſand and others of a hundred; over each of which he ſet captains, to lead them on, direct and command them in battle.

℣. 2. And David ſent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab, &c.] Very likely that which made the centre of the army, ſince Joab was the general of the army; though this diſtribution was made when David thought to have headed the army himſelf, and ſo made with reſpect to that: and a third part under the hand of Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah, Joab's brother; who was next to Joab in the army, and fought with him againſt the Syrians and Ammonites, ch. x. 10, 11. and a third part under the hand of Ittai the Gittite; of whom ſee ch. xv. 19. of theſe two parts conſiſted the right and left wings of the army: and the king ſaid unto the people; the ſoldiers, and particularly the officers: I will ſurely go forth with you myſelf alſo; in which he ſeemed very reſolute and peremptory; and this he propoſed to do, not merely to animate the ſoldiers with his preſence, and to ſhew that he was willing to hazard his life with them, but chiefly for the ſake of Abſalom, to preſerve his life, if poſſible.

℣. 3. But the people anſwered, Thou ſhalt not go forth, &c.] They were as reſolute as David: for if we flee away, they will not care for us; to purſue after us; they will make no account of the victory; but if they could ſlay David, or get him into their hands, it would be more to them than if the whole army was routed: but now thou art worth ten thouſand of us; not only in our own eſteem, but in the account of the enemy, who had rather thou ſhouldſt fall into their hands than 10,000 of us; and as the advantage to them, ſo the loſs to us would be more than 10,000 men: therefore now it is better that thou ſuccour us out of the city; either by ſending them proviſions or recruits, that might be there in reſerve, if neceſſary; or by being ready to receive them into it ſhould they be repulſed; or rather, by his prayers to God for them; ſo the Targum, "now it is better that thou pray for us out of the city;" that is, that the Lord would help us; and ſo moſt of the Jewiſh commentators underſtand it of helping them by his prayers and counſels.

℣. 4. And the king ſaid unto them, What ſeemeth you beſt, I will do, &c.] Which was an inſtance of great condeſcenſion in him; and it was his wiſdom and prudence to yield to them at ſuch a time as this, and eſpecially as their ſentiments were founded on affection and loyalty to him: and the king ſtood by the gate-ſide; of the city of Mahanaim: and all the people came out by hundreds, and by thouſands; and paſſed by him, to whom no doubt he gave his bleſſing and beſt wiſhes; and, as Abarbinel thinks, now it was he compoſed and ſaid the 20th pſalm, The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble, &c.

℣. 5. And the king commanded Joab, and Abiſhai, and Ittai, &c.] His three generals, to whom he had committed his army divided into three parts: ſaying, Deal gently for my ſake with the young man, even with Abſalom; he does not call him his ſon, being in rebellion againſt him, but the young man, who was young, and raſh, and fooliſh, and ſo to be pitied; his requeſt is, that they would ſpare him, and not take away his life, when in their power; that they would not aim at him, and puſh him hard, and fall upon him with wrath and fury; but if he fell into their hands, to take him alive, and bring him away, and not put him to death. This flowed flowed from a natural affection to him, and a concern for the welfare of his soul, that he might not die in this sin; and also from a consciousness that it was for his own sins that he was raised up to rebel against him; and he seems to speak as if he was certain that the battle would go for him, and against Absalom; and which he might conclude from the answer of prayer he had in defeating the counsel of Ahithophel: and all the people heard when he gave all the captains charge concerning Absalom; not only the three generals, but all the captains of hundreds and thousands, and this was heard by the common soldiers as well as by the people of the city that were spectators on this occasion, see ℣. 12.

[z] Vid. Ariſtophan. in Pluto, p. 55. [a] Sterringa, Animadv. Philol. Sacr. p. 48. [b] Iliad. 11. ℣. 630. Odyſſ. 10. ℣. 245. & Odyſſ. 20. ℣. 72. Alex. ab. Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 3. c. 11. Sueton. vita Nero. c. 27. [c] Juſtin e Trogo, l. 2. c. 2. [d] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 10. §. 1.

℣. 6. So the people went out into the field against Israel, &c.] Josephus [c] calls it a great field, with a wood behind it: and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim; or near it [f] rather; not in a wood in the tribe of Ephraim, which lay on this side Jordan; whereas, this battle was fought on the other side Jordan, in the land of Gilead, not far from Mahanaim, where was this wood; and which was so called, either from the slaughter of the Ephraimites here in the times of Jephthah, Judg. xii. 4, 5, 6. or from the Ephraimites feeding their cattle here and near it; for the Jews say [g], that Joshua gave them a grant to feed their cattle in any wood in any of the tribes of Israel; and lying near Jordan, they used to drive their cattle over to this place, from whence it had its name.

℣. 7. Where the people of Israel were slain before the servants of David, &c.] That is, the people of Israel that were under Absalom, these were beaten by David's army: and there was a great slaughter that day of 20,000 men; including both those that fell in the field of battle, and that were slain in the pursuit; and this is to be understood only of Absalom's party.

℣. 8. For the battle was there scattered over the face of all the country, &c.] Or the warriors were scattered, as the Targum; Absalom's soldiers, their ranks were broken, and they were thrown into the utmost confusion, and ran about here and there all over the field or plain in which the battle was fought, and into the neighbouring wood: and the wood devoured more people that day, than the sword devoured; there were more slain in it than in the field of battle, what by one thing or another; as by falling into pits and on stumps of trees, and being entangled in the bushes, and could make but little haste, and so were overtaken by David's men, and slain; insomuch that, as Josephus [h] observes, there were more slain fleeing than fighting, and perhaps some might perish by wild beasts; so the Targum, "and the beasts of the wood slew more of the people than were slain by the sword;" and so the Syriac and Arabic versions render the words to the same purpose.

℣. 9. And Absalom met the servants of David, &c.] When his army was routed, he was in such a fright that he knew not which way to flee, and instead of flying from David's men, he fled in the way of them; but none of them attempted to slay him, nor even to stop him, but let him pass by them, knowing David's charge concerning him: and Absalom rode upon a mule; as was common for great personages to do in those days, ch. xiii. 29. and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak; and running full speed, Absalom could not guide him, nor stop, nor divert him from going under it: and his head caught hold of the oak; either the hair of his head was entwisted and entangled in the thick boughs of the oak; or rather his head was jammed into a forked branch of the oak: and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth; hung in the air between both, as unworthy to live in either: and the mule that was under him went away; and left him hanging in the oak.

℣. 10. And a certain man saw it, &c.] Saw him in the above posture, one of David's soldiers: and told Joab, and said, Behold, I saw Absalom hanged in an oak; caught by the neck in one, out of which he could not disengage himself, but there he hung, though alive.

℣. 11. And Joab said unto the man that told him, &c.] That gave the above account of him: and behold thou sawest him; in reality; or, didst thou see him? is it a fact? and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground; kill him on the spot, that he might have dropped from the tree to the ground: and I would have given thee ten shekels of silver; on the news of it, for doing it, which was near 24 shillings of our money; Josephus says [i] 50 shekels; the Arabic version has it 10,000 talents of silver, too great a sum by far: and a girdle; which was a mark of great honour, and a token of a commission under him, and of investing him with a military office; see 1 Sam. xviii. 4. it used to be given as an honorary reward to soldiers that behaved well, as on the contrary it was reckoned a reproach to be ungirt, or the girdle to be taken away [k].

℣. 12. And the man said unto Joab, &c.] Disdaining his proposal: Though I should receive 1000 shekels of silver in mine hand; or such a sum should be offered to me; the Arabic version is 1,000,000: yet would I not put forth my hand against the king's son; to smite him, and slay him: for in our hearing the king charged thee, and Abishai, and Ittai; his three generals: saying, Beware that none touch the young man Absalom; so as to slay him; they were charged to abstain from it themselves, and to watch and observe others, and keep them from doing it.

℣. 13. Otherwise I should have wrought falsehood against mine own life, &c.] Or soul; he should not only have exposed his life to danger, but acted falsely to the king, by going contrary to his orders; yea, would have done that which was contrary to his own conscience; and if he had buoy'd himself up with the hope of impunity, or of a reward, he should have found himself mistaken; the textual reading is, against his life [l], or soul, the life of Absalom, by taking it away: for there is no matter hid from the king; this, though done ever so secretly, would have come to his knowledge by some means or another, and then I should have incurred his displeasure, and suffered for it: and thou thyself wouldst have set thyself against me; to accuse and bring him to justice; he would have been so far from protecting him, that he would have been the first man that would have insisted on it that he should be punished for it; or why dost not thou thyself set thyself against him, and smite him? thou mayest if thou pleasest, yonder he hangs, go and smite him.

℣. 14. Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee, &c.] It is not worth while to talk with thee any longer, nor must I lose time, and neglect my opportunity; I do not desire you to go and smite him, him, I'll go and do it myſelf: and he took three darts in his hand; or three rod, which were either all iron, or however the tops of them were iron ſpikes: and thruſt them through the heart of Abſalom; or through the midſt of his body; for if he had thruſt through his heart, properly ſpeaking, he muſt have died inſtantly, whereas he ſeems to have lived after this: while he was yet alive; Joab found him alive when he came to him, and ſo he was when he thruſt his darts through him; and ſo he was afterward; for the words may be rendered, being yet alive, even after the darts were fixed in him, and even ſo deeply as to pierce through his body: in the midſt, or heart, of the oak; into which the darts penetrated.

[c] Ut supra, §. 2. Abarbinel in loc. [f] ביער ad sylvam, Junius & Tremellius; prope sylvam, Piscator. [g] In Jarchi, Kimchi, & בראשית [h] Ut supra. [i] Ibid. [k] Vide Lydium de re militare, l. 3. c. 6. [l] את נפשי contra animam illius, Piscator.

℣. 15. And ten young men that bare Joab's armour, &c.] That waited upon him in the battle, to carry his armour, and ſupply him with it as he ſhould have occaſion; theſe by his orders, compaſſed about, and ſmote Abſalom, and ſlew him; they enclоſed him that none might reſcue him, and ſmote him with their ſpears or ſwords, or whatſoever armour they had, until it was a clear caſe that he was really dead. Joab in this diſobeyed the king's order, but provided for the good of the nation, and the ſafety of the king. The Jews obſerve [m], that meaſure for meaſure was given to Abſalom; he was proud of his hair, and therefore was hanged by it; he lay with ten concubines of his father, and therefore was ſmitten with ten lances or ſpears by ten young men; and he ſtole three hearts, the heart of his father, the heart of the Sanhedrim, and the heart of the men of Iſrael, and therefore three darts were fixed in him.

℣. 16. And Joab blew the trumpet, &c.] As the ſign of a retreat: and the people returned from purſuing after Iſrael; upon the ſound of the trumpet, the meaning of which they underſtood: for Joab held back the people; from ſhedding any more blood; the head of the conſpiracy being removed, the thing would be cruſhed at once; and Joab neither choſe to ſlay any more, nor take any priſoners, to be tried as traitors, being unawares, without thought, drawn into this rebellion.

℣. 17. And they took Abſalom, and caſt him into a great pit in the wood, &c.] In the wood of Ephraim, near to which the battle was fought, and into which Abſalom fled, and where he was ſlain: and laid a very great heap of ſtones upon him; his puniſhment was very exemplary; he was firſt hanged on an oak, and then thruſt through with darts and ſwords, and then covered with ſtones, pointing to the death that a rebellious ſon, according to the law, ought to die, Deut. xxi. 21. tho' this might be done in honour of him as a king's ſon; for ſuch tumuli, or heaps of ſtones or earth, were uſed by the antients as ſepulchral monuments, and the larger the more honourable [n]; ſee the note on Joſh. vii. 26. and viii. 29. and all Iſrael fled every one to his tent; or to his city, as the Targum; every one returned to their own houſe, and to their own buſineſs, and ſo the rebellion ceaſed.

℣. 18. Now Abſalom in his life-time had taken, &c.] Had taken it into his head, had of himſelf deviſed it, as Kimchi explains it; he contrived the following ſcheme to perpetuate his memory: and reared up for himſelf a pillar, which is in the king's dale; or valley, the valley of Jehoſhaphat; this pillar was of marble, as Joſephus [o] ſays, and ſtood about two furlongs from Jeruſalem. The author of Cippi Hebraici [p] places it at the bottom of the mount of Olives: this is obſerved to ſhew how vain are the devices and contrivances of men's hearts; Abſalom intended to have been buried under or by this monumental pillar near Jeruſalem, and lo, he was buried in a pit, under an heap of ſtones, in a wood on the other ſide Jordan; whether his bones were ever removed hither it is not certain, though a notion has obtained, that his grave was near this pillar. Rauwolff [q] ſays, that as you go from the valley of Jehoſhaphat [r] to the mount of Olives, you ſee below, towards your left hand, near unto the bridge of the river Cedron, an old ſquare building like unto a ſteeple; this, although it is believed to this day, not only by Chriſtians, but alſo by Turks and Moors, to be the grave of Abſalom, as you ſhall ſee them fling ſtones into it as they go by, to revenge his undutifulneſs to his father, yet was he not buried there. Sandys [s] ſays, at the eaſt end of the bridge, (over Cedron) and a little on the north, ſtands the pillar of Abſalom, being yet entire, and of a good fabrick, riſing in a lofty ſquare, below adorned with half columns, wrought out of the ſides and corners, of the Doric form; and then changing into a round, a good height higher doth grow to a point in faſhion of a bell, all framed of the growing ſtone; againſt this there lies a great heap of ſtones, which increaſeth daily, by Jews and Mahometans throwing ſtones as they paſs by; ſo that the frontiſpiece of it, which faces the road, as Le Bruyn [t] ſays, looks like a mountain of ſtones; but as to the fabrick itſelf, he ſays, there is not a finer piece of workmanſhip to be met with in all thoſe parts; it takes up a compaſs of ground of 82 feet and an half ſquare; the body, which is ſquare, with its moulding, is one entire piece; and the coping, which is an ornament to it, and runs up into a point, taken with the reſt of the work, is above 30 feet high; 20 columns, cut out of the ſame rock, add to the beauty of this pile; one ſees through a broken window a great many pieces of antiquity that hang up in a chamber. Adrichomius alſo relates [u], from travellers, that in the king's valley is now a tower, and a large heap of ſtones, which is increaſed every day more and more; for heathens and ſtrangers paſſing by there, have a cuſtom to caſt every one a ſtone at it, as it were revenging, according to the law, Abſalom's rebellion againſt David his father, and curſe him after this manner; Let Abſalom the parricide be curſed, and whoever unrighteouſly perſecutes their parents are curſed for ever: for he ſaid, I have no ſon to keep my name in remembrance; for though he had three ſons, it ſeems they were all dead, ſee ch. xiv. 27. and he called the pillar after his own name, and it is called unto this day, Abſalom's place; or his hand [w], the work of his hand; ſome wrongly think it was in the form of an hand; it was an obeliſk or monument, erected to preſerve his name; but ſince it became ſo infamous, it would have been better to have had it buried in oblivion. Such ſepulchral monuments were uſed in other nations; ſo Minerva adviſed Telemachus [x] to go in queſt of his father Ulyſſes, and if he could not find him, but was aſſured of his death, then to raiſe a ſignal or monument in memory of him, which he reſolved to do.

℣. 19. Then ſaid Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok, &c.] To Joab; for it ſeems he ſtayed with the army when when he with Jonathan brought the meſſage from Huſhai to David: let me now run, and bear the king tidings how that the Lord hath avenged him on his enemies; which he thought would be very acceptable to hear of as ſoon as poſſible; and to be a meſſenger with tidings of a victory, as it was honourable, ſo likewiſe profitable then as now; tho' perhaps Ahimaaz might have no reſpect to the reward, as indeed none could be expected, ſince the death of Abſalom would be ſo diſagreeable to the king; but was deſirous of it, that the king might be acquainted with the event of the battle as ſoon as might be.

[m] Miſn. Sotah, c. 1. §. 8. [n] Homer. Iliad. 23. ℣. 245. 257. [o] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 10. §. 3. [p] P. 26. Ed. Hotting. [q] Travels, part 3. c. 21. p. 310, 311. Ed. Ray. [r] So Benjamin. Itinerar. p. 73. [s] Travels, l. 3. p. 147. Ed. 5. [t] Voyage to the Levant, c. 48. p. 188. [u] Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 174. [w] יד Sept. manus. V. L. Montanus. [x] Homer Odyſſ. 1. v. 297. Odyſſ. 2. v. 248.

℣. 20. And Joab ſaid unto him, thou ſhalt not bear tidings this day, &c.] Becauſe Joab knew the tidings of Abſalom's death would not be acceptable to the king; and Ahimaaz being a good man, and the ſon of a prieſt, for whom Joab had a reſpect, he would not ſend the tidings by him, which he was ſenſible would not recommend him to the king: but thou ſhalt bear tidings another day; when any ſalvation is wrought, or victory obtained, the tidings of which will be welcome: but this day thou ſhalt bear no tidings, becauſe the king's ſon is dead; and thou muſt carry the news concerning his death, which it is not proper thou ſhouldſt being a prieſt, nor will it be to thine advantage.

℣. 21. Then ſaid Joab to Cuſhi, &c.] The Ethiopian, or blackmoor; who either was an Ethiopian by birth and proſelyted, or he was an Iſraelite of a black complexion, and therefore ſo called; and was judged a proper perſon by the general to carry ſuch diſmal news to the king, as he knew it would be. Some Jewiſh writers [a] take him to be the ſame with Cuſh the Benjaminite, in the title of the 7th pſalm; and that he is the ſame that told Joab he ſaw Abſalom hanging in an oak, and declared that if 1000 ſhekels of ſilver were offered him, he would not have put forth his hand againſt him, ℣. 10, 11, 12. though ſome think this was one of the ten young men that waited on Joab, and by his orders ſlew Abſalom; but it would have been dangerous for one of theſe to have carried the tidings, had he been known by David to have done it: go tell the king what thou haſt ſeen; by which it ſhould ſeem that he was preſent when Abſalom was killed: and Cuſhi bowed himſelf unto Joab; in reverence to him as his general, and in thankfulneſs for ſending him on this errand: and ran; as faſt as he could.

℣. 22. Then ſaid Ahimaaz, the ſon of Zadok, yet again to Joab, &c.] He could not be eaſy, even though a meſſenger was diſpatched, but preſſed Joab ſtill: but howſoever let me, I pray thee, alſo run after Cuſhi; only permit me to go after him, though not as a meſſenger: and Joab ſaid, wherefore wilt thou run, my ſon? having a great affection for him, and concerned that he ſhould take trouble on him to no purpoſe: ſeeing thou haſt no tidings ready; no news to carry, but what Cuſhi is gone with, and ſo can have no audience of the king, nor any reward from him.

℣. 23. But howſoever (ſaid he) let me run, &c.] Be it as it may, I beg I may have leave; and being ſo very importunate, it was granted: and he ſaid unto him, run; ſince he would take no denial: then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cuſhi; who ran by the way of the mountains; which thought he ſhorter way, that through the plain was eaſieſt, and ſooneſt run, though the longeſt.

℣. 24. And David ſat between the two gates, &c.] Of the city of Mahanaim; which being a fortified place had two walls, one within another, and in each wall a gate; and between theſe David ſat, waiting for news of the battle: and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall; the gate to the outward wall, over which was a tower, and on that a flat roof; to which the watchman went to obſerve if he could ſee an expreſs coming; no doubt by David's orders: and lift up his eyes and looked; that is, very diligently and wiſhfully: and behold, a man running alone; which made him the more obſervable, and was the more likely to be a meſſenger.

℣. 25. And the watchman cried and told the king, &c.] Called with a loud voice from the roof of the watch-tower to the king, ſitting between the gates, and informed him what he ſaw: and the king ſaid, if he be alone there is tidings in his mouth; for if the army was routed and fled, and were purſued, there would be more in company, or ſeveral running one after another: but being but one, it was highly probable that he was ſent expreſs: and he came apace, and drew near; which was another ſign of his being a meſſenger, the haſte he made towards the city.

℣. 26. And the watchman ſaw another man running, &c.] At a farther diſtance: and the watchman called unto the porter; that kept the gate, under which the watch-tower was: and ſaid, behold another man runneth alone; as the other, and has the ſame appearance of a meſſenger: and the king ſaid, he alſo bringeth tidings; it being uſual then, as now, to diſpatch one meſſenger after another, as freſh accounts coming in made it neceſſary.

℣. 27. And the watchman ſaid, me thinketh, &c.] Or, I ſee [b]; I perceive, ſo it appears to me: that the running of the foremoſt is like the running of Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok; who it ſeems was well known, and famous for his manner of running and ſwiftneſs in it, having been employed in carrying expreſſes before from Jeruſalem to David, and his army, whereſoever they were; and ſome of theſe perſons thus employed were very ſwift; we read [c] of one that was a king's meſſenger, that went from Jeruſalem to Tyre, on the 1ſt of Elul, or Auguſt, in a night and a day; which, according to Bunting [d], was 100 miles: this watchman muſt be one of David's centinels, who was well acquainted with the people about him: and the king ſaid, he is a good man, and cometh with good tidings; he knew he was a man of courage, and therefore was not one that fled, but muſt be a meſſenger; and that he was well affected to him, and would never be the meſſenger of evil tidings to him.

℣. 28. And Ahimaaz called and ſaid unto the king, &c.] As ſoon as he came ſo near as to be heard by him, before he came up to him, he ſaid with a loud voice: all is well; the king's army has had ſucceſs, beat the rebels, and obtained a compleat victory: or peace [e]; for it is but one word in the original, which ſignifies all happineſs and proſperity, and this he wiſhed the king; and ſo it is the ſame as if he had ſaid, God ſave the king, may all happineſs attend him: and he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king; when he came nearer to

[a] Pirke Eliezer, c. 53.
[b] אני ראה εγω οραω, Sept. ego videns, Montanus; video, Tigurine verſion, Pagninus; ſalus, Tigurine verſion; ſalve rex, V. L.
[c] T. Hieroſ. Taanioth, fol. 68. 3.
[d] Travels, p. 200.
[e] שלום ειρηνη, Sept. pax, Montanus, to him, not only in reverence of him, but in thankfulneſs to God: and ſaid, bleſſed be the Lord thy God, which hath delivered up the men that lift up their hand againſt my lord the king; in which he aſcribes the victory, not to Joab and his army, but to the Lord, to whom he gives thanks; and this agreeable to his character as a good man, and a prieſt of the Lord.

℣. 29. And the king ſaid, is the young man Abſalom ſafe? &c.] Or is there peace[1] to him; you ſay there is peace, and that proſperity and ſucceſs have attended my army; but what peace has Abſalom? is he well, and in ſafety? David ſeemed more concerned for him, than for his army, and the ſucceſs of it; and even ſuggeſts as if it was nothing if Abſalom was not ſafe, ſo great were his affections towards him: and Ahimaaz anſwered, when Joab ſent the king's ſervant; which was Cuſhi, the firſt meſſenger, whoſe office perhaps it was to be one of the king's meſſengers, and therefore called his ſervant: and me thy ſervant Ahimaaz; himſelf who was ſent after the other: I ſaw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was; he perceived that the tidings of the death of Abſalom would be diſagreeable to the king, and therefore concealed it from him; and though a good man, he cannot be excuſed from lying, for certainly he knew that Abſalom was dead, as appears from ℣. 19, 20. though indeed what he ſaid might be true, that after Joab had ſent him and Cuſhi, as the Targum paraphraſes it, he ſaw a company of people gathered together in a tumultuous manner, the meaning of which he knew not; but then this was no other than an evaſion.

℣. 30. And the king ſaid unto him, turn aſide, and ſtand here, &c.] On the ſide of him, not far from him, until the other meſſenger came, that he might learn from them both the true ſtate of the caſe: and he turned aſide, and ſtood ſtill; ſaying nothing more to the king, nor he to him.

℣. 31. And behold Cuſhi came, &c.] A little after: and Cuſhi ſaid, tidings my lord the king; news is ſent and brought by me, and good news it is: for the Lord hath avenged thee this day of all them that roſe up againſt thee; they are either killed or diſperſed; there is an entire victory over them, and deliverance from them.

℣. 32. And the king ſaid unto Cuſhi, is the young man Abſalom ſafe? &c.] The ſame queſtion that was put to Ahimaaz, ℣. 29. which ſhews what lay neareſt his heart, and was uppermoſt in his mind: and Cuſhi anſwered, the enemies of my lord the king, and all that riſe againſt thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is; which was tacitly ſaying he was dead, and ſo David underſtood it; and he expreſſed it in ſuch a manner, that David could not be diſpleaſed with the meſſenger, though the meſſage was grievous to him.

℣. 33. And the king was much moved, &c.] His affections were moved, his paſſions were ſtirred up; he was greatly troubled, diſtreſſed, and grieved: and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept; got out of ſight and company as ſoon as he could; as his own dwelling was at ſome diſtance, he made haſte to the chamber in the watch-tower, over the gate of the city, where the watchman was, to vent his grief; and could not ſuppreſs it till he got thither: and as he went; up the ſtairs to the chamber: thus he ſaid, O my ſon Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon Abſalom; which repetition expreſſes the vehemence of his affections, and how inconſolable he was on account of his ſon's death: would God I had died for thee, O Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon; ſome think he ſaid this on account of his eternal ſtate, being ſatisfied of his own; but it may be, it was only the effect of natural affection, indulged to too great a degree, and unbecoming ſo good a man in ſuch a caſe; the Targum is, "I wiſh I had died for thee, and thou hadſt remained this day."

CHAP. XIX.

DAVID indulging to too much grief for the death of his ſon, is rebuked by Joab, and threatened with a revolt of the people from him, if he did not change his conduct, which he accordingly did, ℣. 1—8. upon which the men of Iſrael were the firſt that moved for the bringing him back to Jeruſalem, and the men of Judah were ſolicited to join with them in it, which was effected, ℣. 9—15. and at Jordan Shimei that had curſed him met him, and aſked his pardon, and was forgiven, ℣. 16—23. and when come to Jeruſalem Mephibo-ſheth excuſed ſo well his not going out with him, that he had half his land reſtored to him, which had been given to his ſervant, ℣. 24—30. and Barzillai, who had very liberally ſupplied the king, was allowed to return to his own city, and Chimham his ſon was taken to court, ℣. 31—40. and a contention aroſe between the men of Iſrael and of Judah about the reſtoration of the king, which iſſued in an inſurrection, as the next chapter ſhews, ℣. 41, 42, 43.

℣. 1. And it was told Joab, &c.] When returned to Mahanaim, or on his way to it; perhaps by the meſſengers he ſent; and this report he had before he ſaw the king: behold the king weepeth and mourneth for Abſalom; for the death of him, inſtead of rejoicing at the victory obtained, and the deliverance from his enemies.

℣. 2. And the victory that day was turned into mourning unto all the people, &c.] They alſo mourned too, inſtead of expreſſing joy upon the occaſion: for the people heard ſay that day how the king was grieved for his ſon; this report was ſpread among them, which damped their joy, and hindered them from giving any tokens of it, as were uſual at ſuch times.

℣. 3. And the people got them by ſtealth that day into the city, &c.] Did not march into it in companies, in a public and triumphant manner, as conquerors uſed to do; but entered in a private manner, one by one, or a very few together, not caring to be ſeen or known, at leaſt by the king, as fearing they had incurred his diſpleaſure: but as people being aſhamed ſteal away when they flee in battle; as if they had been conquered, and not conquerors; nay, had acted a cowardly part, and ran away; and ſo cared not to be ſeen, leſt they ſhould be reproached, or ſuffer for their cowardice.

℣. 4.

[1] שלום לנער eſtne pax puero? V. L. pax puero, Pagninus, Montanus.

v. 4. But the king covered his face, &c.] And would not see his generals, and thank them for their services; but wrapped himself in his mantle, after the manner of mourners: and the king cried with a loud voice, O my son Absalom, O Absalom, my son, my son; and this was some time, perhaps some days after he had received the news of his death, since Joab and the army were returned from the battle; had it been a sudden start of passion, upon first hearing the news, and had continued a few hours, it would have been more excusable; but to continue some days, as it is very probable it did, was very unbecoming.

v. 5. And Joab came into the house to the king, &c.] For by this time he was removed from the chamber over the gate to his own dwelling house or palace, where he continued the same doleful ditty as at first: thou hast shamed this day the faces of all thy servants; they can't lift up their heads, and look any in the face, nor one another; but behave as if they had committed some very great fault, in fighting with the rebels, and beating them: which this day have saved thy life, and the lives of thy sons, and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines; which in all probability would have been taken away, if the victory had been on the side of Absalom.

v. 6. In that thou lovest thine enemies, and hatest thy friends, &c.] Which though not strictly true, there was some appearance of it, which is here greatly exaggerated; in that he expressed so much grief and sorrow for Absalom his enemy, who had rebelled against him, and shewed so little regard to his friends, that had exposed their lives for him: for thou hast declared this day; by his conduct and behaviour, mourning for his rebellious son, and taking no notice of his faithful servants: that thou regardest neither princes nor servants; neither the officers of the army, the generals and captains, nor the common soldiers; since neither the one were admitted into his presence privately, nor had the other public thanks as they entered the city, as might have been expected: or that thou hast no princes and servants[s]; none that are accounted of as such; they are nothing with thee, in no esteem at all, as if thou hadst none: for this day I perceive that if Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, then it had pleased thee well; this was carrying the matter too far; for though it would have been agreeable to David if Absalom had lived, and not been slain, yet not that his army should perish, or his people be destroyed; it would have pleased him well if both had lived.

v. 7. Now therefore arise, go forth, &c.] Arise from his couch, he was watering with his tears, and go forth from his house, where he had shut himself up retired from all company, to the gate of the city, where the people passed and repassed, and there was a concourse of them: this he said not by way of command, but by way of advice; though all along he seems to take too much upon him, and to speak unbecoming a subject, and not with that decency as was necessary in speaking to a king; but it may be observed, that a general of an army had great power over princes in those times, and presumed very much on their interest in the army, which led them sometimes not to behave with that decorum as became them: and speak comfortably unto thy servants; commend them for their courage and faithfulness, thank them for their services, and reward them suitably; at least give them assurance of it: for I swear by the Lord; by the Word of the Lord, as the Targum; thus he said to arouse him, and make him bestir himself, and think what was proper for him to do: if thou go not forth, there will not tarry one with thee this night; signifying that he would use his interest in the army to go off with it, and set up another king; and did not doubt of success, as well knowing what temper and humour the people were in thro' the king's conduct: and that will be worse unto thee than all the evil that befel thee from thy youth until now; for when he was persecuted by Saul, he had a number of friends that adhered close to him; and when Ishbosheth was set up against him by usurper as king of Israel, the tribe of Judah cleaved to him, anointed him their king, and abode by him; wherefore, should he now be abandoned by his army, his case would be worse than ever it had been.

v. 8. Then the king arose, and sat in the gate, &c.] Of the city, a public place, where the inhabitants met on divers accounts at times, and where there were always people passing and repassing: and they told unto all the people; or it was reported to the soldiers particularly: saying, behold the king doth sit in the gate; has laid aside his mourning, appears in public, and receives his friends, and attends to business: and all the people came before the king; to congratulate him on the victory obtained, to receive his thanks and his favours: for Israel had fled every man to his tent; or to his city, as the Targum; that is, those that followed Absalom; which is observed not on account of what goes before, but of what follows after; see ch. xviii. 17.

v. 9. And all the people were at strife through all the tribes of Israel; excepting the tribe of Judah; they blamed and reproved one another for taking part with Absalom in the rebellion, and especially for their coldness and backwardness in bringing back David to Jerusalem: saying, the king saved us out of the hand of our enemies; exposed his life to danger, fought our battles for us, and gained us victory over our enemies, and saved us from them, especially those next mentioned: and delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines; in the times of Saul, and since; which were benefits which ought to have endeared him to them, and were aggravations of the crime of those who had been concerned in the late rebellion; and were such as ought not to be buried in oblivion, and were proper arguments to engage them to return to their allegiance to him, and abide by it: and now he is fled out of the land for Absalom; being obliged to quit Jerusalem, and the land of Judea on this side Jordan, and to pass that river; not from a spirit of cowardice, but from tenderness to his son, he did not chuse to fight against; and from a concern for his metropolis Jerusalem, lest that should be hurt, as well as for the safety of his person.

v. 10. And Absalom whom we anointed over us, &c.] To be king; which either was really done by Absalom's party, or in effect by proclaiming and appointing him king: is dead in battle; which shews the thing was not of God, and by which means they were released from their oath of allegiance to him: now therefore why speak ye not a word of bringing the king back? why so quiet and easy, so silent about it? nobody speaks of it, gives the least leaſt hint of it, or ſhews any concern about it; but the greateſt coldneſs and indifference, as if it was a matter of no importance.

[s] אין לך שרים ועבדים non tibi principes & servi, Pagninus, Montanus; nihil tibi sint principes & servi, Piscator.

℣. 11. And king David ſent to Zadok and to Abiathar the prieſts, &c.] Who were at Jeruſalem, and in his intereſt; perhaps by Ahimaaz and Jonathan their ſons: ſaying, ſpeak unto the elders of Judah; particularly thoſe that were at Jeruſalem, with whom they had an intereſt: why are ye the laſt to bring back the king to his houſe? to his palace at Jeruſalem, ſince David was of their tribe, and was firſt anointed their king: what might make them the more backward to it, was their being ſo deep in the rebellion, which was formed and cheriſhed among them, and brought to the height it was, through their connivance and encouragement, both at Hebron and Jeruſalem; and therefore they might fear the reſentment of David, and that he would not be eaſily reconciled unto them: ſeeing the ſpeech of all Iſrael is come to the king, even to his houſe; or he has received invitations from all the tribes of Iſrael, to return to his houſe or palace at Jeruſalem; and ſo this was a part of the meſſage of David to the prieſts, to be told to the elders as an aggravation of their backwardneſs, and as an argument to excite them to their duty; though ſome think theſe are the words of the hiſtorian, to be inſerted in a parentheſis, as in our verſion.

℣. 12. Ye are my brethren, ye are my bones and my fleſh; &c.] Being of the ſame tribe, and therefore he ſhould deal gently with them, as if they were parts of his body; and not be ſevere upon them, for the hand they had in the conſpiracy, as they might fear: and wherefore then are ye the laſt to bring the king back? ſince they were ſo nearly related to him, and he ſo ready to forgive them.

℣. 13. And ſay ye to Amaſa, &c.] Who was the general of Abſalom's army, and who might fear he ſhould never be pardoned, whoever was, and looked upon his caſe deſperate; who had led on the army with Abſalom againſt the king's forces, and fought them: art thou not of my bone, and of my fleſh? nearly related to him, being his ſiſter's ſon: God do ſo to me, and more alſo; than he had done to Abſalom; or he imprecates the greateſt evil upon himſelf that could be thought of or named: if thou be not captain of the hoſt before me continually in the room of Joab; ſignifying that he would not only pardon the treaſon he had been guilty of, but raiſe him to the higheſt poſt in the army; and to aſſure him of it, of which he might be doubtful, conſidering what he had done to merit his diſpleaſure, he makes this oath or imprecation. Joab had got his ill-will by many inſtances, as by the murder of Abner, and now by ſlaying Abſalom againſt his orders; and by his rude and inſolent behaviour to him when lamenting the death of his ſon; he wanted to be rid of him, and now having an opportunity of putting a valiant man into his place, and thereby attaching him to his intereſt, he was determined to make uſe of it.

℣. 14. And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, even as the heart of one man, &c.] This the Jewiſh commentators generally underſtand of Amaſa, that he uſed his intereſt with the men of Judah, and ſo wrought upon them, that they agreed as one man to ſend for the king, and bring him back; but it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of David, who by theſe gentle methods, kind meſſages, and affectionate ſpeeches, powerfully inclined and engaged the hearts of the people towards him; ſo that they were unanimouſly and affectionately agreed to reſtore him: in this way David choſe to return; he could have come without their leave, or any invitation from them, as he was their lawful king, and a victorious one, the rebellion being cruſhed; and had it in his power to chaſtiſe thoſe concerned in it, and uſe them with ſeverity; but he choſe rather to gain the hearts of his people, and to come in a way peaceable to them, and honourable to himſelf: ſo that they ſent this word unto the king, return thou and all thy ſervants; perhaps by the ſame meſſengers that David ſent; or it may be, rather for honour's ſake they deputed ſome of their principal men to wait on David, and invite him to return to them with all his retinue and army, promiſing allegiance and fidelity to him.

℣. 15. So the king returned, and came to Jordan, &c.] From Mahanaim thither, which according to Bunting [i] was 28 miles: and Judah came to Gilgal; that is, the elders, or principal men of the tribe of Judah came thither; which place, according to the ſame writer [k], was 12 miles from Jeruſalem, and 4 from Jordan; and was the firſt place the Iſraelites came to when they paſſed that river in Joſhua's time; but it ſeems to be rather more; ſee the note on Joſh. ii. 1. and iv. 19. to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan; but then they muſt proceed farther on, for Gilgal ſeems to be five or ſix miles on this ſide Jordan.

℣. 16. And Shimei the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, &c.] Of whom ſee ch. xvi. 5. haſted and came down with the men of Judah to meet king David; he took the firſt opportunity to meet the king, and aſk his pardon for his ill treatment of him when he fled from Jeruſalem; for hearing that Abſalom was ſlain, and the victory was on the ſide of David, who was returning in triumph; he thought it adviſeable as ſoon as poſſible to make his ſubmiſſion, and entreat forgiveneſs, leſt he ſhould fall a juſt ſacrifice to his vengeance; and a better opportunity he could not well have, than to go along with the men of Judah, who met the king firſt of all.

℣. 17. And there were 1000 men of Benjamin with him, &c.] Of which tribe he was, and theſe were either a band of ſoldiers, of which he was the chiliarch; or tenants of his, which ſhewed him to be a great man; or his neighbours, and perſons of ſome figure, whom he prevailed upon to come as interceſſors for him: and Ziba the ſervant of the houſe of Saul; who had impoſed upon David, and got his maſter's inheritance from him, knowing that David would be undeceived by Mephiboſheth his maſter, when he came to Jeruſalem; and therefore that he might be more tenderly dealt with, and come off the better, he was thus forward to meet the king, and pay his reſpects to him: and his fifteen ſons and his twenty ſervants with him; which made a conſiderable appearance; ſee ch. ix. 10. and they went over Jordan before the king; to meet him on the other ſide, both Shimei and his 1000 men, and Ziba with his ſons and ſervants.

℣. 18. And there went over a ferry-boat to carry over the king's houſhold, &c.] His wives and children, who could not ſo well ford the river on foot; ſome will have this to be a bridge of boats, a pontoon; and Abarbinel thinks it might be a company of men, who carried the women and children on their ſhoulders, one after another: and to do what he thought good; to carry over whatever elſe the king

[i] Travels, &c. p. 142.

[k] Ibid. p. 142, 143.

king pleaſed, beſides his family: and Shimei the ſon of Gera fell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan; or juſt as he was about to come over, when he came to Jordan to take the boat in order to come over; for he went over Jordan to meet him, and therefore would take the firſt opportunity of coming into his preſence, and fall down before him, and make his ſubmiſſion to him.

℣. 19. And ſaid unto the king, let not my lord the king impute iniquity unto me, &c.] That is, deal with him according to the deſert of it, puniſh him for it, but forgive it; for non-imputation of ſin is in effect the pardon of it: neither do thou remember that which thy ſervant did perverſly, the day my lord the king went out of Jeruſalem; he deſires that he would not only forgive, but forget it; he owns it was a perverſe action, and aggravated by being done at the time when the king was in great trouble and diſtreſs: that the king ſhould take it to his heart; and determine to avenge himſelf on him for it.

℣. 20. For thy ſervant doth know that I have ſinned, &c.] He was ſenſible of it, and ſorry for it, and publickly acknowledged it before all the men he brought with him, and before all the ſervants of David; and as a token of the ſincerity of his repentance, and as an earneſt of his future fidelity, he made this early ſubmiſſion: therefore behold I am come the firſt this day of all the houſe of Joſeph, to go down to meet my lord the king; but why does he make mention of the houſe of Joſeph, when he was of the tribe of Benjamin? Kimchi ſays that Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manaſſeh, were called the houſe of Joſeph; and it may be obſerved that it is ſometimes uſed for all Iſrael, as in Pſ. lxxx. 1. and he was the firſt of them that came, inaſmuch as he came along with the men of Judah, who came firſt of all to fetch the king back; or Joſeph may ſtand for the tribes of Iſrael, as diſtinct from Judah, and he was the firſt of them; ſome of the Jewiſh writers think he makes mention of the name of Joſeph, becauſe as the brethren of Joſeph uſed him ill, and he returned good to them; ſo though he had uſed David ill, he hoped he would do as Joſeph did, return good for evil; and others repreſent him as ſuggeſting hereby to David, that all Iſrael had uſed him ill, and he worſe than them all; and now he was come firſt, and they were all waiting what he would do to him, that if he received him kindly, all would come and make their peace with him.

℣. 21. But Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah anſwered and ſaid, &c.] The ſame perſon that would have taken off the head of Shimei at the time he curſed David, if he would have given him leave, ch. xv. 9. ſhall not Shimei be put to death for this? this humiliation and acknowledgment he has made, ſhall he be forgiven on that account? ſhall ſo ſmall a matter as this atone for ſo great a crime he has been guilty of, as that he ſhall not die? becauſe or tho'[1] he curſed the Lord's anointed; is aſking pardon ſufficient to expiate ſo foul an offence, for which according to the law he ought to die? or for this action which he has done, as the Arabic verſion, in curſing the Lord's anointed.

℣. 22. And David ſaid, what have I to do with you ye ſons of Zeruiah? &c.] See the note on ch. xvi. 10. that ye ſhould this day be adverſaries unto me? or a Satan unto me, as the word is, by adviſing him to do what would be prejudicial to his intereſt; ſee Matt. xvi. 22, 23. as to uſe ſeverity at ſuch a time as this would have been; for had he immediately ordered Shimei to be put to death, though he deſerved it, who was the firſt man that came to aſk pardon, the Iſraelites in general, or all however concerned in the rebellion, would have concluded they muſt ſhare the ſame fate, and ſo would not have ſubmitted, but have raiſed a new rebellion againſt him; and ſome think Joab and Abiſhai had this in view, that they might keep their poſts in the army: ſhall there any man be put to death this day in Iſrael? there ſhall not; the glory of this day ſhall not be ſullied by the death of any; nor the joy of it be turned into ſorrow in any family in Iſrael, as would, if any was put to death for what had paſſed during the rebellion: for do not I know that I am this day king over Iſrael? and can and will do as I pleaſe; as he had been driven from his throne and palace, and was now invited back again, and upon his return, it was as if he was made king anew, and afreſh inaugurated into his office; and therefore no blood ſhould be ſpilt on that day on which he was reſtored to his kingdom.

℣. 23. Therefore the king ſaid unto Shimei, thou ſhalt not die, &c.] This day by my hands, or order, or by the ſword, 1 Kings ii. 8. and the king ſware unto him; that he ſhould not die for that offence, or for that only; but if he committed a new one, this oath was no longer binding on him, and not at all upon his heir and ſucceſſor.

℣. 24. And Mephibeſheth the ſon of Saul came down to meet the king, &c.] Not down to Jordan, but Jeruſalem; when the king was come thither, he came from his own dwelling to the king's palace; he is called the ſon of Saul, though he was his grandſon, and grandſons are ſometimes called ſons; though in the Septuagint it is, the ſon's ſon of Saul; and the Syriac and Arabic verſions are, the ſon of Jonathan, the ſon of Saul: and had neither dreſſed his feet; had not cut his nails, as the Septuagint add, his toe-nails; or rather had not waſhed his feet, as the Targum paraphraſes it; which was frequently done in thoſe countries, partly for refreſhment, and partly to remove the filth of them contracted, by walking bare-footed, or only with ſandals; as alſo becauſe of the ill ſmell of them, which was offenſive: nor trimmed his beard; or ſhaved his upper lip, and took no care that the hair of his chin ſhould be in any order; otherwiſe that was never ſhaved, to do it would be contrary to the law in Lev. xix. 27. nor waſhed his clothes; his linen clothes, his ſhirts, or any other that uſed to be waſhed; or whitened them, as the Targum, he had not ſent them, his woollen clothes, to the fuller, to get out the ſpots, and whiten them. All theſe were tokens of mourning, and ſhewed him to be a ſincere mourner for the king's departure, and the trouble he was in, ſince it was ſo long continued: from the day the king departed, until the day he came again in peace; which muſt be a conſiderable time, and therefore he muſt be in a moſt ſordid and rueful condition.

℣. 25. And it came to paſs, when he came to Jeruſalem to meet the king, &c.] Perhaps from the place where his eſtate was; or, as the Arabic verſion, when he came from Jeruſalem, from whence he went a little way to meet the king, as he was coming thither; for it was ſaid he abode at Jeruſalem, ch. xvi. 3. that the king ſaid unto him, wherefore fore wentest not thou with me, Mephibosheth? when he departed from Jerusalem, being obliged to flee from thence because of Absalom; it is very probable David would never have asked him this question, knowing his lameness, had it not been for the suggestion of Ziba his servant; that he stayed at Jerusalem, hoping that the kingdom of his father would be restored to him, ch. xvi. 3.

4

[1] כי quamvis, vel cum tamen, Piſcator.

℣. 26. And he answered, my lord, O king, my servant deceived me, &c.] His servant Ziba, who instead of saddling an ass for him by his order, went off with that and another himself, ch. xvi. 1. for thy servant said, I will saddle me an ass; he not only determined this in his own mind, but gave orders to his servant to saddle one for him: that I may ride thereon, and go to the king, because thy servant is lame; and could not walk a-foot, being lame of both his feet, ch. iv. 4. and ix. 3, 13.

℣. 27. And he hath slandered thy servant unto my lord the king, &c.] By suggesting that he stayed at Jerusalem with a view to the kingdom, hoping that the quarrel between David and Absalom would issue in the restoration of it to his father's family; which was a mere calumny, he having had no such thought, nor was there any foundation for it: but my lord the king is an angel of God; for understanding and wisdom, to discern the falshood of such suggestions: do therefore what is good in thine eyes; condemn him or acquit him; reject him or receive him into favour; he entirely submitted himself to him, to do with him as seemed good in his sight.

℣. 28. For all of my father's house were but dead men before my lord the king, &c.] Or men of death[m]; worthy of death, not on account of Saul's persecution, for which his family did not deserve to suffer; rather for the attempt of Ishbosheth to get the kingdom from him, which might be deemed treason, and so the family attainted for it; tho' the sense may be only this, that their lives lay at his mercy, and that if he had dealt with rigour and severity towards them, as was usual for princes to do towards the family of their predecessors, who had any claim to the kingdom, put them to death, this would have been their case: yet didst thou set thy servant among them that eat at thine own table; which was shewing him great kindness, and doing him great honour: what right therefore have I yet to cry any more unto the king? to ask any favour of him, or make any complaint to him.

℣. 29. And the king said unto him, why speakest thou any more of thy matters? &c.] Of his father's family, and the injuries done by them to David, and of the benefits and favours which he had received from David, or of his temporal affairs, of his estate, which David had given away to Ziba: I have said, thou and Ziba divide the land; revoking his last grant to Ziba, which gave him all that belonged to Mephibosheth, ch. xvi. 4. he established his first decree, that Ziba should have half the profit of the land for tilling it, and the other half be given to Mephibosheth; he did not chuse to punish Ziba for slandering his master, being inclined to clemency and mercy, and determined to shew no severity at that time; and might be in some fear of Ziba, being a considerable man, lest he should raise a new insurrection, if he bore hard upon him; besides, he might have a large share in his affection, having made a present to him in the time of his distress, and was one of the first that came to meet him upon his return, ℣. 17. and ch. xvi. 1, 2.

℣. 30. And Mephibosheth said unto the king, yea, let him take all, &c.] The whole estate, as David had given it to him; he was content that that last grant should stand: forasmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace unto his own house; his palace in Jerusalem; which was a strong expression of affection for him, and loyalty to him.

℣. 31. And Barzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, &c.] The place of his habitation, to Jordan, see ch. xvii. 27. and went over Jordan with the king to conduct him over Jordan; to accompany him over the river, and then take his leave of him.

℣. 32. Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even 80 years old, &c.] Which was 10 years beyond the common term of man's life, and reckoned a very great age in David's time, and has been ever since, and still is, see Ps. xc. 10. and he had provided the king of sustenance while he lay at Mahanaim; had supported him and his family, furnished him with provisions, and all the necessaries of life, during his stay there: for he was a very great man; in wealth and riches, and was a very liberal man, and a man of great wisdom and good sense; and very probably was a man of great grace, which taught him his duty to his prince, and influenced him to shew mercy to him in distress.

℣. 33. And the king said to Barzillai, come thou over with me, &c.] Over Jordan; Barzillai came with an intent to accompany the king over Jordan; but the king meant not only to go over Jordan, but when over to go farther with him, even to Jerusalem: and I will feed thee with me in Jerusalem; meaning, that he should dwell with him in his palace, and eat at his table, in return for feeding him at Mahanaim.

* ℣. 34. And Barzillai said unto the king, &c.] In answer to the grateful proposal he made: how long have I to live; that could not be said with exactness by any; but it might be probably conjectured from the age he was of, and the infirmities that attended him, that he could not live long; it was but a short time he had to be in the world: that I should go up with the king to Jerusalem? take so long a journey as that, seeing he might die before he got thither; and if he did not, since it could not be thought he should live long, he could not think of it, or judge it advisable at such an age to take such a journey, change his place of abode, and manner of living.

℣. 35. I am this day 80 years old, &c.] Not that that day was precisely his birth-day, but that he was about such an age, very little under or over; very probably he was full that age: and can I discern between good and evil? signifying, either that his intellectual powers were impaired, and could not distinguish what was right and wrong, and so could be of no service to David in his privy-council, or any court of judicature, he was fit for no post or office under him; or that his natural senses were not quick to distinguish between good and bad, particularly between good and bad food, which he could neither discern by smell nor taste, as follows: can thy servant taste what I eat or what I drink? have any gust or relish of, or take any delight or pleasure in eating and drinking; so that the the moſt delicious food, and richeſt wines, and all the dainties of a king's table, would ſignify nothing to him: can I hear any more the voice of ſinging men and ſinging women? either being ſo deaf that he could not hear them at all, or however not with any delight; the evil days being come upon him, in which he could take no pleaſure in the diverſions of a court: wherefore then ſhould thy ſervant be yet a burthen unto my lord the king? he could neither take any pleaſure himſelf, nor be of any ſervice to the king, but on the contrary a burden to him; not only on account of his ſuſtenance, and being obliged to have ſervants to attend him, which might be the leaſt part of his burden, but his company would be diſagreeable and troubleſome, through the infirmities of old age upon him.

[m] אישני מות viris mortis, Montanus.

℣. 36. Thy ſervant will go a little way over Jordan with the king, &c.] That is, go a little way after he was over Jordan with him, and then return to his own city: and why ſhould the king recompenſe it with ſuch a reward? the ſenſe is, why ſhould the king recompenſe ſo trifling a thing as I have done, and which was but my duty, with ſuch a reward, as to maintain me in ſo grand a manner at his court?

℣. 37. Let thy ſervant, I pray thee, turn back again, &c.] To his own city, after he is gone over Jordan, and ſeen the king a little way on his journey: that I may die in my own city; the city of Rogelim, where perhaps he was born, and had lived all his days, and where it is natural for people to deſire to die, even in their native place: and be buried by the grave of my father, and of my mother; or in their grave, as Kimchi and Ben Melech, in the ſepulchre of his fathers, where men uſually chuſe to be buried: but behold thy ſervant Chimham; who was his ſon; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions expreſs it, my ſon Chimham: let him go over with my lord the king; not only over Jordan, but to Jeruſalem with him: and do to him what ſhall ſeem good unto thee; advance him, and put him into any poſt or office the king ſhould think fit, or beſtow a penſion upon him, or give him an eſtate to live upon, or whatever he pleaſed.

℣. 38. And the king anſwered, Chimham ſhall go over with me, &c.] He admitted of him inſtead of his father: and I will do unto him that which ſhall ſeem good unto thee; he puts it to Barzillai, and leaves it with him to aſk what he would for his ſon, and he would grant it. We no where read what it was that Barzillai aſked, or whether he aſked any thing; only this we read, that ſome hundreds of years afterward, there was a place called the habitation of Chimham near Bethlehem, Jer. xli. 17. which makes it probable that David gave him a paternal eſtate of his there, ſince Bethlehem was his city; and the Targum on that place is expreſs for it; ſee the note there: and whatſoever thou ſhalt require of me, that will I do for thee; whatever ſuit he ſhould make to him, or whatever favour he ſhould aſk of him hereafter, when returned to his own city, he would grant it to him, if it could be poſſibly done; ſuch a ſenſe ſhould he always retain of his kindneſs to him.

℣. 39. And all the people went over Jordan, &c.] That were with David: and when the king was come over; over Jordan, had got to the other ſide of it, whither Barzillai accompanied him: the king kiſſed Barzillai, and bleſſed him; took his leave of him with a kiſs, as friends were wont to do at parting, thanked him for all his favours, wiſhed him well, and prayed to God to bleſs him with all bleſſings temporal and ſpiritual: and he returned to his own place; his own city Rogelim, having repaſſed the river Jordan.

℣. 40. Then the king went on to Gilgal, &c.] Which, according to Joſephus [n], was 50 furlongs from Jordan, ſix miles and a quarter: and Chimham went on with him; after Barzillai had left them, and accompanied the king to Jeruſalem: and all the people of Judah conducted the king; to Jeruſalem; who came to meet him, ℣. 15. and alſo half the people of Iſrael; or a part of them, as the word uſed ſignifies, and not always an equal half, ſo Kimchi obſerves; even ſuch of Iſrael as went out with David at firſt, and the 1000 men of Benjamin that came to meet him, ℣. 17.

℣. 41. And behold, all the men of Iſrael came to the king, &c.] A large number of them, the other part that did not come over with David, ſome of their principal men, who met him upon the road: and ſaid unto the king, why have our brethren, the men of Judah, ſtolen thee away; ſecretly, privately, and unknown to them, and were bringing him back to Jeruſalem: and have brought the king and his houſhold, and all David's men with him over Jordan? him, and his family, and ſoldiers.

℣. 42. And all the men of Judah anſwered the men of Iſrael, &c.] Such of them as went down to fetch the king back, replied to the men of Iſrael that now met them, and objected to their conduct: becauſe the king is near of kin to us; being of their tribe, and his palace was within their borders, and therefore they were proper perſons to bring him home: wherefore then be ye angry for this matter? for bringing the king back, and being the firſt in it; for who ſo proper as they, not only to do their duty, but to ſhew their affection to the king as early as poſſible? have we eaten at all of the king's coſt? they had maintained themſelves at their own expence, going and returning; they had no ſelf-intereſt or ſelfiſh views to ſerve, but on the contrary had been at a conſiderable charge to meet the king, and conduct him home: or hath he given us any gift? no, he had not, nor did they expect any; it was not with a view to any reward that they had taken this ſtep, but purely out of affection to the king, and for the good of their country.

℣. 43. And the men of Iſrael anſwered the men of Judah, and ſaid, &c.] They replied to them, as follows: we have ten parts in the king; being ten tribes, reckoning Simeon in the tribe of Judah, within which it lay, Joſh. xix. 1. and we have alſo more right in David than ye; being more numerous than they; or, according to the Targum, they had more affection and good-will towards David, than the men of Judah, though he was of their tribe, and dwelt among them; ſince the rebellion was begun, and was cheriſhed and carried on among them: why then did ye deſpiſe us, that our advice ſhould not be firſt had in bringing back our king? they were as ready and as deſirous as they to fetch the king back; and ſince they were far the largeſt body of men, and the far greater part of the nation, they thought they ought to have been conſulted in an affair of ſo much importance, and that doing it without them was ſlighting them, and caſting contempt upon them, and inſinuating as if they were enemies to the king; or, as the Targum expreſſes it, it, "was not my word firſt to bring back my king;" the firſt motion was from them, as appears from ℣. 11. and therefore the thing ſhould not have been done without them; they ſhould have been apprized of it, that they might at leaſt have joined them, and ſhared in the honour with them of bringing the king back: and the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Iſrael; not thoſe that are here recorded, but what followed, and are not written, being ſo very warm and indecent; and David being ſilent in this hot diſpute between them, which was interpreted taking the part of Judah, the men of Iſrael were incenſed at it; and hence aroſe a new rebellion, of which more in the next chapter how it began, and was cruſhed.

[n] Antiq. l. 5. c. 1. §. 4.

CHAP. XX.

THIS chapter gives an account of a new rebellion raiſed by Sheba, ℣. 1, 2. of David's ſhutting up his concubines unto the day of their death, whom Abſalom had lain with, ℣. 3. of Amaſa being ordered to aſſemble the men of Judah to cruſh the rebellion, but being dilatory, Abiſhai is ſent out with David's ſervants, and was followed by Joab with the men under him, ℣. 4—7. and of the murder of Amaſa by Joab, ℣. 8—13. and of Sheba being ſhut up in the city Abel, ℣. 14, 15. whoſe head, by the means of a wiſe woman, was delivered to Joab, and ſo an end was put to the rebellion, ℣. 16—22. and laſtly, of the chief officers in David's camp and court, ℣. 23—26.

℣. 1. And there happened to be a man of Belial, &c.] A wicked man, as the Targum, a lawleſs, yokeleſs man, that had caſt off the yoke of the law, and was without it, as Belial is by ſome interpreted; or one unprofitable and uſeleſs, yea noxious and pernicious: this man, though with reſpect to ſecond cauſes, may be ſaid to be there by chance; yet it was ſo ordered by the providence of God, that he ſhould be preſent at this time for the further fulfilment of the threatening to David, that the ſword ſhould not depart from his houſe: whoſe name was Sheba, the ſon of Bichri, a Benjamite; one perhaps that had been in the rebellion of Abſalom, and had a grudge againſt David for the removal of the kingdom out of that tribe: and he blew a trumpet; which was done to draw off the Iſraelites from David, and gather a party to himſelf: and ſaid, we have no part in David; ſo he interpreted what the men of Judah ſaid, becauſe they claimed kindred to David, the reſt of the Iſraelites had no intereſt in him; thus they who juſt before ſaid they had ten parts in him, now had none at all: neither have we inheritance in the ſon of Jeſſe; ſo he calls David by way of contempt, as if he was no king, but a private perſon, and a deſcendent from a mean family: every man to his tent, O Iſrael; there to conſider what to do, and whom to chuſe to be their king, and let Judah take David for their king, and enjoy him alone, ſince they had ſo ſlighted, and dealt ſo injuriouſly and roughly with the reſt of the tribes.

℣. 2. So every man of Iſrael went up from after David, &c.] Thoſe that met him on the road departed from him, and went no farther with him: and followed Sheba the ſon of Bichri; and made him their captain, who was the author of their mutiny and ſedition: but the men of Judah clave unto their king, from Jordan to Jeruſalem; never left him after they had conducted him over Jordan, until they had brought him ſafe to Jeruſalem.

℣. 3. And David came to his houſe at Jeruſalem, &c.] His palace there, which was in that part of the city called the fort of Zion, and city of David: and the king took the ten women his concubines, whom he had left to keep the houſe; when he fled from Jeruſalem becauſe of Abſalom, ch. xv. 16. and put them in ward; partly as a puniſhment for eaſily yielding to the luſt of Abſalom, and partly that they might not be ſeen, which would bring to remembrance his ſin: and fed them; he did not put them to death, nor put them away, but kept them thus confined, and made a proper proviſion for them, not ſuffering them to marry any other, and be maintained by them: but went not in unto them; into their apartments to lie with them, having been defiled by his ſon, ch. xvi. 22. ſo they were ſhut up unto the day of their death; kept in the ward till they died: living in widowhood; neither uſed by the king as his concubines, as they had been before, nor ſuffered to marry any other; or in the widowhood of life [o], which is ſo expreſſed, to diſtinguiſh it from widowhood made by death; this was ſuch ſort of widowhood as obtained whilſt their huſband was living; ſo the Targum, "widows of their huſband alive," or remaining.

℣. 4. Then ſaid the king to Amaſa, &c.] Whom he had promiſed to make general of his army, ch. xix. 13. and by the following order declared him ſuch: aſſemble me the men of Judah within three days; which was done by the ſound of the trumpet, or by the proclamation of a herald: it ſeems that the men of Judah, who attended David to Jeruſalem, were gone to their reſpective cities and places of abode, or there would have been no occaſion for ſuch a ſummons; though it is ſtrange they ſhould, when the men of Iſrael appeared ſo inclinable to a new rebellion: and be thou here preſent; to take the command of them.

℣. 5. So Amaſa went to aſſemble the men of Judah, &c.] To gather them together out of their ſeveral tribes, and bring them to Jeruſalem: but he tarried longer than the ſet time which he had appointed him; than the three days; whether this was owing to the remiſſneſs of Amaſa, or the unwillingneſs of the people to ſerve under him, who had been Abſalom's general in the late rebellion, or not having time ſufficient allowed him, is not certain.

℣. 6. And David ſaid to Abiſhai, &c.] For it ſeems he would have nothing to ſay to Joab, being diſpleaſed with him for ſlaying Abſalom, and having removed him from his poſts; and therefore ſpeaks to the next officer in his army, Abiſhai; though Joſephus [p] ſays, he addreſſed himſelf to Joab, contrary to the expreſs words of the text: now ſhall Sheba the ſon of Bichri do us more harm than did Abſalom; gain a greater party, and give more trouble to ſubdue him, unleſs ſuppreſſed in time: take thou thy lord's ſervants, and purſue after him; without waiting for Amaſa, and the troops he

[o] אלמנות חיות in viduitate vitæ, Pagninus, Montanus.

[p] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 11. §. 6.

he was aſſembling; delays in ſuch a caſe as an inſurrection, being dangerous, which ought to be nipped in the bud, and cruſhed as ſoon as poſſible; in order to which, he bids him take his ſervants that were about him, his body-guards, and purſue Sheba: leſt he get him fenced cities; where he may ſecure himſelf, and hold out a ſiege a long time, and give a great deal of trouble: and eſcape us; for the preſent; or eſcape our eyes, as the Keri, or marginal reading is; we ſhall loſe ſight of him, and not know which way he is gone, if he is not purſued quickly.

℣. 7. And there went out after him Joab's men, &c.] Who though he was removed from his poſt as general, yet might ſtill have the command of a regiment: and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites; over whom Benaiah was, ℣. 23. theſe attended David in his flight, and had now returned with him, ch. xv. 18. and all the mighty men; the military men that were at Jeruſalem, as many as could be ſpared: and they went out of Jeruſalem to purſue after Sheba the ſon of Bichri; with Abiſhai at the head of them; Joſephus [q] ſays there were 600, beſides the ſoldiers at Jeruſalem that went on this purſuit.

℣. 8. When they were at the great ſtone which is in Gibeon, &c.] Which, according to Joſephus [r], was 40 furlongs, or five miles from Jeruſalem: what this great ſtone was, whether an obeliſk, or what, is not certain; one of the greateſt ſtones we read of, was that which Semiramis cut out of the mountains of Armenia, which was 130 feet long, and 25 broad and thick [s]. This place was deſtinated for the rendezvous of David's forces, and hither Amaſa came with what he had aſſembled together, and joined them, and took the command of them: for it follows, Amaſa went before them; as the general of them: and Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him; who went along with his brother Abiſhai at the head of his own men, to which he was obliged by virtue of his commiſſion; or went of himſelf to ſerve the common cauſe, and perhaps chiefly with a deſign to murder Amaſa, whom he envied, becauſe he was put into his poſt as general, and therefore accoutred himſelf for it; he put on, not a coat of mail, but a common garment which he girt about him, that it might be no incumbrance to him, or hindrance of him, in doing what he intended, but that he might more expeditiouſly execute it: and upon it a girdle with a ſword faſtened upon his loins in the ſheath thereof; the ſword in the belt was not on his thigh, but on his loins, on the outſide of his clothes, and was put into a ſheath too large, and placed in ſuch a poſition, that with the leaſt motion, when he pleaſed, it would eaſily drop out of it, without drawing it, and ſo give no ſuſpicion of his deſign: and as he went forth; to meet Amaſa, juſt as he came to him: it fell out; the ſword fell out of the ſheath to the ground.

℣. 9. And Joab ſaid to Amaſa, &c.] In a friendly manner, with all the air of pleaſantry and good humour: art thou in health, my brother? this looked like a friendly ſalutation to aſk of his health, and wiſh him it, and a loving appellation to call him brother; though they were near of kin, ſiſter's children, and ſo own couſins; thus he addreſſed him to cover his deſign: and Joab took Amaſa by the beard with his right-hand to kiſs him; as was uſual for the eaſtern people to do when they addreſſed and ſaluted one another in an affectionate way, and as the Turks and Arabs do to this day, as travellers relate. Barthius [t] has collected paſſages from the Greek poets, which ſhew it to be a cuſtom, that when a man aſked a favour of another, he caught hold of his beard with the right-hand, and of his knee with the left; and in ſuch a poſture Joab might eaſily do what follows.

℣. 10. But Amaſa took no heed to the ſword that was in Joab's hand, &c.] In his left-hand, for with his right-hand he took him by the beard; he might ſee the ſword drop out of the ſcabbard, and Joab take it up, which he ſuppoſed he did in order to put it into its ſheath again, having no ſuſpicion of his wicked deſign, and therefore not at all upon his guard to prevent it: ſo he ſmote him therewith in the fifth rib; in the ſame place where Abner ſmote Aſahel, and Joab Abner; ſee ch. ii. 23. and iii. 27. and the notes there: he muſt ſtrike him, as ſome obſerve, on the left ſide, becauſe he was embracing him; and the ſtroke muſt be deadly, becauſe he ſtruck him in the pericardium, which compaſſes the heart round with water, to refrigerate it; for the nether part of the heart reacheth to the fifth rib; ſee John xix. 34. " and ſhed out his bowels to the ground; which fell out thro' the inciſion made by the ſword: and ſtruck him not again; he gave him ſuch a home thruſt, there was no need to repeat it, he diſpatched him at once: and he died; and thus, though he was pardoned by David, and promoted to honour by him; yet the providence of God would not ſuffer him to go unpuniſhed, for joining with Abſalom in an unnatural rebellion againſt his uncle: ſo Joab and Abiſhai his brother purſued after Sheba the ſon of Bichri; for Amaſa being ſlain, Joab without any ceremony re-aſſumed his poſt as general, and with his brother Abiſhai under him, made all the haſte they could in purſuit of the rebel.

℣. 11. And one of Joab's men ſtood by him, &c.] By the body of Amaſa; no doubt by the order of Joab, to ſatisfy the people as they came up, and reconcile them to this fact, and to exhort them not to ſtop, but to follow after Joab; for tho' Amaſa their general was dead, Joab had taken the command of the army, and the purſuit was carried on with as much vigour as ever: and ſaid, he that favoureth Joab, and he that is for David, let him go after Joab; he that likes Joab ſhould be general, and is in the intereſt of David, let him make no ſtay here, but follow after Joab; Joab and David are put together, as if their intereſts were the ſame; tho' there ſeems to be an indecency in placing Joab firſt.

℣. 12. And Amaſa wallowed in blood in the midſt of the highway, &c.] By which it ſeems, that tho' the wound was mortal, and of which he died, that as yet there was life in him, and through the pain he was in, and the pangs of death on him, he rolled himſelf about in his own blood in the high road, where the fact was committed: and when the man ſaw that all the people ſtood ſtill; gazing at the ſhocking ſight, and could not be prevailed upon to go on: he removed Amaſa out of the highway into the field; which was adjoining to it: and caſt a cloth upon him; that the body might not be ſeen: when he ſaw that every one that came by him ſtood ſtill; and ſo retarded the people in their march, to prevent prevent which he took the above method, and it was a very prudent one.

[q] Ibid. §. 7. [r] Ibid. [s] Diodor. Sic. l. 2. p. 100. Vid. ib. p. 53. Herodot. Euterpe, c. 111.
[t] Animadv. ad Claudian. de raptu Proſerp. l. 1. ℣. 50. Vid. Homer. Iliad. 1. ℣. 500, 501, Iliad. 8. ℣. 371. & Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 19. [u] Weemſe's Portrait of Man, p. 25.

℣. 13. When he was removed out of the high-way, &c.] Into the field, and covered over with a cloth, that he could not be ſeen: all the people went on after Joab; made no ſtop at all, knowing nothing of the matter, or what had happened: to purſue after Sheba the ſon of Bichri; theſe were the troops that Amaſa had been aſſembling, which followed one another after him; for Joab and Abiſhai, with their men, were at Gibeon firſt.

℣. 14. And he went through all the tribes of Iſrael, &c.] That is, Sheba the ſon of Bichri, laſt mentioned, who paſſed through all the tribes of Iſrael to get as many to be of his party as he could, and to be proclaimed their king; or finding himſelf purſued, he paſſed on as faſt as he could from place to place, through all the tribes, until at length he fixed for ſafety in a place after named; though Joſephus [w] underſtands this of Joab purſuing Sheba through all the tribes of Iſrael with the forces under him; and to this ſenſe the Syriac and Arabic verſions, and ſo R. Iſaiah interprets it; but the firſt ſenſe is more generally received, that Sheba is meant, who paſſing through the ſeveral tribes, came unto Abel, and unto Beth-maachah; which were two places very near one another, if not one and the ſame place; ſince Abel is in the next verſe called Abel of Beth-maachah, to diſtinguiſh it from any other place: it was a city that lay to the north of Iſrael near Syria; and from 2 Kings xv. 29. it appears to be in the tribe of Naphthali. There was one city of this name of Abel, ſix miles from Philadelphia, another 12 miles from Gadara, and a third between Paneas and Damaſcus; which of the three, Reland thinks [x], is moſt eligible to be the place here meant; though he rather chooſes to look for it in Galilee, to the weſt or ſouth of Paneas, than to the eaſt or north in the way to Damaſcus; and ſo Adrichomius [y] calls it a city of upper Galilee, 60 furlongs from Jordan; and though he alſo places it in the tribe of Naphthali, in the plain of the country of Berim (from whence perhaps were the Berites next mentioned) not far from Cæſarea-Philippi; ſee 1 Kings xv. 20. and all the Beerites; the inhabitants of Beeroth, in the tribe of Benjamin, of which tribe Sheba was, they followed him hither, as in the next clauſe: they were gathered together, and went alſo after him; unto Abel; of theſe, ſee Joſh. xviii. 25. 2 Sam. iv. 2, 3. though perhaps theſe Berim or Berites, were nearer to Abel; or rather that was in their country, as has been obſerved by Adrichomius.

℣. 15. And they came and beſieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, &c.] That is, Joab and Abiſhai, with the forces under them, who purſued him hither: and they caſt up a bank againſt the city; which ſome underſtand of a warlike machine or engine, with which ſtones were caſt; but it rather ſeems to be a bank of earth thrown up, for the better working of ſuch engines to more advantage againſt the city, by throwing from thence darts into the city, or ſtones againſt the walls of it, to batter it down; ſuch banks were uſed in ſieges, as that Cæſar's ſoldiers raiſed in 25 days, which was 330 feet broad, and 80 feet high [z]; Kimchi interprets this of filling up the ditches round about the city with duſt and earth, and ſo making it level, whereby they could come the more eaſily to the walls and batter them, or ſcale them, and take the city by ſtorm: and it ſtood in the trench; the army under Joab ſtood where the trench round the city had been, now filled up: and all the people that were with Joab battered the wall to throw it down; with their engines, or whatever battering inſtruments they had; ſo, often, as Heſiod [a] ſays, a whole city ſuffers for one bad man.

℣. 16. Then cried a wiſe woman out of the city, &c.] And ſuch an one as the woman of Tekoah, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the governeſs of the city; but whoever ſhe was, ſhe well deſerved the character of a wiſe woman, her conduct in this affair ſhews it: ſhe cried with a loud voice, upon the wall of the city, to Joab's men, who were underneath battering it, hear, hear; which ſhe repeated to make them hear: ſay, I pray you, unto Joab, come near hither, that I may ſpeak with thee; tell your general I deſire to ſpeak with him; which was wiſely done, to have nothing to ſay but to the general himſelf.

℣. 17. And when he was come near unto her, &c.] As he did, upon the information of his men, that a woman on the wall had ſomething to ſay to him: the woman ſaid, art thou Joab? ſhe was willing to be ſatisfied that he was really the general, before ſhe would impart her mind to him: and he anſwered, I am he; the very perſon you aſk after: and ſhe ſaid unto him, hear the words of thine handmaid; though a woman, vouchſafe to hear what I have to ſay: and he anſwered, I do hear; am ready to hear, and ſhall patiently and attentively hear whatever may be ſpoken; which was giving her leave and encouragement to proceed.

℣. 18. Then ſhe ſpake, ſaying, they were wont to ſpeak in old time, &c.] It was a common ſaying, a proverbial expreſſion among the ancient ſages: ſaying, they ſhall ſurely aſk counſel at Abel, and ſo they ended the matter. Abel, it ſeems, had been a city ſo famous for wiſe and prudent men, that it was common for the inhabitants of other cities, in the ſeveral parts of the kingdom, when any controverſy aroſe among them, to ſay to one another, ſince we can't agree this matter among ourſelves, let us go to Abel, and take advice there, and leave it to their arbitration; and ſo they did, and things were preſently brought to an iſſue, and happily concluded; nay, when the king had a mind to make a decree or law, as R. Iſaiah obſerves, he uſed to ſend to Abel to know whether they would ſubmit to it; and if they agreed to it, then he proceeded in it; for other cities followed their example, ſo famous was this city, and of ſo great account: now the woman argues from hence, that ſurely ſuch a renowned city ſhould not haſtily be deſtroyed; but the Targum directs to another ſenſe, and which perhaps is beſt, and is followed by Jarchi, Kimchi, and others, paraphraſing the words thus, "ſhe ſpake, ſaying, I remember now what is written in the book of the law, to aſk a city firſt, ſaying, (will ye make peace?) ſo ſhouldſt thou have aſked of Abel, will ye make peace, or receive terms of peace?" referring to the law in Deut. xx. 10—15. ſignifying, if that had been attended to as it ought, (for if ſuch methods were to be taken with heathen cities, much more with a city of Iſrael, as Abel was) things would ſoon have been been agreed and iſſued; had Joab upon approaching the city propoſed his terms of peace, they would have immediately yielded to them, and ſo the matter would have ended at once; for they were a peaceable people, as it follows: though Dr. Lightfoot [b] gives another ſenſe of theſe words, that Sheba and his party when they came to the city, "they at firſt certainly ſaid thus, that they would aſk Abel of its peace, (or on whoſe ſide it was) and ſo they made the matter entire, or made a ſhow of their own integrity:" by which this woman aſſured Joab, that the men of Abel had not invited, nor willingly received Sheba and his rebels into the city, but they had deceived them by fawning and falſe words, pretending only to enquire about the peace and welfare of their city.

[w] Ut ſupra. [x] Paleſtina illuſtrata, tom 2. p. 519. [y] Theatrum terræ S. p. 101. [z] Cæſar. Comment. l. 7. c. 24. [a] Opera & Dies, l. 1. ℣. 236.

℣. 19. I am one of them that are peaceable and faithful in Iſrael, &c.] Her meaning is, that ſhe was of a city which conſiſted of peaceable and faithful men, that were peaceable among themſelves, and faithful to their king, who never were concerned in any inſurrection or rebellion, not in the late one under Abſalom: thou ſeekeſt to deſtroy a city, and a mother in Iſrael; a metropolitan city, which had ſeveral towns and villages under its juriſdiction, which were as daughters to it. Some think ſhe means herſelf, becauſe very old, ſuppoſed [c] to be Serah, the daughter of Aſher, a ſon of Jacob, which is improbable: wilt thou ſwallow up the inheritance of the Lord? a city which is a part of the land, that is the Lord's inheritance.

℣. 20. And Joab anſwered and ſaid, far be it from me, far be it from me, &c.] He repeats theſe words, to ſhew how deteſtable it was to him to do what ſhe ſuggeſted: that I ſhould ſwallow up, or deſtroy; any in a violent and unrighteous manner, and eſpecially a city, of which ſhe had given ſuch a character for its greatneſs and worth, and for the peaceableneſs and fidelity of its inhabitants.

℣. 21. The matter is not ſo, &c.] I am not come with the army againſt this city with any ill will to it, and with an intention to deſtroy it: the caſe is this, but a man of mount Ephraim, Sheba the ſon of Bichri by name; for though he was by birth a Benjaminite, his dwelling was in mount Ephraim in that tribe; unleſs there was a place of this name in the tribe of Benjamin, ſo called from any memorable event there, as the wood of Ephraim, ch. xviii 6. This ſame man, ſays Joab, hath lift up his hand againſt the king, even againſt David; is in rebellion againſt the king, even ſo great and good a king as David; he has lift up his hand, and blown a trumpet to draw off men from David, and after himſelf; he has committed acts of hoſtility and treaſon; he has drawn his ſword, and raiſed an inſurrection and rebellion in the nation: deliver him only, and I will depart from the city; he did not deſire any of his followers to be delivered up, only himſelf, knowing the rebellion would ceaſe upon the delivery of him; and being unwilling that the blood of any Iſraelite ſhould be ſhed, whom he had unawares drawn into this rebellion, and who he knew would return to their own cities upon this: and the woman ſaid unto Joab, behold his head ſhall be thrown to thee over the wall; ſhe knew the fright the inhabitants of the city were in, and how diſpoſed they were to do any thing to ſave their city; ſhe knew what influence ſhe had among them, and how weak Sheba's party was, and therefore could aſſure Joab that this ſhould be done.

℣. 22. Then the woman went unto all the people in her wiſdom, &c.] Went from the wall of the city into it, and convened the principal inhabitants together, and made ſo wiſe a ſpeech to them, and repreſented things in ſuch a light, and ſo prudently conducted, that they unanimouſly agreed to her motion: and they cut off the head of Sheba the ſon of Bichri, and caſt it out to Joab; whoſe face Joab knew full well, and was ſatisfied it was his head that was thrown over: and he blew a trumpet; as a ſign of retreat: and they retired from the city, every man to his tent; the army under Joab broke up the ſiege, and departed, every man to his own city, as the Targum: and Joab returned unto Jeruſalem unto the king; to give him an account of his ſucceſs, and how the rebellion was cruſhed; and this gave him courage and boldneſs to appear before the king, which one would wonder elſe he ſhould have, when he had killed his general in cold blood, the king had ſent out, and without his leave had re-aſſumed his poſt as general of the army; but he was a bold daring man, a man of blood, and hardened in ſin, and had power in the army, and over David himſelf, that he could not do what he would with him, but was obliged to be ſilent, and overlook things, and even to re-eſtabliſh him in his office, as appears by what follows.

℣. 23. Now Joab was over all the hoſt of Iſrael, &c.] Eſtabliſhed in the poſt in which he formerly was; either having been never diſplaced, which though David thought to do, he was not able to effect it, becauſe of his power and influence with the people; or if he had diſplaced him, which by ſome things in this chapter ſeemed to be the caſe, yet Amaſa being dead, and the rebellion cruſhed by Joab, which ſtill made him more haughty, and increaſed his popularity, David ſaw it moſt adviſeable to replace him; and becauſe mention is made of him, as eſtabliſhed in his office as general over the whole army, an account is given of the reſt of David's officers; and the rather, as it was a ſort of beginning his reign anew, after quelling the above rebellions: and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites, and over the Pelethites; was continued in his poſt, ſee ch. viii. 18.

℣. 24. And Adoram was over the tribute, &c.] Or over thoſe that collected and brought it, as the Targum; this was a new office, and which reſpected both the revenue he received from his own people, and the tribute brought him from the nations conquered by him: and Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud was recorder; who was in this office before, and now continued and eſtabliſhed in it, ch. viii. 16.

℣. 25. And Sheva was ſcribe, &c.] Either the ſame with Benaiah, or he was dead or removed, and Sheva was put in his place, ſee ch. viii. 17. and Zadok and Abiathar were the prieſts; as before; ſee the ſame.

℣. 26. And Ira alſo the Jairite, &c.] Which ſome take to be the ſame with Ira the Ithrite, ch. xxiii. 38. a ſon of Jether or Ithra the Iſraelite, ch. xvii. 25. though others ſuppoſe he was Ira the ſon of Ikkeſh the Tekoite, ch. xxiii. 26. and ſo the Targum here calls him Ira the Jairite, which was of Tekoah; and Tekoah being the chief place in Iſrael for oil olive [d], with which the lamps were lighted.

[b] Works, vol. 2. p. 367. Menachot, c. 8. §. 3.

[c] Jarchi & Kimchi in loc. Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 79. L.

[d] Miſn.

lighted, Jarchi thinks he had the name of Jairite from Jair, which ſignifies to enlighten; but rather he was a deſcendent from Jair the Gileadite, and perhaps was a great friend to David when in Gilead, and from whence he brought him and promoted him: for he was a chief ruler about David; a prime-miniſter, an intimate friend, the chief of his privy-council; perhaps he ſucceeded Ahithophel: it is much we hear nothing of Huſhai.

CHAP. XXI.

A Famine being in the land three years, the Lord was enquired of, to know the reaſon of it; and it being anſwered, that it was on account of Saul's ſlaughter of the Gibeonites, they were ſummoned by David to know what ſatisfaction they required for the cruel uſage of them, ℣. 1—3. to which they replied, that they only deſired ſeven of Saul's ſons to be delivered up to them, to be hanged by them, which was granted, ℣. 4—9. whoſe bones, with thoſe of Saul and Jonathan, David buried in the ſepulchre of their fathers, ℣. 10—14. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of ſeveral battles fought with the Philiſtines, in which four of their generals were ſlain, ℣. 15—22.

℣. 1. Then there was a famine in the days of David, three years, year after year, &c.] That is, three years running, one after another; ſome think this, though here related, was before the rebellions of Abſalom and Sheba, and not after, and there are ſeveral things which may incline to it, as that the ſin of Saul ſhould otherwiſe be ſo long unpuniſhed, and that the bones of Saul and Jonathan were not ſooner removed, here related; and that there ſhould be ſo many battles with the Philiſtines after they were ſubdued, as recorded in this chapter; and in one of the Jewiſh [c] writings it is ſaid, that this was the year after Saul was ſlain; though, in other copies of the ſame book, it is ſaid to be thirty years after; and ſo in that Abarbinel uſed, and who is of the mind, that what is here related ſtands in the order in which it was, and of the ſame opinion are ſome of our beſt chronologers [f]: and David enquired of the Lord; before the high-prieſt by Urim and Thummim, what ſhould be the cauſe of the famine, perhaps ſuſpecting it was ſome ſins of his; the firſt year he might take no notice of it, hoping for a more fruitful ſeaſon the next year, it ariſing, as he might ſuppoſe, from ſome natural cauſe; the ſecond year he might begin to think it was for ſome national ſins, but might be remiſs in his enquiry into them; but the third year he was alarmed, and concluded there was ſomething extraordinary and ſpecial, and feared it was on his account, and this put him on making enquiry: and the Lord anſwered, It is for Saul, and for his bloody houſe; on account of the blood ſhed by him and his family; which anſwer muſt in a good meaſure relieve the mind of David, if he was fearful it was for his ſins: becauſe he ſlew the Gibeonites; which was contrary to the oath that Joſhua and all Iſrael had given them not to ſlay them, but ſave them alive, Joſh. ix. 15. When this was done is not certain; the Jews commonly ſay [g] that he ſlew them when he ſlew the prieſts at Nob, they being hewers of wood and drawers of water to them, and were ſlain with them; or becauſe their maintenance depended on the prieſts, they being ſlain, it was in effect ſlaying them; but rather this refers to another time, and to other action or actions of Saul, who ſought by divers means to deſtroy theſe people, and root them out of the land. The heathens had a notion that barrenneſs, unfruitfulneſs, and famine were inflicted by God for murder. Philoſtratus [h] reports of the Ethiopian Indians, that for the murder of their king Ganges, their ground was unfruitful, their cattle ſtarved, their wives abortive, and their cities and houſes fell to ruin, until the murderers were deſtroyed.

℣. 2. And the king called the Gibeonites, &c.] Sent meſſengers unto them, and ſummoned them to come to him, and ſaid unto them what is expreſſed in the next verſe; for what follows is in a parentheſis: (now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Iſrael; originally, though they were proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, and were employed in the menial ſervices of the ſanctuary: but of the remnant of the Amorites; they were the remains of the old Canaanites, who ſometimes in general were called Amorites, otherwiſe the Gibeonites were called Hivites; ſee Joſh. ix. 7. and xi. 19.) and the children of Iſrael had ſworn unto them; by their princes, as Joſhua; and yet Saul, contrary to this oath, ſought to ſlay them in his zeal to the children of Iſrael and Judah;) pretending a great concern for them, for their honour and profit; that theſe men ought not to live in their cities, and take the bread out of their mouths, and be employed in the ſervice of the ſanctuary; but that they ought to be expelled, and even cut off, being the old inhabitants of the land, the Lord ordered to be deſtroyed; and that though the Iſraelites had given an oath to the contrary, they were drawn into it by guile and deceit, and therefore not binding upon them; hence he ſought by all means to harraſs and oppreſs them, and ſlew many of them, and deſtroyed them out of their cities, that they might be poſſeſſed by Judah and Benjamin; ſee ch. iv. 2. compared with Joſh. ix. 17.

℣. 3. Wherefore David ſaid unto the Gibeonites, What ſhall I do for you, &c.] By way of ſatisfaction for the injuries done them: and wherewith ſhall I make the atonement; for the offences committed, that ſo the wrath that was gone forth againſt the land in a famine might be appeaſed: that ye may bleſs the inheritance of the Lord; pray for a bleſſing upon the land which the Lord had choſen for his inheritance, and given as ſuch to the people of Iſrael, that rain might deſcend upon it, and make it fruitful.

℣. 4. And the Gibeonites ſaid unto him, &c.] In reply to his motion: We will have no ſilver nor gold of Saul, nor of his houſe; this ſhall not be the ranſom or atonement; it was not ſilver and gold Saul took from them, but the lives of their brethren, and therefore they inſiſt upon life for life: neither for us ſhalt thou kill any man in Iſrael; who were not of the houſe of Saul; they did not deſire any man ſhould die, but who were of that family by whom they had ſuffered: and he ſaid, What you ſhall ſay, that will I do for you; whether by inflicting pecuniary mulcts,

[c] Pirke Eliezer, c. 17. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 119. 1,
[f] Uſſer. Annal. Vet. Teſt. p. 55. Bedford's Scripture-Chronology, p. 558.
[h] Vita Apollon. Tyanei, l. 3. c. 6.
[g] T.

mulcts, or puniſhing with death, which latter ſeems to be what they ſuggeſted, and afterwards inſiſted on; whatever, according to law and juſtice, was required, he was ready to do it for them.

℣. 5. And they anſwered the king, &c.] Declaring expreſly what they would have done: The man that conſumed us; meaning Saul, who leſſened their number by cruel oppreſſions of ſome, and by taking away the lives of others: and that deviſed againſt us, that we ſhould be deſtroyed from remaining in any of the coaſts of Iſrael; who had formed ſchemes, and publiſhed edicts, for baniſhing them out of the land; perhaps at the ſame time that he put away wizards and thoſe that had familiar ſpirits out of the land, under the ſame pretence for zeal for the glory of God, and the good of the people of the land, 1 Sam. xxviii. 3—9.

℣. 6. Let ſeven men of his ſons be delivered unto us, &c. They pitched upon this number, either becauſe they were ſeven, and no more of the Gibeonites, whom Saul ſlew, as the Jews ſay [i]; two hewers of wood, two drawers of water, a keeper, (of a ſynagogue) a ſcribe, and a ſervant; but perhaps the true reaſon was, they knew there were no more beſides Mephiboſheth, for whom David had a great reſpect, and therefore required no more: and we will hang them up unto the Lord; not to gratify a revengeful ſpirit of theirs, but in honour to the juſtice of God, and to appeaſe his wrath: in Gibeah of Saul, whom the Lord did chooſe; which was Saul's native place, and where he always lived; ſo that to hang them there was to the greater diſgrace of him and his family; and he being choſen of the Lord to be a king of Iſrael, was an aggravation of his crime in violating the oath made to the Gibeonites: and the king ſaid, I will give them; for though he had ſworn to Saul that he would not cut off his ſeed, yet as he had a divine direction in this caſe, as appears by the Lord's being pleaſed with it, and was intreated for the land by it, this oath of his was diſpenſed with; nor did he cut them off himſelf, but delivered them to others according to the will of God.

℣. 7. But the king ſpared Mephiboſheth the ſon of Jonathan the ſon of Saul, &c.] As they did not name particular perſons, only required ſeven ſons, it was at the option of the king what ſons to deliver to them, and therefore kept back Mephiboſheth, who is thus deſcribed, to diſtinguiſh him from a ſon of Saul's of the ſame name after-mentioned: becauſe of the Lord's oath that was between them, between David and Jonathan the ſon of Saul; not merely or only out of affection to Mephiboſheth, but becauſe of the oath, that he might not be guilty of the ſame crime Saul was in ſlaying the Gibeonites.

℣. 8. But the king took the two ſons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, &c.] Saul's concubine, ch. iii. 2. whom ſhe bare unto Saul, Armoni and Mephiboſheth; of whom we read no where elſe; after the name of the latter, it is probable, Jonathan's ſon was called before-mentioned: and the five ſons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom ſhe brought up for Adriel the ſon of Barzillai the Meholathite; Michal had no children to the day of her death, nor was ſhe the wife of Adriel, but Merab her ſiſter; wherefore, theſe ſons were not whom ſhe bare, as the word uſed ſignifies, but as we rightly render it, whom ſhe brought up or educated, ſo the Targum, her ſiſter being dead; and ſo the Jews ſay [k], Merab brought them forth, and Michal brought them up, therefore they were called by her name; or the words may be ſupplied thus, and the five ſons of the ſiſter of Michal, and, as in ℣. 19. is ſupplied, the brother of Goliath. Barzillai is here called the Meholathite, to diſtinguiſh him from Barzillai the Gileadite, ſpoken of in a former chapter, ſee 1 Sam. xviii. 19.

℣. 9. And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, &c.] The two ſons of Rizpah and the five ſons of Merab, two ſons of Saul and five grandſons: and they hanged them in the hill before the Lord; in the hill at Gibeah, that they might be ſeen by all that paſſed by, and ſerve to deter from ſuch evils, which brought on them that puniſhment; gibbetings or crucifixions were commonly made on hills and mountains [l]: the phraſe, before the Lord, is either the ſame as unto the Lord, ℣. 6. to make atonement to the Lord, and in his ſight; or it denotes that it was done publicly before the ſun, and in the ſight of it; for it cannot mean before the ark, the ſymbol of the divine preſence, for that was not there: and they fell all ſeven together; they were hanged together, and died at one and the ſame time: and were put to death in the days of harveſt, in the firſt days, in the beginning of barley-harveſt; which began at the paſſover, the morrow after the firſt day of the feaſt, Lev. xxiii. 10, 11. which was the 16th of Niſan, on which day, the Jews ſay [m], theſe men were hanged, and which muſt be about the beginning of our April.

℣. 10. And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took ſackcloth, &c.] Both as a token of mourning for her ſons, and as fitteſt to defend from the weather, the heat by day or cold by night: and ſpread it for her upon the rock; the hill on which her ſons were hanged; this ſhe ſpread as a canopy or tent to ſit under, and be covered with it; not to cover the bodies with it, but herſelf, and where ſhe ſat to mourn the loſs of her ſons, and to watch their bodies, that they might not be devoured by birds and beaſts of prey, as after-obſerved: and here ſhe ſat from the beginning of harveſt until water dropped on them out of heaven; that is, as the Jews ſay [n], from the 16th of Niſan, when barley-harveſt began, to the 17th of Marcheſvan, when the former rain fell; that is, from the beginning of April to the beginning of October: but it is not likely that ſhe continued ſo long watching the bodies, nor would there be any need of it to keep the birds and beaſts from them; for after they had hung ſo many months, there would be nothing left for them; but rather the meaning is, that ſhe continued there until it pleaſed God to ſend rain from heaven, which had been reſtrained, and a famine came upon it, becauſe of the ill uſage of the Gibeonites: and very probably the order from the king was that the bodies ſhould hang till rain came, that it might be obſerved what was the reaſon of their ſuffering; and no doubt Rizpah ſat there praying that rain might come, and which, as Abarbinel thinks, came in a few days after, though not uſual in ſummer-time; but this was an extraordinary caſe, as in 1 Sam. xii. 17, 18. and was done to ſhew the Lord was intreated for the land; and ſo Joſephus ſays [o], that upon the hanging up of theſe men, God cauſed it to rain immediately, and reſtored the earth to its former fruitfulneſs. According to the law in Deut. xxi. 22, 23. the bodies ſhould have been taken down and buried the ſame day; but theſe men ſuffered

[i] T. Hieroſ. Kidduſhin, fol. 65. 2.
[k] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 19. 2.
[l] Vid. Lipſium de cruce, l. 3. c. 13.
[m] Bemidbar Rabba, fol. 190. 1.
[n] Bemidbar Rabba, ib.
[o] Antiq. l. 7. c. 12. §. 1.

fered not for their own perſonal ſins, but for the ſins of others, and to avert a public calamity, and therefore muſt hang till that was removed; nor were they executed by men bound by that law; and beſides their continuing on the tree was according to the will of God, till he was intreated, who could diſpenſe with this law; to which may be added, the ceremonial and judicial laws, of which this was one, gave place to thoſe of a moral nature [p], as this did to that of ſanctifying the name of God in a public manner; hence the ſaying of one of the Rabbins upon this [q], which is by many wrongly expreſſed, "It is better that one letter ſhould be rooted out of the law, than that the name of God ſhould not be ſanctified openly;" that is, a leſſer precept give way to a greater, or a ceremonial precept to a moral one, ſuch as the ſanctification of the name of God is: and ſuffered neither the birds of the air to reſt on them by day; as it is uſual for crows [r] and ravens, and ſuch ſort of birds, to light on bodies thus hung up, and pick their fleſh: nor the beaſts of the field by night; for it ſeems it was uſual to make the gibbets, and ſo in ſome other nations the croſſes, ſo low, that wild beaſts could eaſily come at the bodies and devour them; ſo Blandina was hung upon a tree ſo low, that ſhe might be expoſed to the wild beaſts to feed upon her, but not one of them would touch her body [s]; now Rizpah, by her ſervants, had ways and means to fright away the birds and beaſts from doing any injury to the carcaſſes.

℣. 11. And it was told David what Rizpah the daughter of Aiah the concubine of Saul had done, &c.] Whether this was told out of good will or ill-will is not certain; however, it was not diſagreeable to David, but ſerved to move pity and compaſſion in him to the woman, and to ſtir him up to give an honourable interment to Saul and his ſons; and which would ſhew that this fact was not done out of perſonal pique and revenge to his family, but in obedience to the will of God, and the honour of his name.

℣. 12. And David went and took the bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan his ſon, from the men of Jabeſh-Gilead, &c.] Which, according to Bunting [t], was 52 miles from Jeruſalem; though perhaps David did not go thither in perſon to fetch them, but by his meſſengers, ſee ℣. 14. which had ſtolen them from the ſtreet of Beth-ſhan, where the Philiſtines had hanged them, when the Philiſtines had ſlain Saul in Gilboa; the hiſtory of all which ſee in 1 Sam. xxxi. 8—13.

℣. 13. And he brought up from thence the bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan his ſon, &c.] Which had been buried there under an oak, 1 Chron. xii. 12. and they gathered the bones of them that were hanged, the ſeven ſons of Saul who had been lately hanged; who either had hung ſo long that their fleſh was conſumed, and the bones dropped upon the ground, from whence they gathered them; or they took them down and burnt the fleſh off of them, and took the bones to bury them, which was not uſually done [u].

℣. 14. And the bones of Saul and Jonathan his ſon, &c.] Together with thoſe who had been hanged: buried they in the country of Benjamin in Zelah; a city in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 28. in the ſepulchre of Kiſh his father; the father of Saul, 1 Sam. ix. 1, 2. and which, according to Fuller [w], and the poſition of it in his map, was not far from the hill on which the ſeven ſons of Saul were hanged: and they performed all that the king commanded; that is, David's meſſengers and ſervants did; they fetched the bones of Saul and Jonathan from Jabeſh-gilead, and buried them with thoſe of his ſeven ſons hanged, in the burying-place of his father Kiſh, and made a general mourning for them; for the Jews ſay [x], that by David's order Saul's coffin was carried through every tribe, and men, women, and children came out and expreſſed concern: and after that, God was intreated for the land; not after the burial of the ſaid perſons, but after the ſeven men were hanged up; by this the wrath of God was appeaſed, which was ſeen by his ſending rain and fruitful ſeaſons, ſo that the famine ceaſed.

℣. 15. Moreover, the Philiſtines had yet war again with Iſrael, &c.] Beſides what is before recorded in this and the preceding book; being animated to it, partly by the number of giants among them, and partly by the decline of David's life, and it may be chiefly by the inſurrections and rebellions in Iſrael; though ſome think that theſe battles were not after the rebellions of Abſalom and Sheba, and the affair of the Gibeonites, though here recorded, but before, and quickly after the war with the Ammonites, next to which they are placed in 1 Chron. xx. but they ſeem to be placed here in their proper order: and David went down, and his ſervants with him; to the borders of the Philiſtines, perceiving they were preparing to make war againſt him: and fought againſt the Philiſtines; engaged in a battle with them: and David waxed faint; in the battle, not able to bear the fatigues of war, and wield his armour as he had uſed, being in the decline of life; after he had been engaged a while, his ſpirits began to fail, not through fear, but through feebleneſs; but, according to Joſephus, it was through wearineſs in purſuing the enemy put to flight, which the following perſon perceived, and turned upon him [y].

℣. 16. And Iſh-benob, which was of the ſons of the giant, &c.] Of Goliath, or of a giant, of the race of them: the weight of whoſe ſpear weighed three hundred ſhekels of braſs in weight; which muſt be underſtood either of the wood of it, or of the head of it, the flaming point of it, as many interpret it; and if ſo, it was but half the weight of Goliath's ſpear, unleſs there was any difference of the weight of iron and of braſs, ſee 1 Sam. xvii. 7. he being girded with a new ſword; or rather with a new girdle, as the Targum; and ſo Jarchi, which might be given him as a mark of honour, or as a token of his having a commiſſion in the army: thought to have ſlain David; his aim was at him, and perceiving him faint and feeble, thought to take the advantage of it, and diſpatch him.

℣. 17. But Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah ſuccoured him, &c.] Obſerving him in danger, made haſte to his relief: and ſmote the Philiſtine, and killed him; it ſeems as if Abiſhai engaged with the Philiſtine, and killed him; but inaſmuch as it will bear to be interpreted of David, and ſince the four giants here and hereafter mentioned are ſaid to fall by the hand of David and his ſervants, ℣. 12. it may be thought that this man fell by his hand; ſeeing it is clear that all the reſt fell by the hands of his ſervants:

[p] See Stillingfleet's Origines Sacr. p. 140. & l. 2. c. 13.
[q] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 79. 1.
[r] —— non paſces in cruce corvos, Horat. Epiſt. l. 1. Epiſt. 16. ℣. 48. Vid. Lipſium de cruce, l. 3. c. 11. c. 12. p. 258.
[s] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 1.
[t] Travels, &c. p. 122. 143.
[u] Lipſius de cruce, l. 2. c. 16.
[w] Piſgah-ſight, B. 2.
[x] Bemidbar Rabba, ut ſupra.
[y] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 12. §. 1.

vants: then the men of David ſware unto him; after they had obſerved the danger he was expoſed unto, and how narrowly he eſcaped with his life: ſaying, Thou ſhalt go no more with us to battle; they had perſuaded him not to go to the battle with Abſalom; they had ſuffered him to go with them now, he being, no doubt, forward and preſſing to it; but now they were reſolute, and determined he ſhould never go more: that thou quench not the light of Iſrael; ſignifying that their glory and proſperity depended on his life, and that ſhould he be taken away, they ſhould be in affliction and adverſity, their honour and their happineſs would be at an end; the Targum is, "thou mayeſt not extinguiſh the kingdom of Iſrael," the light and glory of it.

ỿ. 18. And it came to paſs after this, &c.] After the former battle: that there was again a battle with the Philiſtines at Gob; in 1 Chron. xx. 4. it is called Gezer; either the place had two names, or theſe two places were near each other; ſo that the battle may be ſaid to be fought both at the one and at the other, being fought equally near to both: then Sibbechai the Huſhathite ſlew Saph, which was of the ſons of the giant; who is called Sippai, 1 Chron. xx. 4. he had his name from the lintel of a door, being as high as one, ſo tall that he could ſcarce go under one. Sibbechai was one of David's worthies, 1 Chron. xi. 29. perhaps a deſcendant of Huſhah, who ſprung from Judah, 1 Chron. iv. 4.

ỿ. 19. And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philiſtines, &c.] Another battle with them in the ſame place: where Elhanan the ſon of Jaare-oregim a Beth-lehemite, ſlew the brother of Goliath the Gittite; the word brother is rightly ſupplied from 1 Chron. xx. 5. where his name is ſaid to be Lahmi, for not Goliath himſelf was ſlain, though ſome ſo interpret it, and take Elhanan to be David; ſo Jarchi, and with which agrees the Targum; but he was ſlain not at Gob, but in the valley of Elah; nor had David any ſuch name as Elhanan; he was one of David's worthies, ch. xxiii. 24. where he is called the ſon of Dodo, and in 1 Chron. xx. 5. the ſon of Jair; and Lahmi there may not be the name of Goliath's brother, but, as here, the country-name of Elhanan; for the words [z] there may be rendered, "and Elhanan the ſon of Jair the Lehemite (i. e. the Beth-lehemite) ſlew the brother of Goliath the Gittite," and ſo perfectly agrees with this: the ſtaff of whoſe ſpear was like a weaver's beam; not of Goliath's brother, but of Goliath himſelf, 1 Sam. xvii. 7.

ỿ. 20. And there was yet a battle in Gath, &c.] Beſides the battles in the above place or places; for this does not neceſſarily ſuppoſe that one of the ſaid battles had been there, only that this, which was another battle, had been there: there was a man of great ſtature; for ſo the ſenſe of the word appears to be from 1 Chron. xx. 6. though here it ſignifies a man of ſtrife and contention, a man of war, and both were true of him: that had on every hand ſix fingers, and on every foot ſix toes, four and twenty in number; twelve fingers on his two hands, and twelve toes on his two feet. Pliny [a] ſpeaks of one M. Curiatius, a patrician, who had two daughters that had ſix fingers on an hand, and were called Sedigitæ, ſix-fingered, and of Volcatius, a famous poet, called Sedigitus, or ſix-fingered, for the ſame reaſon; and elſewhere from other writers [b], he makes mention of a people that had eight toes on each foot; ſo Cteſias [c] ſpeaks of a people in the mountains of India, which have eight fingers on each hand, and eight toes on each foot, both men and women: and he alſo was born to the giant; a ſon of a giant.

ỿ. 21. And when he defied Iſrael, &c. The armies of Iſrael, as Goliath had done ſome years ago, 1 Sam. xvii. 10. Jonathan the ſon of Shimea the brother of David ſlew him; this brother of David is called Shammah, 1 Sam. xvi. 9. and Shimma, 1 Chron. ii. 13. this ſon of his is another man from Jonadab his ſon, who was famous for his ſubtlety as this was for his valour, ch. xiii. 3. The Jews ſay [d] this was Nathan the prophet, a ſon of Shammah.

ỿ. 22. Theſe four were born to the giant in Gath, &c.] Not to Goliath, for one of them was his brother, but to ſome giant or another of that place, for which it was famous; they were all of them of the race of the giants; and ſo the Septuagint verſion, they were "the offſpring of the giants in Gath, whoſe family was Repha;" and this Repha, or Arepha, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, according to Abarbinel, was a woman of the daughters of the giants; the Talmudiſts [e] make her to be the ſame with Orpah, Ruth i. 4. Theſe giants, it is highly probable, were the deſcendants of the Anakim which remained in Gath after they were cut off by Joſhua in other places, Joſh. xi. 22. and fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his ſervants; the firſt, Iſh-benob, fell by the hand of David aſſiſted by Abiſhai, and the other three by the perſons mentioned.

CHAP. XXII.

THIS chapter contains a ſong or pſalm, the ſame with the 18th pſalm, and which, according to Jarchi, was compoſed by David in his old age, and as Kimchi ſays, at the end or cloſe of his days; but Abarbinel is of opinion, that it was written in his youthful time, in the midſt of his troubles, and was ſung by him as often as he had a deliverance from any; and which may account for the ſeveral variations in it from Pſ. xviii. which, the ſame writer obſerves; are 74; and are not to be aſcribed to the difference of copies, or neglect of copiers: and very probably, towards the cloſe of his days, he reviſed it, and made it fit for general uſe, and ſent it with the reſt of his pſalms to the chief muſician; but the particular conſideration of it, and of the differences in it from Pſ. xviii. is referred to the expoſition of that book in its courſe.

[z] Vid. Buxtorf. Anticritic. par. 2. c. 2. p. 421. [a] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 43. [b] Megaſthenes apud ib. l. 7. c. 2.
[c] In Indicis, c. 31. [d] Hieron. Trad. Heb. fol. 76. D. [e] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 42. 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXIII.

IN this chapter are recorded the laſt words of David, under a divine inſpiration, ℣. 1—7. and an account is given of his great men, famous for warlike exploits, particularly of three mighty men who did very marvellous things, ℣. 8—17. and of two others next unto them, which belonged to another claſs of three, ℣. 18—23. and then of thirty-one more, ℣. 24—39. who are all mentioned by name.

℣. 1. Now theſe be the laſt words of David, &c.] Which refer not to the pſalm in the preceding chapter, but to what follows; not the laſt words he ſpoke, for he ſaid many things afterwards; for the advice he gave to Solomon, and the inſtructions to him about building the temple, were delivered after this time; but theſe were the laſt after he had finiſhed the book of pſalms; or the laſt that he ſpoke under the inſpiration of the Holy Spirit, or that he delivered out by way of prophecy; though the Jews [f] will not allow him to ſpeak by the ſpirit of prophecy; they own he ſpoke by the Holy Spirit, which they diſtinguiſh from prophecy; but the Targum calls theſe words a prophecy, and takes them to be a prophecy of the Meſſiah, and of things to come, as undoubtedly they are, paraphraſing them thus; "theſe are the words of the prophecy of David, which he propheſied concerning the end of the world, concerning the days of conſolation that ſhould come;" this is obſerved to excite attention, the laſt words of dying men being uſually regarded and remembered: David the ſon of Jeſſe ſaid; he began with his deſcent, which was comparatively mean, in order to illuſtrate the diſtinguiſhing goodneſs of God to him in his exaltation: and the man who was raiſed up on high; from a low eſtate to an high one, from the ſheepfold to the throne, to be king over all the tribes of Iſrael, and a conqueror, and head of the nations round about him: the anointed of the God of Jacob; who was anointed king by Samuel by the order of the God of Jacob; and which was an inſtance of his being the God of Jacob or Iſrael, and of his care of them, and regard unto them, that he anointed ſuch a man to be king over them, as well as it was an honour to David: and the ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael; who compoſed moſt of the pſalms and hymns of praiſe for the people of Iſrael; invented and ſet the tunes to them to which they were to be ſung, and the inſtruments of muſic on which they were ſung; and appointed ſingers to preſide, and lead them in that part of divine worſhip, ſinging pſalms and hymns; and very ſweet were the pſalms he compoſed as to the matter of them, and very ſweet and delightful to the ear was the muſic in the manner of ſinging them: it may be rendered, who was ſweet or pleaſant in the ſongs of Iſrael [g], his warlike exploits and victories being the ſubject of them, 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7. ſaid; as follows; for all that goes before are the words of the penman of this book drawing the character of David; in which he was a type of Chriſt, a branch out of the root of Jeſſe, highly exalted, and choſen from among the people, anointed to be prophet, prieſt, and king; and who ſweetly expounded the pſalms concerning himſelf, and ordered them to be ſung in the churches, and of which he is the ſubject, and may be ſaid to be ſweetly held forth in them, ſee Luke xxiv. 44.

℣. 2. The ſpirit of the Lord ſpake by me, &c.] the pſalms and ſongs he compoſed were not the fruits of his own genius, but were written by him under the inſpiration of the Spirit of God; by whom holy men of God, the penmen of the ſcriptures, ſpoke, even as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt, of whom David was one, being a prophet; ſee Acts i. 16. and ii. 30. ſo the Targum here, "David ſpoke by the ſpirit of prophecy of the Lord:" or ſpake in me [h]; what he ſpoke was firſt internally impreſſed upon his mind by the Spirit of God, and then he expreſſed it with his tongue, as follows: and his word was in my tongue; not only the matter of his pſalms was indited by the Spirit of God, and ſuggeſted to his mind; but the very words in which they are delivered were given to him, and he was directed to make uſe of them, and did.

℣. 3. The God of Iſrael ſaid, &c.] To David, or by him; he who was the covenant-God of Iſrael literally conſidered, and is the covenant-God and Father of the whole ſpiritual Iſrael, and who is owned, believed in, and worſhipped by them: the Rock of Iſrael ſpake to me; the ſame with the God of Iſrael in other words, who is the ſtrength and ſecurity of Iſrael; or the ſecond Divine Perſon, the Son and Word of God is meant, who is often called a Rock in ſcripture; and is the Rock on which the Iſrael or church of God is built, and in whom it remains ſafe and firm, the gates of hell not being able to prevail againſt it; and ſo here is an inſtance and proof of a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; the God of Iſrael, Jehovah the Father; the Rock of Iſrael, Jehovah the Son; and the Spirit of Jehovah, as in the preceding verſe, who is Jehovah the Spirit: now what was ſaid by theſe three Divine Perſons to David, and by him, and concerning himſelf as a type of the Meſſiah, follows: He that ruleth over men muſt be juſt, ruling in the fear of God; which is a character every king among men ought to have, adminiſtring juſtice to their ſubjects; ruling not only according to the laws of the land, but according to the law of God; having his fear before their eyes, and acting with a view to his honour and glory, whoſe vicegerents they are, and to whom they are accountable; they ſhould rule with gentleneſs and humanity, conſidering they are men, and not brutes, they rule over. Agamemnon in Homer is often called king of men. This character in all reſpects, was found in David, ch. viii. 15. and may be here given as an inſtruction to his ſon and ſucceſſor, Solomon; and is in all reſpects applicable to the Meſſiah, who is a ruler or king by the deſignation of his Father; a ruler over men, even over all men, yea over the greateſt of men, King of kings, and Lord of lords, and eſpecially, and in an eminent ſenſe, King of ſaints; and he is juſt, a King that reigns in righteouſneſs, righteous in all his ways and works, and particularly juſt as a King, as well as in all his other characters, ſee Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. Zech. ix. 9. and upon whom, as man and Mediator, the ſpirit of the fear of the Lord reſts, and [f] Maimon. Moreh Nevochim, par. 2. c. 45.

[g] נעים זמרות jucundus pſalmis, Montanus; ſuavis in canticis, Vatablus; amœnus pſalmis, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

[h] בי in me, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius.

and under the influence of which, as ſuch, he has acted, Iſ. xi. 1, 2. ſo the Targum applies theſe words to the Meſſiah thus, "the true Judge ſaid, he would appoint to me a King, who is the Meſſiah, who ſhall ariſe and rule in the fear of the Lord:" and they may be rendered, there ſhall be a ruler over men, juſt, ruling in the fear of God; or ruling, appointing, ordering, and directing the worſhip of God, and the ordinances of it under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, as Chriſt did, ſee Matt. xxviii. 18, 19, 20.

℣. 4. And he ſhall be as the light of the morning, when the ſun riſeth, even a morning without clouds, &c.] That is, ſuch a ruler that rules in righteouſneſs, and in the fear of God; he is the light and glory of his people, who guides and directs them, makes them chearful and comfortable; his adminiſtrations are pleaſant and delightful, and promiſe a growing and increaſing happineſs to them, like the morning light and riſing ſun; and there are no clouds, nor forebodings of dark times, affliction and diſtreſs coming upon them, but all the reverſe: and with Chriſt theſe metaphors well ſuit, who is the true light that ſhines, the morning-ſtar, the day-ſpring from on high, the ſun of righteouſneſs, and light of the world; his going forth or appearance in human nature at his incarnation, was as the morning, Hoſ. vi. 3. the firſt diſcovery of him to Adam, after ſin had brought a night of darkneſs on the world, was as the dawn of the morning; and this light like that of the morning increaſed, freſh and clearer diſcoveries of him being made to the patriarchs afterwards; and though as yet the ſun was not up, and it was not a morning without clouds, yet the diſcoveries then made brought joy with them, as to Abraham and others, and were a ſure ſign of the ſun riſing. When Chriſt appeared in the fleſh, the ſun of righteouſneſs then aroſe, and ſcattered the darkneſs of the night, both in the Jewiſh and Gentile world; introduced the light of the Goſpel to a greater degree than it was, under the legal diſpenſation, and made the goſpel-day; which was not only like the morning-light, growing and increaſing, but was as a morning without clouds, without the darkneſs of the ceremonial law, the ſhadows of which now diſappeared; and without the ſtorms and tempeſts of the moral law, its curſes being bore and removed by Chriſt; and without the frowns of divine wrath, reconciliation and ſatisfaction being made by him: and this is all applicable particularly to the government of Chriſt, which is delightful and grateful to his people, ſerviceable and beneficial to them, under which they enjoy great peace and proſperity; and which will more and more increaſe, and ſtill be more glorious and illuſtrious, ſee Pſ. lxxii. 7, 8. Iſa. xxx. 26. A learned writer [i] has obſerved, that in an antient MS. the word Jehovah is inſerted and read thus, "and as the light of the morning, ſhall ariſe Jehovah the ſun," which clearly points to Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs; and be it an interpolation, it gives the true ſenſe of the words: a glorious, beautiful, and illuſtrious perſon is deſcribed in Ovid [k] by the ſame figure as here: as the tender graſs ſpringing out of the earth by clear ſhining after rain; which ſprings up the faſter, and is more flouriſhing after a ſhower of rain, and when upon that the ſun breaks out and ſhines clearly: or from clear-ſhining, from rain [l]; that is, the ſpringing of the tender graſs out of the earth is owing partly to the rain which falls in the night, and partly to the ſun riſing in the morning, and the clear ſhine of it: this may denote the fruitful and flouriſhing eſtate which a good and righteous ruler over men is the happy inſtrument of bringing his people into; and may be applied both to the incarnation of Chriſt, when he grew up as a tender plant, or as the tender graſs, mean in his original and deſcent, weak in himſelf as man; and yet this fruit of the earth was excellent and comely, beautiful and glorious, and the ſpringing of it owing to the favour and good-will of God, and his coming was as the latter and former rain to the earth, Hoſ. vi. 3. and to the government of Chriſt, and the benefits of it to his church and people; who flouriſh under it through the light of his grace and favour, and through the rains of goſpel-doctrines they are bleſſed with: or than clear ſhining, than rain; Chriſt is more beneficial to his people, who are comparable to graſs for their meanneſs, and weakneſs, and number, than the ſun and rain are to the graſs in the field.

℣. 5. Although my houſe be not ſo with God, &c.] So bright, and flouriſhing, and proſperous as the government of the juſt ruler before deſcribed; or is not right [m] with God, meaning his family, in which great ſins were committed, and great diſorders and confuſions brought into it, as the caſes of Amnon, Abſalom, and Adonijah ſhewed; or not firm or ſtable [n], through the rebellion of one, the inſurrection of another, and the uſurpation of a third; yet he believed it would be firm and ſtable in the Meſſiah that ſhould ſpring from him, promiſed in the everlaſting covenant; though the Jewiſh writers underſtand this of the firmneſs and ſtability of his kingdom and government: but my houſe is not ſo, &c. like the morning-light, which increaſes by little and little, and like the morning which ſometimes is not cloudy, and ſometimes is; ſometimes the ſun ſhines clearly, and ſometimes not; or like the tender graſs, which is ſometimes flouriſhing, and after withers; but ſo is not my kingdom, it is a perpetual one, given and ſecured by an everlaſting covenant; and ſuch certainly is or will be the kingdom of the Meſſiah: yet he hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, ordered in all things and ſure; or, for [o] he hath made, &c. the covenant by which the kingdom was ſettled on David and his ſeed was a covenant that would continue for ever, and would be kept, obſerved, and preſerved [p] in all the articles of it, and ſo be ſure to his ſeed, particularly to the Meſſiah that ſhould ſpring from him, in whom it was fulfilled, Luke i. 32, 33. and the covenant of grace made with David's antitype, with Chriſt the head of the church, and the repreſentative of it, and ſo with all his people in him, is an everlaſting one: it was made with Chriſt from everlaſting, as appears from the everlaſting love of God, the ſource and ſpring of it; the earlineſs of the divine counſels on which it is formed, and bleſſings and promiſes of it, with which it is filled, which were before the world was; and from Chriſt being ſet up as the Mediator of it from everlaſting: and it will continue to everlaſting; it is a covenant that cannot be broken, will never be removed, nor give way to or be ſucceeded by another: it is ordered in all things; to promote and advance the glory of all the three perſons in the Godhead, Father, Son, and Spirit; to ſecure the perſons of the ſaints, saints, and to provide every thing needful for them for time and eternity: and it is sure; it stands upon a sure basis, the unchangeable will and favour of God, and is in the hands of Christ, the same to-day, yesterday, and for ever; its mercies are the sure mercies of David, and its promises are yea and amen in Christ, and are sure to all the seed. Tho' things may not be with them god-ward, as they desire, and could be wished for; though they may be attended with many sins and infirmities, the temptations of Satan, divine desertions, and various afflictions, and be guilty of many backslidings, yet covenant-interest always continues; and so, though in the kingdom and interest of Christ in the world, there are, and may be, many things disagreeable; it may be attended with persecutions, heresies, scandals, &c. yet it shall continue and increase, and spread, and be an everlasting kingdom: for this is all my salvation; all depends upon this covenant; the safety of David's family, and the security of the kingdom in it, and to his seed, till the Messiah came, depended on the covenant made with him respecting that; and the spiritual and eternal salvation of the Lord's people depends upon the covenant of grace; which was contrived, formed, and settled in it, in which the Saviour is provided, and the persons to share in his salvation are taken into it and secured, with all blessings both of grace and glory: and all my desire; to see it fulfilled; as it is the desire of good men, to be led more and more into it, to see their interest in it, to have the blessings and promises of it, applied unto them, and to be saved by it, and not by the covenant of works; and there is all that in it that a believer can desire to make him comfortable here, or happy hereafter; and it is what gives him delight and pleasure in all his troubles: it may be supplied he is, as well as this is, and be applied to Christ, the ruler over men, described, v. 3, 4. with whom the covenant of grace is made, in whom is the salvation of men; he is the author and the only author of it; in whom it is compleat and perfect; all salvation is in him, and which they can claim as theirs; to whom is all their desire, and in whom is all their delight, as it may be rendered; on account of the glory of his person, the fulness of his grace, and his suitableness as a Saviour; whom they desire to know more of, and have more communion with: although he make it not to grow; though there may not be at present any growth of outward prosperity, or of inward grace, or even of the produce of the earth, Hab. iii. 17, 18. though the horn of David is not yet made to bud, or his family in growing and flourishing circumstances, or the Messiah, the man, the branch, does not yet shoot forth, though he certainly would; or, for shall he not bud forth? he shall, Jer. xxiii. 5. Zach. iii. 8. and vi. 12.

[i] Dr. Kennicott's State of the Hebrew Text, Diſſert. 1. p. 468. [k] Taliſque apparuit illi, &c. Metamorph. l. 14. fab 16. ℣. 767.
[l] כנגדה ממטר a ſplendore, a pluvia germen de terra, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus. [o] כי quia, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator.
[m] לא כן non recta, Cocceius. [n] Non eſt res firma. Vitringa in Jeſaiam, c. 11. 1. [p] שמרה ſervatum, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus; conſervatum, Junius & Tremellius.

v. 6. But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns thrust away, &c.] Not like the tender grass that springs up, and flourishes after rain, and the sun shine upon that; but like thorns, useless, hurtful and pernicious, and fit only for burning: this is true of wicked men in general, that cast off the yoke of the Lord, and become unprofitable, as Belial signifies: and of wicked governors in particular, who instead of being helpful are hurtful to a commonwealth; and instead of being the joy and comfort of their subjects, and of giving pleasure to them, and making them chearful and prosperous, give pain and trouble, and cause grief and sorrow; and are, if possible, to be thrust away, and deposed from government: because they cannot be taken with hands; thorns cannot be handled and gently dealt with, but some instrument must be used to put them away with force; so wicked men, and especially wicked rulers, are untractable, and not to be managed in a gentle way, and therefore violent ones must be taken.

v. 7. But the man that shall touch them must be fenced with iron, and the staff of a spear, &c.] To remove these thorns, or sons of Belial, out of the way, or to defend himself against them; or weapons of war must be made use of to conquer and destroy them, according to the sense of Ben Gersom, and which De Dieu follows; a man that meddles with them must expect to be as much hurt, and wounded by them all over the body, as if not only the point or iron head of a spear, but the wood, or handle of the spear were thrust up in him; but the former sense seems best: and they shall be utterly burnt with fire in the same place; where the thorns grew, or whither they are removed, or are sitting; where persons are sitting to warm themselves by them: and this may be understood of the destruction of wicked rulers, when their kingdom is taken from them, and they are consumed root and branch; and was true not only of Saul, and his posterity, as some apply it, and of Jeroboam, and those like to him, as the above Jewish writer; but of the wicked Jews, and their rulers, those sons of Belial, who rejected the yoke of Christ, and would not have him to rule over them; to whom the Lord sent the Roman armies fenced with swords and spears, and burnt their city, and destroyed them in the same place; and may take in Antichrist, and antichristian states, those sons of Belial, of the wicked ἀνομος, and lawless one, the son of perdition, whose city, Rome, shall be burnt with fire; and even all wicked men, at the great day of judgment, to which the Targum refers these words; when they, whose end like thorns, is to be burnt, will be cast into the lake which burns with fire and brimstone.

v. 8. These be the names of the mighty men whom David had, &c.] Besides Joab his general, who is not mentioned; for these were all military men under him, which are distinguished into three classes; the first and highest consisted of three only, who were general officers; and the second also of three, who perhaps were colonels of regiments; and the third of thirty, who were captains of thousands and hundreds: the Tachmonite that sat in the seat, the chief among the captains; not in the chief seat in the Sanhedrim, and was the head of that, and so had the name of Tachmonite, from his wisdom, as the Jewish writers say; but in the council of war, where he presided under the general, or in his absence, and was perhaps lieutenant-general, and so over all the captains; and therefore was neither David nor Joab, to whom some of the Rabbins apply these words, as observed by Kimchi; or rather he was the chief of the three, to whom he belonged; his name in 1 Chron. xi. 11. is Jashobeam, an Hachmonite, or the son of an Hachmonite, the same as in 1 Chron. xxvii. 2. and here it may be as well read Joshcb-bashebeth the Tachmonite, the same name, with a little variation; which seem to be names given him, taken from his character and office; for his proper name was as follows: the same was Adino the Eznite; so called, either from the family he was of, or from the place of his birth; tho' a learned man thinks it should be read as in the following supplement, he lift up his ſpear [q] againſt 800, whom he ſlew at one time; which though a very extraordinary exploit, yet not more ſtrange, or ſo ſtrange as that of Shamgar's ſlaying 600 men with an ox-goad, or as that of Samſon's killing 1000 men with the jaw-bone of an aſs: in 1 Chron. xi. 11. the number is only 300, which ſome attempt to reconcile, by obſerving, that not the ſame perſon is meant in both places; here he is called Joſheb-baſhebeth, there Jaſhobeam; here the Tachmonite, there the ſon of an Hachmonite; nor is he there called Adino the Eznite; but yet it ſeems plain, that in both places the chief of the three worthies of David is meant, and ſo the ſame man: others obſerve, that he engaged with 800, and ſlew 300 of them, when the reſt fled, and were purſued and killed by his men; and he routing them, and being the occaſion of their being ſlain, the ſlaying of them all is aſcribed to him; or he firſt ſlew 300, and 500 more coming upon him, he ſlew them alſo: but what Kimchi offers ſeems to be beſt, that there were two battles, in which this officer was engaged, at one of them he ſlew 800, and at the other 300; for ſo what is omitted in the books of Samuel, and of the Kings, is frequently ſupplied in the books of Chronicles, as what one Evangeliſt in the New Teſtament omits, another records. The above learned writer [r] conjectures, that ש being the firſt letter of the words, for three and eight, and the numeral letter being here reduced to its word at length, through a miſtake in the copier, was written שמנה eight, inſtead of שלש three: the Septuagint verſion is, "he drew out his ſpear againſt 800 ſoldiers at once," and ſays nothing of ſlaying them; and ſeems to be the true ſenſe of the word, as the ſame learned writer [s] has abundantly ſhewn.

℣. 9. And after him was Eleazar the ſon of Dodo the Ahohite, &c.] Or the ſon of Ahohi, perhaps the ſame with Ahoah, a deſcendant of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. 4. this Eleazar was the next to the Tachmonite, the ſecond worthy of the firſt claſs: one of the three mighty men with David; the ſecond of the three valiant men that were with David in his wars, and fought with him, and for him: when they defied the Philiſtines; clapped their hands at them, gloried over them, daring them to come and fight them; ſo did David, and his mighty men, as Goliath had defied them before: that were there gathered together to battle; at Paſdammim, as appears from 1 Chron. xi. 13. and the men of Iſrael were gone away; fled when they ſaw the Philiſtines gather together to fight them, notwithſtanding they had defied them; and ſo David, and his three mighty men, were left alone to combat with the Philiſtines.

℣. 10. He aroſe, and ſmote the Philiſtines until his hand was weary, &c.] He roſe up when the Iſraelites fled, and ſtood his ground alone, and fought with the Philiſtines, and ſmote them with his ſword, until his hand was weary with ſmiting: and his hand clave unto the ſword; which was contracted by holding it ſo long, and graſping it ſo hard, that it could not eaſily be got out of it; or through the quantity of blood which ran upon his hand, as it was ſhed, ſo Joſephus [t]; and which being congealed, and dried, cauſed his hand to ſtick to the hilt of his ſword, ſo that they were, as it were, glued together by it; or the ſenſe may be only, that though weary, he did not drop his ſword, but held it faſt till he had deſtroyed the enemy: and the Lord wrought a great victory that day; for to him it muſt be aſcribed, and not to the ſtrength and valour of the man: and the people returned after him only to ſpoil; they that fled, when they ſaw what a victory was obtained by him, returned and came after him; not to help him in ſmiting, but to ſpoil thoſe that were ſlain, and ſtrip them of what they had.

℣. 11. And after him was Shammah the ſon of Agee the Hararite, &c.] One who was of the mountainous country, as the Targum, the hill-country of Judea, of Hebron, or the parts adjacent; this was the third of the firſt three; there was one of this name among the thirty, ℣. 33. and the Philiſtines were gathered together into a troop; but ſo they were no doubt at firſt; R. Iſaiah takes it to be the name of a place called Chiyah, as the Targum, Chayatha; and which Kimchi ſays was a village, an unwalled town; and Ben Melech obſerves, that it is ſaid in the Arabic language, a collection of houſes is called Al-chai: it may be the ſame with Lehi, where Samſon ſlew 1000 with the jaw-bone of an aſs, whence it had its name; and Joſephus [u] ſays, the place where the Philiſtines were gathered together was called The Jaw-bone: but perhaps the ſenſe of Ben Gerſom may be beſt of all, that they gathered together in this place for proviſion, for food and forage, to ſupport the life of them and their cattle: ſince it follows, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles; a ſort of pulſe, which was ate in thoſe countries, and the pottage of which was delicious food, ſee Gen. xxv. 30, 34. and the people fled from the Philiſtines; as they did before under Eleazar, ℣. 9.

℣. 12. But he ſtood in the midſt of the ground, &c.] The field of lentiles: and defended it; the field, ſo that the Philiſtines could not ravage it, and get food and forage from it: and ſlew the Philiſtines; made a great ſlaughter among them, entirely routed them, ſo that they that eſcaped his ſword were obliged to flee: and the Lord wrought a great victory; to whom the glory of it belonged; a ſimilar fact is aſcribed to Eleazar before-mentioned in 1 Chron. xi. 13, 14. and indeed it ſeems to be the ſame, and in which they were both concerned; for it is plain from the account, that there were more than one engaged in this action, ſince it is there ſaid, and they ſet themſelves in the midſt of that parcel; and tho' that parcel of ground is ſaid there to be full of barley, it may eaſily be reconciled by obſerving, that one part of it might be ſowed with barley, and the other part with lentiles; ſo the Targum in 1 Chron. xi. 13. for it was half lentiles and half barley; and Eleazar might be placed to defend the one, and Shammah the other; from whence it appears it was about March when this action was, at the latter end of which barley-harveſt began.

℣. 13. And three of the thirty chiefs went down, &c.] Or three that were chief of the thirty, ſuperior to them; which ſome underſtand of the three before mentioned, ſo Joſephus [w]; and that having related ſome particular exploits of theirs, here obſerves one, in which they were all concerned; and others think the three next are meant, of whom Abiſhai was the chief, Benaiah the next, and the third Aſahel; but the firſt ſenſe is beſt: and came to David in the harveſt-time, unto the cave of Adullam; not

[q] Kennicott's Differt. 1. So Hillerus in Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 230, 231. renders it, the glory of the ſpear or ſpearmen flood againſt 800, &c. and Weemſe, "his delight was to lift up his ſpear" Exercitat. 16. p. 137. [r] P. 96. [s] P. 105.
[t] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 12. §. 4. [u] Ib. [w] Ib.

not when he was there, upon his flight from Saul, 1 Sam. xxii. 1. but after he was king, when engaged in war with the Philiſtines; perhaps wheat-harveſt is here meant: and the troop of the Philiſtines pitched in the valley of Rephaim; the army of the Philiſtines, as the Targum; of the valley of Rephaim, ſee Joſh. xv. 8.

℣. 14. And David was then in an hold, &c.] In a ſtrong hold; the ſtrong hold of Zion, as Joſephus [x], or one on a rock near the cave of Adullam, ſee 1 Chron. xi. 15. and the garriſon of the Philiſtines was then in Bethlehem; which was about ſix miles from Jeruſalem; the valley of Rephaim lay between that and Bethlehem; ſo far had they got into the land of Judea, and ſuch footing in it, as to have a garriſon ſo near its metropolis.

℣. 15. And David longed, and ſaid, &c.] It being harveſt-time, the ſummer-ſeaſon, and hot weather, and he thirſty: Oh, that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate! which he was well acquainted with, being his native place; and which might make it the more deſireable, as well as its waters might be peculiarly cool and refreſhing, and very excellent, as Kimchi ſuggeſts. This well was about a mile from Bethlehem, now called David's well, as ſome travellers ſay [y]. It is ſaid to be a very large well, with three mouths, and lies a little out of the road [z]; and that there is now near Rachel's grave a good rich ciſtern, which is deep and wide; wherefore the people that go to dip water, are provided with ſmall leathern buckets, and a line, as uſual in thoſe countries [a]; but Mr. Maundrel [b] ſays, it is a well, or rather a ciſtern, ſupplied only with rain, without any excellency in its waters to make them deſirable; but it ſeems, he adds, David's ſpirit had a farther aim. Some think he meant by this to get Bethlehem out of the hands of the Philiſtines, and obtain the poſſeſſion of it; others, as Jarchi, that he intended to aſk ſome queſtion of the Sanhedrim that ſat there; and others, that his deſire was after the law of God, called waters, as in Iſ. lv. 1. and ſome chriſtian writers, both antient and modern [c], are of opinion, that not literal but ſpiritual water was deſired by him, and that he thirſted after the coming of the Meſſiah, to be born at Bethlehem, and the living water which he only can give, John iv. 10.

℣. 16. And the three mighty men brake through the hoſt of the Philiſtines, &c.] Which lay in the valley of Rephaim, between the hold in which David was and the well of Bethlehem; theſe three men hearing David expreſs himſelf in the above manner, though without any view that any ſhould riſque their lives to obtain it, only in a general way ſaid, Oh for a draught of the water of the well of Bethlehem, immediately ſet out, and made their way through the army of the Philiſtines to the well: and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David; in a veſſel which they probably carried with them for that purpoſe: nevertheleſs he would not drink thereof; becauſe, ſay they who take theſe words in a ſpiritual ſenſe, it was not this water, but ſpiritual water he deſired; but the reaſon is given in the following verſe: but poured it out unto the Lord; as a libation to him, it being rather blood than water, being fetched at the hazard of mens lives, and therefore more fit to be offered as a ſacrifice to God than to be drank by him; and this he might do in thankfulneſs to God for preſerving the lives of the men Gerſom thinks it was now the feaſt of tabernacles, which was the feaſt of in-gathering the fruits of the earth, when great quantities of water were drawn and poured out at the altar, which was done to obtain the bleſſing of the former rain; ſee the note on John. vii. 37, 38.

℣. 17. And he ſaid, Be it far from me, O Lord, that I ſhould do this, &c.] Drink of the water theſe men had brought him: is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives? who riſqued the ſhedding of their blood, and went in danger of their lives to get it: therefore he would not drink it; ſome compare with this the ſtory of Alexander [d], to whom a veſſel of water was offered when in extreme thirſt, which he refuſed, becauſe he could not bear to drink it alone, and ſo ſmall a quantity could not be divided among all about him; but the reaſons are not the ſame: theſe things did theſe three mighty men; which made them very famous.

℣. 18. And Abiſhai the brother of Joab the ſon of Zeruiah, was chief among the three, &c.] Another triumvirate, of which he was the head: and he lift up his ſpear againſt 300, and ſlew them; Joſephus [e] ſays 600; this ſeems to confirm the reading of ℣. 8. that the number 800 is right, for if it was only 300, Abiſhai would have been equal to one, even the firſt of the former three; which yet is denied him in the following verſe: and had the name among three; of which he was one; and he had the chief name among them, or was the moſt famous of them.

℣. 19. Was he not moſt honourable of three? &c.] He was; who, beſides the exploit here mentioned, did many other things; he went down with David into Saul's camp, and took away his ſpear and cruiſe, which were at his bolſter; he relieved David when in danger from Iſhbenob the giant; he beat the Edomites, and ſlew 18,000 of them in the valley of ſalt: therefore he was their captain; of the other two, or was head over them, took rank before them: howbeit he attained not unto the firſt three; for fortitude, courage, and warlike exploits, namely, to the Tachmonite, Eleazar and Shammah.

℣. 20. And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, the ſon of a valiant man of Kabzeel, &c.] A city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 21. the father of this man was a man of great vivacity, valour, and ſtrength, ſo that it was, like father like ſon. Procopius Gazæus ſays Benaiah was David's brother's ſon, and a grandſon of Jeſſe: who had done many acts; which may refer either to the father of Benaiah or to Benaiah himſelf; and indeed the Syriac and Arabic verſions refer the preceding character, a valiant man, not to the father, but the ſon: he ſlew two lion-like men of Moab; two princes of Moab, as the Targum, or two giants of Moab, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions; men who were comparable to lions for their ſtrength and courage; for this is not to be underſtood of two ſtrong towers of Moab, as Ben Gerſom, which were defended by valiant men like lions, or which had the form of lions engraved on them; nor of Moabitiſh altars, as Guſſetius [f], the altar of the Lord, being called by this name of Ariel, the word uſed; but of men of uncommon valour valour and fortitude: he went down alſo, and ſlew a lion in the midſt of a pit in time of ſnow; not Joab, 1 Kings ii. 34. as is the tradition [g], but a real lion, the ſtrongeſt among the beaſts; and that in a pit where he could not keep his diſtance, and turn himſelf, and take all advantage, and from whence he could not make his eſcape; and which indeed might quicken his reſolution, when he muſt fight or die; and on a ſnowy day, when lions are ſaid to have the greateſt ſtrength, as in cold weather, or however are fiercer for want of food; and when Benaiah might be benumbed in his hands and feet with cold. Joſephus [h] repreſents the caſe thus, that the lion fell into a pit, where was much ſnow, and was covered with it, and making a hideous roaring, Benaiah went down and ſlew him; but rather it was what others ſay, that this lion very much infeſted the places adjacent, and did much hurt; and therefore for the good of the country, and to rid them of it, took this opportunity, and ſlew it; which one would think was not one of the beſt reaſons that might offer; it ſeems beſt therefore what Bochart [i] conjectures, that Benaiah went into a cave, for ſo the word uſed may ſignify, to ſhelter himſelf a while from the cold, when a lion being in it for the ſame reaſon, attacked him, and he fought with it and ſlew it; or rather it may be an hollow place, a valley that lay between Acra and Zion, where Benaiah hearing a lion roar, went down and ſlew it [k].

[x] Ibid. [y] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 1. p. 363. [z] Le Bruyn's Voyage to the Levant, ch. 52. p. 204. [a] Rauwolff's Travels, part 3. p. 317, 318. [b] Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 90. [c] Ambroſ. Apolog. David. l. 1. c. 7. Gloſſ. ordinar. & Schmidt in loc. Pfeiffer. difficil. loc. ſcript. cnet. 2. loc. 91. Horn. Diſſert. de deſiderio David. §. 10. [d] Curt. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 5. [e] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 12. §. 4. [f] Ebr. Comment. p. 95.

℣. 21. And he ſlew an Egyptian, a goodly man, &c.] A perſon of good countenance and ſhape, very large and tall; in 1 Chron. xi. 23. he is ſaid to be a man of great ſtature, and five cubits high, and ſo wanted a cubit and a ſpan of the heighth of Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. 4. and he had a ſpear in his hand; as large as Goliath's; for in 1 Chron. xi. 23. it is ſaid to be like a weaver's beam, as Goliath's was, 1 Sam. xvii. 7. ſee the note there: and he went down to him with a ſtaff; with a walking-ſtaff only, having no other weapon: and plucked the ſpear out of the Egyptian's hand; and therefore muſt be a man very nimble and dexterous, as well as bold and courageous: and ſlew him with his own ſpear; as David cut off Goliath's head with his own ſword. This is ſuppoſed [l] to be Shimei, the ſon of Gera, 1 Kings ii. 46.

℣. 22. Theſe things did Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, &c.] Slew a lion, and two lion-like men of Moab, and an Egyptian of a gigantic ſtature: and had the name among three mighty men; of which he was one, and Abiſhai another, the third Aſahel, one of the 30; or was over them, ℣. 24. ſince 30 are reckoned without him. Abarbinel thinks, that the third was Adina, the ſon of Shiza, the Reubenite, 1 Chron. xi. 42. ſince 30 were with him, and he at the head of them.

℣. 23. He was more honourable than the 30, &c.] Whoſe names are after recorded: but he attained not to the firſt three; the firſt triumvirate, Jaſhobeam, Eleazar, and Shammah; he was not equal to them for fortitude, courage, and military exploits: and David ſet him over his guard; his bodyguard, the Cherethites and Pelethites, ch. viii. 18. and xx. 23. who are called in the Hebrew text his hearing [m], becauſe they hearkened to his orders and commands, and obeyed them.

℣. 24. Aſahel the brother of Joab was one of the 30, &c.] Or rather over the 30, [n] who are next mentioned; ſince there are 30 reckoned beſides him, and the Arabic verſion calls him the prince of the 30; Joab is not named at all, becauſe he was general of the whole army, and ſo not to be reckoned in any of the three claſſes: Elhanan the ſon of Dodo of Bethlehem; a townſman of David.

℣. 25. Shammah the Harodite, &c.] Called Shammah the Hararite in 1 Chron. xi. 27. by a change of the letters R and D, which is frequent: Elika the Harodite; or who was of Harod, as the Targum; theſe both were from one place: mention is made of the well of Harod, Judg. vii. 1.

℣. 26. Helez the Paltite, &c.] Who was of a place called Palet, as the Targum; in 1 Chron. xi. 27. he is called the Pelonite: Ira the ſon of Ikkeſh the Tekoite; who was of the city of Tekoah, the native place of Amos the prophet, famous for oil, about 12 miles from Jeruſalem; ſee the note on Amos i. 1.

℣. 27. Abiezer the Anethothite, &c.] He was of Anethoth in the tribe of Benjamin, the birthplace of Jeremiah the prophet: Mebunnai the Haſhathite; the ſame with Sibbecai, 1 Chron. xi. 29. and xxvii. 11. 2 Sam. xxi. 18. this man had two names, and was a deſcendant of Huſhah, who came of Judah, 1 Chron. iv. 4.

℣. 28. Zalmon the Ahohite, &c.] The ſame with Ilai, 1 Chron. xi. 29. a deſcendant of Ahoah a grandſon of Benjamin, ch. viii. 4. Maharai the Netophathite; who was of Netophah, a city of the tribe of Judah, mentioned along with Bethlehem, Neh. vii. 26. a place of this name is ſpoken of in the Miſnah [o], famous for artichokes and olives.

℣. 29. Heleb the ſon of Baanah, a Netophathite, &c.] Called Heled, 1 Chron. xi. 30. and xxvii. 15. Ittai the ſon of Ribai out of Gibeah of the children of Benjamin; ſometimes called Gibeah of Benjamin and Gibeah of Saul, being a city in the tribe of Benjamin, and the birth-place of Saul king of Iſrael; and this man is diſtinguiſhed hereby from Ittai the Gittite, 2 Sam. xv. 19.

℣. 30. Benaiah the Pirathonite, &c.] Who was of Pirathon, a city in the tribe of Ephraim, Judg. xii. 15. Hiddai of the brooks of Gaaſh; which perhaps ran by the hill Gaaſh, and was alſo in the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. xxiv. 30. This man is called Hurai, 1 Chron. xi. 32.

℣. 31. Abi-albon the Arbathite, &c.] A native of Beth-arabah, either in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 6, 6. or in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 18, 22. he is called Abiel in Chron. xi. 32. Azmaveth the Barhumite; or Bachurimite, the letters tranſpoſed, an inhabitant of Bachurim or Baburim, a city in the tribe of Benjamin, ch. xvi. 5. and xix. 16.

℣. 32. Elihaba the Shaalbonite, &c.] Of Shaalbon or Shaalabin, a city in the tribe of Dan, Joſh. xix. 42. perhaps the Silbonitis of Joſephus [p]: of the ſons of Jaſhem, Jonathan; in 1 Chron. xi. 34. it is, the ſons of Haſhem the Gizonite; ſons are ſpoken of, though but one, as in Gen. xlvi 23.

℣. 33. Shammah the Hararite, &c.] From the mountainous country, as the Targum; the Arabic and Syriac verſions ſay, from the mount of Olives: Ahiam the ſon of Sharar the Hararite; from the high mountain, as the Targum; in 1 Chron. xi. 35. he is called the ſon of Sacar.

℣. 34.

[g] Hieron. Trad Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 80. C.
[h] Ut ſupra.
[i] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 4. col. 758.
[k] See the Univerſal Hiſtory, vol. 4. p. 227.
[l] Hieron. Trad. Heb. ut ſupra. Ad ſuum, Pagninus, Montanus.
[m] שמעתו
[n] בישלשים ſupra triginta iſtos, Junius & Tremellius.
[o] Miſn. Peah, c. 7. §. 1. Sheviith, c. 9. §. 5.
[p] De Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 3. §. 3.

5

℣. 34. Eliphelet the ſon of Ahaſbai, the ſon of the Maachathite, &c.] In 1 Chron xi. 35. he is called Eliphal the ſon of Ur: Eliam the ſon of Ahithophel the Gilonite; David's counſellor, that went off to Abſalom, ch. xv. 12. Eliam his ſon is ſuppoſed, by the Jews, to be the father of Bathſheba, the wife of Uriah, ch. xi. 3. according to Hillerus [q], he is the ſame with Ahijah the Pelonite, 1 Chron. xi. 36.

℣. 35. Hezrai the Carmelite, &c.] Of mount Carmel; or from Carmela, as the Targum, ſee 1 Sam. xxv. 2. he is called Hezro, 1 Chron. xi. 37. Paarai the Arbite; or from Arab, as the Targum, a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 52. according to Hillerus [r], the ſame with Naarai the ſon of Ezbai, in 1 Chron. xi. 37.

℣. 36. Igal the ſon of Nathan of Zobah, &c.] A kingdom in Syria, ch. viii. 3. according to Hillerus [s], the ſame with Joel, 1 Chron. xi. 38. Bani the Gadite; who was of the tribe of Gad, as the Targum; in the room of this ſtands Mibhar, the ſon of Haggeri, in 1 Chron. xi. 38.

℣. 37. Zelek the Ammonite, &c.] Who was ſo either by birth, and became a proſelyte; ſo the Targum ſays, he was of the children of Ammon; or is ſo called, becauſe he had ſojourned ſome time in their land, or had done ſome exploits againſt them; unleſs he was of Chephar-haammonai, a city of the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 24. Naharai the Beerothite; a native of Beeroth, a city in the ſame tribe, Joſh. xviii. 25. armourbearer to Joab the ſon of Zeruiah; Joab had ten of them, this perhaps was the chief of them, ch. xviii. 15. who was advanced to be a captain, and therefore has a name and place among the 30, very likely for ſome military exploits performed by him; he is in the liſt of David's worthies, though not Joab his maſter, as before obſerved; the reaſon of Joab being left out, is either becauſe he was over them all, as before noted; according to Joſephus [t], Uriah the Hittite, after-mentioned, was an armourbearer to Joab.

℣. 38. Ira an Ithrite, Gareb an Ithrite.] Theſe were of Jether, as the Targum, a deſcendant of Caleb, of the tribe of Judah, 1 Chron. ii. 50, 53. and iv. 15, 17.

℣. 39. Uriah the Hittite, &c.] The huſband of Bathſheba; of whom ſee ch. xi. 3. thirty and ſeven in all; reckoning the three mighty men of the firſt claſs, the three of the ſecond, and the third claſs conſiſting of 30 men, whoſe names are as above, and Joab the general and head of them all. In 1 Chron. xi. 41. Zabad the ſon of Ahlai follows Uriah as one of this catalogue; he ſucceeding in honour one that ſoon died, particularly Elika, ℣. 25. who is omitted in Chronicles, where a liſt of fifteen more is given; at the head of which ſtands Adina a Reubenite, and thirty are ſaid to be with him, according to our verſion; but ſhould be rendered, as by Junius and Tremellius, but the thirty were ſuperior to him, that is, the above 30; for theſe 15, though brave men, were of leſſer note.

CHAP. XXIV.

IN this chapter an account is given of David's numbering of the people, ℣. 1—9. of the ſenſe he had of his ſin, and of his acknowledgment of it; and of the Lord's diſpleaſure at it, who ſent the prophet Gad to him, to propoſe three things to him, one of which he was to chuſe as a puniſhment for it, ℣. 10—13. when he choſe the peſtilence, which carried off a great number of the people, ℣. 14—17. and David was directed to build an altar to the Lord in the threſhingfloor of Araunah the Jebuſite, with whom he agreed for it, and built one on it, and offered upon it, and ſo the plague was ſtayed, ℣. 18—25.

℣. 1. And again the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, &c.] It had been kindled, and appeared before in ſending a three year's famine among them for Saul's ill uſage of the Gibeonites; and now it broke forth again, either for ſome ſecret ſins committed, as Kimchi ſuggeſts, or for the rebellion of Abſalom, and the inſurrection of Sheba, in which multitudes of them joined; ſo Abarbinel; no doubt there was cauſe for it, though it is not expreſſed: and he moved David againſt them; not the Lord, but ſatan, as may be ſupplied from 1 Chron. xxi. 1. or it moved him; the anger of the Lord, as the laſt mentioned writer interprets it; or the heart of David, as Ben Gerſom; that is, the evil imagination of his heart, as Kimchi; the Lord left him to the corruption of his nature, ſometimes called ſatan, 2 Cor. xii. 7. which wrought powerfully in him, and ſtirred him up to take a ſtep contrary to the intereſt of Iſrael, and what was prejudicial to them, as the event ſhewed: it moved him to ſay; to Joab and his captains: Go number Iſrael and Judah; not all the individuals, but ſuch as were fit for war, able to bear arms, ſee ℣. 9.

℣. 2. For the king ſaid to Joab the captain of the hoſt, which was with him, &c.] Or who was with him, even Joab, who was now at court, and was a counſellor of David, as well as his general; or which army was with Joab, a ſtanding army he had the command of: Go now through all the tribes of Iſrael, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba; from the northern part of the land of Iſrael to the ſouthern part of it, and this courſe was accordingly ſteered, ℣. 6, 7. and number the people, that I may know the number of the people; ſo that this appears to be done not through any urgent neceſſity, but merely out of curioſity, and to gratify the pride of his heart, and pleaſe himſelf with the thought of ruling ſuch a numerous people, and brag of their numbers to other nations, and place his confidence therein; and no wonder it was diſpleaſing to the Lord.

℣. 3. And Joab ſaid unto the king, &c.] Not ſo rudely and inſolently as he did on account of his mourning for Abſalom, but in a more modeſt, decent, and polite manner: Now the Lord thy God add unto the people (how many ſoever they be) an hundred-fold; he wiſhed his ſubjects were an hundred times more numerous than they were: and that the eyes of my lord the king may ſee it; that he might live to ſee with his own eyes ſo great an increaſe: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing? he being now old, and therefore it might ſeem ſtrange to indulge ſuch curioſity, pride, and vanity, vanity, and beſides quite needleſs and uſeleſs: the numbering of them would not make them more or leſs; and they were all the king's ſervants, who were ready to obey him whenever he needed them, whether numbered or not; and it might be prejudicial to them, and bring down the wrath of God upon them, as well as be a troubleſome and expenſive buſineſs; all which, though not expreſſed here, is hinted at in 1 Chron. xxi. 3.

[q] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 906. [r] Ib. p. 499. [s] Ib. p. 856. [t] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 7. §. 1.

℣. 4. Notwithſtanding the king's word prevailed againſt Joab, and againſt the captains of the hoſt, &c.] Who it ſeems were of the ſame mind with Joab, and were againſt numbering the people, yet their arguments and remonſtrances were of no avail with the king; he was determined it ſhould be done, and laid his commands upon them to do it, which they were obliged to comply with: and Joab and the captains of the hoſt went out from the preſence of the king, to number the people of Iſrael; ſeeing him reſolute and determined, they ſubmitted, took his orders, and ſet out to execute them.

℣. 5. And they paſſed over Jordan, &c.] To take the number of the tribes of Reuben and Gad and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh firſt: and pitched in Aroer; for it ſeems that Joab and the captains had the army with them, and the ſeveral captains under their command, partly to aſſiſt in numbering the people, and partly to keep them in awe, leſt they ſhould oppoſe them, not knowing what was the deſign of all this. Aroer was a city given to the tribe of Gad, and rebuilt by them, Numb. xxxii. 34. on the right ſide of the city; i. e. of Aroer, the ſouth ſide of it, as the Targum, did Joab and his army pitch: that lieth in the midſt of the river of Gad; which was the river Arnon, ſo called now from the tribe of Gad, which poſſeſſed it, and ſo the Targum, in the midſt of the river of the tribe of Gad; for in the midſt of the river Arnon Aroer lay, ſee Joſh. xiii. 9. and toward Jazer; another city given to the Gadites, Numb. xxxii. 3. 35. and, according to Bunting [u], was 16 miles from Aroer.

℣. 6. Then they came to Gilead, &c.] The land of Gilead, half of which was given to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the other half to the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, Deut. iii. 12, 13. which tribes were numbered, and the firſt of all: and to the land of Tahtim-hodſhi; or the low lands of a new place; it ſeems to be a country newly poſſeſſed and inhabited; the Targum calls it the ſouthern land of Hodſhi; Bunting [w] calls it the lower country of Hodſhi, near to the city Corazin, in the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, 52 miles from Jeruſalem, and towards the north-eaſt, and ſignifies a new land: and they came to Dan-jaan; the ſame that is ſimply called Dan, and formerly Leſhem, Joſh. xix. 47. why Jaan is added to it is not eaſy to ſay; it lay at the northern border of the land of Iſrael, and was four miles from Paneas as you go to Tyre [x]: and about to Zidon; from Dan they went round about to Zidon, to the parts adjacent to it; for with Zidon itſelf they had nothing to do, of which ſee the note on Joſh. xi. 8.

℣. 7. And came to the ſtrong hold of Tyre, &c.] That is, old Tyre, which ſtood 30 furlongs from new Tyre, the iſland [y]; of which ſee the note on Iſ. xxiii. 1. this muſt be underſtood of the parts near unto it; for that itſelf was not within the land of Iſrael, and ſo its inhabitants not to be numbered: and to all the cities of the Hivites, and of the Canaanites; which were poſſeſſed by them, and from whence they were not driven out by the Iſraelites; to all places contiguous to them, Joab and his captains came to take the number of them: and they went out to the ſouth of Judah; even to Beerſheba; paſſing through the weſtern part of the land, they came to the ſouthern part of it, even as far as Beerſheba, which was the extreme part of the land to the ſouth.

℣. 8. So when they had gone through all the land, &c.] Beginning at the eaſt, and from thence to the north, and then going about to the weſt, came to the ſouth, which finiſhed their circuit: they came to Jeruſalem, at the end of 9 months and 20 days: they were 10 months wanting 10 days in numbering the people; in which they ſeem to have been very expeditious.

℣. 9. And Joab gave up the ſum of the number of the people unto the king, &c.] Having collected from the ſeveral captains employed in this work their ſeveral particular numbers, he put them together, and gave in the ſum total to David: and there were in Iſrael 800,000 valiant men that drew the ſword; though many of them might be under the age of 20, yet being robuſt and tall, and fit to bear arms, though but 16, 17, 18, or 19 years of age were muſtered, contrary to the law; which, according to Cornelius Bertram [z], was David's ſin, ſee 1 Chron. xxvii. 23, 24. In 1 Chron. xxi. 5. they are ſaid to be 1,000,000 and 100,000, which is 300,000 more than the ſum here given; ſeveral methods are taken to reconcile this; but what ſeems to be the beſt ſolution of the difficulty is what is obſerved by a Jew [a]; that here the number of the people in the ſeveral parts of the land of Iſrael was given, which were 800,000, there along with them, the numbers of the ſtanding army which waited on the king in their courſes, which were 24,000 every month, and amounted in the 12 months to 288,000, and reckoning 12,000 officers to them, they make the ſum of 300,000 wanted, ſee 1 Chron. xxvii. 1, 2, &c. and the men of Judah were 500,000 men. In 1 Chron. xxi. 5. they are ſaid to be only 470,000, 30,000 leſs than here; which may be accounted for by making uſe of a round number, though ſomething wanting, as is often done; or elſe the 30 companies, conſiſting of 1000 each, under the 30 captains mentioned in the preceding chapter, are taken into the account here, but left out in the book of Chronicles; or there were ſo many in the ſum total of the men of Judah before the plague, but 30,000 being conſumed thereby, are left out in the latter accounts, ſo Kimchi; but the other ſolutions ſeem beſt: Levi and Benjamin were not counted; it being abominable to Joab, he did not finiſh it, and eſpecially being diſpleaſing to God, who ſmote Iſrael for it, 1 Chron. xxi. 6, 7.

℣. 10. And David's heart ſmote him, after that he had numbred the people, &c.] For 9 or 10 months his conſcience lay aſleep, but now the thing was done, it is awakened, and accuſes him for it, and he repents of it; now he began to ſee the pride and naughtineſs of his heart; his vanity and confidence in the creature which led him to it; aggravated by doing it without ſeeking to know the mind of God, and without giving him his due, the half ſhekel, according to the law, Exod. xxx. 12, 13. intent only upon increaſing his own revenue, as ſome think, intending to impoſe a poll-tax upon the people when he had numbered them; and attempting

[u] Travels, &c. p. 147.
[w] Ibid.
[x] Hieron. de loc. Heb. fol. 90. H.
[y] Strabo. Geograph. l. 16. p. 521.
[z] Lucubrat. Frankfall, c. 2.
[a] R. Eliezer in Halicot Olam, tract. 4. c. 3. p. 181.

tempting to number a people who were not to be numbered; and numbering thoſe who were under the age of 20, and therefore the plague began before it was finiſhed, 1 Chron. xxvii. 23, 24 and David ſaid unto the Lord, I have ſinned greatly in that I have done; he ſaw and owned his ſin to be exceeding ſinful, attended with very aggravating circumſtances: and now I beſeech thee, O Lord, take away the iniquity of thy ſervant; the guilt of it from his conſcience, which lay heavy there, and ſuffer not the puniſhment it deſerves to take place on him, but grant an application of pardon to him: for I have done very fooliſhly; all ſin is folly, and ſome ſins are exceeding fooliſh, and ſo this appeared to David; or, though I have done very fooliſhly [b], yet forgive my ſin, ſee Pſ. xxxviii. 5.

℣. 11. For when David was up in the morning, &c.] Which it is probable was very early, he not being able to ſleep through the diſtreſs of mind he was in; for the words ſhould be rendered, and David aroſe in the morning [c], for, as we render them, they ſeem to imply as if he had no ſenſe of his ſin before the prophet came to him next mentioned; whereas, it was in the night he had been under the conviction of it, and had acknowledged it, and prayed for the pardon of it; upon which, the prophet was ſent to acquaint him what was the will of God concerning him: the word of the Lord came unto the prophet Gad, David's ſeer; with whom he had uſed to adviſe about the will of God on various occaſions, though in this he had neglected to conſult him; the Targum calls it the word of prophecy from the Lord: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 12. Go, and ſay unto David, &c.] Not my ſervant David, as Nathan was bid to ſay to him when it was in his heart to build an houſe for him; but now he had ſinned and diſpleaſed the Lord, and therefore it is only plain David: Thus ſaith the Lord, I offer thee three things; or lay them before thee to conſider of, which thou wouldſt have done; the Targum is, "one of three things I caſt upon thee," as a burden to bear; one of the three I will certainly inflict upon thee by way of chaſtiſement: chooſe thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee; here is mercy mixed with judgment; the Lord is angry, yet ſhews great condeſcenſion and goodneſs; a ſovereign being, who could have impoſed what puniſhment he pleaſed, and even all the three after-mentioned, yet reſolves but on one, and leaves that to the option of David.

℣. 13. So Gad came to David, and told him, &c.] Said nothing to him about his ſin, but correction for it; which confirms it, that David was made ſenſible of his ſin before he came to him: and ſaid unto him, Shall ſeven years of famine come unto thee in thy land? in 1 Chron. xxi. 12. only three years are mentioned, and ſo the Septuagint verſion here; but Joſephus [d], the Targum, the Syriac, and Arabic verſions have the number ſeven; three ſeems to be more agreeable to the numbers after-mentioned, and no more as to come were deſigned, though ſeven are here expreſſed; for the reconciling of which let it be obſerved, that there had been three years of famine already on account of the ſin of of Saul, ch. xxi. and in the current year, through the rains not falling in the proper time, the land was barren and unfruitful; or through the penury of the preceding years, the famine would be continued at leaſt until the harveſt; and then three years more now propoſed made ſeven years; or, if theſe three years would have immediately followed the other three, the following in courſe would be a ſabbatical year, in which were no plowing, ſowing, nor reaping, or the current year was ſuch an one; and the ſenſe is, ſhall there be a continuance of ſeven years of famine, that is, three more added to what had been? which muſt be moſt dreadful to think of; but a learned writer [e] thinks it a miſtake of the copier, writing ז ſeven for ג three: or wilt thou flee three months before thine enemies, while they purſue thee? be in ſuch a condition as not to be able to face or fight his enemies, or if he did, would not be able to ſtand his ground, but be forced to flee before them, and be purſued by them three months running; during which time a prodigious number might well be thought to be ſlain, ſad devaſtations made in the land, and great ſhame and diſgrace endured, and what a man of David's ſpirit could not bear the thoughts of: or that there be three days peſtilence in thy land? which in 1 Chron. xxi. 12. is called the ſword of the Lord, in diſtinction from the ſword of man, it coming immediately from him, and the deſtroying angel, in all the coaſts of the land; being inflicted by means of one: now adviſe, and ſee what anſwer I ſhall return to him that ſent me; that is, conſult with himſelf, or with his friends, or both, what anſwer the prophet muſt return to the Lord that ſent him; for him he means.

℣. 14. And David ſaid unto Gad, I am in a great ſtrait, &c.] Not knowing well which to chuſe, each of them being ſo grievous, and an anſwer being to be returned immediately; but by his next words, and by the event it ſeems he choſe the peſtilence, though that is not expreſly ſaid: let us fall now into the hand of the Lord; the Targum in 1 Chron. xxi. 13. is, "into the hand of the Word of the Lord:" (for his mercies are great) and let me not fall into the hand of man; indeed all the three judgments mentioned are by the hand of the Lord whenever they come; but in the peſtilence the hand of the Lord is more viſible, it coming immediately from his hand, as eſpecially this was to do, and did; it did not ariſe from ſecond cauſes, a noxious air, &c. but by means of an angel of God: David choſe this, becauſe he and his people would have nothing to do with men, as in famine they muſt have gone into other countries for food, and in war flee before their enemies, and lie at their mercy, and either of them more diſgraceful than this; and which he might the rather chooſe on his own account, that his people might not be able to ſay he ſought himſelf and his own intereſt; for had he choſen famine, as his people had been lately diſtreſſed that way already, they might, beſides urging that, ſay, that he could lay up ſtores for himſelf and family; or had he choſen war, they might obſerve he had fortified places to flee to, one after another, and ſhelter himſelf; but for the arrows of the peſtilence he was as fair a mark as the meaneſt of his ſubjects: but what ſeems to have moved him chiefly to make this choice is, that it would not only be the ſooneſt over, but that it wholly depended on the pleaſure of God, what uſe he would make of it in that time; and chiefly becauſe he knew God was gracious and merciful, and it was upon his great mercy he caſt himſelf and his people.

℣. 15. So the Lord ſent a peſtilence upon Iſrael, &c.] Upon the land of Iſrael, the people of the land,

[b] כי quamvis, ſo Glaſſius notes it may be rendered; ſo Pool.
[c] ויקם & ſurrexit, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.
[d] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 13. §. 2.
[e] Dr. Kennicott's Diſſert. 1. p. 474.

land; directly employing an angel to go through the coasts of it, and empowering him to inflict a pestilential disease: from the morning even to the time appointed; from the morning the prophet Gad came to David with a message from the Lord; that very morning the plague began, and lasted to the time set for it, the three days, or at least unto the beginning of the third, when reaching Jerusalem, the Lord repented of it, and stayed his hand; tho' many think a much shorter time is intended; some think it lasted no more than half a day, if so much; some say but three hours [f]; the Septuagint version until dinner-time, and the Syriac and Arabic versions until the sixth hour of the day, which was noon; and so Kimchi says, some of their Rabbins interpret it of the half or middle of the day; the Targum is, "from the time the daily sacrifice was slain until it was burnt;" and it is the sense of several learned men, that it was only from the morning until the time of the evening sacrifice, or evening prayer, about three o' clock in the afternoon, and so lasted about nine hours: and there died of the people from Dan even to Beersheba, 70,000 men; so that there was a great diminution of the people in all places where they were numbered; and David's sin may be read in the punishment of it; his heart was lifted up by the numbers of his people, and now it must be humbled by the lessening of them.

℣. 16. And when the angel stretched out his hand upon Jerusalem to destroy it, &c.] Which, as it was perhaps the last place where the people were numbered, it was the last to which the plague came: this angel appeared in an human form, standing between the earth and the heaven; in the midst of the heaven, in the air, right over Jerusalem; having a drawn sword in his hand stretched over the city, as is said in 1 Chron. xxi. 16. which was done as a menace, and to inject terror into David and the inhabitants of the city, and to give them notice of what they must expect: the Lord repented him of the evil; he was inflicting, and now threatened Jerusalem with; having compassion on the place where the ark, the symbol of his presence, was, where a temple was to be built to the honour of his name, and where he should be worshipped; and therefore stopped proceeding, as men when they repent of any thing done by them, cease from it, so did the Lord now; otherwise repentance, properly speaking, falls not on him, and so it is next explained: and said to the angel that destroyed the people; not the angel of death, the devil, but a good angel, who had a commission from God for this business: It is enough: stay now thine hand: there is a sufficient number slain; slay no more: and the angel of the Lord was by the threshing-place of Araunah the Jebusite; that is, he was in the air, right over the spot, or near it, where was this man's threshing-floor; and was seen by Araunah and his four sons, who upon it hid themselves, perhaps among the sheaves they were threshing, 1 Chron. xxi. 20. and this threshing-floor was on mount Moriah, 2 Chron. iii. 1. as threshing-floors commonly were on mountains for the sake of winnowing the corn when threshed; see the note on Ruth iii. 2. who, according to Ben Gersom, though he was by birth a Jebusite, was proselyted to the Jewish religion.

℣. 17. And David spake unto the Lord, &c.] In prayer; he and the elders of Israel being clothed in sackcloth, and fallen on their faces, he prayed, not unto the angel, but to Jehovah that sent him; see 1 Chron. xxi. 16, 17. when he saw the angel that smote the people; in the air over Jerusalem, with a drawn sword in his hand, which made him appear terrible: and said, lo, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly; in numbering the people: but these sheep, what have they done? he looked upon himself as the only transgressor, and his people as innocent, and as harmless as sheep; he thought of no sins but his own; these were uppermost in his mind, and lay heavy on his conscience; and it grieved him extremely that his people should suffer on his account: but they were not so innocent as he thought and suggests; and it was not only for his, but their sins this evil came; he was suffered to do what he did, to bring upon them deserved punishment for their rebellion against him, and other sins; however, this shows the high opinion he had of them, the great affection he had for them, and his sympathy with them in this time of distress: let thine hand, I pray thee, be against me, and against my father's house; let me and mine die, and not they; a type of Christ, the good shepherd, willing to lay down his life for the sheep, and suffer in their stead, that they might go free.

℣. 18. And Gad came that day to David, &c.] Ordered and directed by the angel of the Lord, 1 Chron. xxi. 18. and said unto him, go up, rear an altar unto the Lord, in the threshing-floor of Araunah the Jebusite; it was too far to go to Gibeon, where the tabernacle was, at such a time of extremity, when the sword of the angel was stretched out over Jerusalem, 1 Chron. xxi. 29, 30. and this was the most proper place, as it was the very spot over and nearest to which the angel was; and was on mount Moriah, where the Jews say Abraham offered up Isaac; and where the temple was afterwards built, as Kimchi and Ben Gersom observe; and Eupolemus, an heathen writer [g], says, that when David desired to build a temple for God, and that he would shew him the place of the altar, an angel appeared to him, standing over the place where the altar at Jerusalem was to be built.

℣. 19. And David, according to the saying of Gad, went up as the Lord commanded.] From the place where he was in a lower part of the city to mount Moriah, on which was the threshing-floor, a place fit for winnowing corn when threshed.

℣. 20. And Araunah looked, &c.] Peeped up out of the place in which he had hid himself with his four sons, for fear of the angel, and which they saw, 1 Chron. xxi. 20. and saw the king and his servants coming towards him; he perceived by the course they steered, that they were coming to him: and Araunah went out; of the threshing-floor, out of the place where he had hid himself, for he had been threshing wheat, 1 Chron. xxi. 20. nor was it thought below great personages in those times to be employed in such work; so Gideon was threshing, when the angel of the Lord appeared to him, Judg. vi. 11, 12. Boaz winnowed barley in his threshing-floor, Ruth iii. 2. and bowed himself before the king with his face to the ground; in reverence of the king.

℣. 21. And Araunah said, wherefore is my lord the king come to his servant? &c.] Which both implies admiration in him, that so great a person should visit him in his threshing-floor; that a king should come to a subject his servant, who should rather have come to him, and would upon the least intimation; it was a piece of condescension he

[f] Pirke Eliezer, c. 43.

[g] Apud Euseb. Evangel. præpar. l. 9. c. 30. p. 447.

he marvelled at; and it expreſſes a deſire to know his pleaſure when him, ſuppoſing it muſt be ſomething very urgent and important, that the king ſhould come himſelf upon it: and to this Davia made anſwer, and David ſaid; what he was come for: to buy the threſhing-floor of thee, to build an altar to the Lord, that the plague may be ſtayed from the people; for though David had acknowledged his ſin, and God had repented of the evil he inflicted for it, and given orders for ſtopping it; yet he would have an altar built, and ſacrifices offered, to ſhew, that the only way to have peace, and pardon, and ſafety from ruin and deſtruction, deſerved by ſin, is through the expiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, of which all ſacrifices were typical, and were deſigned to lead the faith of the Lord's people to that.

℣. 22. And Araunah ſaid unto David let my lord the king take and offer up what ſeemeth good unto him, &c.] Build an altar, offer ſacrifices of whatſoever he found upon the premiſes fit for the ſame, and make uſe of whatever came to hand proper to perform ſuch ſervice with, as follows: here be oxen for burnt ſacrifice; which were employed in treading the corn, hence the law in Deut. xxv. 4. and threſhing inſtruments; not flails, ſuch as are uſed by us, but wooden ſledges, drays or carts drawn on wheels, which were filled with ſtones, and the bottom of them ſtuck with iron teeth, and were drawn by oxen to and fro over the ſheaves of corn; ſee Iſ. xxviii. 27. and other inſtruments of the oxen for wood; as their yokes; theſe Araunah gave leave to take to burn the ſacrifice with; and in 1 Chron. xxi. 23. 'tis added, and the wheat for the meat-offering, which was upon the threſhing-floor; and there always went a meat-offering with a burnt-offering.

℣. 23. All theſe things did Araunah, as a king, give unto the king, &c.] The note of ſimilitude as is not in the text; from whence ſome have thought he was king of the Jebuſites before Jeruſalem was taken out of their hands, or however was of the royal race, perhaps the ſon and heir of the then king at that time; or he has this title given him, becauſe of his great liberality, having the ſpirit of a prince in him, even of a king; ſo Ulyſſes addreſſed Antinous, ſaying, thou art like a king, and therefore ſhould give more largely than others [h]: and Araunah ſaid unto the king, the Lord thy God accept thee; thine offering with a good will; with pleaſure and delight, as the Targum; that ſo the plague might be removed, and which no doubt made him the more ready to part with the above things, and all that he had; ſo dreadful did the calamity appear to him, and eſpecially after he ſaw the angel with his drawn ſword juſt over him.

℣. 24. And the king ſaid unto Araunah, nay, but I will ſurely buy it of thee at a price, &c.] And a full price to, 1 Chron. xxi. 24. that is, give him as much for it as it was worth: neither will I offer burnt-offerings to the Lord my God, of that which doth coſt me nothing; which ſhews an ingenuous ſpirit, and contrary to the temper of many, who like to ſerve the Lord in the cheapeſt manner, or with little coſt to themſelves: ſo David bought the threſhing-floor and the oxen, for 5 ſhekels of ſilver; which reckoning a ſhekel at two ſhillings and ſix-pence, made but juſt ſix pounds five ſhillings of our money; though its value is but about two ſhillings and four-pence farthing, which reduces the ſum: in 1 Chron. xxi. 25. David is ſaid to give 600 ſhekels of gold by weight; two ways are propoſed by the Jews [i] for the reconciling of the difficulty; the one is, that 50 ſhekels were collected out of every tribe, and 12 times 50 make 600 ſhekels, and theſe were of the value or weight of gold; but this ſeems not likely, that it ſhould be collected out of all the tribes, and ſince it appears plainly to be the king's purchaſe, and with his money: the other is, that there were two purchaſes, the firſt was of the threſhing-floor, oxen and inſtruments, which were bought for 50 ſhekels of ſilver, as here, and the other was a purchaſe of the place, as it is called in the book of Chronicles; that large ſpace of ground on which afterwards the temple, and all the courts adjoining to it, were built, and which was now Araunah's farm, and on which were his dwelling houſe, and other buildings; and for all this David gave him 600 ſhekels of gold, which made 300 ounces [k]; and reckoning gold as twelve times the value of ſilver, according to Brerewood [l], it amounted to 450 pounds of our money; and learned men have not been able to give a better ſolution of this difficulty; and with this Montanus [m] agrees Bochart and Noldius have taken another way, but not ſo clear and ſatisfactory; the Septuagint of 1 Chron. xxi. 25. has 50 ſhekels, as here.

℣. 25. And David built there an altar unto the Lord, &c.] After he had made the purchaſe: and offered burnt offerings and peace-offerings; the one to expiate the ſin or ſins committed, the other to give thanks for the intimation given, that the plague would be ſtayed upon this: ſo the Lord was intreated for the land; was pacified and prevailed upon to remove the peſtilence from it; which was ſignified by fire deſcending upon the altar of burnt-offering, which ſhewed the ſacrifice was accepted, and by the angel being ordered to put his ſword into its ſheath, 1 Chron. xxi. 26, 27. and the Targum is, "and the Lord received the prayer of the inhabitants of the land:" and the plague was ſtayed from Iſrael; no more died of the peſtilence, either at Jeruſalem, or in any other part of the land of Iſrael.

[h] Homer. Odyſſ. 17. ℣ 335. p. 369.
[i] De ponder. & pretiis, c. 5.
[l] T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 116. 2.
[m] Tubal Cain, p. 15.
[k] Vid. Gronov. de pecunia vet. l. 3. c. 7. So Hieron. Trad. Heb. fol. 80. F.

The First Book of the KINGS, commonly called the Third Book of the KINGS.

THIS, and the following book, properly are but one book, divided into two parts, and went with the Jews under the common name of Kings. This, in the Syriac version, is called the book of Kings; and in the Arabic version, the book of Solomon, the son of David the prophet, because it begins with his reign upon the death of his father; and in the Vulgate Latin version, the third book of Kings, the two preceding books of Samuel being sometimes called the first and second books of Kings, they containing the reigns of Saul and David; and in the Septuagint version, both this and the following book are called Kingdoms, because they treat of the kingdom of Israel and Judah, after the division in the times of Rehoboam, son of Solomon, and of the several kings of them; as of Solomon before the division, so afterwards of the kings of Judah; Rehoboam, Abijam, Asa, Jehoshaphat, Jehoram, Ahaziah, Jehoash, Amaziah, Uzziah or Azariah, Jotham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, Manasseh, Amon, Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin and Zedekiah; and of the kings of Israel, Jeroboam, Nadab, Baasha, Elah, Zimri, Omri, Ahab, Ahaziah, Jehu, Jehoahaz, Jehoash, Jeroboam the son of Joash, Zachariah, Shallum, Menahem, Pekahiah, Pekah and Hoshea; so that these books may, with great propriety, be called the books or histories of the kings in the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel: who they were written by, is not easy to say; some think they were written by piece-meal by the prophets that lived in the several reigns successively, as Nathan, Ahijah the Shilonite, Iddo, Isaiah and Jeremiah, and afterwards put together by an inspired writer. The Jews commonly say [a], that Jeremiah wrote the book of the kings, by which they mean this, and the following book; though very probably they were written by Ezra, since the history in them is carried down to the liberty granted to Jehoiachin in Babylon; but that Ezra was the writer of all the preceding historical books, and even of the Pentateuch, cannot be admitted, which is the conceit of Spinosa [b]; part of whose tract is just now republished by some body, word for word, under a title as in the margin [c]; but that Ezra was not the writer of the Pentateuch is clear, since he refers to it as written by Moses, and as the rule of religion and worship in his times, Ezra iii. 2, 3, 4. and vi. 18. and it is certain these writings were in being in the times of Josiah, Amaziah, Joash, yea of David, and even of Joshua, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 14. and xxv. 4. and xxiii. 18. 1 Kings ii. 3. Josh. viii. 34. and as for the book of Joshua, that also was written long before Ezra's time; it must be written long before the times of David, before the Jebusites were expelled from Jerusalem, since the writer of it says, that they dwelt there in his days, ch. xv. 63. the book of Judges must be written before the times of Samuel and David, since the former refers to the annals of it, 1 Sam. xii. 9, 10. and the latter alludes to some passages in it, Ps. lxviii. 7, 8. see Judg. v. 4, 5. and a speech of Joab's, 2 Sam. xi. 21. shews it to be an history then extant: to which may be added, that in it Jerusalem is called Jebus, ch. xix. 10, 11. which it never was, after it was taken by David, out of the hands of the Jebusites, 2 Sam. v. 6. the book of Ruth, very probably was written by Samuel; had it been of a later date, or written by Ezra, the genealogy with which it concludes, would doubtless have been carried farther than to David: the book of Samuel, and particularly the song of Hannah in it, were written in all probability before the penning of the 113th psalm, in which some expressions seem to be taken from it; wherefore, tho' the two books of Kings may by allowed to be written or compiled by Ezra, the 10 preceding ones cannot be assigned to him: however, there is no room to doubt of the divine authority of these two books, when the honour our Lord has done them is observed, by quoting or referring to several histories in them; as to the account of the queen of Sheba coming to hear the wisdom of Solomon; of the famine in the times of Elijah; and of that prophet being sent to the widow of Sarepta, and of the cleansing of Naaman the Syrian in the times of Elisha, Matt. xii. 42. Luke iv. 25—28. from 1 Kings xvii. 1—10. and 2 Kings v. 10—14. to which may be added, the quotations and references made by the apostles to passages in them, as by the apostle Paul in Rom. xi. 2, 3, 4. from 1 Kings xix. 14, 18. where this book book is expreſsly called the Scripture; and by the apoſtle James, ch. v. 17, 18. who manifeſtly refers to 1 Kings xvii. and there are various things in this part of ſcripture, which are confirmed by the teſtimonies of heathen writers, as will be obſerved in the expoſition of it. The uſe of theſe books is to carry on the hiſtory of the Jewiſh nation, to ſhew the ſtate of the church of God in thoſe times, and his providential care of it amidſt all the changes and viciſſitudes in the ſtate; and above all, to tranſmit to us the true genealogy of the Meſſiah, which ſerves to confirm the Evangeliſt Matthew's account of it.

[a] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 15. 1.

[b] Tractat. Theolog. Politic. c. 8, & 9. p. 150, &c.

[c] Tractatus de Primis 12. Vet. Test. lib. &c. Londini 1763.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter gives an account of the infirmities of David in his old age, and the method uſed to relieve him under them, v. 1—4. of the preparation his ſon Adonijah made to uſurp the throne, v. 5—10. of Bathſheba's addreſs to the king upon it, in favour of her ſon Solomon, on which ſhe was put by Nathan the prophet, and ſeconded in it by him, v. 11—27. when the king with an oath confirmed the ſucceſſion of Solomon in the kingdom, and ordered Nathan the prophet, and Zadok the prieſt, to anoint him, which was accordingly done with great ceremony, to the ſatisfaction of the king and his ſervants, v. 28—40. the news of which being brought to Adonijah and his friends, ſtruck them with terror, and on which they diſperſed, v. 41—50. and upon the promiſe of Adonijah, that he would behave well to Solomon, he was pardoned and diſmiſſed, having fled and lain hold on the horns of the altar, v. 51—53.

v. 1. Now king David was old, and ſtricken in years, &c.] Was 70 years of age; for he was 30 years of age when he began to reign, and he reigned 40 years, 2 Sam. v. 4. this was juſt the age of man, Pſ. xc. 10. and they covered him with clothes; not wearing-apparel, but bed-clothes; he ſeems to have been bed-ridden and paralytic: but he got no heat; by them; having no natural heat in him, clothes could not communicate any to him, only keep the cold from him, ſee Hag. i. 6. there are many perſons at the age he was, that are lively, healthful and robuſt, comparatively ſpeaking at leaſt; but David's ſtrength was impaired, and his natural force abated by his many wars, fatigues by night and day in campaigns, and the many ſorrows and afflictions he met with from his family and his friends, as well as enemies; which exhauſted his radical moiſture, weakened his nerves, and drank up his ſpirits, and brought upon him the infirmities of a decrepit old age very ſoon.

v. 2. Wherefore his ſervants ſaid unto him, &c.] His phyſicians; ſo Joſeph's phyſicians are called his ſervants, Gen. l. 2. let there be ſought for my lord the king a young virgin; not only a young woman, but a virgin, that has more natural heat than women that have bore children have, which is abated thereby: and let her ſtand before the king; miniſter to him, ſerve him with whatſoever he ſhould want to eat or drink; and ſo by being in his preſence, and taking things at her hand, ſhe might be the more ingratiated into his affections: and let her cheriſh him; as the huſband the wife, ſo ſhe her huſband, as doubtleſs David was; and that by giving him cordials to cheer his ſpirits, and every thing that was convenient for him, and particularly by lying with him. Kimchi interprets the word of her being profitable to him, in which ſenſe the word is uſed, Job xxii. 2. and xxxv. 3. that is, by warming him; Ben Gerſom underſtands it of her being made miſtreſs of his treaſures, according to the ſenſe of the word in Iſ xxii. 15. that ſhe might have the command of his purſe, and provide any thing proper for him, without being taken notice of or obſtructed; but the Targum is better, "and let her be near him," lie cloſe unto him, and even in his boſom, as in the next clauſe: and let her lie in his boſom; which ſhows, that it was propoſed, that he ſhould marry her, at leaſt that ſhe ſhould become his concubine-wife, ſince this phraſe is deſcriptive of a wife, Mic. vii. 5. nor can it be thought his phyſicians would adviſe, or he agree to have a young woman admitted to his bed without marriage; and if this had not been the caſe, it would not have anſwered the deſign of Adonijah in requeſting her in marriage after his father's death, which was to make way to aſcend the throne when opportunity ſhould offer; nor would his requeſt have been ſo much reſented by Solomon as it was, ch. ii. 17—24. that my lord the king may get heat; and ſomewhat ſimilar to this, Galen, that great phyſician, preſcribed in like caſes [d].

v. 3. So they ſought for a fair damſel throughout all the coaſts of Iſrael, &c.] Not only a damſel, but a beautiful one, that ſhe might be the more acceptable to the king; who otherwiſe, if deformed and ugly, would not have endured her in his ſight, or received at her hands, and much leſs ſuffered her to lie in his boſom: and found Abiſhag a Shunamite; a native of the city Shunem, a city in the tribe of Iſſachar, Joſh. xix. 18. and brought her to the king; for his approbation of her, and to make her his concubine-wife, as he did.

v. 4. And the damſel was very fair, &c.] And ſo very agreeable to the king to be in his preſence, and wait upon him, and take things of her hand, as well as lie with him: and cheriſhed the king; enlivened his ſpirits by her amiable countenance, her graceful behaviour, and tender care of him, and eſpecially by bedding with him: and miniſtred to him; ſerving him with her own hands whatever he took for his ſuſtenance: but the king knew her not; as a man knows his wife; which ſhows that ſhe was his wife, and that it would not have been criminal in him had he known her; but this is obſerved, not to point at the chaſtity of David, but his feebleneſs, and loſs of deſire after women, and that the damſel remained a virgin; and that was the ground of Adonijah's requeſt, and his hope of ſucceeding.

v. 5. Then Adonijah the ſon of Haggith exalted himſelf, &c.] This was his mother's name, 2 Sam. iii. 4. his father David being old and infirm, and not like to live long, nor able to oppoſe him; and he being the eldeſt ſon, and a comely perſon, was inſpired with ambition to ſet up for king: ſaying, I will be king; though he knew that Solomon was appointed of God, and promiſed by David; and and expected by the people to be king, yet he was resolved to set up himself for king, and try if he could not get himself to the throne; on this he was bent and determined: and he prepared him chariots and horsemen, and fifty men to run before him; just as Absalom had done, when he had the same thing in view, to make him respectable among the people, see 2 Sam. xv. 1.

[d] Vid. Poli Synopſin in loc.

ver. 6. And his father had not displeased him at any time, &c.] Always humoured him in every thing, let him have his own way and will, and granted him what he desired, and never corrected him for his faults, or made him ashamed, as the Targum, by telling him of them, and chastising him for them; this was not to the credit of David, being guilty of the same sin with Eli; and on this Adonijah presumed much, that he would not contradict and countermand in this as he had not in other things before: in saying, Why hast thou done so? never so much as asked a reason of his conduct, so far was he from reproving him for it: and he also was a very goodly man; of a comely countenance, tall and well proportioned, as his brother Absalom, and which was another thing on which he built his hopes of succeeding in his enterprize; for in those times, as in after-times, and other nations, a comely aspect and personable appearance recommended a man to the choice of the people for a supreme magistrate, see the note on 1 Sam. ix. 2. and his mother bare him after Absalom; not that the same woman bore him as did Absalom; for Absalom's mother was Maacheh, this man's Haggith; but she bore him after Absalom's mother had bore him, so that he was next son; and now Amnon, Chileab or Daniel, and Absalom being all dead, he was the eldest son living, and upon this he founded his claim to the throne, and his hope of succeeding.

ver. 7. And he conferred with Joab the son of Zeruiah, and with Abiathar the priest, &c.] About getting the kingdom into his hands; and they were very proper persons to consult with, who, if gained to his interest, might be of great service, the one being the general of the army, and so had a great interest in the soldiery, with whom he could make way for him, and defend him, and the other was the high-priest, who might be thought to have a great share in the affections of the people, and whose office it was to anoint the king; and he might the rather apply to them, knowing them to be, on some accounts, discontented persons: and they following Adonijah, helped him; they took on his side; Joab knowing David's hatred of him on account of his murder of Abner and Amasa, and especially for his slaying his son Absalom, and his insolent behaviour towards him, and perhaps he might fear, or had an hint of what he had charged Solomon with concerning him; and Abiathar, who saw plainly that the priesthood in Eli's family was declining, and that Zadok was the favourite priest with David, and in all probability would be with Solomon; all which might influence these two persons to join Adonijah, and who, by so doing, greatly encouraged him, and many others to flock to him, which much helped and served his cause.

ver. 8. But Zadok the priest, &c.] Who bid fair to be the high-priest on Solomon's coming to the throne, as he was: and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; Who was near David's person, and over his body-guards, the Cherethites and Pelethites: and Nathan the prophet; a very great intimate of David's, and his seer, whom he consulted on all occasions: and Shimei; who, according to Aben Ezra, was the son of Gera, who had cursed David, and was afraid of entering into the conspiracy, lest he should be involved in trouble again; though some think this may be that Shimei, one of Solomon's twelve officers, as after constituted, ch. iv. 18. and [illegible] whom the same writer takes to be Hushai the Archite, David's friend: and the mighty men that belonged to David; that were about his person, his guards, the Cherethites and Pelethites: but not with Adonijah; they did not join him, and indeed were not invited by him.

ver. 9. And Adonijah slew sheep and oxen and fat cattle, &c.] To make a feast of for those that were of his party, which was numerous, and some of them persons of the first rank, and therefore a large and elegant entertainment was provided for them: by the stone of Zoheleth, which is by En-rogel; or the fullers fountain, as the Targum, where the fullers washed their clothes, using their feet in doing it, from whence it had its name; and which they laid upon this stone for the water to drain out of them, Zoheleth signifying a slow motion of waters, or on which they beat them to get out the spots; the Targum calls it the stone of a watch-tower, on which they could stand and look to a great distance; or as Jarchi and Ben Gersom suggest, it was a large smooth stone, which young men used to come to, and cast to and fro to try and exercise their strength; it was, as Josephus[c] says, in or near the king's gardens: and called all his brethren the king's sons; which David by his wives and concubines had in Hebron and Jerusalem; who were all younger than he, and so had not the pretension he had, and who might be displeased at the appointment of Solomon as well as he; see 1 Chron. iii. 4. 9. and all the men of Judah the king's servants; excepting those in ver. 8—10.

ver. 10. But Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon his brother he called not.] did not invite them to this feast; not Nathan, who he might know had prophesied of Solomon's succession in the throne, and therefore it could not be thought he would be drawn over to him; nor Benaiah and the mighty men, David's body-guards, over whom this officer was; and still less Solomon, his competitor and rival.

ver. 11. Wherefore Nathan spake unto Bathsheba the mother of Solomon, &c.] Who not only had an interest in the king, being his wife, and an easy access to him, but had a special concern in this affair, as it affected her son, to whom the succession of the kingdom was designed and promised: Hast thou not heard that Adonijah the son of Haggith doth reign? has usurped the throne, and is proclaimed king by a party, who at least have drank his health as such; has taken the title, and is about to exercise the power of a king; this Bathsheba might not have heard of, and which he expresses in this manner to quicken her to make an immediate application to the king: and David our Lord knoweth it not; being so infirm, and in his bed, and no body about him to inform him of it; it was done without his knowledge, and far from being with his consent and approbation.

ver. 12. Now therefore come, let me, I pray thee, give thee counsel, &c.] How to conduct in this affair, which she being a woman, and no doubt surprized and confounded at this relation, might be at a loss what to do: wherefore Nathan, being a wise man, and a faithful friend, offers to give the

5

[c] Antiq. l. 7. c. 14. §. 4.

the beſt advice he could, and deſires her attention to it: that, ſays he, thou mayeſt ſave thine own life, and the life of thy ſon Solomon; which would be the uſurper's firſt care to take away, that he might have no rival, and none to diſturb him in his government; which ſtep has been often taken by uſurpers to ſecure themſelves, ſee Judg. ix. 5.

℣. 13. Go and get thee in unto King David, &c.] That is, go into the chamber where the king lay, at once, without any ceremony: and ſay unto him, Didſt not thou, my lord, O king, ſwear unto thine handmaid, ſaying, Aſſuredly Solomon thy ſon ſhall reign after me, and he ſhall ſit upon my throne; tho' no mention is elſewhere made of ſuch an oath, there undoubtedly was one, of which Nathan had knowledge, either from David or Bathſheba, or from them both, or might be preſent himſelf at the making of it; for not only Bathſheba affirms it, ℣. 17. but David owns it and confirms it, ℣. 30. why then doth Adonijah reign? ſurely it cannot be with the king's knowledge and conſent, ſo manifeſtly contrary to his promiſe and oath.

℣. 14. Behold, while thou yet talkeſt there with the king, &c.] Before, or by the time ſhe could deliver the above words to him, or ſuch as ſhe ſhould think fit to uſe, to awaken the king to a concern for the intereſt of her and her ſon: I will alſo come in after thee; directly into the king's chamber: and confirm thy words; as he could very well do, if he was preſent as a witneſs of the oath he had made to her, as well as he could confirm the truth of Adonijah's uſurpation; nay, could plead the will and promiſes of God he had formerly notified to him: or, fill up thy words [f], make up what might be wanting in her addreſs to him, in her account of things, or in the arguments uſed by her; he means, that he would ſecond her in her motion in favour of Solomon, and preſs the king to take ſome ſteps for the ſecurity of the ſucceſſion to him. Nathan knew it was the will of God that Solomon ſhould ſucceed in the kingdom, he had promiſed it by him, ſee 2 Sam. vii. 12. 1 Chron. xxi. 8, 9. yet as a wiſe and good man, he thought it right to make uſe of all proper means to attain the end.

℣. 15. And Bathſheba went in unto the king into the chamber, &c.] Where he lay, being bed-rid; ſhe took Nathan's advice, and directly went to the king's apartment: and the king was very old; and decrepit, borne down with the infirmities of old age, though but 70 years of age: and Abiſhag the Shunamite miniſtred unto the king; ſhe was then waiting upon the king, and ſerving him with what was neceſſary and proper for him; and perhaps there was no other in the chamber at that time.

℣. 16. And Bathſheba bowed, and did obeiſance to the king, &c.] Not only as being her huſband, but her ſovereign; and this behaviour might intimate, that ſhe had ſomething to ſay to him, and more than to enquire of his health: and the king ſaid, what wouldſt thou? what haſt thou to ſay to me? or to aſk of me? what is thy will and pleaſure, or thine errand to me?

℣. 17. And ſhe ſaid unto him, my lord, thou ſwareſt by the Lord thy God unto thine handmaid, &c.] Which was a very ſolemn oath and binding, and which ſhe puts David in mind of, knowing that ſo conſcientious a man as he was, would religiouſly obſerve it: ſaying, aſſuredly Solomon thy ſon ſhall reign after me, and he ſhall ſit upon my throne; be his ſucceſſor in it, and eſtabliſhed on it.

℣. 18. And now behold Adonijah reigneth, &c.] Has ſet up himſelf as king, and is by ſome ſaluted as ſuch; but leſt ſhe ſhould be thought by David that ſhe ſuggeſted by this, that he was guilty of the breach of his oath, or on any account to be blamed, ſhe adds: and now, my lord, O king, thou knoweſt it not; which as it acquitted him from all blame, ſo it made the ſin of Adonijah the more hainous, that he ſhould do this without conſulting his father about it; and was not only a neglect of him as a father, and an act of diſreſpect and diſobedience to him as ſuch, but even of high-treaſon, to aſſume the throne in his father's life-time, without his conſent.

℣. 19. And he hath ſlain oxen, and fat cattle, and ſheep in abundance, &c.] Has made a grand entertainment, and is feaſting and rejoicing; which was another inſtance of irreverence and diſreſpect to his aged father, labouring under the infirmities of old age, and on his dying bed, and he carouſing, and ſhewing all the tokens of pleaſure in the view of his death, and wiſhing for it: and hath called all the ſons of the king; invited them to his entertainment, in order to gain them to his intereſt: and Abiathar the prieſt, and Joab the captain of the hoſt; two perſons, though of eminent rank, ſhe knew David had no reſpect for, and therefore it would not be pleaſing to him to hear that they were invited, had this affair been more acceptable than it was; for Bathſheba, conſidering the ſhortneſs of the time ſhe had to think, and the flurry ſhe muſt be in, very artfully threw together the moſt material things that might work upon the mind of David in her favour: but Solomon thy ſervant hath he not called; which made it a plain caſe, that it was not a feaſt of a peace-offering, nor a common friendly entertainment, but a feaſt made on account of his acceſſion to the throne; and that he looked upon Solomon as his rival, and bore an ill will to him on that account, and had a deſign upon him.

℣. 20. And thou, my lord, O king, &c.] As for thee, or what concerns thee, or is incumbent on thee, will appear from the expectations of the people: the eyes of all Iſrael are upon thee, that thou ſhouldſt tell them who ſhall ſit on the throne of my lord the king after him; this ſhe ſaid, to diſſipate any fears that might poſſeſs his mind on hearing what Adonijah had done, that the people in general had aſſented to it, and encouraged him to it; whereas the body of the people were waiting to hear what was the will and determination of David; for they not only conſidered him as having a power to name a ſucceſſor, as was afterwards done by Reboboam, but as one that had the mind of God revealed to him, who ſhould be his ſucceſſor, to which they ſhould pay a regard.

℣. 21. Otherwiſe it ſhall come to paſs, when my lord the king ſhall ſleep with his fathers, &c.] That is, ſhall die, and be buried in the ſepulchre of his anceſtors, where he ſhall lie till he awakes in the morning of the reſurrection: that I and my ſon Solomon ſhall be counted offenders; or ſinners [g]; not as if ſhe would be reckoned an adultereſs, and her ſon as illegitimate, as ſome think, and ſo be branded and treated as ſuch; but as being traitors, making pretenſions to the throne, ſhe on the behalf of her ſon, and he for himſelf, when he had no right right to it, being the younger ſon, and not declared ſucceſſor by his father.

[f] מלאתי complebo, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; explebo, Ar.

[g] חטאים peccatores, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

℣. 22. And lo, while ſhe yet talked with the king, &c.] Juſt as ſhe was concluding her ſpeech to him: Nathan the prophet alſo came in; as he promiſed he would; perhaps was at the chamber-door all the while Bathſheba was ſpeaking, and when he perceived ſhe was juſt finiſhing, he entered in without ceremony, as he had uſed to do, being the king's ſeer and counſellor, and a prophet, who had admittance to the king at any time.

℣. 23. And they told the king, &c.] Some that attended at the door, or were in the chamber: behold Nathan the prophet; or he is in the room, which the king through his infirmities might not be ſenſible of: and when he was come in before the king; nearer to him, and as to be properly in his preſence: he bowed himſelf before the king with his face to the ground; ſhewing him the ſame reverence though in bed, as if on his throne.

℣. 24. And Nathan ſaid, my lord, O king, &c.] He addreſſes him as with great veneration and reſpect due to his office, ſo as if he knew nothing of Bathſheba's application to him; and therefore begins and tells his ſtory, as if the king had never heard any thing relative to it: haſt thou ſaid, Adonijah ſhall reign after me, and he ſhall ſit upon my throne? ſurely it can never be, becauſe of the notice which he himſelf had given him from the Lord, that one to be born ſhould ſucceed him, plainly pointing to Solomon; and alſo becauſe of the oath which he had ſworn, to which Nathan was privy, that Solomon ſhould reign after him; and yet if he had not given ſuch orders, it was exceeding ſtrange, that Adonijah ſhould preſume to do what he had done.

℣. 25. For he is gone down this day, &c.] From Jeruſalem, which lay high, to the ſtone of Zoheleth, in En-rogel, which lay in the valley, ℣. 9. and hath ſlain oxen, and fat cattle, and ſheep in abundance; not by way of ſacrifice, but for a feaſt, on account of his coming to the kingdom: and hath called all the king's ſons; invited them to the entertainment: and the captains of the hoſt; or army; not only Joab, it ſeems, the general of it, but the captains of thouſands and hundreds under him, being deſirous of engaging the militia in his favour, and which was not an impolitic ſtep: and Abiathar the prieſt; to conſult with by Urim and Thummim, and to anoint him, and uſe his intereſt with the populace for him, who might be ſuppoſed a man of influence, being the high-prieſt of the nation: and behold, they eat and drink before him; they were now at it at this time; they were not only invited, but they accepted the invitation, and came; which is more than what was before related: and ſay, God ſave king Adonijah; they proclaimed and ſaluted him as king, and drank his health, and wiſhed him all proſperity; and ſo the Targum, "may king Adonijah proſper!"

℣. 26. But me, even me thy ſervant, &c.] Meaning himſelf, Nathan the prophet, who was David's ſervant, his ſeer, and counſellor: and Zadok the prieſt; for whom David had a great reſpect: and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada; who was captain of his body-guards; here Nathan obſerves more than Bathſheba had, and ſupplies what ſhe had omitted, and ſo filled up her words, as in ℣. 14. and thy ſervant Solomon hath he not called; which ſhewed his ill intention.

℣. 27. Is this thing done by my lord the king, &c.] With his knowledge and conſent, and by his orders: and thou haſt not ſhewed it unto thy ſervant; meaning himſelf, who had brought him a meſſage from the Lord, ſignifying that Solomon ſhould ſucceed him; and therefore if that had been countermanded, it ſeemed ſtrange that he ſhould not have acquainted him with it: or to thy ſervants, as the Arabic verſion; for the word has a plural termination, though pointed as ſingular; and ſo it may mean not only himſelf, but the reſt of David's faithful ſervants that were about him at court, as Kimchi obſerves: who ſhould ſit on the throne of my lord the king after him? if he had altered his mind, or had had any direction from the Lord to make any change, he wondered at it that he ſhould neither acquaint him, nor any of his truſty friends with it.

℣. 28. Then king David anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Obſerving that Nathan confirmed the account that Bathſheba had given, and that it muſt be a matter of fact that Adonijah had uſurped the throne, gave orders to thoſe about him, ſaying, call me Bathſheba; who either went out of the room when Nathan entered it, or however removed to ſome diſtant part of it, out of the ſight of David: and ſhe came into the king's preſence, and ſtood before the king; came to the ſide, or foot of his bed, hearkening to what he had to ſay to her.

℣. 29. And the king ſwore, &c.] To his former oath, he added another for greater confirmation: as the Lord liveth; which was the proper form of an oath, which ought to be taken by the living God; and as what would lay him under the greater obligation to obſerve it, he adds, that hath redeemed my ſoul out of all diſtreſs; ſaved his life when in the moſt imminent danger; delivered him out of the hand of Goliath, and from the Philiſtines and other enemies, in his wars with them; and from Saul and his perſecuting rage and fury, and from the rebellion of his ſon Abſalom, and the inſurrection of Shimei.

℣. 30. Even as I ſware unto thee by the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] And ſo owns and confirms the truth of what Nathan had ſuggeſted to Bathſheba, and ſhe had aſſerted, ℣. 13, 17. ſaying, aſſuredly Solomon thy ſon ſhall reign after me, and he ſhall ſit upon my throne in my ſtead; this was the ſubſtance of the oath: even ſo will I certainly do this day; perform this oath, and ſet Solomon on the throne.

℣. 31. Then Bathſheba bowed with her face to the earth, and did reverence to the king, &c.] Thereby expreſſing her veneration of him, and thankfulneſs to him for his favour to her and her ſon, in fulfilling his promiſe and oath: and ſaid, let my lord king David live for ever; which though a common form of ſalutation of kings, not only in Iſrael, but in other nations, is not to be conſidered as a mere compliment, but as expreſſing the real deſires and affection of her heart to the king; ſignifying hereby that her ſolicitations on the behalf of her ſon did not ariſe from any deſire of the king's death; ſhe heartily wiſhed him health to live long and eaſy; and all her requeſt was, that Solomon her ſon might ſucceed him, whenever it pleaſed God to remove him; or ſeeing he was now a dying man as it were, her prayer was that his ſoul might live for ever in happineſs in the world to come; ſo Kimchi interprets it.

℣. 32. And king David ſaid, call me Zadok the prieſt, &c.] Not Abiathar the high-prieſt, for he had joined Adonijah; and beſides Zadok was David's favourite-prieſt, and for him the high-prieſthood was deſigned, as it was in a little time tranſlated to him: and Nathan the prophet; who very probably went out of the room when Bathſheba was was called in: and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada; the captain of his guards: and they came before the king; who it is very likely ſat up in his bed, and they ſtood around him.

℣. 33. And the king ſaid unto them, take ye the ſervants of your Lord, &c.] Meaning his own ſervants, his life-guards, the Cherethites and Pelethites, as appears from ℣. 38. the Jews [a] from hence gather, that a king is ſuperior to an high-prieſt, ſince David calls himſelf the lord of Zadok the prieſt, and Nathan the prophet: and cauſe Solomon to ride upon mine own mule; for it ſeems on ſuch a creature David uſed to ride, as did his ſons; horſes not being ſo common in Judea as they were afterwards. Some of the Jews [b] ſay it was not lawful to ride upon a mule, and that this caſe of David is to be excepted; for they pretend that this was a peculiar mule; and if the inſtance of his ſon is urged, they reply, an argument from what kings and their ſons uſed to do is of no force. Now this was one way of teſtifying that it was his will that Solomon ſhould reign in his ſtead; for no private perſon might ride upon the beaſt the king was wont to ride on; this is now one of the Jewiſh canons [c], "no one may ride on the king's horſe, nor ſit on his throne, nor uſe his ſcepter:" and bring him down to Gihon; a fountain near Jeruſalem, on the weſt-ſide of it, which flowed from mount Gihon, 2 Chron. xxxii. 30. and xxxiii. 14. the ſame with Siloah according to the Targum, of which mention is made, John ix. 7. The reaſon for this order is not eaſily given; whether it was to denote the peaceableneſs and gentleneſs of Solomon's government, the waters of Shiloah moving ſoftly, Iſa. viii. 6. or the ſpread, conſtancy, firmneſs, and perpetuity of it, as the Jews ſay [d], ſince the water of a fountain is ever running; or becauſe there might be a concourſe of people there, and ſo he would be anointed and proclaimed king in a public manner, and be attended to the city with great pomp and ſolemnity.

℣. 34. And let Zadok the prieſt, and Nathan the prophet, anoint him there king over Iſrael, &c.] For it might be done by either of them, as the unctions of Saul and David ſhew: and blow ye the trumpet, and ſay, God ſave king Solomon; the blowing of the trumpet was to make it public; the proclamation of him as king was to be made by the ſound of it, and the acclamation of the people was to expreſs their concurrence with it, their loyal affection to the new king, and their hearty wiſhes for his health, proſperity, and long life.

℣. 35. Then ye ſhall come up after him, &c.] When anointed, proclaimed, and huzza'd, then he was to mount the mule, and ride before them as their king, at the head of them; they following after, in token of their ſubjection to him: that he may come and ſit upon my throne; at Jeruſalem, in the king's palace, and there exerciſe his kingly power he would now be inveſted with: for he ſhall be king in my ſtead; even during David's life, as well as after his deceaſe: and I have appointed him to be ruler over Iſrael, and over Judah; that is, over all the twelve tribes of Iſrael; Judah may be particularly mentioned, though included in Iſrael, becauſe Adonijah had invited the men of Judah to his feaſt and party ℣. 9. and therefore had they not been named, might think he had no power over them.

℣. 36. And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada anſwered the king, &c.] In the name of the reſt: and ſaid, Amen; they all aſſented to it, and expreſſed their ſatisfaction in it: the Lord God of my lord the king ſay ſo too; let it appear by the proſperity and ſucceſs that ſhall by divine providence attend the new king, that this is according to the will of God.

℣. 37. As the Lord hath been with the lord my king, even ſo be he with Solomon;] To guide and direct him, protect and defend him, ſucceed and proſper him; the Targum is, "as the Word of the Lord has been for the help of my lord the king, ſo let him be for the help of Solomon:" and make his throne greater than the throne of my lord king David; which he knew would not diſpleaſe David, who not only had an affectionate regard for Solomon his ſon, but wiſhed heartily the proſperity of the kingdom of Iſrael; and the wiſh on all accounts was grateful to him, though to an envious and ambitious prince it might have been diſagreeable.

℣. 38. So Zadok the prieſt, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, &c.] The three men that David ſent for on this occaſion: and the Cherethites and the Pelethites; not the ſanhedrim, as Ben Gerſom, but David's guards, over whom Benaiah was: theſe went down from Jeruſalem, and cauſed Solomon to ride upon king David's mule; as he had ordered: and brought him to Gihon; or Siloah, as the Targum; hence the Jews ſay [e], they don't anoint a king, but at a fountain; but this is the only inſtance of it.

℣. 39. And Zadok the prieſt took an horn of oil out of the tabernacle, &c.] Not out of the tabernacle of Moſes, for that was at Gibeon; ſee 1 Chron. xxi. 28. and if the oil had been there, it would have been too far to have fetched it, ſince haſte was now required; but this was taken out of the tabernacle David had built for the ark, 2 Sam. vi. 17. where the ark was, and before which the pot of oil was; ſo Jarchi; but Kimchi indeed ſays, that though it was at this time at Gibeon, Zadok went thither, or ſent thither to fetch it; and tho' it is ſaid, the pot of oil was ſet before the ark, this was when the ark was in the tabernacle; but when they took it out from thence at the war with the Philiſtines, that and the pot of manna were left in the tabernacle, and they took nothing but the ark; but if they brought the pot afterwards, and put it before the ark in Jeruſalem, then it may be underſtood of the tabernacle David pitched for it; but that he diſapproves of. Here Zadok is only ſaid to take the oil, and anoint with it; which he did either as the deputy of the high-prieſt, or he was made uſe of becauſe the high-prieſt was on the ſide of Adonijah: and anointed Solomon; whether it was by pouring it on his head, as Saul was anointed, 1 Sam. x. 1. or, as the Jews ſay [f], by putting it round about his head in the form of a crown, and then between his eye-brows, is not very material; and they alſo ſay [g], that it is not uſual to anoint the ſon of a king that has been anointed; and that the reaſon of the anointing of Solomon was, becauſe of the ſedition of his brother Adonijah, and to confirm the kingdom to him; this anointing was an emblem of the gifts, graces, and virtues, neceſſary to qualify a king for the diſcharge of his office: and they blew the trumpet; and proclaimed him king: and all the people ſaid, God ſave king Solomon; wiſhed him long life and happineſs, and gave him a general huzza.

℣. 40. And all the people came up after him, &c. Following him from the fountain to the city, with their loud acclamations: and the people piped with pipes; which were hollow inſtruments, and full of holes holes, which they blew with their mouths, and played upon with their fingers; Jarchi says they were flutes, and very probably: and rejoiced with great joy; which they expressed by such loud shouts: so that the earth rent with the sound thereof; an hyperbolical expression, shewing the great numbers gathered together on this occasion, and the sonorous acclamations they made.

[a] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 6. fol. 186. 3. [b] Vid. Bartenoram in Miſn. Celaim, c. 8. §. 1. [c] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 2. §. 5. [d] T. Bab. Horayot, fol. 12. 1. [e] T. Bab. Ceritot, fol. 5. 2. [f] Ibid. [g] Ibid.

℣. 41. And Adonijah and all the guests that were with him, &c.] Or that were called[h]; that is, invited to the entertainment he had made: heard it, as they had made an end of eating; the shouting of the people, which reached their ears just as they had finished their meal, and before they had risen from the table, where they had been a long while; for when Nathan went in to David, they were then eating and drinking, ℣. 25. and when he had finished his speech to David, Bathsheba was called in, and the kingdom promised to her son with an oath, three persons of the first rank were sent for, and had their orders and instructions, for the immediate execution, of which they made preparation, and had Solomon down to Gihon, and there anointed him king, and brought him up to Jerusalem again; all which were done before Adonijah and his guests rose from table: and when Joab heard the sound of the trumpet, he said, wherefore is this noise of the city, being in an uproar? the city is in a tumult by the noise that is made, what should be the meaning of it? he speaks as one surprized, and in great concern, being general of the army, whose care should be to preserve the peace of the city, and prevent mutiny and disorder.

℣. 42. And while he yet spake, behold Jonathan the son of Abiathar the priest came, &c.] Whom his father had left in the city, to observe what passed there, and give him notice of it: and Adonijah said unto him, come in, for thou art a valiant man, and bringest good tidings; which seems to be not a very wise speech, as if there was a connexion between being valiant, and bringing good news, or that the one had any influence upon the other; though perhaps it means no more than a good man, a man of virtue[i], as it may be rendered; one that fears sin, as the Targum, and so would report nothing but what was true, and therefore might be depended on; see 2 Sam. xviii. 27. the same phrase is rendered a worthy man, ℣. 52.

℣. 43. And Jonathan answered and said to Adonijah, verily, &c.] Or, nay, but[k] it is not so as thou imaginest; it is not good tidings, but bad tidings to thee I bring: our lord king David hath made Solomon king; of which he gives the following account in proof of it.

℣. 44. And the king hath sent with him, &c.] To the fountain of Gihon: Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites; over whom the latter was captain: and they have caused him to ride upon the king's mule; by his order and direction.

℣. 45. And Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, have anointed him king in Gihon, &c.] Or at Gihon; that is, Siloah, according to the Targum; here the act of anointing is ascribed to them both, as in ℣. 34. Zadok very probably applied the oil to him, and Nathan might be some way or other assisting in it; however he was here present, not only as approving of it, but declaring it as a prophet, that it was according to the will of God, as well as of the king: and they are come up from thence rejoicing; with a multitude of people along with them: so that the city rang again; with the blowing of trumpets, the sound of pipings, and the shouts of the people: this is the noise which ye have heard; which had so alarmed them.

℣. 46. And also Solomon sitteth on the throne of the kingdom;] Where he was placed to exercise his regal power when returned to Jerusalem, as a farther token and confirmation of his being really and actually king.

℣. 47. And moreover the king's servants came to bless our lord the king, &c.] To give him thanks for the wise and good provision he had made before his death for the welfare of the kingdom, by making Solomon his son king in his stead, and to congratulate him upon it; which shewed that they highly approved of it, and were ready to swear allegiance to Solomon, and therefore Adonijah had nothing to hope for from them: saying, God make the name of Solomon better than thy name; that is, may he be more famous, and his name be more celebrated in the world than his was, or be more respectable and valued among his people Israel: and make his throne greater than thy throne; see ℣. 37. and the king bowed himself upon the bed; signifying not only his approbation of what was done, but also of their prayers and wishes; as well as he bowed himself to give thanks to God that he had lived to see this work done, as follows.

℣. 48. And also thus said the king, &c.] Being in a proper posture for an address to God: blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which hath given one to sit on my throne this day, mine eyes seeing it; he ascribes this whole affair to God, and his kind providence, though all things were done according to his own orders; and gives thanks to him, who had directed him to take such steps as these were, and that the business was finished without any obstruction, and to the great joy and satisfaction of the people; and that there was such a prospect of Solomon's having a happy and peaceable reign.

℣. 49. And all the guests that were with Adonijah were afraid, &c.] Though many of them were military men, the general of the army, and the captains thereof, ℣. 19, 25. yet they were struck with a panic, their courage failed them, they had no spirit left in them, their hearts became as weak as water; had they exerted themselves according to their character, betaken themselves to arms and put themselves at the head of their troops in favour of Adonijah, it would have given Solomon and his friends a great deal of trouble; no doubt this panic was of God: and rose up, and went every man his way; or to his house, as the Arabic version; on hearing what Jonathan reported, they immediately rose up from table in great haste, and made the best of their way to their houses, that it might not be known that they had been with Adonijah.

℣. 50. And Adonijah feared because of Solomon, &c.] Lest he should seize him as an usurper and traitor, and put him to death: and arose, and went, and caught hold on the horns of the altar; either that which was at Gibeon, where the tabernacle now was; see ch. iii. 4. so Jarchi; or rather that which was nearest, the altar that David had built in the threshing floor of Araunah, 2 Sam. xxiv. 25. the altar was a sort of Asylum, or refuge, for such who had committed any crime worthy of death; not by divine vine appointment, but by cuſtom, it being ſuppoſed that none would preſume to defile with blood that which was ſacred to the Lord; or ſhed the blood of men where the blood of beaſts was poured; or uſe ſeverity and ſtrict juſtice, but mercy, where ſacrifices were offered to atone for ſin, and mercy was ſhewn on account of them; theſe were notions, and this a cuſtom, which obtained very early, and even among the Jews; ſee Exod. xxi. 14. as well as among Gentiles; with whom it was uſual, as to flee to the ſtatues of their emperors, and to the temples of their deities, ſo likewiſe to their altars; this was cuſtomary among the Moloſſians, Samothracians, Crotoniatæ, and Meſſenians; and particularly the altar of Jupiter Servator was an aſylum, or place of refuge, to the Ithacians [l]. Cornelius Nepos [m] has given us an inſtance of one that fled to a temple of Neptune, and ſat upon the altar for his ſecurity, as here Adonijah laid hold on the horns of this, that none might force him from it.

[h] קראים invitati, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c.
[k] אבל nequaquam, V. L. at, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.
[i] איש חיל vir virtutis, Montanus, Vatablus.

℣. 51. And it was told Solomon, &c.] By ſome of his courtiers: ſaying, behold Adonijah feareth king Solomon; leſt he ſhould take away his life: for lo he hath caught hold on the horns of the altar; which was the dernier reſort of the guilty when they deſpaired of mercy otherwiſe: ſaying, let king Solomon ſwear unto me this day, that he will not ſlay his ſervant with the ſword; he owns Solomon to be king, and himſelf his ſubject and ſervant; this no doubt he did to conciliate his favour, nor did he think his life ſafe, unleſs Solomon promiſed with an oath that he would not take it away.

℣. 52. And Solomon ſaid, if he will ſhew himſelf a worthy man, &c.] Will behave himſelf well as a good ſubject, and be careful not to offend for the future, or appear to be one that fears ſin, as the Targum; particularly the crimes of ſedition, rebellion, and treaſon: there ſhall not an hair of him fall to the earth; not the leaſt hurt ſhould be done him: but if wickedneſs ſhall be found in him, he ſhall die; that is, if any crime worthy of death be committed by him, or any overt act of treaſon, and the like, he ſhould ſurely be put to death, and find no mercy, notwithſtanding the preſent general pardon. This was very wiſely done by Solomon, to begin his reign without ſhedding blood even of delinquents; and eſpecially of his brother, and his elder brother too; and by granting his life for the future on his good behaviour.

℣. 53. So king Solomon ſent, and they brought down Adonijah from the altar, &c.] It being built upon an hill, as both that at Gibeon, and in Araunah's threſhing floor were: and he came and bowed himſelf to king Solomon; in a way of reverence and ſubjection, acknowledging him to be king, and himſelf his ſubject: and Solomon ſaid to him, go to thine houſe; in peace; ſignifying that he pardoned him, and he might go home, and enjoy his family and ſubſtance; and withal intimating that he ſhould only regard the affairs of his family, and not trouble himſelf with thoſe of the kingdom and ſtate. Abarbinel fancies, that becauſe Solomon ſaid that if he ſhewed himſelf to be a worthy man, or a man of fortitude and valour, that Adonijah thought that his meaning was, that he ſhould go before him as a man of war, and miniſter to him; which made him ſo ready to come and ſtand before him; in which he was miſtaken, Solomon meant no ſuch thing; nor would he take him into his court and ſervice, but ſent him home to his own houſe.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter gives an account of the charge David gave to his ſon Solomon, a little before his death, to walk in the ways of the Lord, ℣. 1—4. and of ſome inſtructions delivered to him concerning ſome particular perſons he ſhould either ſhew favour to, or execute juſtice on, ℣. 5—9. and the next account in it is concerning his death and burial, and the years of his reign, ℣. 10, 11. after which it relates an addreſs of Bathſheba to Solomon in favour of Adonijah, which was refuſed, and the iſſue of it was his death, ℣. 12—25. and the depoſition of Abiathar from the prieſthood, ℣. 26, 27. and the putting of Joab to death for his treaſon and murders, ℣. 28—34. in whoſe poſt Benaiah was put, as Zadok was in the place of Abiathar, ℣. 35. and laſtly the confinement of Shimei in Jeruſalem, who had curſed David, ℣. 36—38. who upon tranſgreſſing the orders given him was put to death, ℣. 39—46.

℣. 1. Now the days of David drew nigh that he ſhould die, &c.] The number of his days fixed and determined by the Lord, Job xiv. 5. and which might be perceived as drawing nigh, both by himſelf and others, through the growing infirmities of old age, decays of nature, and various ſymptoms of an approaching diſſolution which were upon him; ſee Gen. xlvii. 29. Abarbinel obſerves, that he is called only David, not king David; becauſe Solomon his ſon was now anointed king, and reigned in his ſtead; ſo in ℣. 10, 11. but there is another reaſon given by ſome Jews [n], that no man, even a king, has power in the day of death; he is no king then, he has no rule over that, but that rules over him: and he charged Solomon his ſon; gave him his laſt and dying charge: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. I go the way of all the earth, &c.] A path which is the path of death [o], which all paſs in, kings and peaſants, high and low, rich and poor, great and ſmall, good and bad; none are exempted, all muſt die, and do; it is the appointment of God, a decree which can never be reverſed; all experience confirms it: this ſame phraſe is uſed by Joſhua, from whom David ſeems to have borrowed it, and ſhews that that book was written in his days, Joſh. xxiii. 14. be thou ſtrong therefore; not diſcouraged at my death, being a common thing, and to be expected; nor at being left alone, the Lord can give thee wiſdom and counſel, aſſiſtance and ſtrength, protection, and defence; take heart therefore, and be of good courage: and ſhew thyſelf a man; in wiſdom and underſtanding, and in fortitude of mind, though ſo young a man; which were

[l] Alexander ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 3. c. 20. [m] Vit. Pauſan. l. 4. c. 4. [n] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 96. fol. 83. 3.

[o] ——— Omnes una manet nox,
Et calcanda ſemel via lethi. Horat. Carmin. l. 1. ode 28. v. 15, 16.

were neceſſary for the government of ſo great a people, and to guard him againſt the ſecret intrigues of ſome, and the open flatteries of others, and the fear of attempts againſt his perſon and government, and the temptations he might be liable to, to do wrong things; and eſpecially they were neceſſary to enable him to keep the commands of God, as follows; which required great ſtrength of mind and of grace, conſidering the corruptions of nature, the temptations of Satan, and the ſnares of men; ſee Joſh. i. 7.

℣. 3. And keep the charge of the Lord thy God, &c.] Which may in general reſpect his whole walk and converſation, and his obedience to the law and will of God; and in particular his juſt government of Iſrael committed to his charge: to walk in his ways; directed to in his word: to keep his ſtatutes and his judgments; his laws, ceremonial, moral, and judicial: and his teſtimonies; as the above laws, which teſtify of his mind, and declare what he would have done and obſerved: as it is written in the law of Moſes; which a king of Iſrael was obliged to write a copy of, keep by him, and read it, and rule according to it: that thou mayeſt proſper in all that thou doeſt, and whitherſoever thou turneſt thyſelf; to reign in righteouſneſs, and according to the law of God, is the only way to have a proſperous and happy reign: or that thou mayeſt act wiſely [p]; the law of God furniſhing out the beſt rules of government and maxims of policy; ſee Deut. iv. 6, 7.

℣. 4. That the Lord may continue his word which he ſpake concerning me, &c.] His word of promiſe concerning the kingdom of David, and the ſucceſſion of it, and confirm and eſtabliſh it: ſaying, if thy children take heed to their way; they are directed to walk in, even the way of the Lord, and not turn to the right hand or the left: to walk before me in truth; in the ſincerity and integrity of their hearts, according to the word of truth, and under the influence of the ſpirit of truth: with all their heart, and with all their ſoul; in the moſt cordial manner, with the ſtrongeſt affection and zeal; with all eagerneſs and earneſtneſs; with their whole hearts engaged in every duty performed by them: there ſhall not fail thee (ſaid he) a man on the throne of Iſrael; one to ſucceed him in the throne; this with reſpect to his throne, literally conſidered, was conditional; but, ſpiritually conſidered, was abſolute, and had its fulfilment in the Meſſiah, whoſe throne is for ever; ſee Luke i. 32, 33.

℣. 5. Moreover thou knoweſt alſo what Joab the ſon of Zeruiah did unto me, &c.] In ſlaying Abſalom, contrary to his orders, and in behaving inſolently towards him on account of his mourning for him, and at other times; but as theſe things might not be perſonally known to Solomon, only by hearſay; this may reſpect his diſloyalty towards him, in joining with Adonijah, who ſet himſelf up for king in his life-time, and without his knowledge and conſent; or it may reſpect the inſtances next mentioned, in which he did injury to the intereſt, honour, and character of David: and (or even) what he did to the two captains of the hoſt of Iſrael, unto Abner the ſon of Ner, and unto Amaſa the ſon of Jether; to Abner who was under Iſhboſheth, and Amaſa under David, who had not only the promiſe of the poſt, but was actually in it when Joab ſlew him; and indeed out of envy to him for it: and ſhed the blood of war in peace; when they were at peace with him, as if they had been in open war; and even under a pretence of friendſhip to them, aſking of their peace and welfare, as if he meant nothing leſs than to behave peaceably towards them; hence the Targum is, "whom he ſlew in craftineſs:" and put the blood of war upon the girdle that was about his loins, and in his ſhoes that were in his feet; which particularly reſpects the affair of Amaſa, whoſe blood he ſhed with his ſword, that dropped out of its ſcabbard, girded upon his loins, and into which he put it again, all over bloody, and wore it girded upon his loins; and which he alſo ſtooped for when it fell, as if he was going to unlooſe or buckle his ſhoes, and into which the blood ran down when he ſtabbed him; and after this barbarous action marched on without any ſhame or remorſe, with his bloody ſword on his loins, and the blood of the murdered in his ſhoes.

℣. 6. Do therefore according to thy wiſdom, &c.] Which though young began to appear in him, even in the life of his father; he therefore exhorts him to uſe the wiſdom he had, and take the firſt and fitteſt opportunity to cut him off for his former murders and late treaſon, as a dangerous man to his government and the peace of it: and let not his hoary head go down to the grave in peace; that is, let him not die a natural, but a violent death; and let not his grey hairs be any argument for ſparing him, or any reaſon for delaying the taking of him off, becauſe he would in courſe die quickly; for he muſt be now an old man, as old as David, or perhaps older; ſince he had been his general 40 years, even all the time of his reign; ſee 2 Sam. ii. 13.

℣. 7. But ſhew kindneſs to the ſons of Barzillai the Gileadite, &c.] Who perhaps was now dead, and therefore he would have kindneſs ſhewn to his poſterity for his ſake: and let them be of thoſe that eat of thy table; as Mephiboſheth had at his, who alſo perhaps was dead, ſince no notice is taken of him; and as David would have had Barzillai, but he deſired to be excuſed on account of his age: for ſo they came to me, when I fled becauſe of thy brother Abſalom; that is, they came to him, not only Barzillai, but his ſons it ſeems; and fed him or furniſhed him with proviſions, when he was obliged to fly to the other ſide Jordan, becauſe of the rebellion of his ſon Abſalom.

℣. 8. And behold thou haſt with thee Shimei the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite of Bahurim, &c.] Of whom, and of his native place, ſee the note on 2 Sam. xvi. 5. he was now at Jeruſalem, and ſo with Solomon, or near at hand; and was on his ſide, and of his party; ſee ch. i. 8. but not to be truſted, or looked upon as a real friend: which curſed me with a grievous curſe, when I went to Mahanaim; a place on the other ſide Jordan, of which place, and the curſes this man curſed David with, ſee 2 Sam. xvi. 7, 8. and xvii. 24. but he came down to me at Jordan; after the defeat of Abſalom, and when David was returning, and humbled himſelf to him, and begged his pardon: and I ſware unto him by the Lord, ſaying, I will not put thee to death with the ſword; but this oath was not binding upon his ſucceſſor, and eſpecially ſhould he commit a new crime.

℣. 9. Now therefore hold him not guiltleſs, &c.] Don't look upon him as an innocent perſon; and if he commits an offence againſt thee, as he has againſt me, don't acquit him as I have done: for thou art a wiſe man; ſo it ſeems he was before the appearance appearance of the Lord to him at Gibeon, even before his father's death, he had given ſome proofs of it to David himſelf: and knoweſt what thou oughteſt to do unto him; to watch and obſerve him, and if found offending, to puniſh him according to the rules of juſtice, and the laws of the land: but his hoary head bring thou down to the grave with blood; ſpare him not on account of his age, but put him to death whenſoever he ſhall be found guilty, let him not die a natural death.

[p] לכען תשכיל ut prudenter agas, Montanus, Tigurine verſion; ut intelligas univerſa, V. L.

℣. 10. So David ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died as his anceſtors before him did; for, buried with them he was not; and therefore can't be underſtood of his lying with them in the grave, but in the ſtate of the dead; he died according as the Jews ſay [q] on the day of Pentecoſt, and according to biſhop Uſher [r] A. M. 2990, and before Chriſt 1014. and was buried in the city of David; not at Bethlehem, in the ſepulchre of Jeſſe, who was a private man; but being a king, in his own city, the hold of Zion he took from the Jebuſite, and which afterwards was called by his name, 2 Sam. v. 7. and his ſepulchre remained unto the times of the apoſtles, upwards of 1000 years, Acts ii. 29. ſee the note there.

℣. 11. And the days that David reigned over Iſrael were 40 years, &c.] So ſays Eupolemus [s], an heathen writer, which are thus reckoned: 7 years reigned he in Hebron; the 6 months over are omitted, 2 Sam. v. 5. this part of his reign was over Judah only: and 33 years reigned he in Jeruſalem; over the twelve tribes, in all 40, which round number is only given; though in fact he reigned 6 months more.

℣. 12. Then ſat Solomon on the throne of David his father, &c.] So he did in his life-time, with his conſent, and by his order, and now by the agreement of the whole people: and his kingdom was eſtabliſhed greatly; all ſubmitting to it, and none oppoſing it.

℣. 13. And Adonijah the ſon of Haggith came to Bathſheba, the mother of Solomon, &c.] Into her apartment; Abarbinel thinks it was a few days after the death of David: and ſhe ſaid, comeſt thou peaceably; in a friendly manner, with no ill deſign, only to pay a friendly viſit; for ſhe might fear he came to avenge himſelf on her, and deſtroy her, becauſe ſhe had been the inſtrument of diſappointing him of the kingdom, and of getting her ſon Solomon ſet upon the throne, and eſtabliſhed in it; and therefore could not tell what envy, rage, and diſappointment, might prompt him to: and he ſaid, peaceably; he meant no harm unto her.

℣. 14. He ſaid, moreover, I have ſomething to ſay unto thee, &c.] Signifying that he came upon buſineſs: and ſhe ſaid, ſay on; intimating her readineſs to hear what it was.

℣. 15. And he ſaid, thou knoweſt that the kingdom was mine, &c.] Belonged to him by virtue of his birth-right; he was heir to it, being the eldeſt ſon: and all Iſrael ſet their faces on me, that I ſhould reign; which was not true; for as Bathſheba ſays, the body of the people were in ſuſpence, their eyes being on David, waiting to hear whom he would declare his ſucceſſor; and when Solomon was declared and anointed, vaſt numbers attended him; unleſs Adonijah thought that the high-prieſt, and general of the army, with the captains, repreſented the whole people; however this he obſerves by way of preface, to ſhew how unhappy he was being diſappointed, and to move the compaſſion of Bathſheba, that ſhe might be the more eaſily prevailed upon to ſeek to obtain ſo ſmall a favour as he was about to aſk: howbeit the kingdom is turned about, and is become my brother's; things had taken another turn, and what was his, and he thought himſelf ſure of the other day, was now become his brother's; ſuch were the uncertainty and viciſſitude of human affairs: for it was his from the Lord; by the appointment of the Lord, by a promiſe of his, and a prophecy concerning it; which if he knew of, it was both vain and ſinful in him to act contrary thereunto; or it was brought about by the over-ruling providence of God, which he now plainly ſaw and ſubmitted to; this he ſaid to ſhew that he had laid aſide all hopes of the kingdom, and was fully ſatisfied of the diſpoſition of it in providence, and ſo to hide his real deſign in the petition he was about to make.

℣. 16. And now I aſk one petition of thee, &c.] And but one, and a ſmall one too, as Bathſheba herſelf after calls it: deny me not, or turn not away my face [t]; with ſhame and ſorrow, which would be the caſe ſhould he be denied: and ſhe ſaid unto him, ſay on; let me hear it.

℣. 17. And he ſaid, ſpeak I pray thee unto Solomon the king, &c.] He owns him to be king, and which he the rather did to engage her to take his ſuit in hand, and to cover his deſign: for he will not ſay thee nay; or turn away thy face, or deny thy requeſt; ſhe being his mother, for whom he had a great affection, and to whom he was under obligation on all accounts: that he give me Abiſhag the Shunamite to wife; which was contrary to the law of God, Lev. xviii. 8. which ſurely Adonijah muſt have been ignorant of, and Bathſheba likewiſe; or the one would never have made ſuch a requeſt, nor the other have undertaken to try to obtain it; but perhaps they did not take her to be David's wife, or the marriage to be conſummated, becauſe he knew her not: but yet not being returned to her father's houſe, and being at the diſpoſe of Solomon, prove that ſhe muſt be a concubine-wife, and which became the property of the next heir and ſucceſſor; ſee 2 Sam. xii. 8. nor did Adonijah apply to her or her friends; which if he was really in love with her, he would have done, if at her own or their diſpoſal; but this he knew, that ſhe was ſolely at the diſpoſal of Solomon, to whom he did not care to apply himſelf, but makes uſe of his mother.

℣. 18. And Bathſheba ſaid, well, &c.] Very well ſpoken, the thing is good and right: I will ſpeak for thee unto the king; and uſe her intereſt with him, not ſeeing into his deſign, but pitying an unfortunate man.

℣. 19. Bathſheba therefore went unto king Solomon, to ſpeak unto him for Adonijah, &c.] She went from her own houſe to the palace; for ſhe might not live at court; or however had an apartment to herſelf, from whence ſhe went to the king with her ſuit in favour of Adonijah: and the king roſe up to meet her, and bowed himſelf unto her; upon her entrance into the preſence-chamber, in honour to her as a parent, he roſe up from his throne, and made his obeiſance to her, as a dutiful ſon: and ſat down and cauſed a ſeat to be ſet for the king's mother; a magnificent ſeat or throne, as the word is, was ordered to be ſet for her: and ſhe ſat on his right hand; where he placed her in honour to her as his mother.

[q] T. Hieroſ. Chagigah, fol. 78. 1. [r] Annals, &c. p. 56. [s] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 30. [t] תשיבי את פני ne avertere facias faciem meam, Pagninus.

mother; so Nero[a] placed Tiridates king of Armenia at his right-hand, to do him honour.

℣. 20. Then she said, I desire one small petition of thee, &c.] It was but one, and a little one, and therefore she hoped it would be granted: I pray thee, say me not nay; don't refuse it, or deny it me, or turn away my face with shame and disappointment: and the king said, ask on, my mother, for I will not say thee nay; since it is a small one, as thou sayest, and provided it is fit and lawful to be granted.

℣. 21. And she said, let Abishag the Shunamite be given to Adonijah thy brother to wife.] For so Adonijah was by his father's side; and Bathsheba makes use of the relation, the more to move upon him to grant the request.

℣. 22. And king Solomon answered and said unto his mother, &c.] With as much gentleness and mildness as he could, but inwardly fired at her request, and amazed at it, and could not forbear using some degree of tartness and resentment: and why dost thou ask Abishag the Shunamite for Adonijah? is this a small petition? is this a fit and lawful one? ask for him the kingdom also; for this is what he means by it, that by marrying the king's widow, he may step into the throne whenever any opportunity offers, as any uneasiness, or insurrection in the kingdom, or the death of Solomon; for none but a king, the Jews say[b], might marry a king's widow, not any private man; and therefore for Adonijah to ask this, was interpreted affecting the kingdom, and aspiring to it, and taking his measures to obtain it; yea, it is said[c], that none but another king, the successor, might make use of his servants, hand-maids and ministers; and it is observed, that Abishag was free to Solomon, but not to Adonijah: for he is mine elder brother; and has that to plead in his favour, and if he could obtain this, it would strengthen his title, or at least be a plausible pretence, which he might make use of when opportunity served, to gain the people to his interest: even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah; she might as well ask for them as for him; whose interest it was, and therefore desirous it might be that he should be king, that so the one might be continued in the office of high-priest, and the other as general of the army; who, Solomon knew, bore him no good-will, but were secretly his enemies; and he suspected that this was a scheme of theirs, and that it was by their advice Adonijah made this request; so the Targum, "are not he, and Abiathar the priest, and Joab the son of Zeruiah in the counsel?" in this counsel; 'tis what they had consulted among themselves as a preparation to bring about a design they are contriving; probably Solomon had private notice that they were plotting against him, and this confirmed him in the truth of it; and therefore all of them were upon this punished with deprivation of office, or loss of life.

℣. 23. Then king Solomon sware by the Lord, &c.] To prevent his mother pressing him to have her petition granted: saying, God do so to me and more also; lay such and such evils upon me, and more than I care to express: if Adonijah have not spoken this word against his own life; to his own prejudice, and even to the loss of his life; in which Solomon suggests it would issue, being a fresh overt act of treason; he knew from what Bathsheba said, that this was his petition, and that he had spoken of this to her, and put her upon making it for him; and who no doubt related to Solomon the whole of the conversation that passed between them, and to which he seems to have some respect in his answer.

℣. 24. Now therefore, as the Lord liveth, &c.] Which is another oath; and one may easily perceive hereby in what a temper and disposition Solomon was, how warm, earnest and vehement, how resolute against the petition, and how determined he was to punish Adonijah and his confederates: which hath established me, and set me upon the throne of David my father, and who hath made me an house, as he promised; who had placed him on his father's throne, and established him there, in spite of all his enemies, and had given him a firm and stable kingdom, which was not to be shaken and subverted by the power and policy of conspirators, according to the promise of God by Nathan, 2 Sam. vii. 11—13. Adonijah shall be put to death this day; both for his former conspiracy, he only having had a reprieve, and which was to continue on his good behaviour, and for his fresh attempt in forming treasonable schemes to ascend the throne if possible; wherefore, being a dangerous man, and no longer to be trusted, Solomon was determined to dispatch him at once, and being established in his kingdom, he had nothing to fear from those in the conspiracy with him.

℣. 25. And king Solomon sent by the hand of Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, &c.] Orders to execute him, and proper persons to do it; perhaps some of the Cherethites and Pelethites under him, to assist at least in it: and he fell upon him, that he died; Benaiah rushed in upon him with his men, and thrust his sword into him, and killed him; executions used to be done in those times and countries by great personages, as the instances of Gideon, Doeg, and others, shew, and not by common executioners.

℣. 26. And unto Abiathar the priest said the king, &c.] Who was either at court, or he sent for him, and thus addressed him: get thee to Anathoth; a city of the tribe of Benjamin, given to the priests, Josh. xxi. 18. of which place Abiathar might be originally, and whither he is bid to return: unto thine own fields; which belonged to him there, either by inheritance or purchase; and these he was to mind, and not perform the functions of his office, however as high-priest, and at Jerusalem, and the tabernacle there, and still less appear at court, or meddle with state-affairs, only to attend to his private domestic concerns: for thou art worthy of death; in joining with Adonijah in the lifetime of David, and setting him up as king without his knowledge, and in opposition to Solomon, contrary to the will of God, and promise of David, of which he, being high-priest, can't be thought to be ignorant, and for his late confederacy with Adonijah, of which Solomon had knowledge: but I will not at this time put thee to death; he does not give him a full pardon, only a respite; suggesting, that should he be guilty of any overt act, he would be put to death another time, though not now: because thou barest the ark of the Lord God before David my father; when he fled from Absalom, 2 Sam. xv. 24. and because thou hast been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted; shared with him in all his afflictions under the persecutions of Saul, from the time he slew the priests at Nob, and at the

[a] Suetonius in vit. Neron. c. 13.

[b] Misn. Sanhedrin, c. 2. §. 2.

[c] Maimon. Hilcot Sanhedrin, c. 2. §. 1.

the rebellion of Abſalom; in each of which he accompanied him, and ſuffered and ſympathized with him.

ẏ. 27. So Solomon thruſt out Abiathar from being prieſt unto the Lord, &c.] He depoſed him from his office of high-prieſt, otherwiſe I ſuppoſe he might officiate as a common prieſt, at leaſt in ſome of the branches of it; this was done by his own authority as a king, and not as a prophet, as Bellarmine vainly diſtinguiſhes; and not by the authority of the college of the prieſts, at the inſtance of Solomon, as Fortunatus Schacchus ſays [d], for which there is no foundation: that he might fulfil the word of the Lord; which he might do intentionally, having knowledge of it, or however eventually: which he ſpake concerning the houſe of Eli in Shiloh; of which houſe Abiathar was, and which, according to that prophecy, was to be demoliſhed, and the prieſthood tranſlated from it, which was in the line of Ithamar, to another houſe in the line of Eleazar; the word of the Lord, referred to, is in 1 Sam. ii. 31—36. and iii. 12—14.

ẏ. 28. Then tidings came to Joab, &c.] Of the death of Adonijah, and the depoſition of Abiathar: for Joab had turned after Adonijah; publickly appeared at his feaſt, when he was ſaluted king by him, and others, and privately gave him advice in the affair of Abiſhag: though he turned not after Abſalom; did not join with him in his rebellion, but faithfully adhered to David; and yet both in his life-time, and after his death, acted the traitorous part in favour of Adonijah: Ben Gerſom gives theſe words a different ſenſe, as if he was blameworthy in both caſes; that he turned after Adonijah to make him king, without conſulting David, and having his conſent; and he did not turn after Abſalom, to deliver him from death, as David commanded him; but the former ſenſe is beſt: and Joab fled unto the tabernacle of the Lord; which was at Gibeon, ſee 2 Chron. i. 3. it was four miles from Jeruſalem to the north, ſituated on an hill [e]; according to Joſephus [f], it was 40 furlongs, or five miles from it; though Kimchi thinks it was the altar in Jeruſalem he fled to, which was before the ark, in the tent David made for it; but that is never called the tabernacle of the Lord, only that of Moſes: Joab's fleeing hither ſhowed guilt, and that he was in the conſpiracy of Adonijah, and was conſcious he deſerved to die, and now expected it, ſince Adonijah was put to death; whilſt he remained reprieved or pardoned, he thought himſelf ſafe, but now in danger, and therefore fled for it: and caught hold of the horns of the altar; ſee the note on ch. i. 50.

ẏ. 29. And it was told king Solomon, that Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the Lord, &c.] This account was brought him very probably by ſome of his courtiers: and behold, he is by the altar; to which he betook himſelf for refuge, laying hold on the horns of it: then Solomon ſent Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, ſaying, go fall upon him; ſlay him; Joſephus [g] ſays, the orders were to cut off his head; but perhaps it might be only to lay hold on him, and take him thence, and bring him to Solomon to have judgment paſſed upon him; for the Targum is, "exerciſe your power over him," take him into cuſtody; and certain it is, that the firſt orders were not to ſlay him, at leaſt upon the ſpot where he was.

ẏ. 30. And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the Lord, &c.] At Gibeon: and ſaid unto him; that is, to Joab: thus ſaith the king, come forth; meaning, out of the tabernacle; which plainly ſhows that his orders were not to ſlay him in it: and he ſaid, nay, but I will die here; ſince he muſt die, he choſe to die there; but what was his reaſon for it, is not ſo clear; the Jews, ſome of them, ſay, to ſave his goods, and that they might come to his heirs, which would have been forfeited to the crown, if he had been tried and condemned in a court of judicature; others, that he might be buried with his anceſtors, whereas, had he been ſentenced to death by the court, he would have been buried in the common place of malefactors; but rather he thought, or at leaſt hoped, he ſhould not die at all; either that by gaining time, Solomon might be prevailed upon to pardon him; or however that he would not defile that ſacred place with his blood; or if he ſhould die, he choſe to die there, as being a ſacred place, and ſo might hope to receive ſome benefit from it, as to his future ſtate, where ſacrifices were offered to atone for ſin: and Benaiah brought the king word again, ſaying, thus ſaid Joab, and thus he anſwered me; told me he would not come out, and if he muſt die, he would die there.

ẏ. 31. And the king ſaid unto him, do as he hath ſaid, and fall upon him, and bury him, &c.] Let him die where he is, ſlay him upon the ſpot, and then bury him; not by the altar, but in his own ſepulchre, as after related, that is, give orders to bury him there; for Benaiah being a prieſt, could not be concerned in the burial of him, and beſides it was below the dignity of his office: that thou mayeſt take away the innocent blood which Joab ſhed, from me, and from the houſe of my father; which had been too long connived at, and had called for vengeance; and now here was a proper opportunity upon freſh ſins committed to avenge it, and ſo remove the guilt, which lay upon him and his father's houſe, for not inflicting deſerved puniſhment on him for it.

ẏ. 32. And the Lord ſhall return his blood upon his own head, &c.) By way of retaliation, blood for blood: who fell upon two men more righteous and better than he; after named; for though they had been in open rebellion againſt David, yet had ſubmitted, and were reconciled and received into favour; and even their open crimes were not ſo bad, Solomon judged, as his ſecret treacherous murders of innocent perſons in cool blood; they were men of more honour and integrity than he was, not ſo cruel and barbarous, though guilty in other reſpects: and ſlew them with the ſword, my father not knowing thereof; this is obſerved to remove all ſuſpicion, and which doubtleſs had been entertained by ſome, that David had an hand in their death; and that Joab did what he did with his knowledge and conſent, and by his advice and order; they having been both concerned in rebellion againſt him, the one under Iſhboſheth, and the other under Abſalom: to wit, Abner the ſon of Ner, captain of the hoſt of Iſrael, and Amaſa the ſon of Jether, captain of the hoſt of Judah; the reaſon, the two hoſts, of which they were captains or generals, being thus diſtinguiſhed, is, becauſe the tribes of Iſrael were on the ſide of Iſhboſheth, whoſe general Abner was, in oppoſition to Judah, who made

[d] Elæochriſm. Myrothec. l. 3. c. 501 col. 1069. c. 11. §. 7.
[e] Bunting's Travels, &c. p. 98.
[f] Antiq. l. 7. c. 11. §. 7.
[g] Ibid. l. 8. c. 1. §. 4.

made David their king; and, on the other hand, they were the men of Judah that were first and chiefly in the rebellion of Absalom, whose general Amasa was; of the murder of these two men by Joab, see 2 Sam. iii. 27. and xx. 10.

℣. 33. Their blood shall therefore return upon the head of Joab, and upon the head of his seed for ever, &c.] Not only upon Joab, but upon his posterity as long as there would be any; signifying, that Joab's death would not be a sufficient satisfaction, but the punishment of his murders would be continued to his offspring; see 2 Sam. iii. 29. but upon David, and upon his seed, and upon his house, and upon his throne, shall there be peace for ever from the Lord; such traitors and murderers being removed, peace and happiness might be expected and believed would attend the family and kingdom of David; whether this be considered as a prayer, or a prophecy, it can and will have its full accomplishment only in the kingdom of the Messiah the son of David, of the increase of whose government, and the peace thereof, there shall be no end, Is. ix. 7. Ps. lxxii. 7.

℣. 34. So Benaiah the son of Jehoiada went up, &c.] To Gibeon, which was a great high place, ch. iii. 4. and fell upon him, and slew him; at the altar, or dragging him from it at some distance, drew his sword and slew him: and he was buried in his own house in the wilderness; not in his dwelling-house strictly taken, but in a garden or field adjoining to it, which house was in the wilderness; not a waste place uninhabited; for, as Kimchi observes, this word sometimes signifies a place inhabited, though not tilled, but left for pasture of cattle; and in such a place might Joab's house be, at least his country-house, where he might have a farm, and fields, and cattle, as it is plain he had, 2 Sam. xiv. 30.

℣. 35. And the king put Benaiah the son of Jehoiada in his room, over the host, &c.] Advanced him from being captain of his life-guards to be general of the army: and Zadok the priest did he put in the room of Abiathar; from a common priest he promoted him to the high-priesthood; whereby that office was restored to its ancient line, the family of Eleazar, having been in the line of Ithamar for many years; and the prediction of the destruction of Eli's house, made 80 years ago, began to be fulfilled, 1 Sam. ii. 31—36.

℣. 36. And the king sent and called for Shimei, &c.] Who had cursed his father; he lived at Bahurim, in the tribe of Benjamin, and from thence he sent for him to him, 2 Sam. xvi. 5. and said unto him, build thee an house in Jerusalem and dwell there, and go not from thence any where; the orders were to remove from Bahurim to Jerusalem, where he was to provide himself a dwelling-house, and there continue, and never go out of the city, at least not farther on any side of it than it was to the brook Kidron, which was not more than half a mile from the city. This Solomon ordered, to prevent this man going about in the country sowing and stirring up sedition; and that he might be under his eye and notice, that should he commit any evil, and give him an opportunity of punishing him, he might do it as his father had directed him; and he might judge from the temper of the man, and indeed from the nature of men in general, that what they are forbidden, they are the most prone unto, that he would transgress in this case, and give him an occasion against him.

℣. 37. For it shall be on the day thou goest out, &c.] Out of the city of Jerusalem: and passest over the brook Kidron; which is particularly mentioned, because this lay in his way to Bahurim, his native place; he must cross that to go to it, see 2 Sam. xv. 23. and xvi. 5. and where it might reasonably be supposed he would some time or another be inclined to go, either through business, or a desire to see it again: thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die; it may be depended on, as what will be most certainly the case; no reprieve nor pardon will be granted; thy blood shall be on thine own head; fair warning being given, he could blame none but himself, should he be guilty and suffer.

℣. 38. And Shimei said unto the king, the saying is good, &c.] It was an act of goodness in the king, and what was good, grateful and acceptable to him; for being sent for by him, and knowing how he had used his father, and hearing of several traitors being put to death, he expected this would have been his case; and wherefore, instead of being put to death, was only obliged to quit his habitation in the country, and come and live at Jerusalem, a pleasant and delightful city, and the metropolis of the nation, it was very agreeable to him: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do; and he not only promised, but swore to it, which Solomon obliged him to, ℣. 42. and Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem many days; he accordingly built or purchased a house in Jerusalem, and removed from Bahurim to it, where he lived for the space of three years, as follows.

℣. 39. And it came to pass at the end of three years, &c.] He had dwelt at Jerusalem: that two of the servants of Shimei ran away to Achish the son of Maachah king of Gath; he being a churlish, ill-natured man, always cursing or beating them, or imposing too hard service upon them, or not allowing them the necessaries of life; wherefore they broke away from him, and fled to Gath, and put themselves under the protection of the king of that place, who was now at peace with Israel, and a tributary to them: if this Achish was the same that was David's friend, who sheltered him when persecuted by Saul, he must be an old man; for that was between 40 or 50 years ago; and as he seems to be, since he is called the son of Maoch, 1 Sam. xxvii. 2. which may be thought to be the same with Maachah here.

℣. 40. And Shimei arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath to Achish to seek his servants, &c.] And demand them; through the passion he was in with his servants, and his hurry to get them home, and the covetous disposition which prevailed on him, he might forget, or be tempted to neglect the prohibition he was under not to go out of Jerusalem; or he might think Solomon had forgot it; or that he could come and go secretly without his knowledge; or if he should know of it, he might hope he would never punish him with death for so small a fault; however, so it was ordered by the providence of God leaving him to his own lust, and the temptations of satan, that he might suffer just punishment for cursing David: and Shimei went and brought his servants from Gath; for the king being at peace with Israel, and a tributary to them also, did not chuse to detain them, but delivered them up, lest it should be resented, and bring him into trouble.

℣. 41. And it was told Solomon, &c.] By the spies he set to watch and observe his motions, or by some others who had seen him go out and return, and knew that it was contrary to the king's orders: that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and and was come again; which was 34 miles from Jerusalem [h]; whereas his utmost bounds, whither he might go, was the brook Kidron, about half a mile from it.

℣. 42. And the king sent and called for Shimei, &c.] He sent messengers to him, and by them ordered him to come to him, who accordingly came: and he said unto him, did not I make thee swear by the Lord; which though not before mentioned, was no doubt done, nor did Shimei deny it: and protested unto thee; that is, declared before witnesses: saying, know for certain, that on the day thou goest out; namely, out of the city of Jerusalem: and walkest abroad any whither; further at most than the brook Kidron, or any other place equally distant from Jerusalem, on any side of it; for when he went to Gath, he did not go over Kidron, but went the road the reverse. Kidron lay to the east, and Gath to the west of Jerusalem: now the protestation made to him was, that if he went out of Jerusalem any way, that thou shalt surely die; it would be sure and certain death to him: and thou saidst unto me, the word that I have heard is good; not only he promised to obey it, and that with an oath, but declared it was agreeable and acceptable to him, and therefore the offence was a very aggravated one.

℣. 43. Why then hast thou not kept the oath of the Lord, &c.] Which was made by him, and in his presence, and in which he was appealed to, and so by not keeping it was guilty of perjury: and the commandment that I have charged thee with? and so guilty of disobedience to him as his sovereign; for which two reasons he ought to die.

℣. 44. The king said moreover to Shimei, &c.] Not as another reason for his putting him to death, but to remind him of his former sins, and to observe to him the providence of God in suffering him to fall into others, that justice might take place upon him for them also: thou knowest all the wickedness which thine heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father; which conscience must bear witness to, and accuse him of, not only of the words and actions themselves uttered and done by him, but of the malice and wickedness from whence they sprung: therefore the Lord shall return thy wickedness upon thine own head; the punishment of it; which though not directly inflicted for that, yet in providence was brought about as a just retaliation for it.

℣. 45. And king Solomon shall be blessed, &c.] With a long and peaceable reign, and large dominions, notwithstanding all the attempts to make him unhappy: and the throne of David shall be established before the Lord for ever; the kingdom of David over Judah for a long time, in his natural line; and the kingdom of Israel, spiritual Israel, for ever in his son the Messiah; and that in the presence of the Lord, he observing, ordering and succeeding all things to that purpose.

℣. 46. So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, which went out, &c.] From the presence of the king, and took Shimei with him to the proper place of execution, it not being fitting to execute him before the king: and fell upon him that he died; put him to death by the sword: and the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon; Adonijah the usurper, and Joab the general of the army, who took on his side, being both put to death; and Abiathar the high priest deposed, who was in the same conspiracy; and Shimei, a dangerous and troublesome man dispatched, there remained none to give any disturbance; so that he now sat easy and quiet on his throne, and things with respect to the civil government were on a firm and settled foundation.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter relates the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter, ℣. 1. his piety and devotion, ℣. 2, 3, 4. his prayer for wisdom and understanding, which was acceptable to God, who promised to grant his request, with an addition to it, ℣. 5—15. an instance and proof of the wisdom given him in determining a case between two harlots brought before him, which greatly raised his reputation, and gave him reverence among his people, ℣. 16—28.

℣. 1. And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, &c.] Pharaoh was a common name of the kings of Egypt, of whom no mention is made in scripture from the times of Moses until this time; which may seem strange, when it is considered that that kingdom was a potent one, and near the land of Canaan; but it was governed by a race of kings in this period of time, of whom, as Diodorus Siculus [i] says, there is nothing worthy of relation. The name of this Pharaoh, according to Eupolemus [k], an heathen writer, was Vaphres; for he says, that David contracted a friendship with this king, and he relates some letters which passed between him and Solomon, concerning sending him workmen for the building of the temple, which are still preserved; but Calvisius [l] thinks it was Sesostris; what this affinity was, is next observed: and took Pharaoh's daughter; that is, married her; who, according to Ben Gersom, was proselyted first to the Jewish religion; which is very probable, or otherwise it can hardly be thought Solomon would marry her; and as the 45th Psalm, and the book of Canticles, supposed to be written on that occasion, seem to confirm; to which may be added, that it does not appear she ever enticed or drew him into idolatry; for of all the idols his wives drew him into the worship of, no mention is made of any Egyptian deities. The Jews say [m], Rome was built the same day Solomon married Pharaoh's daughter, but without foundation: this was not Solomon's first wife; he was married to Naamah the Ammonitess before he was king, for he had Rehoboam by her a year before that; for Solomon reigned only 40 years, and Rehoboam, who succeeded him, was 41 years of age when he began to reign, ch. xi. 41. and xiv. 21. and brought her into the city of David; the fort of Zion: until he had made an end of building his own house; which was 13 years in building, and now seems to have been begun, ch. vii. 1. and the house of the Lord; the temple, which also, according to the Jewish chronology [n], was begun building before his marriage of Pharaoh's daughter, and was seven years in building; and therefore this mar-marriage muſt be in the 4th year of his reign; for then he began to build the temple, ch. vi. 37, 38. and ſo it muſt be, ſince Shimei lived three years in Jeruſalem before he was put to death, after which this marriage was, ch. ii. 37. and the wall of Jeruſalem round about; all which he built by raiſing a levy on the people, ch. ix. 15. and when theſe buildings were finiſhed, he built a houſe for his wife, but in the mean while ſhe dwelt in the city of David.

[h] Bunting's Travels, &c. p. 124. [i] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 42. [k] Apud Euseb. Præparat. Evangel. l. 9. c. 30, 31, 32. [l] Chronolog. p. 191, 192. [m] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 56. 2. & Sanhedrin, fol. 21. 2. [n] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 15. p. 41.

℣. 2. Only the people ſacrificed in high places, &c.] On the tops of their houſes, on hills and mountains, and particularly at the high place in Gibeon, where the tabernacle was: becauſe there was no houſe built unto the name of the Lord until thoſe days; to which they were obliged to repair as afterwards, and there offer their ſacrifices, as the Lord had commanded, Deut. xii. 5, 6.

℣. 3. And Solomon loved the Lord, &c.] The worſhip of the Lord, as the Targum: and which he ſhewed by walking in the ſtatutes of David his father; in which his father walked, which were the ſtatutes of the Lord, or which he exhorted him to walk in, and were the ſame, ch. ii. 3. only he ſacrificed and burnt incenſe in high places; beſides that at Gibeon, which it ſeems David did not.

℣. 4. And the king went to Gibeon to ſacrifice there, &c.] About 4 or 5 miles from Jeruſalem; ſee the note on ch. ii. 28. for that was the great high place; not that the place itſelf might be higher than others that were uſed; but here were the tabernacle of Moſes, and the altar; ſo that it was a more dignified place, and more ſacred becauſe of them: 1000 burnt-offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar; the brazen altar of burnt-offerings there; not at one time, but on ſeveral days ſucceſſively; though Jarchi ſays on one day; and which was a prodigious number, never was known the like, unleſs at the dedication of the temple, ch. viii. 63, 64.

℣. 5. In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night, &c.] This was not a common natural dream, but an extraordinary, divine, and ſupernatural one, a prophetic dream, a night-viſion, ſuch as God uſed to ſpeak in to his prophets; in which he had the full uſe of his reaſoning powers, was under divine impreſſions, and in a ſpiritual frame of mind, and in the exerciſe of grace; it was not a mere dream that the Lord did appear to him, but he really did appear to him whilſt ſleeping and dreaming, by ſome diſplay of his glory in ſome way or another: and God ſaid, Aſk what I ſhall give thee; he did not hereby dream that God ſaid to him, but he really did ſay this; bid him aſk what he would and it ſhould be given him; he knew what he deſigned to give, but he would have it aſked of him, as he will be enquired of by all his people to do that for them which he has intended and provided for them; and it is encouragement enough for them to aſk, ſince he has promiſed to give.

℣. 6. And Solomon ſaid, &c.] In his dream; not that he dreamt he ſaid, when he did not; but he really ſaid, as follows: Thou haſt ſhewed unto thy ſervant David my father great mercy; beſtowed many favours and bleſſings upon him, both temporal and ſpiritual: according as he walked before thee in truth and in righteouſneſs, and in uprightneſs of heart with thee; in the truth of doctrine and worſhip, according to the revealed will and word of God, and which he obſerved with great ſtrictneſs, living ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, tho' not without failings and imperfections, yet with great integrity and ſincerity; and this holy walk of his was not the cauſe of God's ſhewing mercy to him, nor was it in proportion to that, but what he was influenced to by the mercy that was ſhewn him: and thou haſt kept for him this great kindneſs, that thou haſt given him a ſon to ſit on his throne, as it is this day; a ſon to be his ſucceſſor, meaning himſelf; which was an additional favour to all the reſt, and was in reſerve, and now beſtowed, as time had made to appear.

℣. 7. And now, O Lord my God, thou haſt made thy ſervant king inſtead of David my father, &c.] Removed by death, in whoſe ſtead he reigned by the appointment of God, and through his overruling providence, notwithſtanding the attempts made to prevent it, and therefore to God he aſcribes it: and I am but a little child; not in age and ſtature, but in knowledge and underſtanding; for though his father called him a wiſe man, and he was judged ſo by others, and really was one, yet in his own opinion and thoughts of himſelf, ſuch was his modeſty and humility, that he was but a child as to his intellectual powers and capacity for government: ſome underſtand this of age; and the Jews commonly ſay he was but twelve years of age when he was anointed king, which they reckon thus; that he was born at the time that Amnon raviſhed Tamar, two years after which was Abſalom's ſheep-ſhearing, when he ſlew Amnon, on which he fled to Geſhur, and was there three years; here are five years; he returned thence and was at Jeruſalem two years; lo, ſeven years; he rebelled and was ſlain, and after that there was a famine of three years, which make ten; and in the year following David numbered the people, which was nine or ten months in doing; the next year he died, which was the fortieth of his reign, in all twelve years; ſo reckon Jarchi and Kimchi; and Eupolemus, an heathen writer [n], is expreſs for it, who ſays, that David, when he had reigned forty years, delivered up the kingdom to Solomon his ſon, being then twelve years of age, which he muſt receive from the tradition of the Jews; the ſame is ſaid by ſeveral of the antient fathers, as Ignatius [o] and Jerom [p]; but this cannot be fact; for if ſo, his ſon Rehoboam muſt be born to him when he was but eleven years of age; ſee the note on ℣. 5. it is beſt therefore to interpret this of the ſenſe he had of the weakneſs of his underſtanding, and of his incapacity for government, as the next clauſe explains it: I know not how to go out, or come in; in the adminiſtration of government, to execute his office as a king, in alluſion to ſhepherds, as kings are ſometimes called, going in and out before their ſheep.

℣. 8. And thy ſervant is in the midſt of thy people which thou haſt choſen, &c.] To be his ſpecial and peculiar people above all people on the earth; this is not be underſtood locally, though Jeruſalem, where his palace was, was in the middle of the land; but of the exerciſe of his office, he being placed over the people, and among them, and having the care and inſpection of them: a great people, that cannot be numbered and counted for multitude; being for number as the ſtars in the ſky, and as the ſand upon the ſea-ſhore, as had been promiſed.

℣. 9.

[n] Apud Euſeb. ut ſupra. fol. 24, 25. tom. 3.

[o] Epiſt. ad Magneſios, p. 141. ed. Voſſ.

[p] Epiſt. Rufino & Vitali.

℣. 9. Give therefore thy ſervant an underſtanding heart, to judge thy people, &c.] Not an underſtanding of things ſpiritual, nor of things natural, though both were given him, but of things political, what related to the civil government, that he might be able to judge or rule the people of Iſrael in the beſt manner: that I may diſcern between good and bad; not merely between moral good and evil, of which he had a diſcernment; but between right and wrong in any caſe or controverſy that came before him between man and man, that ſo he might be able to paſs a right ſentence, and do juſtice to every one: for who is able to judge this thy ſo great a people; who are ſo very numerous, and have ſo many cauſes to be heard and tried, and thoſe many of them very intricate and difficult; ſo that no man is equal to ſuch arduous work, unleſs he has more than an ordinary capacity given him by the Lord.

℣. 10. And the ſpeech pleaſed the Lord, that Solomon had aſked this thing.] Underſtanding in the affairs of civil government; ſince he had reſpect not to his own private benefit and advantage, but the good of the people he governed, and the honour and glory of God, who had ſet him over them, they being his choſen people, and whoſe vicegerent he was.

℣. 11. And God ſaid unto him, &c.] Being yet in a dream: becauſe thou haſt aſked this thing; wiſdom for government: and haſt not aſked for thyſelf long life; which is naturally deſired by men, and always reckoned a great temporal bleſſing, and eſpecially to be wiſhed for by a king living in great pomp and ſplendour: neither haſt aſked riches for thyſelf; to ſupport his grandeur; for though David his father had left him much, yet not for himſelf, but for the building of the temple: nor haſt aſked the life of thine enemies; victory over them, and to have it in his power to take away their lives when he pleaſed; which kings, and eſpecially tyrants, are deſirous of, ſuch as are ambitious, haughty, and revengeful: but haſt aſked for thyſelf underſtanding to diſcern judgment; where the right of a cauſe lay, that ſo he might make a right judgment of it, and paſs a righteous ſentence, a ſentence not to the injury of any.

℣. 12. Behold, I have done according to thy words, &c.] Expreſſed in his requeſt; he not only promiſed he would grant him it, but he had already done it, or at leaſt had begun to do it: lo, I have given thee a wiſe and an underſtanding heart; had greatly increaſed his wiſdom and underſtanding in things political, things reſpecting civil government, and alſo in things natural, in the knowledge of the things of nature, as appears from ch. iv. 33. and of all arts and ſciences: ſo that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee ſhall any ariſe like unto thee; which ſome reſtrain to kings, and to the kings of Iſrael; that there were none of the kings before him, as Saul and David, like him for wiſdom, nor any of the kings of Judah and Iſrael after him; but it may include all men of all nations in the world, ſince he is ſaid to be wiſer than all men; and ſome other nations, and particular men of other nations, famous for wiſdom, are expreſly mentioned as inferior to him, ch. iv. 30, 31. but then this muſt be underſtood of men ſince the fall; for Adam, doubtleſs, had a larger ſtock of knowledge and underſtanding in his ſtate of innocence than ever Solomon had; and it muſt be reſtrained to political and natural knowledge; for as for divine knowledge, Kimchi excepts Moſes; and we may well except the apoſtles of Chriſt for ſpiritual and evangelical knowledge; and as for our Lord, the antitype of Solomon, he is greater than him in all kind of knowledge, all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge being hid in him, ſee Matt. xii. 42. Col. ii. 3.

℣. 13. And I have alſo given thee that which thou haſt not aſked, &c.] That is, intended to give him, and now promiſed it, and was about to beſtow it on him: both riches and honour; the former through the preſents and tribute of the nations about him, and his trading to foreign parts; and the latter chiefly through his wiſdom, the fame of which was ſpread every where: ſo that there ſhall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days; that is, none like him for riches and honour among all the kings of the neighbouring nations ſo long as he lived; though there might be kings in after-times as rich, or richer than he, as Cræſus, Alexander, &c but then not ſo honourable as he; ſo, putting both together, there were no kings like him before or after, and eſpecially if wiſdom be added to them, as in 2 Chron. i. 12.

℣. 14. And if thou wilt walk in my ways, &c.] Preſcribed and directed to in his word: to keep my ſtatutes and my commandments; ceremonial, moral, and judicial: as thy father David did walk; which Solomon himſelf had obſerved, ℣. 6. and whoſe walk was worthy of his imitation: then I will lengthen thy days; the other promiſes of riches and honour are abſolute, but this of long life conditional, depending upon his holy walk and converſation; and hence, becauſe he failed in this, the Jews obſerve he did not attain to long life, dying, as they ſuppoſe, at 52 years of age; which is grounded on a wrong hypotheſis, that he was but 12 years of age when he began to reign, and he reigned 40 years, as before obſerved.

℣. 15. And Solomon awoke, and behold, it was a dream, &c.] Not that it was nothing but a dream, a natural one, a vain and empty one, but a divine and ſupernatural one, a dream of prophecy, as the Jews call it, or a prophetic dream; a true one, which had its full accompliſhment in him, the truth of which he perceived as ſoon as he awoke; for he found himſelf poſſeſſed of ſuch a meaſure of wiſdom and knowledge he never had before, which occaſioned the thankſgiving and joy next expreſſed: and he came to Jeruſalem; from Gibeon, accompanied by his nobles and ſervants: and ſtood before the ark of the covenant of the Lord; which was in a tent David had pitched for it there, 2 Sam. vi. 17. here he ſtood with holy reverence, as in the preſence of the Lord, and as a ſervant of his, to miniſter to him, and as a worſhipper of him, with a heart full of gratitude for the great things he had done for him, and promiſed to him: and offered up burnt-offerings, and offered peace-offerings; by way of thankfulneſs for his quiet ſettlement in the kingdom, for the Lord's appearance to him at Gibeon, and for what he had already given, and promiſed to give: and made a feaſt to all his ſervants; in a way of joy and gladneſs for the above favours; this feaſt was either the part of the peace-offerings he offered, which belonged to the offerer to eat of with his friends, or this was a ſpecial feaſt made at his own palace for his courtiers.

℣. 16. Then came there two women that were harlots, unto the king, &c.] The ſame day, as Abarbinel thinks, the night before which the Lord had appeared to Solomon; this came to paſs thro' the providence of God, that there ſhould be immediately an inſtance and proof of the wiſdom and underſtanding the Lord had given to Solomon;

theſe women, according to the Targum, were victuallers or inn-keepers; and ſo Ben Gerſom thinks, they were ſellers of food, as Rahab; though he obſerves it is poſſible they might proſtitute themſelves: this may be ſaid in their favour, that common proſtitutes do not uſually bear children, or when they do, take no care of them, have no affection for them, and much leſs are fond of them, as theſe ſeem to be; but on the other hand, no mention being made of their huſbands, and living together in one houſe, and alone, and being impudent, brawling, and litigious, give great ſuſpicion of the truth of the character they bear in our verſion and others: and ſtood before him; to lay their caſe before him, and each plead their own cauſe; it may be, it had been tried in another court before, and could not be determined, and ſo was brought to the king; and if ſo, the wiſdom of Solomon was the more conſpicuous, in deciding it in the manner he did.

℣. 17. And the one woman ſaid, &c.] Who was the plaintiff: O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one houſe; pointing to the defendant, who ſtood by her: and I was delivered of a child, with her in the houſe; ſhe being preſent at the delivery, and ſhe only as it ſhould ſeem.

℣. 18. And it came to paſs the third day after I was delivered, &c.] Of a child, as before expreſſed: that this woman was delivered alſo; of another child; and being both of the ſame ſex, both ſons, as afterwards appears; and being ſo nearly of an age, it was difficult to diſtinguiſh them: and we were together; there was no ſtranger with us in the houſe, ſave we two in the houſe; ſo that in this trial no evidences could be produced on either ſide.

℣. 19. And this woman's child died in the night, &c.] Whether the ſame night following the day it was born is not certain: becauſe ſhe overlaid it; or laid upon it, being heavy through ſleep, and not knowing what ſhe did, turned herſelf upon it, and ſmothered it; becauſe it had no previous illneſs, or any marks of any diſeaſe it could be thought to die of, and perhaps there might be ſome of its being overlaid.

℣. 20. And ſhe aroſe at midnight, &c.] Perceiving what ſhe had done, that ſhe had overlaid her child, and it was dead; either thro' fear of puniſhment inflicted on perſons thus negligent, or becauſe of the diſgrace of it, taking no more care of her child, ſhe made uſe of the following ſtratagem: and took my ſon from beſide me, while thine handmaid ſlept; this ſerved to puzzle the cauſe, for how could ſhe know what ſhe did when ſhe was aſleep? this ſhe could not prove, it was only conjecture: and laid it in her boſom, and laid her dead child in my boſom; where ſhe found it in the morning; but ſtill what proof was there that it was the other woman's, and not her own, that lay dead in her boſom?

℣. 21. And when I roſe in the morning to give my child ſuck, &c.] As ſhe uſed to do: behold, it was dead; her own child as ſhe thought at firſt: but when I had conſidered it in the morning; it was towards morning, or juſt at break of day, when ſhe aroſe to ſuckle it, and found it dead: but when it was broad day, and the light of the morning was increaſed, ſhe more narrowly viewed it, and by its features, or ſome marks ſhe had obſerved; behold, it was not my ſon which I did bear: ſhe was fully ſatisfied it was not her own child, but another.

℣. 22. And the other woman ſaid, &c.] The defendant: Nay; but the living is my ſon, and the dead is thy ſon; ſhe denied what the other ſaid, but offered nothing in proof of it: and this ſaid; ſhe who was the plaintiff replied in the ſame language: No; but the dead is thy ſon, and the living is my ſon; without being able to add any thing in confirmation of what ſhe had depoſed: thus they ſpake before the king; ſeveral times, over and over again, what is before expreſſed, having nothing to produce on either ſide in proof of their aſſertions; ſo that it was very difficult to determine to whom the living child belonged.

℣. 23. Then ſaid the king, &c.] As judge, ſumming up what had been ſaid on both ſides, which were only bare aſſertions without proof; the one affirming what the other denied, and the other denying what the other affirmed: The one ſaith, This is my ſon that liveth, and thy ſon is the dead: and the other ſaith, Nay; but thy ſon is the dead, and my ſon is the living; this he repeated to ſhew to all preſent, that no determination could be made by what had been ſaid on each ſide, and that ſome other method muſt be taken.

℣. 24. And the king ſaid, Bring me a ſword, &c.] The deſign of which might not at firſt appear to the court, and it might be thought ſtrange, and greatly wondered at, what ſhould be the meaning of it: and they brought a ſword before the king; his commands were obeyed.

℣. 25. And the king ſaid, &c.] To one of his officers: Divide the living child in two; not that he meant it ſhould be actually done, though it might at firſt be thought he really intended it, and ſo ſtrike the minds of ſome with horror, as it did, however, the mother; but he ordered this, to try the affections of the women, and thereby come to the true knowledge of the affair; though ſome think he knew it before by their countenances and manner of ſpeech, but that he was deſirous all preſent might ſee it, and be ſatisfied of it: and give half to the one, and half to the other; ſince both claimed it.

℣. 26. Then ſpake the woman, whoſe the living child was, unto the king, &c.] In haſte, and with great vehemency, leſt the executioner ſhould at once diſpatch it: (for her bowels yerned upon her ſon;) not being able to bear to ſee his life taken away: and ſhe ſaid, O my lord; or, on me[q], my lord; let the ſin, the lie that I have told, be on me, and the puniſhment of it; ſhe rather choſe to be reckoned a liar, and to endure any puniſhment ſuch an offence deſerved, rather than her child ſhould be cut aſunder: give her the living child, and in no wiſe ſlay it; being willing to part with her intereſt in it, rather than it ſhould be put to death: but the other ſaid, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it; for as ſhe knew it was not her own, ſhe had no affection for it, nor deſire to have it; choſe rather to be clear of the expence of keeping and nurſing it, and would by its being put to death, be avenged of her adverſary, who had brought this cauſe before the king.

℣. 27. Then the king anſwered and ſaid, Give her the living child, and in no wiſe ſlay it, &c.] That is, to her who deſired it might not be ſlain, but rather be given to her who had no right to it: ſhe is the mother thereof; which might be ſtrongly concluded from her compaſſion for it, her eagerneſs and earneſtneſs to have its life ſpared, and from the indifference of the other, yea, from her cruelty and barbarity in moving to have it divided.

℣. 28.

[q] ב' in me, Montanus; ſo Abarbinel.

℣. 28. And all Iſrael heard of the judgment which the king had judged, &c.] In the above caſe; the deciſion of it was divulged throughout the land, and the fame of it was ſpread every where: and they feared the king; reverenced him as a wiſe, judicious, and faithful king, and feared to do any thing of a criminal nature, as perceiving that he was ſo ſagacious and penetrating, that he would diſcover it quickly, and bring them to ſhame and puniſhment: for they ſaw that the wiſdom of God was in him, to do judgment; that God had put more than ordinary wiſdom into him, to make a right judgment in cauſes that came before him, and finiſh them in the moſt juſt and equitable manner.

CHAP. IV.

AS in the preceding chapter we have a proof of the wiſdom and underſtanding which the Lord gave to Solomon, as promiſed, ſo in this an account is given of the riches and honour he was poſſeſſed of; of him as king over all Iſrael, and of his princes, ℣. 1—6. of the providers of food for his houſhold in the ſeveral parts of the land, ℣. 7—19. of the largeneſs and extent of his dominions, and of the peace and proſperity thereof, ℣. 20, 21. 24, 25. of his daily proviſions for his houſhold, and for his cattle, ℣. 22, 23. 26, 27, 28. and of his ſuperior wiſdom and knowledge to all others in all nations, which brought ſome out of all to hear it, ℣. 29—34.

℣. 1. So king Solomon was king over all Iſrael.] As David his father was not at firſt, only over Judah, and as Solomon's ſucceſſors were not, after the diviſion of the kingdom under his ſon Reboboam; though this ſeems to have a particular reſpect to what is related in the preceding chapter concerning the wiſdom of Solomon, for which he was ſo famous, that he reigned by the conſent of all, and in the hearts of all the people of Iſrael.

℣. 2. And theſe were the princes which he had, &c.] That were in office about him, in the higheſt poſts of honour and truſt: Azariah the ſon of Zadok, the prieſt; or rather his grandſon, ſince Ahimaaz was the ſon of Zadok, and Azariah the ſon of Ahimaaz, 1 Chron, vi. 8, 9. though another Zadok may be meant, and his ſon not a prieſt but a prince, as the word may be rendered, and was Solomon's prime-miniſter of ſtate, and the rather, ſince he is mentioned firſt.

℣. 3. Elihoreph and Ahiah, the ſons of Shiſha, ſcribes, &c.] Their father Shiſha, the ſame with Sheva, was ſcribe only in David's time; and he being dead very probably, both his ſons were continued in the office as ſecretaries of ſtate, Solomon having more buſineſs for ſuch an office, ſee 2 Sam. xx. 25. Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud, the recorder; who was in the ſame office in the times of David, and now held it under Solomon, 2 Sam. viii. 16. and xx. 24.

℣. 4. And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over the hoſt, &c.] General of the army in the room of Joab, ch. ii. 35. and Zadok and Abiathar were the prieſts; ſo they were when Solomon came to the throne; but Abiathar was depoſed by him after ſome time, though he might retain the name afterwards, and be employed, as Ben Gerſom thinks, in caſe of neceſſity, in the room of Zadok, or however, be employed as a common prieſt at Jeruſalem, upon a reconciliation with Solomon; though Kimchi thinks another Abiathar is meant, which is not ſo likely.

℣. 5. And Azariah the ſon of Nathan was over the officers, &c.] The twelve officers who provided food for Solomon's houſhold after-mentioned: and Zabud the ſon of Nathan; another of the ſons of Nathan the prophet; for he being a principal inſtrument of ſettling Solomon on the throne, had intereſt enough to promote his ſons to the chief places of honour and truſt: and this here was principal officer, and the king's friend; a chief miniſter about him, very intimate with him, that kept him company, privately converſed with him, was in his ſecrets, and admitted to great privacy and nearneſs to him.

℣. 6. And Abiathar was over the houſhold, &c.] Steward of the houſhold: and Adoniram the ſon of Abda was over the tribute; over thoſe that collected the tribute, as the Targum, whether from the people of Iſrael or other nations, or both; this man was in the ſame poſt in David's time, 2 Sam. xx. 24.

℣. 7. And Solomon had twelve officers over all Iſrael, &c.] Not with reſpect to the twelve tribes of Iſrael, for it does not appear that they had each of them a tribe under them, but ſome particular places in a tribe; but with reſpect to the twelve months of the year, in which each took his turn: which provided victuals for the king and his houſhold: each man his month in a year made proviſion; furniſhed food of all ſorts out of the country in which they preſided for the ſpace of one month in a year; by which means there was always a plenty of proviſions at court for the king's family, and for all ſtrangers that came and went, and no one part of the land was burdened or drained, nor the price of proviſions raiſed; theſe ſeem to be the twelve Phylarchi, or governors of tribes, Eupolemus [r], an heathen writer, ſpeaks of, before whom, and the high-prieſt, David delivered the kingdom to Solomon; though in that he was miſtaken, that they were in being then, ſince theſe were officers of Solomon's creating.

℣. 8. And theſe are their names, &c.] Or rather the names of their fathers; for of many of them not their own names but their fathers names are given, as being well known: the ſon of Hur, in mount Ephraim; a fruitful country in the tribe of Ephraim, from whence this officer was to furniſh the king with proviſions for one month in the year.

℣. 9. The ſon of Deker, in Makaz, &c.] A place in the tribe of Dan, on the borders of it: and in Shaalbim, and Beth ſhemeſh, and Elon-bethhanan; all in the ſame tribe, ſee Joſh. xix. 41, 42, 43.

℣. 10. The ſon of Heſed, in Aruboth, &c.] Which ſeems to have been in the tribe of Judah by the places that follow: to him pertained Sochoh; there were two places of this name in that tribe, Joſh. xv. 35. 48. and all the land of Hepher; there was an Hepher in the land of Canaan, which was a royal city in the times of the Canaanites, Joſh. xii. 17. and there was an Hepher, the name of a man, a deſcendant of Judah, to whom, very probably, this

[r] Apud Euſeb. præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 30.

this land belonged, 1 Chron. iv. 5. unleſs it can be thought to be the portion of land given to the daughters of Hepher, Joſh. xvii. 3.

℣. 11. The ſon of Abinadab, in all the region of Dor, &c.] The ſame with Dor and her towns, which belonged to the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan, Joſh. xvii. 11. which had Taphath the daughter of Solomon to wife; not when he was firſt put into this office, when, in all probability, Solomon had not a daughter marriageable; but behaving well in it, in proceſs of time he beſtowed a daughter of his on him.

℣. 12. Baana the ſon of Ahilud, to him pertained Taanach and Megiddo, and all Bethſhean, &c.] All which were places in the tribe of Manaſſeh, Joſh. xvii. 11. which is by Zartanah beneath Jezreel; ſo deſcribed, to diſtinguiſh it, as is thought, from Zaretan in Joſh. iii. 16. and the country this officer preſided over reached alſo from Beth-ſhean to Abel-meholah, even unto the place that is beyond Jokneam; the two firſt of theſe were in the tribe of Manaſſeh, and the laſt in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 11.

℣. 13. The ſon of Geber, in Ramoth-gilead, &c.] A city in the tribe of Gad, and was a city of refuge, Joſh. xx. 8. to him pertained the towns of Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh, which are in Gilead, of which ſee Numb. xxxii. 41. to him alſo pertained the region of Argob, which is in Baſhan, threeſcore great cities with walls, and brazen bars; called by Joſephus [s] Ragaba, beyond Jordan; ſee the note on Deut. iii. 4.

℣. 14. Ahinadab the ſon of Iddo had Mahanaim, Another city on the other ſide Jordan, where both Iſhboſheth and David ſometimes dwelt, 2 Sam. ii. 8. and xvii. 24. this and the places adjacent muſt be very fruitful, ſince this officer was to furniſh the king with proviſions for a month once a year from hence.

℣. 15. Ahimaaz was in Naphtali, &c.] Out of that tribe he made a monthly proviſion annually: he alſo took Baſmath the daughter of Solomon to wife; another daughter of Solomon's, in courſe of time, ſee ℣. 11.

℣. 16. Baanah the ſon of Huſhai was in Aſher, &c.] In the tribe of Aſher; a very plentiful tribe, particularly for oil; this officer was perhaps the ſon of Huſhai the Archite, David's friend, and, it may be, promoted for his ſake: and in Aloth; which ſignifies aſcenſions, mountains went upon by ſteps; near to this place was an high mountain, called the ladder of Tyre [t]; perhaps that and the parts adjacent may be meant here.

℣. 17. Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Paruah in Iſſachar.] In the tribe of Iſſachar; he had the whole tribe at his command to make a monthly proviſion out of for the king once a year, as had the preceding officer and the following one.

℣. 18. Shimei the ſon of Elah in Benjamin.] So deſcribed, to diſtinguiſh him from that Shimei that curſed David, who was of the ſame tribe.

℣. 19. Geber the ſon of Uri was in the country of Gilead, &c.] Which was beyond Jordan, and inhabited by the tribes of Reuben and Gad and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh; this muſt be underſtood of all the country, excepting what was under the juriſdiction of the ſon of Geber, ℣. 13. and which had been the country of Sihon king of the Amorites, and of Og king of Baſhan; until it was taken from them by Moſes; and he was the only officer which was in the land; which is not true of Geber; for there was another officer in the land of Gilead beſides him, the ſon of Geber before-obſerved, unleſs it ſhould be rendered in that land, in that part of the land he had; but then the ſame might have been obſerved of all the reſt of the officers: the words may be rendred beſt, and there was one officer in the land; which ſome underſtand of one officer over all the reſt, Azariah the ſon of Nathan, ℣. 5. but it ſeems beſt what other Jewiſh writers ſay [u], that this was another officer appointed for the intercalated month; when there were 13 months in the year, there was an officer in the land fixed for that month to make proviſion out of the land; perhaps any where, where he pleaſed, being not limited to any certain place. Theſe 12 providers for Solomon's family were emblems of the 12 apoſtles of Chriſt, appointed to provide food for his family, the church; and if you add to them the apoſtle Paul, it will make 13, as this officer did.

℣. 20. Judah and Iſrael were many, as the ſand which is by the ſea in multitude, &c.] Being bleſſed with great fruitfulneſs in their families, and and having no peſtilential diſeaſe among them nor wars to leſſen their number, and ſo the promiſe to Abraham was fulfilled, Gen. xxii. 17 and which was an emblem of Chriſt's ſpiritual ſubjects, eſpecially in the latter day, whom Solomon was a type of, ſee Hoſ. i. 10. eating, and drinking, and making merry; having a large increaſe of the fruits of the earth, and in no fear of any enemies; expreſſive of the ſpiritual joy of believers in the kingdom of Chriſt, and under the word and ordinances, Cant. ii. 3, 4, and v. 1. Rom. v. 2, 3. 11 and xiv 17.

℣. 21. And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms, &c.] Not only over Judah and Iſrael, but all people round about him, they ſtanding in fear of him; or who brought him preſents, or paid tribute to him, which was an acknowledgment of ſuperiority over them, and doing homage to him: from the river unto the land of the Philiſtines, and unto the border of Egypt; that is, from the river Euphrates, as the Targum, which was the border of his proper domains, to the eaſt, to Paleſtine, inhabited by the Philiſtines, which lay to the weſt, and as far as the border of Egypt, which was the ſouthern boundary; a like and larger extent of Chriſt's kingdom is given, Pſ lxxii. 8. Zach. ix. 10. and they brought preſents, and ſerved Solomon all the days of his life; this explains in what ſenſe other kingdoms beſides were ruled by Solomon, and ſubject to him; of Chriſt his antitype, ſee Pſ. lxxii. 10, 11.

℣. 22. And Solomon's proviſion for one day, was 30 meaſures of fine flour, &c.] The meaſure here uſed was the Corus, or Cor, the ſame with the Homer, which was equal to ten Ephahs, and, according to Biſhop Cumberland [w], held 75 wine gallons and five pints, and ſomewhat more; by which may be known how many gallons of fine flour theſe 30 meaſures held, which were all conſumed in one day: and 60 meaſures of meal; of a coarſer ſort, for the ſervants, not ſo finely dreſſed; the ſame meaſure is here uſed as before; and it is obſerved by ſome, that one Cor is equivalent to 648 Roman pounds, and allowing to one man two pounds a day for his food, there would be food enough for 29,160 men out of 90 times 648, or 58,320 pounds [x]. Others exaggerate the account; Vilalpandus ſays it would have ſufficed 48,600 perſons; Seth Calviſius 54,000, and Salianus 70,000 [y]; the Jews

[s] Antiqu. l. 13. c. 15. §. 5. [t] Vid. Joſeph. de bello Jud. l. 2. c. 10. §. 2. [u] T. Bab. Sanhedrin. fol. 12. 1. [w] Scripture-weights and meaſures, ch. 3. p. 86. [x] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. p. 516. [y] Vid Witſii Miſcellan. tom. 2. exercit. 10. §. 26.

Jews say [z] that he had 60,000 that eat at his table; that is, who were maintained at his court.

℣. 23. Ten fat oxen, &c.] Such as were kept up in the ſtall and fatted: and 20 oxen out of the paſtures; which were killed as they were taken from thence, and not put up to be fed: and 100 ſheep; out of the folds: beſide harts, and roe-bucks, and fallow deer; which were clean creatures, according to the Levitical law, Deut. xiv. 5. theſe were hunted in fields, or taken out of the park, or were preſents from other countries; ſo that here was plenty of beef, mutton, and veniſon: for the ſpiritual application of this to the antitypical Solomon, and his proviſions, ſee Matt. xxii. 4. and fatted fowl; ſuch as we call capons [a]; ſome Jewiſh writers [b], becauſe of the likeneſs of ſound in the word here uſed, take them to be Barbary fowls, or ſuch as were brought from that country: there is a ſort of birds called βαρβαροι, which were without a voice, that neither heard men, nor knew their voice [c].

℣. 24. For he had dominion over all the region on this ſide the river, &c.] Or beyond the river Euphrates, in the ſenſe before given, ℣. 21. which accounts for the plenty of proviſions he had, and the revenue with which he ſupported ſuch a table he kept: from Tiphſah even to Azzah; or Gaza, one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines. Tiphſah is thought to be the Thapſacus of Pliny [d], which both he and Ptolemy [e] place near the river Euphrates, ſince called Amphipolis; the former places it in Syria, the latter in Arabia Deſerta; and which Strabo [f], from Eratoſthenes, deſcribes as 4800 furlongs from Babylon, and from the place where Meſopotamia begins not leſs than 2000 furlongs: over all the kings on this ſide the river; the river Euphrates, or beyond it, in the ſenſe before explained, as the kings of Syria, Arabia, &c. and he had peace on all ſides round about him; in which he was a type of Chriſt, the prince of peace.

℣. 25. And Judah and Iſrael dwelt ſafely, &c.] Without fear of any injury done to their perſons or properties by any enemy; which is, and will be, more abundantly fulfilled in Chriſt, the antitype of Solomon, Jer. xxiii. 5. every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree; which were principal trees in the land of Judea, put for all the reſt; and the phraſe denotes the happy, ſafe, quiet, full, and peaceable enjoyment of all outward bleſſings, and is uſed of the times of the Meſſiah, Mic. iv. 4. from Dan even to Beerſheba; which were the two extremities of the land of Iſrael, north and ſouth: all the days of Solomon; ſo long this peace and ſafety continued, there being no wars in his time.

℣. 26. And Solomon had 40,000 ſtalls for horſes, &c.] In 2 Chron. ix. 25. it is only 4000; and therefore ſome think that here is a miſtake of the copier, of Arbaim 40 for Arbah 4; which it is thought might be through divine permiſſion, in ſuch leſſer matters, without any prejudice to the authority of the ſcriptures in matters of faith and practice; but without ſuppoſing this, a reconciliation may be made, by obſerving, that here the writer, as Ben Gerſom notes, gives the number of the horſes that were in the ſtables, which were 40,000, there the ſtables themſelves, which were 4000, ten horſes in a ſtable; or here he numbers the ſtalls, which were 40,000, and there the ſtables, which were 4000, there being ten ſtalls in each; and the word there has the letter Vod in it more than here, which is the numerical letter for ten, and may point thereunto; or here the writer ſpeaks of all the ſtalls for horſes Solomon had throughout the kingdom, there of thoſe only he had in Jeruſalem. Benjamin of Tudela [g] affirms, that theſe ſtalls, or ſtables, which Solomon built very ſtrong of large ſtones, are ſtill in being in Jeruſalem, and that there is no building to be ſeen like it any where; but no other writer ſpeaks of them; nor is it at all probable that they ſhould remain: for his chariots, and 12,000 horſemen; ſome of the ſaid ſtalls of horſes were for his chariots, to draw in them for various uſes, of which he had 1400, ch. x. 26. and others to mount 12,000 horſemen, who were placed in divers parts, to defend the kingdom.

℣. 27. And theſe officers provided victuals for king Solomon, &c.] The 12 before mentioned; and this is repeated here, after the account of his horſes, to obſerve, that they provided for them alſo, as well as for the ſake of what follows; that the large proviſion made by them was not only for Solomon's family and domeſtic ſervants, but for ſtrangers from different parts, who came upon meſſages to him, or to viſit him, and to behold the ſplendor of his court: and for all that came to Solomon's table; which was an open table for all comers, as there were ſome from all parts of the earth, ℣. 34. every man in his month; each of the 12 officers provided food in the month aſſigned to him: they lacked nothing; they always had enough to ſupply the king with, and they failed not in the performance of their duty, nor came ſhort of their ſalaries, being fully and punctually paid them.

℣. 28. Barley alſo, and ſtraw for the horſes, and dromedaries, &c.] Or rather mules, by comparing the paſſage with 2 Chron. ix. 24 the particular kind of creatures meant is not agreed on; though all take them to be a ſwifter ſort of creatures than horſes; or the ſwifter ſort of horſes, as race horſes or poſt-horſes: barley was for their provender, that being the common food of horſes in thoſe times and countries, and in others, as Bochart [h] has ſhown from various writers; and in the Miſnah [i] it is called the food of beaſts; and Solomon is ſaid to have every day for his own horſes 200,000 Neapolitan meaſures of it, called Tomboli [k]; ſo the Roman ſoldiers, the horſe were allowed a certain quantity of barley for their horſes every morning, and ſometimes they had money inſtead of it, which they therefore called Hordiarium [l]; and the ſtraw was for the litter of them: theſe brought they unto the place; where the officers were; not where the king was, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; where Solomon was, as the Arabic verſion, that is, in Jeruſalem; nor where the officers were in their reſpective juriſdictions, as our verſion ſupplies it, which would be bringing them to themſelves; but to the place where the beaſts were, whether in Jeruſalem, or in any other parts of the kingdom: every man according to his charge; which he was monthly to perform.

℣. 29. And God gave Solomon wiſdom and underſtanding

[z] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 8. 2. [a] So David de Pomis, Tzemach David, fol. 12. 3. and ſome in Kimchi in loc.
[b] Baal Aruch & R. Elias Levit. Tiſhbi, in voce, ברבר. [c] Scholia in Ariſtoph. aves, p. 550. [d] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5 c. 24. [e] Geograph. l. 5. c. 19. [f] Geograph. l. 16. p. 514. [g] Itinerar. p. 43.
[h] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 9. col. 158, 159. Vid. Homer, Iliad. 4. ℣. 196. and Iliad. 8. ℣. 560. [i] Sotah, c. 2. §. 1.
[k] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 10. 2. [l] Vid. Valtrinum de re militar. Roman. l. 3. c. 15. p. 236.

ſtanding exceeding much, &c.] In things natural, moral, divine and ſpiritual, and that not ſlight and ſuperficial, but exceeding deep, and large beyond expreſſion; and this he had not from the acuteneſs of his genius merely, nor from his induſtry and diligence; but by the gift of God, as whatſoever ſolid wiſdom and underſtanding is in any man, it is from the liberal hand of God, the fountain of wiſdom, Jam. i. 5. and largeneſs of heart, even as ſand that is on the ſea-ſhore; he had a genius and capacity to receive any thing; his knowledge was vaſt and comprehenſive; it reached to, and included things innumerable, as the ſand of the ſea; there was ſcarce any thing under the heavens, or on the earth, and in the ſea, but came within the compaſs of it, as what are after-mentioned ſhew.

ver. 30. And Solomon's wiſdom excelled the wiſdom of all the children of the eaſt, &c.] The Arabians, and Perſians, famous for wiſdom, and who lay to the eaſt of the land of Judea; whoſe wiſdom lay in the knowledge of the ſtars, in divination by birds, and ſoothſaying [m]: and all the wiſdom of Egypt; which it was eminent for in the times of Moſes, and in which he was learned and well-ſkilled, Acts vii. 22. and hence in later times the philoſophers of the Gentiles travelled to get knowledge, as Pherecydes, Pythagoras, Anaxagoras, Plato, and others to Egypt, ſaid to be the mother of arts and ſciences [n].

ver. 31. For he was wiſer than all men, &c.] Not only that lived in his time, but in ages paſt ſince the fall of Adam, and in times to come, eſpecially in natural wiſdom and knowledge, in all the branches of it; for though ſome men excel in ſome part of knowledge, yet not in all, as Solomon did: than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda, the ſons of Mahol; men of the ſame names are ſaid to be ſons of Zerah, grandſon of Judah, 1 Chron. ii. 6. wherefore theſe are either other men, or their father had two names; or Mahol here may be an appellative, and deſcribe the character of theſe men, and point at what they were famous for, as that they were ſons of muſic, piping and dancing, as Mahol may ſignify; the Jews have a tradition [o], that Ethan is Abraham, and Heman, Moſes, and Chalcol, Joſeph: and his fame was in all nations round about; not for his riches and grandeur only, but chiefly for his wiſdom.

ver. 32. And he ſpake 3000 proverbs, &c.] Wiſe ſayings, ſhort and pithy ſentences, inſtructive in morality and civil life; theſe were not written as the book of Proverbs, but ſpoken only, and were taken from his lips, and ſpread by thoſe that heard them for the uſe of others; but in proceſs of time were loſt; whereas the above book, being written under divine inſpiration, is preſerved: and his ſongs were 1005; ſome things that were uſeful to improve the minds and morals of men, he delivered in verſe, to make them more pleaſant and agreeable, that they might be the more eaſily received and retained in memory; but of all his ſongs, the moſt excellent is the book of Canticles, called the Song of Songs, being divine and ſpiritual, and dictated by the inſpiration of the Spirit of God: he was both a moral philoſopher and poet, as well as a botaniſt and naturaliſt, and well-ſkilled in medicine, as the following words ſuggeſt.

ver. 33. And he ſpake of trees, &c.] Of all trees, herbs and plants, of the nature, virtues and uſe of them: from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon; a mountain on the northern border of Judea, famous for cedars, the talleſt and largeſt of trees: even unto the hyſſop that ſpringeth out of the wall; which grew about Jeruſalem, and in the mountains of it, as an Arabic writer teſtifies [p], the loweſt and leaſt herb; ſo that what is between the cedar and hyſſop, include trees and plants of every kind and ſort: whether the ſame herb we call hyſſop is meant, is not certain; ſome take it to be mint; others marjoram; ſome houſeleek; others the wall-flower; Levinus Lemnius [q] ſuppoſes it to be Adiantum, or maiden hair: the Targum interprets it allegorically, that he prophecied of the kings of the houſe of David in this world, and in the world to come of the Meſſiah: he ſpake alſo of beaſts, and of fowls, and of creeping things, and of fiſhes; he underſtood the nature of all ſorts of animals in the earth, air, and ſea, and diſcourſed of their names, kinds, qualities and uſe, with the greateſt eaſe and perſpicuity; the Jews fancy, that Ariſtotle's hiſtory of animals is his, which that philoſopher lighted on, and publiſhed it in his own name. Suidas [r] ſays, it was reported that Solomon wrote a book of medicines for all diſeaſes, which was fixed to the entrance of the temple, which Hezekiah took away, becauſe ſick people applied to that for cure of their diſorders, and neglected to pray to God.

ver. 34. And there came of all people to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, &c.] Who ſent their ambaſſadors to his court to know the truth of what was reported, and bring them ſome proofs and ſpecimens, by which they might judge of the truth of the relations that had been told them; which perhaps might ſeem to them to be beyond all belief: which had heard of his wiſdom; for the fame of it was ſpread every where by merchants and travellers, and ſuch ſort of perſons, who had been at Jeruſalem, and were maſters of various anecdotes relating to Solomon; which they induſtriouſly ſpread in the ſeveral parts of the world they had dealings in.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter relates Solomon's preparation for building the temple: on Hiram, king of Tyre, ſending a congratulatory letter to him, he returned another to him, ſignifying his intention to build an houſe for God, and requeſting him to ſupply him with timber, and men to work it, ver. 1—6. to which Hiram readily agreed, and ſent him cedar and fir, and Solomon in return ſent him food for his houſhold; and things went on very amicably between them, ver. 7—12. the chapter concludes with an account of Solomon's workmen, where, how, and in what they were employed, ver. 13—18.

ver. 1. And Hiram king of Tyre ſent ſervants unto Solomon, &c.] His ambaſſadors, to condole him on

[m] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 76. 3. Vrad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 80. 1.
[n] Macrob. in Som. Scip. c. 19. 21. & Saturnal. l. 1. c. 15.
[o] Hieron. [p] Iſaac Ben Omram apud Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 50. col. 590.
[q] Herb. Bibl. Explicat. c. 26. [r] In voce Ἐζεκίας.

on the death of his father, and congratulate him on his acceſſion to the throne; this king is called by the Phœnician hiſtorians [s], Hirom, and by Eupolemus [t], Suron, as he is Huram in 2 Chron. ii. 3. and by Theophilus of Antioch [u], Hierom the ſon of Abimalus, in the 12th year of whoſe reign the temple was built: for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father; that the Iſraelites had anointed him king: for Hiram was ever a lover of David; a friend and ally of his; and we never read of the Tyrians being at war with him, or aſſiſting to any of his enemies.

℣. 2. And Solomon ſent to Hiram, &c.] A letter, either by the hand of his ambaſſadors when they returned, as Kimchi thinks, or by ambaſſadors Solomon ſent on purpoſe. Joſephus [w] appeals to the Tyrian archives for the genuineneſs of theſe letters, that paſſed between Hiram and Solomon; and Eupolemus, an heathen writer [x], has both this which Solomon ſent to Hiram, and that which Hiram ſent in anſwer to it, which agree with thoſe in the ſacred records: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 3. Thou knoweſt how that David my father could not build an houſe unto the name of the Lord his God, &c.] As he deſigned, and was deſirous of; and which Hiram might know not only by common fame, but from David himſelf, between whom there was an intercourſe, and that in relation to cedars for building, which David had of Hiram, 2 Chron. ii. 3. for the wars which were about him on every ſide; or warriors, as the Targum, the Philiſtines, Moabites, Edomites, and Syrians: until the Lord put them under the ſoles of his feet; made them ſubject and tributary to him, as he did at length, ſee 2 Sam. vii. 1. and viii. 1. &c. ſo the Cetib, or textual reading is, but the Keri or marginal reading is, under the ſoles of my feet; that is, Solomon's, which agrees with what follows; it was true of both.

℣. 4. But now the Lord my God hath given me reſt on every ſide, &c.] From foreign enemies; for Solomon had no wars with any: ſo that there is neither adverſary; or Satan, no internal enemy in his kingdom, as well as no external ones, Adonijah, Joab, and other ill-deſigning perſons being cut off: nor evil occurrent; nothing that roſe up, and met him, to diſcourage or hinder the proſecution of the good work he had in view.

℣. 5. And behold, I purpoſe to build an houſe unto the name of the Lord my God, &c.] For his worſhip, and for his honour and glory: as the Lord ſpake unto David my father; by the prophet Nathan, 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13. ſaying, Thy ſon whom I will ſet upon thy throne in thy room, he ſhall build an houſe unto my name; which was no ſmall encouragement to Solomon to go about this work; in which he was a type of Chriſt, the builder of his temple, the church, ſee Zech. vi. 12, 13.

℣. 6. Now therefore command thou, that they hew me cedars out of Lebanon, &c.] That is, order his ſervants to cut them down there for him. Some think that Lebanon belonged to the land of Iſrael, and therefore Solomon did not aſk for the cedars upon it, but for his ſervants to hew them for him; but as it lay upon the borders of Iſrael, part of it might belong to them, and another part to Hiram, and on which the beſt cedars might grow, and ſo he furniſhed Solomon both with trees, and men to cut them, as it ſeems from ℣. 10. ſee alſo 2 Chron. ii. 3. 8. and my ſervants ſhall be with thy ſervants: to aſſiſt them, and to carry the timber from place to place, and to learn how to hew timber: and unto thee will I give hire for thy ſervants, according to all that thou ſhalt appoint; pay them for their work and ſervice, as Hiram himſelf ſhould judge fit and reaſonable for them; no mention being made of paying for the timber, ſeems to countenance the notion that the trees were Solomon's; but when the quantity of proviſions ſent yearly to Hiram for his houſhold, beſides what the ſervants had, is obſerved, it ſeems to have been ſent as an equivalent to the timber received by Solomon, ſee ℣. 10, 11. for thou knoweſt that there is not among us any that can ſkill to hew timber, like unto the Sidonians; it is not ſaid Tyrians, the Sidonians, perhaps, being more ſkilful in this than they were; and the Sidonians are ſaid by Homer [y] to be πολυδαιδαλοι, very ingenious; and they were both under the juriſdiction and at the command of Hiram; ſo Eupolemus [z] makes the inſcription of Solomon's letter to him to run thus, to Suron (i. e. Hiram) King of Tyre, Sidon, and Phœnicia. The Jews being chiefly employed in huſbandry, and in feeding cattle, were very unſkilful in mechanic arts, and in this of cutting down trees, and hewing timber; for there is ſkill to be exerciſed therein; the proper time of cutting down trees ſhould be obſerved, the part in which they are to be cut, and the poſition in which they are to be put when cut down, as Vitruvius [a] directs, with other things, and Pliny [b] obſerves the ſame.

℣. 7. And it came to paſs, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, &c.] The letter read he ſent him: that he rejoiced greatly; that the friendſhip which had ſubſiſted between him and David was like to be continued between him and his ſucceſſor, but chiefly for what follows: ſaying, Bleſſed be the Lord this day; or Jehovah, by which he ſeems to have ſome knowledge of the true God, the God of Iſrael, and might worſhip him, though along with him other deities, as ſome heathen princes did: which hath given unto David a wiſe ſon over this great people; which he perceived by the letter he ſent him, and by his ſolicitous concern to build an houſe for the worſhip and honour of God, and by various other things which his ambaſſadors reported to him they had ſeen and heard in Solomon's court.

℣. 8. And Hiram ſent to Solomon, &c.] A letter to him, to the following purpoſe: ſaying, I have conſidered the things which thou ſenteſt to me for; whether he could, and whether it was fitting he ſhould grant his requeſt; which was acting like a wiſe and prudent prince: and I will do all thy deſire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir; or of cypreſs, as in Joſephus's copy of this letter, and which grew on Lebanon [c]; theſe were odorous, ſound, and durable timber, eſpecially the cedar, and therefore choſen by Solomon for building.

℣. 9. My ſervants ſhall bring them down from Lebanon unto the ſea, &c.] The Mediterranean ſea, on which Tyre ſtood: and I will convey them by ſea in flotes; which were either a ſort of carriage for the timber the Tyrians and Sidonians had, being furniſhed with various navigable veſſels; or theſe were the timber itſelf, and the planks of it, which being faſtened together, were ſet afloat under the direction of ſome boats with oars, of which they had plenty: unto the place that thou ſhalt appoint point me; which was Joppa, as appears from 2 Chron. ii. 16. belonging to the land of Iſrael, in the ſame ſea: and will cauſe them to be diſcharged there; either to be unloaded from the veſſels, or to be unlooſed and taken up ſeparately: and thou ſhalt receive them; by his ſervants appointed there to bring them to Jeruſalem, which was 40 miles from Joppa: and thou ſhalt accompliſh my deſire in giving food for my houſhold; ſignifying, that all that he deſired in return was, that he would ſupply him with corn or wheat, which he ſtood in need of, and his letter in Joſephus [c] expreſſes; and we find in after-times, this place was ſupplied with bread-corn from Judea, ſee Ezra iii. 7. Ezek. xxvii. 17. Acts xii. 20.

[s] Apud Joſeph. contr. Apion. l. 1. c. 17, 18. [t] Apud Euſeb. præpar. Evangel. l. 9 c 33, 34. [u] Ad Autolyc. l. 3. p. 131, 132. [w] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 2. ſ. 8. [x] Ut ſupra. [y] Iliad. 23. ℣. 743. [z] Ut ſupra. [a] De architectura, l. 2. c 9. [b] Nat. Hiſt. l. 16. c. 39. [c] Diodor. Sic. l. 19. p. 700.

℣. 10. So Hiram gave Solomon cedar-trees, and fir-trees, &c.] Ordered his ſervants to cut them down from Lebanon, and ſent them to him in flotes, which he received: according to all his deſire; he had as many as he requeſted, and what he wanted.

℣. 11. And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thouſand meaſures of wheat for food to his houſhold, &c.] This meaſure was the Hebrew meaſure, Cor or Corus, and, according to biſhop Cumberland [d], its contents were 17,477 ſolid inches; it was equal to ten Ephahs, each of which held two gallons and an half, and the Cor held 75 wine gallons five pints, and ſomewhat more; according to ſome [e], what it held was equal to 648 Roman pounds; ſo that 20,000 of them contained 12,960,000 pounds of wheat: and 20 meaſures of pure oil; ſqueezed out of the olives without breaking them; the ſame kind of meaſure is here expreſſed as before, and the quantity anſwered to 12960 Roman pounds; another writer [f] reckons a Cor to contain 1080 Roman pounds; ſo that Hiram had every year 21,600 pounds of oil. In 2 Chron. ii. 10. it is 20,000 baths of oil; now not to take notice that the meaſures are different, a bath was but the tenth part of a Cor, reference is had to different things; here the writer relates what was given to Hiram for his own family, there what was given to the workmen where ſeveral other things are mentioned beſides theſe: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year; ſo long as the building laſted, and the workmen were employed; but Abarbinel thinks that he gave it to him as long as he lived, out of his great munificence and liberality.

℣. 12. And the Lord gave Solomon wiſdom, as he promiſed him, &c.] Which, among other things, appeared in his preparations for building the temple, and in his agreements with Hiram for timber and workmen for that purpoſe, and by continuing and confirming friendſhip between himſelf and Hiram, who was ſo ſerviceable to him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon, and they two made a league together; in order to continue and eſtabliſh peace and friendſhip between them, which Solomon might lawfully do, the Tyrians being no part of the ſeven nations with whom alliances were forbidden.

℣. 13. And king Solomon raiſed a levy out of all Iſrael, &c.] Not of money, but of men, as follows: and the levy was 30,000 men; for what purpoſe, and how they were employed, the next verſe ſhews.

℣. 14. And he ſent them to Lebanon, 10,000 a month by courſes, &c.] In their turns; theſe are the ſervants of his he propoſed to be with Hiram's ſervants, aſſiſting in cutting down the trees, and ſquaring the timber in Lebanon, ℣. 6. a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home; that they might not be over-worked; for they wrought but four months in the year in the hard ſervice in Lebanon, the reſt of their time was ſpent in managing their domeſtic affairs; theſe were Iſraelites: and Adoniram was over the levy; the ſame that was over the tribute or the collectors of the tax, ch. iv. 6. and according to the Targum, theſe were ſuch perſons.

℣. 15. And Solomon had 70,000 that bare burdens, &c.] To carry the ſtones from the mountains out of which they were dug, and which were near Jeruſalem, to the city; theſe were ſtrangers in Iſrael, as were thoſe that follow: and 80,000 hewers in the mountains; that dug the ſtones out of the quarries, and ſquared them; theſe, with the others, made 150,000, ſee 2 Chron. ii. 17. according to Jacob Leon [g], the number of workmen at the temple for ſeven years was 163,600, and ſome make them more.

℣. 16. Beſides the chief of Solomon's officers which were over the work, &c.] Over the whole work, preparatory for the building of the temple; though it ſeems chiefly to have reſpect to that of hewing the ſtones, and bringing them to the city: 3300 which ruled over the people that wrought in the work; to keep them to their work, and to ſee that they performed it well: in 2 Chron. ii. 18. they are ſaid to be 3600, which is 300 more than here; thoſe 300 are the chief officers mentioned in the former part of this verſe, which were over the whole work, and even over the 3300 overſeers, and with them made up the ſum of 3600: ſo Jacob Leon [h] obſerves there were 3300 maſter workmen, and 300 commanders over them all.

℣. 17. And the king commanded, and they brought great ſtones, &c.] Not in quality, but in quantity, large ſtones, fit to lay in the foundation; ſtrong, and durable againſt all the injuries of time, as Joſephus ſays [i]: coſtly ſtones; not what are commonly called precious ſtones, as gems, pearls, &c. but ſtones of value, as marble, porphyry, &c. and hewed ſtones; not rough as they were taken out of the quarry, but hewed, and made ſmooth: to lay the foundation of the houſe; which, though out of ſight, was to be laid with goodly ſtones for the magnificence of the building; ſo the church of Chriſt, its foundation is ſaid to be laid even with ſapphires and other precious ſtones, ſee Iſ. liv. 11. Rev. xxi. 19.

℣. 18. And Solomon's builders, and Hiram's builders did hew them, &c.] The ſtones; for it ſeems Solomon had not only hewers of wood, but of ſtone, from Hiram: and the ſtone-ſquarers; or rather the Giblites, the men of Gebal, which were under the juriſdiction of Tyre, and were ſkilful in this ſort of work, as ſome of them were in others, ſee Ezek. xxvii. 9. ſo they prepared timber and ſtones to build the houſe; both Solomon's and Hiram's builders, and the large number of workmen, both Iſraelites and ſtrangers; which latter were an emblem of the Gentiles concerned in the building of the ſpiritual temple, the church of Chriſt, Zech. vi. 15. and whereas the number of ſtrangers that wrought for the building was far greater than that of the Iſraelites, it may denote the greater number of Gentiles in the Goſpel-church-ſtate.

5 CHAP.

[c] Ut ſupra. [d] Scripture-weights and meaſures, c. 3. p. 86. [e] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. p. 517.
[f] Van Till in Cantic. Moſis, p. 54. [g] Relation of memorable things in the Temple, ch. 3. p. 14. [h] Ibid.
[i] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 3. §. 2.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter gives an account of the building of the temple, for which preparations were before made, and begins with the time of its building, ℣. 1. gives the dimenſions of it and the porch before it, ℣. 2, 3. obſerves the windows in it and chambers about it, ℣. 4—10. and while it was building, Solomon had a word from the Lord relative to it, ℣. 11—14. and then the account goes on concerning the walls of the houſe, and the flooring of it, ℣. 15—18. and the oracle in it, and the cherubim in that, ℣. 19—30. and the doors into it, and the carved work of them, ℣. 31—36. and the chapter is concluded with obſerving the time when it was begun and finiſhed, ℣. 37, 38.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs in the 480th year after the children of Iſrael were come out of the land of Egypt, &c.] The Tyrian writers [k] make it 560 years from hence; but this no doubt is righteſt, which Junius reckons thus; 40 years Iſrael were in the wilderneſs, 17 under Joſhua, 299 under the judges, 80 under Eli, Samuel, and Saul, 40 under David, add to which the 4 years of Solomon, and they make 480 [l]; they are ſomewhat differently reckoned by others [m], from the coming out of Egypt to Joſhua 40 years, from thence to the firſt ſervitude under Cuſhan 25, from thence to the death of Abimelech 256, under Thola 23, from thence to the Ammoniti ſh ſervitude 4, under that 18, under the judges, Jephthah, Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon 31, Samuel and Saul 40, David 40, and Solomon 3, in all 480; in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Iſrael; when he was clear of all diſturbers of his government, and had got all things ready for the building of the temple, and had gathered together gold and ſilver enough of his own to defray the expences; for, as for what David gave him, he put that into the treaſury of the Lord's houſe, ſee ch. vii. 51. in the month Zif, which is the ſecond month; and ſo muſt be Jiar, for Abib or Niſan was the firſt, and Jiar was the ſecond, which anſwered to part of our April and part of May; called Zif either from the ſplendor of the ſun, being now higher, and ſo the greater; or from the trees and flowers of the field being in all their glory; and ſo the Targum here calls it, the month of ſplendor of flowers: and it was on the 2d day of it, that he began to build the houſe of the Lord; and a very fit and proper ſeaſon of the year it was to begin it in, ſee 2 Chron. iii. 2.

℣. 2. And the houſe which king Solomon built for the Lord, &c.] For his worſhip, honour, and glory: the length thereof was 60 cubits; from eaſt to weſt, including the holy place and the moſt holy place; the holy place was 40 cubits, and the moſt holy place 20; the ſame meaſure, as to length, Eupolemus, an heathen writer [n], gives of the temple, but is miſtaken in the other meaſures: and the breadth thereof 20 cubits; from north to ſouth: and the height thereof 30 cubits; this muſt be underſtood of the holy place, for the oracle or moſt holy place was but 20 cubits high, ℣. 20. though the holy place, with the chambers that were over it, which were 90 cubits, three ſtories high, was in all 120 cubits, 2 Chron. iii. 4. ſome reſtrain it to the porch only, which ſtood at the end, like one of our high ſteeples, as they think.

℣. 3. And the porch before the temple of the houſe, &c.] Which ſtood at the eaſt end of it: 20 cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the houſe; which was from north to ſouth, and of the ſame dimenſion, ſo that they exactly anſwered each other: and 10 cubits was the breadth thereof before the houſe; which being added to it, make the whole of the building, moſt holy place, holy place and porch, 70 cubits; the height of the porch is not here given, but in 2 Chron. iii. 4. where it is ſaid to be 120 cubits high, equal to the heighth of the houſe, with the chambers over it; but there the breadth of the porch is not given, as it is here; by theſe dimenſions we may obſerve the difference between the tabernacle and the temple; the temple was twice as long, and as broad, and thrice as high as that, ſee Exod. xxvi. 8, 16. This fabrick was an emblem of the church of God, ſometimes called an holy temple, and the temple of the living God, 2 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. ii. 21.

℣. 4. And for the houſe he made windows of narrow lights.] Or open, ſhut [o], which could be both, having ſhutters to them, to open or ſhut at pleaſure; windows which they could open, and look through at them, or ſhut when they pleaſed; the Targum is, "open within, and ſhut without;" or, as others underſtand it, they were wide within, and narrow without; by being narrow without, the houſe was preſerved from bad weather, as well as could not ſo eaſily be looked into by thoſe without; and by being broader within, the light that was let in ſpread itſelf within the houſe; which ſome interpret only of the holy place, the moſt holy place having, as they ſuppoſe, no windows in it, which yet is not certain: now theſe windows may denote the word and ordinances of the church of God, whereby light is communicated to men; which in the preſent ſtate is but narrow or ſmall, in compariſon of the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, and the ultimate glory; and eſpecially ſo it was under the legal diſpenſation, which was very obſcure; ſee Cant. ii. 9. Iſ. lx. 8.

℣. 5. And againſt the wall of the houſe he built chambers round about, &c.] Or near it, as Jarchi interprets it, for the beams of them were not faſtened in it, ℣. 6. or rather upon it [p]; and when they are ſaid to be round about the houſe, it muſt be underſtood of the two ſides, north and ſouth, and of the weſt end only, for at the eaſt end, where the porch was, there were none: againſt the walls of the houſe round about, both of the temple, and of the oracle; that is, both of the holy, and the moſt holy place: and he made chambers round about; the ſaid buildings; which is repeated that it might be obſerved; how many chambers there were, is not ſaid; Joſephus ſays [q] there were 30 of them, and over them others of the ſame meaſure and and number, and over them others alſo; ſo that there were three ſtories of them, and in all 90; and which is countenanced by what follows in the next verſe, and agrees with Ezek. xli. 6. the Jewiſh doctors ſay [r], there were 38 of them, 15 on the north, 15 on the ſouth, and eight on the weſt; they that were to the north and ſouth, were five upon five, and five over them; and they that were to the weſt were three upon three, and two over them; upper rooms or chambers were rare in heathen temples [s]: theſe chambers were for the prieſts, where they lodged, and laid up their garments, and eat their holy things; and were emblems of congregated churches, where the true members thereof, who are prieſts to God, have communion with him, and partake of divine things.

[k] Apud Theophil. ad Autolyc. l. 3. p. 131. [l] So Gerard. Voſſ. Chron. Sacr. Iſagoge, diſſert. 8. c. 7. p. 128. [m] Vid. Vitring. Hypotypoſ. Hiſt. Sacr. p. 43. [n] Apud Euſeb. præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 34. [o] אטמים שקפים apertas clauſas, Vatablus; perſpectui accommodas, clauſas, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. parietem, V. L. Montanus. [p] על קיר ſuper [q] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 3. §. 2.

℣. 6. And the nethermoſt chamber was five cubits broad, &c.] The nethermoſt row of them, which were upon the firſt floor: and the middle was ſix cubits broad, and the third was ſeven cubits broad; ſo that the middlemoſt was a cubit larger than the loweſt, and the higheſt a cubit larger than that: the reaſon of which was, for without in the wall of the houſe be made narrowed reſts round about; or rebatements; the thickneſs of the wall, as it was raiſed, became narrower at the height of every five cubits; thus the wall being ſuppoſed to be ſix cubits broad, as in Ezek. xli. 5. when it came to be five cubits high, it was narrowed a cubit, which left a projection, rebatement or bench for the beams of the firſt chambers to be laid upon, which made the ſecond row of chambers broader by a cubit; and the ſame being obſerved in the next ſtory, made the higheſt a cubit broader than the middlemoſt: and this was done, that the beams ſhould not be faſtened in the walls of the houſe; or be inſerted into them, which could not be done without making holes in it; and theſe holes could not be made without an iron inſtrument, and which was not to be uſed, as the next words ſhew; whereas by the above method the beams of the chambers could be laid upon the buttreſſes, benches or rebatements left, without the uſe of any: the gradual enlargement of theſe chambers, as they roſe higher, may denote the enlargement of the church of God both as to numbers, gifts and grace, the nearer it comes to the heavenly ſtate, as in the ſpiritual and perſonal reign of Chriſt.

℣. 7. And the houſe, when it was in building, &c.] And all the while it was building: was built of ſtone made ready, before it was brought thither; being hewn or ſquared by the builders and ſtone-ſquarers of Solomon and Hiram, ch. v. 18. wherefore the builders had nothing more to do than to lay them in their proper places in the building; it was built with theſe ſtones quite up to the cieling, as Joſephus ſays [t]; and theſe ſo admirably poliſhed, and ſo artificially joined together, that not the leaſt ſign of an ax, or of any working-tool, could be diſcerned in them: ſo that there was neither hammer, nor ax, nor any tool of iron heard in the houſe while it was in building; the firſt of theſe obſervations ſhews, that none are to be laid in the ſpiritual building of the church, but ſuch as are firſt hewed and ſquared by the Spirit, grace and word of God; or who have an experience of the grace of God, are ſound in the faith, and of becoming lives and converſations; and the other denotes, that ſuch as are therein, whether miniſters or members, ſhould do all they do for the edification of the church, in a quiet and peaceable manner, without clamour, contention, jars and tumults.

℣. 8. The door of the middle chamber was in the right ſide of the houſe, &c.] The ſouth ſide of it: and they went up with winding ſtairs into the middle chamber; which were without ſide the chambers, and which winded about for the ſake of taking up leſs room, and which led up to the door of the middle chamber, on the ſouth of which they went into it; according to the Vulgate Latin and Tigurine verſions, they went up in the form of a cockle, or the ſhell of a ſnail; in like manner as was the aſcent of the temple, of Pan at Alexandria, as Strabo [u] relates: and out of the middle into the third; the third chamber, and by winding ſtairs up to that; and the like might be on the north ſide, though not expreſſed, and on the weſt: the Jews ſay [w]; that in the ſecond temple, theſe winding-ſtairs went from the north eaſt to the north-weſt, whereby they went up to the roof of the chambers, and ſo to the ſouth and weſt; with this compare Ezek. xli. 7. and which may repreſent the windings and turnings of God's people in this preſent ſtate, their many afflictions and tribulations, thro' which they paſs from one ſtate to another.

℣. 9. So he built the houſe, and finiſhed it, &c.] The body of it, the walls of the holy, and moſt holy place, with the chambers on the ſides of them, and the porch at the end that led into them: and covered the houſe with beams and boards of cedar; with hollow boards, as the Targum, which formed an arch cieling to it, and made it look very grand and beautiful; and then over them were laid beams and planks of cedar, not properly as a flat roof to it, but rather as a flooring for other buildings; for upon this, as in the next verſe, there were chambers built.

℣. 10. And then he built chambers againſt all the houſe, five cubits high, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the ſame chambers in ℣. 5, 6. here made mention of again for the ſake of giving the height of them, not before given; but they were built againſt, or upon the wall of the houſe, theſe againſt, or rather upon the whole houſe itſelf: and are the chambers referred to in the notes on ℣. 2. which conſiſting of three ſtories of 90 cubits, raiſed the whole houſe to an equal height with the porch, 2 Chron. iii. 4. as is there intended [x]; theſe are the upper chambers in 2 Chron. iii. 9. and they reſted on the houſe with timber of cedar; or on the timber of cedar, the beams of cedar, with which the houſe was covered, as in the preceding verſes; on theſe the chambers reſted, being built upon them; and in one of theſe chambers the diſciples might be after Chriſt's aſcenſion, Acts i. 13.

℣. 11. And the word of the Lord came to Solomon, &c.] The word of prophecy, as the Targum, foretelling what would be the caſe of this building, according to the obedience or diſobedience of him, and the people of Iſrael; which was brought to him either by an impulſe of the Spirit of God upon him; or by the hand of a prophet, as Kimchi thinks; and ſome of the Jewiſh writers [y], as he particularly, name Abijah the Shilonite, as the prophet that was ſent with this meſſage to him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 12. Concerning this houſe with thou art in building,

5

[r] Miſn. Middot, c. 4. §. 3.
[s] Pauſan. Laconic. ſive. l. 3. p. 190.
[t] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 3. §. 2.
[u] Geograph. l. 17. p. 547.
[w] Miſn. Middot, c. 4. §. 5. See Lightfoot's Proſpect of the Temple, &c. c. 12. p. 1071.
[x] Vid. Joſeph. Antiqu. ut ſupra.
[y] Seder Olam Rabba, c 20. p. 53.

building, &c.] Or with respect to that, these things are to be said as from the Lord: if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them; even all the laws of God, moral, ceremonial and judicial; and this respects not only Solomon personally, but his successors, and even all the people of Israel: then will I perform my covenant with thee, which I spake unto David thy father; by Nathan the prophet; not only that he should build an house for God, which should be a settled dwelling-place, but that his own house and kingdom should be established for a long time to come, and his posterity should enjoy the presence of God in this house, provided regard was had to the precepts and ordinances of the Lord.

℣. 13. And I will dwell among the children of Israel, &c.] In this house now building, and which was in the middle of the land, and where he would meet with them, and accept their sacrifices, not only of slain beasts, but of prayer and praise: and will not forsake my people Israel; and leave them to the mercy of their enemies, and to be carried captive by them, but protect and defend them.

℣. 14. So Solomon built the house, and finished it.] He went on with it until he had compleated it, animated and encouraged by the promise of the divine presence in it, provided a proper regard was had to the will and ways of God. Abarbinel thinks the above message was sent him in the midst of his work, to strengthen and caution him from a dependence on the continuance of the fabrick, because of the strength of it; since its perpetuity depended on his, his successors, and the peoples conduct and behaviour; wherefore conscious to himself of his own integrity, and hoping well of posterity, he was not discouraged, but proceeded in his undertaking until he had brought it to perfection.

℣. 15. And he built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar, &c.] For as yet he had only built the stone walls of it without, but now he wainscotted it with cedar boards: and not only them, but both the floor of the house, and the walls of the cieling; or from the floor of the house, unto the walls of the cieling; that is, from the floor including that, to the walls on each side, reaching up to the cieling, he covered on the inside with wood; of one sort or another, cedar or fir, or both: particularly he covered the floor of the house with planks of fir; which Hiram sent him, ch. v. 8, 10. which is differently interpreted; by Josephus cypress; by others, as the Tigurine version, pine-tree wood; it is very probable it was of the cedar kind, and not the floor only, but the cieling also, 2 Chron. iii. 5.

℣. 16. And he built 20 cubits on the sides of the house, &c.] At the end or extremity of it, as the Targum; that is, he built the most holy place, which was 20 cubits long, at the end of the holy place, which he wainscotted as the other: both the floor and the walls with boards of cedar; or from the floor including that, to the walls on each side from wall to wall, and taking in them, they were all lined with cedar wood: he even built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the most holy place; which explains what building is spoken of, and that the inside of that was covered with cedar from bottom to top.

℣. 17. And the house, that is, the temple before it, &c.] The holy place, which was before the holy of holies: was 40 cubits long; and which, with the most holy place, being 20 cubits, as in the preceding verse, made the length of the whole house 60 cubits, as in ℣. 2.

℣. 18. And the cedar of the house within, &c.] With which the inside of the place was lined: was carved with knops; of an oval form; so the Targum says, they had the appearance of eggs; and Ben Gersom likewise, that they were in the form of eggs: and open flowers; not in the figure of buds, but flowers blown, and open, as lilies and others; so the the Targum: all was cedar; the wainscotting of the house, the sides of it at least, if not the floor, and the carved work of it; and this was done, that the gold might be laid upon it, which could not be done on stone as on wood: and all was so covered, that there was no stone seen: of which the outward walls were built: all this denotes the inward beauty of the church, and the curious workmanship of the Spirit of God in the hearts of his people, whereby they become all glorious within, adorned with the graces of the blessed Spirit, their stony hearts being kept out of sight, yea, taken away.

℣. 19. And the oracle he prepared in the house within, &c.] In the innermost part of the house, he fitted up the oracle, or speaking place, from whence the Lord spake and gave answer, to receive what was to be put into it: particularly to set there the ark of the covenant of the Lord; even the very same that Moses made, for which David had pitched a tent in Zion, and where it now was; for Solomon made no new ark.

℣. 20. And the oracle in the fore-part, &c.] Which stood in the fore-part of the temple, before a man's face as he entered into it, and went on; or the fore-part of the holy of holies, next to the holy place, was of the dimensions as follows, when the back part of it might be higher at least, and be equal to the holy place, even 30 feet; the fore-part being lower, and left open to let in the light of the candlesticks, and the smoke of the incense, out of the holy place: this was 20 cubits in length, and 20 cubits in breadth, and 20 cubits in the height thereof; and was a perfect square; and as the most holy place may be an emblem of the church triumphant, it may denote the perfection of its heavenly state; so the new Jerusalem is a foursquare, Rev. xxi. 16. and he over-laid it with pure gold; to make it rich, glorious and magnificent, and may denote the glory of the heavenly state, Rev. xxi. 21. and so Florus[z], the Roman historian, calls it the golden heaven, as it were, into which Pompey went, and saw the great secret of the Jewish nation, the ark: and so covered the altar which was of cedar; the altar of incense, which is here mentioned, because it was near the most holy place, ℣. 22. this altar by Moses was made of shittim-wood, but Solomon's was of cedar it seems; unless as the words will bear to be rendered, he covered the altar with cedar[a]; though made of shittim-wood, it had a covering of cedar over it; or if of stone, such a covering was on it, that it might better receive the gold which was afterwards put upon it.

℣. 21. So Solomon overlaid the house within with pure gold, &c.] The inside of the holy of holies with fine gold, which gold amounted to 600 talents, 2 Chron. iii. 8. and these to 7,332,000 ducats of gold, or 3 millions and 45,000 pounds sterling: and he made a partition, by the chains of gold before the oracle; between the holy, and the most holy, and were were inſtead of a vail in the tabernacle of Moſes between them; or here was alſo a vail beſide the partition made by chains of gold acroſs the oracle; for the partition was a wall of the thickneſs of a cubit, as Maimonides [b] ſays; and in 2 Chron. iii. 14. expreſs mention is made of a vail of blue, &c. and in imitation of this had the heathens their deities within vails [c]: and he overlaid it with gold; the partition-wall.

[z] De Gest. Roman, l. 3. c. 5.

[a] יצף ארז operuit cedro, Montanus.

℣. 22. And the whole houſe he overlaid with gold, &c.] Both the holy place, and the moſt holy place: until he had finiſhed all the houſe; in this ſplendid and glorious manner: alſo the whole altar that was by the oracle; the altar of incenſe, which ſtood juſt before the entrance into the oracle, or moſt holy place: he overlaid with gold; he overlaid it all over with gold; hence it is called the golden altar, and was an emblem of the excellent and effectual mediation and interceſſion of Chriſt, Rev. viii. 3, 4. Agreeable to this account Eupolemus, an heathen writer [d], teſtifies, that the whole houſe, from the floor to the roof, was covered with gold, as well as with cedar and cypreſs wood, that the ſtone work might not appear; and ſo the capitol at Rome, perhaps in imitation of this temple, its roofs and tiles were gilded with gold [e]; a magnificent temple, like this, was at Upſal in Switzerland, as Olaus Magnus relates [f].

℣ 23. And within the oracle he made two cherubim of olive-tree, &c.] Or of the oil-tree, as in Iſ. xli. 19. ſee Neh. viii. 15. for there are other trees beſides olives, out of which oil is preſſed, as pine-trees, cypreſs-trees, &c. and which ſome think are here meant; though the Targum interprets it of the olive-tree: theſe cherubim are different from thoſe made by Moſes, and were beſides them; theſe were larger than they; theſe were made of olive-wood, they of gold; theſe ſtood on the floor of the houſe, they at the two ends of the mercy-ſeat, and were made out of it, and were with it in this holy place in Solomon's temple: theſe two cherubim may be emblems of the angels in their greatneſs and glory, who are always in the preſence of God, behold his face, and wait to do his will; or it may be rather of the two witneſſes, ſaid to be the two olive-trees ſtanding before the God of the whole earth, Rev. xi. 3, 4. who have boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all, and have ſight and knowledge of the myſteries of the ark and mercy-ſeat; have their commiſſion from heaven, and ſpeak according to the oracles of God; theſe are ſaid to be of image-work, 2 Chron. iii. 10. i. e. of various forms, as the face of a man, a lion, an ox, and eagle, Ezek. i. 10. Dr. Lightfoot thinks [g] they reſembled the two Teſtaments, which in their beginning and end reach the two ſides of the world, the creation and the laſt judgment, and in the middle do ſweetly join the one to the other: each ten cubits high; half as high as the moſt holy place; emblems either of the high angels, thoſe thrones, dominions, principalities and powers, or of men of uncommon ſize as to their gifts and grace.

℣. 24. And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, &c.] When ſtretched out on one ſide: and five cubits the other wing of the cherub; on the other ſide him: from the uttermoſt part of the one wing, to the uttermoſt part of the other wing, were ten cubits; half the breadth of the houſe.

℣. 25. And the other cherub was ten cubits, &c.] That is, its wings ſtretched out meaſured ſo many cubits, as did thoſe of the other: both the cherubim were of one meaſure, and of one ſize; of the ſame height and ſtature, of the ſame breadth of their wings, and of the ſame bulk of their bodies; they were of image-work, 2 Chron. iii. 10. very probably in the form of men: and this uniformity may denote the perfect agreement of angels; or elſe the conſent of the true, faithful witneſſes of Chriſt in all ages, who have all agreed in the perſon, office and grace of Chriſt, as repreſented by the mercy-ſeat and ark, which theſe cherubim covered with their wings.

℣. 26. The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and ſo was it of the other cherub.] Which is repeated from ℣. 23. that it might be obſerved, being of an extraordinary ſize.

℣. 27. And he ſet the cherubim within the inner houſe, &c.] The holy of holies: and they ſtretched forth the wings of the cherubim; the carvers that framed them, they wrought them in that form; or imperſonally, the wings of the cherubim were ſtretched out; this was the poſition of them, they overſhadowed and covered the mercy-ſeat and ark, and even the other two cherubim that were at the ends of the mercy-ſeat: ſo that the wing of the one touched the one wall; the ſouthern wall: and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; the northern wall; they reached from wall to wall, even the whole breadth of the houſe, which was 20 cubits, as their wings thus ſpread were, ℣. 24, 25. 2 Chron. iii. 11. and their wings touched one another in the midſt of the houſe; which was ten cubits, and that was the ſpread of the wings of each of them; ſo that the wing of the right-ſide of the one ſtretched out, touched the wing of the left-ſide of the other in the ſame poſition; in 2 Chron. iii. 13. their faces are ſaid to be inward, or toward the houſe; either toward the holy place, and ſo faced thoſe that came into that and ſaw them; or towards the inner part of the holy of holies, their backs being to the holy place, or their faces were inward, and looked obliquely to each other.

℣. 28. And he overlaid the cherubim with gold.] Which may denote the purity and excellency of angels; or the precious gifts and graces of the Spirit, with which the witneſſes of Chriſt are adorned.

℣. 29. And he carved all the walls of the houſe about with carved figures of cherubim, and palm-trees, and open flowers, &c.] That is, of palm-trees, thoſe in full blow: if the cherubim are an emblem of angels, the palm-trees fitly enough repreſent juſt and upright men, who both appear in the church of God below, and in heaven above; in both which are to be ſeen the open and full-blown flowers of divine grace, eſpecially in the latter ſtate: within and without; on the walls of the moſt holy place, both within and without; and ſo upon the walls of the holy place, in each of which were theſe ſculptures, which were very ornamental, and were emblematical; ſee Ezek. xli. 17, 18, 19, 20.

℣. 30. And the floor af the houſe he overlaid with gold, within and without.] Both the floor of the holy place, and of the holy of holies; ſo the ſtreet of the new Jeruſalem is ſaid to be pure gold, Rev. xxi. 21. this expreſſes the purity and magnificence of it, particularly the holy converſation of them that dwell in the church, in heaven, ſignified hereby.

℣. 31.

[b] Hilchot Beth Habechirah. c. 4. §. 2.
[c] Apulei Metamorph. l. xi. p. 176.
[d] Apud Euſeb. præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 34. p. 450.
[e] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 33. c. 3. Vid. Rycquium de Capitol. Roman. c. 16.
[f] De Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 3. c. 5.
[g] Proſpect of the Temple, c. 15. §. 4.

S

℣. 31. And for the entring of the oracle he made doors of olive-tree, &c.] The door of the holy of holies was a two-leaved or folding-door, made of olive-wood; typical of Chriſt, the door into the church above and below, the way to heaven and eternal life, the true olive-tree: the lintel and ſide-poſts were a fifth part of the wall; four cubits, 20 cubits being the breadth of the oracle; or the lintel was four cubits, 20 being the height of it alſo, ℣. 20.

℣. 32. The two doors alſo were of olive-tree, &c.] The two leaves of the door, as before obſerved, repeated, for the ſake of the ornament of them, as follows: and he carved upon them carvings of cherubims, and palm-trees, and open flowers; as upon the walls, ℣. 29. and overlaid them with gold; the two doors: and ſpread gold upon the cherubims, and upon the palm-trees; thin plates of gold.

℣. 33. So alſo made he for the door of the temple, &c.] The holy place: poſts of olive-tree, a fourth part of the wall; which was five cubits, its breadth being 20; this door was a cubit wider than that into the moſt holy place, more entring into the one than into the other; as more go into the church on earth than into the heavenly glory.

℣. 34. And the two doors were of fir-tree, &c.] The poſts were of olive, but the doors of fir, and they were both folding-doors, as appears by what follows: the two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding; which taking up leſs room, made the paſſage wider, ſee Ezek. xli. 24.

℣. 35. And he carved thereon cherubims, and palm-trees, and open flowers, &c.] As upon the doors of the moſt holy place, ℣. 32. ſee Ezek. xli. 25. and covered them with gold, fitted upon the carved work; plates of gold were fitted, as to the dimenſions of them, to the cherubim, palm-trees, and open flowers.

℣. 36. And he built the inner court, &c.] The court of the prieſts, 2 Chron. iv. 9. ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from the outer court, where the people aſſembled: this was built with three rows of hewed ſtone, and a row of cedar-beams; the rows of ſtones were one upon another, topped with a row of cedar-beams; or rather, the cedar was a lining to the ſtones; and the whole is ſuppoſed to be about three cubits high, and was ſo low, that the people in the outward court might ſee the prieſts miniſtring for them, and could converſe with them; under the ſecond temple, as Maimonides [h] ſays, the court of the prieſts was higher than that of the court of Iſrael two cubits and an half, called the great court, for which doors were made, and theſe overlaid with braſs, 2 Chron. iv. 9.

℣. 37. In the 4th year was the foundation of the houſe of the Lord laid, &c.] The 4th year of Solomon's reign: in the month Zif; ſee the note on ℣. 1.

℣. 38. In the 11th year, &c.] That is, of the reign of Solomon: in the month Bul, which is the 8th month; from the month Abib or Niſan; this month anſwers to part of our October, and part of November; it is the ſame month ſometimes called Marcheſvan; it had the name of Bul, becauſe of the rains which uſually fell in this month, as Kimchi thinks, like a flood; and Noah's flood is called Mabbul, from the ſame root [i], and when all the fruits were withered, and the leaves were fallen from the trees; or, as Jarchi ſuppoſes, becauſe the graſs was conſumed in the field, and they were obliged to mix provender for cattle, deriving the word from another root [k]: in this month was the houſe finiſhed throughout all the parts thereof; the porch, the holy place, and holy of holies, with all the chambers and courts belonging to it: and according to all the faſhion of it; which David had given to Solomon, to frame it by: ſo he was ſeven years in building it; and ſix months, which are not mentioned, only the round number is given, as appears by comparing it with, ℣. 1.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter gives an account of ſome buildings of Solomon for himſelf, ℣. 1—12. and of other things for the uſe of the temple; of two pillars of braſs, ℣. 13—22. of the molten ſea, ℣. 23—26. and of 10 baſes, and 10 lavers on them, ℣. 27—39. with other utenſils and ornaments, 40—57.

℣. 1. But Solomon was building his own houſe 13 years, &c.] He made more haſte with the houſe of God than with his own, for that was but ſeven years in building; which ſhewed greater regard to the honour of God than to his own glory, or even convenience; nor was this built till after that: and finiſhed all his houſe; or houſes he undertook to build, the ſingular for the plural; even the houſe of God, his own palace, and that for the daughter of Pharaoh, and that which is next mentioned, which were in all 20 years a building, ch. ix. 10.

℣. 2. He built alſo the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon, &c.] Beſides the temple, his own palace, and the queen's; ſo called, not becauſe it was built on mount Lebanon, which lay at the northern border of the land, at a great diſtance from Jeruſalem, whereas this was both a magazine of arms, and a court of judicature, ℣. 7. ſee ch. x. 17. Iſ. xxii. 8. neither of which can be ſuppoſed to be far from Jeruſalem; but becauſe not only it was built of the cedars of Lebanon, but in a ſituation, and among groves of trees which reſembled it; it ſeems to have been a ſummer-houſe; and ſo the Targum calls it, a royal houſe of refreſhment: the length was 100 cubits, and the breadth thereof 50 cubits, and the height thereof 30 cubits; ſo that it was in every meaſure larger than the temple; and there was good reaſon for it, ſince into that only the prieſts entered; whereas into this went not only Solomon's family, but his courtiers and nobles, and all foreign ambaſſadors, and whoever had any buſineſs with him, which required various rooms to receive them in: upon four rows of cedar-pillars; or piazzas: with cedar-beams upon the pillars; which laid the floor for the ſecond ſtory.

℣. 3. And it was covered with cedar above the beams, that lay on 45 pillars, 15 in a row.] On the

[h] Hilchot Bethhabechirah, c. 6. §. 3. [i] נבל concidit, Buxtorf. [k] בלה conſumpſit, vel בלל miſcuit, ibi.

the ſecond floor were three rows of pillars, 15 in a row, which made 45, that ſtood to eaſt, north and ſouth; and upon theſe pillars beams, which were the floor of the third ſtory, over which was a roof of cedar-wood.

℣. 4. And there were windows in three rows, &c.] Both in the 2d and 3d ſtories, eaſt, north and ſouth, there being none in the weſt, where the porch ſtood: and light was againſt light in three ranks; or the windows, through which light was let, anſwered to each other.

℣. 5. And all the doors and poſts were ſquare with the windows, &c.] The doors into the ſeveral ſtories and apartments, and the poſts and lintel of them, and the windows over them, were all ſquare: and light was againſt light in three ranks; they anſwered one another as before.

℣. 6. And he made a porch of pillars, &c.] At the weſt end of the houſe: and the length thereof was 50 cubits; anſwerable to the breadth of the houſe: and the breadth thereof 30 cubits; which added to the length of the houſe, made it 130: and the porch was before them; the four rows of cedar-pillars of the houſe, ℣. 2. this porch was either for his guards to keep watch in; or for his courtiers to walk in, ſheltered from rain or the like; or perhaps only for grandeur and magnificence: and the other pillars and the thick beam were before them; the pillars of the porch, on which were laid beams of cedar for a ſtory over them, and ſo on; theſe were before and right againſt, and anſwered to the pillars of the houſe.

℣. 7. Then he made a porch for the throne, &c.] The ivory throne on which he ſat to hear and try cauſes, ch. x. 18. where he might judge, even the porch of judgment; which had its name from thence; this was either in his houſe in the foreſt of Lebanon, or in his palace at Jeruſalem; the former ſeems beſt: and it was covered with cedar from one ſide of the floor unto the other; that is, the whole floor.

℣. 8. And his houſe where he dwelt, &c.] Which was properly his dwelling-place, that part of the houſe where he uſually reſided: had another court within the porch, which was of the like work; a court between that and the porch, called the inner court, 2 Kings xx. 4. Solomon made alſo a houſe for Pharaoh's daughter, whom he had taken to wife; ſee ch. iii. 1. like unto this porch; being built of the ſame ſort of materials, though in a different form.

℣. 9. All theſe were of coſtly ſtones, &c.] Marble, porphyry, &c. according to the meaſure of hewed ſtones, ſawed with ſaws, within and without; they were all hewed, and ſquared, and poliſhed, and ſo they appeared both on the inſide of the building, and without: even from the foundation unto the coping; from the bottom to the top: and ſo on the outſide toward the great court; where the people uſed to aſſemble when they had cauſes to be tried, and was adjoining to the king's houſe.

℣. 10. And the foundation was of coſtly ſtones, even great ſtones, &c.] Of a great price, and very large: ſtones of ten cubits, and ſtones of eight cubits; ſome of one meaſure, and ſome of another; not ſo many cubits ſquare, but of ſolid meaſure; they were ſo many in length.

℣. 11. And above were coſtly ſtones, &c.] Above the foundation, from thence to the top of the buildings; the whole walls were made of ſuch quite up to the cieling: after the meaſure of hewed ſtones; which, according to the Rabbins, as Kimchi ſays, were five hands breadth: and cedars; beams of cedars over them, or theſe, both the foundation and the walls were lined with them.

℣. 12. And the great court round about, &c.] Which ſurrounded Solomon's houſe: was with three rows of hewed ſtones, and a row of cedar-beams; theſe rows were one upon another, and were a wall to the court, which were either topped with a row of cedar-wood, or that was a lining to the ſtones: for the inner court of the houſe of the Lord; or rather as, or like to that, as appears from ch. vi. 36. and for the porch of the houſe; not the temple, but Solomon's houſe.

℣. 13. And king Solomon ſent and fetched Hiram out of Tyre.] Not the king of Tyre, but an artificer in it, after deſcribed, whom Solomon had heard of, and upon his requeſt Huram ſent him to him, 2 Chron. ii. 13. his name is called Hyperon by Clemens of Alexandria[l].

℣. 14. He was a widow's ſon of the tribe of Naphtali, &c.] In 2 Chron. ii. 14. his mother is ſaid to be of the daughters of Dan, as ſhe might be, and yet her ſon of the tribe of Naphtali; for either ſhe was of the city of Dan, which is placed in the tribe of Naphtali[m], or her mother was of the tribe of Dan; and therefore ſhe is ſaid to be of the daughters of Dan, when her father was of the tribe of Naphtali, as it is expreſſed by the Targum on 2 Chron. ii. 14. and in which way moſt of the Jewiſh commentators reconcile this; or ſhe was of Dan, and her huſband of Naphtali; beſides, if there was any miſtake, it muſt be aſcribed, not to the ſacred hiſtorians, but to the king of Tyre, whoſe words they are in the above place, and who might not be ſo well acquainted with the tribe this man and his parents were of: and his father was a man of Tyre; not a Tyrian by birth, but one who had dwelt there a while, and therefore ſo called, as Obed-edom, for a like reaſon, is called the Gittite: a worker in braſs; and he was filled with wiſdom, and underſtanding, and cunning to work all works in braſs; which might be true both of the father and of the ſon, and eſpecially of the ſon, who had improved upon his father's knowledge and inſtructions; and who was ſkilful to work in other things beſides braſs, as gold, ſilver, iron, ſtone, timber, purple, blue and fine linen, crimſon, and all ſorts of engraving, and every device that could be put to him by the moſt ingenious workmen that either David or Solomon had, 2 Chron. ii. 14. but this is only mentioned, becauſe it was in ſuch work he was only employed by Solomon; and it ſeems by the mode of expreſſion, that beſides his natural genius, and his diligence and induſtry, he was filled with wiſdom from God more immediately for this ſervice, as Bezaleel and Aholiab was for the ſervice of the tabernacle: and he came to king Solomon, and wrought all his work; in braſs, as follows.

℣. 15. For he caſt two pillars of braſs 18 cubits high a piece, &c.] In 2 Chron. iii. 15. they are ſaid to be 35 cubits high, which muſt be underſtood of the length or heighth of them both; and whereas that would allow but 17 cubits and a half to a pillar, either the round number of 18 is uſed, or half a cubit in each may be allowed, either for the baſe or pedeſtal into which they were put; or the chapiter at the top of them, into which they might go ſuch a length, and ſo only what was ſeen ſeen is deſcribed: and a line of 12 cubits did compaſs either of them about; that was the circumference of them, and therefore their diameter muſt be four cubits. Eupolemus, an heathen writer [n], ſpeaks of theſe pillars, but he makes the circuit of them to be but 10 cubits; and ſays, they were equal in height with the temple, and ſtood on the right and left, and were made of braſs, and covered with gold, the thickneſs of a finger.

[l] Stromat. l. 1. p. 332.

[m] Vid. Adrichom. Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 105. Fuller's Piſgah-ſight, 107.

℣. 16. And he made two chapiters of molten braſs to ſet upon the tops of the pillars, &c.] Theſe were large ovals in the form of a crown, as the word ſignifies; or like two crowns joined together, as Ben Gerſom; or bowls, as they are called, ℣. 41. the height of the one chapiter was five cubits, and the height of the other chapiter was five cubits; in 2 Kings xxv. 17. they are ſaid to be but three cubits high; but that is to be underſtood only of the ornamented part of them, the wreathen work and pomegranates on them, as there expreſſed; here it includes with that, the part below un-ornamented.

℣. 17. And nets of chequer-work, and wreaths of chain-work, for the chapiters which were upon the top of the pillars, &c.] Theſe were the ornaments of the chapiters; the former being like thick branches of trees, with their boughs and leaves curiouſly wrought, as the word ſignifies, and the latter like fringes, ſuch as the Jews wore at the ſkirt of their garments: ſeven for the one chapiter, and ſeven for the other chapiter; perhaps with four rows of chequer-work, and three of chain-work.

℣. 18. And he made the pillars, &c.] Or adorned them in this manner: and two rows round about upon the one net-work, to cover the chapiters that were upon the top, with pomegranates; that is, there were two rows of figures like pomegranates upon the net or branch-work that covered the chapiters that were on the top of the pillars; and Kimchi owns, that ſome copies ſo read, on the top of the pillars, inſtead of pomegranates, though he thinks it a miſtake: and ſo did he for the other chapiter; put two rows about that alſo.

℣. 19. And the chapiters that were upon the top of the pillars, were of lily-work in the porch, &c.] Or ſuch as was in the porch of the temple; the work was like that wrought in the form of the flower of lilies open: four cubits; of the five cubits of which the chapiters conſiſted, four of them were of lily-work, the two rows of pomegranates taking up the other; though Dr. Lightfoot [o] thinks, that at the head of the pillar was a border or circle of lily-work, that ſtood out four cubits under the chapiter, into and along the porch; a four cubit-circle, after the manner of a ſpread lily.

℣. 20. And the chapiters upon the two pillars had pomegranates alſo above, over againſt the belly which was by the net-work, &c.] The ſupplement is needleſs, according to the above writer; the ſenſe being only, that the chapiters were above the lily-work, which wrought out as far as the belly of the chapiters, or the middle cubit of them, which the pomegranates filled up: and the pomegranates were 200, in rows round about upon the other chapiter; there were ſo many in each, which in all made 400, as in ℣. 42. In Jer. lii. 23. it is ſaid, there were 96 on a ſide, and yet 100 round about; the meaning of which is, either that there were 24 to every wind, as the word there is, and four on the four angles, and ſo in all 100; or, as the above learned writer, when the pillars were ſet to the wall, only 96 appeared in ſight in a row, the other four being hid behind them.

℣. 21. And he ſet up the pillars in the porch of the temple, &c.] Not at the door or entrance into the temple, as Jarchi, but at the entrance into the porch: and he ſet up the right pillar; or the pillar on the right hand as you went in, which was on the north, the front being eaſt: and called the name thereof Jachin; which ſignifies he will eſtabliſh, i. e. the houſe to which here was an entrance, ſo long as the pure worſhip of God ſhould continue in it: and he ſet up the left pillar; or the pillar on the left hand, which was to the ſouth, unleſs the poſition of them was as you come out: and called the name thereof Boaz; which ſignifies in him, or it, is ſtrength, namely, in the Lord that dwelt there; for this has no reſpect to Boaz, a prince of the houſe of Judah, from whom all its kings ſprung, as the Targum, in 2 Chron. iii. 17. ſuggeſts. Theſe names were given them not by Hiram the artificer, but by Solomon, and which were very expreſſive; not ſo much of the nobility of the kingdom of the houſe of David, as the Targum intimates; or of the church of God, the pillar and ground of truth; as of Chriſt himſelf, and the two natures in him, and of his royal dignity, ſignified by the crowns or chapiters on them, decorated as they were, whoſe legs are as pillars of marble, and in whom are righteouſneſs and ſtrength; which is no ſmall encouragement to thoſe who are entring into the church of God the temple was a type of; who, ſhould they fear, being feeble and weak, that they ſhould totter and fall, here ſtands Jachin, to let them know the Lord will eſtabliſh and ſettle them; or that they ſhould never hold out to the end, here is Boaz to direct them to Chriſt, in whom their ſtrength lies, ſee Cant. iv. 15. Iſ. xlv. 24. Alluſion is had to theſe, Rev. iii. 12.

℣. 22. And upon the top of the pillars was lily-work, &c.] Which ſeems to be repeated from ℣. 19. and confirms that: and ſo was the work of the pillars finiſhed; in the manner deſcribed.

℣. 23. And he made a molten ſea, &c.] A large veſſel made of molten braſs, which, becauſe of the great quantity of water it held, is called a ſea; as it was uſual with the Jews to call a large collection of waters a ſea, as the ſea of Tiberias and Galilee. This was made by the man of Tyre, as the pillars, by the order of Solomon, and anſwered to the brazen laver in the tabernacle, only larger than that; and was not only for the prieſts to waſh their hands and feet in, but to dip upon occaſion, and by the Jews [p] is expreſly ſaid to be a dipping-place for the prieſts, ſee 2 Chron. iv. 6. ten cubits from the one brim to the other; which was the diameter of it: it was round all about; ſphærical or circular; not as an hemiſphere, as Joſephus [q], and Procopius Gazæus, but rather cylindrical: and his height was five cubits; from the bottom of it, not including the pedeſtal of oxen on which it ſtood: and a line of 30 cubits did compaſs it round about; this was the circumference of it; which anſwers to the diameter of 10 cubits, or near it, a round number being given not ſtrictly mathematical.

℣. 24. And under the brim of it round about there were knops compaſſing it, &c.] Of an oval form, and therefore the Targum calls them figures of eggs; in 2 Chron. iv. 3. they are ſaid to have the ſimilitude of oxen, being like the heads of oxen, and the

[n] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 34. p. 450. Hieroſ. Yoma, fol. 41. 1. [q] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 3. §. 5. [o] Proſpect of the Temple, c. 13. §. 2. p. 1075. [p] T.

the other parts oval; or these were in the form of gourds, as sometimes the word is rendered, 2 Kings iv. 39. which had on them the figures of the heads of oxen, and might serve as cocks to let out the water: ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about it; and as the circumference was 30 cubits, there must be 300 of these in the circuit: the knops were cast in two rows, when it was cast; for these were cast together with the sea, and being in two rows, there must be in all 600 of them.

℣. 25. It stood upon twelve oxen, &c.] Figures of them in brass, of full proportion: three looking towards the north, and three looking towards the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east; and so turned to the four quarters of the world: and the sea was set above upon them; as it were on the backs of them, and their mouths served as spouts or cocks, to let water out of it on all sides: and all their hinder parts were inward; that they might not be seen, and which met in a center; they that were north came against those that were south, and they in the east met with those to the west. The brass of the sea, according to Jacob Leon [r], weighed 1800 Arobas, and, with 12 oxen under, 32,500; each Aroba being 25 pounds weight.

℣. 26. And it was an hand-breadth thick, &c.] Or four fingers, as in Jer. lii. 21. and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies; embroidered and engraven on it for ornament-sake: it contained 2000 baths; which is reckoned about 500 barrels of water; it was filled by the Gibeonites; in 2 Chron. iv. 5. it is said to receive and hold 3000 baths, which the Jewish writers [s] thus reconcile; they suppose here it means so many baths of liquid, as the Targum expresses, there of dry measure, which might be heaped up, and so contain more; but as this was a vessel for water, and this distinction seems to answer no purpose, it may be better to observe, that in common, for the use of the priests, whether for washing their hands and feet, or dipping their bodies, it had no more than 2000 baths in it, but if filled up to the brim, it would hold 3000. How a vessel of such dimensions should hold so much is difficult to account for; the Rabbins say [t], that in the two upper cubits of it it was circular, and in the three lower cubits square, by which they imagine it would hold more, and the position of it on the oxen seems to countenance this; but very probable it was wider, and bellied out in the lower part of it, and so more capacious; but of the contents of this, according to mathematical rules, see a treatise of bishop Cumberland's [u]. It is said [w] of a temple of Neptune's, in the forepart of it were two signs of him, and another of Amphytrite, and that was a brazen sea. This brazen sea of Solomon was typical of Christ, the fountain opened to wash in for uncleanness, by all that are made priests unto God; and this being larger than the laver in the tabernacle, may denote the greater efficacy of Christ's blood than in any thing in the law of Moses, to cleanse from sin; and the larger provision made for it, not only for Israel, but for all the people of God in the several nations of the world, in the four quarters of it; being published, and proclaimed, and directed to by the twelve apostles of Christ, and by all Gospel-ministers since, signified by oxen for their laboriousness and strength. In the second temple there was no sea, nor bases after-mentioned, nor lavers, but one, which stood between the porch and the altar, which was for the priests to wash their hands and feet at [x].

℣. 27. And he made 10 bases of brass, &c.] Seats, stands, or settles for the 10 lavers aforementioned: four cubits was the length of one base, and four cubits the breadth thereof; as broad as it was long, and so a square, that the laver might stand firm upon it: and three cubits the height of it; from the ground-plates to the surface, that the priests might be able to reach the lavers, and wash their sacrifices.

℣. 28. And the work of the bases was on this manner, &c.] The following was the form in which they were made: they had borders; plates of brass all around them, which inclosed them: and the borders were between the ledges; which were short staves or bars of brass, that stood upright all around, like the staves of a cart on each side, or the rails of a balcony, only in double rows; and between these were the borders or plates of brass.

℣. 29. And on the borders that were between the ledges, were lions, oxen, and cherubims, &c.] The figures of them, for ornament-sake; the cherubim, being distinguished from lions and oxen, might be figures of men, or else of eagles, as Josephus [y], see Ezek. i. 10. and upon the ledges there was a base above; a flat piece of brass laid upon the top of the staves or bars: and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work; these, according to Dr. Lightfoot [z], whom I chiefly follow in this account, were shelving plates of brass at the bottom of the borders and bars, where the priests washed the sacrifices; the filth of which ran off the easier, through the slopiness of them.

℣. 30. And every base had four brazen wheels, and plates of brass, &c.] Flat pieces or planks of brass, on which the wheels stood, and not on the bare floor; so that these wheels seem only to serve as supporters, not to carry the laver from place to place, as is usually said; for they were not like chariot-wheels, on two sides of the carriage, but set one at each square; and besides, when the lavers were placed upon them, they were fixed in a certain place, ℣. 39. and the four corners thereof had undersetters; or shoulders [a], or pillars, which were placed on the plates of brass the wheels were; and served with them to support the lavers when laid upon the bases, and so were of the same use as mens shoulders, to bear burdens on them: under the laver were undersetters molten; cast as, and when and where, the bases were, and the plates on which they stood; this explains the use they were of, being under the laver; these pillars stood at the four corners of the base: at the side of every addition; made of thin work, ℣. 29. they stood by the side of, or within-side the sloping shelves.

℣. 31. And the mouth of it within the chapiter, and above, was a cubit, &c.] On the lid of the base rose up a lesser base, called the chapiter, which was circular, like a coronet, as the word signifies, the inside of which was hollow, for the lower part of the laver to rest in; this ascended streight up half a cubit, and then widening, went up half a cubit more, and so in its whole height, as here a cubit; the circuit or circumference of which is called the the mouth of the baſe, into which the feet of the laver was ſet, the meaſure of which is next given: but the mouth thereof was round, after the work of the baſe, a cubit and an half; which was either the circumference or the diameter of it; one ſhould think the latter: and alſo upon the mouth of it were gravings, with their borders, four-ſquare, not round; though the mouth was round, the border of it was four-ſquare, which had figures engraved thereon, perhaps the ſame as on the other borders, lions, oxen, and cherubim.

[r] Relation of memorable things in the Temple, ch. 4. p. 21. [s] Shilte Hagibborim, c. 27. fol. 23. 4. [t] T. Bab. Eruvin, fol. 14. 2. [u] Of Scripture-weights and measures, c. 3. p. 93, &c. [w] Pausanias Corinthiaca, sive, l. 2. p. 87. [x] Shilte Hagibborim, c. 27. fol. 24. 2. [y] Ut supra. [z] Prospect of the Temple, ch. 38. §. 2. [a] כתפת humeri, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

℣. 32. And under the borders were four wheels, &c.] Not under the borders laſt mentioned, but thoſe in ℣. 29. and the axle-trees of the wheels were joined to the baſe; to the four ſides of it: and the height of a wheel was a cubit and half a cubit; that is, from the plate of braſs on which it ſtood, to the axis or ſemicircle of it; ſo that the higheſt part of the ring being alſo a cubit and an half, reached to the top of the baſe, it being but three cubits high, ℣. 27.

℣. 33. And the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot-wheel, &c.] In the ſame form and faſhion as one of them; the Targum is, "like a chariot of glory;" a ſplendid one, curiouſly wrought; unleſs reference is had in it to the chariot of Ezekiel's viſion: their axle-trees, and their naves, and their felloes, and their ſpokes were all molten; caſt together when the baſe was.

℣. 34. And there were four underſetters to the four corners of one baſe, &c.] Or pillars, as in ℣. 30. and the underſetters were of the baſe itſelf; they were caſt together, and of the ſame piece of metal with it.

℣. 35. And in the top of the baſe was there a round compaſs of half a cubit high, &c.] The ſame with the chapiter, ℣. 31. which roſe up ſtrait half a cubit, and widening upwards half a cubit more, here called the round compaſs of it: and on the top of the baſe, the ledges thereof, and the borders thereof, were of the ſame; of the ſame piece of braſs with the baſe, all being caſt together.

℣. 36. For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, &c.] In this, and the preceding verſe, a different word is uſed, tranſlated ledges, from that in ℣. 28, 29. the Targum renders it axle-trees; as if the axle-trees of the wheels, and the borders, circumferences and rings of them were meant, in which were the followings gravings: it literally ſignifies hands or handles; and Procopius Gazæus ſays, that the baſes had, in the upper part of them, forms of hands holding a circle like a crown: he graved cherubims, lions, and palm-trees, according to the proportion of every one; theſe figures were made as large as the plates of the ledges, and the borders would allow room for: and the addition round about; which were ſloping ſhelves of braſs around the baſe, ℣. 29. theſe were ornamented in like manner.

℣. 37. After this manner he made the ten baſes, &c.] This was the form and faſhion of them as above deſcribed: all of them had one caſting, one meaſure, and one ſize; they were all caſt into the ſame mould, and were exactly alike in their form, figures and bigneſs, and each weighed 2000 talents, and the weight of a talent was 93 pounds and upwards, according to Jacob Leon [b].

℣. 38. Then made he ten lavers of braſs, &c.] There was but one in the tabernacle of Moſes, and what became of that is not known: ſome Jewiſh writers [c] ſay, it was placed in Solomon's temple, and theſe lavers, five on the right, and five on the left of it; however, here were enough provided for the purpoſe for the prieſts to waſh their burnt-offerings in, 2 Chron. iv. 6. and were typical of the large proviſion made in the blood of Chriſt for the cleanſing of his people; whoſe works, ſervices and ſacrifices, as well as perſons and garments, need continual waſhing in that blood; ſee Rom. xii. 1. Rev. vii. 13. one laver contained 40 baths; and a bath, according to biſhop Cumberland [d], held ſeven wine-gallons, and two quarts and half a pint: and every laver was four cubits; that is, ſquare; this was the diameter of it: and upon every of the ten baſes, one laver; for which they were made, even to ſet the lavers on, and were exactly of the ſame meaſure.

℣. 39. And he put five baſes on the right ſide of the houſe, &c.] On the ſouth ſide, which is commonly underſtood; that is, of the courts of the prieſts, where they were placed for their uſe: and five on the left ſide of the houſe; on the north, as it muſt be, if the ſouth is on the right; though as the entrance into the temple was at the eaſt, when a man went in, the north muſt be on the right, and the ſouth on the left; and this ſeems to be the poſition, by what follows: and he ſet the ſea on the right ſide of the houſe eaſtward over-againſt the ſouth; and therefore the right ſide muſt be the north, which is oppoſite to the ſouth; the ſea ſeems to have ſtood north-eaſt, which was for the prieſts to waſh in before they entered on divine ſervice, ſee the note on Exod. xxx. 20. hence it became cuſtomary with the heathens, to waſh before they performed any religious worſhip [e], particularly the hands and feet [f].

℣. 40. And Hiram made the lavers, and the ſhovels, and the baſons, &c.] The lavers are not the 10 before mentioned, of the make of which an account is before given; but theſe, according to Jarchi and Ben Gerſom, are the ſame with the pots, ℣. 45. and ſo they are called in 2 Chron. iv. 11. the uſe of which, as they ſay, was to put the aſhes of the altar into; as the ſhovels, next mentioned, were a ſort of beeſoms to ſweep them off, and the baſons were to receive the blood of the ſacrifices, and ſprinkle it; no mention is here made of the altar of braſs he made, but is in 2 Chron. iv. 11. nor of the fleſh-hooks to take the fleſh out of the pots, as in 2 Chron. iv. 16. ſo Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made king Solomon for the houſe of the Lord; what he undertook, and was employed in, he finiſhed, which were all works of braſs; of which a recapitulation is made in the following verſes to the end of the 45th, where they are ſaid to be made of bright braſs, free of all droſs and ruſt; good, as the Targum, even the beſt braſs they were made of; the braſs David took from Hadarezer, 1 Chron. xviii. 8. which Joſephus [g] too much magnifies, when he ſays it was better than gold.

℣. 46. In the plain of Jericho did the king caſt them in the clay-ground, &c.] Which being thick, as the word ſignifies, and ſtiff and cloſe, was fit for ſuch a purpoſe as caſting braſs; of ſuch clay, furnaces

[b] Relation of memorable things in the Temple, c. 4. p. 21.
[c] Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi in 2 Chron iv. 6.
[d] Scripture weights and meaſures, c. 3. p. 70, 71.
[e] Vid. Virgil. Bucolic. eclog. 8. affer aquam, &c. Æneid. 2. attreclare nefas, &c. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 1. l. 7. c. 5. §. 3.
[f] Vid Sperling de bapt. Ethnic. p. 88, 89. 101.
[g] Antiqu.

furnaces of earth uſed to be made to melt metals in; but here were large things to be caſt, as the two pillars, the ſea, the 10 lavers, &c. moulds were made in the ground, and ſo the melted braſs was poured into them, which gave it its different forms; this, no doubt, was done by Hiram, tho' ſaid to be done by the king, becauſe done by his orders: the place where it was done was a part of the plain of Jericho, which lay between Succoth and Zarthan; Succoth was in the tribe of Gad, on the other ſide Jordan; Zarthan was near it on this ſide, in the tribe of Manaſſeh, the ſame that is called Zartanah, ch. iv. 12. and Zaretan, Joſh. iii. 16. and Zeredathah, 2 Chron. iv. 17. The firſt caſters of braſs are ſaid [h] to be Theodorus and Rhœcus, both Samians.

℣. 47. And Solomon left all the veſſels unweighed, becauſe they were exceeding many, &c.] The veſſels of braſs before mentioned, being ſo large, at leaſt ſome of them, and ſo numerous; the Targum is, he laid them up, or placed them; he brought them from whence they were caſt, and put them in the ſanctuary without weighing them: neither was the weight of the braſs found out; or ſearched [i]; it never was enquired into; or, as the Targum, there was no end of it, it was ſo much.

℣. 48. And Solomon made all the veſſels that pertaineth unto the houſe of the Lord, &c.] That is, he ordered them to be made, even all that were in the tabernacle of Moſes; all were new made, excepting the ark, mercy-ſeat, and cherubim: the altar of gold; the altar of incenſe, which was made of cedar, covered with gold, ch. vi. 20. hence called the golden altar, Rev. viii. 3. and the table of gold whereupon the ſhew bread was; this includes all the tables, for there were ten of them, 2 Chron. iv. 8. where they are ſaid to be placed, five on the right-hand, and five on the left; which, according to the Jews [k], were not on the right and left of the temple, but on the right and left of the table of Moſes, and which being placed on the north ſide, theſe muſt be alſo, Exod. xl. 22. there being more tables in the temple than in the tabernacle, may denote the greater proviſion of ſpiritual food in the word and ordinances of the Goſpel-church, of which the temple was a figure, than under the legal diſpenſation.

℣. 49. And the candleſticks of pure gold, five on the right ſide, and five on the left, before the oracle, &c.] Theſe ſtood in the holy-place, where the ſhew-bread tables did, right before the holy of holies; there were ten of theſe as of them, which were placed, as the ſame Jewiſh writers ſay, not on the right and left of the temple, but on the right and left of Moſes's candleſtick, which ſtood on the ſouth ſide, Exod. xl. 24. theſe may denote the greater degree of ſpiritual light in the church of Chriſt, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation than under the law: with the flowers; the figures of flowers, ſuch as were wrought on the candleſtick of Moſes: and the lamps; which were ſeven to each candleſtick, and ſo muſt be in all 70; which may put us in mind of the 70 diſciples of Chriſt, ſome of the firſt lights of the Goſpel-church: and the tongs of gold; which were uſed to take the wicks out of the oil, and put into the lamps.

℣. 50. And the bowls, &c.] To keep the oil in: and the ſnuffers; to trim the lamps with; tho' ſome interpret the word of muſical inſtruments, as the Targum, of pſalteries: and the baſons; which were to receive the blood of the ſacrifices; and Ben Gerſom thinks, particularly the blood of thoſe that were brought into the ſanctuary, ſee Heb. xiii. 11. there were an hundred of them, 2 Chron. iv. 8. and the ſpoons; which held the incenſe: and the cenſers of pure gold; with which the coals were carried from one altar to another, on which the incenſe was burnt; not only thoſe but all the other veſſels were of pure gold: and the hinges of gold, both for the doors of the inner houſe, the moſt holy place, and for the doors of the houſe, to wit, of the temple; the holy of holies and the holy place, the hinges of the doors of each, on which they were hung, and turned, were of gold; ſo grand and magnificent was this edifice, and ſo liberal Solomon in the building of it.

℣. 51. So was ended all the work that king Solomon made for the houſe of the Lord, &c.] Which he ordered to be made to be put into it, either for the ornament of it, or for the uſe and ſervice of it; all was compleatly finiſhed in the ſpace of ſeven years: and Solomon had brought in the things which David his father had dedicated; had laid up for, and devoted to the building of the temple, and for the ſervice of it; not all, but what was left; what was over and above there was a need of; though the Jews commonly ſay, that he made uſe of none of his father's, but built it and furniſhed it at his own expence; for which reaſon he did not begin to build as ſoon as he came to the throne, they ſuppoſe, but ſtayed four years, until he had laid up a ſufficiency of his own to defray the expence of it; but it is certain he made uſe of the braſs his father reſerved for this work, ſee 1 Chron. xviii. 8. and which, perhaps it may be ſaid, is the reaſon it is not mentioned here as laid up: even the ſilver, and the gold, and the veſſels did he put among the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord; he did not convert them to his own uſe, but laid them up in the treaſury of the ſanctuary, for the purchaſe of ſacrifices, the repair of the houſe in future time, &c.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the introduction of the ark into the temple, ℣. 1—9. of the glory of the Lord filling it, ℣. 10, 11. of a ſpeech Solomon made to the people concerning the building of the temple, and how he came to be engaged in it, ℣. 12—21. of a prayer of his he put up on this occaſion, requeſting, that what ſupplications ſoever were made at any time, or on any account, by Iſraelites or ſtrangers, might be accepted by the Lord, ℣. 22—53. and of his bleſſing the people of Iſrael at the cloſe of it, with ſome uſeful exhortations, ℣. 54—61. and of the great number of ſacrifices offered up by him, and the feaſt he made for the people, upon which he diſmiſſed them, ℣. 62—66.

℣. 1.

[h] Pauſan. Arcadica, ſive, l. 8. p. 479. & Bœotica, ſive, l. 9. p. 607.

[i] לא נחקר nec inveſtigari potuerit, Tigurine verſion; non perveſtigatum eſt, Junius, Tremellius, Piſcator. Targum in 2 Chron. iv. 8.

[k] T. Bab. Menachot, fol 98. Kimchi in loc

℣. 1. Then Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, &c.] The judges in the several cities, or senators of the great Sanhedrim, as others; though it is a question whether as yet there was such a court: and all the heads of the tribes; the princes of the 12 tribes: the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel; the principal men of the ancient families in every tribe: unto king Solomon in Jerusalem; these he summoned together to himself there where the temple was built: that they might bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of the city of David, which is Zion; whither David brought it, when he had taken that fort, so called, and dwelt in it; and from this mountain Solomon proposed to bring it up to the temple on a higher mountain, Moriah, not far from one another.

℣. 2. And all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto king Solomon at the feast, &c.] Not of tabernacles, as the Targum on 2 Chron. v. 3. and so Jarchi; though that was in the same month next mentioned, and began on the 15th of it, and held seven days; wherefore this must be the feast of the dedication of the temple, and which was kept before that; since both lasted 14 days, and the people were dismissed on the 23d of the month; now not only the above principal persons convened, but a vast number of the common people got together, to see the solemnity of removing the ark, and of dedicating the temple, and to attend the feast of it, and the more, since in a few days was the time for all the males in Israel to appear there: in the month Ethanim, which is the 7th month; it was, as the Targum says, originally the first month; but upon the children of Israel coming out of Egypt in Ab or Nisan, that became the first month, and this was the 7th from that; and is the same with Tisri, which answers to part of September, and part of October, here called Ethanim; which some render the month of the ancients, others of strong ones; either because of the many feasts that were in it, as some say; or because it was the time of ingathering all the increase and fruits of the earth, which strengthen and support man's life; or rather of never-failing, i. e. waters, showers falling in this month, and the rivers full of water [l]; so September is septimus imber, according to Isidore [m], and the three following months are alike derived; this, by the Egyptians was called Theuth, and was with them the first month in the year [n]; so Porphyry says [o], with the Egyptians the beginning of the year was not Aquarius, as with the Romans, but Cancer; and so the month of September was the first with the Ethiopians [p], and with most people [q]; though with the Chinese about the middle of Aquarius [r]. Now, though the temple was finished in the 8th month, ch. vi. 38. it was not dedicated until the 7th in the following year; it required time to finish the utensils and vessels, and put them in their proper place, and for the drying of the walls, &c.

℣. 3. And all the elders of Israel came, &c.] To Zion, the city of David: and the priests took up the ark; from thence; in 2 Chron. v. 4. it is said the Levites did it, whose business it was, Deut. xxxi. 25. and so the priests might be called; for every priest was a Levite, though every Levite was not a priest, and the priests did at all times bear the ark; see Josh. iii. 15. and vi. 4. 2 Sam. xv. 29.

℣. 4. And they brought up the ark of the Lord, &c.] From the city of David to the temple: and the tabernacle of the congregation; not the tent David made for the ark, though that might be brought also, but the tabernacle of Moses, which had been many years at Gibeon; but now removed to Zion, and from thence to the temple, where it was laid up, as having been a sacred thing; that it might not be put to common or superstitious uses, and to prevent the being of more places than one for worship: and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle; as the candlestick, shew-bread-table, incense-altar, &c. even those did the priests and the Levites bring up; some brought one, and some another; the priests brought the ark, and the Levites the vessels.

℣. 5. And king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel, that were assembled together, &c.] On this solemn occasion: were with him before the ark; whilst it was in the court of the priests, before it was carried into the most holy place: sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbred for multitude; the phrase seems to be hyperbolical, and designed to denote a great number.

℣. 6. And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, &c.] Destined for it, the like to which it had in the tabernacle: into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place; that part of the house where the divine oracle was, the holy of holies; for though into it none but the high-priest might enter, and he but once a year; yet in case of necessity, as for the repair of it, which the Jews [s] gather from hence, other priests might enter, as was the case now; an high-priest could not carry in the ark himself, and therefore it was necessary to employ others; and besides, as yet the divine majesty had not taken up his residence in it: even under the wings of the cherubim; the large ones which Solomon had made, ch. vi. 23. not those of Moses.

℣. 7. For the cherubim spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, &c.] The most holy place where the ark stood, even from wall to wall: and the cherubim covered the ark, and the staves thereof above; so that neither could be seen.

℣. 8. And they drew out the staves, &c.] Not made them larger, as Ben Gersom, than those in the tabernacle of Moses, this place being larger than that; nor did they draw them wholly out, and lay them up in the sanctuary, there being no farther use for them, the ark having now a fixed place, and not to be removed; which would have been contrary to Exod. xxv. 15. but they drew them out some little way: that the ends of the staves were seen out in the holy place before the oracle; not in that part of the temple commonly called the holy place, in distinction from the most holy, for that seems to be denied in the next clause; nor could they be seen there, since there was a wall and a vail between them; though some think they might be seen when the door was opened, and the veil turned aside; and these also pushing against the veil, might be seen prominent, like the breasts of a woman under a covering, as the Jews express it; but the sense is, that the ends of these were seen out of the ark from under the wings of the cherubim, being a little drawn, in that part of the most holy place, which is before the oracle or mercy-mercy-ſeat: and they were not ſeen without; neither quite out of the ark, nor without the moſt holy place, nor in the holy place; but were only ſeen by the high-prieſt when he went in on the day of atonement, and ſerved as a direction to him to go between them before the ark, and there perform his work [t]; which, through the darkneſs of the place, and the ark being covered with the wings of the cherubim, he could not otherwiſe diſcern the exact place where it ſtood: and there they are unto this day; when the writer of this book lived, even in the ſame ſituation.

[l] Vid. Hackman. præcidan. sacr. p. 130, 131. [m] Origin. l. 5. c. 33. [n] Lactant. de fals. relig. l. 1. c. 6. [o] De antro nymph. prope finem. [p] Ludolf. Lexic. Ethiopic. p. 65. & Hist. Ethiop. l. 3. c. 6. [q] Julian. Opera, par. 1. orat. 4. p. 290, 291. [r] Martin. Sinic. Hist. l. 1. p. 22. [s] Vid. Maimon. Hilchot Beithabechirah, c. 7. §. 231

℣. 9. There was nothing in the ark, ſave the two tables of ſtone which Moſes put there at Horeb, &c.] That is, there were no other writings; or, as Ben Gerſom ſays, no other part of the law, but the decalogue; otherwiſe he obſerves there were in it Aaron's rod and the pot of manna, according to Heb. ix. 4. though the particle there may be rendered at, or with, or by, ſee the notes there; and ſo they might be not within it, but in ſome place on the ſides of it, ſee Deut. xxxi. 26. when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Iſrael, when they came out of the land of Egypt; about two months after.

℣. 10. And it came to paſs when the prieſts were come out of the holy place, &c.] The moſt holy place, having ſet up the ark of the Lord there, who were all ſanctified that were there, and did not wait by courſe as at other times, ſee 2 Chron. v. 11. where, in ℣. 12, 13. it is ſaid, that at this time, the Levites, who were ſingers of the families of Aſaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, arrayed in fine linen, with their muſical inſtruments in their hands, ſtood at the eaſt end of the altar of burnt-offering, and 120 prieſts blowing their trumpets, praiſed the Lord together with one ſound, declaring his goodneſs and his mercy, which endure for ever: and then it was that the cloud filled the houſe of the Lord; the whole temple, both the holy of holies and the holy place, and the court of the prieſts; ſo that it was viſible to all, and was a token of the divine preſence of God, of his taking poſſeſſion of his houſe, and of his taking up his reſidence in it.

℣. 11. So that the prieſts could not ſtand to miniſter, becauſe of the cloud, &c.] Either through the darkneſs it firſt cauſed, or through the light that broke out of it, which was dazzling to them, or through the terror it ſtruck their minds with; they could neither miniſter in the holy place, by offering incenſe there; and as for the moſt holy place, none but the high-prieſt could miniſter there, and that on one day only; nor in the court of the prieſts, at the altar of burnt-offerings: for the glory of the Lord had filled the houſe of the Lord; a bright and glorious ſtream came forth from the cloud, and ſpread itſelf all over the houſe, and then took up its abode in the moſt holy place as in the tabernacle, Exod. xl. 34. ſee Ezek. xliii. 2. 4, 5.

℣. 12. And then ſpake Solomon, &c.] Perceiving by this ſymbol that the Lord was come into his houſe, to take up his dwelling in it, and ſeeing the prieſts and people in conſternation at it, ſpake the following words to their comfort: the Lord ſaid that he would dwell in the thick darkneſs; and now was fulfilling his promiſe, and therefore to be conſidered not as a token of his diſpleaſure, but of his gracious preſence; this was done for the greater awe of the divine Majeſty, and to denote the darkneſs of the former diſpenſation; reference may be had to Lev. xvi. 2. or rather this was now ſaid by the Lord, that is, it appeared to be his reſolution and determination to dwell in this manner; the Targum is, "the Lord is pleaſed to cauſe his Shekinah or divine majeſty to dwell in Jeruſalem," in the temple there. This was imitated by the heathens; hence the Lacedæmonians had a temple dedicated to Jupiter Scotitas, or the dark, as Pauſanias [u] relates; and the Indian Pagans to this day affect darkneſs in their temples, and are very careful that no light enter into them but by the door, which is commonly ſtrait and low, and by little crevices in the windows [w].

℣. 13. I have ſurely built thee an houſe to dwell in, &c.] Turning himſelf from the prieſts and people, he quieted with a few words, he addreſſed the Lord; having built an houſe for him, for his worſhip and glory, with this view, that he might dwell in it, he was now, by the above token, fully aſſured it would be an habitation for him: a ſettled place for thee to abide in for ever; which is obſerved in diſtinction from the tabernacle of Moſes, which was often removed from place to place, otherwiſe this did not continue for ever; though Solomon might hope it would, at leaſt unto the times of the Meſſiah; and indeed ſuch a building on this ſpot, for ſuch uſe, did continue ſo long, excepting the interval of the 70 years captivity in Babylon.

℣. 14. And the king turned his face about, &c.] He was before the altar, ℣. 22. with his face to that firſt, and looking towards the holy, and the moſt holy place, filled with the cloud and glory; and now he turned himſelf and ſtood with the altar behind him, and looking to the court of the people: and bleſſed all the congregation of Iſrael; either bleſſed the Lord before them, or prayed for bleſſing for them, or congratulated them upon the Lord's taking up his reſidence in the temple, which was ſo great an honour and favour to them: and all the congregation of Iſrael ſtood; ready to receive the king's bleſſing, and in honour of him, and reverence to the divine Being. The Jews ſay, none might ſit in the court but the kings of the houſe of David.

℣. 15. And he ſaid, bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] All praiſe and glory, honour and bleſſing be aſcribed to the Lord; who had afreſh ſhown himſelf to be Iſrael's Covenant-God, by taking up his reſidence among them in the temple he had filled with his glory: which ſpake with his mouth to David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it; who graciouſly promiſed him he ſhould have a ſon that ſhould build an houſe for him, and which he had by his power and providence faithfully performed; or rather which ſpake concerning David, ſo Noldius [x]; for God did not ſpeak with his mouth to David, but to Nathan, of him: ſaying; as follows,

℣. 16. Since the day that I brought forth my people Iſrael out of Egypt, &c.] Which was now about 488 years ago; ſee ch. vi. 1, 38. and viii. 2. I choſe no city out of all the tribes of Iſrael to build an houſe, that my name might be therein; he had choſen one in his mind from all eternity; but he had not made known this choice, nor the place he had choſen; he gave hints by Moſes, that there was a place which he ſhould chuſe, or declare he had choſen to put his name in, but did not expreſs it, Deut.

[t] Vid. Miſn. Yoma, c. 5. §. 1.
[u] Laconica, ſive, l. 3. p. 178.
[w] Agreement of cuſtoms between the Eaſt-Indians and Jews, art. 5. p. 35.
[x] Ebr. Concord. Part. p. 117. N°. 596.
So Sept.

Deut. xii. 5, 11. but now it was a clear case, that he had chosen Jerusalem, and that was the city he always had in view, see 2 Chron. vi. 6. but I chose David to be over my people Israel; to be their king, and to him he gave the first hint of the place where the temple was to be built, 1 Chron. xxii. 1. and he chose no man, and his family with him, before him, to rule over Israel, and be concerned in such a work, see 2 Chron. vi. 5.

℣. 17. And it was in the heart of David my father, &c.] His mind was disposed to it, his heart was set upon it, he had taken up a resolution: to build an house for the name of the Lord God of Israel; for his worship and service, for his honour and glory, 2 Sam. vii. 3.

℣. 18. And the Lord said unto David my father, &c.] By Nathan the prophet: Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house unto my name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart; his design was good, and so far it was acceptable to the Lord, that he thought of such a thing, though it was not his pleasure that he should do it, as follows.

℣. 19. Nevertheless, thou shalt not build the house, &c.] Which is implied in the question in 2 Sam. vii. 5. but thy son that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house unto my name; which is expressed in 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13.

℣. 20. And the Lord hath performed his word that he spake, &c.] To David, concerning his son's building the temple: and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the Lord promised; succeeded him in the kingdom: and have built an house for the name of the Lord God of Israel; the temple he had now finished; and thus the promise to David was punctually fulfilled, that he should have a son that should succeed him in the throne, and build the house of the Lord.

℣. 21. And I have set there a place for the ark, &c.] The most holy place: wherein is the covenant of the Lord; the two tables of stone, on which were the covenant of the Lord, as the Targum: which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt; as in ℣. 9.

℣. 22. And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord, &c.] The altar of the burnt-offering in the court of the priests, where he prayed the following prayer; and which altar was typical of Christ, who is always to be in sight in prayer, and through whom all sacrifices of prayer and praise become acceptable to God. In 2 Chron. vi. 13. he is said to stand upon a scaffold of brass, five cubits long, five broad, and three high, which stood in the midst of the court; it was a sort of a pulpit, round, as a laver, for which the word is sometimes used, and on which he kneeled: in the presence of all the congregation of Israel; who stood in the great court before him, called the court of Israel: and spread forth his hands toward heaven; and hence it appears, that though Solomon stood before the altar, he did not lay hold on it with his hands, as the heathens did when they prayed; for they say [y], that prayer alone does not appease the deity, unless he that prays also lays hold on the altar with his hands; hence altars at first, as we are told [z], were called ansæ; and lifting up or spreading the hands towards heaven was a proper gesture with the Greeks and Romans [a].

℣. 23. And he said, Lord God of Israel, &c.] Their covenant-God and Father, whereby he was distinguished from all the Gods of the Gentiles: there is no God like thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath; none among the angels in heaven, nor among kings and civil magistrates on earth, who both are sometimes called Elohim, gods; but only in a figurative sense, and not to be compared with the one only true God, for the perfection of his nature, or the works of his hands: who keepest covenant and mercy with thy servants that walk before thee with all their heart; performs his promises, by which he both declares his mercy or goodness, and his faithfulness to such who walk before him in his ways, and according to his word, in the sincerity and uprightness of their hearts.

℣. 24. Who hast kept with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him, &c.] Concerning a son, his successor, and the builder of the temple: thou spakest also with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day; the temple being now finished by him, see ℣. 15.

℣. 25. Therefore now, Lord God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him, &c.] That as he had fulfilled one part of his promise respecting himself, his immediate successor, so that he would fulfil the other respecting his more remote offspring: saying, There shall not fail thee a man in my sight, to sit on the throne of Israel; one of David's posterity to inherit his throne and kingdom, but with this proviso: so that thy children take heed to their way; in what way they walk, and how they walk in it: that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me; meaning as David walked, see Ps. cxxxii. 11, 12.

℣. 26. And now, O God of Israel, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, &c.] Truly made good, and punctually performed: which thou spakest unto thy servant David my father; the same request in other words, repeated to shew his ardent and vehement desire to have it fulfilled.

℣. 27. But will God indeed dwell on the earth? &c.] Is it true? can any credit be given to it? who could ever have thought it, that so great and glorious a Being, who inhabits eternity, dwells in the highest heavens, should ever condescend to dwell on earth? such was the amazing condescension of Christ, the Son of God, to tabernacle in human nature with men on earth, to which Solomon perhaps might have respect; his temple being the figure of his body, in which the Godhead dwells, John ii. 19. Col. ii. 9. see John i. 14. behold, the heaven, and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; not only the visible heavens, but the third heaven, where the throne of God is, and is the habitation of angels and saints; though there God makes the most glorious displays of himself, yet he is so immense and infinite, that he is not to be comprehended and circumscribed in any place whatever: how much less this house that I have builded? though temples built for idols contain them, and are large enough, yet Solomon had no notion, when he built his temple, though it was for the name of God, that he was restrained to it, but dwelt everywhere, filling heaven and earth with his presence.

℣. 28. Yet have thou respect to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Lord my God, &c.]

[y] Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 2. Vid. Sperling. de baptism. Ethnic. c. 6. p. 103. [z] Varro rer. divin. l. 5. apud ib.
[a] Homer. Iliad. 3. ℣. 275. & 6. ℣. 301. Vid. Barth. Animadv. ad Claudian. in Rufin. l. 2. ℣. 205.

&c.] Meaning himself, who, though a king, acknowledged himself, and esteemed it an honour to be the servant of the Lord, and who was also an humble suppliant of his, and desired his prayers and supplications might be attended to: to hearken unto the cry, and to the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee this day; the particulars of which follow.

℣. 29. That thine eyes may be open towards this house night and day, &c.] That is, to the people that pray in it, as they are to his righteous ones, Ps. xxxiii. 15. even towards the place of which thou hast said, my name shall be there; there should be some displays of his presence, power and providence, of his goodness, grace and mercy: that thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make towards this place; not only to what he should make in it, but to what he should make in his own house, with his face directed towards this, as would be, and was the practice of good people in after-times, yea even when the temple lay in ruins; see Dan. vi. 10. figuring the respect gracious souls have to Christ by faith in their prayers, in whom the Godhead dwells bodily, see Jer. ii. 4. and it is observable, according to a Jewish canon [b], one at a distance, in another land, was not only to turn his face to the land of Israel, but direct his heart to Jerusalem, and the temple, and the holy of holies; and if in the land, to Jerusalem, &c. and if in Jerusalem, not only to the temple, and holy of holies, but if behind the mercy-seat, he was to turn his face to it; which was a symbol of Christ, the propitiatory and throne of grace, to be looked unto by faith, Rom. iii. 25. 1 John ii. 2. Heb. iv. 16.

℣. 30. And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray towards this place, &c.] Not only he desires his prayers might be heard, but those of the people of Israel, then, and at all times in succeeding ages, whenever they should look towards the temple, and to him that was typified by it; to whose blood, righteousness, sacrifice and mediation, the acceptance of prayers with God is to be ascribed: and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place; for though he condescended to take up his residence in the temple, yet his more proper and more glorious dwelling was in heaven, and from whence notwithstanding the distance of it, he could hear the prayers of his people, and does: and when thou hearest, forgive; manifest and apply pardoning grace and mercy on account of sins confessed, and repented of; or remove calamities and distresses on account of sin, which sometimes is meant, and frequently in this prayer, by the forgiveness of sin.

℣. 31. If any man trespass against his neighbour, &c.] By being unfaithful in a trust committed to him, or the like: and an oath be laid upon him to cause him to swear; he denying that ever any thing was committed to his trust, and there being no witnesses of it, the judge obliges him to take an oath he never had any: and the oath come before thine altar in this house; where it was taken, as in the presence of God, and as appealing to him: hence in corrupt times they came to swear by the altar, Matt. xxiii. 20. and so the heathens used to take their oaths in the temples of their gods, and at their altars, as the instances of Callicrates [c] and Hannibal [d] shew, and others Grotius refers to; yea, they also laid hold on the altar, at least touched it when they swore [e], to give the greater sanction to the oath.

℣. 32. Then hear thou in heaven, &c.] When the injured person makes supplication to have justice done him: and do, and judge thy servants; contending with one another, the one affirming, the other denying: condemning the wicked, by bringing his way upon his head; inflicting upon him the punishment imprecated by him in his oath: and justifying the righteous, to give him according to his righteousness; by making it appear that his cause is just.

℣. 33. When thy people Israel shall be smitten down before the enemy, &c.] Beaten and routed, many slain, and others carried captive; which had been their case, and might be again, and was, tho' now a time of peace: because they have sinned against thee; which always was the reason of their being given up into the hands of their enemies: and shall turn again to thee; to thy worship, as the Targum, having fallen into idolatry, which was generally the case when they fell before their enemies: and confess thy name; own him to be the true God, acknowledge his justice in their punishment, confess their sin, repent of it, and give him glory: and pray and make supplication unto thee in this house; not the captives, unless it should be rendered, as it may, toward this house [f]; but those that escaped, or their brethren that went not out to battle, who should pray for them here.

℣. 34. Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, &c.] It being not personal but public sins, which would be the cause of such a calamity: and bring them again unto the land which thou gavest unto their fathers; as had been often their case in the time of the judges.

℣. 35. When heaven is shut up, &c.] As it may be said to be when the air is quite serene, and not a cloud in it: and there is no rain; in its season, neither the former nor the latter, as it was in the times of Elijah: because they have sinned against thee; want of rain was threatened in case of sin, and was always the effect of it, Lev. xxvi. 19, 20. Deut. xxviii. 23, 24. if they pray towards this place; in any part of the country where they were; for it sometimes rained on one city, and not on another, Amos iv. 7. and confess thy name; own his power and his providence, and the justness of his dealings with them: and turn from their sin, when thou afflictest them; their affliction being made useful, to bring them to a sense of their sin, and to repentance for it, and reformation from it; or, when thou hearest or answerest them [g]; so the Targum, receivest their prayer; thus the goodness of God leads to repentance.

℣. 36. Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, &c.] by removing the judgment of drought upon them: that thou teach them the good way wherein they should walk; the way of worship and duty prescribed by the Lord, which was good in itself, and good for them, good things being enjoyed by them that walk therein; and this the Lord sometimes teaches by afflictions, as well as by his word; but whenever he does it, it is by his spirit, and then afflictions are blessings, Ps. xciv. 12. see 2 Chron. vi. 27. where the same phrase is differently rendered; and

[b] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 94. §. 1.
[c] Cornel. Nep. vit. Dion. l. 10. c. 8.
[d] Ib. Hannibal. l. 23. c. 2.
[e] Vid. Lydii Dissert. de Jurament. c. 4. §. 7.
[f] So Pool and Patrick, diverse ejus, Vatablus.
[g] כי תענם cum exaudieris eos, Vatablus.

and give rain upon thy land which thou haſt given to thy people for an inheritance; as he did at the prayer of Elijah, James v. 18.

℣. 37. If there be in the land famine, &c.] Through want of rain, or any other cauſe, as there had been a three years famine in the time of David, and it is ſuppoſed it might be again, though Canaan was a land flowing with milk and honey: if there be peſtilence; as there had been, for David's numbering the people: bleſting; or blights, occaſioned by the eaſt-wind: mildew; a kind of clammy dew, which falling on plants, corn, &c. corrupts and deſtroys them, ſee Amos iv. 9. locuſt, or if there be caterpillar; creatures very pernicious to the fruits of the earth, and cauſe a ſcarcity of them, ſee Joel i. 4. if their enemy beſiege them in the land of their cities; ſo that they cannot go out to gather the increaſe of the earth, or till their land: whatſoever plague, whatſoever ſickneſs there be; whatever ſtroke from the hand of God, or what judgment or calamity ſoever befalls.

℣. 38. What prayer and ſupplication ſoever, &c.] On account of any of the above things, or any other: be made by any man, or by all thy people Iſrael; by a private man, for ſuch an one might go to the temple and pray by himſelf, ſee Luke xviii. 10, 11. or by the public congregation: which ſhall know every man the plague of his own heart; be ſenſible of his ſin as the cauſe of his diſtreſs, and own it, though ever ſo privately committed, which none knows but God and his own heart; and which may be only an heart-ſin, not actually committed; as all ſin is originally in the heart, and ſprings from it, that is the ſource of all wickedneſs; it may reſpect the corruption of nature, indwelling ſin, which truly deſerves this name, and which every good man is led to obſerve, confeſs, and bewail, Pſ. li. 4, 5. In 2 Chron. vi. 29. it is, ſhall know his own ſore and his own grief; what particularly affects him, and gives him pain and ſorrow, as every man beſt knows his own affliction and trouble, and ſo can beſt repreſent his own caſe to the Lord: and ſpread forth his hands towards this houſe; pray with his face towards it, and his hands ſpread out, a prayer-geſture, and what was now uſed by Solomon, ℣. 22.

℣. 39. Then hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place, &c.] Which was more properly ſo than this Solomon had built, and the Lord had taken poſſeſſion of: and forgive; remove the calamity and diſtreſs, be it what it may: and do, and give to every man according to his ways, whoſe heart thou knoweſt; that his prayer is cordial and ſincere, his confeſſion and repentance genuine, and that he is truly ſenſible of his ſin, and ſorry for it, and is pure in his intentions and reſolutions, through divine grace, to depart from it for the future: (for thou, even thou only knoweſt the hearts of all the children of men;) he knows all men, the hearts of them all, what is in them, what comes out of them, and is according to them; omniſcience belongs only to God; it is his prerogative to know the heart and ſearch the reins, ſee Jer. xvii. 9, 10.

℣. 40. That they may fear thee, &c.] For his goodneſs-ſake in hearing their prayer, removing their affliction, and beſtowing his bleſſings on them, particularly in forgiving their ſins, ſee Pſ. cxxx. 4. Hoſ. iii. 5. all the days that they live in the land which thou gaveſt unto our fathers; not only for the preſent, whilſt the mercy is freſh, but all the days of their lives; to which they were the more obliged by the good land they poſſeſſed as a divine gift, and which they held by the tenure of their obedience, If i. 19.

℣. 41. Moreover, concerning a ſtranger that is not of thy people Iſrael, &c.] One of another country, not belonging to any of the tribes of Iſrael, yet having ſome knowledge of, and diſpoſition to, the true worſhip of God: but cometh out of a far country for thy names ſake; as the Ethiopian eunuch did, to pray to him, worſhip him, and offer ſuch ſacrifices as were allowed a Gentile to do, Lev. xxii. 18. led thereunto by the fame of him, as follows.

℣. 42. (For they ſhall hear of thy great name, &c.] Of his great name, Jehovah; of him as the eternal, immutable, and ſelf-exiſtent being; of the perfections of his nature, as diſplayed in his mighty works: and of thy ſtrong hand, and of thy ſtretched out arm;) which had done formerly ſuch mighty works in Egypt, at the Red Sea, in the wilderneſs, in the land of Canaan, in the times of David, and ſtill under the reign of Solomon, and even in future ages, beſides the works of creation and providence in general: when he ſhall come and pray towards this houſe; not being admitted into it, only into a court, which in after-times was called the court of the Gentiles, ſee Acts xxi. 19.

℣. 43. Hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place, &c.] The prayer of the ſtranger: and do according to all that the ſtranger calleth to thee for; which were conſiſtent with the will of God and his glory, and for the good of the ſtranger; this is more abſolutely and unconditionally expreſſed than the requeſts for the Iſraelites; it is not deſired that he would do by them according to their ways, and if they turned from their ſins, or knew the plague of their hearts; the reaſon of which is ſuppoſed to be, becauſe the Iſraelites knew the will of God, when the ſtrangers did not; and therefore it is deſired that, notwithſtanding their ignorance, and their non-compliance with the divine will, through that, they might be heard and anſwered: that all people of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as do thy people Iſrael; might know him to be a God, hearing and anſwering prayer, forgiving ſin, and beſtowing favours, which might lead them to fear him and his goodneſs, as Iſrael did: and that they may know that this houſe which I have builded, is called by thy name; that he dwelt in it, granted his preſence, heard and received the ſupplications of men, anſwered their requeſts, and accepted of their ſacrifices here. Solomon ſeems to have had knowledge of the calling of the Gentiles, and to deſire it.

℣. 44. If thy people go out to battle againſt their enemy, &c.] In a foreign country, threatening to invade them, or having treſpaſſed on their borders, or ſome way or other infringed on their liberties and privileges, and ſo given them juſt occaſion to go to war with them: whitherſoever thou ſhalt ſend them; this caſe ſuppoſes their aſking counſel of God, or having a direction and commiſſion from him by a prophet, or ſome other way, to engage in war with the enemy: and ſhall pray unto the Lord toward the city which thou haſt choſen, and toward the houſe I have built for thy name; for notwithſtanding the juſtneſs of their cauſe, and having a warrant from God to go to war, yet they were to pray to him for ſucceſs when at a diſtance, even in a foreign land, and about to engage the enemy; and this they were to do, turning their faces towards the city of Jeruſalem, and the temple there; declaring thereby that their dependence was upon the Lord that dwelt there, and their expectation of victory was only from him.

℣. 45. Then hear thou in heaven their prayer and their supplication, &c.] For success: and maintain their cause; do them justice, and avenge their injuries, as the Targum; let it appear that their cause is right, by giving them victory.

℣. 46. If they sin against thee, &c.] The same persons when they were gone forth to battle, not observing the divine commands as they should: for there is no man that sinneth not; such is the depravity of human nature, the treachery of the heart, and the temptations of Satan, of which Solomon had early notice, and was afterwards still more confirmed in the truth of, Eccl. vii. 20. and thou be angry with them; for their sins, and resent their conduct: so as to deliver them to the enemy, so that they carry them away captive unto the land of the enemy, far or near; as into Assyria or Babylon, whither they were carried.

℣. 47. Yet if they shall bethink themselves in the land whither they were carried captives, &c.] Or, return to their heart [a]; remember their sins, the cause of their captivity, and reflect upon them: and repent of them, and make supplication unto thee in the land of them that carried them captives; though and while they are in such a state: saying, we have sinned, and have done perversely, we have committed wickedness; which phrases include all their sins, with all the aggravated circumstances of them, and their sense of them, and contrition for them.

℣. 48. And so return unto thee, with all their heart, and with all their soul, &c.] In the most sincere and cordial manner, with great ingenuity and uprightness; the Targum is, "return unto thy worship;" relinquishing false worship they had given into, and serve the Lord in the best manner they could: in the land of their enemies, which led them away captive; and so at a distance from that temple and the service of it, which they could not attend: and pray unto thee toward their land, which thou gavest unto their fathers, the city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name; that is, turning their faces when they prayed towards the land of Israel, the city of Jerusalem, and the temple in it; this they could do in a foreign land; see Dan. vi. 10.

℣. 49. Then hear thou their prayers, and their supplication, in heaven thy dwelling place, &c.] For their deliverance out of captivity: and maintain their cause; plead it, and do them justice, avenge their injuries, and deliver them.

℣. 50. And forgive thy people that have sinned against thee, and all their transgressions wherein they have transgressed against thee, &c.] By returning them to their own land; by which it would appear that the Lord had forgiven their trespasses, as well as by what follows: and give them compassion before them who carried them captive, that they may have compassion on them; for it is in the power of God to work upon the affections of men, and dispose their minds to use his people well, and to pity them under their distresses, as the Chaldæans did the Jews in Babylon, Ps. cvi. 46.

℣. 51. For they be thy people and thine inheritance, &c.] Whom the Lord had chosen above all people, to be a special people to him, and to be his portion and possession; see Deut. vii. 6. and xxxii. 9. which thou broughtest forth out of Egypt from the midst of the furnace of iron; hard and cruel bondage in Egypt; see the note on Deut. iv. 20.

℣. 52. That thine eyes may be open to the supplication of thy servant, &c.] That is, attentive to it, meaning himself and his present supplication; or any other he should hereafter put up in this place: and unto the supplication of thy people Israel, to hearken unto them in all that they call unto thee; at any time, and upon any account; so far as may be agreeable to his will, make for his glory, and their good; see Deut. iv. 7.

℣. 53. For thou didst separate them from among all people of the earth to be thine inheritance, &c.] By his choice of them in his own mind, by the redemption of them out of Egypt, by the peculiar laws he gave them, and by the special blessings he conferred upon them: as thou spakest by the hand of Moses thy servant, when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord our God; it was he that spake this to Moses, and by him to the people, Exod. xix 5, 6. and it was he that did it, namely, separate them from all nations, to be his people and peculiar treasure: in this and the two preceding verses Solomon makes use of arguments taken from what the people of Israel were to the Lord, and he had done for them, to engage him to hearken to their supplications, and here ends his long prayer; in 2 Chron. vi. some things are added at the close of it, and some omitted.

℣. 54. And it was so when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the Lord, &c.] In which he was a type of Christ, praying and interceding for his people before the golden altar, Rev. viii. 3, 4. he arose from before the altar of the Lord; the altar of burnt offering, overagainst which he was: from kneeling on his knees; upon the brazen scaffold; see 2 Chron. vi. 13. in which posture he was during this long prayer: with his hands spread up to heaven; which gesture he had used in his prayer, and now continued in blessing the people.

℣. 55. And he stood and blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice, &c.] Turning himself from the altar, and his face to the people, giving them his benediction, not only as the father of his people, but as preacher in Jerusalem, closing it with a word of exhortation to them: saying; as follows.

℣. 56. Blessed be the Lord that hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised, &c.] A land of rest, and rest in the land from all enemies; see Deut. xii. 9, 10. there hath not failed one word of all his good promises, which he promised by the hand of Moses his servant: so Joshua observed a little before his death, ch. xxiii. 14. to which Solomon seems to have respect; and who lived to see a greater accomplishment of the gracious promises of God, and his faithfulness therein, both in the times of his father David, and his own.

℣. 57. The Lord our God be with us as he was with our fathers, &c.] Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and those that came out of Egypt, and especially that entered into the land of Canaan under Joshua, and subdued it; as the Lord had been with them to guide and direct them, protect and defend them, succeed and prosper them, so Solomon desires he might be with them: nothing is more desireable than the presence of God; Solomon could not have prayed for a greater blessing for himself and his people; the Targum is, "let the Word of the Lord our God be for our help, as he was for the help of our fathers:" let him not leave us, us, nor forſake us ; this was no doubt a prayer of faith, founded upon a divine promiſe, Geſh. i. 5.

[a] והביבון אל לבם & reversi fuerint ad cor suum, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.

℣. 58. That he may incline our hearts unto him, &c.] By his ſpirit to love, fear, and ſerve him; to attend to his worſhip, word, and ordinances: to walk in all his ways ; he has preſcribed and directed to: and to keep his commandments, and his ſtatutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers ; all his laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial.

℣. 59. And let theſe my words wherewith I have made ſupplication before the Lord, &c.] At this time: be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night ; be continually remembered and regarded by him, that ſo gracious anſwers might always be returned to thoſe who ſupplicated in this place: that he maintain the cauſe of his ſervant ; of himſelf and his ſucceſſors in the throne, that they may continue to poſſeſs it in peace, to the glory of God, and the good of the people: and the cauſe of his people Iſrael at all times ; that their rights and privileges might be continued, and they ſupported in them; and both his cauſe and theirs be regarded: as the matter ſhall require ; as they ſhould ſtand in need of aſſiſtance, direction, and protection.

℣. 60. That all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God, &c.] By chaſtiſing the people of Iſrael when they ſinned; by hearing and anſwering their prayers when they prayed unto him; by forgiving their ſins, and delivering them out of their troubles; by maintaining their cauſe, and protecting them in the enjoyment of their bleſſings: and that there is none elſe ; no God beſides him; all being elſe fictitious deities, or nominal ones; he only is the one living and true God.

℣. 61. Let your heart therefore be perfect with the Lord your God, &c.] Sincere in their love to him, united in their worſhip of him, and conſtant in their obedience to him: to walk in his ſtatutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day ; as they did that day, neither king nor people having as yet fallen into idolatry, but ſhewing by their then preſent appearance a zeal for God, his houſe, and worſhip.

℣. 62. And the king and all Iſrael with him offered ſacrifice before the Lord ;] For burnt-offerings, which having been laid upon the altar, as ſoon as the king had done praying to God, and bleſſing the people, and exhorting them, fire came down from heaven, and conſumed them; which ſhewed the Lord's acceptance of the ſacrifices, and was another confirmation beſides the cloud, of the Lord's well-pleaſedneſs with the temple, and of his taking poſſeſſion of it to reſide in it; upon which the people bowed and worſhipped, and praiſed the Lord for his goodneſs and mercy, 2 Chron. vii. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 63. And Solomon offered a ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which he offered unto the Lord, &c.] Part of which belonged to the offerer, and with thoſe Solomon feaſted the people all the days of the feaſt of the dedication, if not of tabernacles alſo; for the number was exceeding large, as follows: 22000 oxen, and 120,000 ſheep ; which, as ſuggeſted, might be the number for all the 14 days; nor need it ſeem incredible, ſince as Joſephus [b] ſays, at a paſſover celebrated in the times of Ceſtius the Roman governor, at the evening of the paſſover, in 2 hours time 256,500 lambs were ſlain; however this was a very munificent ſacrifice of Solomon's, in which he greatly exceeded the heathens, whoſe higheſt number of ſacrifices were Hecatombs, or by hundreds, but his by thouſands: ſo the king and all the children of Iſrael dedicated the houſe of the Lord ; devoted it to divine and religious worſhip by theſe ſacrifices: hence in imitation of this ſprang the dedication of temples with the heathens; the firſt of which among the Romans was that in the capitol at Rome [c] by Romulus ; the rites and ceremonies uſed therein by them may be read in Cicero, Livy, Tacitus, and others [d].

℣. 64. The ſame day did the king hallow the middle of the court that was before the houſe of the Lord, &c.] The court of the prieſts that was before the holy place, adjoining to it, in which was the altar of burnt offering; this, or however the middle part of it, he ſanctified for preſent uſe, to offer ſacrifices on, for a reaſon hereafter given: for there he offered burnt-offerings and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings ; which was the reaſon why the middle of the great court was for this time ſet apart for this ſervice.

℣. 65. And at that time Solomon held a feaſt and all Iſrael with him, &c.] Partaking of the parts of the peace-offerings which belonged to him, and were offered by way of thankſgiving on the occaſion, together with whatſoever he might as a liberal prince provide for this entertainment: for it was for a great congregation, from the entring in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt; conſiſting of a number of people, gathered together from Hamath, which was on the northern border of the land of Iſrael to the river of Egypt ; either the Nile, or Rhinocultura, a branch of it, which lay on the ſouthern border of the land: and this was kept before the Lord; as in his preſence, with thankfulneſs to him, and with a view to his glory: ſeven days and ſeven days, even fourteen days ; ſeven days for the dedication of the houſe, and ſeven days for the feaſt of tabernacles, as the Targum ; which agrees with 2 Chron. vii. 9. the feaſt of dedication was firſt, and began perhaps on the 7th day of the month, as the feaſt of tabernacles did on the 15th: within this time, namely on the 10th, was a faſt-day, the day of atonement; which was either obſerved between the two feaſts, or was omitted, which is not likely; or they did not eat and drink until the evening of that day. The Septuagint verſion, according to the Vatican copy, reads ſeven days only once; ſee 2 Chron. vii. 8.

℣. 66. On the eighth day he ſent the people away, &c.] That is, of the feaſt of tabernacles, the 8th from the 1ſt of that which was a ſolemn day, and fell on the 22d of the month; at the cloſe of which the diſmiſſion was made, or they had leave to go, but they did not until the 23d, according to 2 Chron. vii. 10. and they bleſſed the king ; returned him thanks for his care, and charge, and pains, in building the temple; for his prayers for them, and the feaſt he had now made, and wiſhed all health and happineſs to him: and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart ; or to their cities, as the Targum, to their ſeveral habitations; being greatly delighted with what they had ſeen and heard, and partook of eſpecially: for all the goodneſs the Lord had done for David his ſervant, and for for Iſrael his people ; in 2 Chron. vii. 10. it is added unto Solomon ; for David in giving him ſuch a ſon and ſucceſſor, who according to promiſe had built the houſe of the Lord ; and for Solomon, in raiſing him up to ſuch dignity, and enabling him to build ſuch a temple for the worſhip of God and his glory ; and for the people of Iſrael, in giving them ſuch a king to rule over them, under whom they enjoyed ſo much peace and proſperity, and the full and free exerciſe of the true religion, with ſuch accommodations, and in ſuch a ſplendid manner as now.

[b] De bello Jud. l. 6. c. 9. §. 3. [c] Vid. Liv. Hiſt Decad. 1. l. 1. p. 8. & l. 2. p. 33. [d] Vid. Hoſpinian. de Templis, l. 4. c. 2. p. 451. & Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 6. c. 14.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter relates a ſecond viſion Solomon had at Gibeon, in which he received an anſwer to his prayer, in the preceding chapter, ℣. 1—9. the preſents that paſſed between him and Hiram king of Tyre, ℣. 10—14. the places that Solomon built or repaired, ℣. 15—19. the Canaanitiſh people that became bondmen to him, and the officers he had among the children of Iſrael, ℣. 20—23. the removal of Pharaoh's daughter to the houſe built for her, ℣. 24. Solomon's attention to religious ſervices, ℣. 25. and the navy of ſhips he employed, which brought him in great riches, ℣. 26, 27, 28.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when Solomon had finiſhed the building of the houſe of the Lord, &c.] Which was done in 7 years, ch. vi. 38. and the king's houſe ; his own palace, which was finiſhed in 13 years, ch. vii. 1. and all Solomon's deſire which he was pleaſed to do ; all his other buildings, the houſe for Pharaoh's daughter, the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon, and may include his vineyards, gardens, orchards, and pools of water, made for his pleaſure, Eccl. ii. 4, 5, 6. in which he ſucceeded and proſpered, 2 Chron. vii. 11.

℣. 2. That the Lord appeared to Solomon the ſecond time, &c.] Junius and Tremellius read this verſe with the following, to the end of the 9th, in a parentheſis, and render this clauſe, for the Lord had appeared, &c. and Piſcator tranſlates it, moreover the Lord appeared, &c. as beginning a diſtinct narrative from the former ; and indeed if the words are to be connected with the preceding, as in our verſion, this appearance muſt be 13 years after the building of the temple, which is not probable ; but rather it was the night after the dedication of it, when an anſwer was returned to Solomon's prayer in the preceding chapter ; for that it ſhould be deferred 12 or 13 years is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe ; and this appearance was the ſecond of the kind and manner : as he had appeared unto him at Gibeon ; in a dream, and a viſion, and by night, ch. iii. 5. ſee 2 Chron. vii. 12.

℣. 3. And the Lord ſaid unto him, I have heard thy prayer and thy ſupplication that thou haſt made before me, &c.] With delight and pleaſure, and had accepted it ; meaning the prayer recorded in the preceding chapter : I have hallowed this houſe which thou haſt built ; by the cloud of glory filling it, and by fire deſcending from heaven, and conſuming the ſacrifices offered in it, 2 Chron. vii. 1. to put my name there for ever ; there to grant his preſence, ſo long as his pure worſhip ſhould be continued in it ; ſo the Targum adds, "and my Shekinah or divine majeſty ſhall abide in it, if my will is done there continually :" and mine eyes and mine heart ſhall be there perpetually ; his eyes of providence ſhould be upon it, to watch over it, and protect it, and his worſhippers in it ; and he ſhould have a cordial regard to the ſacrifices there offered, and to the perſons of the offerers, ſo long as they offered them in a right way, and to right ends and purpoſes.

℣. 4. And if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightneſs, &c.] Who though guilty of many ſins and failings in life, yet was ſincere and upright in the worſhip of God, never apoſtatized from it, or fell into idolatry, which is what is chiefly reſpected : to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my ſtatutes and my judgments ; obſerve all the laws of God, moral, ceremonial, and judicial.

℣. 5. Then I will eſtabliſh the throne of thy kingdom upon Iſrael for ever, &c.] In a ſucceſſion in his poſterity, until the coming of the Meſſiah : as I promiſed unto David thy father, ſaying, there ſhall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Iſrael ; not fail one of his poſterity to ſit upon it ; ſee 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13. Pſ. cxxxii. 11, 12.

℣. 6. But if you ſhall at all turn from following me, you or your children, &c.] From my worſhip, as the Targum ; either Solomon, or his ſucceſſors, or the people of Iſrael, and their poſterity ; ſhould they turn their backs on God and his worſhip, meaning not in a ſingle inſtance, or in ſome ſmall degree ; but as in the original, if in turning ye turn[e], that is, utterly and entirely, or wholly turn from him and his worſhip to other gods, as follows : and will not keep my commandments and my ſtatutes, which I have ſet before you, but go and ſerve other gods, and worſhip them ; neglecting the will and worſhip of God, go into idolatrous practices, as Solomon himſelf did.

℣. 7. Then will I cut off Iſrael out of the land I have given them, &c.] Suffer them to be carried captive into other lands, as the ten tribes were into Aſſyria, and the two tribes to Babylon ; which is called a plucking them up by the roots in 2 Chron. vii. 20. and this houſe which I have hallowed for my name will I caſt out of my ſight ; as it was when burnt by Nebuchadnezzar : and Iſrael ſhall be a proverb and a bye-word among all people ; both for their ſins and for their miſeries ; ſee Deut. xxviii. 37. Jer. xxiv. 9 ; in 2 Chron. vii. 20. the houſe or temple is ſaid to be made a proverb of.

℣. 8. And at this houſe which is high, &c.] The houſe of the moſt high, as ſome render it, and in high eſteem, fame, and glory, as well as it was built on an high hill, and was itſelf 120 cubits high, 2 Chron. iii. 4. the Targum is, "and this houſe which was high ſhall be deſtroyed :" every one that paſſeth by it ſhall be aſtoniſhed ; at the ruins of the temple, and of the city of Jeruſalem, which had been ſo magnificent : and ſhall hiſs ; in ſcorn and deriſion of the people of Iſrael, rejoicing in their ruin : and they ſhall ſay, why hath the Lord done thus unto this land, and to this houſe ? or ſuffered it to be done, to lie thus in waſte and ruins ; a land in which it had been ſaid he delighted, and looked unto from one end of the year to the other, and

[e] אם שוב תשבון ſi avertendo averſi fueritis, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

and a houſe he had taken up his dwelling in; ſurely ſomething more than ordinary, they ſuggeſt, muſt be the cauſe of all this.

℣. 9. And they ſhall anſwer, &c.] Who were left in the land when others were carried captive, as were ſome by Nebuchadnezzar, and who were capable of making the following anſwer: becauſe they forſook the Lord; the worſhip of the Lord their God, as the Targum: who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt; which is obſerved as an aggravation of their ſin: and have taken hold upon other gods; the gods of the people, as the Targum; of the Gentiles, who knew not the true God: and have worſhipped them, and ſerved them; even idols of gold and ſilver, wood and ſtone; an inſtance of judicial blindneſs they were left unto, who had been favoured with a revelation from God: therefore hath the Lord brought upon them all this evil; their idolatry was the cauſe of it, than which nothing is more provoking to God.

℣. 10. And it came to paſs at the end of twenty years, &c.] From the time Solomon firſt began to build: when Solomon had built the two houſes, the houſe of the Lord, and the king's houſe; the firſt was ſeven years in building, and the other thirteen; in all twenty.

℣. 11. (Now Hiram the king of Tyre had furniſhed Solomon with cedar-trees and fir-trees, &c.] For the building of both his houſes; ſee ch. v. 8, 10. and with gold according to all his deſire); which is not before mentioned, and accounts for it from whence Solomon had his gold; if he made no uſe, as ſome think he did not, of what his father left him; ſee ch. vii. 51. with which he covered ſeveral parts of the temple, and made ſeveral veſſels in it. Hiram traded to Ophir, and had it from thence; and he could ſupply Solomon with it, and did, before he ſent a navy thither: that then Solomon gave Hiram 20 cities in the land of Galilee; that is, by or near it, for they were not in the land of Canaan; for then Solomon could not have diſpoſed of them, being allotted and belonging to one of the tribes of Iſrael, and part of the Lord's inheritance; but they were upon the borders, particularly on the borders of Aſher, if Cabul in Joſh. xix. 27. can be thought to be the ſame with theſe; though ſome think that Solomon did not give Hiram the poſſeſſion of theſe cities, but the royalties and revenues of them, their produce until the debt was paid: but they rather ſeem to be a gratuity, and a full grant of them, and might be cities which David had conquered, and taken out of the hands of the antient inhabitants of them; and ſo Solomon had a right to diſpoſe of them, being left him by his father; for it is plain as yet they were not inhabited by Iſraelites; ſee 2 Chron. viii. 2. They are by a Jewiſh writer [f] ſaid to be 22 very wrongly.

℣. 12. And Hiram came out from Tyre to ſee the cities which Solomon had given him, &c.] For theſe cities being in or near Galilee, were not far from Tyre: and they pleaſed him not; being either out of repair, as ſome think; ſee 2 Chron. viii. 2. or the ground barren, and unfruitful; which is not likely, being in a very fruitful country, as the tribes on which they bordered were: but they were not agreeable to him, they did not ſuit with the diſpoſition of him and his people, who were given not to huſbandry, but to merchandize; and the land about theſe would require a good deal of pains and labour to till, which they were not uſed to.

℣. 13. And he ſaid, &c.] By letter to him: what cities are theſe which thou haſt given me, my brother? ſo he called him, being not only his neighbour, but his ally, in friendſhip and covenant with him; and this he ſaid of them not by way of complaint, or contempt, as unworthy of his acceptance; for ſo munificent a prince as Solomon, would never offer to a king to whom he was ſo much obliged any thing mean and contemptible; but as being unſuitable to him, however valuable they might be in themſelves, or of advantage to others: and he called them the land of Cabul unto this day; or rather the words ſhould be rendered imperſonally, they were called ſo; for Hiram could not call them by this name to the times of the writer of this book; nor is there any reaſon to think he would give them any name at all, and much leſs a contemptible one, as this is thought to be, when he did not chuſe to accept of them. Some interpret [g] the word ſhut up, or unfruitful, ſandy, dirty, clayey; ſo in the Talmud [h] it is ſaid to be a ſandy land, and called Cabul, becauſe a man's foot was plunged in it up to his ancles, and is repreſented as unfruitful. Joſephus [i] ſays in the Phœnician tongue it ſignifies not pleaſing, which agrees with what Hiram ſays, ℣. 12. Hillerus [k] interprets it as nothing, they being as nothing to Hiram, of no uſe to him, whatever they might be to others; and therefore he reſtored them to Solomon, 2 Chron. viii. 2. which ſeems to be the beſt ſenſe of the word. They are the ſame with Decapolis, Matt. iv. 25. ſo called from 10 cities therein [l].

℣. 14. And Hiram ſent to the king 120 talents of gold;] Not after the cities had been given him, but before; and it may be rendered had ſent [m], and is the ſum of the gold he furniſhed him with for the temple, ℣. 11. which according to Brerewood [n] was 540,000 pounds of our money; and according to another [o] writer, it amounted to 1,466,400 ducats of gold, taking a talent at 12220 ducats.

℣. 15. And this is the reaſon of the levy which king Solomon raiſed, &c.] Both of men to work, ch. v. 13. and of money to defray the expence: it was for to build the houſe of the Lord; the temple: and his own houſe; or palace: and Millo; which he repaired; ſee the note on 1 Sam. v. 9 and the wall of Jeruſalem; which, as Abarbinel ſays, was a large building, there being three walls one within another: and Hazor; a city in the tribe of Naphtali, and which had been a royal city with the Canaanites; ſee Joſh. xi. 1. and xix. 36. and Megiddo; which was in the tribe of Manaſſeh, Joſh. xvii. 11. and Gezer; which was in the tribe of Ephraim, and formerly a royal city of the Canaanites, Joſh. x. 33. and xvi. 3.

℣. 16. For Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up, and taken Gezer, and burnt it with fire, &c.] Egypt lay lower than Canaan, and therefore Pharaoh is ſaid to go up to it; what moved him to it, is not certain; whether he went of himſelf provoked, or was moved to it by Solomon, who had married his daughter; however ſo he did, and took the place, and burnt it: and ſlain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city; for though it was given to the tribe of Ephraim, yet they could not drive the Canaanites out out of it, who ſeem to have remained in it to this time; ſee Joſh. xvi. 10. and Judg. i. 29. and given it for a preſent unto his daughter, Solomon's wife; not as a dowry with her, but as a preſent to her; perhaps ſome time after marriage.

[f] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 54. 1. [g] David de Pomis, Lexic, fol. 58 2. [h] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 54. 1. [i] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 5. §. 3. [k] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 425. [l] Vid. Caſtel. Lex. Heptaglot. col. 1669. & Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 18. [m] ישלח miſerat, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [n] De Ponderibus & Pretiis, Vet. num. c. 5. [o] Scheuchzer, Phyſic. Sacr. vol. III. p. 571.

℣. 17. And Solomon built Gezer, &c.] Rebuilt it, it having been burnt, at leaſt great part of it, by Pharaoh when he took it: and Beth-horon the nether; and the upper alſo, 2 Chron. viii. 5. which belonged to the tribe of Ephraim, and were on the borders of it, between that and Benjamin, Joſh. xvi. 3, 5. and xviii. 13, 14.

℣. 18. And Baalath, &c.] A city in the tribe of Dan, Joſh. xix. 44 and Tadmor in the wilderneſs in the land; or Tamar, as in the Cetib, or ſcriptural reading; for we go according to the marginal reading, and ſo Thamaro in Ptolemy [p]; and is thought by ſome to be the ſame with Tamar in Ezek. xlvii. 19. which Jerom there ſays is Palmyra. Tamar ſignifies a palm-tree, from whence this city had its name Palmyra, the ſituation of which place agrees with this; hence we read both in Ptolemy [q] and Pliny [r] of the Palmyrene deſerts: the ruins of it are to be ſeen to this day, and of it this account is given; that it is incloſed on three ſides with long ridges of mountains, which open towards the eaſt gradually, to the diſtance of about an hour's riding; but to the ſouth ſtretches a vaſt plain, beyond the reach of the eye;—the air is good, but the ſoil exceeding barren; nothing green to be ſeen therein, ſave ſome few palm-trees in the gardens, and here and there about the town; and from theſe trees, I conceive, ſays my author, it obtained its name both in Hebrew and in Latin:—it appears to have been of a large extent, by the ſpace now taken up by the ruins; but there are no footſteps of any wall remaining, nor is it poſſible to judge of the antient figure of the place. The preſent inhabitants, as they are poor, miſerable, dirty people, ſo they have ſhut themſelves up to the number of about 30 or 40 families, in little huts made of dirt, within the walls of a ſpacious court, which incloſed a moſt magnificent heathen temple [s]. Benjamin of Tudela ſays [t] it is ſituated in a wilderneſs, far from any habitable place, and is four days journey from Baaleth before-mentioned; which place he takes to be the ſame with Baalbek, in the valley of Lebanon, built by Solomon for Pharaoh's daughter; which, according to the Arabic geographer [u], was ſituated at the foot of mount Lebanon; and Tadmor ſeems to be in the land of Hamath Zobah, 2 Chron. viii. 3, 4.

℣. 19. And all the cities of ſtore that Solomon had, &c.] In which were his magazines of corn, arms, and ammunition; and theſe were built in Hamath, 2 Chron. viii. 4. and cities for his chariots; chariots of war, iron chariots, which were kept in times of peace, in caſe of neceſſity, of which Solomon had 1400, ch. x. 26. and cities for his horſemen; of which he had 12000, a ſtanding cavalry: and that which Solomon deſired to build in Jeruſalem; beſides the temple and his own palace before mentioned; ſee Eccl. ii. 4. and in Lebanon; the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon, which Junius on 1 Kings vii. 2. thinks he built after he had taken Hamath-zobah, a royal city of Lebanon; ſee 2 Chron. viii. 3, 6. or fortreſſes on mount Lebanon, which was the northern border of his kingdom: and in all the land of his dominions; where he might repair, or fortify cities, or erect new forts for the ſafety of his kingdom; now for the doing of all this [illegible] levy both of men and money raiſed, and of [illegible] next follows.

℣. 20. And all the people that were left of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebuſites, &c.] Who were not deſtroyed in the times of Joſhua, or ſince, but dwelt in ſeveral cities of the land of Iſrael from the above times; ſee Judg. i. which were not of the children of Iſrael; not naturally of the land of Iſrael, though they might be proſelytes, at leaſt ſome of them.

℣. 21. Their children that were left after them in the land, &c.] The poſterity of thoſe left unſubdued in the times of Joſhua: whom the children of Iſrael alſo were not able utterly to deſtroy; in after-times, though now it is thought by ſome it was not for want of power, but becauſe they had made a covenant with them, as the Gibeonites did, and therefore they could not, becauſe it would have been a breach of covenant to have deſtroyed them; ſee 2 Chron. viii. 8. upon theſe did Solomon levy a tribute of bond-ſervice unto this day; not a tribute of money, which being poor they were not able to pay, but of ſervice, and which being once laid on was continued, and even to the time of the writing of this book.

℣. 22. But of the children of Iſrael did Solomon make no bondmen, &c.] For that was contrary to the law; they might be hired ſervants, but not bond-ſervants, Lev. xxv. 39, 40. but they were men of war; which he kept in pay, a ſtanding army, maintained even in time of peace, in caſe of neceſſity, ſhould an enemy attempt to invade, or ſurprize them: and his ſervants; in his family and court, who had offices and employments there: and his princes; miniſters of ſtate, counſellors, governors of cities, &c. and his captains; officers in his army: and rulers of his chariots and his horſemen; war-chariots and troopers; ſee ℣. 19.

℣. 23. Theſe were the chief of the officers over Solomon's work, &c.] In building the above houſes and cities: 550 which bore rule over the people that wrought in the work; in 2 Chron. viii. 10. they are ſaid to be but 250; now it may be obſerved, as is by the Jewiſh writers, that there were three ſorts of thoſe rulers; the loweſt rank and order of them conſiſted of 3300, the next of 300, which were over the 3300, and being numbered with them made 3600, 2 Chron. ii. 18. and the higheſt rank of them were 250, and the middlemoſt and higheſt being joined together, as they are here, made 550. Abarbinel reconciles the places thus, the 250 were only over thoſe that wrought in the temple; and the 550 here were thoſe that were over ſuch that were employed in the ſeveral parts of the kingdom.

℣. 24. But Pharaoh's daughter came up out of the city of David, &c.] Where he placed her when he firſt married her, until he had finiſhed his buildings, ch. iii. 10. which being done he brought her from thence unto her houſe, which Solomon had built for her; the reaſon of which is given, not only becauſe it was the houſe of David, but becauſe it was holy by the ark being there for ſome time; and therefore he did not judge it proper that his wife, an Egyptian woman, and ſometimes in her impurity, ſhould dwell there; ſee 2 Chron. viii. 11. then did he build Millo; this being particularly repeated from ℣. 15. and following upon what is ſaid of Pharaoh's daughter, has led many Jewiſh

[p] Geograph. l. 5. c. 16. [q] Ib. c. 15. [r] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 26. & 6. 28. [s] Halifax apud Philoſophic. Tranſact. vol. III. p. 504. [t] Itinerar. p. 57, 58. [u] Geograph. Nub. par. 5. clim. 3. p. 117.

Jewiſh writers to conclude her houſe was built at Millo; and indeed without ſuppoſing this, it is hard to conceive why it ſhould be obſerved here; the Targum on 2 Chron. viii. 11. calls her name Bithiah.

℣. 25. And three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt-offerings and peace-offerings upon the altar which he built unto the Lord, &c.] The brazen altar, the altar of burnt-offering, which ſtood in the court of the prieſts, and by whom he offered. The three times were the feaſts of paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles, as explained in 2 Chron. viii. 13. not that theſe were the only offerings, or theſe the only times he offered; for he offered all other ſacrifices, and at all other times commanded in the law of Moſes, as on ſabbaths and new moons, as expreſſed in the above place: and he burnt incenſe upon the altar that was before the Lord; the altar of incenſe, which ſtood in the holy place, right againſt the moſt holy, in which was the ark, the ſymbol of the divine preſence; not that Solomon burnt incenſe in perſon, but by the prieſts, whom he furniſhed with incenſe; for no king might offer incenſe, as the caſe of Uzziah ſhews: ſo he finiſhed the houſe; which reſpects not the building of it, that had been obſerved before, but the ſervice of it; as he had provided all veſſels and utenſils for the furniture of it, and all things to be uſed in them; as ſacrifices for the altar of burnt-offering, incenſe for the altar of incenſe, bread for the ſhew-bread table, and oil for the lamps; ſo he appointed the courſes of the prieſts, Levites, and porters, to do their duty, who went through every part of ſervice aſſigned them, and compleated the whole; ſee 2 Chron. viii. 14.

℣. 26. And king Solomon made a navy of ſhips in Ezion-geber, &c.] Which was one of the ſtations of the Iſraelites, near the wilderneſs of Sin, or Paran, Numb. xxxiii. 35. it ſignifies the backbone of a man; and it is ſaid [w] the ridge of rocks before this port were in that form, covered by the ſea at high water, and ſticking up with various points in a line when it was low. Joſephus ſays [x] in his time it was called Berenice, which is placed by Mela [y] between the Heroopolitic bay, and the promontory Strobilus, or Pharan. It is thought probable [z] to be the ſame with that which is called by the Arabs Meenah-el-Dſahab, the port of gold, called Dizahab, Deut. i. 1. which ſtands upon the ſhore of the Arabic gulph, about two or three day's diſtance from mount Sinai; though by others [a] thought to be the ſame the Arabs call Calzem, where was a great quantity of wood fit for building ſhips. It is farther deſcribed, which is beſide Elath, on the ſhore of the Red-ſea, in the land of Edom; and when Edom was ſubdued by David, this port fell into his hands, and ſo was in the poſſeſſion of Solomon; and there being plenty of timber in the parts adjacent, and this being a port in the Red-ſea, Solomon pitched upon it as a proper place to build ſhips in. Elath near to which it was, is the ſame the Elanitic bay had its name from; of which ſee the note on Deut. ii. 8. Trajan, the Roman emperor, formed a navy in the Red-ſea [b], that by it he might ravage and waſte the borders of India; and here it ſeems Solomon's navy went; ſee ℣. 28.

℣. 27. And Hiram ſent in his navy his ſervants, &c.] And according to 2 Chron. viii. 18. ſhips alſo; but how he could ſend them from Tyre, which lay in the Mediterranean ſea, to the above ports in the Red-ſea, without going a great way round, is not eaſy to conceive. Perhaps, as Guſſetius conjectures [c], Hiram had a port in the Red ſea for building and ſending out ſhips, for the ſake of his eaſtern navigation, and from thence he ſent them to Solomon's ports in the ſame ſea; but if what R. Japhet [d] obſerves is true, that the Red-ſea is mixed with the ſea of Joppa by means of the river Rhinocurura, as is remarked by a learned man [e], and who approves of the obſervation, and thinks it does not deſerve the cenſure Dr. Lightfoot [f] paſſes on it. If this, I ſay, can be ſupported, the difficulty is removed: ſo Abarbinel aſſerts [g], that a branch of the Nile flows into the Red-ſea; and another, paſſing through Alexandria, runs into the Mediterranean ſea. This is the firſt navy of ſhips we read of; in the conſtruction of which, as well as in the art of navigation, the Tyrians no doubt were greatly aſſiſting to Solomon's ſervants, and which appears by what follows; and they are ſaid [h] to be the firſt that made uſe of ſhips; and the invention of ſhips of burden, or merchant ſhips, ſuch as theſe were, is by Pliny [i] aſcribed to Hippus the Tyrian; and the Tyrians were famous for merchandize, which they could not carry on with foreign nations without ſhipping; ſee Iſ. xxiii. 8. the ſervants Hiram ſent in Solomon's navy were ſhip-men that had knowledge of the ſea; of ſea-coaſts and ports, of the manner of guiding and managing ſhips at ſea, and of the whole art of navigation, ſo far as then known, for which the Tyrians were famous; ſee Ezek. xxvii. 3—9. with the ſervants of Solomon; to inſtruct and aſſiſt them in naval affairs, they not having been uſed thereunto.

℣. 28. And they came to Ophir, &c.] About which place there are various opinions; ſome take it to be the little iſland of Zocatora, on the eaſtern coaſt of Africa, at a ſmall diſtance from the ſtraits of Babel-mandel; others the iſland of Ceylon; others Sofala in Africa; ſome [k] Peru in America; Vatablus the iſland of Hiſpaniola in the Weſt Indies, diſcovered by Columbus, and who thought [l] himſelf that he had found the land of Ophir, becauſe of the quantity of gold in it; others the ſouthern part of Arabia; but the moſt reaſonable opinion is, ſays my author [m], that it is a rich country in Malacca, which is a peninſula in the true Red-ſea, (that part of the ocean which divides Aſia from Africa) known by the name of the golden Cherſoneſe, and which agrees with Joſephus [n]; and at 12 leagues from Malacca there is a very high mountain, which by the natives is called Ophir, and is reported to be, or to have been very rich in gold, though at preſent only ſome tin-mines are worked there; and Kircher [o] ſays the word Ophir is a Coptic or Egyptian word, word, by which the antient Egyptians uſed to call that India which contains the kingdoms of Malabar, Zeilan, the golden Cherſoneſe, and the iſlands belonging to it, Sumatra, Molucca, Java, and other neighbouring golden iſlands. So Varrerius [p] thinks that all that coaſt in which are contained Pegu, Malaca, and Somatra, is Ophir; which places, beſides gold, abound with elephants, apes, and parrots. In the iſland of Sumatra gold is now found, eſpecially in Achin, in great plenty; in which is a mountain, called the golden mountain, near the mines [q]. Reland [r] takes Ophir to be the country round about a city called Oupara or Suphara in the Eaſt-Indies, where now ſtands Goa, the moſt famous mart in all India at this day for many of thoſe things Solomon traded thither for. Tho' after all perhaps there was no ſuch place originally as Ophir in India; only the gold brought from thence was like that of Ophir in Arabia, and therefore they called the place ſo from whence it was had; ſee Job xxii. 24. and ſet from thence gold 420 talents, and brought it to king Solomon; which according to Brerewood [s] amounted to 1,890,000 pounds of our money; and according to another writer [t] 5,132,400 ducats of gold. Abarbinel ſays a talent of gold was equal to 12300 Venetian ducats; in 2 Chron. viii. 18. it is ſaid, that 450 talents of gold were brought to Solomon; perhaps thirty might be expended in the voyage, or paid to Hiram's ſervants for their wages, as ſome Jewiſh writers obſerve; or in the bulk or ore it might be 450 talents, but when purified only 420, as Grotius remarks; either way removes the difficulty; though ſome think different voyages are reſpected here and there; of the gold of Ophir frequent mention is made in ſcripture.

[w] Harris's Voyages, vol. I. B. 1. ch. 2. §. 3. p. 377. [x] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 6. §. 4. [y] De ſitu orbis, l. 3. c. 8. [z] Clayton's Chronology, &c. p. 407. [a] Voſſius in Melam ut ſupra, p. 386. [b] Eutrop. Rom. Hiſt. l. 8. Rufi Feſt. Breviar. [c] Ebr. Comment. p. 628. [d] In Aben Ezra in Jon. ii. 5. [e] Texelii Phœnix, l. 3. c. 6. p. 243, 244. [f] Miſcellanies, c. 18. vol. I. p. 1002, 1003. [g] Apud Manaſſeh, Spes Iſraelis, §. 2. p. 20. [h] Prima ratem ventis credere docta Tyros, Catullus. [i] Nat. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 56. [k] Eraſm. Schmid. de America, orat. ad calc. Pindar. p. 261. So ſome Jewiſh Writers ſay it is the new World, Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 10. 1. [l] P. Martyr. Decad. 1. l. 1. [m] Harris's Voyages, ut ſupra. [n] Ut ſupra. [o] China, Illuſtrat. cum monument. p. 58. & Prodrom, Copt. c. 4. p. 119.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter contains an account of the queen of Sheba's viſit to king Solomon to her great ſatisfaction, ver. 1—13. of Solomon's merchandize and riches, and the magnificence of his court, ver. 14—23. of the rich preſents ſent to him, and of the purchaſe of chariots and horſes, and other things he made, ver. 24—29.

ver. 1. And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, &c.] Joſephus [u] calls her a queen of Egypt and Ethiopia; but Sheba was in the ſouthern part of Arabia Felix; her name with the Ethiopians is Maqueda [w], and with the Arabic geographer [x] Belcquis. Some [y] think that Sheba, or Saba, is not the name of a country, but of the queen herſelf; and that ſhe is the ſame with Sabbe the ſibyl mentioned by Pauſanias [z]; but no doubt Sheba or Saba, the metropolis of Arabia Felix, as Philoſtorgius [a] calls it, is here meant; which Benjamin of Tudela ſays [b] is called the country of Al Yeman, or the ſouth; and the name of queen Teiman given to this queen by an Arabic writer [c], ſeems to be the ſame as the queen of the ſouth, agreeable to Matt. xii. 42. ſee the note there. The fame of Solomon's greatneſs and goodneſs, of his wealth and riches, and eſpecially of his wiſdom, had reached her ears; perhaps by means of the embaſſadors of princes that had been at Solomon's court, and attended hers. According to an Ethiopic writer [d], it was by Tamerinus, a merchant of hers, ſhe came to hear of him: particularly ſhe heard of his fame concerning the name of the Lord; his knowledge of the true God, the favour he was in with him, the excellent wiſdom he had received from him, and what he had done for his honour and glory: ſhe came to prove him with hard queſtions; in things natural, civil, and divine; to try whether he had ſuch a ſhare of knowledge and wiſdom it was ſaid he had, ſhe poſed him with ænigma's, riddles, dark and intricate ſayings, to unravel and tell the meaning of. She might be an emblem of the Gentiles, ſeeking unto Chriſt, having heard of him, Iſ. xi. 10. Joh. xii. 20, 21. In Matt. xii. 42. ſhe is ſaid to come from the uttermoſt parts of the earth; wherefore ſome fetch her from Sumatra in the Eaſt-Indies, where in an old map no other name is put but Sheba [e].

ver. 2. And ſhe came to Jeruſalem with a very great train, &c.] With many of her courtiers and principal men, as well as with a large retinue of ſervants: with camels that bare ſpices; her country abounded both with camels and ſpices; ſee Iſ. lx. 6. Jer. vi. 20. and the notes there, and as Pliny [f] obſerves; who ſays their ſpices uſed to be carried on camels, particularly frankincenſe, for which Sheba was famous, and is therefore called by him regio thurifera, the frankincenſe-country [g], being to be had no where elſe; and Strabo [h] ſpeaks of cinnamon, caſſia, and other ſpices here in ſuch plenty, that the inhabitants burnt the wood of them for fuel; and Diodorus Siculus [i] repreſents this country as exceeding odoriferous, and as having beſides the above ſpices balſam, myrrh, calamus, coſtus, and others, in ſuch abundance that they heated their ovens with them: and very much gold; ſee ver. 10. the gold of Sheba is ſpoken of in Pſ. lxxii. 15. and Pliny [k] obſerves, that the Sabæans are exceeding rich, as in other things, ſo in gold; and Diodorus [l] Siculus and Strabo [m] ſpeak of gold found here in large lumps, very pure, and of a fine colour: and precious ſtones; as chryſtals, emeralds, berylls, and chryſolites, mentioned by Diodorus [n] as in thoſe parts; and a late traveller ſays [o], that Arabia Felix abounds with balſam, myrrh, caſſia, manna, dates, gold, frankincenſe, and pearl: and when ſhe was come to Solomon; unto his palace, and admitted into his preſence: ſhe communed with him of all that was in her heart; which ſhe had in her mind to diſcourſe with him about, and which ſhe had laid up in her memory for that purpoſe; and ſome things which ſhe had kept to herſelf, and had never imparted to any before, as ſome

[p] Comment. de Ophyra. [q] Dampier's Voyages, vol. II. ch. 7. [r] Diſſert. de Ophir, §. 6, 7. [s] De ponder. & pret. c. 5. §. 6. §. 2, 5. [t] Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. III. p. 572. [u] Antiqu. l. 8. [w] Ludolf. Ethiop. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 3. [x] Clim. 1. par. 6. [y] Vid. Coryli Diſſert. de Reg. Auſtral. c. 1. §. 1, 2. [z] Phocica, ſive, l. 10. p. 631. [a] Hiſt. Eccl. l. 3. c. 4. [b] Itinerar. p. 82. [c] Abulpharag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. Dyn. 3. p. 54. [d] Tellezius apud Ludolf. Ethiop. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 3. [e] Dampier's Voyages, vol. 2. p. 139. [f] Nat. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 14. [g] Ibid. ——Molles ſua thura Sabæi, Virg. Georg. l. 1. v. 57. & l. 2. v. 117. Thurilegos Arabes, Ovid. Faſt. l. 4. Vid. Plaut. Trinum. Act. 4. Sc. 2. v. 89. [h] Geograph. l. 16. p. 535. [i] Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 132. [k] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 28. p. 134. & l. 3. p. 181. [l] Ut ſupra, p. 133. l. 3. p. 181. [m] Ut ſupra. [n] Ut ſupra. [o] Ovington's Voyage to Surat, p. 421.

ſome think; all which ſhe had full liberty from Solomon to propound unto him.

℣. 3. And Solomon told her all her queſtions, &c.] Anſwered them, told her the meaning of every thing ſhe enquired about, expounded her riddles, ſolved her objections, and gave her ſatisfaction in all things ſhe propoſed unto him: there was not any thing hid from the king which he told her not; there was not any thing, though ever ſo abſtruſe and difficult, but what he underſtood, and gave her a clear and plain ſolution of.

℣. 4. And when the queen of Sheba had ſeen all Solomon's wiſdom, &c.] Which ſhe perceived by his anſwers to things relative to all ſorts of ſcience, natural, civil, and divine: and the houſe that he had built; the ſingular for the plural, houſe for houſes; the houſe of the Lord, his own houſe, that for Pharaoh's daughter, and the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon; in all which there appeared not only ſurprizing grandeur and magnificence, but exquiſite art and ſkill; there was a great diſplay of his wiſdom in the form and contrivance of them. Joſephus[p] ſays what exceedingly ſurprized her, and raiſed her admiration, was the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon.

℣. 5. And the meat of his table, &c.] The various ſorts of it, the different diſhes, and the multitude of them; ſee ch. iv. 22, 23. and the ſitting of his ſervants; at table, either with him, or at tables by themſelves, yet in his preſence; for theſe were his nobles and courtiers, who were placed in order, according to their rank and degree, which ſhewed wiſdom: and the attendance of his miniſters; or the ſtanding[q] of thoſe that waited, both at the king's table, and the tables of the lords, who each had their proper place and buſineſs aſſigned; ſo that the utmoſt decorum was obſerved, and no confuſion or diſorder to be ſeen: and their apparel; their ſeveral liveries, which were diſtinct according to the poſts and offices in which they were, and which no doubt were rich and ſplendid, as well as various: and his cup-bearers; to ſerve him and his nobles with wine when called for; though the word ſignifies liquors[r], and may deſign the various ſorts of wines, and other drinkables uſed by him, of which there was great plenty: and his aſcent by which he went up unto the houſe of the Lord; the ſteps which he had made to go up from his palace to the temple; which were ſo curiouſly deviſed, and ſo artificially wrought, that it gave the queen among other things, a ſenſible proof of his great wiſdom, as well as of his religion and piety. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and ſome others, render the words, and the burnt-offerings which he offered in the houſe of the Lord; and ſo Joſephus[s] underſtood them; ſhe was ſhewn the ſervice of the houſe of the Lord, as much as could be admitted, and perhaps was told the meaning of it; all which ſhe ſaw, both in his own houſe, and in the houſe of God, and greatly ſurprized her: ſo that there was no more ſpirit in her; ſhe was quite aſtoniſhed; like one in an exſtacy, ſhe had no power for a time to ſpeak, what ſhe ſaw and heard ſo affected her.

℣. 6. And ſhe ſaid to the king, &c.] When ſhe was a little come to herſelf: it was a true report that I heard in mine own land, of thy acts, and of thy wiſdom; which ſhe was ready to call in queſtion, when ſhe firſt heard it; at leaſt ſhe thought it was greatly exaggerated, but now ſhe found it was ſtrictly true.

℣. 7. Howbeit I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had ſeen it, &c.] That is, ſhe did not believe the whole of what was related to her; ſomewhat of it ſhe credited, and ſuppoſed there was ſomething grand and extraordinary in it, or ſhe would never have taken ſuch a journey; but ſhe did not believe that all could be true; ſhe thought things were too much magnified: and behold the half was not told me; of what ſhe now ſaw and heard: thy wiſdom and proſperity exceedeth the fame which I heard; the inward endowments of his mind, and the outward magnificence of his court, exceeded the relation of them to her; they were beyond expreſſion, they were ſo great that reporters could not hyperbolize upon them, nor even come up to them in their account of them, and in which yet men are apt to exceed.

℣. 8. Happy are thy men, &c.] The men of Iſrael that had a king over them, ſo wiſe, ſo great, ſo good: happy are theſe thy ſervants, which ſtand continually before thee, and hear thy wiſdom; who were now preſent, and to whom ſhe pointed, and may reſpect not his nobles and courtiers only, but his menial ſervants, who had an opportunity of often hearing the wiſe ſayings which dropped from his lips; and which no doubt were means of greatly improving their knowledge and underſtanding in things natural and divine.

℣. 9. Bleſſed be the Lord thy God, &c.] Of whom ſhe might have better notions than when ſhe came out of her own country: which delighted in thee, to ſet thee on the throne of Iſrael; loved him with a love of complacency and delight, was Jedidiah, as he called him, beloved of the Lord, and therefore he choſe him and preferred him to be king before his elder brother: becauſe the Lord loved Iſrael for ever; to eſtabliſh them as a kingdom for ever as they were, ſo long as obedient to him; ſee 2 Chron. ix. 8. therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and juſtice; not merely for the ſake of honour and glory, much leſs to indulge to pleaſure and luxury, and ſtill leſs to oppreſſion and tyranny; but to adminiſter juſtice and judgment to the people, which is the principal end of government; ſee Pſ. lxxii. 1, 2.

℣. 10. And ſhe gave the king 120 talents of gold, &c.] The ſame ſum that Hiram ſent him, ch. ix. 14. ſee the note there; this fulfilled the prophecy, ſo far as it reſpected Solomon, Pſ. lxxii. 15. and of ſpices very great ſtore, and precious ſtones; ſee ℣. 2. there came no more ſuch abundance of ſpices as theſe which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon; that is, into Judea. Joſephus reports[t], that ſome ſay that the balſamic plant which Judea was afterwards ſo famous for, was brought by this queen, and a gift of hers to Solomon; and Diodorus Siculus[u] ſpeaks of it as in Arabia, and not to be found in any other part of the world.

℣. 11. And the navy alſo of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, &c.] This perhaps was before Solomon was concerned with Hiram in navigation, and merchandize; though in 2 Chron. ix. 10. both their ſervants are ſaid to bring it; and it is here inſerted perhaps to ſhew that Solomon had not his gold, at leaſt all of it, from the queen of Sheba; but much from Hiram, who fetched it from Ophir; and as this was in India, as obſerved on ch. ix. 28.

many

[p] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 6. §. 5.
[q] מעמד ſtatum, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius; ſtationem, Piſcator.
[r] משקיו & potum ejus, Tig. verſ. ſo Abarbinel.
[s] Ut ſupra.
[t] Ut ſupra, §. 6.
[u] Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 132.

many writers make mention of gold in that part of the world, as Diodorus Siculus [w], Strabo [x], Dionyſius [y], Curtius [z], Pliny [a], and others: and this navy alſo brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees; or algum-trees, by tranſpoſition of letters, 2 Chron. ix. 10, 11. which ſome of the Jewiſh writers [b] take to be coral, which is not likely; others Braſil, rather ebony, which was peculiar to India, as both Solinus [c] and Virgil ſay [d]; Strabo [e] makes mention of ſtrange trees in India: and precious ſtones; of which there is great variety and plenty in that country, as related by Dionyſius [f], as diamonds, beſylls, jaſpers, topazes, and amethyſts, and by Curtius [g], Solinus [h], and others.

℣. 12. And the king made of the almug-trees, pillars for the houſe of the Lord, and for the king's houſe, &c.] Or terraces, as in 2 Chron. ix. 11. cauſeways; and means the aſcent or cauſeway he made from his own houſe to the temple; the pavement of which, as Jarchi interprets the word here, was made of the wood of theſe trees; or the ſupports of it, or rather the rails on each ſide, on which men might ſtay themſelves as they paſſed along, as Ben Gerſom; and ſince this aſcent was admired by the queen of Sheba, it is particularly obſerved what wood it was made of, and from whence it came: harps alſo, and pſalteries for ſingers; theſe muſical inſtruments were made of the ſame wood; Joſephus [i] ſays, of amber, and that their number was 400,000: there came no ſuch almug-trees, nor were ſeen unto this day; not in the land of Iſrael, neither before nor ſince, ſee 2 Chron. ix. 11.

℣. 13. And king Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her deſire whatſoever ſhe aſked, &c.] Some curious things ſhe ſaw, and was deſirous of, ſhe aſked for, and had them: beſides that which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty; of his own good will and pleaſure, without aſking: ſo ſhe turned, and went to her own country; the country of Sheba in Arabia Felix: ſhe and her ſervants; the train or retinue ſhe brought with her, which was large, ℣. 2.

℣. 14. Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year, was 666 talents of gold.] From Ophir and Tarſhiſh, and wherever he traded; which was of our money, according to Brerewood [k], 2,997,000 pounds; or, as another learned man [l], who makes it equal to 5,138,520 ducats of gold.

℣. 15. Beſides that he had of the merchantmen, and of the traffick of the ſpice-merchants, &c.] What they paid him as a duty or cuſtom for the importation of their goods: and of all the kings of Arabia; who were ſubject to him, and paid him a yearly tribute, or at leaſt made preſents, ſee ch. iv. 21, 24. and of the governors of the country; who were viceroys or deputy-governors of countries conquered by his father, and who collected tribute from the people, and paid it to him.

℣. 16. And king Solomon made 200 targets of beaten gold, &c.] Which were a larger ſort of ſhields, which covered the whole body; and theſe were made of gold beaten with the hammer, or drawn into plates, being melted like wax; ſo the Poeni or Carthaginians made ſhields of gold [m]: 600 ſhekels of gold went to one target; which is to be underſtood not of the weight, but of the price or value of them, which amounted to 450 pounds of our money; ſo Brerewood [n].

℣. 17. And he made 300 ſhields of beaten gold, &c.] Which were a leſſer ſort: three pounds of gold went to one ſhield; or 300 ſhekels, as in 2 Chron. ix. 16. a hundred ſhekels made one pound; ſo that theſe were but half the value of the former, and one of them was worth but 225 pounds: Eupolemus [o], an heathen writer, makes mention of thoſe golden ſhields Solomon made, and which were made for ſhow, and not for war, as follows: and the king put them in the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon; one part of which was made an armoury of, ſee Cant. iv. 4.

℣. 18. Moreover, the king made a great throne of ivory, &c.] To ſit on and judge his people; and ivory being white, may denote the purity, juſtice, and equity with which he judged; the white throne in Rev. xx. 11. may be an alluſion to this; the ivory he had from Tarſhiſh, ℣. 22. and overlaid it with the beſt gold; for the greater ſplendor and majeſty of it; not that he covered it all over, for then the ivory would not be ſeen, but interlined it, or ſtudded it with it, whereby it appeared the more beautiful and magnificent. Such a throne of gold and ivory was decreed to Caſar by the Romans [p].

℣. 19. The throne had ſix ſteps, &c.] Up to the footſtool of the throne, which was of gold, 2 Chron. ix. 18. and was high, that every one in court might ſee him, and the better hear the ſentence he gave: and the top of the throne was round behind; had a ſemicircle at the top of it, like an alcove: and there were ſtays on either ſide on the place of the ſeat; or hands [q], ſuch as the arms of a chair, to lean and reſt upon: and two lions ſtood beſide the ſtays; which were not only ornamental, and for ſupport of the ſtays, but expreſſive of majeſty, and of undaunted courage and reſolution to do juſtice, and of the danger ſuch expoſe themſelves to, who oppoſe magiſtrates in the diſcharge of their office; and in which Solomon was a type of Chriſt, the lion of the tribe of Judah; and for the ſame reaſons were the like portraits on the ſteps, as follows.

℣. 20. And twelve lions ſtood there on the one ſide, and on the other, upon the ſix ſteps, &c.] There was a lion on each ſide of every ſtep, a ſymbol of royal power, as before obſerved; ſo the Egyptians placed lions under the throne of Orus [r]: there was not the like made in any kingdom; for the matter and form of it, for its grandeur and magnificence; there was none at leaſt at that time, whatever has been ſince; for this is the firſt throne we read of ivory.

℣. 21. And all king Solomon's drinking-veſſels were of gold, &c.] Such quantities of it were brought to him from Ophir, and paid to him in tribute, and given him as preſents: and all the veſſels of the foreſt of Lebanon were of pure gold; not only what were uſed in his palace at Jeruſalem, but in his country-houſe at ſome little diſtance: none were of ſilver; it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon; to make plate of; or ſilver-plate was but little

[w] Ibid. l. 1. p. 121. [x] Geograph. l. 15. p. 481. [y] Perieg. v. 1144. [z] Hiſt. l. 8. §. 9.
[a] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 19, 20. [b] David de Pomis, Lexic. fol. 70. 3. [c] Polyhiſtor. c. 64. [d] Sola India nigrum fert ebenum. Georgic. l. 2. ℣. 116, 117.
[e] Geograph. l. 15. p. 477. [f] Perieget. ℣. 1119, &c.
[g] Hiſt. l. 8. c. 9. [h] Polyhiſtor. c. 65. [i] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 3. §. 8. [k] De ponder. & pret. c. 5. [l] Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 3. p. 580. [m] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 35. 3. [n] Ut ſupra.
[o] Apud Euſeb. præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 34. [p] Appian. Alex. l. 2. [q] יד manus, V. L. Montanus, &c. αγκωνις brachiola, Sept. in 2 Chron. ix. 18. [r] Hori Apoll. Hieroglyph. l. 1. c. 17.

little esteemed, and scarce any use of it made in Solomon's palace, if at all; though doubtless it was elsewhere, and especially silver as money.

℣. 22. For the king had at sea a navy of Tharshish, with the navy of Hiram, &c.] Tharshish was not the place the navy went from, but whither it went to, as appears from 2 Chron. ix. 21. and xx. 36. and designs not Tarsus in Cilicia; nor Tartessus in Spain, or Gades, or which was however near it; though it appears from Strabo [s] and Mela [t], that the Phœnicians were acquainted with those parts, and were possessed of them; and particularly, according to Velleius Paterculus [u], the navy of Tyre traded thither before the days of Solomon; and Vitringa [w] is clear in it, that these were ships that traded to Tartessus, with the ships of Tyre; and it is more likely that that place is meant than Carthage, now called Tunis, in Africa; though the Targum here calls it the navy, the navy of Africa; but as Tharshish is sometimes used for the sea in general, here it may signify a particular sea, so called; and which Josephus [x] names the Tarsic sea, the same with the Indian sea; and points to the same country where Ophir was, which was washed by it, and to which the two fleets joined were bound. This is observed, to account for it how Solomon came by so much gold: once in three years came the navy of Tharshish; it returned in such a space of time; navigation not being improved as now, and sailing by coasts, and what with their stay abroad to vend and purchase goods, and to refit their ships, as well as sometimes contrary winds, they were so long in performing this voyage, which is now done in a few months: bringing gold and silver; so that silver was accounted of, and used for some purposes, though not for the king's plate: ivory, and apes, and peacocks; ivory is the elephant's tooth, as the word signifies; some of those are of an almost incredible bigness; some are said to be of 90, others of 125 pound weight; Vartomannus [y] says, he saw in Sumatra, where some place Ophir, one that weighed 330 pounds; though, according to the Ethiopians [z], the ivory is from the horns; and so say [a] Pausanias and others, see Ezek. xxvii. 15. but it is commonly supposed to be of the two teeth in the upper jaw that stands out; and whether they are called horns or teeth, they are the same of which ivory is: of elephants, there were large numbers in India, bigger and stronger than those in Africa; which latter were afraid of the former, as Diodorus Siculus [b], Curtius [c], and Pliny [d] relate; so Virgil [e] speaks of ivory as fetched from India; and Horace [f] also, which must be East-India, for there are no ivory nor apes in the West-Indies [g]: apes or monkeys were then, as now, brought from those parts. Strabo [h] reports, that when the Macedonians under Alexander were there, such a vast number of them came out of the woods, and placed themselves on the open hills, that they took them for an army of men set in battle-array to fight them. Vartomannus [i] speaks of monkeys in the country of Calecut, of a very small price: near Surat apes are in great esteem, nor will they suffer them to be killed on any account [k]. There are various sorts of apes, some more like to goats, others to dogs, others to lions, and some to other animals, as Philostorgius [l] relates; and who also says, the sphinx is one sort of them, and which he describes on his own sight of it as resembling mankind in many things, and as a very subtle animal; and so Solinus [m] reckons such among apes; but what come nearest in name and sound to the kuphim of Solomon here, are those Pliny [n] calls cephi, whose forefeet he says are like the hands of men, and their hinder feet like the feet and thighs of men; and Strabo [o] describes a creature found in Ethiopia, called by him ceipus or cepus, which has a face like a satyr, and the rest of it is between a dog and a bear. There is a creature called cebus by Aristotle [p], and is described as having a tail, and all the rest like a man; according to Ludolf [q], cephus is the orang-outang of the Indians. The word for peacocks should rather be rendered parrots, so Junius; which are well known to come from India [r], and from thence only, according to Pausanias [s]; Vartomannus [t] says, that at Calecut there are parrots of sundry colours, as green and purple, and others of mixt colours, and such a multitude of them, that men are appointed to keep them from the rice in the fields, as we keep crows from corn; and that they are of a small price, one is sold for two-pence, or half a souse; and the number of them may be accounted for, because the Brachmans, the priests, reckon them sacred, and therefore the Indians eat them not [u]. Curtius [w] designs these, when he says in India are birds, which are taught to imitate man's voice; and Solinus [x] says, that India only produces the green parrot, that is, the East-Indies, the West-Indies not being then discovered; tho' some [y] think they were, and that it was thither Solomon's navy went: certain it is, there are parrots of various colours in the West-Indies, which P. Martyr of Angleria frequently makes mention of in his Decades. Huetius [z] derives the Hebrew word here used from תכרים, which he says signifies to join or adhere to any thing, as these birds will cling to, and hang by their bills and nails on a branch of a tree, &c. so that they are not easily separated from it; the word is used in Deut. xxxiii. 3. and, according to some, in this sense. But after all, if it should be insisted on, as it is by many, that peacocks are meant, these also are found in India. Alexander the Great first saw them in this country, which so amazed him, that he threatened to punish those severely that should kill any of them [a]. Vartomannus [b] makes

[s] Geograph. l. 3. p. 104. [t] De Situ Orbis, l. 2. c. 6. [u] Hist. l. 1. in principio. [w] Comment. in Jesaiam, c. 23. 1. [x] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 7. §. 2. [y] Navigat. l. 6. c. 22. [z] Ludolf. Ethiop. Hist. l. 1. c. 10 [a] Æliac. 1. p. 308, 309. Vid. Plin. l. 8. c. 3. Ælian Hist. Animal. l. 4. c. 21. & 7. 2. & 11. 37. & 14. 5. Varro apud Schindler. Lexic. Pentaglott. col. 1905. [b] Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 121. So Polybius, Hist. l. 5. [c] Hist. l. 8 c. 9. [d] Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 9. [e] India mittit ebur. Georgic. l. 1. ℣. 57. [f] —— Non aurum & ebur Indicum. Carmin. l. 1. Ode 31. Ἰνδογενεῖς ἐλέφαντες, Manetho. Apotelesm. ℣. 297. & l. 4. ℣. 149. Philo de præmiis, p. 924. [g] Menasseh spes Israelis, §. 2. p. 21. Ortel. Thesaur. Geograph. Varrerius de Ophyra. [h] Geograph. l. 15. p. 480. [i] Navigat. l. 5. c. 20. [k] Ovington's Voyage to Suratt, p. 360, 361, 596. [l] Eccl. Hist. l. 3. c. 11. [m] Polyhist. c. 40. [n] Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 19. [o] Ut supra, l. 17. p. 559. [p] Hist. Animal. l. 2. c. 8. 9. [q] Ethiop. Hist. l. 1. c. 10. [r] Ælian. de Animal. l. 16. c. 2. Psittacus eois ales mihi missus ab Indis. Ovid. Amor. l. 2. Eleg. 6. [s] Corinthiaca, sive, l. 2. p. 136. [t] Ut supra. [u] Ælian. de Animal. l. 13. c. 18. [w] Ut supra. [x] Polyhistor. c. 65. [y] Erasm. Schmid. de America Orat. ad Calc. Pindari, p. 261. Vatablus in loc. & in c. 9. 28. Hornius de Gent. Americ. l. 2. c. 6, 7, 8. [z] De Navigat. Solomon. c. 7. §. 6. [a] Ælian. ut supra, & l. 5. c. 21. Curtii Hist. l. 9. c. 1. [b] Navigat. l. 6. c. 7.

makes

makes mention of them as in great numbers in ſome parts of India; and they are catched and ſold at an eaſy rate at Surat [c], and make part both of their game, and of their grand entertainments [d]; Ælianus [e] often ſpeaks of them as in India in great numbers, and in great eſteem.

℣. 23. So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth, for riches and for wiſdom.] In which he was an eminent type of Chriſt; ſee Eph. iii. 8. Col. ii. 3.

℣. 24. And all the earth ſought to Solomon to hear his wiſdom, which God had put in his heart.] For it was all of God, a peculiar gift of his; by all the earth is meant the inhabitants of it, and only them, and thoſe the more principal; who came from the ſeveral parts of it, hearing the fame of his wiſdom, to know the truth of it, and to improve themſelves by it.

℣. 25. And they brought every man his preſent, &c.] To recommend them, and introduce them into his preſence: veſſels of ſilver, and veſſels of gold, and garments, and armour, and ſpices, and horſes, and mules, a rate year by year; every one brought according to the commodities of his country; and this they did yearly, out of great reſpect to him, and in veneration of him for his wiſdom, and for the advantages they received by his wiſe counſels and inſtructions; beſides, it was the cuſtom of the eaſtern countries not to pay a viſit, eſpecially to great perſonages, without carrying a preſent.

℣. 26. And Solomon gathered together chariots and horſemen, &c.] Both for war; for though it was a time of peace, he provided againſt the worſt, leſt an enemy ſhould come upon him ſuddenly, and when unprepared: and he had 1400 chariots, and 12,000 horſemen; of the latter ſee ch. iv. 26. whom he beſtowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jeruſalem; ſome of the horſemen were quartered in the cities where the chariots were placed, and ſome of them in Jeruſalem, to be near the king's perſon, and to be a guard to him on occaſion. Joſephus [f] ſays, half of them were in Jeruſalem about the king, and the reſt were diſperſed through the king's villages.

℣. 27. And the king made ſilver to be in Jeruſalem as ſtones, &c.] By the vaſt quantity he received from Tarſhiſh; this is an hyperbolical expreſſion: and cedars made he to be as the ſycomore-trees that are in the vale, for abundance; not by the growth of them, but by the importation of them from the dominion of Hiram; this is ſaid in the ſame figurative way; of the ſycomore-trees, Rauwolff ſays [g], they are what the Moors and Arabians calls mumeitz; which he deſcribes to be as large and as high as white mulberry-trees, and having almoſt the ſame leaves, but rounder, and their fruit not unlike our figs, only ſweeter, and no little ſeeds within, and not ſo good; and are therefore not eſteemed, and are commonly ſold to the poorer ſort, and that they grow in all fields and grounds; of which ſee more in the note on Amos vii. 14.

℣. 28. And Solomon had horſes brought out of Egypt, &c.] To mount his horſemen with, and draw his chariots; which ſeems contrary to the command in Deut. xvii. 16. and linen yarn; the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price; or rather linen itſelf; or linen garments, as Ben Gerſom; linen being the ſtaple commodity of Egypt, ſee Iſ. xix. 9. but no mention is made of yarn in 2 Chron. ix. 28. and the word rendered linen yarn ſignifies a confluence or collection of waters and other things; and the words may be rendered, as for the collection, the king's merchants received the collection at a price; that is, the collection of horſes, a large number of them, got together for ſale; theſe they took at a price ſet upon them [h], which is as follows.

℣. 29. And a chariot came up, and went out of Egypt for 600 ſhekels of ſilver, &c.] Which reckoning at two ſhillings and ſix-pence a ſhekel, amounted to 75 pounds; but a ſhekel was not worth more than two ſhillings and four-pence farthing: and an horſe for an 150; and this being the 4th part of the above ſum, the Jews gather from hence that there were four horſes in a chariot; the horſes muſt be reckoned one with another, the whole collection of them, or otherwiſe no doubt but one horſe was better than another; and it was a pretty large price to give for a horſe in thoſe times; which taking a ſhekel at the loweſt rate, muſt be upwards of 10 pounds; and which is too great a ſum ſtill for a cuſtom or tribute to be paid for them, whether to Pharoah or Solomon, as ſome underſtand it: and ſo for all the kings of the Hittites; perhaps the ſame with the kings of Arabia, ℣. 15. and for the kings of Syria; thoſe of Damaſcus, Zobah, &c. did they bring them out by their means; that is, by the means of Solomon's merchants, who bought them out of Egypt, and ſold them to theſe kings.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter relates the falſe ſteps Solomon took, notwithſtanding all his wiſdom, in marrying ſtrange wives, and worſhipping other gods, ℣. 1—8. upon which the Lord threatens him to rend the kingdom in his ſon's time, ℣. 9—13. and he raiſed up adverſaries againſt him, Hadad, Rezon, and Jeroboam, ℣. 14—26. of which laſt an account is given, and of his being aſſured by Ahijah the prophet of his having 10 of the tribes of Iſrael given to him; which Solomon having notice of, ſought to ſlay him, ℣. 27—40. and the chapter is concluded with an account of Solomon's death and burial, ℣. 41—43.

℣. 1. But king Solomon loved many ſtrange women, &c.] His love was a luſtful and not a lawful one, and of women who were not only of foreign countries, but not his lawful wives, and theſe many: together with the daughter of Pharoah; beſides her, or as he loved her, and perhaps more; his ſin was not that he loved her who was his lawful wife, but others with her; it is very probable ſhe was a proſelyteſs, and had no hand in turning him to idolatry, ſince we read not of any high place built for an Egyptian idol: women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites; all of the neighbouring nations. Some think he did this with

[c] Ovington's Voyage to Surat, p. 268, 269.
[d] Ib. p. 398.
[e] De Animal. l. 11. c. 33. & l. 13. 18. & l. 16. c. 2.
[f] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 2. §. 4.
[g] Travels, par. 1. c. 4. p. 37.
[h] Vid. Braunium de Veſt. Sacerdot. Heb. l. 1. c. 8. §. 9, 10, 11.

with political views, to get intelligence of the ſtate of thoſe countries, or to abate and extinguiſh their enmity; but it rather ſeems to be the fruit of luſt or pride.

℣. 2. Of the nations concerning which the Lord ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, ye ſhall not go in to them, neither ſhall they come in unto you, &c.] That is, they ſhould not intermarry with one another; this is to be underſtood of the laſt mentioned, the Hittites, who were one of the ſeven nations this law reſpected, Deut. vii. 1, 3. for ſurely they will turn away your heart after their gods; which is the reaſon given for the making the above law, and was ſadly verified in Solomon: Solomon clave unto theſe in love; he not only took them, but kept them, and expreſſed a ſtrong affection for them.

℣. 3. And he had 700 wives, princeſſes, and 300 concubines, &c.] In all 1000, a prodigious number; though theſe might not be all for uſe, but for ſtate, after the manner of the eaſtern monarchs; theſe were a far greater number than are alluded to in Cant. vi. 8. unleſs the virgins without number there, were ſuch of theſe as were not defiled by him; but the number here ſeems plainly referred to, in Eccl. vii. 28. and his wives turned away his heart; both from his duty to his God, and from attendance to his buſineſs as a king, eſpecially the former, as follows.

℣. 4. And it came to paſs when Solomon was old, &c.] Toward the latter end of his reign, when he might be near 60 years of age; for Rehoboam his ſon and ſucceſſor was 41 when he began to reign, ch. xiv. 21. which is obſerved either as an aggravation of the ſin of Solomon, that in his old age, when by long experience he might have been thought to be ſtill wiſer, and leſs luſtful: and yet that his wives turned away his heart after other gods; or as pointing at the advantage his wives took of his age: and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David his father; who, though guilty of many ſins, never inclined to idolatry; his heart was always right in that point, and ſincere in his worſhip, ſee Pſ. xviii. 20—24.

℣. 5. And Solomon went after Aſhtoreth the goddeſs of the Zidonians, &c.] Enticed by the Zidonian women, or woman he had, ℣. 1. According to the Phœnician hiſtories [i], Solomon married a daughter of Hiram, king of Tyre and Zidon; ſo Clemens of Alexandria ſays [k], that Hiram gave his daughter to Solomon; Aſhtoreth is Aſtarte, the ſame with the Venus of the Greeks, ſo Suidas [l]; and Lucian [m] expreſsly ſays, the Sidonians had a temple, ſaid by them to belong to Aſtarte, which he takes to be the moon; and both Venus and Juno ſignify the ſame planet; ſee the note on Judg. ii. 13. and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites; the ſame with Molech, ℣. 7. of which ſee the notes on Lev. xviii. 21. and on Amos i. 13. after this he was drawn by his Ammonitiſh wife, or wives, ℣. 1. though the Jewiſh writers think he did not worſhip theſe idols, but ſuffered his wives to do it, and connived at it, which was his ſin; ſo Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel.

℣. 6. And Solomon did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] As idolatry is, nothing more provoking to him: and went not fully after the Lord, as did David his father; for though he did not relinquiſh the worſhip of the true God, and the ſervice of the temple, yet inaſmuch as he worſhipped other gods beſides, or connived at the worſhip of them, he did not wholly, and conſtantly, and ſolely ſerve the Lord, as his father did.

℣. 7. Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemoſh, the abomination of Moab, &c.] Of this idol, ſee the note on Jer. xlviii. 7. an high place for which he ordered to be built, or at leaſt ſuffered it to be built, at the inſtigation of his Moabitiſh woman or women, ℣. 1. this was built in the hill that is before Jeruſalem; on the mount of Olives, as Jarchi, called from hence afterwards the mount of corruption, 2 Kings xxiii. 13. and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon, ſee ℣. 5.

℣. 8. And likewiſe did he for all his ſtrange wives, &c.] That is, built high places for their idols, or ſuffered them to be built; for when he had done it for one, he could not refuſe it to another, without greatly diſobliging them; even for as many of them, which burnt incenſe, and ſacrificed unto their gods: the gods of the countries from whence they came, and in the worſhip of which they had been brought up: this ſhows, that the beſt and wiſeſt of men, when left to themſelves, may do the worſt and moſt fooliſh of all things; as nothing can be more ſo than the worſhip of ſuch wretched deities.

℣. 9. And the Lord was angry with Solomon, becauſe his heart was turned from the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] Or from the fear of him, as the Targum, which muſt in a great meaſure be caſt off, or he could not have given in to idolatry in any ſhape as he did; for it was for that the Lord was diſpleaſed, than which nothing is more provoking to him, as may be often obſerved: which had appeared unto him twice; once at Gibeon, and again after his prayer at the dedication of the temple, ch. iii. 5. and ix. 2. which is mentioned here as an aggravation of his ſin, that he ſhould fall into it, when the Lord had condeſcended to appear to him ſo graciouſly.

℣. 10. And had commanded him concerning this thing, that he ſhould not go after other gods, &c.] Which is another aggravation of his ſin, that it was againſt an expreſs command of God, and was particularly given him, and he was warned to obſerve it, and threatened with evil ſhould he break it: but he kept not that which the Lord commanded; ſee ch. ix. 5, 6, 7.

℣. 11. Wherefore the Lord ſaid unto Solomon, &c.] Not in a viſion, as before, but by a prophet; the Jews ſay [n], Ahijah the Shilonite, which is probable, ſee ℣. 29. foraſmuch as this is done of thee, that thou haſt not kept my covenant and my ſtatutes which I have commanded thee; but broke them by his idolatry: I will ſurely rend the kingdom from thee, and I will give it to thy ſervant; meaning Jeroboam, who was not only a ſubject, but in office under him, ℣. 26, 28.

℣. 12. Notwithſtanding in thy days I will not do it for David thy father's ſake, &c.] Not for the merits of David, but the promiſes made to him, 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13. but I will rend it out of the hand of thy ſon; and immediate ſucceſſor, Rehoboam.

℣. 13. Howbeit, I will not rend away all the kingdom, &c.] The whole kingdom of Iſrael: but will give one tribe to thy ſon; but it ſeems he had both Benjamin and Judah, and only 10 tribes were rent from him; the reaſon of this mode of expreſſion may be, either becauſe he gave him one of the tribes tribes of Iſrael, beſides that of Judah, which was his own tribe; or only the tribe of Judah is meant, the whole tribe of Benjamin not being his, ſince Bethel, and ſome other places in that tribe were in the poſſeſſion of Jeroboam; or rather both theſe are called but one, becauſe their inheritances lay together, and were mixed with one another; and particularly both had a ſhare in the city of Jeruſalem, and the kingdom always after the diviſion went by the name of Judah only: and this tribe was given for David my ſervant's ſake; becauſe of the promiſe to him, that there ſhould not want one of his ſeed to ſit on his throne, ch. ix. 5. and for Jeruſalem's ſake, whom I have choſen; to have the houſe of his ſanctuary, and worſhip in, and therefore thought fit to have one rule there, that would have a regard to his ſervice in it.

[i] Apud Tatian. contr. Græcos, p. 171. [k] Stromat. l. 1. p. 325. [l] In voce Ασταρτη. [m] De Dea Syria. [n] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 20. p. 53. Kimchi in loc.

℣. 14. And the Lord ſtirred up an adverſary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite, &c.] Though he did not take his kingdom from him for his ſin, he chaſtized him with the rod of men, as he ſaid he would; ſuffering one, and then another, to riſe up and diſturb his peace in his old age, ſee 2 Sam. vii. 14. he was of the king's ſeed in Edom; of the blood royal.

℣. 15. For it came to paſs when David was in Edom, &c.] Fighting with the Edomites, and ſubduing them, and putting garriſons in the land, 2 Sam. viii. 14. and Joab the captain of the hoſt was gone up to bury the ſlain; the Iſraelites that fell in battle, or whom the Edomites afterwards, thro' ſtratagem and ſurprize, fell upon in their garriſons and deſtroyed, and which cauſed Joab to go thither to bury them, and take vengeance on the Edomites for it; or theſe were the Edomites ſlain by David and Joab; and it has been always reckoned a piece of humanity to bury the dead of an enemy, and is to the honour of the conqueror, ſee Ezek. xxxix. 12, 13. or to ſuffer the enemy to bury them themſelves: it is ſaid [o], that Hercules was the firſt that brought up this practice, and that before they were left on the field, to be devoured by dogs; ſo they were in the times of the Trojan war, as appears by the writings of Homer; but burying them in after-times, was uſed by the Romans [p] and Greeks; and Joſephus [q] delivers it as a law of Moſes to bury enemies, and not ſuffer any dead to lie without partaking of the earth, nor to paſs by or overlook any unburied; but from whence he took it, or grounds it upon, is not very evident; this is the firſt mention of it; though the Targum is, "to ſtrip the ſlain:" after he had ſmitten every male in Edom; as he thought, intending to root out the name of them; being enraged at their falling upon the garriſons, if that was the caſe.

℣. 16. For ſix months did Joab remain with all Iſrael, &c.] With the whole army: until he had cut off every male in Edom; as he ſuppoſed; for it was not fact, ſince after this they increaſed again, and became a powerful people, and had a king over them, and revolted from Judah, 2 Kings viii. 20, 21, 22.

℣. 17. That Hadad fled, &c.] Whilſt Joab was burying the ſlain: he, and certain Edomites of his father's ſervants with him; who either was king, and theſe ſome of his officers and courtiers; or however was of the royal family, and had an equipage, and theſe ſome of them: to go into Egypt; that was their view at firſt ſetting out, where they might hope for help, at leaſt ſhelter: Hadad being yet a little child; whom his father's ſervants had, whilſt Joab was making the ſlaughter he did, and took the opportunity of fleeing with him whilſt he was burying the dead.

℣. 18. And they aroſe out of Midian, &c.] A country which lay in their way to Egypt, and where it ſeems they made ſome ſtay, and then departed: and came to Paran; near to which was a wilderneſs of the ſame name, in which the Iſraelites wandered when they came out of Egypt, and which lay between Edom and Egypt: and they took men with them out of Paran; either as guides and guards through the wilderneſs, or to make the better appearance before Pharaoh, and that they might meet with the better reception: and they came to Egypt, unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; and told their caſe, and informed him who Hadad was: who pitying an unfortunate young prince, gave him an houſe; for him and his ſervants to dwell in: and appointed him victuals; a daily proviſion for him and his men: and gave him land; for his ſervants to cultivate, and from thence to raiſe a revenue for his ſupport; the Jewiſh writers ſay, he gave him cities to rule over; but as he was but a little child when he came, it can't be thought that was done, at leaſt directly.

℣. 19. And Hadad found great favour in the ſight of Pharaoh, &c.] Perhaps for his comely perſonage, princely qualities, and good behaviour, as he grew up: ſo that he gave him to wife the ſiſter of his own wife, the ſiſter of Tahpenes the queen; it ſeems the kings of Egypt uſed to marry their favourites to great perſonages; ſee Gen. xli. 45.

℣. 20. And the ſiſter of Tahpenes bore him Genubath his ſon, &c.] Which ſignifies ſtealth, and the name might be given in memory of himſelf being carried away by ſtealth from his own land: whom Tahpenes weaned in Pharaoh's houſe; who was ſo fond of the child, that ſhe took it, and weaned it for her in the king's palace: and Genubath was in Pharaoh's houſhold among the ſons of Pharaoh; brought up among them, as if he was one of them.

℣. 21. And when Hadad heard in Egypt that David ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Was dead and buried, as the death of princes is ſoon known in other countries, and eſpecially a king of ſuch fame as David: and that Joab the captain of the hoſt was dead; whoſe name might be terrible to Hadad, becauſe of the ſlaughter of men he had made in his country: Hadad ſaid unto Pharaoh, let me depart, that I may go to mine own country; with a view, and an hope to recover it, now David and Joab were dead.

℣. 22. Then Pharaoh ſaid unto him, but what haſt thou lacked with me, &c.] Either of an equipage ſuitable to his birth and marriage, or of proviſions for his houſhold, or of honour and reſpect, or of any favour from him: that behold, thou ſeekeſt to go into thine own country? as if not well uſed where he was, or would be better provided for there: and he anſwered, nothing; he wanted nothing at all, had all he could wiſh for: howbeit, let me go in any wiſe; he had ſuch an extreme deſire to go, that he begged it might not be denied him on any account; whether he acquainted Pharaoh

[o] Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 27.
[p] Liv. Hiſt. l. 39. c. 21. Vid. Kirchman. Append. ad lib. de funer. Roman. c. 3, 4, & 5.
[q] Antiqu. l. 4 c. 8. §. 24. contr. Apion. l. 2. c. 29.

rach with his view in this requeſt, is not ſaid, but it is probable he did, and it is certain Pharaoh gave him leave to go, ſee ℣. 25.

℣. 23. And God ſtirred him up another adverſary, &c.] One from the north, as the other was from the ſouth: Rezon, the ſon of Eliadab, which fled from his lord Hadadezer king of Zobah; when David fought with him; and this man ſeeing the battle go againſt his maſter, and that he was like to be worſted, deſerted him and fled, ſee 2 Sam. viii. 3.

℣. 24. And he gathered men unto him, &c.] Perhaps ſome of the ſcattered forces of his maſter's: and became captain over a band, when David ſlew them of Zobah; ſome that eſcaped enliſted under this man, and lived by plunder the remainder of David's reign, and ſo in the reign of Solomon unto his old age, when his heart was turned away from God to idols, by his wives: and they went to Damaſcus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damaſcus; Rezon and his men went thither, not in David's time, for he put a garriſon there, 2 Sam. viii. 6. but towards the cloſe of Solomon's days, and when Hadad ſet up in Edom, which gave him the hint to do the ſame at Damaſcus, of which he became king, and was the founder of that kingdom; after him there was a long race of kings there.

℣. 25. And he was an adverſary to Iſrael all the days of Solomon, &c.] Not all the days of his life, ſee ch. v. 4. but all his days from his firſt going into idolatry, to the end of his life: beſide the miſchief that Hadad did; and which, whatever it was, was not done till this time; for either when he got leave from Pharaoh to go into his country, he lay hid there, waiting an opportunity to ſeize upon it; or by means of Pharaoh he got himſelf to be king of it, through the permiſſion of Solomon, paying a tribute to him; but when Solomon was grown old, he revolted and refuſed to pay it, and rebelled againſt him, and gave him much trouble: and he abhorred Iſrael, and reigned over Syria; not Hadad, but Rezon; he had an averſion to them, was a thorn in their ſide, and gave them much trouble, as well as had them in contempt, and bid them defiance, having made himſelf not only maſter of Damaſcus, but of all Syria.

℣. 26. And Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, &c.] According to ſome Jewiſh writers[r], this was Sheba the ſon of Bichri; but, as Kimchi obſerves, he was of the tribe of Benjamin, this of Ephraim; and beſides, his head was cut off, and thrown over the wall to Joab, 2 Sam. xx. 1, 22. an Ephrathite of Zereda; ſome where in the tribe of Ephraim, but no where elſe mentioned. There was a famous Jewiſh doctor, before the times of Chriſt, of this place, as it ſeems, who was called Joſe ben Joezer, a man of Zereda[s]: Solomon's ſervant; not only his ſubject, but one that had been advanced by him to an office, and ſerved under him, ℣. 28. whoſe mother's name was Zeruah, a widow woman; who very probably was ſupported by this her ſon, an induſtrious and ingenious man: even he lifted up his hand againſt the king; either againſt Solomon, by reproaching and reproving him for ſome things he did; or rather againſt Rehoboam his ſon, which was very ungrateful.

℣. 27. And this was the cauſe he liſt up his hand againſt the king, &c.] The occaſion of it, his being advanced to ſome poſts under Solomon, which elated him, and what paſſed between him and the prophet Ahijah, after related: Solomon built Millo, and repaired the breaches of the city of David his father; in the overſight of which, it is ſuppoſed by the Jews, he employed this man, who reproached him for doing theſe works; building an houſe in Millo for Pharaoh's daughter, and ſtopping up the paſſage to the city of David, and the peoples acceſs thither upon occaſion.

℣. 28. And the man Jeroboam was a mighty man of valour, &c.] A man of great ſtrength of body, and fortitude of mind: and Solomon ſeeing the young man that he was induſtrious; in what he was ſet about in the above buildings and repairs: he made him ruler over all the charge of the houſe of Joſeph; the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh; to be a prince or a deputy-governor of them; or rather to collect the king's tax from them, or the revenues of that part of the country, ſee Prov. xxii. 29.

℣. 29. And it came to paſs at that time, when Jeroboam went out of Jeruſalem, &c.] Either to enter upon his new office; or having been with Solomon to pay in the revenues, and to make up his accounts with him, was going back to the country to do the duty of his office: that the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite found him in the way; not accidentally, but purpoſely was in the way to meet him, and converſe with him; this prophet was of the city of Shiloh, and where was now his abode, ſee ch. xiv. 2. and he had clad himſelf with a new garment; not Jeroboam, but the prophet, and that by the direction of the Lord, for the following purpoſe: and they two were alone in the field; it is poſſible Jeroboam might have ſome ſervants with him; but Ahijah deſiring ſome private converſation with him, he ſent them onwards, or bid them ſtay at ſome diſtance; who yet might be capable of obſerving what was done, though not of hearing what was ſaid; or otherwiſe, how ſhould Solomon come to the knowledge of it, ℣. 40.

℣. 30. And Ahijah caught the new garment that was on him, &c.] This looks as if it was Jeroboam's garment, having got a new one to appear before the king in; though the ſenſe may be this, that the prophet took hold of his own garment that was upon himſelf: and rent it in 12 pieces; as ſymbolical of the 12 tribes of Iſrael.

℣. 31. And he ſaid to Jeroboam, take thee ten pieces, &c.] Of the twelve, an emblem of the ten tribes he was to have: for thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon; that is, out of his family: and will give ten tribes unto thee; to rule over.

℣. 32. But he ſhall have one tribe for my ſervant David's ſake, &c.] See the note on ℣. 13.

℣. 33. Becauſe that they have forſaken me, &c.] My worſhip, as the Targum; both Solomon and the children of Iſrael following his example; which is not to be wondered at, conſidering how prone they always were to idolatry: and have worſhipped Aſhtoreth the goddeſs of the Sidonians, Chemoſh the god of the Moabites, and Milcom the god of the children of Ammon; of which deities ſee the references in the notes on ℣. 5, 7. and have not walked in my ways, to do that which is right in mine eyes, and to keep my ſtatutes and my judgments, as did David his father; the ſeveral laws of God relating to religious worſhip eſpecially, which David was a ſtrict obſerver of; and therefore Solomon having ſuch a pattern before him, was the more blame-worthy.

℣. 34.

[r] Shalſhalet Hakabala, p. 11.

[s] Pirke Abot, c. 1. § 4.

℣. 34. Howbeit, I will not take the kingdom out of his hand, &c.] Not any part of it, ℣. 12. but I will make him prince all the days of his life; that is, he ſhall continue to hold the government of all the tribes ſo long as he lives: for David my ſervant's ſake, whom I choſe, becauſe he kept my commandments and my ſtatutes; ſee ℣. 12. or was well pleaſed with, as the Targum; for keeping the commands of God from right principles, and with right views, is well pleaſing to him.

℣. 35. But I will take the kingdom out of his ſon's hand, &c.] All but the tribes of Judah and Benjamin: and will give it unto thee, even ten tribes; ſignified by ten pieces of the rent garment he had given him, ℣. 31.

℣. 36. And unto his ſon will I give one tribe, &c.] Judah and Benjamin reckoned as one; ſee the explanation of this on ℣. 13. that David my ſervant may have a light always before me in Jeruſalem, the city which I have choſen me to put my name there; or a kingdom, as the Targum; or an illuſtrious prince, a ſucceſſor, ſhining in royal majeſty and glory, to guide and direct, chear and comfort the people of Iſrael; be an honour to David's family, and a means of continuing the pure worſhip of God in the temple at Jeruſalem; ſee 2 Sam. xxi. 17. Pſ. cxxxii. 17.

℣. 37. And I will take thee, &c.] From the low eſtate in which he was, to be king: and thou ſhalt reign according to all that thy ſoul deſireth; he being ambitious of the kingdom, and having already formed in his mind ſome deſigns upon it: and ſhall be king over Iſrael; the ten tribes.

℣. 38. And it ſhall be, if thou wilt hearken unto all that I command thee, &c.] And be obedient thereunto: and wilt walk in my ways; directed to in the law of Moſes: and do that is right in my ſight, to keep my ſtatutes, and my commandments; thoſe particularly reſpecting divine worſhip: as David my ſervant did; who very diligently and conſtantly attended to the ordinances of religion: that I will be with thee; to guide and direct, protect and defend, proſper and ſucceed: and build thee a ſure houſe, as I built for David; continue the ſucceſſion of the kingdom in his poſterity: and will give Iſrael unto thee; to rule over them.

℣. 39. And I will for this afflict the ſeed of David, &c.] For the idolatry Solomon had been guilty of, and connived at: but not for ever; for when the ten tribes were carried captive, the kingdom of Judah flouriſhed under Hezekiah, Joſiah, &c. and though the tribe of Judah was carried captive, yet it returned after 70 years captivity, and had rulers over it of the ſeed of David; and eſpecially to the Meſſiah has God given the throne of his father David, of whoſe kingdom there will be no end, Luke i. 32, 33. and Jarchi's note on the text is, "for in the days of the Meſſiah the kingdom ſhall return to it," the ſeed of David; and Abarbinel ſays, of a truth, at the coming of our Meſſiah, this prophecy will be fulfilled; but the true Meſſiah is come already, in whom it is fulfilled; ſee Kimchi and Abendana, who refer to Ezek. xxxvii. 19. 24.

℣. 40. Solomon ſought therefore to kill Jeroboam, &c.] Which is another inſtance of his folly, to ſeek to defeat the counſel of God, when he himſelf was aſſured by the Lord, the kingdom ſhould be rent, and given to his ſervant, ℣. 11. and eſpecially if he was informed of what paſſed between Ahijah and Jeroboam, as it ſhould ſeem by this was; either through Ahijah's making no ſecret of it, or through Jeroboam not being able to keep his own counſel, or through the report of the ſervants of what they ſaw done, ℣. 29. which Solomon would eaſily underſtand: and Jeroboam aroſe and fled into Egypt; the common ſanctuary of perſons in diſtreſs in thoſe days: unto Shiſhak king of Egypt; either the father in-law or the brother-in law of Solomon, or one of another family, on whom the kingdom devolved; and who might not have any good reſpect for Solomon, and therefore Jeroboam thought himſelf ſafe with him: this is the only king of Egypt in ſcripture that is called by his own name, and not Pharaoh; he is generally ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the Seſoſtris of Herodotus[t], and the Seſoosis or Vexoſis of Juſtin[u]; and the rather he may be meant, ſince, according to Herodotus[w], he was the only king of Egypt that ruled over the Ethiopians; and Strabo ſays[x], he was the firſt that ſubdued Ethiopia and the country of the Troglodytes; alſo Diodorus Siculus affirms[y], that he fought with the Ethiopians dwelling to the ſouth, and obliged them to pay tribute; out of which countries Shiſhak brought many with him in his expedition againſt Jeruſalem, 2 Chron. xii. 2, 3. and abode in Egypt until the death of Solomon; not daring to return till that time, and then he did.

℣. 41. And the reſt of the acts of Solomon, and all that he did, and his wiſdom, are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon?] Either written by himſelf, as Kimchi ſuggeſts, though not in verſing; or by ſome chronologer or hiſtoriographer employed by him in writing the moſt memorable things that happened in his reign; or by ſeveral prophets, as in 2 Chron. ix. 29. out of which the inſpired writer of this book took what he was directed to by the Lord to be tranſmitted to future ages.

℣. 42. And the time that Solomon reigned in Jeruſalem, over all Iſrael, was 40 years.] The ſame ſays Eupolemus[z], an heathen writer, who makes him to live but 52 years; which is the common tradition of the Jews, who ſuppoſe he was but 12 years of age when he began to reign; which is to be confuted from the age of his ſon Rehoboam, ſee ch. xiv. 21. Joſephus[a], on the other hand, makes him to live to too great an age, who ſays, that he reigned 80 years, and lived 94.

℣. 43. And Solomon ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died as they did: and was buried in the city of David his father; not in Bethlehem, but Zion, ch. ii. 10. and Rehoboam his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom more in the following chapter. Though nothing is ſaid of Solomon's repentance, there is no doubt but he was a good man, repented of his ſins, and was ſaved; as may be concluded, from the commendations of him after his death, 2 Chron. xi. 17. from the promiſe of God that he made that his mercy ſhould not depart from him, though he chaſtized him, 2 Sam vii. 14, 15. from his being an inſpired writer, who were all holy men, 2 Pet. i. 20. and eſpecially from his writing the book of Eccleſiaſtes after his fall, which contains a confeſſion, acknowledgment of all his evils, a recantation of them, and repentance for them. Abulpharagius[b], an Arabic writer, raſhly aſſerts, that he died without repentance.

CHAP.

[t] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 102. [u] E Trogo, l. 1. c. 1. [w] Ut ſupra. c. 110. [x] Geograph. l. 16. p. 529. [y] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 50. [z] Apud Euſeb. præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 34. [a] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 7. §. 8. [b] Hiſt. Dynaſt. Dyn. 3. p. 55.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter relates Reboboam's going to Shechem to be made king, and Jeroboam's return from Egypt, ℣. 1, 2. the people's requeſt to Reboboam to be eaſed of their taxes, as the condition of making him king, ℣. 3, 4. his anſwer to them, after three days, having had the advice both of the old and young men, which latter he followed, and gave in a rough anſwer, ℣. 5—15. upon which ten tribes revolted from him, and two abode by him, ℣. 16—20. wherefore he meditated a war againſt the ten tribes, but was forbid by the Lord to engage in it, ℣. 21—24. and Jeroboam, in order to eſtabliſh his kingdom, and preſerve the people from a revolt to the houſe of David, becauſe of the temple-worſhip at Jeruſalem, deviſed a ſcheme of idolatrous worſhip in his own territories, ℣. 25—33.

℣. 1. And Reboboam went to Shechem, &c.] After the death and interment of his father: for all Iſrael were come to Shechem to make him king; as was pretended, though in reality it was to ſeek occaſion againſt him, and make Jeroboam king; it is very probable they knew of the prophecy of Abijah, and therefore would not go to Jeruſalem, but to Shechem, a city in the tribe of Ephraim, of which Jeroboam was, and where he had ſowed the ſeeds of ſedition when ruler there; and this place they choſe, partly becauſe they could more freely ſpeak what they had in their minds, and partly for the ſafety of Jeroboam they had ſent for on this occaſion; ſo that Reboboam went thither not of choice, but of neceſſity. The Jews [c] obſerve that this place was very ominous; here Dinah was raviſhed, Joſeph was ſold, Abimelech exerciſed tyranny, and here now the kingdom was divided.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs when Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who was yet in Egypt, heard of it, &c.] Of the death of Solomon, and of the meeting of the Iſraelites at Shechem: (for he was fled from the preſence of king Solomon; ſee ch. xi. 40. and Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt;) until the death of Solomon; ſome render the words, Jeroboam returned out of Egypt [d], which agrees with 2 Chron. x. 2. this he did on hearing the above news, and on being ſent for by ſome of his friends, as follows.

℣. 3. That they ſent and called him, &c.] That is, the people of Iſrael, ſome of the principal of them, eſpecially of the tribe of Ephraim, ſent meſſengers to him, and gave him an invitation to come to them at Shechem; or, they had ſent [e], as Kimchi interprets it, which was the reaſon of his returning from Egypt, at leaſt one of them: and Jeroboam, and all the congregation of Iſrael came; the chief men of them, the heads of the people; theſe, with Jeroboam at the head of them, who was come out of Egypt, came to Shechem, where Reboboam was, and they had appointed to meet him: and ſpake unto Reboboam; one in the name of them all, perhaps Jeroboam: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 4. Thy father made our yoke grievous, &c.] Laid heavy taxes upon them, for the finiſhing of his buildings, for the maintenance of his houſhold, for keeping ſuch a large number of horſes and chariots, and for the ſalaries of his officers, and for the ſupport of his magnificent court; though they had very little reaſon to complain, ſince this was for the honour and grandeur of their nation, and they enjoyed their liberty, and lived in peace, plenty, and ſafety all his days; and ſuch an abundance of riches was brought unto them by him, that ſilver was as the ſtones of the ſtreet; though perhaps the taxes might be increaſed in the latter part of his life, for the ſupport of his vaſt number of wives, and of their idolatrous worſhip, and for the defence of himſelf and kingdom againſt the attempts of Hadad and Rezon; but as moſt interpreters obſerve, what they had moſt reaſon to complain of, they take no notice of, even the idolatry he had ſet up among them: now therefore make thou the grievous ſervice of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter; that is, eaſe them of their taxes, or leſſen them: and we will ſerve thee; acknowledge him as their king, give him homage, and yield obedience to him.

℣. 5. And he ſaid unto them, Depart yet for three days, then come again to me, &c.] Suggeſting that he would conſider of their propoſal, and enquire into the merits of it, and as things ſhould appear to him he would give them an anſwer in three days time; which at firſt ſight may ſeem a point of prudence in him, to take time for deliberation and counſel in this affair, but in his caſe and circumſtance it was very imprudent; for he might eaſily ſee there was diſcontent among the people, and a faction forming againſt him, and by taking time to himſelf, he gave them time to take their meaſures, and haſten and ripen them for a revolt; for by giving them ſuch an anſwer, they might plainly perceive he was not inclined to give them ſatisfaction; it would have been the moſt adviſeable in him to have promiſed them at once that he would make them eaſy: and the people departed; to their quarters, and there remained to the third day.

℣. 6. And king Reboboam conſulted with the old men that ſtood before Solomon his father, while he yet lived, &c.] Which was very prudently done; for as theſe were men in years, and had been his father's counſellors, from whom, no doubt, they had learnt much wiſdom, being often in cabinet-council with him, they were capable of giving him the beſt advice: and ſaid, How do you adviſe, that I may anſwer this people? what anſwer would you adviſe me to give to them, and in what manner?

℣. 7. And they ſpake unto him, ſaying, &c.] They gave their advice as follows: If thou wilt be ſervant unto this people this day, and wilt ſerve them; condeſcend to them, behave in an humble manner towards them, for this day however, and gratify and oblige them; though indeed a king is but a ſervant to his people, and his adminiſtration of government a doing ſervice to them; hence Antigonus [f], a king mild, humble, and gentle, perceiving his ſon to behave in a fierce and violent manner towards his ſubjects, ſaid to him, My ſon, doſt thou not know that our glorious kingdom is a ſervitude? and anſwer them and ſpeak good words unto them; give them a ſoft anſwer, and ſpeak kindly and gently to them, and make them fair promiſes, and give them reaſon to expect that their requeſts will be granted: then they will be thy ſervants for ever; ſuch conduct would ſo win upon them, them, and make such an impression upon them, that they would for ever after entertain an high opinion of him, and be strongly affected and attached to him, and readily serve him.

[c] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol 102 1. Vatablus. [d] וישב ׳ ממצרים reverſus eſt de Ægypto, V. L. Ex Ægypto, ב pro מן [e] So Pagninus, Montanus. [f] Apud Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 20.

℣. 8. But he forsook the counsel of the old men which they had given him, &c.] He did not rightly relish it, nor cordially receive it; it did not suit with his haughty temper, he could not brook it, to stoop to his people; he thought it a lessening of his dignity to do any thing that looked like courting their favour; and therefore determined not to take the advice given him by the old men, but to seek for other: and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him, and which stood before him; the sons of nobles, with whom he had his education, and who were his companions from his youth upwards, and who were now officers in his court, and of his privy-council, being his favourites, and those he consulted on this occasion; and though they are called young men, as they were in comparison of the old men, yet since they were cotemporary with Reboboam, who was now 41 years of age, they must be about 40, or not much under, and at an age to be wiser than they appeared to be.

℣. 9. And he said unto them, What counsel give ye, that we may answer this people, saying, &c.] see ℣. 4. and the note there.

℣. 10. And the young men that were grown up with him, spake unto him, saying, &c.] Gave him the following advice: Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying; as is said, ℣. 4 thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my fathers loins; or, is thicker [g]; signifying that he had more strength and power than his father had, and that he would make them know it, and they should feel the weight of it, and instead of lessening he would increase their taxes; for also hereby was intimated, that his glory, grandeur, and magnificence was greater than his father's, especially when he first came to the kingdom, and therefore required the same taxes, or greater, to support it; and perhaps reference may be had to the difference of their age, Solomon being a child, or a very young man, when he came to the throne; whereas Reboboam was upwards of 40 years of age, and capable of judging what was fit to be done, and not to be talked to and treated after this manner, nor to receive the kingdom upon a condition of the people's prescribing.

℣. 11. And now whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, &c.] Which was putting words into his mouth, owning the charge and accusation brought against his father, as he did, ℣. 14. which was very unbecoming, if true; unless this is said according to the sense of the people: I will add to your yoke; make it heavier, lay more taxes on them: my father hath chastised you with whips; which was putting a lie into his mouth, and which he uttered, ℣. 14. for no instance of severity exercised on the people in general can be given during the whole reign of Solomon: but I will chastise you with scorpions; treat them more roughly, and with greater rigour: whips may mean smaller ones, these horse-whips, as in the Targum; which gave an acute pain, like the sting of scorpions, or made a wound like one. Ben Gersom says, these were rods with thorns on them, which pierced and gave much pain. Weemse [h] thinks these are alluded to by thorns in the sides, Numb. xxxiii. 55. Judg. ii. 3. for whipping with them was about the sides, and not along the back. Sobarbinel calls them iron thorns, rods that had iron prongs or rowels to them, which tore the flesh extremely. Isidore says, a rod that is smooth is called a rod, but if knotty and prickled, it is rightly called a scorpion, because it makes a wound in the body arched or crooked. Pliny [k] ascribes the invention of this sort of scorpions to the Cretians.

℣. 12. So Jeroboam and all the people came to Reboboam the third day, &c.] Jeroboam came to him at the head of the people, being the head of the faction, and designed for their king: as the king had appointed, saying, Come to me again the third day; see ℣. 5.

℣. 13. And the king answered the people roughly, &c.] In a bluftering manner, gave them hard words and severe menaces, being worked up to such a spirit by his young counsellors: and forsook the old mens counsel that they gave him; to give them good words and kind promises.

℣. 14. And spake to them after the counsel of the young men, &c.] And in the very language in which they gave it: saying, My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke; my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions, see the note on ℣. 11.

℣. 15. Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people, &c.] To lessen their taxes, and ease them of their burdens, as they desired: for the cause was from the Lord; it was according to his will and appointment; the defection of the people was willed by the Lord, and various things in providence turned up to alienate their minds from Reboboam, and dispose them to a revolt from him in favour of Jeroboam; and the Lord suffered the counsellors of Reboboam to give him the advice they did, and gave him up to the folly of his own heart to take it: that he might perform his saying, which the Lord spake by Ahijah the Shilonite, unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat; see ch. xi. 29—39.

℣. 16. So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, &c.] To grant their requests: the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? or in his posterity, which are not of our tribes, nor are we obliged to have a king of that family; nor can we expect any benefit or advantage from thence, as may be easily concluded from the rough answer of Reboboam: neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse; so they called David by way of contempt; which was great ingratitude, when he had done such great things for them, and he and his son Solomon had raised them to the pitch of wealth and glory they now enjoyed; these were seditious expressions, and seem to be borrowed from a seditious person in the times of David, 2 Sam. xx. 1. to your tents, O Israel; signifying it was high time to depart from Reboboam, and to have nothing to say to him, or do with him, but retire to their habitations, to consider whom to set as king over them: now see to thine own house, David; thou son or grandson of David; not his own house and family, and mind his domestic affairs, nor the house of the sanctuary in his tribe, as many of the Jewish writers interpret it; but rather the tribe of Judah, of which he was, and would have him consider to what a narrow compass his kingdom would be brought, who was just now bluftering and boasting of his grandeur as a king: so Israel departed unto their their tents; to their cities, as the Targum, and their habitations there, without recognizing Reboboam as their king, or swearing allegiance, or giving homage to him as such.

[g] עבה grossior est, V. L. Pagninus; densior est, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. [h] Christian Synagogue, part. 2. paragraph. 6, diatrib. 2. p. 190. [i] Origin. l. 5. c. 27. p. 39. [k] Nat. Hist. l. 7. c. 56.

℣. 17. But as for the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, &c.] Either such Israelites of the ten tribes that had before dwelt, or now upon this removed, for the sake of worship, to dwell in the tribe of Judah; or else that part of Israel, the tribe of Judah, which dwelt in the cities belonging to it: Reboboam reigned over them; they owned him to be their king, and submitted to his government.

℣. 18. Then king Reboboam sent Adoram, who was over the tribute, &c.] There was one of this name in this office in the time of David, 2 Sam. xx. 24. this is the same with Adoniram, as Jarchi thinks, see ch. iv. 6. him he sent either to collect the tribute of the Ephraimites, to show his authority; or rather to call the people back to have some farther discourse with them, and endeavour to soften things, and bring them to a compliance, so Josephus [l]; but it was too late, and he employed a very improper person; the heavy taxes were their complaint, and a tax-gatherer, and especially one that was at the head of the tribute, must be of all men the most disagreeable to them; this is another instance of the folly and false steps of Reboboam: and all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died; the populace fell upon him at once, and stoned him to death; and which, though contrary to law and justice, was approved of and applauded by their principal men and all the people; so irritated and provoked were they by Reboboam's answer to them. Hottinger [m] says, this man was buried in Shechem, which is very probable; but it is not expressed here, as he suggests it is; however, a gravestone, found A. D. 1480, in Spain, with this inscription, is not genuine, "this is the grave of Adoniram, a servant of king Solomon, who came to collect tribute, and died such a day:" therefore king Reboboam made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem; from Shechem, fearing they would treat him in the same manner in their rage and fury; his courage was now cooled, and his haughty and hectoring spirit was now brought down, and he was glad to make use of his chariot for flight; this is the first time we read of a king of Israel riding in a chariot; though before of Sisera, a Canaanitish captain, and that only in a chariot of war.

℣. 19. So Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.] In which the writer of this book lived, and so continued until their captivity by the king of Assyria. Their revolt is called a rebellion; for though it was according to the purpose and will of God, yet the people had no command or order from God for it, and was done without consulting him, and was a rejection of their lawful prince.

℣. 20. And it came to pass when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, &c.] Out of Egypt; the chief men knew of it before, for he had headed them in their approach and address to Reboboam; but the people in common had not, and especially those of the several tribes besides that of Ephraim: that they sent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Israel; they sent for him from his tent or house, which probably was in Shechem, and gave him an invitation to come to their assembly, met together to deliberate about a king; when they unanimously chose him to be king over Israel, that is, over the ten tribes, and inaugurated him into his office: there was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only; in which Benjamin was included, as appears from the following verse; that being joined to it, and mixed with it, and both having a part in Jerusalem, and so ever after the kingdom was denominated the kingdom of Judah.

℣. 21. And when Reboboam was come to Jerusalem, &c.] From Shechem, which was 40 miles [n] from Jerusalem: he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Reboboam the son of Solomon; which not only shews courage reassumed by Reboboam, now got safe home, but the hearty attachment of Judah and Benjamin to him, who raised presently so numerous an army in his favour; and had it not been that the Lord was against their going to battle with Israel, in all probability they might have gained their point, Jeroboam being scarcely settled in his kingdom, and having no forces raised.

℣. 22. But the word of God came unto Shemaiah the man of God, &c.] A prophet in those days, see 2 Chron. xii. 15. and the word that came to him, as in the Targum, is called the word of prophecy: saying; as follows.

℣. 23. Speak unto Reboboam the son of Solomon king of Judah, &c.] He is called king before, but of what tribe or tribes is not expressly said, only it is implied in ℣. 17. and he is only acknowledged king of Judah by the Lord himself: and unto all the house of Judah and Benjamin; which made but one house, as before but one tribe, ch. xi. 36. and to the remnant of the people; of the other tribes that might dwell among them at Jerusalem, and especially Simeon, whose inheritance was within the tribe of Judah, Josh. xix. 1. saying; as follows.

℣. 24. Thus saith the Lord, &c.] A common preface the prophets used when they spoke in the name of the Lord: Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel; and that because they were their brethren; though that is not the only reason, another follows: return every man to his house, for this thing is from me; it was according to the will of God, as Josephus rightly says [o]; it was by his ordination and appointment, though Jeroboam and the people sinned in the way and manner in which they brought it about; and therefore to fight against Israel in order to regain the kingdom, would be fighting against God, and so to no purpose: they hearkened therefore to the word of the Lord, and returned to depart according to the word of the Lord; they knew Shemaiah was a prophet of the Lord, and they believed the message he brought came from him, and therefore hearkened and were obedient to it; and with the consent of Reboboam were disbanded, and returned to their habitations, being satisfied with, and submissive to the will of God, both king and people.

℣. 25. Then Jeroboam built Shechem in mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein, &c.] Not that this city had lain in ruins from the times of Abimelech, Judg.

[l] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 8. §. 3. [m] Præfat. ad Cipp. Hebr. p. 4. Vid. Walton. in Bibl. Polyglott. Prolegom. 3. §. 35. p. 22. [n] Reland. Palestin. Illustrat. tom. 2. p. 1007. [o] Ut supra.

Judg. ix. 45. for then it would not have been a proper place for the convention of the people, ℣. 1. but he repaired the walls of it, and fortified it, and built a palace in it for his residence: and went out from thence, and built Penuel; a place on the other side Jordan, the tower of which was beaten down by Gideon, Judg. viii. 17. and might be now rebuilt, or at least the city was repaired by him, and anew fortified, perhaps for the better security of his dominions on that side Jordan; though Fortunatus Scacchus [p] is of opinion that this was an altar, the same as at Carmel, ch. xviii. 30. which Jeroboam built, and called by this name in testimony of the common religion of the Israelites and Jews.

℣. 26. And Jeroboam said in his heart, &c.] As he was musing about the state of his kingdom and the affairs of it: Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David; such were his fears, unless some method could be taken to prevent it, particularly with respect to religion, which was what his thoughts were employed about.

℣. 27. If this people go up to do sacrifice in the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, &c.] In the temple there, three times in the year, which all the males were obliged to, besides other times, when they had occasion to offer sacrifice, which they might do no where else: then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah; being drawn by the magnificence of the temple, the beauty and order of worship in it, the holiness of the place, and the grandeur of the royal court, and the persuasions of the priests and prophets of the Lord, both to keep to the service of the Lord, and to obey their lawful sovereign; and besides, they might be in fear they should be taken up and punished as traitors, and therefore would chuse to submit to Rehoboam, that they might have the liberty of sacrificing without fear; Jeroboam seems conscious himself that Rehoboam was their liege lord and lawful king: and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah; his fears ran so high, that he should not only lose his kingdom but his life, unless some step was taken to make an alteration in religious worship.

℣. 28. Whereupon the king took counsel, &c.] Of some of his principal men, that had as little religion as himself, and were only concerned for the civil state; and the result of their consultation was as follows: and made two calves of gold; in imitation of that which was made by Aaron, and encouraged by his example and success; and having been in Egypt some time, he might have learned the calf or ox-worship there, and might take his pattern from thence, and have two as they had; the one they called Apis, which was worshipped at Memphis, and another called Mnevis, worshipped at Hierapolis, as many learned men have observed; these were she-calves, according to the Septuagint and Josephus [q]: and said unto them; not his counsellors, but the people of the land: It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem; pretending he sought their ease, by contriving a method to prevent their long fatiguing journies, to go up with their sacrifices, first-fruits, &c. and the Jews [r] say the first-fruits ceased from going up to Jerusalem on the 23d of Sivan, which answers to part of May and part of June, on which day they kept a fast on that account: behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt; using the same words Aaron did on a like occasion; not that he thought these were really gods, and had divinity in them; nor could he hope or expect that the people would believe they had; but that these were representations of the true God, who had brought them out of Egypt; and that it might as well be supposed that God would cause his Shekinah to dwell in them, as between the cherubim over the ark.

℣. 29. And he set the one in Beth-el, &c.] In the southern part of the land, on the border of Ephraim and Benjamin; and the rather he chose this place, because its name signifies the house of God, and had been a sacred place, where Jacob more than once enjoyed the divine presence: and the other put he in Dan; in the northern part of the land, for the convenience of the inhabitants of those parts; and the rather, since it had been a place resorted to in former times, because of the Teraphim of Micah there.

℣. 30. And this thing became a sin, &c.] The cause and occasion of the sin of idolatry; it led them by degrees to leave off the worship of God, and to worship these calves as gods: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan; which was the farthest off, such was their great zeal for idolatrous worship; or they went thither before that at Bethel was set up; and even they at Bethel would go as far as Dan to worship, such was their veneration for both the calves. Aben-binel is of opinion, that these calves were not made by Jeroboam for idolatrous uses, only the altar after-mentioned; and that he never worshipped before them, nor sacrificed to them, nor even built the altar before them; but that these were set up as signs, and in memory of his kingdom, like the pillars in Solomon's temple; that he chose the calf or ox as emblems of his family, the family of Joseph, Deut. xxxiii. 17. two to represent Ephraim and Manasseh; golden ones, to denote the majesty and perpetuity of his kingdom; and he set these the one at Bethel, at the entrance of it, and the other at Dan, at the farther borders of it; and that he did not call those gods, but the only true God, as he that brought Israel out of Egypt; only signified by that expression, that he was every where, there as well as at Jerusalem; but that the Israelites, who were taken with sensible objects, on visiting these out of curiosity, it became a snare to them, and they fell into the worship of them; just as Gideon's ephod, and Moses's brazen serpent, were unto them.

℣. 31. And he made an house of high places, &c.] Or altars [s], built a temple at Dan, and set up several altars in it for sacrifice, both for burnt-offerings, and for incense, as at Jerusalem: and made priests of the lowest of the people; this clause seems not so well rendered; for this would have been very unpopular, and brought his new form of worship into contempt, to make the dregs of the people priests, which was not only a very sacred office, but of great honour; it was usual in some nations for kings to be priests also [t], and Jeroboam himself exercised this office, ℣. 33. and xiii. 1. and therefore would never put the meanest of the people into it, but rather those of higher rank: the words may be literally rendered, from the extremities or ends of the people [u]; meaning not merely from the extremest parts of his country, but rather

[p] Elæochrism. Myrothec. l. 2. c. 58. col. 593.
[q] Ut supra. §. 4.
[r] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 580. §. 2.
[s] במות altarium, Vatablus.
[t] Rex Anius, &c. Virgil. l. 3. Vid. Servium in ib.
[u] מקצות העם de extremitatibus populi, Vatablus, Piscator.

rather out of the whole of the people; out of all sorts of them, out of any of them without any distinction of tribe: for so it follows, which were not of the sons of Levi; and as by this means he enriched himself, by taking the cities that belonged to the priests and Levites, which they were obliged to leave, and from whence he drove them, 2 Chron. xi. 14. so he pleased the people by laying open the priesthood common to them, and freeing them from the payment of tithes, and the like.

℣. 32. And Jeroboam ordained a feast in the 8th month, on the 15th day of the month, like unto the feast that is in Judah, &c.] The feast of tabernacles, which was on the 15th day of the 7th month; this was done chiefly for the sake of an alteration; though Abarbinel thinks, because the fruits of the land were not so soon ripe, nor so soon gathered in the northern parts of the land, as nearer Jerusalem, he judged this month the fittest for the feast of ingathering the fruits; and he might hope to get more people to come to his feast, when all were gathered in: and he offered upon the altar (so he did in Bethel) sacrificing unto the calves that he had made; this he did by his priests, or rather he himself did it, see ch. xiii. 4. this shows that Jeroboam made these calves for worship, and did sacrifice to them, at least as representations of God. Abarbinel, to make this agree with his hypothesis, gives this sense of the clause, that he did not sacrifice to the calves, but to God, because of them, that his kingdom, which they were a sign of, might be continued; and there being but one calf in a place, he could not be said to sacrifice to them both, but to God, because of both; or else he thinks this must be done after the people had turned aside to them, and not when Jeroboam made them. The clause in the parenthesis, so he did in Bethel, intimates, that he did the same in Bethel as in Dan, of which, what is said before, is spoken; that is, that he made an house of high places in Bethel also, made priests out of all the people, such as were not of the tribe of Levi, appointed the feast of the 15th day of the 8th month to be observed there also, and he himself offered on the altar there: and he placed in Bethel the priests of the high places which he had made; to officiate there.

℣. 33. So he offered upon the altar which he had made in Bethel, the 15th day of the 8th month, &c.] As he had done in Dan: even in the month which he had devised of his own heart; the feast of tabernacles was of God's appointing, but the time of keeping he had devised himself, changing it from the 7th month, or Tisri, which answers to our September and October, to the 8th month, or Marchesvan, which answers to part of October and part of November: and ordained a feast unto the children of Israel; to be observed by them as the feast of tabernacles was by the priests of Judah and Benjamin: and he offered upon the altar, and burnt incense; which none but the priests should do; perhaps the reason why the same resentment was not shewn, as to Uzziah, was, because this was not at the altar of the Lord: whether he burnt incense after the manner of the Jewish priests, or as the priests of Egypt did to the sun, where he had been for some time, is not certain; the former burnt incense only twice a day, morning and evening, the latter three times; at sun-rising they burnt rosin, about noon myrrh, and about sun-setting kyphi, which was a compound of 16 sorts [w].

CHAP. XIII.

IN this chapter is an account of a man of God being sent to exclaim against Jeroboam's altar, and threaten its destruction, of which he gave a sign, which was accomplished, and with it the withering of the king's hand, which was healed upon the prophet's prayer for him, ℣. 1—7. who would have entertained him at his house, but he refused the offer, and departed, ℣. 8—10. but an old prophet in Bethel hearing of him, rode after him, and fetched him back to eat bread with him, through a lie he told him, ℣. 11—19. upon which the word came to the old prophet, threatening the man of God with death for disobeying his command, and which was accordingly executed by a lion that met him in the way, and slew him, ℣. 20—24. of which the old prophet being informed, went and took up his carcase, and buried it in his own sepulchre, where he charged his sons to bury him also when dead, believing that all the man of God had said would be fulfilled, ℣. 25—32. and the chapter is closed with observing the continuance of Jeroboam in his idolatry, ℣. 33, 34.

℣. 1. And behold, there came a man of God out of Judah, &c.] Whom Josephus [x] calls Jadon, perhaps the same with Iddo, who is by the Jewish writers [y] generally thought to be this man of God, and which may seem to be countenanced by 2 Chron. ix. 29. but cannot be, because this man was quickly slain, whereas Iddo lived after Rehoboam, and wrote his acts, first and last, nay after Abijah his son, 2 Chron. xii. 15. and xiii. 22. and for the same reason Shemaiah can't be the man of God, ch. xii. 22. though Tertullian [a] calls him Sameas, and designs Shemaiah: but whoever he was, he came by the word of the Lord to Bethel; that is, by his command: and Jeroboam stood by the altar to burn incense; at the time he came, see ch. xii. 33.

℣. 2. And he cried against the altar in the word of the Lord, &c.] By his order and command: and said, O altar, altar; addressing himself not to Jeroboam, but the altar, thereby reproving his stupidity, the altar being as ready to hear as he; and because that was what moved the indignation of the Lord; and the word is repeated, to shew the vehemency of the prophet's spirit, and his zeal against it; though the Jews commonly say it respects both altars, that at Dan, as well as this at Bethel: thus saith the Lord, a child shall be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name; who was not born until 300 years after this, according to the Jewish writers [z]; but it is generally reckoned to be more, even 350 or 360 years; this is a clear proof of the prescience, pre-determination, and providence of God with respect to future events, contingent ones, such as depend upon the will of men; for what more so, than giving a name to a child? upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and mens bones shall be burnt upon thee; all which was fulfilled by Josiah, [w] Plutarch de Iside & Osiride. Jarchi & Kimchi in loc.

[x] Ut supra.
[z] De Jejuniis, c. 16.
[y] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 20. Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 11. 1.
[a] Pirke Eliezer, c. 17.

Joſiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 15, 16, 20. it may be read, the bones of a man, which the Jews underſtand of Jeroboam; but may only ſignify that inſtead of the bones of beaſts, which were burnt on it, the bones of men ſhould be burnt, and even of the prieſts themſelves; a glaring proof this of the truth of prophecy, and of divine revelation.

℣. 3. And he gave a ſign the ſame day, ſaying, this is the ſign which the Lord hath ſpoken, &c.] As a confirmation of the truth of what the prophet had ſaid, and for the proof of his being a true prophet of the Lord: behold, the altar ſhall be rent; of itſelf, by an inviſible hand, by the power of God: and the aſhes that are upon it ſhall be poured out; ſignifying it ſhould be entirely demoliſhed, not only ſhaken but deſtroyed, ſo as not to be capable of retaining the aſhes on it; this was an emblem of the utter abolition of idolatry here in future times.

℣. 4. And it came to paſs, when king Jeroboam heard the ſaying of the man of God, who had cried againſt the altar in Bethel, &c.] He was highly provoked: ſo that he put forth his hand from the altar; on which he was burning incenſe: ſaying, lay hold on him; he put forth his hand, and either ſhook it at the prophet, threatening what he would do to him; or as beckoning to the people to ſeize him, and which he alſo expreſſed: and his hand, which he put forth againſt him, dried up, ſo that he could not pull it in again to him; he could not move it one way nor another, but it remained in the ſame poſition, the nerves and muſcles being ſhrunk; which was a farther confirmation of the prophet's miſſion from God, being one of thoſe concerning whom he ſays, do my prophets no harm, and a freſh token of the certain performance of what he had ſaid.

℣. 5. The altar alſo was rent, &c.] Split into two parts perhaps, and one fell one way, and the other another: and the aſhes poured out from the altar; the aſhes of the burnt-offering, theſe were ſpilled on the ground; all which was done without any outward force, or any viſible means thereof: according to the ſign which the man of God had given by the word of the Lord; by his direction and order.

℣. 6. And the king anſwered and ſaid unto the man of God, &c.] In another tone than when he bid the people lay hold on him; not in a haughty, but humble manner; not as threatening, but ſupplicating: intreat now the face of the Lord thy God; he does not ſay my God, for he had apoſtatized from him, and ſerved other gods, but thy God, whoſe prophet he was, and who had an intereſt in him, as clearly appeared by what he had ſaid and done by him: and pray for me, that my hand may be reſtored me again; not that the anger of God might be turned away from him, and he enjoy the divine favour, and have an application of pardoning grace made to him, only to have this outward mercy, this temporal favour reſtored to him, the uſe of his hand: and the man of God beſought the Lord; not rendering evil for evil; but being of a forgiving ſpirit, though the king had ſtretched out his hand againſt him, he lift up his hands to heaven for him: and the king's hand was reſtored again, and became as it was before; which was another inſtance of divine power, and a farther proof of the prophet's divine miſſion; from whence it might be concluded, that what he had propheſied of would be fulfilled, and was an inſtance alſo of divine goodneſs to the king, which ſhould have led him to repentance, but did not.

℣. 7. And the king ſaid unto the man of God, come home with me, and refreſh thyſelf, &c.] By eating a meal with him, after ſuch a journey he had taken, and delivered his prophecies, and put up his prayers for the king: and I will give thee a reward; for his prayers, by means of which his hand was reſtored to him; but takes no notice of the Lord, the author of this miraculous cure, nor expreſſes the leaſt degree of thankfulneſs and gratitude to him.

℣. 8. And the man of God ſaid unto the king, &c.] In anſwer to his civility to him, to aſſure him, it was not out of contempt to him, or ill will to him, or ſlight of his favour, but in obedience to the will of God: if thou wilt give half of thine houſe; of the riches in it, and even of his kingdom: I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place; this idolatrous place; the reaſon follows,

℣. 9. For ſo it was charged me by word of the Lord, &c.] The command of the Lord, by which he came to Bethel, and cried againſt the altar there, ℣. 1, 2. ſaying, eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the ſame way that thou cameſt; ſignifying that no communion was to be had with idolaters, nor any example to be ſet and followed; but the way to them, and to their idolatry, was to be ſhunned and avoided.

℣. 10. So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Bethel.] Neither ate nor drank with the king, though that is not expreſſed; nor did he go back the ſame way he came; but in each particular obſerved the divine command, and was obedient to it.

℣. 11. Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel, &c.] The Targum is, a falſe prophet, ſo Joſephus [b]; it is hard to ſay what he was, a good man or a bad man; if a good man, he was guilty of many things which are not in his favour, as dwelling in ſuch an idolatrous place, ſuffering his ſons to attend idolatrous worſhip, and telling the man of God a premeditated lie; and yet there are ſeveral things which ſeem contrary to his being a bad man, and of an ill character, ſince he is called an old prophet, did not attend idolatrous worſhip, ſhewed great reſpect to the man of God, had the word of God ſent unto him concerning him, believed that what he had propheſied ſhould come to paſs, buried the man of God in his own grave, and deſired his ſons to bury him with him. In ſome copies his name is ſaid to be Micah, as Kimchi obſerves, and other Jewiſh writers [c] ſay the ſame; though ſome take him to be Amaziah the prieſt of Bethel; and others, Gerſom the ſon of Moſes [d], but without any foundation; though he now dwelt at Bethel, he was originally of Samaria, 2 Kings xxiii. 18. and his ſons came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Bethel; that the altar was rent, and the aſhes poured out, as he had ſaid, and that Jeroboam's hand withered, and was reſtored upon his prayer to God: the words which he had ſpoken unto the king; that one ſhould be born of the family of David, Joſiah by name, that ſhould offer the idolatrous prieſts, and burn the bones of men upon that altar, and that that ſhould be rent, and its aſhes aſhes poured forth, which was done: them they told alſo their father; gave him a particular account of his actions and words.

[b] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 9. §. 1.

[c] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 104. 1.

[d] Shalſhalet Hakabala, ut ſupra. Shirhalbirim Rabba, fol. 10. 2.

℣. 12. And their father ſaid unto them, what way went he? &c.] Having a ſtrong inclination to ſee him, and converſe with him: for his ſons had ſeen what way the man of God went which came from Judah; they took notice of it; and, as the Targum, they ſhewed it to their father.

℣. 13. And he ſaid unto his ſons, ſaddle me the aſs, &c.] Which he uſed to ride on; intimating he had a mind to ride after him, and overtake him, as he might reaſonably think he might, ſince the man of God was on foot: ſo they ſaddled him the aſs, and he rode thereon; after the man of God, taking the way his ſons directed.

℣. 14. And went after the man of God, and found him ſitting under an oak, &c.] To ſhelter him from the heat, and being faint, hungry and thirſty; ſo the ancients of old made uſe of oaks for a covering, before houſes were invented[e]; thus Abraham pitched his tent in the plain, or under the oak of Mamre, Gen. xiii. 18. and he ſaid unto him, art thou the man of God that cameſt from Judah? which he might gueſs at from his habit, and from the deſcription his ſons had given of him: and he ſaid, I am; owned himſelf to be the perſon he enquired after.

℣. 15. Then ſaid he unto him, come home with me, and eat bread.] In which invitation no doubt he was hearty, and might have no ill deſign in it, only to have ſome converſation with him, as being a good man, and a prophet of the Lord, eſpecially upon the ſubject of his prophecies at Bethel.

℣. 16. And he ſaid, I may not return with thee, nor go in with thee, &c.] Into the city, and into his houſe in it, being ſuch an idolatrous place, and eſpecially being forbidden of God: neither will I eat bread, nor drink water with thee in this place; he was reſolute and determined to abide by the commandment of the Lord, though there is reaſon to believe that he was now both hungry and thirſty.

℣. 17. For it was ſaid to me by the word of the Lord, &c.] By the angel that was ſent to him, who gave him his meſſage and inſtructions; which he was perſuaded came from the Lord himſelf, and therefore looked upon himſelf under obligation to regard them as ſuch: thou ſhalt eat no bread, &c. the ſame that he obſerved to the king, ℣. 9.

℣. 18. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, the old prophet ſaid to the man of God: I am a prophet alſo as thou art; meaning, that he was a prophet of the true God, and not of any idol-deity; that he not only believed in him, and was a worſhipper of him, but had revelations from him, and of the ſame things this man of God had, and that he believed that what he had propheſied of would certainly come to paſs: and an angel ſpoke unto me by the word of the Lord; was ſent and diſpatched by the order of the Lord with the following meſſage: ſaying, bring him back with thee into thine houſe, that he may eat bread and drink water; and ſo be refreſhed, and be fit to proceed on in his journey: but he lied unto him; no meſſenger nor meſſage being ſent to him by the Lord, but was wholly a device and ſtratagem of his own to perſuade the man of God to return with him, that he might have his company and converſation.

℣. 19. So he went back with him, &c.] In which he ſinned; for as he had moſt certainly the command of God not to eat and drink in that place, he ought to have had the countermand from the Lord, and not truſted to another perſon. There are ſome things indeed which may be ſaid in his favour, and be an apology for him, as that this man was an ancient prophet of the Lord, as he appeared to him; and that though he was forbid to eat and drink with idolaters, yet he thought he might with a prophet of the Lord, and eſpecially as he affirmed he had the direction of an angel of the Lord for it; nor could he conceive that the prophet had any intereſt to ſerve by it, but rather it might be chargeable and burdenſome to him; and he might think the Lord out of compaſſion on him, had countermanded his former orders, and the circumſtances he was in might the more incline him to liſten to theſe plauſible pretences; but after all, he ought to have taken no directions but from the Lord himſelf, in this he failed: and did eat bread in his houſe, and drink water; contrary to the expreſs command of God.

℣. 20. And it came to paſs, as they ſat at the table, &c.] The old prophet, with his ſons, and the man of God; the Arabic verſion adds, and did eat, there being a pauſe in the Hebrew text, as if ſomething was wanting, and to be underſtood and ſupplied: that the word of the Lord came unto the prophet that brought him back; that is, to the old prophet, who was the means of bringing back the man of God; the word did not come to him who had tranſgreſſed the command of the Lord, but to him who was the occaſion of it; though Abarbinel is of opinion that the word came to the latter, and ſo ſome verſions, both antient and modern, render the clauſe, to the prophet whom he had brought back[f], and which is countenanced by what is ſaid, ℣. 26. according to the word of the Lord which he ſpoke unto him; but the former ſenſe beſt agrees with what follows.

℣. 21. And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, &c.] His mind being greatly affected with the word brought to him, partly on his own account, who by a lie his conſcience muſt accuſe him of, had been the means of ſeducing the man of God, and partly on his account, who was threatened with death for complying with him: ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord; being obliged to deliver, in the name of the Lord, what was ſaid unto him: Foraſmuch as thou haſt diſobeyed the mouth of the Lord; the order that came out of his mouth, as follows: and haſt not kept the commandment which the Lord thy God commanded thee; not to eat nor drink in Bethel.

℣. 22. But cameſt back, and haſt eaten bread, and drunk water in the place of the which the Lord did ſay to thee, Eat no bread, nor drink no water, &c.] Which command he obſerved when firſt there, though invited by the king; and yet after he had got out of the place, was prevailed upon to return and tranſgreſs the command: thy carcaſe ſhall not come unto the ſepulchre of thy fathers; ſignifying that he ſhould die before he came to the land of Judah, and he ſhould be buried in another place, and which was verified.

℣. 23. And it came to paſs, after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, &c.] That is, had finiſhed the meal; for he had begun to eat and drink before the word came, which came while they

[e] Suidas in voce δενδρυαξια.

[f] Syr. Ar. Junius & Tremellius.

they were eating and drinking; and it seems this did not hinder their proceeding to make an end of their meal, which one would have thought would have spoiled their appetite: that he saddled for him the ass, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back; he ordered his sons to get it ready for him, that he might not walk on foot as he had; though it does not appear that either he, or any of his servants accompanied him, but the contrary.

℣. 24. And when he was gone, a lion met him by the way, and slew him, &c.] Perhaps not far from Bethel; and this lion might come out of the same wood the she-bears did, that devoured the children that mocked the prophet, as bishop Patrick conjectures, 2 Kings ii. 23, 24. and his carcase was cast in the way; in the high-road, where it seems the lion seized him, and he fell: and the ass stood by it; disregarded and unhurt by the lion though the prophet was pulled off of the back of him: the lion also stood by the carcase; not offering to tear it in pieces and devour it, but rather as if he was the guard of it, to keep off all others from meddling with it; these circumstances are very surprising, and shew the thing to be of God; for when the lion had done what he had a commission to do, which was to kill the prophet, he was to do no more.

℣. 25. And behold, men passed by, &c.] Travellers on the road; nor did the lion offer to seize on them, nor desert the carcase upon their approach: and saw the carcase cast in the way, and the lion standing by the carcase; as before described: and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt; which was Bethel, by which means he came to have knowledge of it.

℣. 26. And when the prophet that brought him back from the way, heard thereof, &c.] The old prophet, that had deceived him, by telling him a lie: he said, It is the man of God, who was disobedient unto the word of the Lord; but not a syllable does he say of his own sin in deceiving him; though one would think his own conscience must smite him for it: therefore the Lord hath delivered him unto the lion, which hath torn him, and slain him according to the word of the Lard, which he spake unto him; and that by himself, ℣. 21, 22.

℣. 27. And he spake to his sons, saying, Saddle me the ass, &c.] For it seems he had more than one, for he had sent away the man of God with one before: and they saddled him; the ass he commonly rode on.

℣. 28. And he went and found his carcase cast in the way, and the ass and the lion standing by the carcase, &c.] As before described: the lion had not eaten the carcase, nor torn the ass; both which were very marvellous; as also that the ass should stand so quietly, and without fear, by the carcase along with the lion, and not run away; but here both stayed till the prophet came to take care of the carcase, which shews the singular providence of God in this affair; and that though he chastised the man of God with a temporal judgment for his offence, yet he was dear to him, and even his carcase precious in his sight.

℣. 29. And the prophet took up the carcase of the man of God, &c.] The lion perhaps made off as soon as he came, or if he stayed, the prophet was not afraid of him, seeing he did not attempt to devour the carcase, nor touch the ass, nor do any hurt to those that passed by: and laid it upon the ass, and brought it back; to his own city: and the old prophet came to the city, to mourn, and to bury him; to perform the funeral rites, according to the custom of the place.

℣. 30. And he laid his carcase in his own grave, &c.] Which he had prepared for himself; for as he came from Samaria, it could not be the sepulchre of his fathers; and this was shewing all the respect, and doing all the honour to him he well could: and they mourned over him; the prophet and his sons: saying, Alas my brother; which was an usual form of lamentation at funerals in after-times, see Jer. xxii. 18.

℣. 31. And it came to pass after he had buried him, that he spake to his sons, saying, &c.] He gave them the following charge: When I am dead, then bury me in the sepulchre wherein the man of God is buried; as it was his own, it might be reasonably thought they would bury him in it without such a charge; but lest they should not, he gives it: lay my bones beside his bones; his view in this was, that when Josiah came to burn the bones of the priests, he would spare the bones of this man of God, and so his lying by them, and mingled with them, would be spared also, and so it proved, 2 Kings xxiii. 18.

℣. 32. For the saying which he cried by the word of the Lord against the altar in Bethel, &c.] That the priests should be offered on it, and mens bones be burnt upon it; for as for its being rent, and the ashes of it poured out, that had been done already: and against all the houses of the high places which are in Samaria, shall surely come to pass; by which it appears that there were temples, and high places, and altars built in other parts of the kingdom besides Dan and Bethel, of the destruction of which the man of God prophesied, though not before mentioned; all which the old prophet gave credit to, and firmly believed would be accomplished. The kingdom of Israel, in after-times, had the name of Samaria, from the chief city of it, Is. vii. 9. here spoken of by anticipation, for as yet it was not in being, see ch. xvi. 24. and either it has its name here by way of prophecy, or else given by the writer of this book, as what it went by in his time.

℣. 33. After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way, &c.] From the idolatrous practices he had set on foot, and was establishing; though he had seen his altar rent, and the ashes poured out as the man of God predicted, his own hand withered, and that restored again upon the prayer of the prophet; and though he had heard of the death he died for his disobedience to the command of God, and the several marvellous things that attended it; these were so far from reforming him, that he seemed to be the more hardened thereby: but made again of the lowest of the people priests of the high places; and officiated there; and indeed those of the tribe of Levi would not serve there, and therefore were expelled their cities; see 2 Chron. xi. 14.

℣. 34. And this thing became sin unto the house of Jeroboam, &c.] All the above things were sins in themselves, as building high places, and putting priests in them whoever would; but the sense is, that these were the causes of punishment, or of evil things being inflicted on Jeroboam's family; sin is put for the punishment of sin, as it often is: even to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth; so that it become utterly extinct; and the next thing we hear of, is the sickness and death of his son.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter relates the ſickneſs of Jeroboam's ſon, the application of his wife at his inſtance to the prophet Ahijah, in the child's favour, ℣. 1—6. the prophecy of the prophet concerning the ruin of Jeroboam's houſe, and the death of the child, which came to paſs, ℣. 7—18. an account of the years of Jeroboam's reign, and alſo of Rehoboam's, ℣. 19—21. and of the evil things done and ſuffered by the latter in his kingdom, and the calamities that came upon him for it, ℣. 22—28. and the concluſion of his reign, ℣. 29, 30, 31.

℣. 1. At that time Ahijah the ſon of Jeroboam fell ſick.] Being ſmitten of God with ſome diſeaſe, as a puniſhment of Jeroboam's ſin; how long this was after the above things were done, cannot be ſaid.

℣. 2. And Jeroboam ſaid to his wife, &c.] Who ſhe was is not known: ariſe, I pray thee, and diſguiſe thyſelf; put off her royal apparel, and clothe herſelf like a common perſon, mimic the dreſs and language of a country woman: that thou be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam; by any that ſhould ſee her on the road, or at the city ſhe was to go to, or by the prophet to whom ſhe would be ſent: and get thee to Shiloh; which, according to Bunting [g], was 24 miles from Tirzah, where Jeroboam now lived, ſee ℣. 17. behold, there is Ahijah the prophet; called from thence the Shilonite, ch. xi. 29. which told me that I ſhould be king over this people; and this coming to paſs, proved him to be a true prophet, and to be credited in what he ſhould ſay concerning their child. Jeroboam deſired his wife to go on this errand, becauſe he did not care it ſhould be known that he applied to any of the prophets of the Lord; nor did he chuſe it ſhould be known whoſe child was enquired about, which another muſt have told, whereas his wife could ſpeak of it as her own; and ſhe was the fitteſt perſon to give an account of the child's illneſs, and would aſk the moſt proper and pertinent queſtions, and bring him back a faithful report; and he would have her be diſguiſed, leſt the prophet, who bore no good will to him becauſe of his apoſtacy, ſhould refuſe to give any anſwer at all, or elſe give a very rough and diſagreeable one.

℣. 3. And take with thee ten loaves, and cracknels, and a cruſe of honey, and go to him, &c.] It being uſual to carry a preſent to a prophet when he was enquired of on any account, ſee 1 Sam. ix. 7. and this being a plain preſent, and of ſuch things as the country afforded, ſhe might be taken for a plain country woman, and not for ſuch a perſonage as ſhe was: the ten loaves could not be large for a woman to carry, moſt probably made of wheat; the cracknels, according to the Greek verſion in Druſius, were for the prophet's children; they very likely were ſpiced, or were ſweetened with honey, and might be ſomewhat like our ſimnels; they ſeem to have their name in Hebrew from having points and pricks in them for the ſake of ornament; ſuch as Plautus [h] calls ſcribilitæ, becauſe, as Turnebus [i] ſays, they were marked and pricked, and ſeemed as if they were written: he ſhall tell thee what ſhall become of the child; whether it ſhould live or die, for that was all he wanted to know; he did not deſire to know what ſhould be done to the child for its recovery, nor to requeſt the prophet's prayers for it.

℣. 4. And Jeroboam's wife did ſo, and went to Shiloh, and came to the houſe of Ahijah, &c.] Diſguiſed herſelf, and took this long journey, and found the prophet's houſe; which ſhe did partly in obedience to her huſband, and partly from affection to her child: but Ahijah could not ſee; her or any body elſe that came into the room to him: for his eyes were ſet by reaſon of his age; or ſtood fixed and immoveable, as the eyes of blind men are; or the nerves and muſcles of his eyes ſtood within the holes thereof, ſo that he could not ſee objects.

℣. 5. And the Lord ſaid unto Ahijah, &c.] Either in a dream, or by an impulſe upon his mind, before Jeroboam's wife came in: behold, the wife of Jeroboam cometh to aſk a thing of thee for her ſon, for he is ſick; to know whether he will recover or no: thus and thus ſhalt thou ſay unto her; as after expreſſed in ſome following verſes: for it ſhall be when ſhe cometh in, that ſhe ſhall feign herſelf another woman; to the people that let her in, and introduce her to the prophet, and to the prophet himſelf; pretend herſelf to be a country woman come to aſk a queſtion of the prophet concerning her ſon that was ill of a diſeaſe.

℣. 6. And it was ſo, when Ahijah heard the ſound of her feet, as ſhe came in at the door, &c.] Of the room where the prophet was: that he ſaid, come in, thou wife of Jeroboam, why feigneſt thou thyſelf to be another? which muſt greatly ſurprize and confound her, as well as lay open to her the folly of her and her huſband to imagine, that ſhe could be ſecreted from God, and a prophet of his; or that a prophet could tell her what was future, and yet not know her that was preſent; and this might ſerve to aſſure her, and ſo her huſband, that what the prophet after delivered would certainly come to paſs: for I am ſent to thee with heavy tidings; or hard things, ſuch as would be very diſagreeable to her and her huſband.

℣. 7. Go tell Jeroboam, &c.] Thy huſband: thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael; ſo he continued to be, though they had revolted from him: foraſmuch as I exalted thee from among the people; the common people, from a low eſtate in which he was: and made thee prince over my people Iſrael; ſo they were when he made him king over them; and there were ſome among them ſtill that loved the Lord, ſerved and feared him, of which the prophet himſelf, now ſpeaking, was an inſtance.

℣. 8. And rent the kingdom away from the houſe of David, and gave it thee, &c.] Even 10 parts out of 12: and yet thou haſt not been as my ſervant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes; who never was guilty of idolatry, but always conſtantly and cordially attended the pure worſhip of God, and was careful to dō every thing in that according to the will of God, whatever elſe he might be deficient in.

℣. 9. But haſt done evil above all that were before thee, &c.] Not only above David, but above Saul's

[g] Travels, &c. p. 161. [h] Prolog. Poenulo, ℣. 43. [i] Adverſar. l. 23. c. 10.

Saul, who never gave into idolatry, yea even above Solomon, who though he connived at idolatry, and might be guilty of it in ſome inſtances, yet did not attempt to draw his people into it; and if this was the latter end of Jeroboam's reign, which is probable, Rehoboam and Abijam might be both dead; and though they were blame-worthy in ſome things, yet not ſo bad as Jeroboam; though perhaps this may reſpect only ſuch who had been kings of Iſrael before him: for thou haſt gone and made thee other gods, and molten images, to provoke me to anger; the two calves of gold; for however he might colour things over, and pretend he did not look upon theſe as gods, but as repreſentations of God, and that he did not worſhip them, but God by them, yet the Lord conſidered it as idolatry, than which nothing is more provoking to him: and haſt caſt me behind thy back; as unworthy of his regard; or my worſhip, as the Targum, which he neglected, and ſhewed no concern for.

℣. 10. Therefore behold, I will bring evil upon the houſe of Jeroboam, &c.] Calamities, deſtruction and ruin: and will cut off from Jeroboam him that piſſeth againſt the wall; not leave a dog of his, or rather a male, ſee 1 Sam. xxv. 22. and him that is ſhut up and left in Iſrael; in garriſons or in priſons, in cities or in fields, or in whatſoever ſituation or circumſtances they may be. Some interpret it of wealth and ſubſtance; it ſignifies an entire deſtruction it may be of men and goods, ſee Deut. xxxii. 36. and will take away the remnant of the houſe of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone; ſignifying, that Jeroboam's family was as loathſome and abominable to the Lord as dung is to men; and that he would make as clean a riddance of them, as men do of dung when they ſweep it out, and will not leave the leaſt ſcrap behind.

℣. 11. Him that dieth of Jeroboam in the city ſhall the dogs eat, and him that dieth in the field ſhall the fowls of the air eat, &c.] The meaning is, that they ſhould have no burial: for the Lord hath ſpoken it; and therefore ſhall be fulfilled, for what he hath ſaid he will do, Numb. xxiii. 19.

℣. 12. Ariſe thou therefore, get thee to thine own houſe, &c.] With all haſte, as ſoon as ſhe could: and when thy feet enter the city; the city of Tirzah, very probably the king's palace ſtood at the entry of it, ſee ℣. 17. the child ſhall die; this is an anſwer to the queſtion ſhe was to aſk, and at the ſame time a token of the ſure and certain fulfilment of all the prophet had ſpoken in the name of the Lord.

℣. 13. And all Iſrael ſhall mourn for him, and bury him, &c.] Give him an honourable interment, and follow him to the grave with lamentation, becauſe he was the heir apparent to the throne, and an hopeful prince, of whom they had raiſed expectations; that when he came to the throne things would take a different turn, eſpecially in matters of religion, and they might fear, he being removed, things would grow worſe inſtead of better: for he only of Jeroboam ſhall come to the grave; or be buried, the reſt ſhould be devoured by dogs or fowls: becauſe in him there is found ſome good thing towards the Lord God of Iſrael in the houſe of Jeroboam; the principles of grace were implanted, and the ſeeds of piety and religion ſown in his heart; and there appeared a diſpoſition of mind, and deſires in him to the name of God, and the remembrance of it; or to his pure worſhip and ſervice; it might be diſcerned, that he had a diſlike of idolatry, and a deſire to have true religion reſtored. The Jews ſay [k], that this good thing in him was, that he was the means of removing the watch or guards that were placed in the way to hinder the Iſraelites from going up to the feaſts of the Lord.

℣. 14. Moreover, the Lord ſhall raiſe up a king over Iſrael, &c.] Baaſha is meant, ch. xv. 29. who ſhall cut off the houſe of Jeroboam that day; immediately, as ſoon as on the throne, he ſhould deſtroy his whole family, as he did, ch. xv. 29. but what? even now; ſhall it be that day? yes; even at that very time, and which will be very quickly from this time; for as it may be ſuppoſed this was ſaid at the latter end of Jeroboam's reign, and his ſon and ſucceſſor reigned but two years ere this prophecy was accompliſhed. The Targum is, "who ſhall cut off the houſe of Jeroboam, him that is living to-day, and ſhall be from henceforward."

℣. 15. And the Lord ſhall ſmite Iſrael as a reed is ſhaken in the water, &c.] Either by the wind or by the ſtream; and may ſignify the fluctuating and uncertain condition Iſrael ſhould be in in future reigns, through inteſtine wars, and the tranſlation of the kingdom into different families; ſo that there was continually diſquietude and uneaſineſs, and no ſettled peace and tranquility: and he ſhall root up Iſrael out of this good land he gave to their fathers; which was brought about, firſt by Tiglath Pileſer, and then by Shalmaneſer, kings of Aſſyria, that carried them captives from hence: and ſhall ſcatter them beyond the river; the river Euphrates, as the Targum; or, as others, the river Gozan, 2 Kings xvii. 6. becauſe they have made their groves, provoking the Lord to anger; in which groves they placed idols, and worſhipped them, which was highly provoking to the Lord, and the cauſe of their diſperſion.

℣. 16. And he ſhall give Iſrael up, &c.] Into the hands of their enemies: becauſe of the ſins of Jeroboam who did ſin, and who made Iſrael to ſin; by his devices and ſtratagems, by his example and edicts, and by the methods he took to prevent Iſrael from worſhipping in the manner and place he directed to.

℣. 17. And Jeroboam's wife aroſe, and departed, &c.] Upon this ſpeech of the prophet's to her: and came to Tirzah; where Jeroboam now had his court, and where their ſon now was; it was a royal city in the time of the Canaanites, and is commonly placed in the tribe of Manaſſeh, and was a very pleaſant one, as its name ſignifies, to which there is an alluſion, Cant. vi. 4. ſee the note on Joſh. xii. 24. and when ſhe came to the threſhold of the door, the child died; juſt as ſhe was about to ſtep over the threſhold of the royal palace, which ſeems to have been at the entering of the city of Tirzah, ℣. 12.

℣. 18. And they buried him, &c.] In an honourable manner, ſuitable to his rank and pedigree: and all Iſrael mourned for him, according to word of the Lord, which he ſpake by the hand of his ſervant Ahijah the prophet, ℣. 13.

℣. 19. And the reſt of the acts of Jeroboam, how he warred, &c.] As he did with Rehoboam, ℣. 30. and with Abijam his ſon, who was an over-match for him, ſee 2 Chron. xiii. and how he reigned; over the people of Iſrael, whether wiſely, and juſtly, and in clemency, or not: behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael; not in that canonical book of ſcripture, ſo called, called, for in that there is very little account of the reign of Jeroboam; but in the annals and diaries of the kings of Israel, written by persons appointed for that purpose, and out of which it is generally thought that inspired writers, by divine direction, took what was thought proper to be transmitted to future times. So with the Romans, from their very beginning, to the times of Mutius, all the events of every year were committed to writing by the order of the Pontifex Maximus, and lay open to be read by the people in common; and these, as Tully [l] says, were what are called annals.

[k] T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 28. 2.

℣. 20. And the days which Jeroboam reigned were 22 years, &c.] So that he out-lived Rehoboam five years, and lived to the second year of the reign of his grandson Asa: and he slept with his fathers; or died as they did: and Nadab his son reigned in his stead; who perhaps was younger than Abijah, whose sickness and death are before related.

℣. 21. And Rehoboam the son of Solomon reigned in Judah, &c.] Over the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, when Jeroboam reigned over the other ten: Rehoboam was 41 years old when he began to reign; being born one year before his father Solomon began to reign, and so it might have been expected he would have begun his reign more wisely than he did: and he reigned 17 years in Jerusalem; not half so long as his father and grandfather, being neither so wise nor so good a prince as either of them: the city which the Lord did chuse out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there; to have a temple built for him, and his worship carried on in it; which was an aggravation of the sin of Rehoboam, that he should reign in such a place, and yet be guilty of the crimes he was; the three first years he reigned well, but afterwards forsook the law of the Lord, 2 Chron. xi. 17. and xii. 1. and his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess; and which is observed again, ℣. 31. she being the instrument of drawing him into idolatry, which it is very probable she practised in the days of Solomon, ch. xi. 5. 7.

℣. 22. And Judah did evil in the sight of the Lord, &c.] At the end of three years, from the beginning of the reign of Rehoboam: and they provoked him to jealousy with their sins which they had committed, above all that their fathers had done; that is, with their idolatries; for they were the sins which moved the Lord to jealousy, and provoked the eyes of his glory; in which they had outdone not the ten tribes, but their fathers, in the times of Moses, Joshua, and the judges, and of their kings before their separation, Saul, David, and Solomon.

℣. 23. For they also built them high places, &c.] Which, though allowed of, or at least connived at, before the temple was built, and when the tabernacle was unfixed, yet afterwards unlawful; and the tribe of Judah could have no excuse for them, who had the temple in their tribe: and images; contrary to the express command of God, Exod. xx. 4. and groves on every high hill, and under every green tree; that is, set up idols, and temples for idols, amidst groves of trees, and under all green trees; as was the custom of the heathens, who sacrificed on the heights of hills and tops of mountains, as was particularly the custom of the Persians, as both Herodotus [m] and Xenophon [n] relate; and with the Getæ, a people in Thrace, was a mountain they reckoned sacred [o].

℣. 24. And there were also sodomites in the land, &c.] Such as were addicted to unnatural lusts between men and men, which the men of Sodom were guilty of, from whence they had their name: Jarchi interprets the word adultery, and some versions render it whore-mongers; and filthy actions of this nature, both by men and women, usually attended idolatrous practices among the heathens; in their temples and groves such wickednesses were privately perpetrated: and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the Lord cast out before the children of Israel; the Canaanites, of whose uncleannesses, incests, and bestialities see Lev. xviii.

℣. 25. And it came to pass in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, &c.] Two years after he and his people fell into the above wicked practices: that Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem; of whom see xi. 40. this was suffered as a chastisement from the Lord, for their abominations.

℣. 26. And he took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, &c.] Which perhaps Jeroboam had informed him of, and for the sake of which he came, as well as to make a diversion in favour of Jeroboam, who had contracted an intimacy with him when in Egypt; and who might have no regard for Rehoboam, who was not a son of Pharaoh's daughter, and so no relation to him: these were the treasures which David had left to his son Solomon, and had dedicated for the temple, even gold, silver, and vessels, which he put among the treasures of the house of the Lord, and perhaps added to them, ch. vii. 51. and the treasures of the king's house; the riches, gold, silver, and jewels, whatever of worth and value he had in his chests and cabinets: he even took away all; that he could find and come at; for that there were some left is plain from ch. xv. 18. and he took away all the shields of gold which Solomon had made; and which were put in the house of the forest of Lebanon, ch. x. 16, 17.

℣. 27. And king Rehoboam made in their stead brazen shields, &c.] For the king of Egypt had so stripped him of his gold, that he was not able to replace golden ones: and committed them into the hands of the chief of the guard; or runners [p], that went before the king, or attended him as his lifeguard when he went abroad: which kept the door of the king's house; which kept guard night and day in their turns.

℣. 28. And it was so, when the king went into the house of the Lord, &c.] The temple; for though he had fallen into idolatry, he had not wholly forsaken the worship of God in the temple, and perhaps by the late humbling providence he might be stirred up to attend there more frequently: that the guard bare them; before him, partly for pomp and grandeur, and partly to keep in awe such as were inclined to mutiny and sedition: and brought them back into the guard-chamber; when the king returned, the place where the guard lodged and slept by turns.

℣. 29. Now the rest of the acts of Rehoboam, and all that he did, &c.] In the course of his reign, that was memorable: are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? who had annalists

[l] De oratore, l. 2. c. 34.
[m] Clio, sive, l. 1. c. 131.
[n] Cyropædia, l. 8. c. 45.
[o] Strabo. Geograph. l. 7. p. 206.
[p] הָרָצִים cursorum, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

annaliſts or hiſtoriographers to write for them, as the kings of Iſrael had, ℣. 19. in the writing of which, eſpecially with reſpect to genealogies, Shemaiah the prophet, and Iddo the ſeer were concerned, 2 Chron. xii. 15.

℣. 30. And there was war between Reboboam and Jeroboam all their days.] For though Reboboam did not enter into an offenſive war, and attack the children of Iſrael, being diſſuaded from it by Shemaiah the prophet in the name of the Lord, yet he might maintain a defenſive war; and though there were no pitched battles between them as afterwards, in his ſon's time, yet there might be ſkirmiſhes and bickerings on the borders of their countries.

℣. 31. And Reboboam ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David, &c.] Where David and Solomon were buried, ch. ii. 10. and xi. 43. and his mother's name was Naamah an Ammoniteſs; which is repeated, that it might be obſerved as what was the leading ſtep to his idolatry, and the means of his continuing in it: and Abijam his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom there is a further account in the following chapter.

CHAP. XV.

IN this chapter we have a ſhort hiſtory of the reign of Abijam, ℣. 1—8. and of Aſa, ℣. 9—24. both kings of Judah; and of the reigns of Nadab the ſon of Jeroboam, and of Baaſha, who deſtroyed his family, both kings of Iſrael, ℣. 25—34.

℣. 1. Now in the 18th year of king Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, reigned Abijam over Judah.] That is, began to reign; and by this it appears that Reboboam was in the 18th year of his reign when he died, for he and Jeroboam began their reign at the ſame time.

℣. 2. Three years reigned he in Jeruſalem, &c.] And three only; his reign was ſhort, and indeed not three full years, only one whole year and part of two others; for Aſa his ſon began to reign in the 20th of Jeroboam, ℣. 9. ſo that he reigned part of his 18th, his whole 19th, and part of his 20th: and his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abiſhalom; called Abſalom, 2 Chron. xi. 20, 21. generally ſuppoſed by the Jews to be Abſalom the ſon of David, and which may ſeem not improbable, ſince his other two wives were of his father's family, 2 Chron. xi. 18. Joſephus ſays [q] ſhe was the daughter of Tamar the daughter of Abſalom, and ſo his grandaughter; and which may account for her being called Michaiah the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah, 2 Chron. xiii. 2. ſince the difference between Maachah and Michaiah is not very great; and Uriel might be the name of Tamar's huſband; though it is moſt likely that both father and daughter had two names; ſhe ſeems to be mentioned here, to obſerve that ſhe was the cauſe and means of her ſon's diſagreeable walk, as follows, ſee ℣. 13.

℣. 3. And he walked in all the ſins of his father, which he had done before him, &c.] Having ſuch bad examples as both parents to copy after; it chiefly reſpects idolatrous practices, ſee ch. xiv. 23. and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God; he did profeſs the true God, and worſhipped him, but not wholly, and only, and ſincerely; he worſhipped other Gods beſides him: and ſo his heart was not as the heart of David his father; who was a ſole and ſincere worſhipper of God, never departed from him and his ſervice.

℣. 4. Nevertheleſs, for David's ſake did the Lord his God give him a lamp in Jeruſalem, &c.] A kingdom there, as the Targum, ſplendid and glorious, to be continued in his poſterity: to ſet up his ſon after him; in it: and to eſtabliſh Jeruſalem; to continue that in which the temple was, for the ſake of which, and the worſhip of God in it, there was a ſucceſſion of David's poſterity on the throne of Judah.

℣. 5. Becauſe David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, &c.] With reſpect to worſhip: and turned not aſide from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life; eſpecially in matters of religion, nor even in his moral walk, and converſation, deliberately, ſtudiouſly, and with deſign: ſave only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite; the killing of him, and other ſins which led on to it, and were in connection with it; Abarbinel thinks, becauſe the affair of Bathſheba is not mentioned, that was not reckoned to David as a ſin; but no doubt it was, and is included here.

℣. 6. And there was war between Reboboam and Jeroboam all the days of his life.] Not the days of Reboboam, though that was true, and is obſerved, ch. xiv. 30. but all the days of Abijam, before he came to the throne, and in which, when a young man, he was concerned, and which ſtill continued between him and Jeroboam; though ſome think he is called by his father's name, as Reboboam is called David, ch. xii. 16.

℣. 7. Now the reſt of the acts of Abijam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? &c.] Which ſeem to be written by Iddo the prophet, ſee 2 Chron. xiii. 22. and there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam; and a famous pitched battle between them we read of in 2 Chron. xiii. 3. 17.

℣. 8. And Abijam ſlept with his fathers, &c.] That is, died as they did: and they buried him in the city of David; in the ſepulchre of his royal anceſtors, David, Solomon, and Reboboam; and Aſa his ſon reigned in his ſtead; who perhaps was the eldeſt of his 22 ſons, 2 Chron. xiii. 21.

℣. 9. And in the 20th year of Jeroboam king of Iſrael, reigned Aſa over Judah.] How this is to be accounted for ſee the note on ℣. 2.

℣. 10. And 41 years reigned he in Jeruſalem, &c.] Being a good king, had the bleſſing of a long reign, and reached, and even exceeded the years of the reigns of David and Solomon: and his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abiſhalom; that is the name of his grandmother, ſee ℣. 2. ſhe is called his mother, not becauſe ſhe brought him forth, but becauſe ſhe brought him up; and this is obſerved to his commendation, that though he was educated by an idolatrous woman, yet was not corrupted by her as his father was.

℣. 11. And Aſa did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, as did David his father.] In his perſonal walk and converſation, in his government of the nation, and eſpecially in the matters of his God,

[q] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 10. §. 1.

God, and of religion, he made David his pattern and example to copy after.

℣. 12. And he took away the ſodomites out of the land, &c.] Which were in the times of Reboboam, ch. xiv. 24. and continued in his father's reign; thoſe he took away, either by driving them out of the land, or by putting them to death according to the law of God, Lev. xx. 13. even as many of them as he had knowledge of, for ſome remained, ſee ch. xxii. 46. and removed all the idols that his fathers had made; or ſuffered to be made, as Solomon, Reboboam, and Abijam, ſee ch. xi. 7. and xiv. 23. and xv. 3.

℣. 13. And alſo Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen, &c.] From the kingdom, as the Targum; from having any ſhare in the government, as ſhe might have had during his minority, his mother being dead, as ſome conjecture; and not only took away her power and authority, but all the enſigns of it, and perhaps forbid her the court: or he removed her from the queen, his own wife, that ſhe might not be corrupted by her; or rather, it was from preſiding over the rites of the idol next mentioned, and the worſhipping of it: becauſe ſhe had made an idol in a grove: which had its name from horror and trembling; either becauſe it was of a terrible aſpect, or injected horror into its worſhippers, or brought terrible calamities and judgments upon them: according to ſome Jewiſh writers [r], it was a Priapus, of an obſcene figure; and ſo others [s], who ſuppoſe ſhe preſided over the ſacred rites of this impure deity, the ſame with Baal-peor; and the heathens uſed to place Priapus in their gardens [t], to fright away birds, ſee the note on Jer. xlix. 16. others take it to be Pan, from whence the word Panic, uſed for any great fright: and Aſa deſtroyed her idol, and burnt it by the brook Kidron; and caſt the aſhes of it into it, that none might have any profit by it, the gold and ſilver on it, and in indignation to it, ſee Exod. xxxii. 20.

℣. 14. But the high places were not removed, &c.] That is, ſuch as had been uſed for the worſhip of God, before the temple was built, which yet now ſhould have been removed, ſince ſacrifice was now only to be offered there; but he might think they were ſtill lawful, or the people had ſuch an opinion of them, that it was difficult and dangerous to attempt to remove them; otherwiſe high places for idolatry were removed by him, 2 Chron. xiv. 3. 5. nevertheleſs, Aſa his heart was perfect all his days; he was ſincere in the worſhip of God, and did every thing to the beſt of his knowledge and capacity for reſtoring true religion, and deſtroying idolatry.

℣. 15. And he brought in the things which his father had dedicated, &c.] The ſpoils he had taken in war from Jeroboam, and which he had devoted to religious uſes, but lived not to perform his vows, which his ſon now did for him; ſo that it ſeems, notwithſtanding the ſins he fell into, he had ſome regard to God and his worſhip, ſee 2 Chron. xiii. 19. and the things which himſelf had dedicated; out of the ſpoils taken from the Ethiopians, 2 Chron. xiv. 13, 14. theſe he brought into the houſe of the Lord, ſilver and gold, and veſſels; of various ſorts.

℣. 16. And there was war between Aſa and Baaſha king of Iſrael all their days.] That is, as long as they lived together; for Baaſha died many years before Aſa, and this muſt be reckoned from the time the war began between them. Baaſha did not begin his reign until the third year of Aſa, ℣ 28. and in the firſt ten years of Aſa's reign the land was quiet and free from war, 2 Chron. xiv. 1. of which there muſt be ſeven in the reign of Baaſha, who is here made mention of out of courſe, for Nadab reigned before him, ℣. 25, 26, 27. the reaſon of which Abarbinel thinks is, that the hiſtorian having given an account of the good deeds of Aſa, relates his failings before he proceeds to the other part of his hiſtory.

℣. 17. And Baaſha king of Iſrael went up againſt Judah, &c.] Which, in 2 Chron. xvi. 1. is ſaid to be in the 36th year of Aſa's reign, or rather of his kingdom; for it can never mean the year of his reign, for Baaſha was dead many years before that, ſince his reign began in the third of Aſa, and he reigned but twenty-four years, and therefore muſt die in the 27th of Aſa; but it is to be underſtood of the kingdom of Judah, when it was divided from Iſrael, from that time to this were 36 years, 17 under Reboboam, 3 under Abijam, ſo that this year muſt be the 16th of Aſa; thus it is calculated in the Jewiſh chronology [u], and which is followed by many of the beſt of our chronologers: and built Ramah; a city in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh xviii. 25. but taken by the king of Iſrael, which he rebuilt or fortified: that he might not ſuffer any to go out or come in to Aſa king of Judah; that his people might not go to and from Jeruſalem, and worſhip at the temple there; this garriſon lying on the borders of both kingdoms, he thought hereby to cut off all communication between them.

℣. 18. Then Aſa took all the ſilver and the gold that were left in the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord, and the treaſures of the king's houſe, &c.] What was left untaken away by Shiſhak king of Egypt, ch. xiv. 26. or what he had put there dedicated by his father and himſelf, ℣. 15. and be they either, they were not to be taken, eſpecially the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord, and put to prophane uſe, and particularly to ſuch bad purpoſes as theſe were: and delivered them into the hands of his ſervants; to be diſpoſed of as next directed: and king Aſa ſent them to Benhadad the ſon of Tabrimon, the ſon of Hezion king of Syria, that dwelt at Damaſcus; according to ſome chronologers [w], Hezion, the grandfather of this Benhadad, is the ſame with Rezon the firſt king of Damaſcus, ch. xi. 23, 24. who was ſucceeded by Tabrimon, and he by Benhadad: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 19. There is a league between me and thee, and between my father and thy father, &c.] For though Hezion, if he is the ſame with Rezon, was an adverſary to Iſrael in the days of Solomon, ch. xi. 25. yet it ſeems his ſon was not, but was a confederate with the kings of Iſrael and Judah: behold, I have ſent unto thee a preſent of ſilver and gold; taken out of the treaſury of the temple and his own treaſury: come and break thy league with Baaſha king of Iſrael, that he may depart from me; it was ſinful in him to take the money out of the temple, to which it was dedicated; it was more ſo to make uſe of it, to bribe an heathen to break his covenant and alliance with another, in order to ſerve him; in which he betrayed great diſtruſt of the Lord, and of his power to help him; which was the more aggravated, when he had had ſuch a wonderful appearance of God for him againſt the Ethiopians, ſee 2 Chron. xvi. 7, 8.

℣. 20.

[r] T. Bab. Avodah Zarah, fol. 44. 1. [s] Vid. D. Herbert de Cherbury de Relig. Gent. c. 4. p. 34. Lyram in loc.
[t] —— cuſtos es pauperis horti, Virgil. Bucol. Ecl. 7. ℣. 34. & Georgic. l. 4. ℣. 110. —furum aviumque maxima formido, Horat. Sermon. l. 1. ode 8. [u] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 16. [w] Uſſer. Annal. A. M. 3064. Marſham. Canon. Chron. Seculum 13 p. 346.

℣. 20. So Benhadad hearkened unto king Aſa, and ſent the captains of the hoſts, which he had, againſt the cities of Iſrael, &c.] He broke off his alliance with the king of Iſrael; and as he had a ſtanding army, with proper officers, he ſent them directly to take the cities of Iſrael: and he ſmote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-beth-maachah, and all Cinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali; places which lay on the northern part of Iſrael, the neareſt to Syria. Ijon ſome place in the tribe of Naphtali, others in Aſher; it ſeems to be on the extreme border of the land northward, as Dan alſo was; hence the phraſe from Dan to Beerſheba, i. e. from north to ſouth. Abel-beth-maachah is the ſame with Abel-maim, 2 Chron. xvi. 4. which perhaps is the ſame with that Abela, placed by Jerom [x] between Damaſcus and Paneas, ſuppoſed to be the Enhydra of Pliny [y]. Cinneroth is the ſame with Geneſaret, a fruitful country in Galilee, from which is a ſea or lake of that name, mentioned in the New Teſtament, and was in the tribe of Naphtali, the land of which was ſeized upon at this time.

℣. 21. And it came to paſs, when Baaſha heard thereof, &c.] What was doing in the northern part of his kingdom: that he left of building of Ramah; which was the thing deſigned to be anſwered by this diverſion: and dwelt in Tirzah; in the tribe of Manaſſeh, nearer at hand, to obſerve and ſtop the motions of the Syrian king.

℣. 22. Then king Aſa made a proclamation throughout all Judah, &c.] Summoned men of all ſorts, ranks, and degrees: (none was exempted;) the Jews [z] ſay, not ſo much as a new-married man, whom the law excuſed from war the firſt year, nor the diſciples of the wiſe men: and they took away the ſtones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baaſha had builded; or fortified the place; theſe the men of Judah, whom Aſa ſummoned, carried off: and king Aſa built with them Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah; which were both in the tribe of Benjamin, and which he fortified, Joſh. xviii. 24. 26. See Jer. xli. 9.

℣. 23. The reſt of all the acts of Aſa, and all his might, and all that he did, and the cities which he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? &c.] Some of which are to be met with in the canonical book of that name, 2 Chron. xiv. and xv. and xvi. and others in the annals of the kings, out of which the ſcripture-account was taken: nevertheleſs, in the time of his old age he was diſeaſed in his feet; ſeized with the gout, as the Jews ſay [a], and which was two years before his death, ſee 2 Chron. xvi. 12, 13.

℣. 24. And Aſa ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father, &c.] In a ſepulchre there he himſelf had made, and in great pomp and ſolemnity, being laid on a bed filled with ſweet odours and ſpices, prepared according to art, and which were burned for him, 2 Chron. xvi. 14. and Jehoſhaphat his ſon reigned in his ſtead; a very pious and worthy prince.

℣. 25. And Nadab the ſon of Jeroboam began to reign over Iſrael, in the ſecond year of Aſa king of Judah, &c.] Before Baaſha did: and reigned over Iſrael two years; not two whole years; for he began in the ſecond of Aſa, and in the third of that king's reign; Baaſha ſlew him and reigned in his ſtead, ℣. 28.

℣. 26. And he did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Committed idolatry, than which nothing is a greater evil in his ſight: and walked in the way of his father, and in his ſin wherewith he made Iſrael to ſin; in making and worſhipping of golden calves.

℣. 27. And Baaſha the ſon of Ahijah, of the houſe of Iſſachar, &c.] A man of that tribe; but who he was, or his father, is no where elſe ſaid, very probably an officer in Nadab's army: conſpired againſt him; laid a ſcheme to take away his life, and ſeize the kingdom: and Baaſha ſmote him at Gibbethon; a city in the tribe of Dan, Joſh. xix. 44. which belongeth to the Philiſtines; it was a city given to the Levites, Joſh. xxi. 23. and they being driven from it by Jeroboam, the Philiſtines ſeized on it, or had heretofore made a conqueſt of it; and Nadab was deſirous of getting it out of their hands, and therefore beſieged it, as follows: for Nadab and all Iſrael laid ſiege to Gibbethon; and whilſt he was beſieging it, Baaſha took the opportunity to ſlay him, where his carcaſe lay expoſed to dogs or fowls of the air, and had no burial, as Ahijah predicted, ch. xiv. 11, 13.

℣. 28. Even in the third year of Aſa king of Judah, did Baaſha ſlay him, and reigned in his ſtead.] Which ſeems to be his only or chief view in ſlaying him, to get poſſeſſion of his kingdom.

℣. 29. And it came to paſs when he reigned, that he ſmote all the houſe of Jeroboam, &c.] That he might have no rival, or any that could pretend any title to the crown: he left not Jeroboam any that breathed, until he had deſtroyed him, according to the ſaying of the Lord, which he ſpake by his ſervant Ahijah the Shilonite; not that his intention in deſtroying Jeroboam's family was to fulfil that prophecy, but ſo it was eventually; ſee ch. xiv. 10, 14.

℣. 30. Becauſe of the ſins of Jeroboam which he ſinned, and which he made Iſrael ſin, by his provocation wherewith he provoked the Lord God of Iſrael.] Not that Baaſha deſtroyed the family of Jeroboam, becauſe of his ſins, which did ſo much miſchief to Iſrael, and were ſo provoking to the Lord, from any diſlike or hatred of them, for he walked in the ſame, ℣. 34. but the Lord threatened this by his prophet, and ſuffered it to be done becauſe of his abominations.

℣. 31. Now the reſt of the acts of Nadab, and all that he did, &c.] In his ſhort reign, which yet were more than here related: are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael? in which thoſe of his father Jeroboam were written, ch. xiv. 19.

℣. 32. And there was war between Aſa and Baaſha king of Iſrael all their days.] For being a wicked man, and an idolater, Aſa had no reſpect for him, though he had ſlain the family of Jeroboam; nor had Baaſha any regard to Judah, nor to the worſhip of God at Jeruſalem, ſo that there was no good underſtanding between them, but frequent acts of hoſtility, ſee ℣. 16.

℣. 33. In the third year of Aſa king of Judah began Baaſha the ſon of Ahijah to reign over all Iſrael in Tirzah, &c.] Which is repeated, partly to obſerve that the whole kingdom ſubmitted to him, though an uſurper and murderer, and the place where he kept his court, as alſo the time of his reign, as follows: 24 years; which were as long as both Jeroboam and his ſon reigned.

℣. 34. And he did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.]

[x] De loc. Heb. fol. 83. K. [y] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 19. [z] Jarchi & Kimchi in loc. [a] T. Bab Sanhed. fol. 48. 2. So Clemens of Alexandria, Stromat. l. 1. p. 326.

&c.] As Nadab did, whom he ſlew: and walked in the way of Jeroboam; whoſe family he deſtroyed: and in his ſin wherewith he made Iſrael to ſin; in worſhipping the golden calves; ſo that it was not out of diſlike to idolatry, but out of malice and ambition, that he ſlew the family of Jeroboam.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter contains a prophecy of the ruin of the family of Baaſha, and an account of his death, ℣. 1—7. and of his ſon's reigning in his ſtead two years, who was ſlain by Zimri one of his captains, ℣. 8—14. and who reigned but ſeven days, ℣. 15—20. and the people being divided between Tibni and Omri, the party for the latter prevailed, and he was made king, and reigned 12 years, ℣. 21—28. and was ſucceeded by his ſon Ahab, a very wicked prince, ℣. 29—33. and the chapter is concluded with the rebuilding of Jericho, ℣. 34.

℣. 1. Then the word of the Lord came to Jehu the ſon of Hanani, &c.] The ſeer that reproved Aſa, 2 Chron. xvi. 7. ſo that this man was the ſon of a prophet then living, and was a young man; for we hear of him ſeveral years after reproving Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xix. 2. and as a writer of hiſtory, 2 Chron. xx. 34. the prophecy that came to him from the Lord was againſt Baaſha; king of Iſrael: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Foraſmuch as I exalted thee out of the duſt, &c.] From a very low eſtate, and mean family: and made thee prince over my people Iſrael; as they were of right, and ought to have been; and tho' Baaſha got the kingdom by treachery and murder, yet the tranſlation of the kingdom to him was according to the appointment of God, and by his over-ruling providence; and even his act of killing Nadab was a fulfilment of a prophecy of his; and had he done it in obedience to the will of God, and in vengeance for his ſin, would not have been blame-worthy, ſince then he would have been an executioner of the juſtice of God: and thou haſt walked in the way of Jeroboam, and haſt made my people Iſrael to ſin, to provoke me to anger with their ſins; committing and encouraging the ſame idolatrous practices, ſo very provoking to God.

℣. 3. Behold, I will take away the poſterity of Baaſha, and the poſterity of his houſe, &c.] By death, there ſhall be none of his family remaining in any branch of it: and I will make thy houſe like the houſe of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat; execute the ſame judgment on it, and in the ſame manner, their ſins being alike.

℣. 4. Him that dieth of Baaſha in the city, ſhall the dogs eat, and him that dieth of his in the fields, ſhall the fowls of the air eat.] They ſhould not have burial, which is juſt the ſame that was threatened to, and executed on Jeroboam's family, ch. xiv. 11.

℣. 5. Now the reſt of the acts of Baaſha, and what he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?] As thoſe of Jeroboam and Nadab were, ch. xiv. 19. and xv. 31.

℣. 6. So Baaſha ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Or died, not a violent, but natural death: and was buried in Tirzah; where was the royal palace of the kings of Iſrael: and Elah his ſon reigned in his ſtead; yet but a ſhort time.

℣. 7. And alſo by the hand of the prophet Jehu the ſon of Hanani, came the word of the Lord againſt Baaſha, and againſt his houſe, &c.] Which is here repeated, as Abarbinel thinks, becauſe in the former prophecy the threatening was on account not of his own ſin, but becauſe he made Iſrael to ſin; but here it is, becauſe of his own evil works, as it follows: even for all the evil that he did in the ſight of the Lord, in provoking him to anger with the work of his hands, in being like the houſe of Jeroboam; worſhipping the golden calves as they did: and becauſe he killed him; either Jeroboam; for, according to Dr. Lightfoot[b], he was alive this year; rather Nadab the ſon of Jeroboam, who it is certain was ſlain by Baaſha; though it may refer, as Abarbinel thinks, to the whole houſe of Jeroboam; though it was agreeable to the will of God, yet was not done by Baaſha with any regard to it, but to gratify his malice and ambition, and therefore puniſhable for it.

℣. 8. In the 26th year of Aſa king of Judah began Elah the ſon of Baaſha to reign over Iſrael in Tirzah two years.] Not complete, for he died in the 27th of Aſa, ℣. 10. he reigned juſt the time that Nadab the ſon of Jeroboam did, ch. xv. 25.

℣. 9. And his ſervant Zimri, captain of half his chariots, &c.] His military chariots; there were two captains of them, and this was one of them; ſo the Targum, "one of the two maſters or captains of the chariots:" conſpired againſt him, as he was in Tirzah drinking himſelf drunk in the houſe of Arza, ſteward of his houſe in Tirzah; who had the charge of his wine and other liquors, to which he was addicted beyond meaſure; and this was a fit opportunity for Zimri to fall upon him, and ſlay him, when he was drunk, and off his guard, and his army at the ſame time was beſieging Gibbethon, ℣. 15. ſo that there was a very great likeneſs in what befel the family of Baaſha, to that of the family of Jeroboam; for as the ſon of the one, and of the other, reigned but two years, ſo they were both ſlain by their ſervants, and both at a time when Gibbethon was beſieged; the Targum takes this Arza to be the temple of an idol ſo called, near the royal palace.

℣. 10. And Zimri ſent in and ſmote him, and killed him, &c.] When in his drunken fit: and this was in the 27th year of Aſa; when Elah had not reigned two full years: and reigned in his ſtead; that is, Zimri; his reign was ſhort indeed, but ſeven days, ℣. 15.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs when he began to reign, as ſoon as he ſat on his throne, &c.] Perhaps the very firſt day: that he ſlew all the houſe of Baaſha; his whole family, all the children that he had, that there might be none to make pretenſions to the throne: he left him not one that piſſeth againſt a wall, neither of his kinſfolks, nor of his friends; not not any that might avenge the blood of his family, that might have a right or inclination to do it.

[b] Works. vol. 1. p. 79.

℣. 12. Thus did Zimri deſtroy all the houſe of Baaſha, according to the word of the Lord, which he ſpoke againſt Baaſha by Jehu the prophet.] That not only his poſterity, but all any way related to him ſhould be cut off; yea, it ſeems to have been carried farther, even to all that were in any connection with him in point of friendſhip, ſee ℣. 3.

℣. 13. For all the ſins of Baaſha, and the ſins of Elah his ſon, &c.] By which it appears that the ſon trod in the ſteps of his father, and was therefore cut off: by which they ſinned, and by which they made Iſrael to ſin, in provoking the Lord God of Iſrael to anger with their vanities; their idols, which had nothing in them, and can't be of any ſervice to their votaries; and to ſerve ſuch, and neglect the worſhip of the true God, and draw others into the ſame iniquity, muſt be very provoking to the moſt high.

℣. 14. Now the reſt of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?] See ℣. 5.

℣. 15. In the 27th year of Aſa king of Judah, did Zimri reign ſeven days in Tirzah, &c.] Until the army under Omri came and took the place, and deſtroyed him: and the people were encamped againſt Gibbethon, which belongeth to the Philiſtines; it was beſieged in Nadab's time, but upon his death, by Baaſha, the ſiege was raiſed; or however if then taken, it was recovered by the Philiſtines, and now beſieged again by the Iſraelites, ſee ch. xv. 27.

℣. 16. And the people that were encamped heard ſay, Zimri hath conſpired, and hath alſo ſlain the king, &c.] Tidings came to the army of what he had done, which was diſpleaſing to them: wherefore all Iſrael made Omri the captain of the hoſt, king over Iſrael that day in the camp; that is, all Iſrael that were in the army proclaimed Omri their general, king; juſt as the Roman army declared Veſpaſian their general, emperor of Rome, and as ſeveral of the emperors were choſen.

℣. 17. And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Iſrael with him, &c.] He, and the army under him, broke up the ſiege of that place, and marched to Tirzah; which, according to Bunting [c], was 36 miles diſtant from each other: and they beſieged Tirzah; the royal city, in which Zimri was.

℣. 18. And it came to paſs, that when Zimri ſaw that the city was taken, &c.] That Omri, and the army with him, had got into it, being a place not much fortified, and Zimri not having force enough to defend it againſt ſuch an army: that he went into the palace of the king's houſe; into the innermoſt and moſt ſplendid, as well as the ſtrongeſt part of it: and burnt the king's houſe over him with fire, and he died; that he might not fall into the hands of his rival, who he might fear would uſe him ill, and that he might not enjoy the royal palace; though Kimchi thinks, that Omri ſet fire to the palace, and burnt it over the head of Zimri, in which he periſhed; and this ſenſe the text will bear.

℣. 19. For his ſins which he ſinned in doing evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] In the former part of his life, as well as now: in walking in the way of Jeroboam, and in his ſin which he did to make Iſrael ſin; worſhipping the golden calves, which he might do whilſt a captain of the chariots, and alſo ſince he uſurped the crown, ſacrificing to them by way of thankſgiving, for being in poſſeſſion of the kingdom; and though his reign was ſo ſhort, he might give plain and ſtrong intimations that he ſhould continue the worſhip of idols.

℣. 20. Now the reſt of the acts of Zimri, and his treaſon that he wrought, are they not written in the book of the kings of Iſrael?] What he did both before and after his uſurpation, during the ſeven days he was king, and the manner of his conſpiracy, and ſucceſs in it.

℣. 21. Then were the people of Iſrael divided into two parts, &c.] About the ſucceſſion in the kingdom: half the people followed Tibni the ſon of Ginath, to make him king; theſe were the friends of Zimri, or however ſuch who did not like that the army ſhould impoſe a king upon them; who this Tibni was, is not ſaid: and half followed Omri; the general of the army, perhaps the whole of that.

℣. 22. But the people that followed Omri, prevailed againſt the people that followed Tibni the ſon of Ginath, &c.] Very probably they had a battle, in which the latter were worſted: ſo Tibni died; in the battle: and Omri reigned; took poſſeſſion of the throne, his rival being ſlain.

℣. 23. In the 31ſt year of Aſa king of Judah, began Omri to reign over Iſrael 12 years, &c.] Which are to be reckoned not from the 31ſt of Aſa; for Ahab the ſon of Omri began to reign in his 38th year, and ſo his reign would be but ſeven or eight years; but they are reckoned from the 27th of Aſa, the beginning of it, when Elah was ſlain by Zimri, and he died, which to the end of the 38th of Aſa, make 12 years; for the diviſion, according to the Jewiſh chronology [d], laſted four years; Jarchi ſays five [e]; and from the beginning of that his reign is reckoned, though he did not reign over all Iſrael, or completely, until the 31ſt of Aſa, when Tibni died: ſix years reigned he in Tirzah; the royal city of the kings of Iſrael, from Jeroboam to this time, and the other ſix he reigned in Samaria built by him, as in the next verſe.

℣. 24. And he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer, for two talents of ſilver, &c.] A talent of ſilver, according to Brerewood [f], was of our money 375 pounds, ſo that this hill was purchaſed at 750 pounds: and built on the hill, and called the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, Samaria; its name from him was Shomeron, which is the Hebrew name for Samaria; which, according to Bunting [g], was ſix miles from Tirzah, and ever after the royal ſeat of the kings of Iſrael.

℣. 25. But Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the Lord, &c.] Openly and publickly, as if it were in defiance of him: and did worſe than all that were before him; taking no warning by the judgments inflicted on them, which aggravated his ſins; and beſides, he not only worſhipped the calves, as the reſt, and drew Iſrael by his example into the ſame, as they did, but he publiſhed edicts and decrees, obliging them to worſhip them, and forbidding them to go to Jeruſalem, called the ſtatutes of Omri, Mic. vi. 16.

℣. 26. For he walked in the way of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, in his ſin wherewith he made Iſrael to ſin, &c.] Worſhipping the calves: to provoke the Lord

[c] Travels, &c. p. 162.
[d] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 17. p. 45.
[e] So Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 11. 2.
[f] De ponder. & pret. c. 4.
[g] Ut ſupra, p. 163.

Lord God of Iſrael to anger, with their vanities; theſe, and whatſoever idols elſe were worſhipped by him, ſee ℣. 13.

℣. 27. Now the reſt of the acts of Omri, which he did, and his might which he ſhewed, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?] Where thoſe of the preceding kings were written, ſee ch. xiv. 19. and xv. 31. and xvi. 5, 14, 20.

℣. 28. So Omri ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died a natural death: and was buried in Samaria; the city he had built, and now the royal ſeat and metropolis of the kingdom: and Ahab his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom much is ſaid in the following hiſtory.

℣. 29. And in the 35th year of Aſa king of Judah, began Ahab the ſon of Omri to reign over Iſrael, &c.] At the latter end of it, the ſame year his father died, ſee ℣. 23. and Ahab the ſon of Omri reigned over Iſrael in Samaria 22 years; the ſame number of years Jeroboam did, ch. xiv. 20.

℣. 30. And Ahab the ſon of Omri did evil in the ſight of the Lord, above all that were before him.] Adding other idols to the calves, and thoſe more abominable than they; ſince the other kings pretended to worſhip God in them, but he worſhipped other gods beſides him, as the following verſes ſhew.

℣. 31. And it came to paſs, as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the ſin of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, &c.] To worſhip the golden calves he ſet up: that he took to wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Zidonians; who is called Ithobalus and Itobalus king of the Tyrians, by heathen hiſtorians [h]; and by Theophilus of Antioch [i], Juthobalus, prieſt of Aſtarte; for Tyre and Zidon were under one king. This woman was not only of another nation, and an idolater, but a very filthy woman, and is made the emblem of the whore of Rome, Rev. ii. 20. and went and ſerved Baal, and worſhipped him; that is, went to Zidon and Tyre, and worſhipped his wife's gods, which were either Jupiter Thalaſſius, the god of the Zidonians, or Hercules, whom the Tyrians worſhipped.

℣. 32. And he reared up an altar for Baal in the houſe of Baal, which he had built in Samaria.] That he might not go ſo far as Tyre or Zidon; and for his wife's convenience alſo, he built a temple in Samaria for Baal, and erected an altar there to offer ſacrifices upon it unto him; ſo open and daring was he in his idolatrous practices.

℣. 33. And Ahab made a grove, &c.] About the temple of Baal, or elſewhere, in which he placed an idol, and where all manner of filthineſs was ſecretly committed; or rather Aſherah, rendered grove, is Aſtarte, the goddeſs of the Zidonians, an image of which Ahab made: and Ahab did more to provoke the Lord God of Iſrael to anger, than all the kings of Iſrael that were before him; his idolatries being more open and bare-faced, and without any excuſe, pretence, or colour, as well as more numerous.

℣. 34. And in his days did Hiel the Bethelite build Jericho, &c.] Which was forbidden by Joſhua under an anathema; but this man either ignorant of that adjuration of Joſhua, or in contempt and defiance of it, and knowing it might pleaſe the king and queen, ſet about the rebuilding of it; and it being done by the leave, and under the authority of Ahab, is mentioned together with his wicked actions: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his firſt-born; that is, his firſt-born died as ſoon as he laid the foundation of the city, but this did not deter him from going on with it: and ſet up the gates thereof in his youngeſt ſon Segub; all the reſt of his children died as he was rebuilding the city, until only his youngeſt ſon was left, and he was taken off by death juſt as he had finiſhed it, ſignified by ſetting up the gates of it: all which was according to the word of the Lord, which he ſpake by Joſhua the ſon of Nun; between 4 and 500 years ago. It was after this a place of great note, and ſo continued many hundreds of years; ſee the note on Joſh. vi. 26. but is now, as Mr. Maundrel ſays [k], a poor naſty village of the Arabs.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter begins with a prophecy of Elijah, that there ſhould be want of rain for ſome years to come, and he is directed to go firſt to the brook Cherith, where he ſhould be fed by ravens, ℣. 1—7. and afterwards he is ſent to a widow at Zarephath, where he, ſhe and her ſon were ſupported for a conſiderable time with a handful of meal, and a little oil in a cruſe miraculouſly increaſed, ℣. 8—16. whoſe ſon falling ſick and dying, he reſtored to life, ℣. 17—24.

℣. 1. And Elijah the Tiſhbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, &c.] Which belonged partly to the Reubenites and Gadites, and partly to the half-tribe of Manaſſeh on the other ſide Jordan, where this prophet dwelt; but why he is called the Tiſhbite, is not eaſy to ſay; what Kimchi obſerves ſeems right, that he was at firſt of a city called Toſhab, and afterwards dwelt at Gilead; which city perhaps is the ſame with Thiſbe, in the tribe of Napthali, the native place of Tobit, ch. i. 2. and if ſo, is an inſtance of a prophet, even the prince of prophets, as Abarbinel calls him, coming out of Galilee, contrary to the ſuggeſtions of the Jews, John vii. 52. R. Elias Levita [l] obſerves, that after the affair of Gibeah, an order was given to ſmite the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead, Judg. xxi. and that as it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, ſome might eſcape, he thinks Elijah was one of them; and that when this began to be inhabited again, they that returned, were called the inhabitants of Gilead, of whom Elijah was, who lived in thoſe times, being, as the Jews ſuppoſe, Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazar the ſon of Aaron, ſee Judg. xx. 28. but that he ſhould be Elijah, and live to the times of Ahab, is beyond belief. By Origen [m] he is ſaid to be in Theſbon of Gilead; and by Epiphanius [n] to be of Theſbis, of the land of the Arabians, Gilead bordering upon it: the ſame ſaid unto Ahab; who perhaps had been with him before, and reproved him for idolatry, warned him of the evil conſequences of it, but to no purpoſe, and therefore now threatened

[h] Menander apud Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 8. c. 13. §. 1, 2. & Contr. Apion. l. 1. c. 21. Diodor. Sicul. apud Junium in loc. [i] Ad Autolyc. l. 3. p. 132. [k] Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 81. [l] In Tiſhbi, p. 275. Vid. Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 11. 1. & David de Pomis Lexic. fol. 235. 4. [m] Comment. in Matth. p. 224. Ed. Huet. [n] De Prophet. Vit. c. 5.

ened in a very ſolemn manner: as the Lord God of Iſrael liveth, before whom I ſtand; he ſwears by the living God, in whoſe preſence he was, and to whom he appeals as the omniſcient God, whoſe miniſter and prophet he was, and in whoſe name he came and ſpoke, and to whom he prayed; for ſtanding was a prayer-geſture, and ſometimes put for it, ſee the note on Matt. vi. 5. and it was at the prayer of Elijah that rain was with-held, as follows, ſee Jam. v. 17. there ſhall not be dew nor rain theſe years; for ſome years to come, even three years and a half: but according to my word; in prayer, or as he ſhould predict, in the name of the Lord.

℣. 2. And the word of the Lord came to him, &c.] The word of prophecy, as the Targum; this ſhows that by word, in the former verſe, he means the word of the Lord by him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 3. Get thee hence, and turn thee eaſtward, &c.] From the place where he was, being in danger from Ahab and Jezebel, provoked by his reproofs, threatenings and prophecies: and hide thyſelf by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan; in ſome wood or cave near it, or among the reeds and ruſhes that grew on the banks of it; and Bochart [o] takes it to be the ſame with the river Kanah, on the borders of Ephraim, which has its name from reeds, Joſh. xvi. 8. and xvii. 9. and Cherith by anticipation, from the prophet's being fed there; and Adrichonius [p] places this brook in the tribe of Ephraim; though Fuller [q] in the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, beyond Jordan; but Bunting ſays [r], it runs from mount Ephraim between Bethel and Jericho, eight miles from Jeruſalem towards the north, and ſo paſſing along towards the eaſt, falls into Jordan.

℣. 4. And it ſhall be, that thou ſhalt drink of the brook, &c.] The water of that was to be his drink: and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there; whereby he ſhould be provided with food to eat; by whom are meant not angels in the form of ravens, as ſome; nor, as others, Arabians, for there were none of that people near him; nor, as others, merchants, the word being ſometimes uſed of them, for this was not a likely method for privacy; nor, as others, the inhabitants of a place called Oreb or Orbo; ſo the Arabic verſion calls them Orabimi; but we read of no ſuch place near Jordan; the Jews [s] ſpeak of a city of this name near Bethſhean, from whence theſe Orebim came; and ſome of them [t] think, they had their name from Oreb, in Judg. vii. 25. it ſeems better to interpret them of ravens, as we do, theſe creatures delighting to be in ſolitary places, in valleys, and by brooks; nor need it be any objection, that they were unclean creatures by the law, ſince Elijah did not feed upon them, but was fed by them; and ſuppoſing any uncleanneſs by touch, the ceremonial law might be diſpenſed with in an extraordinary caſe, as it ſometimes was; though it is very remarkable, that ſuch creatures ſhould be employed in this way, which are birds of prey, ſeize on any thing they can, live on carrion, and neglect their own young, and yet feed a prophet of the Lord; which ſhows the power and providence of God in it. Something like this Jerom [u] relates, of a raven bringing a whole loaf of bread, and laying it before the ſaints, Paulus and Antonius.

℣. 5. So he went, and did according to the word of the Lord, &c.] Took his journey eaſtward, and hid himſelf in the place directed to: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan, ſee the note ℣. 3.

℣. 6. And the ravens brought him bread and fleſh in the morning, and bread and fleſh in the evening, &c.] For his breakfaſt and ſupper, the two principal meals then in uſe; and as there were ſeveral employed, they could bring a ſufficiency in a ſhort time for each meal; and theſe proviſions were ready prepared, the bread made and baked, and the fleſh boiled, broiled or roaſted; from whence they had it, need not be enquired after; the Jews ſay [w], they were fetched from Ahab's table, and others from Jehoſhaphat's, and others, as probable as any, from the tables of the 7000 who had not bowed the knee to Baal: and he drank of the brook; at his meals.

℣. 7. And it came to paſs after a while, &c.] Or at the end of days [x], perhaps a year, which ſometimes is the ſenſe of this phraſe, ſee Exod. xiii. 10. Judg. xvii. 10. that the brook dried up; thro' the exceſſive heat, and for want of ſupplies from the ſprings and fountains, with which it was fed, and for the following reaſon: becauſe there had been no rain in the land; from the time Elijah prayed and propheſied; of this drought mention is made in profane hiſtory; Menander, a Phœnician writer, ſpeaks [y] of a drought in the times of Ithobalus (the ſame with Ethbaal the father of Jezebel) which laſted a whole year, and upon prayer being made there were thunder, &c.

℣. 8. And the word of the Lord came unto him, &c.] As before, after he had been a year at the brook, and that was dried up: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 9. Ariſe, get thee to Zarephath, which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there, &c.] This might be a trial of the prophet's faith, to be ſent to dwell in a place belonging to the Zidonians, among whom Jezebel had an intereſt, being the daughter of their king, ch. xvi. 31. the place is ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from another Zarephath, Obad. ℣. 20. Kimchi interprets it, near to Zidon, yet not as belonging to it, but of the land of Iſrael; though it rather ſeems to be a Gentile city; it is called in Luke iv. 26. Sarepta of Sidon; and alſo by Pliny [z]; according to Joſephus [a], it was not far either from Sidon or Tyre, and lay between them; it was three quarters of a mile from Sidon; and ſo Mr. Maundrel [b] ſpeaks of it, as in the way from Sidon to Tyre, and which is now called Sarphan; of which he ſays, the place ſhewn us for this city conſiſted only of a few houſes, on the tops of the mountains, within about half a mile of the ſea; but it is more probable, the principal part of the city ſtood below, in the ſpace between the hills and the ſea, there being ruins ſtill to be ſeen in that place of a conſiderable extent; and a traveller into thoſe parts many years before him, ſays [c], that he ſaw nothing of any building on the ſhore, but ſome ſmall houſes in the place where formerly the town of Sarepta did ſtand; and Bunting ſays [d], there is at this time but eight houſes in all the town, town, though by the ruins it ſeems to have been in times paſt a very fair city; and another [e] obſerves, that it is about three miles from Berytus: behold, I have commanded a widow woman there to ſuſtain thee; not that this was declared to the woman, or that ſhe had any orders from the Lord to ſupport him; but that he had determined it in his mind, and would take care in his providence, that he ſhould be ſupplied by her: this was another trial of the prophet's faith, that he ſhould be ſent to a poor widow woman for his ſupport, and ſhe a Gentile; but he that had been ſo long fed by ravens, could have no reaſon to doubt of his being provided for in this way.

[o] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 2. c. 13. col. 216. [p] Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 26. [q] Piſgah-ſight, &c. B. 2. c. 3. p. 97. [r] Travels, &c. p. 205. [s] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 33. fol. 29. 1. [t] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 5. 1. Menaſſeh Ben Iſrael Conciliat. in Lev. quæſt. 3. [u] In vita Paul. Erem. fol. 82. C. [w] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 113. 1. Cholin, fol. 5. 1. Tanchuma apud Abarbinel in loc. [x] מקץ ימים in, vel a, fine dierum, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [y] Apud Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 8. c. 13. §. 2. [z] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 19. [a] Ut ſupra. [b] Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 48. [c] Rauwolff's Travels, par. 3. ch. 22. p. 326. [d] Ut ſupra.

℣. 10. So he aroſe, and went to Zarephath, &c.] Which, according to Bunting [f], was 100 miles from the brook Cherith: and when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow woman was there gathering ſticks; perhaps out of an hedge juſt without the city; this ſhows her to be a poor woman, who had no other way of coming at fuel but this, and no ſervant to fetch it for her: the above writer tells us, that now before the gate of the city there is ſhewed a certain chapel, where they ſay Elias firſt ſpoke with the widow: and he called to her, and ſaid, fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a veſſel, that I may drink; being thirſty through travelling, and ſuppoſing this to be the woman he was directed to, made trial of her this way; ſome render it, in this veſſel [g] which he had with him, and made uſe of at the brook Cherith.

℣. 11. And as ſhe was going to fetch it, &c.] For ſhe made no difficulty of granting his requeſt, but immediately ſet out to fetch him ſome water from the city, or ſome ſpring hard by, or her own houſe; being very ready to do an hoſpitable act to a ſtranger, and eſpecially to a good man, and a prophet, as ſhe might perceive by his habit he was, as it ſeems by what follows: and ſaid, bring me, I pray thee, a morſel of bread in thine hand; to eat before he drank; this he ſaid ſtill farther to try her whether ſhe was the perſon that was to ſuſtain him, as well as in order to lead on to more diſcourſe with her.

℣. 12. And ſhe ſaid, as the Lord thy God liveth, Which ſhews her to be a good woman ſwearing by the living God, and him only, and that ſhe took Elijah to be a good man, and a prophet of the Lord: I have not a cake; greater or leſs, not a morſel of bread in the houſe: but a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruſe; theſe ſeparate and unmixed, and not made into a cake, and dreſſed as ſhe intended to do with them: and behold, I am gathering two ſticks; or a few, which would be ſufficient to bake ſuch a quantity as her meal and oil would make; ſhe ſpeaks by the figure meioſis, which expreſſes leſs than what is meant, as Ben Melech obſerves: that I may go in and dreſs it for me, and my ſon, that we may eat it, and die; having nothing more left, and no expectation of any elſewhere, and the famine ſtrong in the land; ſo that ſhe could look for nothing but death after this was eaten.

℣. 13. And Elijah ſaid unto her, fear not, &c.] That ſhe and her ſon ſhould die, it would not be the caſe: go and do as thou haſt ſaid; mix her meal and her oil, and make a cake thereof, and bake it: but make thereof a little cake firſt, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy ſon; which was not ſaid from a ſelfiſh ſpirit of the prophet, but to try the faith of the woman; and beſides, as Abarbinel obſerves, the prophet was not only hungry and thirſty through his journey, and ſo required to be ſerved firſt, but it was for the ſake of his ſuſtenance, that the Lord would command a bleſſing on the meal and oil; wherefore if ſhe dreſſed it for herſelf and her ſon firſt, there would have been none left for the divine bleſſing to deſcend upon.

℣. 14. For thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] Whom the prophet perceived ſhe had knowledge of, and faith in: the barrel of meal ſhall not waſte, neither ſhall the cruſe of oil fail; that is, the meal in the barrel, and the oil in the cruſe, by an hypallage, or change of words: until the day that the Lord ſendeth rain upon the earth; which was aſſuring her that rain would be ſent, and that the Lord, who had the ſole command of it, would ſend it; and that until that time it ſhould be ſent, ſhe would have no lack of proviſions, and therefore need not ſcruple dreſſing for the prophet firſt.

℣. 15. And ſhe went, and did according to the ſaying of Elijah, &c.] Made a cake for him firſt, and brought it to him, which ſhewed great faith in the word of the Lord by him: and ſhe, and he, and her houſe did eat; many days, a year at leaſt, if not two years, ſee ℣. 7. the widow, the prophet, and her family, lived upon the meal and oil ſo long; we read but of one ſon, but ſhe might have more.

℣. 16. And the barrel of meal waſted not, neither did the cruſe of oil fail, according to the word of the Lord, which he ſpake by Elijah.] There being a continual increaſe and ſupply of both, through the mighty power of God working a continued miracle; juſt as the loaves and fiſhes were increaſed while the diſciples were eating, Matt. xiv. 19, 20.

℣. 17. And it came to paſs after theſe things, &c.] Not only after the converſation that paſſed between the prophet, and the widow, but after they had lived together many days, a year or years, upon the miraculous proviſion made for them: that the ſon of the woman, the miſtreſs of the houſe, fell ſick; that is, the ſon of the widow woman in whoſe houſe the prophet dwelt; the Jews ſay [h], this woman was the mother of Jonah, and that he was this ſon of her's: and his ſickneſs was ſo ſore that there was no breath left in him; it was a ſickneſs unto death, it iſſued in it; for that he was really dead, appears from all that follows.

℣. 18. And ſhe ſaid unto Elijah, what have I to do with thee, O thou man of God! &c.] As if ſhe ſhould ſay, it would have been well for me if I had never ſeen thy face, or had any converſation with thee; this ſhe ſaid raſhly, and in her paſſion and agony, being extremely affected with the death of her child, which made her forget and overlook all the benefits ſhe had received through the prophet's being with her: art thou come unto me to call my ſin to remembrance, and to ſlay my ſon? to puniſh her for her former ſins, ſhe was conſcious ſhe had been guilty of; for ſhe ſuppoſed, that as it was by his prayer that the drought and famine were come upon the land, ſo it was in the ſame way

[e] Baumgarten Peregrinatio, l. 3. c. 9. p. 126. & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[f] Ut ſupra, p. 203.
[g] בכלי in hoc vaſe, Junius
[h] Pirke Eliezer, c. 33.

way that her ſon's death came, namely through the prayer of the prophet.

℣. 19. And he ſaid unto her, give me thy ſon, and he took him out of her boſom, &c.] Where ſhe had laid him, mourning over him; from thence the prophet took him with her leave: and carried him up into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed; an upper room, which was his bedchamber; hither he carried him, that he might be alone, and uſe the greater freedom both in his expreſſions and geſtures.

℣. 20. And he cried unto the Lord, &c.] Or prayed unto him, as the Targum, with great vehemence and importunity: and ſaid, O Lord my God, haſt thou alſo brought evil upon the widow, with whom I ſojourn, by ſlaying her ſon? he pleads his intereſt in the Lord, and makes uſe of it as an argument with him to hear his prayer; he obſerves the character and condition of the women, a widow, ſuch as the Lord has a compaſſionate regard for; and he urges the kindneſs of her to him, with whom he had ſojourned ſo long; and ſeems to repreſent the caſe as an additional evil or affliction to him, as well as to the widow.

℣ 21. And he ſtretched himſelf upon the child three times, &c.] Or meaſured himſelf [i] on it, or put himſelf into a poſture in ſome reſpects equal to the child; putting his mouth on its mouth, his eyes on its eyes, his hands on its hands, as Eliſha afterwards did in a like caſe, perhaps in imitation of him, 2 Kings iv. 34. thereby ſhewing his great affection to the child, and in order to increaſe it the more, and to make him the more fervent and importunate in his prayers for its life; and hereby ſignifying alſo that he would if he could infuſe his breath and life into it, and warm it with his own heat: and cried unto the Lord, and ſaid, O Lord my God, I pray thee, let this child's ſoul come into him again; which ſhews that the child was really dead; and a proof this, that the ſoul dies not with the body, but exiſts in a ſeparate ſtate without it.

℣. 22. And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah, &c.] In prayer, and anſwered it: and the ſoul of the child came into him again, and he revived; this is the firſt inſtance of any one being raiſed from the dead; this Satan has imitated; hence the many fabulous ſtories with the heathens of perſons being raiſed to life after death [k].

℣. 23. And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the houſe, &c.] Being come to life, he took it off of the bed in his bedchamber, and brought it down to the lower part of the houſe, where the woman was: and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah ſaid, See, thy ſon liveth; which no doubt was, to her great ſurprize, and was a wonderful inſtance of divine power and goodneſs, and to which the apoſtle may have reſpect, Heb. xi. 35. Bunting [l] ſays, the inhabitants of this place now take upon them to ſhew the chamber wherein the prophet Elias lived, when he raiſed the widow's child to life.

℣. 24. And the woman ſaid to Elijah, Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, &c.] She took him to be one at his firſt coming to her; ſhe was in a great meaſure confirmed in it by the miracle of the barrel of meal and cruſe of oil; but upon the death of her ſon, which ſhe was ready to impute to the prophet, ſhe was ſtaggered at it; but now, by his reſurrection from the dead, was fully aſſured of it: and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth, is truth; ſhe had known before that what he ſaid concerning the meal and oil not failing was true; but now ſhe was more and more convinced and aſſured that the God, whoſe prophet he was, was the true God, and that the religion he profeſſed was the true religion, and he a true prophet, and that all his prophecies would be exactly fulfilled.

CHAP. XVIII.

IN this chapter Elijah has an order from the Lord to ſhew himſelf to Ahab, who, going firſt, and meeting with a ſervant of his, Obadiah, charges him to tell his maſter where he was, that he might meet him, ℣. 1—16. and upon meeting him, deſires that all Iſrael, and the prophets of Baal, might be convened, which was accordingly done, ℣. 17—20. when he expoſtulated with the people of Iſrael for their idolatry, mocked and confounded the prophets of Baal, and gave the ſtrongeſt proofs, to the conviction of the people, that Jehovah is the true God, ℣. 21—39. on which all the prophets of Baal were ſlain, ℣. 40. and rain in great abundance was given at the prayer of the prophet, ℣. 41—46.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs after many days, &c.] When two years and more were gone from the time the drought and famine began; or rather from the time of the prophet's departure to the brook Cherith, which might be ſix months after the famine began: that the word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year; of his abſence from Ahab: ſaying, Go ſhew thyſelf unto Ahab; whom he had not ſeen ſo long, and who had been ſeeking for him, but to no purpoſe: and I will ſend rain upon the earth; the term of three years and ſix months being almoſt expired, ſee James. v. 17.

℣. 2. And Elijah went to ſhew himſelf unto Ahab, &c.] Which ſhewed his chearful and ready obedience to the will of God, and his great courage and magnanimity, to face a king enraged againſt him, and that ſought his life: and there was a ſore famine in Samaria; the metropolis of the kingdom, where Ahab kept his court, and therefore muſt be ſenſible of it, and bore the greater indignation againſt the prophet who had foretold it.

℣. 3. And Ahab called Obadiah which was the governor of his houſe, &c.] Perhaps his ſteward: the Jews [m] take him to be Obadiah the prophet, who wrote the ſmall prophecy that goes by his name: (now Obadiah feared the Lord greatly:) who, though he did not go up to Jeruſalem to worſhip, which ceremonial ſervice was diſpenſed with in him, yet he did not worſhip the calves, nor Baal, but ſerved the Lord in a ſpiritual manner.

℣. 4. For it was ſo, when Jezebel cut off the prophets of the Lord, &c.] Or ſlew them, as the Targum; put them to death ſome way or another; ſuch as were brought up in the ſchools of the prophets, trained up in religious exerciſes, and inſtructed others therein: that Obadiah took 100 prophets, phets, and hid them by 50 in a cave; 50 in one cave and 50 in another; for there were large caves in the land of Israel capable of holding such a number, and many more, see 1 Sam. xxii. 1. and xxiv. 3. and fed them with bread and water; which in this time of famine were very acceptable; though these may be put for all the necessaries of life.

[i] וימדד & menſus eſt ſe, Pagninus, Montanus; admenſus ſe, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [k] Vid. Huet. Alnetan. Queſt. l. 2. c. 12. §. 30. [l] Travels, &c. p. 205. [m] T. Bab. Sanhedrin. fol. 39. 2.

℣. 5. And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks, &c.] To observe in what condition they were, and the places adjoining to them, the meadows and vallies: peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive; particularly those which belonged to the king's stables, to find provisions for which it was found difficult: that we lose not all the beasts; many of them, doubtless, were lost through the drought already, and there was great danger of the rest, and so, in time, of there being none to procreate and preserve their species, and to prevent which Ahab proposed to take this method.

℣. 6. So they divided the land between them, to pass through it, &c.] And one took one part, and the other the other part: Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself; Ahab not caring to trust any but Obadiah, who he knew was a faithful man, lest they should be bribed by those that had grass not to discover it.

℣. 7. And as Obadiah was in the way, &c.] In his district, making his observations: behold, Elijah met him; where is not said; but he was, no doubt, upon the road from Zarephath to Samaria: and he knew him; that is, Obadiah knew Elijah, having seen him at Ahab's court before he absconded: and fell on his face, and said, Art thou that my lord Elijah? thus doing him honour and reverence both by words and gesture, as being an extraordinary prophet of the Lord.

℣. 8. And he answered him, I am, &c.] He did not desire to be concealed, his orders were to shew and make himself known to Ahab, and Obadiah was one of his domestic servants: go tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here; in such a place, ready to face him at any time. Elijah, by calling Ahab the lord of Obadiah, as he tacitly reproves him for calling him lord, shews reverence to Ahab as a king, and yet that he was fearless of him, as he was the prophet and ambassador of the Lord of hosts to him.

℣. 9. And he said, What have I sinned, &c.] Or in what have I offended God or his prophet, that revenge should be taken on me in this way: that thou wouldst deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab to slay me? for that he supposed would be the consequence of it, as he argues and more plainly expresses his sense in the following words.

℣. 10. As the Lord thy God liveth, &c.] Which is the form of an oath he thought fit to make, to ascertain the truth of what he was about to say: there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee; which is either an hyperbolical expression, signifying he had sought for him in many places, and in every place he could think of; or it must be understood either of the ten tribes, which were as so many nations and kingdoms as they had been; or were more in the times of the Canaanites; or of the nations round about, that were in alliance with or tributary to the king of Israel: and when they said, He is not there, he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not; which he might exact of his own subjects, but could not of other nations, unless they were free to it of themselves; or he might take it of their ambassadors or merchants that came into his land, of whom he enquired, and adjured them to tell him the truth.

℣. 11. And now thou sayest, Go tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here] Which if I should not be able to make good, would be of fatal consequence to me; and that it is plain he feared, by what he next says.

℣. 12. And it shall come to pass, as soon as I am gone from thee, that the spirit of the Lord shall carry thee whither I know not, &c.] This he supposed might possibly, and very probably, be the case, since such raptures might have been already, and known to Obadiah, as there were afterwards, see 2 Kings ii. 16. Ezek. iii. 12. 14. Acts viii. 39. and then he should not know where he was, nor be able to direct his master where to find him: and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, he shall slay me; for telling him a lie, and deceiving and mocking him; or for not seizing on Elijah, and bringing him, when he knew he was so desirous of getting him into his hands: but I thy servant fear the Lord from my youth; and therefore did not deserve to be treated after this manner, having been an early and conscientious worshipper of the true God.

℣. 13. Was it not told my lord, what I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the Lord? how I hid 100 men of the Lord's prophets by 50 in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?] See the note on ℣. 4. this he said not in a way of ostentation, but to shew that it would be very ungenerous and ungrateful, as well as impolitic, to sacrifice such a friend at court to the Lord's prophets as he had been, and might still continue to be.

℣. 14. And now thou sayest, Go tell my lord, Behold, Elijah is here: and he shall slay me.] That is, should he carry such a message to him, and Elijah should be removed elsewhere, and not to be found.

℣. 15. And Elijah said, As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, &c.] In whose presence he was, and whose prophet and minister he was; he takes this oath, to assure Obadiah that he would certainly be upon the spot, or to be found, and not expose him to any danger: I will surely shew myself unto him to-day; he was determined at all events to present himself to him that day.

℣. 16. So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him, &c.] That Elijah was in such a place, and had desired him to inform him of it, and was ready to appear before him that day wherever he pleased; for upon the prophet's oath Obadiah was entirely satisfied, and was in no fear of delivering the message: and Ahab went to meet Elijah; though perhaps the bold message of the prophet might make him fear he had something to say to him not very agreeable.

℣. 17. And it came to pass when Ahab saw Elijah, &c.] As soon as he came up to him, and knew who he was; Abarbinel thinks, because his hair was grown so long that Ahab did not know him certainly, and therefore put the following question: that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel? by opposing the religion of Baal, which prevailed among them; but chiefly rain being witheld from them according to his word, and at his prayer.

℣. 18. And he answered, &c.] That is, Elijah, with great boldness and undaunted courage, not fearing the face of the king, being sent to shew himself to him in the name of the King of kings: I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house; they, by their sins, were the cause of all the the troubles, thoſe ſore evils, and ſad calamities that were upon them: in that ye have forſaken the commandments of the Lord; to have no other Gods before him, and not to make images, and worſhip them, which they had done: and thou haſt followed Baalim; the ſeveral Baals, the ſun, moon, and ſtars, the whole hoſt of heaven, worſhipped under this name; or not content with the Phœnician Baal, or Baal of the Zidonians, followed others, ſee Judg. ii. 11.

℣. 19. Now therefore ſend, and gather to me all Iſrael unto mount Carmel, &c.] No doubt but more diſcourſe paſſed between Ahab and Elijah, though not recorded, before he made this motion to him; it is very probable, that after ſome diſpute between them, who was the true God, and about idolatry, as the cauſe of want of rain, Elijah propoſed to the king what he afterwards did to the people, to which he could not object; and being deſirous of gratifying his curioſity, and eſpecially of having rain, which the prophet might promiſe him in the iſſue of this affair, he agreed unto it; and therefore Elijah deſired that all Iſrael might be convened, that it might be openly and publickly done, and to the conviction and reformation of them, which was what was chiefly deſigned; and he choſe Carmel, a mountain in the tribe of Iſſachar, well ſituated for the people that came from all parts; and the rather this than Samaria, that he might meet with no obſtruction from Jezebel, and from whence he might be able to deſcry rain when coming, as he did. Of this mountain, ſee the note on Jer. xlvi. 18. to which may be added, the deſcription of it by Mr. Sandys [a]. "Mount Carmel ſtretcheth from eaſt to weſt, and hath its uttermoſt baſis waſhed with the ſea; ſteepeſt towards the north, and of an indifferent altitude; rich in vines and olives when huſbanded, and abounding with ſeveral ſorts of fruits and herbs, both medicinal and fragrant, though now much overgrown with woods and ſhrubs of ſweet ſavour." From the following ſolemn tranſaction at it, it ſeems, in after-times, to have become ſacred, and was very venerable with the heathens; from this mountain, a deity with them had the name of Carmel, and was worſhipped here, without an image or a temple, only had an altar erected for it, in imitation of the God of Iſrael worſhipped here in like manner; here Veſpaſian ſacrificed to this deity, aſſiſted by the prieſt of it, Baſilides, as Tacitus [o] relates; Suetonius [p] alſo makes mention of this deity, and of Veſpaſian's conſulting its oracle, which gave him hopes of obtaining the empire; and from hence, in popiſh times, there were an order of friars called Carmelites, inſtituted in the year 1180, pretending to be the ſucceſſors of the children of the prophets Elijah left there: and the prophets of Baal 450; who are ſuppoſed to be diſperſed in the ſeveral parts of the kingdom, to teach and practice the worſhip of Baal, and encourage and ſpread it in the nation: and the prophets of the groves 400, which eat at Jezebel's table; for it ſeems there were now more groves than that one Ahab firſt made, ch. xvi. 33. for which ſuch numbers were appointed to attend, and which perhaps, were near Samaria, ſince they eat at Jezebel's table, and were a ſort of domeſtic chaplains of hers. Aſheroth, we render groves, the learned Selden [q] takes to be Aſhtoreth, or Aſhtareth, or Aſtarte, the goddeſs of the Zidonians, for whom, and ſo for theſe prophets, Jezebel might have a peculiar reſpect, ſee ch. xi. 5.

℣. 20. So Ahab ſent unto all the children of Iſrael, &c.] By meſſengers, requiring their attendance at mount Carmel at ſuch a time, at leaſt their chief and principal men: and gathered the prophets together unto mount Carmel; the 450 prophets of Baal, but not the 400 prophets of the groves; for of them we have no account afterwards, only of the former; it may be they were, not at the command of Ahab, only of Jezebel, at whoſe table they eat, who would not ſuffer them to go.

℣. 21. and Elijah came unto all the people, &c.] Aſſembled at mount Carmel: and ſaid, How long halt ye between two opinions? ſometimes inclining to the one, and ſometimes to the other; as a lame man in walking, his body moves ſometimes to one ſide, and ſometimes to another; or leap ye upon two branches [r], like a bird that leaps or hops from one branch to another, and never ſettles long; or rather it denotes the confuſion of their thoughts, being like branches of trees twiſted and implicated; thus upbraiding them with their inconſtancy and fickleneſs; what their two opinions were, may be learnt from the next clauſe: if the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him; for there is but one God, one infinite, immenſe, and incomprehenſible being; one that is omnipotent, all-ſufficient, good, and perfect; there cannot be more, and therefore but one to be followed, ſerved, and worſhipped; and the people anſwered him not a word; through conviction and confuſion, his reaſoning being unanſwerable; or not knowing which to chuſe at preſent; or fearing they ſhould be drawn into a ſnare, ſhould they name any; either incur the diſpleaſure of the king, who was for Baal, or of the prophet, who was for the Lord, at whoſe word rain was witheld, and might be given, which they were deſirous of.

℣. 22. Then ſaid Elijah unto the people, I, even I only remain a prophet of the Lord, &c.] At leaſt as he thought, all the reſt being ſlain, as he ſuppoſed; however there were none preſent but himſelf: but Baal's prophets are 450 men; which were very great odds he had to contend with.

℣. 23. Let them therefore give us two bullocks, &c.] Who, being ſo many, were better able to be at the expence of them, and having the king on their party too; though perhaps no more is meant than that two bullocks ſhould be brought thither, and preſented before them: and let them chooſe one bullock for themſelves; which of the two they would, if they thought one was any ways preferable to the other, it was at their option to take it: and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood; as ſacrifices uſually were: and put no fire under; which was wont to be done for burnt offerings, as this was deſigned to be: and I will dreſs the other bullock; by ſlaying and cutting it in pieces: and lay it on wood; as for a burnt-offering: and put no fire under; to conſume it.

℣. 24. And call ye on the name of your gods, &c.] The Baalim, the many lords and gods they ſerved: and I will call on the name of the Lord; the one true Jehovah and God of Iſrael, whom I ſerve: and the God that anſwereth by fire; by cauſing fire to come down upon the ſacrifice, and conſume it: let him be God; accounted, owned, and acknowledged as the true God, and ſo afterwards worſhipped as ſuch:

[a] Travels, l. 3. p. 158. Ed. 5.

[o] Hiſt. l. 2. c. 78.

[p] Vit. Veſpaſian. c. 5.

[q] De Dis Syris Syntagm. 2. c. 2. p. 232, &c.

[r] פסחים על שתי המעפים transilietis ſuper duos ramos, Malvenda; vos tranſilientes ſuper ambos ramos, Piſcator.

ſuch: and all the people anſwered and ſaid, It is well ſpoken; they thought it a very reaſonable propoſal, a very good method to determine the controverſy, and come at the truth, and know who was the true God, and who not.

℣. 25. And Elijah ſaid unto the prophets of Baal, &c.] Who agreed to this propoſal, though not expreſſed; or they ſignified it by their ſilence. Ben Gerſom thinks they agreed to it, becauſe that, according to their belief, Baal was Mars, and in the ſign of Aries, one of the fiery planets, and therefore fancied he could ſend down fire on their ſacrifice; but Abarbinel is of opinion, that it was the ſun they worſhipped under the name of Baal, the great luminary which preſides over the element of fire, and therefore had power to cauſe it to deſcend; and if not, they agreed to it, he thinks, for three reaſons; one was neceſſity, they could not refuſe, after the people had approved of it, leſt they ſhould riſe upon them, and ſtone them; and another was, that Elijah propoſed to offer without the temple, contrary to the law of his God, and therefore concluded he would not anſwer him by fire, and ſo they ſhould be upon a par with him; and the third was, that they thought they ſhould offer their bullocks together, ſo that if fire deſcended, it would come upon them both, and then the diſpute would be, whether his God or their God ſent it; and ſo no proof could be made who was God, nor the matter in controverſy decided: chooſe you one bullock for yourſelves, and dreſs it firſt; for ye are many; therefore in civility to them gave the choice of the bullock and the altar firſt, he being one and they many: and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under; under the wood on which was the ſacrifice cut in pieces; and when they had ſo done, then they were to call on their gods to cauſe fire to deſcend upon it.

℣. 26. And they took the bullock which was given them, &c.] By ſuch of them as made the choice: and they dreſſed it; ſlew it, and cut it in pieces, and laid it on the wood, but put no fire under it: and called on the name of Baal, from morning even until noon, ſaying, O Baal, hear us; and ſend fire down on the ſacrifice; and if the ſun was their Baal, they might hope, as the heat he gradually diffuſed was at its height at noon, that ſome flaſhes of fire would proceed from it to conſume their ſacrifice; but after, their hope was turned into deſpair, they became and acted like madmen: but there was no voice, nor any that anſwered; by word, or by ſending down fire as they deſired: and they leapt upon the altar which was made; not by Elijah, but by themſelves, either now or heretofore, and where they had formerly ſacrificed; and they danced about it, and leaped on it, either according to a cuſtom uſed by them; ſuch as the Salii, the prieſts of Mars, uſed, ſo called from their leaping, becauſe they did their ſacred things leaping, and went about their altars capering and leaping [s]; or rather they were mad on it, as the Targum renders it, and acted like madmen, as if they were agitated by a prophetic fury and frenzy.

℣. 27. And it came to paſs at noon, &c.] When they had been from the time of the morning-ſacrifice until now invoking their deity to no purpoſe: that Elijah mocked them; he jeered and bantered them: and ſaid, Cry aloud; your God don't hear you; perhaps, if you raiſe your voice higher, he may; for he is a god; according to your eſteem of him, and if ſo, he ſurely may hear you: unleſs either he is talking; with others about matters of moment and importance, who are waiting on him with their applications to him: or he is in meditation; in a deep ſtudy upon ſome things difficult to be reſolved: or he is purſuing; his ſtudies, or his pleaſures, or his enemies, to overtake them; or he is employed on buſineſs [t]: or he is in a journey; gone to viſit his friends, or ſome parts of his dominions; ſo Homer [u] repreſents Jupiter gone to pay a viſit to the Ethiopians, and as yeſterday gone to a feaſt, and all the gods following him, from whence he would not return until twelve days; and in like manner Lucian [w] ſpeaks of the gods, mocking at them: or peradventure he ſleepeth, and muſt be awaked; with a loud crying to him: it being now noon, Abarbinel thinks this refers to a cuſtom of ſleeping after dinner; Homer [x] alſo ſpeaks of the ſleep of the gods, and which uſed to be at noon; and therefore the worſhippers of Baal ceaſed then to call upon him; and it is ſaid [y], the heathens feared to go into the temples of their gods at noon, leſt they ſhould diſturb them; but ſuch is not the true God, the God of Iſrael, he neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps, Pſ. cxxi. 4.

℣. 28. And they cried aloud, &c.] Trying to make him hear, if poſſible; and cut themſelves after their manner with knives and lancets, till the blood guſhed out upon them: ſo the prieſts of heathen deities uſed to flaſh themſelves on their ſhoulders, arms, and thighs in their devotions to them, as many writers obſerve [z], fancying their gods were delighted with human blood; particularly the prieſts of Bellona [a], and the worſhippers of the Syrian goddeſs [b], and of the Egyptian Iſis [c].

℣. 29. And it came to paſs when mid-day was paſt, &c.] And nothing done, no fire deſcended: and they propheſied until the time of the offering of the evening ſacrifice; continued praying to Baal, and ſinging his praiſes, but all to no purpoſe; or they behaved like madmen, as the Targum; thus they went on until it was time to offer the evening-ſacrifice; ſo that they had no interruption in their ſervice, and had all the time they could deſire to have to importune their God to do the favour for them they requeſted: that there was neither voice, nor any to anſwer, nor any that regarded; no voice was heard that returned them any anſwer; nor was any anſwer made by fire, nor any regard ſhewn to their mad geſtures and barbarous actions; and very likely the people alſo, by this time, paid no regard unto them, perceiving they were not able, by all their cries and methods they took, to obtain an anſwer.

℣. 30. And Elijah ſaid unto all the people, come near unto me, &c.] And obſerve what I do, and what will be done at my requeſt: and all the people came near unto him; left the prophets of Baal to themſelves, and took no more notice of them, but attended to what the prophet ſhould ſay and do: and he repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down; which had been ſet up when high places and altars were allowed of, while the tabernacle was was unſettled, and the temple not built; this is ſuppoſed to have been erected in the times of the Judges; though, according to a tradition of the Jews [d], it was built by Saul, ſee 1 Sam. xv. 12. but had been thrown down by the idolatrous Iſraelites, who demoliſhed ſuch as were erected to the name of the Lord every where, and built new ones for their idols, ch. xix. 10. Benjamin of Tudela [e] ſays, that on the top of mount Carmel is now to be ſeen the place of the altar Elijah repaired, which is four cubits round.

[s] Servius in Virgil. Æneid. l. 8. tum Salii ad cantus, &c. Vid. Gutberleth. de Saliis. c. 2. p. 9. [t] David de pomis Lexic. fol. 211. 1. [u] Iliad. 1. ℣. 423. [w] Jupiter Tragœdus. [x] Ut ſupra, in fine, & Iliad. 2. ℣. 1. 2. [y] Meurſ. Auctuar. Philol. c. 6. apud Quiſtorp. in loc. [z] Vid Kipping. Antiqu. Roman. l. 1. c. 10. p. 202. [a] Tertul. Apolog. c. 9. Lactant. Inſtitut. l. 1. c. 21. [b] Apulei Metamorph. l. 8. [c] Herodot. Euterpe, c. 61. Manetho. Apoteleſm. l. 1. ℣. 243, 244. Seneca de vita beata, c. 27.

℣. 31. And Elijah took 12 ſtones, according to the number of the tribes of the ſons of Jacob, &c.] Which he might very eaſily come at from the mountain: unto whom the word of the Lord came, ſaying, Iſrael ſhall be thy name; which ſignifies one that has power with God, as Jacob had, when the word came to him to make a change in his name at Penuel, Gen. xxxii. 28. and as Elijah hoped and believed he ſhould have at this time, being a prophet, and a worſhipper of Iſrael's God.

℣. 32. And with the ſtones he built an altar in the name of the Lord, &c.] Whom the 12 tribes had formerly worſhipped; and though now divided in their civil ſtate, yet ought to be united in the worſhip of God: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two meaſures of ſeed; or two ſeahs, one of which was the third part of an ephah, and two of them were more than half a buſhel; and this trench or ditch round the altar was as broad as ſuch a meaſure of ſeed would ſow.

℣. 33. And he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, &c.] Juſt in ſuch manner as ſacrifices uſually were: and ſaid, fill four barrels with water; either from the brook Kiſhon, or if that was dried up, from the ſea; for both were near this mountain, and ſo to be had, though a time of drought: and pour it on the burnt-ſacrifice; that which was intended to be one: and upon the word; wherewith it was to be burnt, and ſo made unfit for it; and which would make the miracle appear the greater, when fire came down and conſumed it.

℣. 34. And he ſaid, do it the ſecond time, and they did it the ſecond time, &c.] That is, poured four barrels of water more upon the wood: and he ſaid, do it the third time, and they did it the third time; ſo that there were in all 12 barrels of water poured on the wood, agreeable to the number of the 12 ſtones the altar was built with, and may have reſpect to the ſame as they.

℣. 35. And the water ran round about the altar, &c.] There being ſuch a large effuſion of it on it: and he filled the trench alſo with water; which ſurrounded the altar, ſo that it ſeemed impracticable that any fire ſhould kindle upon it; and this gave full proof and demonſtration there could be no colluſion in this matter.

℣. 36. And it came to paſs at the time of the offering of the evening-ſacrifice, &c.] Which the people of God at Jeruſalem were now attending to: that Elijah the prophet came near; to the altar he had built, and on which he had laid the ſacrifice: and ſaid; in prayer to God: Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; the Covenant-God of the anceſtors of his people, though they had now ſo foully departed from him: let it be known this day that thou art God in Iſrael; and that there is no other: and that I am thy ſervant; a true worſhipper of him, and his faithful prophet and miniſter: and that I have done all theſe things at thy word; reſtrained rain from the earth for ſome years paſt, and now had convened Iſrael, and the falſe prophets, together, that by a viſible ſign from heaven it might be known who was the true God; all which he did not of himſelf, but by the impulſe, direction and commandment of the Lord.

℣. 37. Hear me, O Lord, hear me, &c.] Which repetition is made to expreſs his importunity, and the vehement earneſt deſire of his ſoul to be heard in ſuch a caſe, which ſo much concerned the glory of God; the Targum is, "receive my prayer, O Lord, concerning the fire, receive my prayer concerning the rain;" as if the one reſpected the ſending down the fire on the ſacrifice, and the other ſending rain on the earth; and which ſenſe is followed by other Jewiſh writers: that this people may know that thou art the Lord God; and not Baal, or any other idol: and that thou haſt turned their heart back again; from idolatry, to the worſhip of the true God; though ſome underſtand this of God's giving them up to a ſpirit of error, and ſuffering them to fall into idolatry, and hardening their hearts, as he did Pharaoh's; bnt the former ſenſe is beſt.

℣. 38. Then the fire of the Lord fell, &c.] An extraordinary fire from God out of heaven, as the effects of it ſhew: and conſumed the burnt-ſacrifice; as it had done in ſome other inſtances, Lev. ix. 24. Judg. vi. 22. 1 Chron. xxi. 26. 2 Chron. vii. 1, 3. and beſides this, which is ſtill more extraordinary, and the wood, and the ſtones, and the duſt; of the altar, thereby ſignifying that even ſuch were not to be uſed any more: and licked up the water that was in the trench; around the altar, ſee ℣. 32.

℣. 39. And when all the people ſaw it, they fell on their faces, &c.] In reverence of God, aſtoniſhed at the miracle wrought, aſhamed of themſelves and their ſins, particularly their idolatry, that they ſhould turn their backs on the true God, and follow idols: and they ſaid, the Lord, he is the God, the Lord, he is the God; which acknowledgment of God, as the true God, in oppoſition to Baal, is repeated, to ſhew their firm belief, and ſtrong aſſurance of it.

℣. 40. And Elijah ſaid unto them, take the prophets of Baal, &c.] The 450 that were upon the ſpot; for the number of the people of Iſrael, now gathered together, were equal to it; nor was it in Ahab's power to hinder it, and he might himſelf be ſo far ſurprized and convicted, as not in the leaſt to object to it: let not one of them eſcape; that there might be none of them left to ſeduce the people any more: and they took them; laid hold on them, every one of them: and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kiſhon; which ran by the ſide, and at the bottom of mount Carmel, into the ſea; ſee the notes on Judg. iv. 7. and v. 21. and ſlew them there; intimating, that it was owing to the idolatry they led the people into, that rain had been with-held, and the brooks were dried up, as this might be; or, as Ben Gerſom thinks, that the land might not be defiled with their blood, but be carried down the river after it: theſe he ſlew not with his own hand, but by others he gave orders to do it; and this not as a private perſon, but as an extraordinary miniſter of God, to execute juſtice according to his law, Deut. xiii. by which law ſuch falſe prophets were to die; and the rather he was raiſed up and ſpirited for this ſervice, as the [d] Jarchi & Kimchi in loc.

[e] Itiner ar. p. 37.

the ſupreme magiſtrate was addicted to idolatry himſelf.

℣. 41. And Elijah ſaid unto Ahab, get thee up, &c.] From the brook and valley where the execution of the prophets had been made; either up to his chariot, or to the tent or pavilion erected on the ſide of the mount, where the whole ſcene of things was tranſacted: eat and drink; which he had no leiſure for all the day, from the time of the morning-ſacrifice to the evening-ſacrifice, which was taken up in attending to the iſſue of the ſeveral ſacrifices; but now he is bid to eat and refreſh himſelf, and that in token of joy and gladneſs, as became him, both for the honour of the true God, which had been abundantly confirmed, and for the near approach of rain, of which he aſſures him: for there is a ſound of abundance of rain; the wind perhaps began to riſe, and blow pretty briſkly, which was a ſign of it [f]; beſides, according to the Tyrian annals [g], there were loud claps of thunder at this time, at leaſt when the heavens became very black, as in ℣. 45.

℣. 42. So Ahab went up to eat and to drink, &c.] Up to his chariot, as ſome think, or rather to ſome place higher than that in which he now was: and Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; higher ſtill, where he both might be alone, and have the opportunity of obſerving the clouds gathering, and the rain coming: and he caſt himſelf down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees; expreſſive of his humility, and of his earneſtneſs, and vehement deſire, and continued importunity, that rain might fall; for this was a poſture of prayer he put himſelf into, and continued in; and it is certain that it was through his prayer that rain came, Jam. v. 18. and from hence came the fable of the Grecians concerning Æacus praying for rain in a time of drought, when it came [h]. So the Chineſe writers [i] report that at the prayers of their emperor Tangus, after a ſeven year's drought, great rains fell.

℣. 43. And ſaid to his ſervant, &c.] Whom ſome take to be the ſon of the widow of Sarepta, but he muſt be too young to be employed in ſuch ſervice as this was: go up now; ſtill higher on mount Carmel than where he was, even to the higheſt point of it: look towards the ſea; or the weſt, as the Targum, the Mediterranean ſea, which lay to the weſt of the land of Iſrael: and he went up and looked, and he ſaid there is nothing; there was nothing in the ſky, or ariſing out of the ſea, that looked like or forboded rain: and he ſaid, go again 7 times; till he ſhould ſee ſomething.

℣. 44. And it came to paſs at the ſeventh time that he ſaid, behold there ariſeth a little cloud out of the ſea like a man's hand, &c.] Either about the bigneſs or in the form of it; rain-water comes out of the ſea, and being ſtrained through the clouds and air becomes freſh: and he ſaid, go up; the meaning ſeems to be, that he ſhould firſt go down from the mount, and then go up to that part of it where Ahab was: ſay unto Ahab, prepare thy chariot; bind or faſten the horſes to it, as the phraſe ſeems to ſignify: and get thee down; from the mountain where he was to go to Jezreel, which lay low in a valley: that the rain ſtop thee not; on the road, that might be made unpaſſable by it, ſignifying that ſuch abundance ſhould fall as would make it ſo.

℣. 45. And it came to paſs in the mean while, &c.] That the ſervant was gone with the meſſage to Ahab, and Ahab was getting ready his chariot: that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain; which all ſprung from the cloud like a man's hand; and ſo we are told [k], that ſometimes a little cloud called the ox's eye is ſeen on a mount of the Cape of Good Hope, called Taſeſberg, when the ſky is moſt ſerene, and the ſea quiet; which is at firſt ſcarce ſo big as a barley-corn, and then as a walnut; and preſently it extends itſelf over the whole ſurface of the mountain: and Ahab rode, and went to Jezreel; as faſt as he could.

℣. 46. And the hand of the Lord was on Elijah, &c.] Giving him more than common ſtrength of body, as well as courage and fortitude of mind; ſo the Targum, the ſpirit of ſtrength from the Lord was with him: and he girded up his loins; gathered up his long looſe garment, and girt it about him, that he might be more fit for travelling: and ran before Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel; reckoned about 16 miles from Carmel [l]; this ſhewed his humility, that he was not elated with the wonderful things God had done by him, and that he bore no ill will to Ahab, but was ready to ſhew him all honour and reſpect due to him as a king; and that it were his ſins, and not his perſon, he had an averſion to; and that he was not afraid of Jezebel, and her prophets, but entered into the city where ſhe was, to inſtruct the people, and warn them againſt her idolatries; though ſome think he went no farther than the gate of the city, prudently avoiding falling into her hands.

CHAP. XIX.

THIS chapter gives us a farther account of Elijah, of his being obliged to flee for his life through the threats of Jezebel, ℣. 1—4. of the care the Lord took of him, providing food for him, in the ſtrength of which he went to Horeb, ℣. 5—8. of the Lord's appearance to him there, and converſation with him, ℣. 9—14. of ſome inſtructions he gave him to anoint a king over Syria, another over Iſrael, and a prophet in his room, ℣. 15—18. and of his finding Eliſha, and throwing his mantle over him, who left his ſecular employment, and followed him, and became his ſervant, ℣. 19—21.

℣. 1. And Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, &c.] What miracles he had wrought, how that not only fire came down from heaven, and conſumed the ſacrifice, but even the ſtones and duſt of the altar, and licked up great quantities of water in the trench around it; and that it was at his prayer that rain came down from heaven in ſuch abundance, of which ſhe was ſenſible; by all which he got the people on his ſide, ſo that it was not in his power to ſeize him and ſlay him; and this he ſaid to clear himſelf, and make her eaſy: and withall how he had ſlain all the prophets with the ſword; the 450 prophets of Baal he had gathered to Carmel;

[f] Fit fragor, hinc denſi——nimbi, Ovid. Metamorph. l. 1. fab. 8. v. 269.
[g] Apud Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 8. c. 13. § 2.
[h] Pauſan. Attica, ſive l. 1. prope finem. Iſocrat. Evagoras, p. 373.
[i] Martin. Sinic. Hiſt. l. 3. p. 60.
[k] Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacra, vol. 3. p. 591.
[l] Bunting's Travels, &c. p. 204.

mel; the Targum calls them falſe prophets, but Ahab would ſcarcely uſe that epithet to Jezebel; as for the 400 prophets of the grove, they were not preſent, and ſo not included. Jezebel knew they were ſafe, being with her, ſhe not ſuffering them to go to Carmel.

℣. 2. Then Jezebel ſent a meſſenger unto Elijah, &c.] In Jezreel, or near it, to frighten him away; not caring to ſeize him, and diſpatch him, for fear of the people, in whom he had now a great intereſt; or otherwiſe it is not eaſy to account for it, that ſhe ſhould give him notice of it; unleſs ſhe ſcorned to do it privately, as ſome think, and was determined to make a publick example of him; but being not as yet prepared for it, ſends him word what he muſt expect, imagining that as he had the courage to appear, he would not flee; no doubt there was an hand of providence in it, be it which it will, that he might have time to make his eſcape: ſaying, ſo let the gods do to me, and more alſo; the gods ſhe ſerved, Baal and Aſhtaroth, and by whom ſhe ſwore: if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by to-morrow about this time; as one of the prophets Elijah had ſlain; ſhe ſwore by her gods, and wiſhed the greateſt evils might befal her, if ſhe did not lodge him in the ſtate of the dead where they were in the ſpace of 24 hours; though Abarbinel thinks it is not an oath, but that the words and meaning of them are, ſo the gods do; it is their uſual way, and they will go on to do ſo for the future, becauſe of the holineſs of their name; and therefore don't boaſt of ſlaying the prophets, or make uſe of that as an argument of their falſhood, for they'll do the ſame by thee by to-morrow this time.

℣. 3. And when he ſaw that, &c.] That her deſign and reſolution were to take away his life; the Septuagint, Vulgate, Latin, and Syriac verſions read, and he was afraid; or frightened; he that had ſuch courage as not to be afraid to meet Ahab, and contend with 450 prieſts of Baal, and in the face of all Iſrael, who at firſt were not inclined to take his part, is now terrified at the threats of a ſingle woman; which ſhews that the ſpirit and courage he had before were of the Lord, and not of himſelf; and that thoſe who have the greateſt zeal and courage for religion, for God, and his worſhip, his truths and ordinances, if left to themſelves, become weak and timorous; and whether this is the true reading, or no, it was certainly his caſe by what follows: he aroſe and went for his life; fled to ſave his life, at a time when he was much wanted to encourage and encreaſe the reformation from idolatry, and to preſerve the people from relapſing who were converted; and through the miracles that had been wrought by him, and for him, he had great reaſon to truſt in the Lord: or he went unto, or according to his own ſoul[m]; according to his own mind and will, not taking counſel of God, or any direction from him; and ſo Abarbinel interprets it: and came to Beerſheba, which belongeth to Judah; to the tribe of Judah; for though it was in the inheritance of Simeon, yet that was within the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xix. 1, 2. or to the kingdom of Judah, over which Jehoſhaphat reigned, and ſo might think himſelf ſafe, being out of the dominions of Ahab, and reach of Jezebel; but yet he did not think ſo, his fears ran ſo high, that he imagined ſhe would ſend ſome after him to ſearch for him, and ſlay him privately, or make intereſt with Jehoſhaphat to deliver him up, there being friendſhip between him and Ahab; for though this place was 84 miles from Jezebel, as Bunting[n] computes it, he quitted it: and left his ſervant there; he took him not with him, either leſt he ſhould betray him, or rather out of compaſſion to him, that he might not ſhare in the miſeries of life that were like to come upon him.

℣. 4. But he himſelf went a day's journey into the wilderneſs, &c.] Of Paran, which began near Beerſheba, and was the wilderneſs of Arabia, in which the Iſraelites were near 40 years; this day's journey carried him about 20 miles from Beerſheba ſouthward, as the above writer reckons: and came and ſat down under a juniper-tree; Abarbinel ſuppoſes, that Elijah choſe to ſit under this tree, to preſerve him from venemous creatures, which naturaliſts ſay will not come near it; and Pliny[o] indeed obſerves, that it being burnt will drive away ſerpents, and that ſome perſons anoint themſelves with the oil of it, for fear of them; and yet Virgil[p] repreſents the ſhade of a juniper-tree as noxious; hence ſome interpreters take this to be a piece of careleſſneſs and indifference of the prophet's, where he ſat: and he requeſted for himſelf, that he might die; for though he fled from Jezebel to preſerve his life, not chuſing to die by her hands, which would cauſe her prophets to exult and triumph, yet was now deſirous of dying by the hand of the Lord, and in a place where his death would not be known: it is enough, now, O Lord, take away my life; intimating, that he had lived long enough, even as long as he deſired; and he had done as much work for God as he thought he had to do; he ſuppoſed his ſervice and uſefulneſs were at an end, and therefore deſired his diſmiſſion: for I am not better than my fathers; that he ſhould not die, or live longer than they; but this deſire was not like that of the apoſtle Paul's, but like that of Job and of Jonas; not ſo much to be with God and Chriſt, as to be rid of the troubles of life.

℣. 5. And as he lay and ſlept under a juniper-tree, &c.] Being weary and fatigued with his journey, the ſame under which he ſat; for there was but one, as that is ſaid to be in the preceding verſe: behold, then an angel touched him, and ſaid unto him, ariſe, and eat; ſo far was the Lord from granting his requeſt to take away his life, that he made proviſion to preſerve it; ſo careful was he of him, as to give an angel charge to get food ready for him, and then awake him to eat of it.

℣. 6. And he looked, and behold, there was a cake baked on the coals, &c.] Juſt took off the coals, quite hot. Bochart[q] thinks it ſhould be rendered, baked on hot ſtones; and ſuch was the way of baking cakes in ſome of the eaſtern countries, ſee the note on Gen. xviii. 6. the ſtones hereabout might be heated by a ſupernatural power, and the cake baked on them by an angel; theſe ſort of cakes are in Hebrew called Huggoth, as ſome pronounce the word, and are ſaid to be now common in Bulgaria, where they are called Hugaccs[r]: and a cruſe of water at his head; to drink of in eating the cake; which cruſe or pot a learned man[s] thinks was Elijah's, not brought by the angel, only water

[m] אל נפשו κατα την ψυχην αυτε, Sept. ſecundum animam ſuam, Vatablus, Pagninus.
[n] Travels, ut ſupra.
[o] Nat. Hiſt. l. 24. c. 8.
[p] Juniperi gravis umbra—— Bucol. Eclog. 10. ℣. 76.
[q] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 33. col. 328. c. 44. col. 224.
[r] Buſbequius apud Calmet on the word bread.
[s] Schacchi Elæochriſm. Myrothec. l. 1.

ter put into it by him; see 1 Sam. xxvi. 11, 12. and he did eat, and drink; but not all that was set before him: and laid him down again; to take some more sleep for his greater refreshment.

℣. 7. And the angel of the Lord came again the second time, and touched him, &c.] In order to awake him out of sleep: and said unto him, arise, and eat, because the journey is too great for thee; which he had to go to Horeb, without eating more than he had; and there were no provisions to be be had in a common way and manner in his road thither.

℣. 8. And he arose, and did eat and drink, &c.] Of what was left of the cake and cruse of water, before provided for him: and went in the strength of that meat, 40 days and 40 nights, unto Horeb the mount of God; for so long he was going to that place, though it might have been gone in three or four days; but he went in bye-ways, and wandered about in the wilderness, as the Israelites did, and that for the space of 40 days, as they did near 40 years; and all this while he had no other sustenance than what he had taken under the juniper-tree, from whence he set out, which must be supernatural; for it is said [t], a man can't live without food beyond seven days, see the note on Exod. xxiv. 18. the food either staying in his stomach all this while, or however the nutritive virtue of it, by which he was supported, and held out till he came to Horeb or Sinai; called the mount of the Lord, because here he had appeared to Moses in the bush, and from hence gave the law to the children of Israel. Abarbinel is of opinion, that this term of 40 days was consumed in his whole journey to Horeb, his stay there, and return to the land of Israel.

℣. 9. And he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there, &c.] This cave, some travellers say [u], is to be seen at this day, not far from a church dedicated to the prophet Elijah, and that the cave itself has the appearance of a chapel; but a more particular account of it is given in a journal [w] lately published, which says, this cave exists to this very day, and is situated at the foot of mount Sinai, and is now inclosed in a church built of red and white granate marble, the entrance into which is from the west; the dimensions of this cave are in length five feet, in depth four feet, and in height four and a half. The Jewish writers are of opinion, that this was the cleft of the rock, in which Moses was put, when the Lord passed before him; but if so, there would have been no need of Elijah to have gone forth to and stand upon the mount when the Lord passed by, ℣. 11. and behold, the word of the Lord came to him; an articulate voice was heard by him: and he said unto him, what dost thou here, Elijah? this is not a proper place for a prophet to be in, in a wilderness, in a mountain, in a cave in it: what work could he do for God? or what service to his people? in the land of Israel he might bear his testimony against idolatry, and so be a means of reclaiming backsliders, and of establishing those that were in the true religion; but of what usefulness could he be here? Abarbinel takes it to be a reproof of Elijah, for going into a place so holy as it was, and in which Moses, the chief of the prophets, had been, and that it did not become such a man as he was to be in such a place.

℣. 10. And he said, I have been jealous for the Lord God of hosts, &c.] Through zeal for the glory of God he had slain 450 prophets of Baal, and this had stirred up the malice and revenge of Jezebel against him, who sought his life, and which had obliged him to flee, and come to this place for shelter; this is the first part of his answer, others follow: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant; the law, especially the two first commandments delivered in this very place; and therefore he could hope for no protection from them, but was forced to leave his country: thrown down thy altars; which had been built in times past for the worship of God, to sacrifice thereon to him, but were now demolished, that those that would not bow the knee to Baal, and could not go to Jerusalem, might make no use of them: and slain thy prophets with the sword; which was done by Jezebel, the Israelites conniving at it, and consenting to it, and not daring to oppose her; slain all she had knowledge of, or even were known by the prophet: hence it follows, and I, even I only am left, and they seek my life to take it away; all this Elijah said, as it seems, not only to excuse himself for fleeing, and taking up his abode where he was, but to stir up the indignation of God against Israel for their idolatries and murders, and to put him upon inflicting his judgments on them for the same.

℣. 11. And he said, go forth and stand upon the mount before the Lord, &c.] Who would appear there, as he had to Moses formerly, though not in the same manner: and behold, the Lord passed by; or was about to pass, for as yet he had not; his messengers first went before him: and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord; strong enough to do all this, and so it might: but the Lord was not in the wind; as he sometimes is, Nah. i. 3. he spake to Job out of a whirlwind, ch. xxxviii. 1. and after the wind an earthquake; that shook the earth all around, and the mountain also, as it did when the law was given on it, Ps. lxviii. 8. but the Lord was not in the earthquake; as he was when it trembled in the times of Moses, Exod. xix. 18.

℣. 12. And after the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire, &c.] As he was when he descended on this mount, and spake to Moses, Exod. xix. the Targum, and so Jarchi, interpret all these appearances of angels, and not amiss; the wind, of an host of angels of wind; the earthquake, of an host of angels of commotion; the fire, of an host of angels of fire; see Ps. civ. 4. these ministers of the Lord went before him, to prepare the way of his glorious majesty; which emblems may represent the power of God, the terribleness of his majesty, and the fury of his wrath, which he could display, if he would, to the destruction of his enemies; and could as easily destroy the idolatrous kingdom of Israel, which Elijah seems to be solicitous of, as the wind rent the mountains, and broke the rocks, and the earthquake shook the earth, and the fire consumed all in its way; but he chose not to do it now, but to use lenity, and shew mercy, signified by the next emblem: and after the fire, a still small voice; not rough, but gentle, more like whispering than roaring; something soft, easy, and musical; the Targum is, the voice of those that praise God in silence; and

[t] Macrob. in Somn. Scipion. l. 1. c. 6.

[u] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 2. p. 166.

[w] Journal from Cairo to mount Sinai in 1722, p. 26. Ed. 2.

and all this may be conſidered as ſhewing the diffe-rence between the two diſpenſations of law and goſpel; the law is a voice of terrible words, and was given amidſt a tempeſt of wind, thunder, and lightening, attended with an earthquake, Heb. xii. 18, 19. Exod. xix. 18. but the goſpel is a gentle voice of love, grace and mercy, of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Chriſt; and may alſo point at the order and manner of the Lord's dealings with the ſouls of men, who uſually by the law breaks the rocky hearts of men in pieces, ſhakes their conſciences, and fills their minds with a ſenſe of fiery wrath and indignation they deſerve, and then ſpeaks comfortably to them, ſpeaks peace and pardon thro' the miniſtration of the goſpel by his ſpirit; bleſſed are the people that hear this ſtill, ſmall, gentle voice, the joyful ſound, Pſ. lxxxix. 15.

℣. 13. And it was ſo, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, &c.] Through reverence of the divine majeſty he perceived was there, and through ſhame and confuſion under a ſenſe of his impurity, imperfections and unworthineſs, as the ſeraphim in Iſ. vi. 2, 3. and as Moſes, Exod. iii. 6. and went out and ſtood in the entering in of the cave; he attempted to come forth out of the cave upon the divine order, ℣. 11. but was ſtopped by the terrible appearances of the wind, earthquake and fire, a little within it; but now he came quite out, and ſtood at the mouth of it, to hear what the Lord would ſay unto him: and behold, there came a voice unto him, and ſaid, what doſt thou here, Elijah? the ſame queſtion is here put as in ℣. 9. though there by an angel, here by the Lord himſelf.

℣. 14. And he ſaid, &c.] Elijah, in anſwer to the queſtion put, and he ſays the ſame as before: I have been very jealous, &c. which the queſtion was deſigned to draw from him, in order to give him ſome inſtructions and directions; which would ſuggeſt to him, that though he ſhould not deal ſeverely with Iſrael, nor with Ahab and his houſe, yet he would hereafter by the kings he ſhould anoint over Syria and Iſrael, and by the prophet he ſhould anoint in his room, as inſtruments of his vengeance.

℣. 15. And the Lord ſaid unto him, go, return on thy way to the wilderneſs of Damaſcus, &c.] He is bid to go back the way he came through the wilderneſs of Arabia, which was part of his way to Damaſcus, near to which was another wilderneſs, which took its name from thence; though Fortunatus Scacchus [x] thinks no other is meant by this phraſe, than returning to his former courſe and cuſtom of preaching the law of God, and reclaiming men from the error of their ways: and when thou comeſt, anoint Hazael to be king over Syria; it is no where related that Elijah did go to Damaſcus, and anoint Hazael, though it may be he did; however he acquainted Eliſha with it, and he declared it to Hazael, that he ſhould be king of Syria, and which perhaps is all that is meant by anointing; that is, that he ſhould be made king, and which was declared by both theſe prophets, ſee 2 Kings viii. 13.

℣. 16. And Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi ſhalt thou anoint to be king over Iſrael, &c.] This was a ſon of Jehoſhaphat, and a grandſon of Nimſhi; nor does he appear to have been anointed by Elijah, but by Eliſha; and being done by his order and direction, was the ſame as if it was done by himſelf, unleſs he was twice anointed, ſee 2 Kings ix. 1—3. and Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat of Abel-meholah ſhalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room; which was in the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan; ſee the note on Judg. vii. 22.

℣. 17. And it ſhall come to paſs, that him that eſcapeth the ſword of Hazael, ſhall Jehu ſlay, &c.] Which ſuggeſts that many ſhould be ſlain in Iſrael by them both, as were by Hazael, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. and by Jehu, 2 Kings ix. 24, 33. and x. 1—7. and him that eſcapeth from the ſword of Jehu, ſhall Eliſha ſlay; which may be underſtood either literally of the 42 children curſed by him, in conſequence of which they were deſtroyed by bears, 2 Kings ii. 24. or rather figuratively by his prophecies, ſee Hoſ. vi. 5. who foretold the ſlaughters made by Hazael and Jehu, as well as others, ſee 2 Kings viii. 12. and ix. 7, 8. theſe ſeveral things were not done in the order in which they are here put; for what Eliſha did was before Hazael and Jehu, and Jehu before Hazael; theſe words therefore don't reſpect the exact order of time, in which they ſhould be done, only that each ſhould do the part appointed and aſſigned unto him, and what could not be ſo well done by the other; thus Hazael was to deſtroy thoſe that came out to war; and Jehu, Ahab's family that did not; and Eliſha the children of idolatrous parents at Bethel, that came not within the reach of either; though it may be obſerved, that Hazael began to diſtreſs Iſrael before Jehu appeared, 2 Kings viii. 28, 29. and the prophecies of Eliſha might not have their full accompliſhment, until after Hazael and Jehu had done what was appointed for them.

℣. 18. Yet I have left me 7000 in Iſrael, &c.] From periſhing by the ſword of either of them: all the knees which have not bowed to Baal; that is, had not worſhipped him, which was ſignified by this geſture: and every mouth which hath not kiſſed him; either the image of Baal itſelf, or the hand, in reverence of him; which rites, one or other, or both, were uſed by his worſhippers; ſee the note on Hoſ. xiii. 2. This either refers, as ſome think, to the preſent time, and ſo is an anſwer to Elijah, who thought he was the only worſhipper left, with which ſeems to agree Rom. xi. 2—4. or to the times to come, when deſtruction ſhould be made by the above perſons, and when God would have ſome faithful worſhippers, and would take care of them; ſo ſome render the words, I will reſerve, &c. [y]

℣. 19. So he departed thence, &c.] From mount Horeb, and came to Abel-meholah, which Bunting computes [z] at 156 miles: and found Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat, who was plowing with 12 yoke of oxen before him, and he with the 12*th*; which may be underſtood either of 12 couple of oxen drawing one plough; which was a large number, but will not ſeem ſtrange when it is obſerved, that Abel-meholah, where Eliſha was plowing, lay in the vale of Jordan, which was a clayey, ſtiff ground, and required ſuch a number of oxen to plow it up, eſpecially at the firſt tilling of it, as this might be [a]; compare 1 Kings iv. 12. with ch. vii. 46. A late traveller [b] obſerves, that at Damegraed in upper Egypt on the Nile, ſix oxen yoked to plow had a great deal of difficulty to turn up the ground; or elſe, as the Jewiſh writers generally underſtand it, there were 12 ploughs, and a yoke of oxen to each, and

2

[x] Elæochriſm. Myrothec. l. 1. c. 39. col. 198.

[y] והשארתי reſervabo vel ſervabo, Vatablus; ſo V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion.

[z] Travels, &c. p. 204.

[a] See Fuller's Piſgah-ſight, &c. b. 2. ch. 8. p. 175.

[b] Norden's Travels in Egypt and Arabia, vol. 2. p. 85.

and a ploughman to attend every one, and Elisha attended the 12th; or was with one of the twelve, as the Targum, and might have the oversight of them all; Kimchi thinks, and so Abarbinel after him, that this signified that he should be leader of the 12 tribes of Israel: and Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him; the skirts of it.

℣. 20. And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, &c.] His heart being touched by the Lord at the same time, and his mind enlightened to understand what was meant by that action: and said, let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother; take his leave of them in this way, which was what was used by friends at parting, see Ruth i. 9. 14. and then I will follow thee; which he understood was meant by his casting his mantle over him: and he said unto him, go back again; to his plough; for what have I done to thee? He had only cast the skirts of his mantle over him, and had said nothing to him; this he said to try him, and get out of him what was in his heart, and how it had been touched by the Spirit of God; and if so, then he suggests it was not what he had done, but what the Lord had impressed upon him, that would oblige him to return, and follow him, after he had taken his leave of his parents.

℣. 21. And he returned back from him, &c.] To his father's house, and took his leave, and then came back into the field, perhaps with others accompanying him: and took a yoke of oxen and slew them, and boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen; their yokes, and the plough, with an addition of other things sufficient to boil them: and gave unto the people, and they did eat; the ploughmen and others that came together on this occasion; he made a feast for them, to express his joy at being called to such service he was: then he arose and went after Elijah; left his worldly employment, the riches he was heir to, his parents, and his friends, and followed the prophet: and ministred unto him; became his servant, whereby he attained to great knowledge and understanding of divine things, and was trained up to the prophetic office, which he was invested with upon the removal of Elijah; see Matt. viii. 21, 22. and xix. 27.

CHAP. XX.

THIS chapter relates the siege of Samaria by the king of Syria, and his insolent demand of Ahab's wives, children and riches, ℣. 1—12 the sally made out upon him, at the direction of the prophet, and the rout made of the Syrian army, ℣. 13—21. the return of the Syrian army the next year, when there was a pitched battle between them and Israel, in which the former were entirely defeated, ℣. 22—30. the peace Ahab made with the king of Syria, ℣. 31—34. and the reproof one of the sons of the prophets gave him for it, which made him very uneasy, ℣. 35—43.

℣. 1. And Benhadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together, &c.] This was Benhadad the second, the son of that Benhadad, to whom Asa sent to help him against Baasha, ch. xv. 18. and there were 32 kings with him; these were heads of families, so called, and at most governors of cities under Benhadad; petty princes, such as were in the land of Canaan in Joshua's time: and horses and chariots; how many is not said: and he went up and besieged Samaria, and warred against it; he went up with such an intent, but had not as yet done it in form; what moved him to it cannot be said precisely, whether an ambitious view of enlarging his dominions, or because the king of Israel paid not the tribute his father had imposed upon him, see ℣. 34. however, so it was through the providence of God, as a scourge to Ahab for his impiety.

℣. 2. And he sent messengers to Ahab king of Israel, into the city, &c.] Who there remained, and attempted not to go forth and meet him, and stop his progress, though he must have passed great part of his dominions to come to Samaria: and said unto him, thus saith Benhadad; by them, his messengers, as follows.

℣. 3. Thy silver and thy gold is mine, &c.] Not of right, but reckoning it as good as in his hands, Ahab not being able to resist him: and thy wives also; for it seems he had more than Jezebel: and thy children; which were many, for he had no less than 70 sons, 2 Kings x. 1. even the goodliest are mine; some aggravate this, as if his view was, to commit the unnatural sin with his male-children, when in his possession.

℣. 4. And the king of Israel answered and said, my lord, O king, &c.] So he said to Benhadad's messengers, representing him, as acknowledging his sovereignty over him: according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have; which he understood of holding all that he had of him, by giving him homage, and paying him tribute; not that he was to deliver all his substance, and especially his wives and children, into his hands.

℣. 5. And the messengers came again, &c.] From Benhadad: and said, Thus speaketh Benhadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying; at the first message: Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children; into his possession, and not as Ahab understood it, that he should be his vassal, and pay a yearly tribute for his quiet enjoyment of them; yet even this he would not now abide by, growing still more haughty upon the mean submission of Ahab, as by what follows.

℣. 6. Yet I will send my servants unto thee tomorrow about this time, &c.] He gave him 24 hours to consider of it: and they shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants; the royal palace, and the houses of the noblemen, and even of every of his subjects in Samaria: and it shall be, that whatsoever is pleasant (or desirable) in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away; not be content with what should be given, but search for more; and if any thing in particular was more desirable to the possessor than any thing else, that should be sure to be taken away; which was vastly insolent and aggravating.

℣. 7. Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, &c.] His poor sneaking spirit was a little aroused with the last message, and therefore called a council of the elders of the people upon it, which was a piece of wisdom in him: and said, Mark, I pray you, and see how this man seeketh mischief; nothing less than the entire ruin of the nation: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold, and I denied him not; in the sense he understood him, which which was, that he was to be a vaſſal, and tributary to him, for the ſake of holding theſe, which yet was very mean, but he wanted to have theſe in hand, and not them only, but the pillaging of all his ſubjects.

℣. 8. And all the elders, and all the people ſaid unto him, &c.] They were unanimous in their advice: Hearken not unto him, nor conſent; promiſing, no doubt, that they would ſtand by him.

℣. 9. Wherefore he ſent unto the meſſengers of Benhadad, &c.] Upon the advice the elders had given him, and encouraged thereby, though in a poor ſneaking manner after all: Tell my lord the king, All that thou didſt ſend for to thy ſervant at the firſt, I will do; owning him as his Lord, and himſelf as his ſervant, and promiſing to grant his firſt demand, though ſo inſolent, in the ſenſe he underſtood him, of paying tribute to him for it: but this thing I may not do; to have not only all put into his hands, but his and his ſervants houſes to be ſearched and pillaged, becauſe the elders of his people would not agree; and yet he ſeems to ſpeak as if he himſelf would have ſubmitted to it, but was reſtrained by his council: and the meſſengers departed, and brought him word again; reported to Benhadad the anſwer they received from Ahab.

℣. 10. And Benhadad ſent unto him, and ſaid, &c.] That is, to Ahab: The gods do ſo unto me, and more alſo; bring greater evils upon me than I can think of or expreſs: if the duſt of Samaria ſhall ſuffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me; ſignifying that he made no doubt of it, of reducing it to duſt by the numbers of men he ſhould bring with him, which would be ſo many, that if each was to take an handful of duſt of the ruins of Samaria, there would not be enough for them all; which was an hectoring and hyperbolical ſpeech, uttered in his wrath and fury.

℣. 11. And the king of Iſrael anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Very mildly and very wiſely: Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harneſs, boaſt himſelf, as he that putteth it off; that is, he that prepares for the battle as he that has got the victory; the ſenſe is, let no man triumph before the battle is over and the victory won; the events of war are uncertain, the battle is not always to the ſtrong.

℣. 12. And it came to paſs when Benhadad heard this meſſage (as he was drinking, he and the kings in the pavilions) &c.] Though it was at noon, or before, ℣. 16. which ſhews that he and they were addicted to intemperance: that he ſaid unto his ſervants; ſome of the principal officers of his army: Set yourſelves in array; prepare for battle, betake yourſelves to your arms, inveſt the city at once, and place the engines againſt it to batter it down: and they ſet themſelves in array againſt the city; beſieged it in form, at leaſt prepared for it; for it ſeems after all that it was not properly done.

℣. 13. And behold, there came a prophet unto Ahab king of Iſrael, &c.] Suppoſed by the Jewiſh writers to be Micaiah the ſon of Imlah, ch. xxii. 9. one of thoſe perhaps that Obadiah hid in the cave, and now is ſent out publicly on an errand to Ahab: ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord, Haſt thou ſeen all this great multitude? conſidered what a vaſt number Benhadad's army conſiſted of: behold, I will deliver it into thine hand this day; as great as it is: and thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord; and not Baal, who can ſave by few as well as by many, and from a great multitude.

℣. 14. And Ahab ſaid, By whom? &c.] Knowing he had no army with him ſufficient to go out with againſt the Syrian army: and he ſaid, Thus ſaith the Lord, Even by the young men of the princes of the provinces; either ſuch, as Kimchi thinks, who were brought up with him; or, as others, the ſons of governors of provinces, who were kept as hoſtages, that their fathers might not rebel; neither of which is likely: but rather the ſervants of ſuch princes who waited on them, and lived delicately and at eaſe, and were not trained up to military exerciſes, even by theſe ſhould the victory be obtained: then he ſaid, Who ſhall order the battle? begin the attack, we or they? or who ſhall conduct it, or be the general of the army, go before it, and lead them on? Ahab might think, being an idolater, that the Lord would not make uſe of him, or otherwiſe who could be thought of but himſelf? and he anſwered, Thou; thou muſt be the commander, go forth with the army, and make the attack upon the enemy.

℣. 15. Then he numbred the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were 232, &c.] A very ſmall number to go forth againſt ſo great an army as the hoſt of the Syrians, and theſe raw unexperienced young men: and after them he numbred all the people, even all the children of Iſrael, being 7000: which could never be the number of all the people in the land; nor even in the city of Samaria, who were able to bear arms; but it muſt mean ſuch who were willing to go out to war on this occaſion: and the number being juſt the ſame, as of thoſe that bowed not the knee to Baal, has led the Jewiſh commentators to conclude, that theſe were the men that were numbered for war; but it is not likely that they were all in Samaria, or that none but thoſe would go to war, though it muſt be owned the number is remarkable.

℣. 16. And they went out at noon, &c.] From Samaria, the 232 young men, and the 7000 Iſraelites, openly, with great ſpirit and courage, fearleſs and undaunted; but it is not ſaid that Ahab went out at the head of them; it ſeems as if he did not, by what is ſaid, ℣. 21. but Benhadad was drinking himſelf drunk in the pavilions (or booths, or tents) he, and the kings, the 32 kings that helped him; who either were his ſubjects, or his tributaries, or confederates; being ſecure, and having nothing to fear from Ahab, he and they gave themſelves up to carouſing and drinking, even at noon, and ſo deſtruction came upon them unawares, as on Belſhazzar.

℣. 17. And the young men of the princes of the provinces went out firſt, &c.] From Samaria, before the 7000 did: and Benhadad ſent out; of his pavilion, a meſſenger or meſſengers to his centinels, to know what news, and how matters ſtood, whether Ahab had ſent any meſſage, ſignifying his compliance with his terms: and they told him, ſaying, There are men come out of Samaria; but upon what account they could not ſay.

℣. 18. And he ſaid, Whether they be come out for peace, &c.] To propoſe terms of peace: take them alive; make them priſoners, which was contrary to the laws of nations: or whether they be come out for war, take them alive; he made no doubt of their being eaſily taken; but he would not have them be put to death, that he might examine them, and know the ſtate of things in Samaria, and what Ahab intended to do, that he might take his meaſures accordingly.

℣. 19. So theſe young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, &c.] Firſt, as before obſerved, and marched forwards towards the Syrian camp: and the army which followed them; conſiſting of 7000 men.

℣. 20. And they ſlew every one his man, &c.] The Syrian army, or at leaſt a body of men detached from them, met them, oppoſed them, and fought them, and they ſlew of them 7232 men; as many as they themſelves were: and the Syrians fled; not expecting ſuch a rebuff: and Iſrael purſued them; to make ſome farther advantage of their victory: and Benhadad the king of Syria eſcaped on an horſe, with the horſemen; with two couple of horſemen, as the Targum; with theſe to guard him he galloped away as faſt as he could for his life.

℣. 21. And the king of Iſrael went out, &c.] Of Samaria; when he ſaw the Syrians fleeing, and his army purſuing, he went forth, perhaps, with more forces, who were now willing to join with him; Joſephus [c] ſays, Ahab had another army within the walls: and ſmote the horſes and chariots; that is, the men that rode on horſes, and in chariots, the Syrian cavalry: and ſlew the Syrians with a great ſlaughter; how many were ſlain is not ſaid; but the Jewiſh hiſtorian [d] ſays, they plundered the camp, in which were much riches, and great plenty of gold and ſilver, and took their chariots and horſes, and returned to the city of Samaria.

℣. 22. And the prophet came to the king of Iſrael, &c.] The ſame that came to him before: and ſaid unto him, Go, ſtrengthen thyſelf; exhorted him to fortify his cities, eſpecially Samaria, and increaſe his army, that he might be able to oppoſe the king of Syria: and mark, and ſee what thou doeſt; obſerve his moral and religious actions, and take heed that he did not offend the Lord by them, as well as make military preparations: for at the return of the year, the king of Syria will come up againſt thee; about the ſame time in the next year, at the ſpring of the year, when kings go out to war, ſee 2 Sam. xi. 1.

℣. 23. And the ſervants of the king of Syria ſaid unto him, &c.] His miniſters of ſtate, his privy-counſellors: their gods are gods of the hills, therefore they were ſtronger than we; and beat them in the laſt battle; this notion they might receive from what they had heard of Jehovah delivering the law on mount Sinai to Moſes, and of the miraculous things done lately on mount Carmel, as well as of their worſhip being in high places, eſpecially at Jeruſalem, the temple there, being built on an hill, as was Samaria itſelf, near to which they had their laſt defeat; and this notion of topical deities very much obtained among the heathens in after-times, ſome of which they ſuppoſed preſided over rivers, others over woods, and others over hills and mountains [e]: ſo Nemeſtinus the god of woods, Collina the goddeſs of hills, and Vallina of vallies [f]; and Arnobius [g] makes mention of the god Montinus, and Livy [h] of the god Peninus, who had his name from a part of the Alps, ſo called where he was worſhipped; and there alſo the goddeſs Penina was worſhipped; and Lactantius [i] ſpeaks of the gods of the mountains the mother of Maximilian was a worſhipper of; and even Jupiter had names from mountains, as Olympius, Capitolinus, &c. and ſuch was the great god Pan, called mountainous Pan [k]: but let us fight againſt them in the plain, and ſurely we ſhall be ſtronger than they; and prevail over them, and conquer them.

℣. 24. And do this thing, &c.] Alſo, take this farther piece of advice: Take the kings away, every man out of his place; for being brought up delicately, they were not inured to war, nor expert in the art of it; and being addicted to pleaſure, gave themſelves to that, and drew the king into it, which they obſerved was the caſe before, though they did not care to mention it; and if they were tributaries or allies, they would not fight as men do for their own country: and put captains in their rooms; of his own people, men of ſkill and courage, and who would fight both for their own honour, and for the good of their country.

℣. 25. And number thee an army like the army that thou haſt loſt, &c.] Raiſe an army of an equal number, which they ſuppoſed he was able to do: horſe for horſe, and chariot for chariot; as many horſes and chariots as he had before: and we will fight againſt them in the plain; where they could make uſe of their horſes and chariots to greater advantage than on hills and mountains, ſee Judg. i. 19. and ſurely we ſhall be ſtronger than they; and beat them: and he hearkened unto their voice, and did ſo; took their counſel, and prepared an army, and placed captains in it inſtead of kings.

℣. 26. And it came to paſs at the return of the year, &c.] In the ſpring, or autumn, as ſome think, ſee the note on 2 Sam. xi. 1. that Benhadad numbred the Syrians; took a muſter of his army, to ſee if he had got the number he had before: and went up to Aphek, to fight againſt Iſrael; not that in Judah, Joſh. xv. 53. rather that in Aſher, Joſh. xix. 30. but it ſeems to be that which Adrichomius [l] places in Iſſachar, near to the famous camp of Eſdraelon, or valley of Jezreel, where it is probable the king of Syria intended to have fought the battle; and ſome travellers, as he obſerves, ſay [m], the ruins of that city are ſtill ſhewn in that great camp or plain, not far from Gilboa, to the eaſt of mount Carmel, and five miles from Tabor; according to Bunting [n], it was fourteen miles from Samaria; but it may be Aphaca near mount Lebanon, and the river Adonis [o] is meant.

℣. 27. And the children of Iſrael were numbred, and were all preſent, &c.] The ſame as before; the 232 young men of the princes of the provinces, and 7000 of the people, not one was miſſing: and went againſt them; out of Samaria, towards Aphek; and the children of Iſrael pitched before them like two little flocks of kids; being few and weak, the 232 young men in one body, and the 7000 in another: but the Syrians filled the country; with their men, their horſes, and their chariots.

℣. 28. And there came a man of God, &c.] The ſame as before, ℣. 13. 22. or had come [p] before the little army went out to meet the Syrians; tho' he might go to Ahab when incamped, for his encouragement: and ſpake unto the king of Iſrael, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the Lord, Becauſe the Syrians have ſaid, The Lord is God of the hills, but he is not God of the vallies; ſee the note on ℣. 23. therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand; not for Ahab's ſake would the Lord do this, who does not not appear thankful to God for the former victory, nor to be reformed from his idolatry, and the better for it, but for the honour of his own name, which had been blaſphemed by the Syrians: and ye ſhall know that I am the Lord; both of hills and vallies, the omnipotent Jehovah, the only true God.

[c] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 14. §. 2. [d] Ibid. [e] Dii ſumus agreſtes, & qui dominemur in altis montibus——Ovid. Faſt. l. 3. [f] Vid. D. Herbert de Cherbury de relig. Gent. c. 12. p. 198. 112. [g] Adv. Gentes, l. 4. [h] Hiſt. l. 21. c. 38. [i] De Mort. Perſecutor. c. 11. p. 22. Vid. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 1. fab. 8. ℣. 320. Et numina montis adorant. See Ep. 4. ℣. 171. [k] Sophoclis Oedipus Tyr. ℣. 1110. [l] Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 35. [m] Brocard. & Breidenbach. in ib. [n] Travels, &c. p. 164. [o] Vid. Sozomen. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 5. [p] יבוא acceſſerat, Vatablus.

℣. 29. And they pitched one over againſt the other ſeven days, &c.] Very probably the Iſraelites pitched upon an hill, and the Syrians waited till they changed their poſition, not caring to fall upon them, though ſo very ſupernumerary to them, for the reaſon before given: and ſo it was, that in the ſeventh day the battle was joined; or they that made war drew nigh, as the Targum, and both ſides engaged in battle: and the children of Iſrael ſlew of the Syrians 100,000 footmen in one day; which was a prodigious ſlaughter to be made by ſo ſmall an army; the hand of the Lord was viſible in it.

℣. 30. But the reſt fled to Aphek, into the city, &c.] Which perhaps was in the hands of the Syrians, and was deſigned for a retreat for them, ſhould they be beaten: and there a wall fell upon 27,000 of the men that were left; not ſlain in the battle; here again the Lord might be ſeen, who, as Abarbinel obſerves, fought from heaven, and either by a violent wind, or an earthquake, threw down the wall upon them juſt as they had got under it for ſhelter: and Benhadad fled, and came into the city into an inner chamber; or, into a chamber within a chamber [q], for greater ſecrecy.

℣. 31. And his ſervants ſaid unto him, &c.] Being reduced to the utmoſt extremity; for if he attempted to go out of the city, he would fall into the hands of the Iſraelites, and there was no ſafety in it, the wall of it being fallen down; and it could not be thought he could be concealed long in the chamber where he was, wherefore his ſervants adviſed as follows: Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the houſe of Iſrael are merciful kings; not only the beſt of them, as David and Solomon, but even the worſt of them, in compariſon of heathen princes, were kind and humane to thoſe that fell into their hands, and became their captives: let us, I pray thee; ſo ſaid one in the name of the reſt: put ſackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads; and ſo coming in ſuch a mean and humble manner, and not with their armour on, they might the rather hope to have admittance; ſo the Syracuſans ſent ambaſſadors to Athens, in filthy garments, with the hair of their heads and beards long, and all in ſlovenly habits, to move their pity [r]: and go out to the king of Iſrael; and be humble ſupplicants to him: peradventure he will ſave thy life; upon a petition to him from him; to which the king agreed, and ſent it by them.

℣. 32. So they girded ſackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, &c.] Signifying they came to ſurrender themſelves to him as his captives and priſoners, and he might do with them as ſeemed good to him, hang them up if he pleaſed, for which they brought ropes with them, as a token that they deſerved it, ſee Iſ. xx. 2, 3, 4. and came to the king of Iſrael, and ſaid, Thy ſervant Benhadad ſaith, I pray thee let me live; he that a little while ago inſolently demanded his wives and children, and ſilver, and gold, as his property, now is his humble ſervant, and begs, not for his crown and kingdom, but for his life: and he ſaid, Is he yet alive? he is my brother; which was intimating at once, that not only they might expect he would ſpare his life, who ſeemed to be ſo glad that he was alive, but that he would ſhew him more favour, having a great affection for him as his brother; this was a very fooliſh expreſſion from a king in his circumſtances, with reſpect to one who had given him ſo much trouble and diſtreſs, and had behaved with ſo much haughtineſs and contempt towards him.

℣. 33. Now the men did diligently obſerve whether any thing would come from him, &c.] That would be a good omen to them, and encourage them to hope for ſucceſs; they obſerved him as diligently by his words and behaviour as ſoothſayers do, when they look out for a lucky ſign; for the word is ſometimes uſed of divining [s]: and did haſtily catch it; as ſoon as it was out of his mouth, and laid hold on it to improve it to advantage, being wiſer than him, and they ſaid, Thy brother Benhadad; him whom thou calleſt thy brother; he is thy brother, and is alive; this they catched at, and expreſſed it, to obſerve whether it was a ſlip of his tongue, and whether he ſpoke it heartily, and would abide by it, or whether he would retract it: then he ſaid, Go ye, bring him; meaning from the city to the place where he was: then Benhadad came forth to him; out of his chamber, upon the report of his ſervants; and he cauſed him to come up into the chariot; to ſit and converſe with him there.

℣. 34. And Benhadad ſaid unto him, &c.] The word Benhadad is not in the original text, and ſome, as Oſiander and others, have thought they are the words of Ahab laſt ſpoken of; which ſeems moſt likely, who not only took Benhadad into his chariot, but in his great and ſuperabundant kindneſs, though the conqueror, ſaid to him what follows: The cities which my father took from thy father, I will reſtore; that is, thoſe cities which Omri the father of Ahab had taken from the father of Benhadad; for as Omri was a prince of might and valour, ch. xvi. 16, 17, 18, 27. it is more probable that he took cities from the king of Syria, than that the king of Syria ſhould take any from him, and which Ahab in his circumſtances weakly promiſes to reſtore: and thou ſhalt make ſtreets for thee in Damaſcus, as my father made in Samaria; which confirms it that it is Ahab, and not Benhadad, that is ſpeaking; for Benhadad's father never had any power nor reſidence in Samaria, whereas Omri, the father of Ahab had, he built it, and made it his royal ſeat; and, in like manner, Ahab promiſes Benhadad that he ſhould have his palace at Damaſcus, the metropolis of Syria, and exerciſe power there, and over all Syria; whereby Ahab renounced all right he had to the kingdom, and any of the cities of it: for by ſtreets are not meant thoſe literally ſo called, for the making of which there was no reaſon; nor markets to take a toll from, as ſome, ſuppoſing them to be the words of Benhadad; nor courts of judicature, to oblige them to pay it who refuſed it, as others; nor fortreſſes to keep them in awe; but a royal palace, as a learned critic [t] has obſerved, for Benhadad to reſide in; this Ahab gave him power to erect, and added: and I will ſend thee away with this covenant; or promiſe now made: ſo he made a covenant with him; confirmed the above promiſes: and ſent him away; free, to enjoy his crown and kingdom, for which folly and weakneſs Ahab is reproved by a prophet, ℣. 42.

℣. 35.

[q] חדר בחדר cubiculo in cubiculum, Pagninus, Montanus. rati ſunt, Pagninus, Montanus, Munſter, Vatablus.

[r] Juſtin e Trogo, l. 4. c. 4.

[s] ינחשו augu-

[t] Vallandi Differt. ad 1 Reg. xx. 33, 34. Subſect. 2. §. 4.

℣. 35. And a certain man of the ſons of the prophets, &c.] Which the Jews take to be Micaiah, and ſo Joſephus [u], which is probable; the ſame that had been with Ahab more than once; and whoever he was, it is not unlikely that he was the ſame, ſince Ahab knew him when his diſguiſe was off, ℣. 41. ſaid unto his neighbour in the word of the Lord, Smite me, I pray thee; told his neighbour, that by the command of God he was ordered to bid him ſmite him, ſo as to wound him: and the man refuſed to ſmite him; being his neighbour, and perhaps a fellow-prophet, and having an affection for him.

℣. 36. Then ſaid he unto him, Becauſe thou haſt not obeyed the voice of the Lord, &c.] In not ſmiting him; which, if he was a prophet, he muſt know how great an evil it was to diſregard or diſobey what was ſaid by a prophet in his name; he muſt be inexcuſable: behold, as ſoon as thou art departed from me, a lion ſhall ſlay thee. And as ſoon as he was departed from him, a lion found him, and ſlew him; which may ſeem ſevere, yet being an act of diſobedience to the command of God, by a prophet of his, was puniſhable with death.

℣. 37. Then he found another man, and ſaid, Smite me, I pray thee, &c.] This is not ſaid to be his neighbour, nor one of the ſons of the prophets, but a ruſtic man, and ſo ſtuck not to take him at his word: and the man ſmote him, ſo that in ſmiting he wounded him; in his face; made ſome inciſion in his fleſh, broke the ſkin, and fetched blood of him; perhaps ſomewhere about his eyes, by what follows: this he got done to him, that he might look like a wounded ſoldier, and thereby get the more eaſily to the ſpeech of Ahab.

℣. 38. So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, &c.] As he went from Aphek, the place where the battle had been fought, to Samaria his royal ſeat: and diſguiſed himſelf with aſhes upon his face; the Targum is, he covered his eyes with a vail, or piece of cloth, which he wrapped about his head, as men do when they have got a wound or bruiſe in ſuch a part, which ſeems very probable; for had he beſmeared his face with aſhes, clay or duſt, or any ſuch thing, he could not ſo eaſily have got it off, as in ℣. 41.

℣. 39. And as the king paſſed by, he cried unto the king, &c.] With a loud voice, ſignifying he had ſomething to ſay unto him, at which he ſtopped: and he ſaid, thy ſervant went out into the midſt of the battle; this was not real but fictitious, an apologue, fable or parable, by which he would repreſent to Ahab his own caſe, and bring him under conviction of his folly, juſt as Nathan dealt with David: and behold, a man turned aſide; a ſuperior officer in the army: and brought a man unto me; he had made a priſoner of: and ſaid, keep this man; don't let him eſcape: if by any means he be miſſing, then ſhall thy life be for his life, or elſe thou ſhalt pay a talent of ſilver; if he let him go willingly, or by any means he ſhould get out of his hands, then he ſhould either die for it, or be fined a talent of ſilver, which of our money is 375 pounds; and to this it ſeems he agreed.

℣. 40. And as thy ſervant was buſy here and there, he was gone, &c.] Employed in one thing or another relative to the battle, his priſoner committed to his care made his eſcape: and the king of Iſrael ſaid unto him, ſo ſhall thy judgment be, thyſelf haſt decided it; the ſentence was plain and open againſt him, that either he muſt die, or pay the money, for he himſelf had agreed to it.

℣. 41. And he haſted, and took away the aſhes from his face, &c.] Took off the linen cloth from his eyes, unvailed or unmaſked himſelf: and the king of Iſrael diſcerned him that he was of the prophets; he knew him again, having ſeen him once or twice before; otherwiſe there could be nothing in his face that could diſcover him to be a prophet, rather he was to be known by his habit.

℣. 42. And he ſaid unto him, thus ſaith the Lord, &c.] He ſpake not his own ſenſe, and in his own words, but in the name of the Lord, for which he had authority, that it might have the greater weight with Ahab: becauſe thou haſt let go out of thy hand, a man whom I appointed to utter deſtruction; meaning Benhadad; or the man of my anathema or curſe [w]; curſed of God for his blaſphemy of him, and devoted by him to ruin on that account; or of my net [x], being by his providence brought into a net or nooſe at Aphek, out of which he could not have eſcaped had not Ahab let him go: therefore thy life ſhall go for his life; as it ſhortly did, and that by the hand of a Syrian ſoldier, ch. xxii. 34, 35. and thy people for his people; which was fulfilled by Hazael king of Syria, the ſins of Iſrael rendering them deſerving of the calamities they endured by his means, ſee 2 Kings viii. 12. and x. 32.

℣. 43. And the king of Iſrael went to his houſe heavy and diſpleaſed, &c.] With the prophet, for what he had ſaid, and with himſelf for what he had done in letting Benhadad go; the Targum is, he was "troubled and grieved," not ſo much for the ſin he had committed, as for the puniſhment of it on him and his people: and came to Samaria; with a heavy heart, for the meſſage of the prophet had ſpoiled the joy of his victory.

CHAP. XXI.

IN this chapter we have an account of Ahab's deſign to have Naboth's vineyard, for which he offered him another, or the value of that, but Naboth refuſing to part with it, Ahab fell ſick, ℣. 1—4. the reaſon of which being found out by Jezebel, ſhe deviſed means to get Naboth put to death under the colour of juſtice for blaſphemy, ℣. 5—14. and then bid Ahab go and take poſſeſſion of the vineyard, where he was met by Elijah, who denounced the judgments of God upon him, and Jezebel, and all his family, for his injuſtice, ℣. 15—26. but he humbling himſelf, the evil threatened was deferred to the days of his ſon, ℣. 27—29.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs after theſe things, &c.] After the two battles with the king of Syria, in which Ahab was victorious, and after he had let Benhadad, a blaſphemer, and injurious to him, go free: that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel; of which place ſee the note on Hoſ. i. 5. or who was in Jezreel; that is Naboth, [u] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 14. §. 5. ſome in Vatablus.

[w] איש חרמי vir anathematis mei, Montanus, Piſcator.

[x] Vir retis mei; ſo

both, for the vineyard was in Samaria, ℣. 18. hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria; that being the metropolis of the kingdom of Iſrael, is put for it, who beſides his palace in Samaria, had another in Jezreel; which, according to Bunting [y], were 16 miles diſtant from each other.

℣. 2. And Ahab ſpake unto Naboth, ſaying, give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, &c.] For a kitchen-garden to produce eatables of the vegetable kind for his houſhold, or for a flower-garden; and perhaps for both, as Kimchi obſerves, it being cuſtomary to have ſuch in court-yards, or behind the houſe; perhaps he might take his notion of a herb-garden from his neighbours the Syrians, who were very diligent and laborious in cultivating their gardens, as Pliny [z]; hence multa Syrorum olera, the many herbs of the Syrians became a proverb with the Greeks: becauſe it is near unto mine houſe; lay very convenient for him: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or if it ſeemeth good unto thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money; which ſeems very well ſpoken, that he would either give him a better in exchange, or purchaſe it at its full value; he did not pretend to take it by uſurpation, by force, againſt his will, as it was repreſented by Samuel kings would do, 1 Sam. viii. 14. as yet ſuch oppreſſion and tyranny was not exerciſed.

℣. 3. And Naboth ſaid to Ahab, the Lord forbid it me, that I ſhould give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.] The inheritances of families were not to be alienated to another family, or tribe, nor even to be ſold, unleſs in extreme poverty, and then to return at the year of jubilee, Lev. xxv. 23, 28. Now Naboth was a man in good circumſtances, and under no neceſſity of ſelling his vineyard; and if he ſold it, he might reaſonably conclude, it becoming a part of the royal demeſnes, would never revert to his family; and therefore both out of regard to the law of God, and the good of his family, would not part with it at any rate: this ſhews that he was a conſcientious man, and therefore is thought to be one of thoſe that would not bow his knee to Baal, and againſt whom Ahab had a grudge, and ſought an opportunity againſt him.

℣. 4. And Ahab came into his houſe heavy and diſpleaſed, &c.] Juſt in the ſame humour he was after the prophet had delivered his meſſage to him, ch. xx. 43. where the ſame words are uſed as here: becauſe of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had ſpoken to him, for he had ſaid, I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers; neither by way of exchange, nor of purchaſe; and ſuch a denial he could not bear, ſince it looked like treating him with contempt, and taxing him with imprudence at leaſt, if not with injuſtice, or both: and he laid him down upon his bed; or couch, which might be not in his bed-chamber, but in one of his halls, where his courtiers were: and turned away his face; to the wall, not chuſing to have converſation with any of his nobles: and would eat no bread; the vexation took away his ſtomach, and he became melancholy, at leaſt ſullen.

℣. 5. But Jezebel his wife came unto him, and ſaid, why is thy ſpirit ſo ſad, that thou eateſt no bread?] She perceived he was low ſpirited, and ſuppoſed he had met with ſomething that had ruffled him, and made him ſo uneaſy that he could not eat his food; and ſhe deſired to know what it was, that ſhe might relieve him if poſſible.

℣. 6. And he ſaid, becauſe I ſpake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and ſaid unto him, give me thy vineyard for money, &c.] Sell it him at his own price: or elſe if it pleaſe thee; if he liked it better: I will give thee another vineyard for it; as good, or better; and he anſwered, I will not give thee my vineyard; he repreſents this anſwer as ſurly and ill-natured, and as the effect of obſtinacy, concealing the reaſon Naboth alledged for his denial.

℣. 7. And Jezebel his wife ſaid unto him, doſt thou now govern the kingdom of Iſrael? &c.] Art thou not king of Iſrael? canſt thou not do as thou pleaſeſt? haſt thou not power to oblige a ſubject to obey thy commands, and eſpecially in ſuch a trifling matter as parting with a vineyard, and that upon the moſt reaſonable terms? thou haſt too much demeaned thyſelf as a king; thou oughteſt to have exerted thy kingly power and authority, and demanded it from him; the Targum is, "thou now ſhalt proſper in thy kingdom over Iſrael;" thy reign now is proſperous, and like to continue ſo, having obtained two ſuch victories over thine enemies, and therefore ſhould not be dejected with ſuch a trifling thing as this: ariſe, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry; the kingdom being in ſuch a flouriſhing ſtate; and let not this affair give thee any trouble or uneaſineſs; I'll take care of that, leave it with me: I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite; without paying any money, or giving another vineyard in exchange for it.

℣. 8. So ſhe wrote letters in Ahab's name, and ſealed them with his ſeal, &c.] He giving her leave no doubt to take his ſeal; though ſhe might not communicate her ſcheme to him, leſt he ſhould object to it: and ſent the letters unto the elders, and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth; to the chief magiſtrates of the city of Jezreel, where Naboth dwelt.

℣. 9. And ſhe wrote in the letters, ſaying, proclaim a faſt, &c.] Pretending fears of ſome dreadful calamity coming upon the nation, and therefore faſting and humiliation were neceſſary to avert it, and it would be right to enquire what crimes were committed by men among them, and puniſh them for them; and intimated to them, that Naboth ſhould be pitched upon as the great offender, and be accuſed, condemned, and put to death. R. Joſeph Kimchi [a] thinks, the phraſe ſignifies, call an aſſembly or congregation; convene a court of judicature, from the uſe of the word in the Talmudic language [b]; and ſo it is thought it is uſed in Jer. xxxvi. 6. and indeed it can hardly be thought that Jezebel ſhould have much notion of faſting; and beſides, if it was a public faſt, why ſhould it be proclaimed only in Jezreel, and not throughout the kingdom? and ſet Naboth on high among the people; the court being ſet, bring him to the bar and arraign him; perhaps in their courts of judicature there was a high place above the heads of the people, where criminals accuſed uſed to ſtand when they took their trials, that they might be ſeen and heard by all in court.

℣. 10. And ſet two men ſons of Belial before him, to bear witneſs againſt him, &c.] Worthleſs wretches, that have caſt off the yoke of the law, as Belial ſignifies, lawleſs, abandoned creatures, that have no conſcience of any thing; knights of the poſt, as we call them, that will ſwear any thing; theſe were to be ſet before Naboth, right againſt him to confront him, and accuſe him to his face, and charge charge him with crimes next mentioned: saying, thou didst blaspheme God and the king; and so was guilty of death for the former, if not for both, and of confiscation of estate for the latter, which was the thing aimed at; and Jezebel was willing to make sure work of it, and therefore would have him accused of both: and then carry him out, and stone him, that he die; immediately, without requiring the witnesses to give proof of their charge, and without giving Naboth leave to answer for himself.

[y] Travels, &c. p. 164. [z] Nat. Hiſt. l. 20. c. 5. [a] Apud David. Kimchium in loc. [b] Vid. Buxtorf. Talmud. Lexic. in rad. צמת.

℣. 11. And the men of the city, even the elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, &c.] That Jezebel should contrive so execrable a scheme, and that there should be such sons of Belial among the common people, to swear to such falshoods, need not seem strange; but that the elders and nobles of the city, the chief magistrates thereof, should be so sadly and universally depraved, as to execute such a piece of villainy, is really surprizing. Idolatry, when it prevails, takes away all sense of humanity and justice: and as it was written in the letter which she had sent unto them; they punctually, exactly obeyed the orders in them, as follows.

℣. 12. They proclaimed a fast, &c.] Or called a court, see on ℣. 9. and set Naboth on high among the people; placed him at the bar as a criminal, see the note on ℣. 9. though Josephus [c] thinks he was set on an high place in the court, because he was of an illustrious birth.

℣. 13. And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him, &c.] Which position shewed that they were his accusers, and had a charge against him; it being usual for the accusers and accused to be set face to face, as it was the manner of the Romans in after-times, Acts xxv. 16. Josephus says [d], there were three men to accuse him; but the Targum, and all the ancient versions, have only two: and the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people; both before the judges of the court, and before all the people that filled it, who came to hear the trial; so bold and impudent were they: saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king; or bless, an euphemism; the phrase of cursing God being shocking to the ear, and therefore such a word is used to express it, see Job i. 5. and ii. 9. then they carried him forth out of the city; without any farther process of examining witnesses, and of hearing what the accused had to say in his defence; but immediately they carried him out of court, and out of the city, to put him to death, malefactors being executed always without the city: and stoned him with stones that he died; which was the death blasphemers were put to, Lev. xxiv. 14, 23. of the manner of which, see the note on Acts vii. 58. it seems from 2 Kings ix. 26. that his sons were stoned with him.

℣. 14. Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead.] Not only stoned, but stoned to death. This message was sent to her from the magistrates of Jezreel; for tho' the letters came in Ahab's name, they might be privately informed that this was a scheme of Jezebel's; besides, they knew she had the sway at court, and especially that the news of this man's death would be acceptable to her, and the more if he was of the 7000 that would not bow the knee to Baal.

℣. 15. And it came to pass when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, &c.] To whom she communicated the news as soon as possible: arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money, for Naboth is not alive, but dead; some think that Naboth was a near relation to Ahab, his father's brother's son [e]; which they endeavour to support from his estate lying next to Ahab's, and from his being ordered to be set in an high place among the people; and Josephus, as before observed, says he was of illustrious descent; and so Ahab upon his death, his sons being also put to death with him, was next heir to his estate; and therefore Jezebel bid him enter on the possession of it, he being dead, and his sons also, and therefore there was nothing in his way to obstruct him: but rather her meaning is, that Naboth was dead, not of a natural but violent death, by the hand of the civil magistrate; as for blasphemy against God, so for treason against the king, in virtue of which his estate was forfeited to the crown, and that Ahab had a right to possess it; and so it was certainly adjudged in after-times however among the Jews, that if a man was condemned to die by the Sanhedrim, his goods came to his heirs, but if for treason against the king, they ceded to him [f].

℣. 16. And it came to pass when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, &c.] Of which he was informed by Jezebel: that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it; if it was in Jezreel, that was 16 miles from Samaria, and lay lower than that, in a valley, and therefore he is said to go down to it; and which he did very likely in great state and pomp, many of his nobles and captains accompanying him, as we read that Jehu and Bidkar did ride after him at this time, 2 Kings ix. 25.

℣. 17. And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the prophet, &c.] Where he now was, when this word came to him, is not certain; nor what he had been employed in for some time past, since we hear nothing of him since the unction of Elisha, other prophets of lesser note being employed in messages to Ahab from time to time; perhaps Elijah, whilst Ahab was engaged in war with the king of Syria, spent his time in founding or reviving the schools of the prophets, and instructing and training up those that were in them for public usefulness, since we afterwards hear of them; the word that came to him is, by the Targum, called the word of prophecy, as indeed it was, foretelling the destruction of Ahab and his house: saying; as follows.

℣. 18. Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, which is in Samaria, &c.] Whose seat was there, his palace where he dwelt; and Benjamin of Tudela says [g], that in his time might be discerned in Samaria the palace of Ahab king of Israel, that is, some traces of it; some connect the last clause with Israel, as if the sense was, that Ahab was king over those tribes of Israel, of which Samaria was the head: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth; or will be by the time thou gettest thither; though the the Arabic version is, he is now in the vineyard of Naboth: whither he is gone down to poſſeſs it; as if it was his legal inheritance.

[c] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 13. §. 8. [d] Ibid. [e] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 48. 2. [f] Sanhed. ib. [g] Itinerar. p. 38.

℣. 19. And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto him, ſaying, thus ſaith the Lord, haſt thou killed, and alſo taken poſſeſſion? &c.] Killed in order to poſſeſs, and now taken poſſeſſion upon the murder; ſome verſions, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic, read without an interrogation, thou haſt killed and haſt taken poſſeſſion, ſo Joſeph Kimchi and Ben Melech; charging him with the murder of Naboth, and the unjuſt poſſeſſion of his vineyard; the murder is aſcribed to him, becauſe his covetouſneſs was the cauſe of it; and it was done by the contrivance of his wife; and it is highly probable Ahab knew more of it, and connived at it, and conſented to it, than what is recorded, and however by taking poſſeſſion upon it, he abetted the fact: and thou ſhalt ſpeak unto him, ſaying, in the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, ſhall dogs lick thy blood, even thine; which was fulfilled in his ſons, who was his fleſh and blood. 2 Kings ix. 26. for the puniſhment was reſpited in his days, and transferred to his ſons, ſee ℣. 29. though dogs did lick his blood, even his blood alſo, according to this prophecy, tho' not in the ſame place, ſee ch. xxii. 38. wherefore ſome take theſe words not to be expreſſive of the place where, but of the cauſe or reaſon for which this ſhould be done, and read the words, inaſmuch, or becauſe dogs have licked[h], &c.

℣. 20. And Ahab ſaid to Elijah, haſt thou found me, O mine enemy, &c.] So he reckoned him, becauſe he dealt faithfully with him, and reproved him for his ſins, and denounced the judgments of God upon him for them: and he anſwered, I have found thee; as a thief, a robber and plunderer in another's vineyard; he had found out his ſin in murdering Naboth, and unjuſtly poſſeſſing his vineyard, which was revealed to him by the Lord; and now was come as his enemy, as he called him, as being againſt him, his adverſary, not that he hated his perſon, but his ways and works: becauſe thou haſt ſold thyſelf to work evil in the ſight of the Lord; had given up himſelf wholly to his luſts, was abandoned to them, and as much under the power of them, as a man is that has ſold himſelf to another to be his ſlave; and which he ſerved openly, publickly in the ſight of the omniſcient God, and in defiance of him. Abarbinel gives another ſenſe of the word we render, ſold thyſelf, that he made himſelf ſtrange, as if he was ignorant, and did not know what Jezebel had done; whereas he knew fully the whole truth of the matter, and that Naboth was killed through her contrivance, and by her management purpoſely; and ſo he did evil in the ſight of that God that knows all things, pretending he was ignorant when he was not, and this Elijah found out by divine revelation; ſo the word is uſed in Gen. xlii. 6. ſee 2 Kings xii. 5, 7. but the former ſenſe is beſt, as appears from ℣. 25.

℣. 21. Behold, I will bring evil upon thee, &c.] Upon his own perſon, by cutting him off with a violent death, though his family was ſo numerous, having no leſs than 70 ſons: and will cut off from Ahab him that piſſeth againſt the wall, and him that is ſhut and left in Iſrael; ſee the note on ch. xiv. 10.

℣. 22. And will make thine houſe like the houſe of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, and like the houſe of Baaſha the ſon of Ahijah, &c.] Two of his predeceſſors, whoſe families were utterly deſtroyed, ch. xv. 29. and xvi. 11. for the provocation wherewith thou haſt provoked me to anger, and made Iſrael to ſin; not only by his worſhip of the calves, but of the idols of the Zidonians, particularly Baal, and alſo of the Amorites, ℣. 26.

℣. 23. And of Jezebel alſo ſpake the Lord, &c.] To Elijah, and by him: ſaying, the dogs ſhall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel; or in the inheritance or portion of Jezreel, as the Targum; Jarchi interprets it, the valley of Jezreel; the fulfilment of this, ſee in 2 Kings ix. 30, 33, 36.

℣. 24. Him that dieth of Ahab in the city the dogs ſhall eat, and him that dieth in the field, the fowls of the air ſhall eat.] That is, they ſhall have no burial, ſee ch. xiv. 11. and xvi. 4. hitherto are the words of the Lord by Elijah; next follow the remarks of the hiſtorian.

℣. 25. But there was none like unto Ahab, which did ſell himſelf to work wickedneſs in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Not of any of his predeceſſors, even thoſe whoſe families had been deſtroyed, as his would be, ℣. 21. ſee the note on ℣. 20. whom Jezebel his wife ſtirred up; to idolatry, revenge and murder, and to whoſe will he was a ſlave, and is one inſtance of his being a captive to ſin, and giving up himſelf to the power of it.

℣. 26. And he did very abominably in following idols, &c.] Which were abominable to the Lord; dungill gods, as the Tigurine verſion: according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the Lord caſt out before the children of Iſrael; meaning the ſeven nations that formerly inhabited Canaan, but were driven out for their ſins, to make way for the children of Iſrael, of which the Amorites were one, and here put for all the reſt.

℣. 27. And it came to paſs when Ahab heard theſe words, &c.] Delivered, in ℣. 21—24. that he rent his clothes, and put ſackcloth upon his fleſh; tore off his clothes, and ſtript himſelf of all, even of his very ſhirt, and put ſackcloth on his bare fleſh, a coarſe cloth made of hair, and ſuch as ſacks are made with: and faſted; how long, it is not ſaid: and lay in ſackcloth; in the night on his bed, would have no linen on him day nor night: and went ſoftly; ſtep by ſtep, as perſons mourning, grieving and penſive do; the Targum renders it barefoot, and ſo Jarchi.

℣. 28. And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tiſhbite, &c.] After he was gone from Ahab, and Ahab had been ſome time in this humble poſture; the Targum calls it the word of prophecy, and ſo it was, as the next verſe ſhews: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 29. Seeſt thou how Ahab humbleth himſelf before me? &c.] Which yet was but an external humiliation, to be ſeen only with bodily eyes, as were all his actions and poſtures, before obſerved. Some Jewiſh writers [i] think, his repentance was true and perfect, and his converſion thorough and real: they tell us [k], that he was in faſting and prayer morning and evening before the Lord, and was ſtudying in the law all his days, and returned not to his evil works any more, and his repentance was accepted: but the contrary appears manifeſt; we never read that he reproved Jezebel for the murder of Naboth, nor reſtored the vineyard to his family, which he would have done, had he been a true penitent; nor did he leave his idols; we quickly quickly hear of his conſulting with the 400 prophets of the groves, and expreſſing his hatred of a true prophet of the Lord, ch. xxii. 6, 8. his humiliation aroſe from dread of puniſhment, and not from the true fear of God; however, it was ſuch as was never ſeen in any of his wicked predeceſſors, and is taken notice of by the Lord. Luther[l] from theſe words concluded, and was perſuaded, that he was ſaved: becauſe he humbled himſelf before me, I will not bring the evil in his days, but in his ſon's days will I bring the evil upon his houſe; this was not a pardon, only a reprieve; the ſentence pronounced on him and his family was not taken off, nor countermanded, only the execution of it prolonged; it is promiſed, that the deſtruction of his family ſhould not be in his life-time, but after his death, in his ſon's days, otherwiſe he himſelf died a violent death, and the dogs licked his blood, as were foretold; however, this may be an encouragement to thoſe who are truly humbled for their ſins, and really repent of them, that they ſhall receive forgiveneſs at the hand of God, ſince he ſhewed ſo much regard to an outward humiliation and repentance.

[h] במקום אשר pro eo quod, Junius & Tremellius; propterea quod, Grotius; ſo ſome in Vatablus. Bereſhit Rabba in Abarbinel in loc.

[k] Pirke Eliezer, c. 43.

[i]

CHAP. XXII.

THIS chapter relates, that after three years peace with the king of Syria, Ahab was inclined to go to war with him, to take Ramoth-Gilead out of his hands; and he drew in Jehoſhaphat, king of Judah, to join him in it, ℣. 1—4. but before they went into it, they took advice, Ahab, of his 400 prophets, which Jehoſhaphat not being ſatisfied with, a true prophet of the Lord, Micaiah, was ſent for, ℣. 5—14. who, when he came, jeered Ahab with what his prophets had ſaid to him; intimated that he ſhould be killed, and explained it to him how he came to be deceived by his prophets, ℣. 15—23. upon which he was ſmitten on the cheek by Zedekiah, one of the falſe prophets, and impriſoned by the order of Ahab, ℣. 24—28. after which the two kings went to the battle, and Jehoſhaphat was in great danger of his life; but Ahab was wounded and died, ℣. 29—40. and the chapter is concluded with an account of the reign of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, ℣. 41—50. and of Ahaziah king of Iſrael, ℣. 51, 52, 53.

℣. 1. And they continued three years without war between Syria and Iſrael.] From the time that Benhadad made a covenant with Ahab; not three full years, but part of them: it was threatened by Elijah from the Lord, that Ahab's life ſhould go for Benhadad's, becauſe he had let him go, ch. xx. 42. but becauſe of his humiliation, as is thought by Ben Gerſom and others, it was reſpited for thoſe three years; and now an opportunity and occaſion would be given for the fulfilment of what was threatened.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs in the third year, &c.] Of the peace, before it was expired: that Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah came down to the king of Iſrael; to Ahab, from Jeruſalem to Samaria, reckoned 32 miles[m]; either to make peace with him, and put an end to the wars which ſubſiſted between Iſrael and Judah ſince the diviſion of the kingdom, ℣. 44. or to contract an affinity with him, by marrying his ſon to a daughter of Ahab, 2 Kings viii. 18. 26. or rather after peace was made, and that ſtrengthened by the marriage; and ſo he went merely to pay a viſit, as he judged he might then with great ſafety; and he and all his retinue were entertained by Ahab in a very ſumptuous and liberal manner, 2 Chron. xviii. 1, 2.

℣. 3. (And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto his ſervants, &c.] His nobles, thoſe of his privy-council, his miniſters of ſtate; or had ſaid[n], ſome little time before Jehoſhaphat came: Know ye that Ramoth in Gilead is ours; a city of refuge beyond Jordan, in the tribe of Gad, and ſo of courſe muſt belong to the kingdom of Iſrael, of which ſee Joſh. xx. 8. and we be ſtill, and take it not out of the hand of the king of Syria?) neither demand it, nor take any meaſures to oblige him to deliver it up; repreſenting it as a great omiſſion, and as a piece of negligence and ſlothfulneſs, or cowardice.

℣. 4. And he ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, Wilt thou go with me to battle to Ramoth-gilead? &c,] This affair being lately canvaſſed at the council-board, and very much on Ahab's mind, he puts this queſtion to Jehoſhaphat, his viſiter, relation, and ally; wiſely conſidering that his own forces were ſmall, and that to have ſuch an auxiliary might be of great advantage to him: and Jehoſhaphat ſaid to the king of Iſrael, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horſes as thy horſes; meaning, that he and his ſoldiers, foot and horſe, were at his ſervice.

℣. 5. And Jehoſhaphat ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the Lord to-day.] Being a pious and religious prince, he did not chuſe to go into a war at once, without conſulting the Lord by his prophets, whether it was his will and pleaſure they ſhould engage in it, and ſhould proſper; and he was deſirous of having this done immediately before they proceeded any farther.

℣. 6. Then the king of Iſrael gathered the prophets together, about 400 men, &c.] Falſe prophets, as the Targum and Arabic verſion; and they are called Ahab's prophets, and not the Lord's, ℣. 23. perhaps theſe were the prophets of the groves, that eat at Jezebel's table, and were preſerved when the prophets of Baal were deſtroyed, ſince the number agrees with them, ſee ch. xviii. 19. and ſaid unto them, Shall I go againſt Ramoth-gilead to battle, or ſhall I forbear? which would you adviſe to? ſignifying he ſhould take their advice: and they ſaid, Go up; for the Lord ſhall deliver it into the hand of the king; which words are very ambiguous, like the oracles of the heathens; for they do not expreſs who or what ſhould be delivered up, for the word it is a ſupplement, nor to what king the delivery ſhould be made; whether the Syrians, and the place they held, ſhould be given up to king Ahab, which they would have underſtood; or whether the Iſraelites ſhould be delivered up to king Benhadad; ſo that which ever had been the caſe, the credit of their prophecy would be ſecured. They uſed the word Lord, and not Baal, in complaiſance to Jehoſhaphat, and perhaps as directed by Ahab.

℣. 7. And Jehoſhaphat ſaid, Is there not here a prophet of the Lord beſides, that we might enquire of him?] He ſuſpected theſe to be falſe prophets, though he would not call them ſo; nor ſuggeſt that they were not the prophets of the Lord, becauſe he would

[l] Menſal. Colloqu. c. 32. p. 360.
[m] Bunting's Travels, &c. p. 178. near 40, Rainold. Prælect. 31. col. 266.
[n] ויאמר et dixerat, Junius & Tremellius.

would not affront Ahab, who had an opinion of them; and therefore aſks, if there were no other that went under the character of a prophet of the Lord, that he might enquire of him for his farther ſatisfaction.

℣. 8. And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, There is yet one man (Micaiah the ſon of Imlah) by whom we may enquire of the Lord, &c.] And but one in Samaria; Elijah and Eliſha were elſewhere: but I hate him, for he doth not propheſy of good concerning me, but evil; who is thought to be the ſame that was ſeveral times with him when engaged in the war with the king of Syria, ch. xx. 13. 22. 28. 35. 38. and each time, excepting the laſt, he brought him good tidings; but becauſe, in his laſt meſſage, he told him, that ſince he had let Benhadad go, his life ſhould go for his life, and his people for his people, for that he hated him: and Jehoſhaphat ſaid, Let not the king ſay ſo; which was very modeſtly, though perhaps too gently ſaid; ſuggeſting that the prophets of the Lord ſhould be heard, reſpected, and honoured, let their meſſage be as it would, ſince they ſpake not of their own mind and will, but what they were moved unto by the ſpirit of God.

℣. 9. Then the king of Iſrael called an officer, &c.] An eunuch, as the word is ſometimes uſed, one of his pages: and ſaid, Haſten hither Micaiah the ſon of Imlah; who, as it ſeems from ℣. 26. was in priſon, where perhaps Ahab had caſt him for his laſt prophecy to him, and where he had lain ever ſince; and this gives a reaſon why he could ſo readily ſend for him, knowing where he was.

℣. 10. And the king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah ſat each on his throne, &c.] In great ſtate and majeſty; having put on their robes; their royal robes, which they wore when they appeared in pomp and grandeur: in a void place in the entrance of the gate of Samaria; where courts of judicature were held, and there was an open void ſpace for the people to aſſemble in to hear; the word has the ſignification of a corn-floor, and the Jews ſuppoſe they and their attendants ſat in a ſemicircle like the half of a corn-floor, after the ſame manner in which they ſay the Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem ſat [o]: and all the prophets propheſied before them; concerning this affair of going to Ramoth-gilead.

℣. 11. And Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah made him horns of iron, &c.] Horns are emblems of power and might, and iron ones of greater ſtrength ſtill; the prophets ſometimes made uſe of viſible ſigns, to repreſent the things they propheſied of ſhould come to paſs, ſee Iſ. xx. 2, 3. Jer. xxvii. 2. and the ſame method this prophet took: and he ſaith, Thus ſaith the Lord; imitating the true prophets: With theſe ſhalt thou puſh the Syrians, until thou haſt conſumed them; Abarbinel thinks he had in view the bleſſing of Joſeph by Moſes, Deut. xxxiii. 17. where he is compared to a bullock with horns; and theſe ſaid to be the ten thouſands of Ephraim, and the thouſands of Manaſſeh, and Ahab being of the tribe of Joſeph, and ruling in Ephraim and Manaſſeh, the prophet choſe to make uſe of this emblem for his encouragement.

℣. 12. And all the prophets propheſied ſo, ſaying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and proſper, &c.] All encouraged the king to go up againſt this place, and propheſied of victory, as Zedekiah did: for the Lord ſhall deliver it into the king's hand, ſee the note on ℣. 6.

℣. 13. And the meſſenger that was gone to call Micaiah, ſpake unto him, &c.] By the way, as they came along together, as Joſephus [p] obſerves: Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth; they are unanimous that he ſhall proſper in his undertaking againſt the Syrians: let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and ſpeak that which is good; which, as an ignorant man, he might adviſe to from good will to the prophet, that he might not be branded with ſingularity, and a ſpirit of contradiction, and that he might have the favour of the king, and be releaſed from priſon, pitying his miſerable condition in which he found him.

℣. 14. And Micaiah ſaid, As the Lord liveth, &c.] He ſwore by the living God for the confirmation of what he was about to ſay: what the Lord ſaith unto me, that will I ſpeak; truly and faithfully, keeping nothing back, nor adding any thing, whether it be good or evil, pleaſing or diſpleaſing; it looks as if as yet he had no inſtruction from the Lord what to ſay, and yet the viſion he after declares ſeems to have been had by him before, ℣. 17. 19.

℣. 15. So he came to the king, &c.] Being introduced by the officer: and the king ſaid unto him, Micaiah, ſhall we go up againſt Ramoth-gilead to battle, or ſhall we forbear? the ſame queſtion in the ſame words that was put to the other prophets, ℣. 6. only there he uſes the ſingular number, here the plural, including Jehoſhaphat with him: and he anſwered him, Go, and proſper: for the Lord ſhall deliver it into the hand of the king; he anſwered not in the name of the Lord, ſaying, thus ſaith the Lord, nor did he ſpeak his own ſenſe and in his own words, nor ſeriouſly, but by way of deriſion; he took up the words of the prophets, and bantered them; it is as if he ſhould ſay, the prophets bid you go, and tell you that you ſhall proſper, and that the city will be delivered into the king's hand; do as they direct you, and ſee what the iſſue will be, no doubt it will be good, ſince they are all agreed; but he delivered the above words with ſuch geſtures, and ſuch a tone, and with a contemptuous ſmile in his countenance, which ſhowed that he ſpoke not ſeriouſly, but ſarcaſtically; and this the king plainly diſcovered, as appears by what follows.

℣. 16. And the king ſaid unto him, How many times ſhall I adjure thee, &c.] Not that he had as yet adjured him at all, or not till now; but he aſks him how often he muſt be obliged to do it; and now he adjures him once for all, that he might not be forced to repeat it: that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the Lord? for he obſerved he did not ſpeak in the name of the Lord before, and what he ſaid was not in a ſerious but ludicrous manner, and not to be regarded as truth.

℣. 17. And he ſaid, &c.] The prophet, in a ſerious and ſolemn manner, being adjured by the king: I ſaw all Iſrael ſcattered on the hills, as ſheep that have not a ſhepherd; the armies of Iſrael routed, diſperſed, and fleeing, ſome one way and ſome another, on the mountains of Gilead near Ramoth, weak and helpleſs, not knowing where to go for ſafety, having none to direct them; and this was either now inſtantly repreſented to his mind, or what had been before in a dream or viſion: and the Lord ſaid, Theſe have no maſter; theſe ſheep have no ſhepherd, this army hath no general, Iſrael has loſt its king: let them return every man to his houſe

[o] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 5. 1. Vid. Kimchium in loc.

[p] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 15. §. 4.

houſe in peace; very few ſlain; Jarchi thinks Ahab only, ſee ℣. 31. that part of the threaning, ch. xx. 42. was now to be accompliſhed, thy life ſhall go for his life; but the other part, and thy people for his people, was to be deferred to another time.

℣. 18. And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, &c.] Plainly perceiving that the prophet foretold that he ſhould fall in battle: Did I not tell thee, that he would propheſy no good concerning me, but evil? intimating that this proceeded from ſpite and malice, from ill-will to him and hatred of him, and was not from the Lord, and therefore not to be regarded; he had told him three years ago his life ſhould go for letting Benhadad go; but it had not proved true, and no more would this; and Jehoſhaphat being an eaſy man, and too credulous, believed what Ahab ſaid of the character of this prophet, or otherwiſe it is not to be accounted for, that he ſhould go with him to war after ſuch a declaration made.

℣. 19. And he ſaith, Hear thou therefore the word of the Lord, &c.] Since he had repreſented what he had ſaid, as proceeding from hatred to him, he would make it clear and plain, that what he had ſaid was the word of the Lord, and according to his mind; and that what the other prophets had ſaid was owing to a lying ſpirit in them, which the Lord ſuffered for his ruin; all which are repreſented as in a viſion, in which things are brought down to the capacities of men, and not as really tranſacted: I ſaw the Lord ſitting on his throne; ſo it was repreſented to his mind, as if he had ſeen with his bodily eyes the divine being in a glorious form, as a king ſitting on his throne, to do juſtice and judgment; as Ahab and Jehoſhaphat were now ſitting on their thrones, only as a far greater king, even the King of kings, and in a more ſplendid manner: and all the hoſt of heaven ſtanding by him, on his right hand, and on his left; the miniſtring angels ready to do his will.

℣. 20. And the Lord ſaid, Who ſhall perſwade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? &c.] Not that it can be ſuppoſed that the Lord entered into a conſultation with the angels upon this ſubject; only that it was the decree of God that he ſhould go thither, and fall by the hand of the man whom he had let go, as a juſt puniſhment of him: and one ſaid on this manner, and another ſaid on that manner; not that there was ſuch an altercation among them; it only ſignifies, that there are divers ways and means, by which the purpoſes and decrees of God may be and are brought about.

℣. 21. And there came forth a ſpirit, &c.] Not from the heavenly hoſt on the right hand or the left, for they are pure and holy ſpirits, and impeccable, and cannot lie or deceive; but the evil ſpirit, Satan, the father of lies, the old deceiver, who came forth from his own place and his own company: and ſtood before the Lord; preſented himſelf before him, as Satan did, Job i. 6. and ſaid, I will perſwade him; or prevail upon him; evil ſpirits love to be employed in doing hurt to men, they go about ſeeking whom they may devour. This could not be the ſpirit of Naboth, as the Jews ſay [q], ſeeking revenge on Ahab; that was in a ſtate of happineſs, could not move from thence, and be capable of ſinning.

℣. 22. And the Lord ſaid unto him, Wherewith? &c.] What way and method did he propoſe, to perſwade Ahab to go up to Ramoth? the Lord is introduced in this viſionary narrative as aſking this queſtion, not as ignorant of the ſcheme of the evil ſpirit, but in order to bring it out, and lead on to the following account: and he ſaid, I will go forth, and I will be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all his prophets; put them on encouraging Ahab to go up, and promiſing him ſucceſs, as he had in former battles with the king of Syria, and which might both encourage them to give forth ſuch a prediction, and him to believe it to be true; this propoſal was quite agreeable to the character of the devil, as the father of lies: and he ſaid, Thou ſhalt perſwade him, and prevail alſo; not only make uſe of this artifice to perſwade, but ſucceed alſo; the Lord knew that what he ſhould ſuggeſt to the prophets, and they ſhould deliver to Ahab, would be agreeable to his inclination, nor would he do any thing in the courſe of his providence to hinder its taking effect: go forth, and do ſo; which was giving leave to try his ſkill in the art of perſuaſion, in which he knew he would ſucceed, and bring on the righteous judgment of God upon Ahab; with this compare John xiii. 27.

℣. 23. Now therefore behold, the Lord hath put a lying ſpirit in the mouths of all theſe thy prophets, &c.] That is, ſuffered the lying ſpirit to ſuggeſt a lie to them, and ſent them ſtrong deluſions to believe that lie, whoſe minds were diſpoſed at any rate to flatter Ahab, to whom they told it; which was the way deſigned to bring him to the ruin appointed for him: and the Lord hath ſpoken evil concerning thee; he had decreed it in himſelf, declared it by Micaiah his prophet, and ſuffered all thoſe ſteps to be taken by Satan and the falſe prophets, to bring him to it

℣. 24. But Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah went near, &c.] Stept in haſte and paſſion from the place where he was: and ſmote Micaiah on the cheek; in contempt of him, and to ſhew his indignation at what he ſaid; this he did in open court, before two kings; one he believed would favour and ſcreen him in this lawleſs action, and the other, out of his own juriſdiction, had not courage and preſence of mind to reſent it: and ſaid, Which way went the ſpirit of the Lord from me to ſpeak unto thee? hereby boaſting that he had the ſpirit of the Lord, and was directed by him in what he ſaid, and ſtill remained with him, and could not poſſibly go to Micaiah, and ſuggeſt the very reverſe; and therefore pertly aſks him which way the ſpirit went, intimating that it was impoſſible he could ſteer a courſe contrary to himſelf.

℣. 25. And Micaiah ſaid, Behold, thou ſhalt ſee in the day when thou ſhalt go into an inner chamber to hide thyſelf.] Who would either accompany Ahab to the battle, and upon his being wounded, flee to the firſt place of ſecrecy for ſafety; or upon the news of his defeat brought to Samaria, would betake himſelf to a private chamber for ſecurity, fearing the enemy would purſue to the very place; or elſe through fear of the populace, who would attribute the death of the king to the advice of him and the other prophets.

℣. 26. And the king of Iſrael ſaid, &c.] To ſome of his officers: Take Micaiah, and carry him back unto Amon the governor of the city; the chief magiſtrate under the king; a ſort of ſheriff, who had the care of malefactors, and of all committed to priſon, from whom he was received by the meſſenger, ſenger, and now ſent back to him: and to Joaſh the king's ſon; who might be over his houſhold, as ſometimes the king's ſon was, 2 Chron. xxvi. 21. or might be viceroy whilſt the king was without the city, and at the gate of it, and about to go to war.

[q] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 89. 1. & 102. 2. Targum in 2 Chron. xviii. 20.

℣. 27. And ſay, Thus ſaith the king, Put this fellow in priſon, &c.] In the common priſon of the city, where he had been before, as it ſeems; and might be now ordered into a more confined place in it, and what might be called little eaſe: and feed him with bread of affliction, and with water of affliction; with bad bread and foul water, and but little of either; juſt enough to keep alive and to continue ſtarving: until I come in peace; which he ſeemed confident of, and intimates, that then he would puniſh him more ſeverely, even with death, as a falſe prophet.

℣. 28. And Micaiah ſaid, If thou return at all in peace, the Lord hath not ſpoken by me, &c.] I am content to be reckoned a falſe prophet, and to be puniſhed as ſuch: and he ſaid, Hearken, O people, every one of you; he called aloud unto them, to obſerve what he had predicted, and mark the iſſue of it, and bear teſtimony for him, or againſt him, as things ſhould be.

℣. 29. So the king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-gilead.] Which, according to Bunting [r], was 24 miles from Samaria. That Ahab went is no wonder, it was his own motion firſt, his inclination led to it, his prophets encouraged him, and in bravado to the prophet of the Lord, was determined upon it; but it may ſeem much more ſtrange that Jehoſhaphat ſhould, after ſuch an account as Micaiah had given, and who, doubtleſs, could obſerve a great difference between him and the prophets of Ahab; and yet there is much to be ſaid which might incline him to go, as that there were 400 prophets all agreed, and who made uſe of the name of the Lord, and pretended to be true prophets; and though he might ſuſpect them, he could not confute them; and Micaiah, he propheſied evil of Ahab only, and therefore Jehoſhaphat might think himſelf ſafe in going; and beſides, he had given his word to Ahab, and he did not chuſe to go from it; to which may be added, that Ahab's cauſe was juſt, to recover a part of his own dominions.

℣. 30. And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, I will diſguiſe myſelf, and enter into the battle, &c.] Change his clothes, his royal robes, and put on others, perhaps the habit of a common ſoldier; having, it may be, been informed by ſome deſerters or ſpies, of the deſign of Benhadad againſt him. Abarbinel thinks the meaning is, that he would clothe himſelf with a coat of mail, and take to him the ſeveral inſtruments of war, and ſo go into the battle ſecure; this ſeems probable from ℣. 34. and this he might do to elude the propheſy of Micaiah: but put thou on thy robes; his royal robes, or rather keep them on, that he might appear to be the chief commander of the army. There ſeems to be a good deal of inſincerity and treachery in this conduct of Ahab's, whatever honour he might pretend to Jehoſhaphat, or ſafety he might promiſe him in ſuch a ſituation; his view ſeems to be to ſave himſelf at the hazard of the life of Jehoſhaphat, eſpecially if the Septuagint verſion could be eſtabliſhed, and put on my clothes; which is natural enough, but would have been too barefaced: and the king of Iſrael diſguiſed himſelf, and went into the battle; as if he had been a common ſoldier.

℣. 31. But the king of Syria commanded his 32 captains that had rule over his chariots, &c.] This was the number of his kings in the firſt battle with Iſrael, and of his captains in the ſecond, ch. xx. 1, 24, 25. and the ſame number he had now, being very probably not only the number of his chariots, but the diviſion of his army was into ſo many battalions, under the command of theſe captains of chariots: ſaying, fight neither with ſmall nor great; of thoſe that belonged to Jehoſhaphat: ſave only with the king of Iſrael; and his men; for it can hardly be thought that his orders were to fight with none, nor kill any in the battle but Ahab perſonally; though it is very probable he might give them directions to aim at him chiefly, knowing that if he was killed or taken, his army would flee or ſurrender; and he might be deſirous of getting him into his hands, as he had been in his; and the rather his ſpite was againſt him, as he was the mover of the war.

℣. 32. And it came to paſs when the captains of the chariots ſaw Jehoſhaphat, &c.] In his royal robes: that they ſaid, ſurely it is the king of Iſrael; for they might not know the perſons either of Ahab or him, but judged by his habit: and they turned aſide to fight againſt him; preſſed upon him with all their force, either to take him, or ſlay him: and Jehoſhaphat cried out; with a loud voice, either to the captains to let them know who he was, or to his men to come to his aſſiſtance, or rather to God to help and deliver him; ſince it is ſaid in 2 Chron. xviii. 31. that the Lord helped him, and moved or inclined the hearts of the captains to depart from him, as it follows here.

℣. 33. And it came to paſs when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Iſrael, &c.] Againſt whom only their orders were to fight: that they turned back from purſuing him; for upon ſo great a force coming upon him he could not withſtand, he fled.

℣. 34. And a certain man drew a bow at a venture, &c.] Not aiming at the king of Iſrael, or knowing whereabout he was. In the Targum on 2 Chron. xviii. 33. this man is ſaid to be Naaman, the general of the army of the king of Syria, and ſo Jarchi here; but though he did this in his ſimplicity, as the word ſignifies, without any intention to ſmite any particular perſon; yet God directed the arrow to the man he had marked for deſtruction, and neither his diſguiſe, nor coat of mail, could ſecure from that: and ſmote the king of Iſrael between the joints of the harneſs; of which the pieces of armour on him were joined together, the higher and lower parts of it, the breaſt-plate, and what covered the belly; and though theſe were joined as cloſe as they were capable of joining them in thoſe times, yet the arrow, guided by divine providence, found its way into his body: wherefore he ſaid unto the driver of his chariot, turn thine hand; or hands, with which he held the reins, and turn the horſes on one ſide: and carry me out of the hoſt; where the battle was hotteſt, to a place more remote and private, that he might have the wound examined, and the blood ſtopped, and return again, as it ſeems he did: for I am wounded; or rather I am ſick [s], or ill, as the Targum; ſomewhat out of order, and therefore choſe to retire a little while; not caring it ſhould be known known that he was ſmitten and wounded, leſt his ſoldiers ſhould be diſheartened.

5

[r] Trave's, &c. p. 178.

[s] החליתי ægrotare factus ſum, Vatablus; ægrotus factus ſum, Junius & Tremellius.

℣. 35. And the battle increaſed that day, &c.] It went on, and did not ſtop upon Ahab's going out of the hoſt, but was very hot, and both ſides fought furiouſly: and the king was ſtayed up in his chariot againſt the Syrians; the Targum is, "he ſtrengthened himſelf, and ſtood;" he exerted himſelf to the uttermoſt, and ſtood as long as he could, or could be ſupported, fighting againſt the Syrians, to animate his army, and that the Syrians might not have any notion of his being wounded: and died at even; in his chariot: and the blood ran out of the wound into the midſt of the chariot; or boſom [t] of it, the hollow part of it.

℣. 36. And there went a proclamation throughout the hoſt, about the going down of the ſun, &c.] Much about the time that Ahab died; and this proclamation by an herald might be made by his order, as he was dying; or by Jehoſhaphat, when he underſtood he was dead: ſaying, every man to his city, and every man to his own country; the order was to ceaſe fighting, and make the beſt of their way as faſt as they could to their own homes, ſince their ſhepherd and maſter was dead, which fulfilled the viſion of Micaiah, ℣. 17. It ſeems to have been a drawn battle, at leaſt there is no account of the advantage on either ſide.

℣. 37. So the king died, and they brought him to Samaria, &c.] In the chariot he died in: and they buried the king in Samaria; where his father Omri was buried, ch. xvi. 28.

℣. 38. And one waſhed the chariot in the pool of Samaria, &c.] After the body was taken out, very likely the chariot-driver, who drove it into the pool, and plunged it into it, as the word ſignifies, to cleanſe it from the blood of his maſter: and the dogs licked up his blood; mixed with the water of the pool; the Septuagint adds, the ſwine, which is not probable, ſuch creatures not being bred in the land of Iſrael: and they waſhed his armour; his coat of mail, through the joints of which the blood iſſued, and ran upon it. The word is ſometimes uſed for whores, and is ſo tranſlated here in the Greek verſion, and by Munſter and Caſtalio; and both Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel ſay, that women, who were harlots, waſhed here in his blood mixed with water; and ſo Joſephus [u] writes, that afterwards it was a cuſtom for whores to waſh in this pool; though ſome ſay [w] two whores were painted on Ahab's chariot, by the order of Jezebel, to inflame his luſt, and theſe were what were waſhed; but the word ſignifies armour, or rather ornaments, clothes, jewels, &c. and now all this was according to the word of the Lord which he ſpake; both by Elijah, that as the dogs licked the blood of Naboth, ſo they ſhould his, as they now did, though not in the ſame place; nor was it neceſſary to fulfil the prophecy in ch. xxi. 19. ſee the note there; though ſome have thought [x], that his blood mixed with the water of the pool of Samaria, was carried in a ſtream down to Jezreel, and there licked by the dogs, where Naboth's was; but chiefly what was ſpoken by Micaiah is here reſpected, that thus Ahab fell at Ramoth-gilead, as he had propheſied, ℣. 17, 20, 28. and his life went for the life of Benhadad, as he had before declared, ch. xxi. 42.

℣. 39. Now the reſt of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and the ivory houſe which he made, &c.] Which being a very curious and extraordinary thing, is particularly mentioned; though perhaps it might not be made wholly of ivory, but inlaid with it; we read of ivory houſes in Amos iii. 15, and all the cities that he built, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael; in which the acts of his predeceſſors were recorded, ſee ch. xiv. 19. and xv. 31. and xvi. 14, 20, 27. not the ſcripture-book of Chronicles, for there none of theſe things are related.

℣. 40. So Ahab ſlept with his fathers, and Ahaziah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.] Of whom more is ſaid in the latter part of this chapter, and in the following book.

℣. 41. And Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Aſa began to reign over Judah, in the fourth year of Ahab king of Iſrael.] And as Ahab reigned 22 years, ch. xvi. 29. Jehoſhaphat muſt reign about 18 years with him, and ſeven years after him.

℣. 42. Jehoſhaphat was 35 years old when he began to reign, and he reigned 25 years in Jeruſalem, &c.] So that he muſt be 60 years of age when he died: and his mother's name was Azubah the daughter of Shilhi; but of what family they were, is not ſaid.

℣. 43. And he walked in all the ways of Aſa his father, &c.] Who was a good prince: he turned not aſide from doing that which was right in the eyes of the Lord; in his moral converſation, religious worſhip, and civil government: nevertheleſs, the high places were not taken away, for the people offered and burnt incenſe yet in the high places; he took away the high places and groves for idolatrous worſhip, 2 Chron. xvii. 6. but not the high places in which ſacrifices were offered to the Lord, which ought to have been, eſpecially ſince the temple was built; and thoſe in the tribes of Judah and Benjamin were altogether inexcuſable, being near to the temple, and under no reſtraint, as thoſe of the 10 tribes were; but the people were fond of them, becauſe of their antiquity, and it was difficult for religious princes to remove them, if inclined.

℣. 44. And Jehoſhaphat made peace with the king of Iſrael.] Firſt with Ahab, with whom he contracted an affinity, and joined with him in his expedition to Ramoth-gilead, and with Ahaziah his ſucceſſor.

℣. 45. And all the reſt of the acts of Jehoſhaphat, and all his might that he ſhewed, and all his wars, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?] Many of them are recorded in the canonical book of ſcripture, which bears the name of Chronicles; and more might be in this referred to, out of which might be taken what God has thought fit to tranſmit to future times; ſee 2 Chron. xvii, xix, xx.

℣. 46. And the remnant of the Sodomites, which remained in the days of his father Aſa, he took out of the land.] His father Aſa removed many of theſe filthy creatures, but not all; as many no doubt as came within his knowledge, but ſome remained, whom this his ſon removed, being of the ſame diſpoſition with his father, ſee ch. xv. 12.

℣. 47. There was then no king in Edom, a deputy was king.] Which had been the caſe from the times of David, who ſubdued Edom, and placed garriſons in it, and governors over it, 2 Sam. viii. 14. and continued through the reign of Jehoſhaphat, unto the times of his ſon, under whom the Edomites mites revolted, and ſet up a king of their own, 2 Kings viii. 20. with a view to which this is obſerved, as alſo to account for it, how Jehoſhaphat could build ſhips in Ezion-geber, which was in the land of Edom, of which in the next verſe, becauſe the whole country was governed by a vice-roy, or deputy under him.

[t] אל חיק ad ſinum, Montanus; in ſinum, Vatablus. Kimchi in loc. [x] Kimchi in loc. [u] Antiqu. l. 8. c. 15. §. 6. [w] See Jarchi & Kimchi in loc.

℣. 48. Jehoſhaphat made ſhips of Tarſhiſh, &c.] Ships to go to ſea, particularly the Indian ſea, ch. x. 22. Tarſhiſh is uſed for the ſea in general, Pſ xlviii. 7. Iſ. ii. 16. in the Cetib, or text, it is ten; in the Keri, or margin, it is made, which we follow, and may be put together, as in the Tigurine verſion, and read, he made ten ſhips to go by ſea: even to go to Ophir for gold; as Solomon did; of which place ſee ch. ix. 28. but they went not, for the ſhips were broken at Ezion-geber; the port where they were built: as ſoon as they were launched, or ſailed, they were broken to pieces againſt the rocks near the harbour, which ſtood up like a man's backbone, whence the port had its name; ſee the note on ch. ix. 26. and if this was Calzem, as there obſerved, near to it was a dangerous place for ſhips, and where many were loſt, and is ſuppoſed to be the place where Pharoah and his hoſt were drowned [y]; the reaſon of this ſhipwreck was, becauſe Jehoſhaphat joined himſelf with Ahaziah king of Iſrael, for which he was reproved by the prophet Eliezer, and this was his puniſhment, 2 Chron. xx. 35, 36, 37.

℣. 49. Then ſaid Ahaziah the ſon of Ahab unto Jehoſhaphat, &c.] Who very probably had built ſome more ſhips on his own bottom, having broke off his partnerſhip with Ahaziah: let my ſervants go with thy ſervants in the ſhips; ſince he was refuſed a part in the ſhips themſelves, he deſires leave to ſend men aboard them to traffick for him abroad: but Jehoſhaphat would not; having been reproved by a prophet of the Lord, and had ſuffered the loſs of his ſhips by joining with him already.

℣. 50. And Jehoſhaphat ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father, &c.] In the city of Sion, where David, Rehoboam, Abijam and Aſa were buried: and Jehoram his ſon reigned in his ſtead; who was now 32 years of age, and he reigned 10 years.

℣. 51. Ahaziah the ſon of Ahab began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria the 17th year of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, &c] It is obſerved, that Jehoſhaphat began to reign in the 4th year of Ahab, and Ahab reigned 22 years, ſee ℣. 41. and ch. xvi. 29. and therefore Ahab's ſon muſt begin to reign in the 18th year of Jehoſhaphat; but perhaps he was made king in his father's life-time, before he went on his expedition to Ramoth-gilead, or Ahab's reign was not 22 years compleat: and reigned two years over Iſrael; not compleat, as appears from 2 Kings iii. 1.

℣. 52. And he did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Which evil was idolatry: and walked in the way of his father; his father Ahab, who worſhipped Baal: and in the way of his mother; his mother Jezebel, who was ſtill living, and ſerved Baal and Aſtarte, the deities of her country: and in the way of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat; who ſet up and worſhipped the golden calves: who made Iſrael to ſin; by the worſhip of the ſame, into which he drew them by his example and authority.

℣. 53. For he ſerved Baal, and worſhipped him, &c.] That is, Ahaziah ſerved him, as his father had done, and his mother ſtill did: and provoked to anger the Lord God of Iſrael, according to all that his father had done; of which there is an inſtance in the firſt chapter of the following book; for falling through a lattice, and becoming ſick upon it, he quickly died, having ſent meſſengers to enquire of the god of Ekron, whether he ſhould die or not.

[y] Vid. Geograph. Nub. Climat. 3. par. 3. in fine.

The Second Book of the KINGS, commonly called the Fourth Book of the KINGS.

THIS, and the preceding book, are properly but one book divided into two parts, becauſe of the bigneſs of it, as the book of Samuel; it is a continuation of the hiſtory of the kings of Iſrael and Judah; and for a farther account of it, the reader is referred to the Title of the preceding book.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter begins with the rebellion of Moab againſt Iſrael, ℣. 1. relates a fall of the king of Iſrael in his houſe, which brought on him a ſickneſs; about which he ſent meſſengers to enquire of the god of Ekron; who were ſtopped by Elijah, and bid to return, as they did; and upon the king's examination of them about the cauſe of their return, he perceived it was Elijah that forbad them, ℣. 2—8. upon which the king ſent to him two captains, with 50 men each, one after another, to bring him to him, but fire came down from heaven and conſumed them, ℣. 9—12. but a third with 50 men ſent to him were ſpared, and he is bid to go along with them with a meſſage to the king, as he did, ℣. 13—16. and the chapter is cloſed with the death of Ahaziah, ℣. 17, 18.

℣. 1. Then Moab rebelled againſt Iſrael after the death of Ahab.] Which had been in ſubjection to them from the times of David, 2 Sam. viii. 2. refuſing to pay a tribute as they had done; taking advantage of Ahab's ill ſucceſs with the king of Syria, and of his death, and the condition and circumſtances of his ſucceſſor.

℣. 2. And Ahaziah fell down a latteſs in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, &c.] Which was either a window or latteſs in the form of network, to let in light; or rather were the rails of a balcony or battlement on the roof of his palace, in this form, on which leaning, it broke down, and he fell into the garden or court-yard; or walking on the roof his houſe, and treading unawares on a ſky-light, which let in light into a room underneath, he fell through it into it: and was ſick; the fall perhaps threw him into a fever, and which ſeemed threatening, being violent: and he ſent meſſengers, and ſaid unto them, go enquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, whether I ſhall recover of this diſeaſe; not to heal him of it, but to know the iſſue of it; a vain curioſity this! Ekron was one of the principalities of the Philiſtines, and this idol was the god they worſhipped, which ſignifies a maſter-fly; which ſome think was a large metallic fly, made under a planet that rules over flies; and the heathens had deities they called Myiodes, Myagros, and απομυιος, which ſignifies a driver away of flies; as Jupiter and Hercules were called by the Eleans and Romans, and worſhipped and ſacrificed to by them on that account [a]; and ſo the Cyreneans, a people of Lybia, worſhipped the god Achor, which ſeems to be a corruption of the word Ekron, becauſe he freed them from flies, after they had been infeſted with a peſtilence through them [b]; and Ekron being a place near the ſea, and both hot and moiſt, might be much infeſted with thoſe creatures. Within the haven of Ptolemais, or Acco, was formerly a temple of Baal-zebub, called in after-times the tower of flies, and uſed as a Pharus [c].

℣. 3. But the angel of the Lord ſaid unto Elijah, &c.] One of the miniſtring ſpirits ſent by the Lord to him: ariſe, go up to meet the meſſengers of the king of Samaria; that is, the king of Iſrael, whoſe capital city was Samaria: is it not becauſe there is not a God in Iſrael; known, acknowledged and worſhipped there, of whom there had been ſufficient proof of his deity and divine perfections, as as omniſcience, omnipotence, &c. that ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? about future things, when they had God nigh unto them, fully acquainted with them, as this meſſage ſhows.

[a] Pauſan. Eliac. 1. ſive, l. 5. p. 313. & Arcadica, ſive, l. 8. p. 497. Clement. Alex. Admon. ad Gentes, p. 24. [b] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 27. Vid. Chartarii Imagines Deorum, p. 151. & Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 6. c. 26. [c] Adrichom. Theatrum Ter. Sanct. fol. 6. 1.

℣. 4. Now therefore thus ſaith the Lord, &c.] Jehovah, the only true God: thou ſhalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but ſhalt ſurely die; this ſickneſs ſhould be unto death, and the bed he had betaken himſelf to ſhould be his death-bed. The phraſes of going up to bed, and coming down, are uſed with great propriety; for in the eaſtern countries, in their bed-chambers, they had a gallery raiſed four or five feet above the floor, with a baluſtrade on the front [d], and ſteps leading up to it; or ladders, which had more or fewer rounds, according as the beds were higher or lower [e]: and Elijah departed; having met the meſſengers, and delivered his meſſage from the Lord unto them.

℣. 5. And when the meſſengers turned back unto him, &c.] To Ahaziah king of Iſrael, as they did as ſoon as Elijah was gone from them; concluding from his habit, his gravity, and the authority with which he ſpoke, that he was a prophet of the Lord, and eſpecially from his knowledge of them, and of what they were ſent about: he ſaid unto them, why are ye now turned back? for by the time they had been gone, he knew they could never have been at Ekron and returned.

℣. 6. And they ſaid unto him, there came a man up to meet us, and ſaid unto us, go, turn again unto the king, that ſent you, &c.] King Ahaziah: and ſay unto him; and then they repeated all that is ſaid by the angel to Elijah, and he had delivered to them, ℣. 3, 4 and which was a ſufficient reaſon for their turning back, ſince they got a full anſwer from a man of God, of what they were to enquire of at Ekron; which was, whether the king would recover of this diſeaſe or no.

℣. 7. And he ſaid unto them, what manner of man was he, &c.] What appearance or figure did he make? what his habit or clothing? which came up to meet you, and told you theſe words? they had related to him.

℣. 8. And they anſwered him, he was an hairy man, &c.] Either the hair of his head and beard were grown very long, having been much neglected for a great while; or he had a hairy garment on, either of goat's hair, ſuch as the Chineſe wear [f], whoſe women ſpin it, ſee Exod. xxxv. 26. and of which garments are made; or of camel's hair, ſuch as John the Baptiſt wore, who came in his ſpirit and power, and imitated him in his dreſs, being alſo as Elijah here, girt with a girdle of leather about his loins; for more expeditious travelling, not for warmth, the climate being hot: and he ſaid, it is Elijah the Tiſhbite; for he had ſeen him formerly in his father's court in this dreſs.

℣. 9. Then the king ſent unto him a captain of 50 with his 50, &c.] Not in honour to him, but to bring him by force if he refuſed to come willingly: and he went up to him, and behold, he ſat on the top of an hill; generally ſuppoſed to be mount Carmel: and he ſpake unto him; at the bottom of the hill, ſo loud that he might hear him: thou man of God; or the prophet of the Lord, as the Targum, as thou calleſt thyſelf; for this was ſaid in a ſneering, flouting manner: the king hath ſaid, come down; and in the king's name he ordered him to come down, ſignifying if he would not, he would ſend his men to fetch him down.

℣. 10. And Elijah anſwered and ſaid to the captain of fifty, If I be a man of God, &c.] As I am, and thou ſhalt know it by the following token, though thou calleſt me ſo jeeringly; then let fire come down from heaven, and conſume thee and thy fifty; this he ſaid not in a paſſion, and from a private ſpirit of revenge, but for the vindication of the honour and glory of God, and under the impulſe of his Spirit, who was abuſed through the inſult on him as his prophet: and there came down fire from heaven, and conſumed him and his fifty; a flaſh of lightning, which deſtroyed them at once; the Lord hearkening to the voice of his prophet, in vindication of him in his office, and of his own glory.

℣. 11. Again alſo he ſent unto him another captain of fifty, with his fifty, &c.] The king not being at all terrified with the awful judgment upon the former, ſends another: and he anſwered and ſaid unto him, O man of God, thus hath the king ſaid, Come down quickly; he flouts the prophet in the ſame manner as the former, and in the king's name commands him to come down, and that immediately; which the king added to his orders, or he himſelf, ſignifying he would not be trifled with, if he did not come down directly, he would force him.

℣. 12. And Elijah anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] The ſame as he had to the firſt captain, and made the ſame requeſt of fire from heaven; which accordingly came down, and deſtroyed this captain and his fifty alſo.

℣. 13. And he ſent again a captain of the third fifty, with his fifty, &c.] Which was moſt daring and inſolent, and ſhewed him to be dreadfully hardened to perſiſt in his meſſages after ſuch rebuffs: and the third captain of fifty went up; inſtead of calling to the prophet at the bottom of the hill as the other did, he went up to the top of it: and came and fell on his knees before Elijah; in reverence of him as a prophet of the Lord, and under a dread of the power he was poſſeſſed of, of calling for fire from heaven on him and his men, as the former inſtances ſhewed: and beſought him, and ſaid unto him, Oh man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of theſe fifty thy ſervants be precious in thy ſight; he owns their lives lay at his mercy; he begs they might be ſpared, ſince it was not in contempt of him, and through ill-will to him as the prophet of the Lord, but in obedience to the king's command, that they were come to him.

℣. 14. Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties, with their fifties, &c.] He owns the facts, and aſcribes the death of them to the true cauſe, and appears to have an awful ſenſe of the judgment of God on them, fearing the ſame would befall him and his: therefore let my life now be precious in thy ſight; by ſparing it, what is precious and valuable being ſpared.

℣. 15. And the angel of the Lord ſaid unto Elijah, &c.] The ſame as in ℣. 3. or had ſaid [g], as ſome render it, before this captain came: Go down with him; the captain and his men: and be not afraid of him; of king Ahaziah, whom he might fear, becauſe of the meſſage he had ſent him, that he ſhould die of that ſickneſs, and for turning back his

[d] See Dr. Shaw's Travels, p. 209. ed. 2.
[e] Vid. Iſidor. Origin. l. 20. c. 11. & Alſtorph. de Lect. vet. c. 2.
[f] Semedo's Hiſtory of China, part 1. ch. 3.
[g] וידבר edixerat autem, Junius & Tremellius.

his meſſengers to the God of Ekron, and for deſtroying his two captains and their fifties; nor of his mother Jezebel, who had threatened his life for killing her prophets: and he aroſe, and went down with him unto the king; boldly and courageouſly, not fearing his wrath; ſo that the captain not only had his life and the life of his men ſpared, but anſwered the end of his meſſage alſo.

℣. 16. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] Elijah to king Ahaziah when introduced into his chamber; and after ſome diſcourſe paſſed between them, he confirmed what he had ſaid to his meſſengers, and expreſſed it in the ſame language as in ℣. 3, 4. ſee the notes there.

℣. 17. So he died, according to the word of the Lord which Elijah had ſpoken, &c.] How long or how ſoon after this is not ſaid; however, he died of the ſickneſs, and on the bed to which he went up, as he ſaid: and Jehoram reigned in his ſtead; who was another ſon of Ahab, and brother of Ahaziah, ch. iii. 1. in the ſecond year of Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah; but as he muſt begin his reign in the 19th, or in the latter end of the 18th year of Jehoſhaphat, ſee 1 Kings xxii, 51. and 2 Kings iii. 1. and Jehoſhaphat reigned in all 25 years, 1 Kings xxii. 42. he muſt live and reign after this ſix or ſeven years; this therefore is to be reconciled by obſerving, that this ſon of Jehoſhaphat was made viceroy, or was taken into partnerſhip in the throne by his father when he went with Ahab to Ramoth-gilead; and it was in the ſecond year of this his reign with his father, that the other Jehoram began his: becauſe he had no ſon; that is, Ahaziah, wherefore his brother reigned in his ſtead.

℣. 18. Now the reſt of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, &c.] During his two years reign, which yet were imperfect, and his acts muſt be but few: are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael? in which were written his father Ahab's alſo, and his predeceſſors, ſee 1 Kings xxii. 39.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter relates, how that Eliſha accompanied Elijah to ſeveral places, and on the other ſide Jordan Elijah was taken up from him to heaven, which occaſioned great lamentation in him, ℣. 1—12. but having the mantle of Elijah, he divided the waters of Jordan, and paſſed over, ℣. 13, 14. and the ſons of the prophets at Jericho, perceiving the ſpirit of Elijah on him, ſhewed him great reſpect, and propoſed ſending men to ſeek his maſter, which they did in vain, ℣. 15—18. when he healed the waters at Jericho, at the requeſt of the men of it, ℣. 19—22. and the chapter is concluded with the deſtruction of forty-two children at Bethel by bears, who mocked him, ℣. 23, 24, 25.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when the Lord would take up Elijah into heaven by a whirlwind, &c.] thereby lifting him up from the earth, and which, as it was the purpoſe and will of God, Elijah had notice of, as appears by his motions to different places, under a divine direction: that Elijah went with Eliſha from Gilgal; where it ſeems they met, a place where the Iſraelites firſt pitched when they came over Jordan, and where the tabernacle was for ſome time, and was famous for religious ſervices, ſee Joſh. iv. 19. and v. 9.

℣. 2. And Elijah ſaid unto Eliſha, Tarry here, I pray thee, &c.] Seemingly unwilling he ſhould go with him, and be preſent at his aſſumption; which was either out of modeſty, not affecting the ſpread of the honour and glory to be conferred upon him; or to prevent the grief of Eliſha at his departure, or to try whether Eliſha knew any thing of it, and what affection he had for him: for the Lord hath ſent me to Beth-el; to give ſome comfort and ſome inſtruction and advice to the college of prophets there: and Eliſha ſaid unto him, As the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, I will not leave thee; being determined to ſee the laſt of him, and to have the benefit of his company and converſation, his heavenly diſcourſe, and inſtruction from him as long as he could, and in hope of receiving a bleſſing from him at parting: ſo they went down to Beth-el; together, which, according to Bunting [h], was ſix miles.

℣. 3. And the ſons of the prophets that were at Beth-el, &c.] Or the diſciples of them, as the Targum; here, though a place where one of Jeroboam's calves was ſet up, was a ſchool of the prophets, perhaps founded by Elijah as a nurſery for religion, and a check upon the idolatry of the times: came forth to Eliſha; out of their college; and ſaid unto him, Knoweſt thou that the Lord will take away thy maſter from thy head to-day? who was, as Abarbinel obſerves, the crown and glory of his head; or elſe this is ſaid, as generally thought, in alluſion to diſciples ſitting at the feet of their maſters, and ſo they at the head of them; the rapture of Elijah was by a ſpirit of prophecy revealed unto them: and he ſaid, Yea, I know it; being revealed to him in the ſame way: hold your peace; not caring to continue any diſcourſe with them on the ſubject, that his thoughts, which were intent upon it, might not be interrupted, and that his maſter might not know that he knew of it, and leſt he ſhould be ſnatched away from him, and he not ſee him, whilſt diſcourſing with them.

℣. 4. And Elijah ſaid unto him, Eliſha, tarry here, I pray thee, &c.] At Bethel: for the Lord hath ſent me to Jericho; to the ſchool of the prophets there, to ſtrengthen, encourage, and adviſe them: and he ſaid, As the Lord liveth, &c. uſing the ſame form of oath as before: ſo they came to Jericho; together, which, as the above writer ſays [i], was four miles from Bethel.

℣. 5. And the ſons of the prophets that were at Jericho, &c.] For though this place was lately rebuilt under a curſe to the builder, yet was bleſſed with a ſchool of the prophets: whoſe diſciples came to Eliſha, and ſaid unto him; as in ℣. 3. and to whom he made the ſame reply.

℣. 6. And Elijah ſaid unto him, Tarry, I pray thee, here, &c.] At Jericho, ſeemingly very deſirous to ſhift him off, that he might not ſee his aſſumption: for the Lord hath ſent me to Jordan; where paſſing that he was to be taken up: and he ſaid, &c. Eliſha ſwore as before, he would not leave him: and they two went on; to Jordan, which was ſix miles from Jericho [k],

℣. 7. And fifty men of the ſons of the prophets went, went, and ſtood to view afar off, &c.] To have a view, if they could, of the aſſumption of Elijah to heaven, and be witneſſes of it: and they two ſtood by Jordan; on the banks of it, even Elijah and Eliſha.

[h] Travels, &c. p. 205. [i] Ib. [k] Ib.

℣. 8. And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapt it together, &c.] Folded it up cloſe together, in a poſition to ſmite with it; this is thought to be not his hairy garment, but a ſhorter robe, that was worn upon his ſhoulders; but the Greek verſion renders it by Melotes, and ſo in ℣. 14. which, according to Iſidore [l], was a goat's ſkin, hanging down from the neck, and girt at the loins; and being thus clothed, perhaps, may be the reaſon of his being called an hairy man, ch. i. 8. and ſmote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither; juſt as Moſes lift up his rod, and the waters of the ſea were divided for the Iſraelites: ſo that they two went over on dry ground; in like manner as the Iſraelites did through the ſea.

℣. 9. And it came to paſs when they were gone over, &c.] Had got on the other ſide Jordan: that Elijah ſaid unto Eliſha, aſk what I ſhall do for thee, before I be taken from thee; for having followed him ſo cloſely, he now made no more a ſecret of his aſſumption, and having had full trial of his attachment to him, and affection for him; and Eliſha ſaid, I pray thee, let a double portion of thy ſpirit be upon me; the two parts of the gifts of the ſpirit he had, that of prophecy, and that of doing miracles, as ſome think; or two parts out of three of what Elijah was poſſeſſed of; or rather double as much, and which he might deſire, not from a ſpirit of vanity and ambition to be greater than his maſter, but from an eagerneſs to promote the glory of God, and the intereſt of religion, to reclaim the Iſraelites from their idolatry, and eſtabliſh the true religion, which he might obſerve Elijah was not able to do with that meaſure of grace and gifts he had; or however this phraſe denotes an abundance, a large portion or meaſure, as it every where does. Many, after Ben Gerſom, have thought, it refers to the double portion of the firſt-born, and that Eliſha does not mean a double portion with reſpect to Elijah, but with reſpect to the junior prophets, with whom he might be conſidered as a firſt-born, and ſo deſired a double or greater portion than they, and which may be righteſt [m]; and when he aſked this, he did not ſuppoſe it was in Elijah's power to give him it, only that he would pray to God at parting with him, that he would beſtow it on him.

℣. 10. And he ſaid, thou haſt aſked a hard thing, &c.] Not a common privilege, but what is rarely enjoyed, and difficult to obtain, few are ſo favoured of God: nevertheleſs, if thou ſee me when I am taken from thee, it ſhall be ſo unto thee, but if not, it ſhall not be ſo; meaning, that if his rapture was viſible to Eliſha, and he was favoured with a ſight of his aſſumption, and be an eye-witneſs of it, this would be a token both to Elijah, that it was agreeable to the Lord to aſk of him this favour for him, and to Eliſha to expect it, otherwiſe not.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs, as they ſtill went on and talked, &c.] About the donation of the gifts of the ſpirit requeſted, about the ſtate of religion in Iſrael, and about the training up of prophets in the colleges, and about Eliſha's ſucceſſion as a prophet in his room, and his diſcharge of that office, and ſuch like things, as may be ſuppoſed, in which he gave him inſtruction and advice: that behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horſes of fire; either angels in this form, ſee Pſ. civ. 4. and lxviii. 17. in which they appeared for the glory and honour of the prophet, and as emblems of his flaming love and zeal for the purity of religion, and that his aſſumption might be conſpicuous to Eliſha; and perhaps by this means might be ſeen by the 50 men on the other ſide Jordan: this chariot, drawn with theſe horſes, was not ſeen in the heaven, but as running on the earth, and came between the two prophets, and ſeparated them from each other, taking up Elijah into it, by means of a wind whirling about him, and which was no other than the miniſtry of angels; or theſe might be a conflux of exhalations or clouds, formed in this likeneſs by a ſupernatural power, and by the ſolar rays ſtriking on them, might appear fiery or red; and ſo his aſſumption was much in ſuch like manner, as our Lord was taken up in a cloud, Acts i. 9. and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven; body and ſoul; ſuch a change paſſing on him as he went through the region of the air, which diveſted him of his mortality and corruption, and fitted him for the inviſible world.

℣. 12. And Eliſha ſaw it, &c.] The aſcenſion of Elijah to heaven, the manner of it, and all relative to it, as the diſciples ſaw the aſcenſion of Chriſt, between which and this there is a great agreement, ſee Acts i. 9, 10. and ſo Eliſha had the token by which he might expect to have the double portion, as the diſciples after the aſcenſion of Chriſt had an extraordinary effuſion of the Spirit and gifts upon them: and he cried, my father, my father; or my maſter, my maſter, as the Targum; Elijah being a father to Eliſha, and the reſt of the prophets, in the ſame ſenſe as diſciples of the prophets are called ſons: the chariots of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof; who was a greater defence to Iſrael, and was of more ſervice to them by his inſtructions and prayers, than an army conſiſting of chariots and horſemen; ſo the Targum, "he was better to Iſrael by his prayers than chariots and horſemen:" and he ſaw him no more; he was carried up in the above manner into the heaven of heavens, out of the ſight of mortals, and never ſeen more, but at the transfiguration of Chriſt on the mount: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces; not on account of Elijah's caſe and circumſtances, who was now in a moſt happy and glorious ſtate and condition, but as lamenting his own loſs, and the loſs of the publick.

℣. 13. He took up alſo the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, &c.] Which he had now no farther need of, and Eliſha had, having rent his clothes in two; and this falling into his hands, was a token of his ſucceeding him in his office, and that he ſhould have the double portion of his ſpirit: and he went back, and ſtood by the brook of Jordan; at the place where he and Elijah had paſſed over together.

℣. 14. And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and ſmote the waters, &c.] He wrapt it together, as Elijah had done, and ſmote the waters in like manner, to make trial whether he had the ſame ſpirit and power conferred on him: and ſaid, where is the Lord God of Elijah? let him appear now, and ſhew his power as he did by him; he knew the mantle would not do without the Lord, and the exertion of his might: and when he alſo had ſmitten the waters, they parted hither and thither; ther; as when Elijah ſmote them. The words aph-hu, rendered he alſo, is left untranſlated by the Septuagint, and is interpreted by Theodoret [n], hidden. They ſtand immediately after the God of Elijah, and may be rendered, yea he, even he himſelf; meaning not Elijah, as if he was enquired after, or was preſent and ſmote the waters; but rather as we and others, Eliſhah, even he alſo ſmote the waters; though ſome take it to be the name of God, as hu was, and is with the Arabs to this day, ſee the note on Iſ. xliii. 13. Athanaſius [o] interprets it of God, appho; and ſo Eliſha calls him by his title and attribute, aph-hu: but the words may be an anſwer to the prophet's queſtion, where is the Lord God of Elijah? here he is, even he himſelf, in the faith of which the water, being ſmitten, parted; and with this agrees Abarbinel's note on the text; the meaning is, though we are deprived of Elijah, yet not of the providence of God; and though the ſervant is wanting, the Lord or maſter is not; for even he, the bleſſed God, is in his room, and his excellency is as it was before; which ſenſe is approved of by Friſchmuth [p]: and Eliſha went over; the river Jordan, as on dry land.

5

[l] Origin. l. 19. c. 24.

[m] See Wecmſe of the moral law, l. 2, c. 7. p. 41.

℣. 15. And when the ſons of the prophets, which were to view at Jericho, ſaw him, &c.] Who went out from thence towards Jordan, to have a ſight if they could of the aſſumption of Elijah; theſe, when they ſaw Eliſha come over Jordan, the waters being parted by him: they ſaid, the ſpirit of Elijah doth reſt on Eliſha; or he has the ſame power and ſpirit to work miracles as he had, which they diſcerned by his dividing the waters of Jordan with his mantle: and they came to meet him, and bowed themſelves to the ground before him; in reverence of him as their maſter, in the room of Elijah.

℣. 16. And they ſaid unto him, behold now, there be with thy ſervants 50 ſtrong men, &c.] Perhaps meaning themſelves, ℣. 7. who were young, ſtout and ſtrong, and able to travel for days together: let them go, we pray thee, and ſeek thy maſter; for though they knew he was to be taken away, yet knew not for what time, and imagined he might be found again: leſt peradventure the ſpirit of the Lord hath taken him up; as it ſeems he was wont to do, ſee 1 Kings xviii. 12. and caſt him upon ſome mountain, or into ſome valley; where he ſometimes had his abode; or they might fancy, if he was taken up to heaven, yet in his ſoul only, and that when that was ſeparated, his dead body would be left on a mountain, or in a valley; and therefore they were deſirous of ſeeking and finding it, that it might not be expoſed to birds and beaſts of prey, but that they might bury it in a decent and honourable manner: and he ſaid, ye ſhall not ſend; he knew it was to no purpoſe, ſince he was tranſlated to heaven, body and ſoul, and which he was an eye-witneſs of.

℣. 17. And when they urged him until he was aſhamed, &c.] To deny them any longer, being ſo very preſſing and importunate: he ſaid, ſend; leſt they ſhould think he had not the reſpect for his maſter he ſhould have had; or was ſo fond of his office, that he did not chuſe he ſhould be found alive if he could, and return and re-aſſume it: they ſent therefore 50 men; ſome one way, and ſome another: and they ſought three days, but found him not; and then returned.

℣. 18. And when they came again to him, for he tarried at Jericho, &c.] Waiting their return to hear the report they made: which when they had, he ſaid unto them, did I not ſay unto you, go not? aſſuring them it would be fruitleſs, and to no purpoſe; though this ſearch of theirs ſerved both to confirm the aſſumption of Elijah, and the truth of Eliſha being a prophet of the Lord.

℣. 19. And the men of the city ſaid unto Eliſha, &c.] The inhabitants of Jericho, perceiving him to be a prophet, and endowed with a power of working miracles: Behold, I pray thee, the ſituation of this city is pleaſant, as my lord ſeeth; in a plain, ſurrounded with gardens and orchards, with vineyards, olive-yards, and groves of palm-trees, and other odoriferous ones: but the water is naught, and the ground barren; that is, that part of it where this water was, or ran, for from thence it became barren; or cauſed to miſcarry, as the word ſignifies [q]; not only trees caſt their fruit, which it watered, but women became abortive that drank of it, as Joſephus ſays [r], and ſo cattle. Abarbinel thinks it was ſo from the times of Joſhua, being curſed by him; but if ſo, it would not have been inhabited again; rather this was owing to a new curſe, upon its being rebuilt; though this might affect only a ſmall part of the ground, not the whole, as before obſerved.

℣. 20. And he ſaid, Bring me a new cruſe, and put ſalt therein, &c.] One that had never been uſed, that it might not be thought that the virtue was owing to any thing that had been, or was put into it: and they brought it to him; the pot with the ſalt in it.

℣. 21. And he went forth unto the ſpring of the waters, &c.] The fountain from whence they flowed, the head of them: and caſt the ſalt in there; which was an unlikely means of making bad water good, ſince that makes it brackiſh, and not ſo drinkable, and what makes ground barren; but this method, contrary to nature, was taken, that the miracle might appear the greater; or, as the Jews expreſs it, be a miracle within a miracle: and ſaid, Thus ſaith the Lord, I have healed theſe waters; he did not pretend to heal them in his own name, and by his own power, but in the name, and by the power of the Lord, to whom he would have it aſcribed: there ſhall not be from thence any more death, or barren land; or miſcarrying; no more noxious and mortal diſeaſes ſhould be got by drinking them, nor any abortions occaſioned by them in women, cattle, and fruit-trees, as had been.

℣. 22. So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the ſaying of Eliſha which he ſpake.] In the name of the Lord; and not only they remained ſo unto the time of the writer of this hiſtory, but to the times of Joſephus, as he teſtifies [s], and even to ours; for there is a ſpring now called Eliſha's ſpring or fountain, of which Mr. Maundrel ſays [t], "its waters are at preſent received in a baſon about nine or ten paces long, and five or ſix broad; and from thence iſſuing out in good plenty, divide themſelves into ſeveral ſmall ſtreams, diſperſing their refreſhment to all the field between this and Jericho, and rendring it exceeding fruitful."

So

[n] Apud Flamin. Nobil. in loc. So Suidas in voce αφω. [o] De Commun. Eſſent. Patris, &c. vol. 1. p. 374. See Weemſe of the Moral Law, l. 1. c. 7. p. 162. [p] Diſſert. de Eliæ nomine, &c. §. 11, 12. [q] משכלת orbans, Montanus, Vatablus; facit abortum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [r] De Bello Jud. l. 4. c. 8. § 3. [s] Ibid. [t] Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 80.

So ſome other travellers [u] ſay of it, that the water is very clear and cool, and iſſues in a copious ſtream. Pliny [w] gives it the name of Calirroe, the beautiful ſtream, and ſpeaks of it as hot, wholeſome, and medicinal, and of great note.

℣. 23. And he went up from thence unto Beth-el, &c.] From Jericho, which lay in a plain, to Beth-el, ſituated on an hill, and therefore is ſaid to go up to it; hither he went, to acquaint the ſons of the prophets with the aſſumption of Elijah, to condole their loſs of him, and to comfort and encourage them, and confirm his own authority among them as a prophet in his ſtead: and as he was going up by the way; the aſcent to the city: there came forth little children out of the city; the word for children is uſed of perſons of thirty or forty years of age; and though theſe are ſaid to be little, they were ſo well grown as to be able to go forth out of the city of themſelves, without any to guide them, or to take care of them; and were of an age capable not only of taking notice of Eliſha's baldneſs, but knew him to be a prophet, and were able to diſtinguiſh between good and evil; and from a malignant ſpirit in them, mocked at him as ſuch, and at the aſſumption of Elijah; which they had knowledge of, and to whom, taught by their idolatrous parents, they had an averſion: ſome Jewiſh writers [x] ſay, they were called Naarim, which we render children, becauſe ſhaken from the commandments, or had ſhaken off the yoke of the commands; and little, becauſe they were of little faith: and mocked him, and ſaid unto him, Go up thou bald-head, go up thou bald-head; meaning not up the hill to Bethel, where his coming was not deſirable to the greater part in it, being idolaters; and perhaps theſe children were ſent out to intimidate him with their flouts and jeers from entering there; but having heard of Elijah going up to heaven, as was ſaid, they jeeringly bid him go up to heaven after him, and then they ſhould have a good riddance of them both; thus at the ſame time mocking at him for his baldneſs, and making a jeſt of the wondrous work of God, the aſſumption of Elijah; which, with behaving ſo irreverently to an hoary head, a prophet of the Lord, was very hainous and wicked, and therefore what befel them need not be wondered at.

℣. 24. And he turned back, and looked on them, &c.] With a ſtern countenance, thereby reproving them, and in order to intimidate them, and make them aſhamed, and cauſe them to leave off, but to no purpoſe; they repeated their mockeries with great vehemence: and curſed them in the name of the Lord; moved thereunto, not from paſſion and a ſpirit of revenge, but by an impulſe of the ſpirit of God: and there came forth two ſhe-bears out of the wood; which are fierceſt, and eſpecially when bereaved of their whelps, as theſe might be; the wood ſeems to be near to Bethel, perhaps in the wilderneſs of Bethel, of which ſee Joſh. viii. 15. and xviii. 12. and Reland [y] thinks it is the ſame with the wood of Ephraim, 2 Sam. xviii. 6. though the Jews, to increaſe the miracle, ſay [z], there was no wood at all, and if there was, that there were no bears in it; but though thoſe creatures are moſtly in northern countries, yet there were of them in Judæa, ſee 1 Sam. xvii. 34. and tare 42 children of them; it ſeems there were more than theſe; but ſuch a number of them they tore to pieces and deſtroyed; which was very extraordinary, and was an awful puniſhment for their wickedneſs, which they knowingly and willingly committed, and of their parents in them, who had trained them up in ſuch impiety, and put them upon it, and ſent them out to do it.

℣. 25. And he went from thence to mount Carmel, &c.] Where Elijah uſed to frequent, and where alſo there might be a ſchool of the prophets; this, according to Bunting [a], was 56 miles from Bethel: and from thence he returned to Samaria; the capital of the kingdom of Iſrael; there to bear his teſtimony againſt idolatry, to reprove for it, and reclaim from it; this, as the ſame writer ſays [b], was 32 miles from Carmel.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter gives the character of Jehoram king of Iſrael, ℣. 1, 2, 3. relates the rebellion of the king of Moab againſt him, ℣. 4, 5. the war that he and his allies entered into on that account, ℣. 6—9. the diſtreſs the combined army were in for want of water, their application upon this to Eliſha, who promiſed them water, and they had it in a wonderful manner, ℣. 10—20. and the chapter is concluded with the rout of the Moabites, and the barbarity of their king to his eldeſt ſon, ℣. 20—27.

℣. 1. Now Jehoram the ſon of Ahab began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, the 18*th year of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah*, &c.] So that the two years of the reign of his brother Ahaziah were not compleat, only part of the 17th and part of the 18th of Jehoſhaphat, ſince he began to reign in his 17th year, at the beginning of that, and died towards the cloſe of the 18th, when Jehoram ſucceeded him, ſee 1 Kings xxii. 51. and reigned twelve years.

℣. 2. And he wrought evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Was guilty of idolatry: but not like his father, and like his mother; his father Ahab, and his mother Jezebel: for he put away the image of Baal that his father had made; he did not deſtroy it, only removed it from the temple of Baal where it was ſet, that it might not be worſhipped, at leaſt publicly, ſee 1 Kings xvi. 31, 32. this he did, either moved to it by his own conſcience, obſerving the ſudden deaths of his father and brother, which he might ſuppoſe was for their idolatry; or in order to obtain ſucceſs in his war with Moab he was entering into; or being inſtigated by Jehoſhaphat to do it, or otherwiſe he might refuſe to join him.

℣. 3. Nevertheleſs, he cleaved unto the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, which made Iſrael to ſin, &c.] He cloſely adhered to the worſhip of the calves ſet up by him: he departed not therefrom; that being a piece of ſtate-policy, to keep up the diviſion of the two kingdoms.

℣. 4. And Meſha king of Moab was a ſheep-maſter, &c.] With which his country abounded; he kept great numbers of them, and ſhepherds to take care of them; he traded in them, and got great riches by them; his ſubſtance chiefly conſiſted in them: and

[u] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 1. p. 331. [w] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 16. [x] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 46. 2.
[y] Paleſtin. Illuſtrat. p. 378. [z] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 47. 1. [a] Travels, &c. p. 206. [b] Ibid.

and rendered unto the king of Iſrael; either as a preſent, or as an annual tribute: 100,000 lambs, and 100,000 rams, with the wool; that is, upon them, unſhorn, and ſo the more valuable; and it was uſual for tributary nations to pay their tribute to thoſe to whom they were ſubject in ſuch commodities which they moſt abounded with; ſo the Cappadocians, as Strabo [c] relates, uſed to pay, as a tribute to the Perſians, every year, 1500 horſes and 2000 mules, and five myriads of ſheep, or 50,000; and formerly, Pliny [d] ſays, the only tribute was from the paſtures.

℣. 5. But it came to paſs when Ahab was dead, that the king of Moab rebelled againſt the king of Iſrael.] Who then was Ahaziah; but either thro' the puſillanimity of his temper, or the ſickneſs that attended him, or the ſhortneſs of his reign, he took no ſteps to the reduction of him, or to oblige him to pay his tribute, which he neglected to do, and is meant by his rebellion.

℣. 6. And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the ſame time, &c.] As ſoon as he came to the throne: and numbered all Iſrael; who were fit to bear arms, got them together at ſome certain place, and muſtered them, and prepared for a war with Moab, to reduce them.

℣. 7. And he went and ſent to Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, ſaying, The king of Moab hath rebelled againſt me, &c.] By refuſing to pay him tribute: wilt thou go up with me againſt Moab to battle? And he ſaid, I will go up; which he agreed to, partly to encourage Jehoram in the reformation of religion which he had begun, and partly to chaſtiſe the Moabites for their invaſion of his country, 2 Chron. xx. 1. I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and my horſes as thy horſes; the ſame anſwer he returned to Ahab, 1 Kings xxii. 4. ſee the note there.

℣. 8. And he ſaid, Which way ſhall we go up? &c.] That is, Jehoram ſaid ſo to Jehoſhaphat, conſulting with him which was the beſt way to take to the land of Moab, whether the ſhorteſt way over Jordan; or ſome other: and he anſwered, The way through the wilderneſs of Edom; which bordered upon it, and the ſame through which the Iſraelites paſſed; for Kadeſh was on the extreme border of Edom, whither they came, Numb. xx. 1. 16. and this Jehoſhaphat propoſed, partly that they might come upon Moab unawares, and attack them where they were weakeſt, and not on their guard; and partly to take the king of Edom with them, who was no other than Jehoſhaphat's deputy, and ſo be aſſiſting to them, and prevent him from revolting, which otherwiſe he might take this opportunity of doing.

℣. 9. So the king of Iſrael went, and the king of Judah, &c.] The way of the wilderneſs of Edom, as propoſed by the latter: and the king of Edom; whom they took with them in their way, who was not properly a king, but a viceroy or deputy, ſee 1 Kings xxii. 47. and they fetched a compaſs of ſeven days journey; they went round the dead ſea, and through the wilderneſs of Edom, and ſo to the borders of Moab: and there was no water for the hoſt, and for the cattle that followed them; neither for the ſoldiers in the army, nor the cattle that drew the carriages, being in a wilderneſs.

℣. 10. And the king of Iſrael ſaid, Alas, &c.] Lamenting their ſad caſe, as being deſperate; and the rather, he was the more concerned, as he was the principal who had drawn the other kings into this affair, though he throws it upon the Lord and his providence: that the Lord hath called theſe three kings together, to deliver them into the hands of Moab; into whoſe hands they muſt inevitably fall, if they could have no water to refreſh them; ſince they would be ſo weak as not to be able to ſtand a battle with them, and be diſperſed here and there in ſearch of water, and ſo fall into their hands. Extreme thirſt is intolerable. It is reported [e] of Lyſimachus, that he delivered himſelf and his army into the hands of the enemy for a draught of water. Leo Africanus [f] relates, that in the deſart of Azaoad ſtand two marble pillars, teſtifying, that a rich merchant bought of a carrier of wares a cup of water, at the price of 10,000 ducats; but there not being water ſufficient neither for the one nor the other, they were both ſuffocated with thirſt.

℣. 11. But Jehoſhaphat ſaid, Is there not here a prophet of the Lord, that we may enquire of the Lord by him? &c.] This the good king ſhould have done before he ſet out, but had neglected it; however, it was not too late: and one of the king of Iſrael's ſervants anſwered and ſaid; who might be one that feared the Lord, and was intimate with Eliſha, or however had knowledge of him, as appears by what follows: Here is Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah; or miniſtred to him, as the Targum: was his menial ſervant, waited on him, and aſſiſted him when he waſhed his hands [g]; ſome Jewiſh writers underſtand it of his pouring water on the hand of Elijah at Carmel, when the altar and trench were filled with it, and when a miracle was wrought, as they fancy, and the fingers of Elijah became as fountains of water.

℣. 12. And Jehoſhaphat ſaid, The word of the Lord is with him, &c.] To give them an anſwer; which he concluded from his being a ſervant and diſciple of Elijah, whom he ſucceeded in his office and of whom he had, doubtleſs, heard; and from his following the camp, and being in it, which he eaſily imagined was not to fight, but to aſſiſt by his advice and counſel, and by his prophecies, as there might be occaſion for them: ſo the king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat, and the king of Edom went down to him; deſcended from their chariots, and went to the tent in the camp where he was; they did not ſend for him to come to them, but, in honour of him, went to him themſelves.

℣. 13. And Eliſha ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, what have I to do with thee? &c.] An idolater; I can hold no diſcourſe, nor have any converſation with thee, nor give thee any advice or aſſiſtance: get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother; the prophets of Baal, and of the groves: and the king of Iſrael ſaid unto him, nay; meaning, he would not apply to them, who he was ſenſible could give him no relief, only to the Lord God, from whom this affliction was, and therefore begs he would pray to him to have mercy on them; ſo the Targum, "I beſeech thee remember not the ſins of that wickedneſs, pray for mercy for us:" for the Lord hath called theſe three kings together to deliver them into the hand of Moab; ſignifying, that he ſhould not periſh alone, but the other two kings with him, who had no connexion with the prophets of his father and mother in their idolatry, idolatry, and therefore hoped for their ſakes mercy would be ſhown.

[c] Geograph. l. 11. p. 362. [d] Nat. Hiſt. l. 18, c. 3. [e] Plutarch. in Apothegm. [f] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 1. p. 75. [g] See the like phraſe of the buſineſs of a ſervant in Homer, Iliad. 3. ℣. 270. & Iliad. 9. ℣. 174. Odyſſ. 1. ℣. 147. & Odyſſ. 3. ℣. 388. & Odyſſ. 4. ℣. 258. 261. & paſſim.

℣. 14. Eliſha ſaid, as the Lord of hoſts liveth before whom I ſtand, &c.] Whoſe miniſter and prophet he was, to whom he prayed, and whoſe ſervice he was ready to perform: ſurely, were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah; revere him not only as a king, but as a pious prince, and a worſhipper of the true God: I would not look toward thee, nor ſee thee; give him no countenance at all, pay no regard to his requeſt, not ſo much as to look at him in a civil way; but turn away his face from him with contempt and diſdain, as unworthy to be converſed with by a prophet of the Lord.

℣. 15. But now bring me a minſtrel, &c.] A piper, a man that knows how to play upon the harp, as the Targum; according to Procopius Gazæus, this was one of the Levites he ordered to be fetched, who was uſed to the ſpiritual melody of David, and could play on muſical inſtruments as he directed. This he did to allay his paſſion, and compoſe his ſpirits ruffled at the ſight of Jehoram, and to fit him to receive prophetic inſpiration, which ſometimes came upon the Lord's prophets when thus employed, ſee 1 Sam. x. 5. Some think [h], the muſic the prophet called for is that ſort the Greeks call harmony, which is the graveſt and ſaddeſt, and ſettles the affections: and it came to paſs when the minſtrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him; the ſpirit of prophecy, as the Targum, which came by the power of God, and as a gift from his hand.

℣. 16. And he ſaid, thus ſaith the Lord, make this valley full of ditches.] In which the allied army lay encamped, that they might be ready to receive large quantities of water ſufficient for the whole army and cattle, when it came.

℣. 17. For thus ſaith the Lord, ye ſhall not ſee wind, neither ſhall ye ſee the rain, &c.] Neither perceive the ſouth wind blow, which uſually brings rain, nor clouds gathering in the heavens, as portending it, nor any falling from thence: yet that valley ſhall be filled with water; and all the ditches dug in it: that ye may drink, both ye and your cattle, and all your beaſts; there would be ſuch a quantity as would be enough for them all, the ſoldiers, the horſes they rode on, and the beaſts that drew their waggons.

℣. 18. And this is but a light thing in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] To give them ſuch a plenty of water in ſuch an extraordinary manner: he would do for them what was greater, not only ſave them from falling into the hand of Moab, which they feared, but he will deliver the Moabites into your hands; which was more than was aſked for, or expected.

℣. 19. And ye ſhall ſmite every fenced city and every choice city, &c.] That is, the inhabitants of them with the ſword, and demoliſh them alſo, ℣. 25. and ſhall fell every good tree; which ſeems contrary to the law in Deut. xx. 19. but that may reſpect trees belonging to a city when beſieged only, or only to Canaanitiſh cities; or the law was now diſpenſed with, and that for this time only, to make the puniſhment of Moab the greater, for their rebellion and other ſins: and ſtop all wells of water; which muſt be very diſtreſſing to thoſe that ſurvived the calamity of the ſword: and mar every good piece of land with ſtones; as that it could not be plowed and ſowed, nor any thing ſpring up and grow upon it.

℣. 20. And it came to paſs in the morning, when the meat-offering was offered, &c.] At Jeruſalem, which always went along with the daily burnt-offering of the lamb, which might not indeed be offered before break of day, yet quickly after; for no ſacrifice could be offered before that, ſee the note on Exod. xxix. 39. that behold, there came water by the way of Edom; not from the heavens, but it may be out of ſome rock rolling along on the earth from the hills and mountains, down into the vallies, where the armies were: and the country was filled with water; all round about them. Who has not heard of the thundering legion, as it was called by the emperor M. Aurelius, who when the army under him was about to engage with the Germans and Sarmatians, and ſadly diſtreſſed with thirſt, fell down on their knees and prayed, upon which a large ſhower of rain came down to the refreſhment of the army, and thunder-bolts, which annoyed and put the enemy to flight [i]? at the battel of the Romans with Jugurtha, a ſudden and unexpected ſhower of rain fell to the refreſhment of the Romans in intolerable thirſt [k].

℣. 21. And when all the Moabites heard that the kings were come up to fight againſt them, &c.] The kings of Iſrael, Judah and Edom: they gathered all that were able to put on armour, and upward; that were of an age capable of that, and all who were more grown; or girt on a girdle [l], a military one, with which the ſword was girt, who were at age to wear, and knew how to wield a ſword: and ſtood in the border; of their land, between Edom and them, to defend themſelves and their country againſt theſe invaders.

℣. 22. And they roſe up early in the morning, &c.] To watch the motions of their enemies, and be upon their guard againſt them: and the ſun ſhone upon the water; with which the valley was filled: and the Moabites ſaw the water on the other ſide as red as blood; ſo it appeared through the rays of the ſun reflected on it.

℣. 23. And they ſaid, this is blood, &c.] They were very confident of it, having no notion of water, there having been no rain for ſome time; and perhaps it was not uſual to ſee water at any time in this place: the kings are ſurely ſlain; they and their forces: and they have ſmitten one another; having quarrelled either about their religion, or about want of water, and the diſtreſs they were come into through it, laying the blame of their coming out to war, or of their coming that way, on one another; and the Moabites might rather think ſomething of this kind had happened, from what had lately been done among themſelves, and their allies, 2 Chron. xx. 23. now therefore Moab to the ſpoil; having no occaſion to fight, or prepare for it; all they had to do was to march directly to the enemy's camp, and plunder it.

℣. 24. And when they came to the camp of Iſrael, &c.] Not in an orderly, regular manner, in rank and file, as an army ſhould march, but in a confuſed manner, every one ſtriving who ſhould get thither firſt, and have the largeſt ſhare of the booty: the Iſraelites roſe up and ſmote the Moabites, ſo that they fled before them; being prepared for them, they fell upon them ſword in hand, and ſoon obliged them to flee: but they went forward ſmiting the Moabites, even in their country; they purſued

[h] Weemſe's Chriſt. Synagog. l. 1. c. 6. §. 4. p. 143.
[i] Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 5. c. 5. Oroſii Hiſt. l. 7. c. 15. p. 120.
[k] Oroſius, ib. l. 5. c. 15. p. 77.
[l] חגר חגרה cingente cingulo, Montanus.

purſued them cloſely, and ſlew them as they fled, and followed them not only to their borders, but into their own country: though Schultens [m], from the uſe of the word נבר in the Arabic language, renders the paſſage, and they blunted their ſwords in it (in that ſlaughter) even by ſmiting the Moabites.

℣. 25. And they beat down the cities, &c.] Demoliſhed the walls of them, and houſes in them, wherever they came: and on every good piece of land caſt every man his ſtone, and filled it; which they had taken out of the walls and houſes they pulled down; or which they picked up in the highway, as they paſſed along, being a ſtony country; or which being laid in heaps, gathered out of the fields, they took and ſcattered them all over them: and they ſtopped all the wells of water; with ſtones and dirt: and felled all the good trees: fruit-bearing ones; ſee the note on ℣. 19. only in Kir-haraſeth left they the ſtones thereof; not able to demoliſh it, it being a ſtrong fortified city, the principal of the kingdom, and into which the king of Moab had thrown himſelf, and the remains of his forces; of which ſee Iſ. xvi. 7, 10. howbeit, the ſlingers went about it, and ſmote it; ſmote the ſoldiers that appeared upon the walls of it; though Kimchi, and other Jewiſh writers, underſtand it of engineers, who caſt out large ſtones from a ſort of machines then in uſe, to batter down and break through the walls of cities.

℣. 26. And when the king of Moab ſaw that the battle was too ſore for him, &c.] The ſiege was ſo cloſe, the ſlingers or engineers did ſo much execution, that he ſaw the city would ſoon be taken, and he be obliged to deliver it up: he took with him 700 men that drew ſwords; men expert in war, bold and daring: to break through, even unto the king of Edom; through his quarters, and ſo eſcape, he lying neareſt to the city, and perhaps the weakeſt body of men with him; or he might think he was not ſo hearty in the cauſe of the kings, and would make but a feeble reſiſtance, and let him paſs: but they could not; break through; they met with a greater oppoſition than was expected; perhaps the Edomites remembered how they had lately uſed them, which made them fight more deſperately againſt them, ſee 2 Chron. xx. 23.

℣. 27. Then he took his eldeſt ſon that ſhould have reigned in his ſtead, &c.] Not the eldeſt ſon of the king of Edom, whom the king of Moab had in his hands before, which made the king of Edom the more willing to join in this expedition for the recovery of his ſon, as Joſeph Kimchi thinks; or whom he took now in his ſally out upon him, as Moſes Kimchi and Ben Gerſom, proceeding upon a miſtaken ſenſe of Amos ii. 1. for the king of Edom could have no ſon that had a right, or was deſigned to ſucceed him, ſince he was but a deputy-king himſelf; and beſides, the ſacrificing of him was not the way to cauſe the kings to raiſe the ſiege, but rather to provoke them to preſs it the more cloſely: it was the king of Moab that took his ſon and heir to the crown, and offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall; that it might be ſeen by the camp of Iſrael, and move their compaſſion; or rather this was done as a religious action, to appeaſe the deity by an human ſacrifice, ſo dear and precious, to give ſucceſs, and cauſe the enemy to break up the ſiege; and was either offered to the true God, the God of Iſrael, in imitation of Abraham, as ſome Jewiſh writers fancy [n], or to his idol Chemoſh, the ſun; and Jarchi obſerves, out of an expoſition of theirs, that vau is wanting in the word for wall, and ſo may be interpreted of the ſun, towards which this burnt-offering was offered; and it is obſerved from various heathen authors, that it was uſual with the heathens, when in calamity and diſtreſs, to offer up to their gods what was moſt dear and valuable to them; and particularly the Phœnicians [o], and from them the Carthaginians had this cuſtom, who at one time offered up 200 ſons of their nobility, to appeaſe their gods [p]: and there was great indignation againſt Iſrael; not of the king of Edom againſt them, for not reſcuing his ſon, or becauſe they were the means of this diſaſter which befel him; but of the king of Moab, who was quite deſperate, and determined to hold out the ſiege to the utmoſt extremity: and they departed, and returned to their own land; the three kings, the one to Edom, the other to Iſrael, and the third to Judah; when they ſaw the Moabites would ſell their lives ſo dear, and hold out to the laſt man, they thought fit to break up the ſiege; and perhaps were greatly affected with the barbarous ſhocking ſight they had ſeen, and might fear ſhould they ſtay, ſomething elſe of the like kind would be done.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter treats of the miracles of Eliſha, of his multiplying a poor widow's pot of oil for the payment of her huſband's debts, ℣. 1—7. of obtaining a ſon for a Shunamitiſh woman, who had been very hoſpitable to him, ℣. 8—17. of his raiſing up her ſon to life when dead, ℣. 18—37. of his curing the deadly pottage made of wild gourds, ℣. 38—41. and of his feeding 100 men with 20 barley loaves, ℣. 42—44.

℣. 1. Now there cried a certain woman of the wives of the ſons of the prophets unto Eliſha, &c.] This, according to the Targum, was the wife of Obadiah, who had hid the prophets by 50 in a cave in the times of Ahab; and ſo Joſephus [q], and it is the commonly received notion of the Jewiſh writers; though it does not appear that he was a prophet, or the ſon of a prophet, but the governor or ſteward of Ahab's houſe; ſhe was more likely to be the wife of a meaner perſon; and from hence it is clear, that the prophets, and their diſciples married: ſaying, thy ſervant, my huſband, is dead; which is the lot of prophets, as well as others, Zech. i. 5. and thou knoweſt that thy ſervant did fear the Lord; her huſband was well known to the prophet, and known to be a good man, one of the 7000 who bowed not the knee to Baal, for the truth of which ſhe appeals to Eliſha; and this character character she gives of her husband, lest it should be thought that his poverty, and leaving her in debt, were owing to any ill practices of his: and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen; which it seems were allowed of when men became poor and insolvent, and died so, to which the allusion is in Isa. l. 1. Matt. xviii. 25. see the note there. Josephus [r] suggests, that the insolvency of this man was owing to his borrowing money to feed the prophets hid in the cave; and it is a common notion of the Jews, that this creditor was Jehoram the son of Ahab; and in after-times it was a law with the Athenians [s], that if a father had not paid what he was mulcted in court, the son was obliged to pay it, and in the mean while to lie in bonds, as was the case of Cimon [t], and others.

[m] De Defect. Hod. Ling. Heb. §. 26. [n] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 39. 2. Peſikta in Abarbinel in loc. [o] Vid. Euſeb. Evangel. præpar. l. 1. c. 10. p. 40. l. 4. c. 16. p. 156. Porphyr. de Abſtinentia, l. 2. §. 56. Vid. Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 28. [p] Diodor. Sicul. Bibliothec. l. 20. p. 756. [q] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 4. § 2.

℣. 2. And Elisha said unto her, what shall I do for thee? &c.] Or can I do, being poor himself, and unable to relieve her out of his substance, and not knowing where to get any thing for her; and so what could she expect from him; signifying, that he pitied her case, but all that he could do was to give her his best advice, and pray for her: tell me what thou hast in thy house? that she could part with and dispose of, in order to pay her debt, and satisfy her creditor: and she said, thine handmaid hath not any thing in the house, save a pot of oil; that is, nothing of any value; she might have some things, some sort of houshold goods, though perhaps she had parted with most of them in her poverty; this was the most valuable thing she had.

℣. 3. Then he said, go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, &c.] For he perceived that she had none: even empty vessels; which they might more readily lend her: borrow not a few; but as many as she could get; the prophet, under a divine impulse was directed to say this to her, foreseeing by a spirit of prophecy, that a large quantity of oil would be given her.

℣. 4. And when thou art come in, &c.] Into her house: thou shalt shut the door upon thee, and upon thy sons; that they might be alone in the house while the miracle was working; that they might not be interrupted in what they were to do, by the creditor coming in upon them, or by neighbours, who would be for getting the oil from them in the vessels they had lent them; and that the miracle might appear the plainer, no oil being brought into the house by any: and shalt pour out into all these vessels; out of the single pot of oil into all they borrowed: and thou shalt set aside that which is full; by itself, and fill the rest of the empty ones.

℣. 5. So she went from him, &c.] And did as he advised her, borrowed many empty vessels of her neighbours, having faith in what the prophet had said to her: and shut the door upon her, and upon her sons; and then went to work as she was directed, with her sons: who brought the vessels to her; the empty ones she had borrowed: and she poured out; the oil out of her pot into them.

℣. 6. And it came to pass when the vessels were full, &c.] For the oil being miraculously increased as it was poured forth, there was enough to fill all the vessels; Ben Gersom and Abarbinel say, that when the pot was emptied, all the air that entered it was turned into oil: that she said to her son, bring me yet a vessel; as she had two sons, one it is probable was employed in setting aside the full vessels, as she poured into them, and the other in bringing to her the empty vessels, and to whom she thus speaks: and he said unto her, there is not a vessel more; not an empty one, they were all filled: and the oil stayed; it ran no longer, it was no more multiplied; there was no necessity of continuing the miracle: this oil may be an emblem of the grace that flows from the fulness of it in Christ, to which it is compared, which will be always flowing, as long as there is a vessel of salvation, or faith in any to receive it; see Matt. xxv. 3. John i. 14, 16. 1 John ii. 20, 27.

℣. 7. Then she came and told the man of God, &c.] Elisha the prophet, what had been done, what a quantity of oil she had, and advised with him what was to done with it: and he said, go, sell thy oil, and pay thy debt; what was thus miraculously produced, was no doubt very good and excellent, and would fetch a good price; and she is therefore bid to turn it into money, and pay her debts with it; she was not to keep it all for her own use, and indulge to luxury with it, but first pay her just debt, as every one ought to do that is able: and live thou and thy children of the rest; so that it seems there was enough to pay her debt with it, rid her of her troubles, and somewhat remaining for the support of herself and children.

℣. 8. And it fell on a day, &c.] Or so it was at a certain time: that Elisha passed to Shunem; a city in the tribe of Issachar; of which see Josh. xix. 18. where was a great woman; of great wealth and riches, of great benevolence and hospitality, and of great grace and piety; that feared sin, as the Targum, paraphrases it; a woman of great credit and reputation on all accounts. The Jews say [u], she was the sister of Abishag the Shunamite, and the mother of Iddo the prophet: and she constrained him to eat bread; she had observed him at all times pass that way, and guessed by his habit and deportment, that he was a religious man, and therefore took an opportunity to invite him into her house, and take a dinner with her; but he being modest and shy, she was obliged to use some pressing language, and be importunate with him, that he would accept of her invitation, which he did: and so it was, that as oft as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread; being made very welcome, and encouraged by the free and kind entertainment he met with, as often as he had occasion to come that way, he called and took a meal with her; and this it seems was pretty often, for Shunem was not far from Carmel, which he frequented, and lay in the way to Samaria, Bethel and Jericho, places he often visited, the schools of the prophets being there.

℣. 9. And she said unto her husband, &c.] Not being willing to do any thing without his leave and consent: behold, now I perceive that this is an holy man of God which passeth by us continually; and calls here frequently; this she perceived by his discourse and conversation; and by his carriage and behaviour he appeared to be a prophet, and one very eminent for holiness and religion.

℣. 10. Let us make a little chamber, I pray thee, on the wall, &c.] Either of the city, to which their house might join, or of their garden, a little distance from the house; though the Jewish writers commonly understand it of a little edifice built up of walls of stone or bricks, and not one with reeds, or stud and mud: let us set for him there a bed;

[r] Ut supra.
[s] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 6. c. 10.
[t] Cornel. Nep. in vita Cimon. l. 5. c. 1.
[u] Pirke Eliezer, c. 33.

bed; that he may ſtay all night when he pleaſes: and a table; not only to eat his food, but to write on, and lay his books on he reads. Of the table of a ſcholar of the wiſemen, in later times, we are told [t], that two-thirds of it were covered with a cloth, and the other third was uncovered, on which ſtood the plates and the herbs: and a ſtool; to ſit upon at table: and a candleſtick; with a candle in it, to light him in the night to read by, and the like: and it ſhall be, when he cometh to us, that he ſhall turn in thither; where he would be free from the noiſe of the houſe, and be more retired for prayer, reading, meditation and ſtudy, and not be diſturbed with the ſervants of the family, and be mixed with them; all this ſhe contrived, both for his honour, and for his quietneſs and peace.

℣. 11. And it fell on a day, that he came thither, &c.] As he had been wont to do: and he turned into the chamber; built for him, and to which he was directed: and lay there; all night, and which no doubt was frequently repeated by him, he accepting of the kindneſs of his hoſt.

℣. 12. And he ſaid to Gehazi his ſervant, &c.] Who attended him wherever he went, and miniſtred to him, and lay very probably in the ſame chamber with him; he might be one of the ſons of the prophets: call this Shunamite; tell her I deſire to ſpeak with her: and when he had called her, ſhe ſtood before him; at the door of the chamber, in great reverence of him, and with much humility, waiting to hear what he had to ſay to her: this muſt be underſtood after what had farther paſſed between Eliſha and Gehazi, and between Gehazi and the woman, who returned to his maſter, and acquainted him with what ſhe had ſaid to him, upon which he was ſent to call her, and ſhe came.

℣. 13. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] To Gehazi, before he went to call her: ſay now unto her, behold, thou haſt been careful for us with all this care; in building a chamber, and furniſhing it with proper houſhold-goods, and providing food for them from time to time: what is to be done for thee? can any thing be thought of by thee that will be acceptable, and in my maſter's power to do for thee, or thy huſband? wouldſt thou be ſpoken for to the king, or to the captain of the hoſt? that her huſband might be promoted to ſome poſt in the court, or in the camp; intimating, that if either of theſe was agreeable, Eliſha would ſpeak on his behalf, having intereſt in both through his ſervices in Edom: and ſhe anſwered, I will dwell among my own people; ſhe was content and ſatisfied with her preſent ſtate of life, and the ſituation ſhe was in, and with her friends and neighbours ſhe lived among, and did not care to remove, though it was to a higher rank of life, and to greater dignity and honour; and ſhe had no ſuit to make to the king or general, nothing to complain of; and ſhe had friends enough to ſpeak for her, ſhould ſhe want any aſſiſtance.

℣. 14. And he ſaid, &c.] That is, Eliſha to Gehazi, when he returned to him, and told him what the Shunamite ſaid: what then is to be done for her? ſomething he thought ſhould be done in gratitude for the favours they had received, and adviſes with his ſervant what could be thought of, he being one about the houſe: and Gehazi anſwered, verily ſhe hath no child, and her huſband is old; and ſo not likely to have any by him; as children were always very deſirable by women, and eſpecially in thoſe days, the ſervant ſuggeſts, that no doubt to have one would be very acceptable to her.

℣. 15. And he ſaid, call her, &c.] Perhaps finding an impulſe on his own mind from the Spirit of God, that this was the thing to be done for her: and when he had called her, ſhe ſtood in the door; of his chamber; ſee the note on ℣. 12.

℣. 16. And he ſaid about this ſeaſon, &c.] In the next year: according to the time of life; the uſual time women go with child: thou ſhalt embrace a ſon; in thine arms, that ſhall be born of thee; which ſhe ſhould have in her lap, and in her boſom: and ſhe ſaid, nay, my lord, do not lie unto thine handmaid; or ſpeak unto her what was not truth; it was ſo great, and ſo unaccountable, how it could be in her circumſtances, that ſhe could not believe it to be true, though ſhe wiſhed it might; or do not deceive me with vain and falſe words, or flatter me, jeſt with me, which would be unbecoming his character as a man of God, and prophet of the Lord; according to the Targum, ſhe wiſhed it might prove true, and ſhe not deceived; ſee ℣. 28.

℣. 17. And the woman conceived, and bare a ſon at the ſeaſon that Eliſha ſaid unto her, &c.] Quickly after this ſhe conceived, and became pregnant, and by that time the year came round, ſhe was brought to bed of a ſon: according to the time of life; when ſhe had gone her full time to have a ſon born alive, and live.

℣. 18. And when the child was grown, &c.] Perhaps was ſix or ſeven years of age, or more: it fell on a day that he went out to his father to the reapers; it was harveſt-time, and the men were reaping the corn in the fields; and his father, tho' a wealthy man, was with them to direct them, and ſee they did their buſineſs well, as Boaz formerly; and the child went out from the houſe to the field, to ſee his father and the reapers, for his recreation and diverſion.

℣. 19. And he ſaid unto his father, my head, my head, &c.] After he had been ſome time with him, he complained of a pain in his head, which might be owing, as Abarbinel thinks, to the ſun's beating upon it, being harveſt-time, and hot weather; and the pain being exceeding great and vehement, he repeated his complaint, ſee Jer. iv. 19. and he ſaid to a lad, carry him home to his mother; his father gave orders to a lad that attended the reapers, to have him home to his mother, that ſhe might give him ſomething to eaſe him of his pain.

℣. 20. And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, &c.] The lad led him home, and delivered him to his mother: he ſat on her knees till noon, and then died; out of her great affection, ſhe took him on her knees, and laid his head in her boſom to ſooth the pain, and in this poſture he continued until the middle of the day, and then expired; by which it appears, it was in the morning when he went into the field, and when the ſun was pretty high, and beat ſtrongly on him; which, it may be, produced a fever, and which iſſued in his death.

℣. 21. And ſhe went up, &c.] Into the little chamber built for the prophet: and laid him on the bed of the man of God; not from any imagination of any virtue in it, to bring her child to life; though ſhe might think of the prophet, and have faith that he could raiſe it to life, as Elijah raiſed the widow of Zarephath's ſon laid on his bed, of which which she might have heard; but this being a private room, and into which none went, she laid it here to conceal its death from her husband and family, and to prevent grief, and that they might not bury it until she returned: and shut the door upon him; that no creature might enter, and do any damage to his corps: and went out; not out of the chamber, that she did before she shut the door, but out of the house.

[t] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 57. 2.

℣. 22. And she called unto her husband, &c.] In the field, who might be within call, or by a messenger she sent to him: and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God, and come again; intimating that she should not be long gone, but should return again presently; saying not a word of the death of the child, or of the occasion of her going.

℣. 23. And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? &c.] What reason is there for it? what is the meaning of it? it is neither new-moon, nor sabbath; neither the first day of the month, nor the seventh day of the week, times which were religiously observed; so with the heathens the new moon and the 7th of the week, and so the 4th were sacred [u]; which notions they borrowed from the Jews, see the note on 1 Sam. xx. 5. and when, it seems, it was usual to frequent the house of the prophet, to hear the word of God read and explained, and other religious exercises performed, as praying and singing praise, and receiving some good instructions and advice. Joseph Kimchi gives a different sense of these words: "there is not a month past, no not a week, since thou sawest him;" why therefore shouldst thou be in such haste to go to him? so the words for new-moon and sabbath may signify: and she said, It shall be well; it was right for her to go, and it would be well for him and her, and the family; or, peace [w], be easy and quiet, farewel: it is much he had no mistrust of the death of the child, or that it was worse, since it went from him ill.

℣. 24. Then she saddled an ass, &c.] Her servant did it by her order: and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward; make all the haste he could: slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee; don't be afraid of riding too fast for me; if thou dost, I'll tell thee; till then, keep on a good pace: Abarbinel says she walked a-foot all the way, and ordered the man not to slacken his pace in riding for her, unless she called to him; and the Targum seems to favour this sense, "don't press me to ride unless I call to thee;" so that the ass was for Elijah to ride on; but one would think, that as she was in haste, quicker dispatch would be made by her riding than by walking, see ℣. 22.

℣. 25. So she went, and came unto the man of God at mount Carmel, &c.] Where Elijah used to be, and where perhaps was a school of the prophets; this, according to Bunting [x], was 16 miles from Shunem: and it came to pass when the man of God saw her afar off; as he might from the eminence of the mountain: that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunamite; that has so often and so hospitably entertained us at her house.

℣. 26. Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, &c.] In respect to her, and to know the occasion of her coming; something is the cause of it: and say unto her, Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? has any disaster befallen thee, thy husband, or the child? are all in good health? or does any disorder attend any of them? and she answered, It is well; as in general they were, the greatest part; she and her husband; and though the child was dead, yet, if gone to heaven, as she might hope, it was well too; and it is right to judge and say, that all that the Lord does is well: she gives a short answer to the servant, not being willing to be detained, and being desirous of telling her case to the prophet himself.

℣. 27. And when she came to the man of God to the hill, &c.] To the top of it: she caught him by the feet; in reverence to him, and, as a supplicant, she prostrated herself at his feet, and, out of affection to him, caught hold on them, and held them fast, and determined not to leave him, until he had promised to go with her, see Matt. xxviii. 9. It was usual with the Jews to lay hold on and kiss the feet or knees of those to whom they did homage, or made supplication, see Matt. xxviii. 9. Luke vii. 38. and the note there; and so with the Greeks, as may be observed in various passages in Homer [y] and others: but Gehazi came near to thrust her away; as being troublesome and disagreeable to his master, and not for her honour and credit: and the man of God said, Let her alone, for her soul is vexed within her; or is bitter [z], full of trouble and distress, and knows not what to do, nor very well what she does: and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me; what is the cause of this her trouble; for prophets did not know things of themselves, nor had they the vision of prophecy at their will and pleasure, but according to the will of God.

℣. 28. Then she said, Did I desire a son of my lord? &c.] It was not at her request she had one, at least the first motion was not from her; the prophet first told her, and assured her she should have one, without her asking for it; she might be pleased with it, and desire the promise might be fulfilled; but it was not an inordinate, importunate desire of one, in which she had exceeded, that so the taking it away from her might be a correction of her for it: did I not say, Do not deceive me? by giving hopes of a child, and yet have none; and now it was equally the same, or worse, to have one, and then to have it taken away again as soon as had almost; so the Targum, "Did I not say unto thee, if a child is given me, let it live, if not, don't trouble or grieve me;" and then, no doubt, she told him plainly the child was dead, and where she had laid it, though not recorded.

℣. 29. Then he said to Gehazi, Gird up thy loins, &c.] His loose and long garments about him, that he might make quicker dispatch in travelling: and take my staff in thine hand, and go thy way; not for the sake of travelling with it, but for an end after-mentioned: if thou meet any man, salute him not; and if any salute thee, answer him not again; that so no time may be lost: and lay my staff upon the face of the child; he not intending when he said this to go himself, but at the time, as near as he could, when this action was performed, would pray to God to restore life to the child; for he could not imagine that by this bare action it could be done.

℣. 30. And the mother of the child said, &c.] Having no faith in what the servant was to do, or could do: As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee; signifying she would not go with [u] Hesiod Opera & Dies, l. 2.

[y] Vid. Barthium ad Claudian. de raptu Proserpin. l. i. ℣. 50.
[w] שלום pax, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. מרה amara, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.
[x] Travels, &c. p. 207.

with his ſervant, but inſiſted upon it, that he himſelf went with her, or ſhe would not depart: and he aroſe, and followed her; influenced by her importunity, and a ſenſe of favours he had received from her, and more eſpecially by the Spirit of God.

℣. 31. And Gehazi paſſed on before them, &c.] The prophet and the Shunamite: and laid the ſtaff upon the face of the child; as he was ordered: but there was neither voice nor hearing; it ſeems as if he ſpoke when he laid the ſtaff on the child, but it heard and anſwered him not, ſo that there was no ſign of life in it: wherefore he went again to meet him; upon the road between Carmel and Shunem: and told him, ſaying, The child is not awaked; by which he expreſſes its being dead; or, if he knew nothing of its death, he ſuppoſed it faſt aſleep, which was the reaſon of its not hearing and anſwering, though the former ſeems beſt.

℣. 32. And when Eliſha was come into the houſe, &c.] Of the Shunamite, and into the chamber built for him: behold, the child was dead, and laid upon the bed; upon his bed, and where he found it really dead.

℣. 33. He went in therefore, and ſhut the door upon them twain, &c.] Himſelf and the dead child; that no body might come in and interrupt him in his prayers for the reſtoration of it to life, nor ſee the motions and geſtures he uſed, and the poſtures he put himſelf in: and prayed unto the Lord; that he would reſtore the child to life.

℣. 34. And he went up, &c.] To the bed, which was on an aſcent in the chamber, ſee the note on ch. i. 4. and lay upon the child; as Elijah did on the widow's ſon of Zarephath, 1 Kings xvii. 21. and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands, and ſtretched himſelf upon the child; that is, he did each of theſe one after another, ſince the diſproportion of their bodies would not admit of their being done together: and the fleſh of the child waxed warm; not from any virtue imparted to it by theſe motions and actions of the prophet, but from life being infuſed into it by the Lord, which cauſed an heat in the ſeveral parts of the body.

℣. 35. Then he returned and walked in the houſe to and fro, &c.] Left the chamber, and came down to the houſe where the family chiefly reſided, and walked to and fro in deep thought and meditation, and, no doubt, in fervent ejaculations for the wiſhed-for bleſſing to be compleated: and went up; to the chamber again, and up to the bed in it: and ſtretched himſelf upon him; as before: and the child neeſed ſeven times; which was a ſign of life, and even of health; and hereby his head was cleared, as ſome obſerve, of thoſe humours that had cauſed the pains in it [a], and had iſſued in death: and the child opened his eyes; upon the prophet, another ſign of life.

℣. 36. And he called Gehazi, and ſaid, Call this Shunamite, &c.] To come up to the chamber to him: ſo he called her: and when ſhe was come in unto him, he ſaid, Take up thy ſon; from off the bed, alive, ſafe, and ſound.

℣. 37. Then ſhe went in, and fell at his feet, and bowed herſelf to the ground, &c.] In reverence of him, and with the moſt profound gratitude and thankfulneſs for the mercy received: and took up her ſon, and went out; of the chamber into her houſe, with great joy and gladneſs.

℣. 38. And Eliſha came again to Gilgal, &c.] Where he was with Elijah a little before his aſſumption to heaven, ch. ii. 1. and whither he went, there being a ſchool of the prophets, as he did to all places where there were any, and where he had been before with Elijah; partly to inſtruct, encourage, and ſtrengthen them, and partly to confirm his office as a prophet by miracles, which he did in ſeveral places he came to: and there was a dearth in the land; a famine through drought; and the ſons of the prophets were ſitting before him; as diſciples before their maſter, ſee Acts xxii. 3. and he ſaid unto his ſervant; very probably Gehazi: Set on the great pot, and ſeethe pottage for the ſons of the prophets; who ſeemed to have lived together in one houſe or college, and to be to the number of 100, ſee ℣. 43. and therefore required to have a large pot ſet on to boil pottage for them all.

℣. 39. And one went out into the fields to gather herbs, &c.] To put into the pottage, the gardens affording none in this time of dearth; or, however, being ſcarce, were at too great a price for the ſons of the prophets to purchaſe them, and therefore one of them went out into the field to gather what common herbs he could: and found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap-full; thought to be the ſame with Coloquintida, the leaves of which are very like to a vine, of a very bitter taſte, and a very violent purgative, which, if not remedied, will produce ulcerations in the bowels, and iſſue in death; ſome think the white bryar or white vine is meant, the colour of whoſe berries is very inviting to look at, but very bitter and ungrateful, and it vehemently purges [b]; the Arabs call a ſort of muſhroom that is white and ſoft by this name [c], but cannot be meant here, becauſe it has no likeneſs to a wild vine: and came and ſhred them into the pot of pottage; cut or chopped them ſmall, and put them into the pot: for they knew them not; what they were, the nature and virtue of them, being unſkilful in botany.

℣. 40. So they poured out for the men to eat, &c.] When the pottage was boiled, they poured it out into diſhes or baſons, for the ſons of the prophets to eat: and it came to paſs as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and ſaid, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot; poiſon, the cauſe of death; the pottage was ſo exceeding bitter, that they concluded there muſt be ſome poiſonous herb in it; and Coloquintida is ſo bitter, that it is called the gall of the earth: and they could not eat thereof: they left off eating, it being ſo very diſagreeable, and, as they ſuppoſed, dangerous.

℣. 41. But he ſaid, Then bring meal: and he caſt it into the pot, &c.] And ſtirred it about in it; and he ſaid, Pour out for the people, that they may eat; as they now might freely, and without any danger, as he intimated: and there was no harm in the pot; or any thing that could do any hurt or miſchief to the health of men: this was not owing to the natural virtue of meal, but to a miraculous power attending it, whereby the pottage was cured of its malignity, as the bad waters of Jericho were by ſalt, in a preceding miracle.

℣. 42. And there came a man from Baal-ſhaliſha, &c.] Of which place ſee the note on 1 Sam. ix. 4. the the Targum is from the ſouth country: and brought the man of God bread of the firſt-fruits, 20 loaves of barley; ſo that it was now barley-harveſt, and this the firſt-fruits of it, which, according to the law, Lev. xxiii. 10. was to be brought to the prieſt; but being forbid in the land of Iſrael going up to Jeruſalem, religious men brought their firſt-fruits to the prophets, and here to Eliſha, the father of them; believing it would be diſpenſed with, and acceptable, ſince they were not allowed to carry them to the proper perſon; and in this time of famine was very agreeable to the man of God, ſuppoſing it only a preſent: and full ears of corn in the huſk thereof; theſe were green ears of corn, which they uſed to parch; but might not be eaten until the firſt-fruits were offered, and then they might, Lev. xxiii. 14. the Targum renders it, in his garment, in the ſkirt of his clothes; and to the ſame purpoſe are the Syriac and Arabic verſions; and ſo Jarchi interprets it; and Ben Gerſom ſays, it ſignifies ſome veſſel in which he brought them: and he ſaid, Give unto the people that they may eat; Eliſha did not reſerve this offering or preſent for himſelf, but as he had freely received, he freely gave.

[a] Vid. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 28. c. 6. Ariſtot. Problem. §. 33. qu. 9. p. 605, 606. [b] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 3, [c] Golius, col. 1817.

℣. 43. And his ſervitour ſaid, &c.] His ſervant Gehazi very probably: What, ſhould I ſet this before 100 men? for ſo many, it ſeems, the ſons of the prophets were in this place; and theſe loaves being very ſmall, no more, it is thought by ſome, than one man could eat, and the ears of corn but few, the ſervant ſuggeſts they would be nothing comparatively to ſuch a company of men: he ſaid again, Give the people that they may eat; he inſiſted upon it that his orders ſhould be obeyed; for thus ſaith the Lord, They ſhall eat, and ſhall leave thereof; it was ſuggeſted to him by a ſpirit of prophecy, there would be enough for them, and to ſpare.

℣. 44. So he ſet it before them, &c.] The twenty barley-loaves, and the full ears of corn: and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the Lord; as the diſciples did at the miracle of the loaves and fiſhes; though that muſt be allowed to be a greater miracle than this, Matt. xiv. 17—21.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter gives an account of the leproſy of Naaman the Syrian, and of the cure of it by Eliſha; how he came to hear of him, and the recommendation he had from the king of Syria to the king of Iſrael, ℣. 1—8. who, coming to Eliſha's houſe, was ordered to dip himſelf ſeven times in Jordan, which made him depart in wrath; but one of his ſervants perſuaded him to do it, and he did, and was cured, ℣. 9—14. upon which he returned to Eliſha, and offered him a preſent, which he refuſed, ℣. 15—19. but Gehazi, his ſervant, ran after him with a lie in his mouth, and obtained it, and returned to his maſter with another, for which he was ſmitten with the leproſy of Naaman, ℣. 20—27.

℣. 1. Now Naaman captain of the hoſt of the king of Syria, &c.] The general of Benhadad's army; for he was now king of Syria, though ſome think Hazael his ſucceſſor was: was a great man with his maſter; high in his favour and eſteem: and honourable; not only acceptable to the king, and loaded with honours by him, but greatly reſpected by all ranks and degrees among the people: becauſe by him the Lord had given deliverance unto Syria; out of the hands of their enemies, and victory over them, and particularly in the laſt battle with Iſrael, in which Ahab was ſlain, and, as the Jews ſuppoſe, by the hands of Naaman, ſee the note on 1 Kings xxii. 34. however, when any ſalvation is wrought, or victory obtained, even by heathens, and by them over Iſrael, the people of God, it was of the Lord: he was alſo a mighty man in valour; a very courageous, valiant man: but he was a leper; was ſtricken with the leproſy, which had deformed and diſgraced his perſon, and weakened his ſtrength, and diſpirited him; all his grandeur and honour could not protect him from this loathſome diſeaſe.

℣. 2. And the Syrians had gone out by companies, &c.] Not regular troops, but a ſort of banditti of robbers, which made excurſions into the land of Iſrael, to plunder and carry off what booty they could: and had brought away captive out of the land of Iſrael a little maid; for boys and girls were a part of the booty of ſuch robbers, whom they could ſell for money, ſee Joel iii. Jarchi and Kimchi ſay ſhe was a girl of Naaron, a city ſo called: and ſhe waited on Naaman's wife; being either made a preſent of to the general by thoſe plunderers, or was bought by him of them for his wife's ſervice.

℣. 3. And ſhe ſaid unto her miſtreſs, &c.] As ſhe was waiting upon her at a certain time, and perhaps her miſtreſs was lamenting the caſe of her huſband as deſperate and incurable: Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria; meaning Eliſha, who, though ſometimes in one place, and ſometimes in another, yet often at Samaria, and it ſeems was there when this girl was taken captive: for he would recover him of his leproſy; the maid had heard of the miracles wrought by Eliſha, and doubted not that at the requeſt of her lord he would be willing, as ſhe believed he was able, to cure him of this diſeaſe.

℣. 4. And one went in and told his Lord, &c.] What the girl had ſaid to her miſtreſs; one of the ſervants of the houſe that overheard it; or rather, Naaman went and told his lord the king of Syria; for as this was ſaid to his wife, no doubt ſhe told it to her huſband, and not a ſervant; and the following words require this ſenſe, and is the ſenſe of moſt Jewiſh commentators: ſaying, Thus and thus ſaid the maid that is of the land of Iſrael; who for her wit and beauty might be well known at court by the name of the Iſraelitiſh girl.

℣. 5. And the king of Syria ſaid, Go to, go, &c.] On what Naaman related to him from what the maid had ſaid, he urged him by all means to go directly to Samaria: and I will ſend a letter unto the king of Iſrael; recommending him to uſe his intereſt in his behalf; this was Jehoram the ſon of Ahab: and he departed; ſet out on his journey immediately, as ſoon as he could conveniently: and took with him 10 talents of ſilver, and 6000 pieces of gold; partly for the expences of his journey, and partly to make preſents to the king of Iſrael's ſervants, and eſpecially to the prophet; a talent of ſilver, according to Brerewood [d], was 375 pounds of our money; but, according to biſhop Cumberland's [e] exact calculation, it was 353*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* ½ the pieces of gold are, by the Targum, called golden pence, and a golden penny, according to the firſt of the above writers [f], was, of the value of our money 15 ſhillings; ſo that theſe amounted to 4500 pounds ſterling: and ten changes of raiment: both for his own uſe, and for preſents.

[d] De ponder. & pret. vet. num. c. 4.

℣. 6. And he brought the letter to the king of Iſrael, ſaying, &c.] The contents of which were ſo far as it concerned Naaman and his caſe, which are only obſerved, theſe: Now when this letter is come unto thee; was received by him: behold, I have therewith ſent Naaman my ſervant unto thee; the bearer of it: that thou mayeſt recover him of his leproſy; meaning not he himſelf, but that he would recommend him to the care of a proper perſon, his prophet, and enjoin him to do the beſt he could for him; but the king of Iſrael miſtook his meaning, as appears by what follows.

℣. 7. And it came to paſs, when the king of Iſrael had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, &c.] As one in great diſtreſs, being thrown into perplexity of mind by it, not knowing what to do; or, as ſome think, at the blaſphemy he ſuppoſed to be in it, requiring that of him which only God could do: and ſaid, Am I God, to kill and to make alive; or have the power of life and death, which only belongs to the Supreme Being: that this man doth ſend unto me to recover a man of his leproſy; for a leper was reckoned as one dead, his diſeaſe incurable, his fleſh upon him being mortified by it, ſee Numb. xii. 12. and therefore not ſuppoſed to be in the power of man, only of God, to cure; and therefore, in Iſrael, none had any thing to do with the leper but the prieſt, in the name of God: wherefore conſider, I pray you, and ſee how he ſeeketh a quarrel againſt me; to pick a quarrel with him, in order to go to war with him as he ſuppoſed. This ſeems to have been ſpoken to his lords and courtiers about him.

℣. 8. And it was ſo, when Eliſha the man of God had heard that the king of Iſrael had rent his clothes, &c.] And upon what account: that he ſent to the king, ſaying, Wherefore haſt thou rent thy clothes? and thereby expreſſed ſo much concern and diſtreſs: let him come now to me; meaning Naaman the Syrian leper: and he ſhall know that there is a prophet in Iſrael; able in the name of the Lord to work miracles, which he ſhould be ſenſible of and acknowledge, to the glory of the God of Iſrael, by the cure that ſhould be wrought upon him; and hereby he taxed the king of Iſrael with ignorance or neglect of him as a prophet.

℣. 9. So Naaman came with his horſes, and with his chariot, &c.] In his chariot drawn by horſes; or with horſemen and chariots, a great retinue both for his own grandeur, and for the honour of the prophet, and to make him the more reſpectable by him: and ſtood at the door of the houſe of Eliſha; who now dwelt at Gilgal, as is probable, ſee ch. iv. 38. hither Naaman was directed, and here he ſtopped; and having ſent a meſſenger to Eliſha to acquaint him who he was, and what was his buſineſs, he ſtayed waiting for an anſwer.

℣. 10. And Eliſha ſent a meſſenger unto him, &c.] Or returned an anſwer by Naaman's meſſenger; he did not go out to him, chuſing to be retired, as he commonly did; and being perhaps employed in prayer for the cure; and it may be alſo to ſhew his contempt of, or little regard he had to worldly grandeur and honour, as well as to mortify the pride of Naaman: ſaying, go and waſh in Jordan ſeven times; ſo according to the law of the cleanſing the leper, he was to be ſprinkled ſeven times, and on the ſeventh day his fleſh was to be bathed or dipped all over in water, which is meant by waſhing here, Lev. xiv. 7, 9. and thy fleſh ſhall come again to thee; which was eaten and conſumed by the diſeaſe on him: and thou ſhalt be clean; freed from this pollution, or filthy diſeaſe, with which he was defiled; for a leper was reckoned unclean, Lev. xiii. 3.

℣. 11. But Naaman was wroth with him, &c.] On more accounts than one: and went away; not to Jordan, but from the prophet's houſe, with an intention to return to his own country: behold, I thought he will ſurely come out to me; this he ſaid within himſelf, making no doubt of it, but that he would ſhew him ſo much reſpect and civility as to come out of his houſe to him, and converſe with him, or invite him into it; and not doing this, was one thing made him wroth: and ſtand; he ſuppoſed that he would not only come out, but ſtand before him, as inferiors before their ſuperiors in reverence, but inſtead of that he remained ſitting within doors: and call on the name of the Lord his God; he expected, that as he was a prophet of the Lord, that he would have prayed to him for the cure of him: and ſtrike his hand over the place; wave his hand to and fro, as the word ſignifies, over the place of the leproſy, as the Targum, over the place affected with it; or towards the place where he worſhipped the Lord, as Ben Gerſom, toward the temple at Jeruſalem; or towards Jordan, the place where he bid him go and waſh, as Abarbinel; but the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt: and recover the leper; meaning himſelf, heal him by the uſe of ſuch means and rites.

℣. 12. Are not Abana and Pharphar, rivers of Damaſcus, better than all the waters of Iſrael, &c.] Abana is in the marginal reading, called Amana, and ſo the Targum; perhaps from the mount Amana, from whence it ſprung, a mountain in Syria [g], mentioned with Lebanon, Cant. iv. 8. This river is thought to be the Chryſorrhoas of Pliny [h], and other writers; there are no traces of its name, or of the following, to be met with now; the only river by Damaſcus is called Barrady, which ſupplies Damaſcus and its gardens, and makes them ſo fruitful and pleaſant as they be; it pours down from the mountains, as Mr. Maundrel [i] deſcribes it, and is divided into three ſtreams, of which the middlemoſt and biggeſt runs directly to Damaſcus, thro' a large field, called the field of Damaſcus; and the other two are drawn round, the one to the right-hand, and the other to the left, on the borders of the gardens. Pharphar is thought [k] to be the river Orontes, which runs cloſe to the walls of Antioch, and courſes through its large and ſpacious plain, being numbered among the rivers of Syria; it takes its riſe from Lebanon, and ſliding through the ſaid plain, falls into the Syrian ſea. Benjamin of Tudela [l] ſpeaks of theſe rivers under their ſcripture-names; Abana or Amana, as he ſays, paſſes through the city, and ſupplies the houſes of great men with water through wooden pipes; and Pharphar is without the city, and runs among the gardens

[e] Scripture-weights and meaſures, c. 4. p. 120. [f] Ut ſupra, c 3. [g] Tacit. Annal. l. 2. c. 83. [h] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 18. [i] Journey from Aleppo, p. 122, 123. [k] Cartwright's Preacher's Ils. p. 7, 8. Hiller. Onomaſt. Sacr. p. 908, [l] Itinerar. p. 55.

Trave

gardens and orchards, and waters them. Farfar is alſo the name of a river in Italy [m]: may I not waſh in them, and be clean? as well as in Jordan; or rather, ſince they are better waters, and ſo not have been at this trouble and expence to come hither; or have I not waſhed in them every day? I have, and am I clean? I am not; which is the ſenſe the ſeveral Jewiſh writers give [n]: ſo he turned, and went away in a rage; in a great paſſion, ſwearing and curſing perhaps, ordering his chariot-driver to turn and be gone at once.

℣. 13. And his ſervant came near, and ſpake unto him, and ſaid, my father, &c.] Or my lord, as the Targum; this being not a familiar and affectionate expreſſion, but a term of honour, reverence and ſubmiſſion: if the prophet had bid thee do ſome great thing, wouldſt thou not have done it? ſomething that was hard and difficult to be done, or painful to bear, to go through ſome ſevere operation, or diſagreeable courſe of phyſick: how much rather then when he ſaith to thee, waſh, and be clean? which is ſo eaſy to be done; though Abarbinel obſerves it may be interpreted, the prophet has bid thee do a great thing, and which is wonderful; for though he has ſaid, waſh and be clean, conſider it a great thing, and which is a wonderful myſtery, and therefore don't deſpiſe his cure.

℣. 14. Then went he down, and dipped himſelf ſeven times in Jordan, according to the ſaying of the man of God, &c.] He liſtened to the reaſoning of his ſervant, and his paſſion ſubſided, and did as the prophet ordered him: and his fleſh came again like unto the fleſh of a little child; clear and freſh, ſoft and tender as an infant, quite new fleſh: and he was clean; from the leproſy, and all the filthy ſymptoms of it.

℣. 15. And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, &c.] To give him thanks for the advice he had given him, and by him to give thanks to God for the cure he had received; for he was ſenſible it was from the Lord, as his words ſhow: and came and ſtood before him; for being admitted into the prophet's houſe, inſtead of the prophet ſtanding before him, as he before expected, he now ſtood before the prophet in veneration of him, and ſenſible of his obligation to him: behold, now I know there is no God in all the earth, but in Iſrael; though he did not before, but his cure fully convinced him of it: I pray thee, take a bleſſing of thy ſervant; not a wiſh of health and happineſs, which the prophet would not have refuſed, but a preſent; the Targum calls it an offering.

℣. 16. But he ſaid, as the Lord liveth, before whom I ſtand, &c.] Whoſe miniſter and prophet he was, and by whom he ſwears: I will receive none; to let him know that this cure was not to be attributed to him, but the Lord only; and that what concern he had in it was not for the ſake of money, but for the glory of the God of Iſrael: and he urged him to take it, but he refuſed it; Naaman was very preſſing upon him to receive a gift from him, but he could not be prevailed upon to accept it.

℣. 17. And Naaman ſaid, ſhall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy ſervant two mules burden of earth? &c.] Not that he deſired of Eliſha that he would ſuffer his ſervant Gehazi to receive a preſent as much as two mules could carry; but inaſmuch as the prophet refuſed a preſent from him, his ſervant, he aſks a favour of him, that he would permit him to take with him, out of the land of Iſrael, as much earth as two mules could carry, that is, to make an altar of earth, as the next words indicate: but as he might have this any where without the prophet's leave, ſome Jewiſh writers [o] think he requeſted it from his own houſe, and from the place his feet trod on, as conceiving in a ſuperſtitious way that there was a ſort of holineſs in it; or however, that whereſoever he had it, if with the prophet's leave, a bleſſing would go with it, or that would be a ſort of a conſecration of it; and having an altar made of the earth of this land, would ſhew that he was in the faith of the ſame God, and performed the ſame worſhip to him Iſrael did: for thy ſervant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering, nor ſacrifice unto other gods, but unto the Lord; hence the Jews ſay, he became a proſelyte of righteouſneſs [p], embraced the true religion, and the worſhip of the true God, according to the laws given to Iſrael; and the following words rightly underſtood, confirm the ſame.

℣. 18. In this thing the Lord pardon thy ſervant, &c.] Which he next mentions, and on account of which he deſires the prayers of Eliſha for him, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; or it may be, this is a prayer of his own, put up at this time to the true Jehovah, in whom he believed: that when my maſter; meaning the king of Syria: goeth into the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myſelf in the houſe of Rimmon; when I bow down myſelf in the houſe of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy ſervant in this thing; the houſe of Rimmon was a temple of an idol of that name; what idol it was is not eaſy to ſay; the Septuagint verſion calls it Remman, thought by ſome to be the ſame with Remphan, Acts vii. 43. a name of Saturn, ſaid to be given him from a Greek word, which ſignifies to wander [q], he being placed among the wandering ſtars in the ſupreme heavens; which is not likely, for the word is certainly of a Syriac ſignification, and comes either from רום which ſignifies high, and ſo the ſame with Elioun, the Phœnician deity, called the moſt high [r]; or as Rimmon is uſed for a pomegranate, this is thought to deſign the Syrian goddeſs, to whom this ſort of fruit was ſacred; or Juno, whoſe ſtatue in her temple at Mycenas [s], had a pomegranate in one hand; or rather this Rimmon was Jupiter Caſſius, ſo called from mount Caſſius, which divided Syria from Egypt, who is painted with his hand ſtretched out, and a pomegranate in it [t]; and may be the ſame with Caphtor, the father of the Caphtorim, Gen. x. 14. who might be deified after his death, their names, Rimmon and Caphtor, being of the ſame ſignification [u]. But be this deity as it may, it was worſhipped by the Syrians; and when the king of Syria went in to worſhip, he uſed to lean upon the hand of one of his officers, either being lame, or for ſtate-ſake, in which office Naaman was; and his requeſt to the prophet, or to the Lord, is, not for pardon for a ſin to be committed; nor to be indulged in his continuance of it; not to worſhip the idol along with his maſter; nor to diſſemble the worſhip of it, when he really worſhipped it not, not; nor to be excuſed any evil in the diſcharge of his poſt and office; but for the pardon of the ſin of idolatry he had been guilty of, of which he was truly ſenſible, now ſincerely acknowledges, and deſires forgiveneſs of; and ſo Dr. Lightfoot [w], and ſome others [x], interpret it; and to this ſenſe the words may be rendered, when my maſter went in to the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, which was his uſual cuſtom; and he leaned on my hand, which was the common form in which he was introduced into it; and I worſhipped in the houſe of Rimmon, as his maſter did, for the ſame word is uſed here as before; in as much, or ſeeing I have worſhipped in the houſe of Rimmon, have been guilty of ſuch groſs idolatry; the Lord, I pray, forgive thy ſervant in this thing; the language of a true penitent.

[m] Servius in Virgil. Æneid. l. 7. p. 1243. [n] Ben Gerſom in loc. & R. Joſeph Kimchi, & R. Jonah in Ben Melech in loc. [o] Ben Gerſom & Abarbinel in loc. [p] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 11. 2. [q] A περιβεσθαι vagari, Heſychius. [r] Vid. Selden. de Dis Syris Syntagm. 2. c. 10. [s] Pauſan. Corinthiac. ſive, l. 2. p. 114. [t] Achilles Tatius, l. 3. Vid. Reland. Paleſtin. Illuſtrat. tom. 2. p. 934. [u] See Clayton's Origin of Hieroglyphicks, p. 113.

℣. 19. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, the prophet ſaid to Naaman: Go in peace; in peace of mind; be aſſured that God has pardoned this and all other tranſgreſſions: ſo he departed from him a little way; about a mile, as the Targum, and ſo other Jewiſh writers; of this phraſe, ſee the note on Gen. xxxv. 16. ſome ſay a land's length, that is, about 120 feet; rather it was 1000 cubits, or half a mile.

℣. 20. But Gehazi the ſervant of Eliſha the man of God ſaid, &c.] Within himſelf, obſerving what had paſſed: Behold, my maſter hath ſpared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought; he ſpeaks contemptibly of Naaman, as an alien from the common-wealth of Iſrael, and reproaches his maſter for letting him go free, without paying for his cure; when he thought he ſhould have taken what he brought and offered, and given it to needy Iſraelites, and eſpecially to the ſons of the prophets, that wanted it; and perhaps it moſtly diſturbed him, that he had no ſhare of it himſelf: but as the Lord liveth, I will run after him, and take ſomewhat of him; the word for ſomewhat wanting a letter uſually in it, is what is ſometimes uſed for a blot; and Jarchi obſerves, that Gehazi taking ſomething from Naaman, was a blot unto him, and indeed ſuch an one that he could not wipe off.

℣. 21. So Gehazi followed after Naaman, &c.] As faſt as he could: and when Naaman ſaw him running after him; which he might obſerve, looking back, or be informed of by ſome of his ſervants: he lighted down from the chariot to meet him; in honour to the prophet, whoſe ſervant he was: and ſaid, Is all well; fearing ſomething ill had befallen Eliſha; or he himſelf had done ſomething wrong, which occaſioned the ſervant to run after him.

℣. 22. And he ſaid, All is well, &c.] He need give himſelf no uneaſineſs at the coming and ſight of him: my maſter hath ſent me, ſaying, Behold, even now there be come to me; juſt then, ſince he departed from him: from mount Ephraim two young men of the ſons of the prophets; where perhaps was a ſchool of them: give them, I pray thee, a talent of ſilver, and two changes of garments; which, as it was a downright lie, ſo highly improbable that Eliſha ſhould aſk ſo large a ſum of money, with two changes of raiment for two young ſcholars, ſee ℣. 5. and which Naaman, with a little reflection, might have ſeen through; but his heart was ſo filled with gratitude for the benefit received, that he was glad of an opportunity, at any rate, of ſhewing reſpect to the prophet.

℣. 23. And Naaman ſaid, Be content, &c.] Or be pleaſed; don't object to it: take two talents; a talent for each young man, which amounted to between 3 and 400 pounds a piece: and he urged; preſſed him hard, inſiſted upon his taking them, who might pretend a great deal of modeſty, and a ſtrict regard to his maſter's orders: and bound two talents of ſilver in two bags, with two changes of garments; for each young man: and laid them upon two of his ſervants; the ſervants of Naaman, not chuſing to burden Eliſha's ſervant with them; for ſuch a quantity of money and clothes was pretty heavy: and they bare them before him; both for his eaſe, and for his honour.

℣. 24. And when he came to the tower, &c.] Of Samaria, or which was near it; a fortified place, and where was a watch, to whom he could ſafely commit the money and clothes: he took them from their hand; not willing they ſhould go any farther with him, leſt the affair ſhould be diſcovered to his maſter: and beſtowed them in the houſe; depoſited them there in the hands of ſome perſon whom he could truſt; or laid them out, or ordered them to be laid out, in the purchaſe of houſes, lands, vineyards, &c. ſee ℣. 26. and he let the men go, and they departed; to their maſter.

℣. 25. But he went in, and ſtood before his maſter, &c.] To know his will, and miniſter to him, as he had uſed to do, and as if he had never been from the houſe: and Eliſha ſaid unto him, Whence comeſt thou, Gehazi? where had he been, and where was he laſt? and he ſaid, Thy ſervant went no whither; he pretended he had never been out of doors, which was another impudent lie; one would have thought that he who had lived ſo long with the prophet, and had ſeen the miracles wrought by him, and knew with what a ſpirit of prophecy he was endowed, would never have ventured to tell ſuch an untruth, ſince he might expect to be detected; but covetouſneſs had blinded his eyes, and hardened his heart.

℣. 26. And he ſaid unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, &c.] Did my heart or knowledge go from me, that what thou haſt done ſhould be hid from me? ſo Ben Gerſom and others; or my heart did not go with thee, it was contrary to my mind and will what thou didſt; ſo Abendana; or rather, as the Targum, by a ſpirit of prophecy it was ſhewn unto me, &c. I knew full well what thou wenteſt for, and haſt done; and ſo Maimonides [y]; was not I employed in my thoughts? or, did I not think that ſo it was as thou haſt done? I did: when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? meaning Naaman the Syrian: is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments; as Gehazi had now done: and olive-yards, and vineyards, and ſheep and oxen, and men-ſervants, and maid-ſervants; that is, to purchaſe thoſe with the two talents of ſilver he had received, as he thought in his heart, or intended to do, as the Targum; or had given orders to purchaſe ſuch for him to the perſons to whom he had committed the care of them in the tower; this was not a proper time, when the honour of the [w] Works, vol. 1. p. 86.

[x] Vid. Quenſtedt. Diſſert. de Petit. Naaman. §. 21, 22.

[y] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 39.

the prophet, and the credit of religion, and the good of this man, as a new proſelyte, were in danger thereby.

℣. 27. The leproſy therefore of Naaman ſhall cleave unto thee, and unto thy ſeed for ever, &c.] As long as any of his race remained; as through his covetouſneſs he had his money, ſo for his puniſhment he ſhould have his diſeaſe: and he went out from his preſence; as one aſhamed and confounded, and diſcharged from his maſter's ſervice: a leper as white as ſnow; a leproſy of which colour is the worſt, and is incurable.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter are recorded other wonders of Eliſha, as cauſing iron to ſwim, ℣. 1—7. having knowledge of the ſecret counſels of the king of Syria, which he diſcloſed to the king of Iſrael, ℣. 8—12. ſmiting the Syrian army with blindneſs ſent to take him, and which he led into the midſt of Samaria. ℣. 13—23. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of the ſiege of Samaria, and a ſore famine in it, ℣. 24—33.

℣. 1. And the ſons of the prophets ſaid unto Eliſha, &c.] Or the diſciples of the prophets, as the Targum: Behold now, the place where we dwell with thee is too ſtrait for us; their numbers were ſo increaſed, that there was not room enough for them in the houſe they dwelt in with the prophet; which increaſe was owing, the Jews [z] ſay, to the departure of Gehazi laſt-mentioned, who was a bad man, and uſed the diſciples ſo ill, that they could not ſtay in the college; but when he was gone, they flocked in great numbers; but rather it was owing to the very inſtructive miniſtry and wonderful miracles of Eliſha: the place where the prophet and his diſciples now dwelt ſeems to be Gilgal, ch. iv. 38.

℣. 2. Let us go, we pray thee, unto Jordan, &c.] Which, according to Joſephus [a], was 50 furlongs, or upwards of 6 miles diſtant from Gilgal: and take thence every man a beam; by cutting down the trees that grew there; for Mr. Maundrel ſays [b], the banks of Jordan are beſet with buſhes and trees, which are an harbour for wild beaſts; and another traveller [c] obſerves, that it is ſhadowed on both ſides with poplars, alders, &c. and who ſpeaks of their cutting down boughs from the trees when there: and let us make us a place there where we may dwell; near the banks of Jordan, which they might chuſe for the retiredneſs and pleaſantneſs of the ſituation, or becauſe Elijah was taken up to heaven near it, as Abarbinel thinks; from whence it appears that theſe ſcholars were far from living an idle life; for they were not only trained up in uſeful learning, but were employed in trades and manufactures, to which they had been brought up, and knew how to fell timber, and build houſes: and he anſwered, Go ye; he gave them leave, without which they did not chuſe to do any thing.

℣. 3. And one ſaid, Be content, I pray thee, and go with thy ſervants, &c.] Or be pleaſed to go with us; he begged it as a favour, that being awed by his preſence, they might preſerve peace and order, and have his advice as to the ſpot of ground to erect their edifice on, and might be protected by him from hurt and miſchief, by men or wild beaſts: and he anſwered, I will go; he conſented to it, knowing perhaps beforehand, that he ſhould have an opportunity of working a miracle there, as he did.

℣. 4. So he went with them. And when they came to Jordan, they cut down wood.] Trees which grew upon the banks of it, to build their houſe with, at leaſt for the raftering and flooring of it, ſuppoſing the walls to be built of ſtone.

℣. 5. But as one was felling a beam, &c.] Cutting down a tree, or a branch of it: the ax-head fell into the water; into the waters of Jordan; or the iron [d], the iron part of it, with which the wood was cut; that flew off from the helve into the water: and he cried, and ſaid, Alas, maſter, for it was borrowed; it grieved him to loſe his ax, becauſe he could do no more work, and the more, becauſe it was not his own, but he had borrowed it of his neighbour; and ſtill more, becauſe, as it ſeems, he was poor, and not able to pay for it, which, being of an honeſt diſpoſition, gave him diſtreſs.

℣. 6. And the man of God ſaid, Where fell it? &c.] For though endowed with a ſpirit of prophecy, he did not know all things, and at all times; and if he did know where it fell, he might aſk this queſtion to lead on to the performance of the miracle: and he ſhewed him the place; the exact place in the river into which it fell: and he cut down a ſtick, and caſt it in thither; he did not take the old helve and throw in, but a new ſtick he cut off of a tree; ſome think he made of this another helve or handle, of the ſame ſize and meaſure with the other, and that this being caſt in, was miraculouſly directed and fixed in the hole of the iron at the bottom of the water, and brought it up with it; but, as Abarbinel obſerves, there is no need to ſuppoſe this; the wood was caſt into the preciſe place where the iron fell, and was ſent as it were to call it up to it: and the iron did ſwim; it came up and appeared, and was bore on the ſurface of the waters; or, and made the iron to ſwim [e]; which ſome underſtand of the wood caſt in, as if it had ſome peculiar virtue in it to draw up the iron; but it was not any particular choſen wood, but what firſt occurred to the prophet [f]; and the meaning is, that Eliſha cauſed it to ſwim, contrary to the nature of iron.

℣. 7. Therefore ſaid he, Take it up to thee, &c.] This the prophet ſaid to the man that had loſt it: and he put out his hand, and took it; it being on the top of the water within his reach.

℣. 8. Then the king of Syria warred againſt Iſrael, &c.] Proclaimed war againſt him; on what account, or how long it was after Naaman his general came with a letter of recommendation from him to the king of Iſrael, and had his cure, is not ſaid: and took counſel with his ſervants; his privy-counſellors, or the general officers of his army: ſaying, in ſuch and ſuch a place ſhall be my camp; in ſome covered, hidden place, as the Targum; where he would lie encamped in ambuſcade, to fall upon the king of Iſrael unawares, as he and his forces ſhould paſs

[z] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 107. 2. [a] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 1. §. 4. [b] Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 82, 83.
[c] Sandy's Travels, l. 3. p. 110. [d] הברזל ferrum, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [e] יצף fecit ſupernatare, Pagninus, Montanus. Vatablus; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [f] Vid. Frieſe, diſſert. de ferro natante, §. 7.

paſs that way; the place, no doubt, was named by the king of Syria, though not recorded by the hiſtorian; or, as the words may be rendered, the place of ſuch and ſuch a man: for, as Ben Melech obſerves, Peloni Almoni are uſed of perſons whoſe names are either unknown or concealed.

℣. 9. And the man of God ſent unto the king of Iſrael, &c.] That is, Eliſha ſent to him: ſaying, Beware that thou paſs not ſuch a place; not go to it, but avoid it, and paſs another way: for thither the Syrians are come down; are hidden, as the Targum; lie covered at the bottom of the hill, ſo as not to be ſeen.

℣. 10. And the king of Iſrael ſent to the place which the man of God told him, and warned him of, &c.] Sent ſpies thither to ſee whether the Syrians were there or not, and whether it was truth the man of God told him; for he had no hearty reſpect for the prophet, though he had been ſo ſerviceable to him: and ſaved himſelf there, not once, nor twice; eſcaped the ſnares the king of Syria laid for him, not once, nor twice only, but many times.

℣. 11. Therefore the heart of the king of Syria was ſore troubled for this thing, &c.] There was as it were a ſtorm in his breaſt, as the word ſignifies; he was like a troubled ſea, toſſed with tempeſts, exceeding uneaſy in his mind, fretting at the diſappointment he met with time after time: and he called his ſervants, and ſaid unto them, will ye not ſhew me which of us is for the king of Iſrael? he ſuſpected, that ſome one of his counſellors was in the intereſt of the king of Iſrael, and betrayed his ſecrets to him, which was the cauſe of his diſappointments.

℣. 12. And one of his ſervants ſaid, none, my lord, O king, &c.] He believed every one of his counſellors were true and faithful to him: but Eliſha the prophet, that is in Iſrael, telleth the king of Iſrael the words that thou ſpeakeſt in thy bed-chamber; what is ſaid in the moſt private place, and in the moſt ſecret manner: this man had heard much of Eliſha, by Naaman very probably; or perhaps he had attended him in his journey to Iſrael for a cure, and ſo might have perſonal knowledge of Eliſha, and be acquainted with the affair of Gehazi; from whence he concluded, that he who had the thoughts of men revealed to him, had knowledge of their words and counſels, though ever ſo ſecret; ſee Eccl. x. 20.

℣. 13. And he ſaid, go, and ſpy where he is, that I may ſend and fetch him, &c.] But how could he expect to take him, who could give the king of Iſrael ſuch intelligence of his deſigns againſt him, that he might eſcape his ſnares? and it was told him, ſaying, behold, he is in Dothan; a city in the tribe of Manaſſeh, not far from Shechem; ſee the note on Gen. xxxvii. 17.

℣. 14. Therefore ſent he thither horſes and chariots, and a great hoſt, &c.] To terrify the inhabitants from attempting to defend the prophet, but deliver him up at once: and they came by night; that they might come upon them unawares, and their deſign not be diſcovered, ſo as to have timely ſuccour from Samaria, which was not far off: and compaſſed the city about; that the prophet might not make his eſcape out of it.

℣. 15. And when the ſervant of the man of God was riſen early, and gone forth, &c.] Either out of his maſter's houſe, or out of the city upon ſome buſineſs to be done betimes; this was not Gehazi, but a new ſervant: behold, an hoſt compaſſed the city, both with horſes and chariots; which he could ſee at the door of his maſter's houſe, the city being built upon an eminence; or which he perceived, as ſoon as he came out of the gates of the city, or was about ſo to do: and his ſervant ſaid unto him; Eliſha being with him; or elſe he returned to his maſter on the ſight of ſuch an army, and not being able to go forward: alas, my maſter, how ſhall we do? to get out of the city, and through this hoſt, and proceed on our intended journey; and if he underſtood that the intention of this formidable hoſt was to take his maſter, his concern might be the greater; and the more as he was a new ſervant, and not ſo well acquainted with his maſter's being poſſeſſed of a power of doing miracles.

℣. 16. And he anſwered, fear not, for they that be with us, are more than they that be with them.] Meaning the legions of angels that encamped around them.

℣. 17. And Eliſha prayed, and ſaid, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes that he may ſee, &c.] Not the eyes of his body, which were not ſhut nor blinded, but the eyes of his mind; or, in other words, grant him a viſion, repreſented in ſo ſtrong a light, as to remove his fears: and the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he ſaw; he had a viſion of angels: and behold, the mountain; on which the city was built, or one near it: was full of horſes and chariots of fire; angels in this form, as in ch. ii. 11. and theſe were round about Eliſha; being round about the city where he was; or rather ſo in the viſion it was repreſented to the young man, he ſaw his maſter ſurrounded with horſes and chariots of fire in the utmoſt ſafety.

℣. 18. And when they came down to him, &c.] The Syrian army, from the hill on which they were firſt ſeen, who came down from thence to the bottom of the hill on which the city ſtood; and whither Eliſha came out, in order both to meet them, and proceed on his journey to Samaria: Eliſha prayed unto the Lord, and ſaid, ſmite this people, I pray thee, with blindneſs; or blindneſſes[s]; with great blindneſs, ſuch as the men of Sodom were ſmitten with; the ſame word is here uſed as of them, Gen. xix. 11. and he ſmote them with blindneſs, according to the word of Eliſha; not in ſuch manner that they could diſcern no object, for then they could not have followed Eliſha; but their ſight was ſo altered, that they knew not the objects they ſaw; they appeared quite otherwiſe to them than they were; they ſaw the city, but knew it not to be the ſame, and Eliſha, but knew him not to be the man of God, though they might have ſome in the hoſt that knew him perſonally.

℣. 19. And Eliſha ſaid unto them, This is not the way, neither is this the city, &c.] Which is an anſwer to ſome queſtions of the Syrians; as, whether this was the way to find the prophet Eliſha, and this the city in which he was to be found? and he anſwers moſt truly, though ambiguouſly, that the way they were in, and in which ſhould they proceed, was not the way, nor this the city, in which he was to be found, becauſe he was come out of it, and was going to Samaria: follow me, and I will bring you to the man whom ye ſeek; as he did: but he led them to Samaria; whither he was going, they being ſtill under that ſort of blindneſs with which they were ſmitten; otherwiſe they would have known the country better than to have been led thither.

[s] בסנורים in cæcitatibus, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

℣. 20. And it came to paſs when they were come into Samaria, that Eliſha ſaid, Lord, open the eyes of theſe men, that they may ſee, &c.] So as to know where they were: and the Lord opened their eyes, and they ſaw, and behold, they were in the midſt of Samaria; the gates being thrown open for them, and they led into the very heart of the city; for, no doubt, Eliſha ſent his ſervant before, to acquaint the king of Iſrael with what he was doing; who got a ſufficient number of armed men to incloſe them, and fall upon them, when put into his hands, as appears by what follows.

℣. 21. And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Eliſha, when he ſaw them, &c.] The Syrian army thus in his hands: My father, ſhall I ſmite them? ſhall I ſmite them? he ſpeaks with great reverence and reſpect to the prophet, whom at other times he neglected and deſpiſed; and the repetition of his words ſhews the eagerneſs of his mind to fall upon his enemy at this advantage.

℣. 22. And he anſwered, Thou ſhalt not ſmite them, &c.] For they were not his, but the prophet's captives, or rather the Lord's: wouldſt thou ſmite thoſe whom thou haſt taken captive, with thy ſword, and with thy bow? when ſoldiers are made priſoners of war, it is contrary to humanity, to the laws of nature and nations, to kill them in cold blood, and much more thoſe who were taken not by his ſword and bow, but by the power and providence of God: ſet bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their maſter; the king of Syria, and report the miracles wrought, and the good uſage they met with, when in the hand of an enemy, fed and let go; which would be more to the glory of the God of Iſrael, and more agreeable to the character of a king of Iſrael, reckoned merciful, and more ſerviceable to the civil good of the land of Iſrael, as well as more to the honour of the prophet and true religion, ſee Rom. xii. 20, 21.

℣. 23. And he prepared great proviſion for them, &c.] Or a great feaſt, as the Targum; ſo obedient was he to the prophet's orders: and when they had eaten and drank; and refreſhed themſelves, which they needed, having marched all night and that morning from place to place: he ſent them away; that is, the king of Iſrael diſmiſſed them: and they went to their maſter; the king of Syria, but without the prophet Eliſha they were ſent to fetch: ſo the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Iſrael; not as yet, or for ſome time; or rather the ſenſe is, that the Syrians came not any more in ſmall bodies, as troops of robbers making excurſions, and carrying off booty in a private manner, and by ſurprize; but afterwards came with a large army in an open hoſtile manner, as follows.

℣. 24. And it came to paſs after this, that Benhadad king of Syria gathered all his hoſt, &c.] Still retaining a grudge and enmity againſt Iſrael, and not at all ſoftened by the kind and humane treatment his forces had met with, when in the hands of Iſrael; and finding he could do nothing in a ſecret way, by ambuſcade, muſtered all his forces together, to try what he could do by open war: and went up, and beſieged Samaria; Jehoram king of Iſrael not being able to ſtop him till he came to his capital, which he laid cloſe ſiege to.

℣. 25. And there was a great famine in Samaria, &c.] No care, perhaps, having been taken to lay up ſtores againſt a ſiege: and behold, they beſieged it until an aſs's head was ſold for fourſcore pieces of ſilver; ſhekels, as the Targum explains the word in the next clauſe, which amounted to about nine or ten pounds of our money; a great price for the head of ſuch a creature, by law unclean, its fleſh diſagreeable, and of that but very little, as is on an head: and the fourth part of a cab of doves dung for five pieces of ſilver; ſome of the Jewiſh writers ſay [h], this was bought for fuel, which was ſcarce: Joſephus ſays [i], for ſalt, and ſo Procopius Gazæus, and Theodoret; others, for dunging the lands, which is the uſe of it in Perſia [k] for melons; neither of which are probable; moſt certainly it was for food; but as doves dung muſt not only be very diſagreeable, but ſcarce affording any nouriſhment, ſomething elſe muſt be meant; ſome have thought that the grains found in their crops, or in their excrements, undigeſted, and picked out, are meant; and others, their crops or craws themſelves, or intrails; but Bochart [l] is of opinion, that a ſort of pulſe is meant, as lentiles or vetches, much the ſame with the Kali or parched corn uſed in Iſrael, ſee 1 Sam. xvii. 17. 2 Sam. xvii. 28. and a late traveller [m] obſerves, that the Leblebby of the Arabs is very probably the Kali, or parched pulſe of the ſcriptures, and has been taken for the pigeon's dung mentioned at the ſiege of Samaria; and indeed as the cicer (a ſort of peas or pulſe) is pointed at one end, and acquires an aſh-colour by parching, the firſt of which circumſtances anſwers to the figure, the other to the uſual colour of pigeon's dung, the ſuppoſition is by no means to be diſregarded: a cab was a meaſure with the Jews, which held the quantity of 24 egg-ſhells; according to Godwin [n], it anſwered to our quart, ſo that a fourth part was half a pint; and half a pint of theſe lentiles, or vetches, or parched pulſe, was ſold for eleven or twelve ſhillings.

℣. 26. And as the king of Iſrael was paſſing by upon the wall, &c.] To deſcry the motion and ſituation of the enemy, and to give orders for the annoyance of them, and to ſee that his ſoldiers did their duty: there cried a woman to him, ſaying, help, my lord, O king; deſired his aſſiſtance and help in a cauſe depending between her and another woman.

℣. 27. And he ſaid, if the Lord do not help thee, whence ſhall I help thee, &c.] Miſtaking her meaning, as if ſhe prayed him to relieve her hunger; the margin of our bible is, let not the Lord ſave thee; and ſo ſome underſtand it as a wiſh that ſhe might periſh; and ſo Joſephus [o], that being wroth, he curſed her in the name of God: out of the barn-floor, or out of the wine-preſs? when neither of them afforded any thing; no corn was to be had from the one, nor wine from the other, no not for his own uſe, and therefore how could he help her out of either?

℣. 28. And the king ſaid unto her, what aileth thee? &c.] His paſſion ſubſiding, or pitying her as in diſtreſs, and ſuppoſing that there might be ſomething particular and preſſing in her caſe: and ſhe anſwered, this woman ſaid unto me; who was now with her, and to whom ſhe pointed: give thy ſon that we may eat him to-day, and we will eat my ſon to-morrow; and this was agreed to between them, that firſt one ſhould be eaten, and then the other, and that they ſhould feed upon one as long as it would laſt, and then on the other; for it is not

[h] R. Jonah in Ben Melech, Kimchi & Abarbinel in loc. [i] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 4. §. 4. [k] Univerſal Hiſtory, vol. 5. p. 90. [l] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 1. c. 7. col. 44, &c. [m] Shaw's Travels, p. 140. [n] Moſes & Aaron, B. 6. c. 9. [o] Ut ſupra.

3

not to be limited precisely to a day and to-morrow.

℣. 29. So we boiled my son, and did eat him, &c.] Thus what was predicted by way of threatening, began to be accomplished, Deut xxviii. 53. see the note there; and of which there were other instances of a like kind at the siege of Jerusalem, both by Nebuchadnezzar and Vespasian: and I said unto her on the next day; after her child had been wholly ate up: give thy son that we may eat him; according to agreement: and she hath hid her son; either to save him alive, or to eat him herself alone.

℣. 30. And it came to pass, when the king heard the words of the woman, that he rent his clothes, &c.] At the horror of the fact reported, and through grief that his people were brought into such distress through famine: and he passed by upon the wall; returning to his palace: and the people looked, and behold, he had sackcloth upon his flesh; which in token of humiliation for averting the calamities he was under, he had put there before, and now was seen through the renting of his clothes.

℣. 31. Then he said, God do so and more also to me, &c.] He swore and made dreadful imprecations: if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day; imputing the sore famine to him, because he had foretold it, and did not pray for the removal of it, as he might; and perhaps had advised and encouraged the king to hold out the siege, which had brought them to this extremity, and therefore was enraged at him.

℣. 32. And Elisha sat in his house, &c.] In Samaria: and the elders sat with him; not the elders of the city, or the magistrates thereof, but his disciples, as Josephus says [p], the eldest of them, whom he admitted to greater familiarity and converse with him: and the king sent a man from before him; to execute what he had sworn should be done that day to the prophet: but ere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, see ye how this son of a murderer hath sent to take away mine head? which he knew by a spirit of prophecy, and spoke of it before the executioner came; he calls Joram the son of a murderer, because of his mother Jezebel, who killed Naboth, and the prophets of the Lord, and to which his father Ahab also consented, and therefore might be so called too; and he intimates hereby, that he was of the same temper and disposition, and as the above oath, and his orders, shewed: look when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door; and not suffer him to come in: is not the sound of his master's feet behind him? that is, of Joram king of Israel, who followed the messenger, either to listen and hear what the prophet would say unto him; or repenting of his order, as Josephus [q] thinks, he followed him to prevent the execution.

℣. 33. And while he yet talked with them, &c.] Elisha with the elders: behold, the messenger came down unto him; sent by the king: and he said; either the messenger in the king's name, or rather the king who was at his heels, and came to the door before the messenger was let in, who was detained; and therefore it is most probable the king went in first; for that was the intention of Elisha in holding the messenger, not to save his own life, but that the king, who was following, might hear what he had to say; and whom he advised to wait for the Lord, and his appearance for deliverance: in answer to which he said, behold, this evil is of the Lord, what should I wait for the Lord any longer? this calamity is from him, and he is determined upon the ruin of my people, and there is no hope; this he said as despairing, and so resolving to hold out the siege no longer.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter begins with a prophecy of great plenty in Samaria on the morrow, and of the death of an unbelieving lord, ℣. 1, 2. relates the case of four lepers, who that night went into the Syrian camp, which was deserted, occasioned by the noise of chariots, horses and a host, which they fancied they heard, ℣. 3—9. the report which the lepers made to the king's household of this affair, and the method the king's servants took to know the truth of it, ℣. 10—15. which, when confirmed, the people went out and spoiled the tents of the Syrians, whereby the prophecy of plenty was fulfilled, ℣. 16. and the unbelieving lord having a post at the gate of the city assigned him, was trod to death, and so the prediction concerning him had its accomplishment also, ℣. 17—20.

℣. 1. Then Elisha said, Hear the word of the Lord, &c.] This he said to the king and those that were with him: Thus saith the Lord, To-morrow about this time; which very probably was the forenoon: shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel; a seah, the measure here spoken of, or satum, according to some [r], was a gallon and an half; but bishop Cumberland [s] makes it two wine gallons and an half; and a shekel, according to his accurate computation, was two shillings and four-pence farthing, and near the 8th part of one [t]: and two measures of barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria; where the market was kept; the same sort of measure and of money is here used as before; and we learn from hence that a measure of wheat was equal to two of barley.

℣. 2. Then a lord on whose hand the king leaned, &c.] Not figuratively, in whom the king confided, but literally, on whose hand he rested, and by whom he was supported, being a form and matter of state, whilst he and Elisha were talking together, or on whom he leaned as he came to him; this was a principal lord, the third to the king, as his title seems to denote; the word by which the Septuagint renders it is by Suidas [u] "interpreted of such that held three spears in the hand together; and this was an honourable post, for a king to lean on him; such state was used by the king of Syria, ch. v. 18. and by the kings and queens of Persia; so Gorionides [w] says of Esther, that on the third day she put on her beautiful garments and glorious ornaments, and took two of her maidens with her, and put her right hand on one of them, and leaned upon her in a royal manner, or as was the manner of kings: the same answered the man of God; the prophet

[p] Ibid. [q] Ibid. [r] Godwin, ut supra. [s] Of scripture-weights and measures, c. 3. p. 86, 87.
[t] Ib. c. 4. p. 104, 105. [u] In voce τριστατης. [w] Heb. Hist. l. 2. c. 4.

phet of the Lord, as the Targum: and ſaid, Behold, if the Lord would make windows in heaven might this thing be? it is impoſſible it ſhould be, if he was to open the windows of heaven as at the flood, and let down ſhowers of wheat and barley, in like manner as he rained manna in the wilderneſs: and he ſaid; the prophet in reply to him: Behold, thou ſhalt ſee it with thine eyes, but ſhalt not eat thereof; wheat and barley ſold at the above price, but ſhould not taſte of it, as a puniſhment of his unbelief.

℣. 3. And there were four leprous men at the entring in of the gate, &c.] Of the city of Samaria; lepers, according to the law, being obliged to be without the city and camp, Lev. xiii. 46. theſe might have a dwelling aſſigned them near the gate; or they might get as near to it as they could, partly to obtain relief from the city, and partly for fear of the Syrians; theſe, the Jews ſay [x], were Gehazi and his three ſons, ſee ch. v. 27. and they ſaid one to another, Why ſit we here until we die? being ready to periſh with hunger.

℣. 4. If we ſay we will enter into the city, &c.] Contrary to the law which forbid them: then the famine is in the city, and we ſhall die there; not being able to obtain food to preſerve life: and if we ſit here, we die alſo; having nothing to eat to ſupport nature: now therefore let us come, and fall unto the hoſt of the Syrians; put ourſelves into their hands, and lie at their mercy: if they ſave us alive, we ſhall live; if they don't put us to death, but give us bread to eat, our lives will be preſerved: and if they kill us, we ſhall but die; which we muſt inevitably do, whether we ſtay here, or go into the city.

℣. 5. And they roſe up in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians, &c.] The duſk of the evening, or the evening-twilight, as appears from ℣. 9. 12. and when they were come to the uttermoſt part of the camp of Syria; not the further part of it, but the edge or border of it neareſt to them, behold, there was no man there; no centinel or guard, which they expected, and to whom they would have ſurrendered themſelves.

℣. 6. For the Lord had made the hoſt of the Syrians to hear a noiſe of chariots, and a noiſe of horſes, even the noiſe of a great hoſt, &c.] Or of many armies, as the Targum; either in the air by the miniſtry of angels; or the Lord ſo wrought upon their imagination, that they fancied they heard ſuch noiſes; or he cauſed ſuch noiſes in their ears: and they ſaid one to another, Lo, the king of Iſrael hath hired againſt us the kings of the Hittites; one of the nations of the Canaanites, and may be here put for the whole of thoſe that remained, and who lived upon the borders of the land of Iſrael; though Joſephus [y] has it, the kings of the iſles; that is, of Chittim, ſee Jer. ii. 10. and the kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us; Egypt being now divided into petty kingdoms; or elſe the governors of the ſeveral nomes or diſtricts of it are here meant: for the king of Iſrael to hire theſe kings was very unlikely in his preſent circumſtances; but thoſe unreaſonable things, in their panic, their imaginations ſuggeſted to them.

℣. 7. Wherefore they aroſe and fled in the twilight, &c.] Or in the dark, as the Targum; when the twilight was going off; ſo that the lepers came very quickly after they were gone, ℣. 5. and left their tents, and their horſes, and their aſſes; ſuch was their fright, that they could not ſtay to looſe their cattle, with which they might have made greater ſpeed, but ran away on foot: and they left even the camp as it was; took nothing away with them, either money or proviſions: and fled for their life; which they imagined to be in great danger.

℣. 8. And when theſe lepers came to the uttermoſt part of the camp, they went into one tent, &c.] The firſt they came to: and did eat and drink; which was the firſt thing they did, being hungry, and almoſt ſtarved: and carried thence ſilver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it; in a place without the camp, where they thought it would be ſafe, and where they could come at it again: and came again and entered into another tent, and carried thence alſo, and went and hid it; this, Joſephus ſays [z], they did four times.

℣. 9. Then they ſaid one to another, we do not well, &c.] This is not right, to take this booty to ourſelves; it is not doing juſtice to our brethren, and it may not prove well to ourſelves in the iſſue: this day is a day of good tidings; to be delivered from the enemy, and have ſuch plenty of proviſions thrown into their hands; it would be joyful tidings to the inhabitants of the city did they know it: and we hold our peace; and don't publiſh this good tidings, that others may ſhare the benefit of it: if we tarry till the morning-light; when it will in courſe be diſcovered: ſome miſchief will come upon us; either from the Syrians, who they might fear would return by that time, or ſome of them lurking about would fall upon them and deſtroy them; or the king of Iſrael, when he came to know it, would be ſo incenſed as to inflict ſome puniſhment on them; or they might expect ſome evil from the immediate hand of God: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's houſhold; acquaint ſome of his ſervants with what had happened.

℣. 10. So they came and called to the porter of the city, &c.] The chief of thoſe that had the care of the gate of it; for there were more than one, as follows: and they told them; the porter, and the watchmen with him: we came to the camp of the Syrians, and behold, there was no man there, neither voice of man; not one to be ſeen or heard: but horſes tied, and aſſes tied; to their mangers; the latter, as well as the former, were uſed for war, not only to carry burdens, but to fight upon, as Ælianus [a] relates of ſome people; and eſpecially when there was a want of horſes, as Strabo [b]; and both obſerve that this creature was ſacrificed to Mars: and the tents as they were; none of them ſtruck, nor any thing taken out of them.

℣. 11. And he called the porters, &c.] The porter of the city called to the porters of the king's palace: and they told it to the king's houſe within; to ſome of his domeſtic ſervants within the palace, and they reported it to the king.

℣. 12. And the king aroſe in the night, &c.] Upon the report made to him: and he ſaid unto his ſervants, I will now ſhew you what the Syrians have done to us; taking it to be a ſtratagem of theirs to decoy them: they know that we be hungry; and would be glad to come out of the city to get ſome food: therefore are they gone out of the camp to hide themſelves in the field; to make us believe that they have broke up the ſiege, and have deſerted the camp, and are gone, when they only lie lie in ambuſcade: ſaying, when they come out of the city; which they ſuppoſed they would do thro' hunger: we ſhall catch them alive; take them captive at once: and get into the city; being open to let them out, and receive them on their return.

[x] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 47. 1. & Sanhedrin, fol. 107. 2. [y] Ut ſupra, §. 5. [z] Ibid. [a] De Animal. l. 12. c. 34. [b] Geograph. l. 15. p. 500.

℣. 13. And one of his ſervants anſwered and ſaid, let ſome take, I pray thee, five of the horſes that remain, which are left in the city, &c.] Not having died through the famine as the reſt: behold, they are as all the multitude of Iſrael that are left in it; behold, I ſay, they are even as the multitude of Iſrael that are conſumed; ſignifying, there was a like conſumption among the horſes as among the people, and they that remained were ſtarving as they were; ſo that ſhould thoſe horſes, and the men, fall into the hands of the Syrians, and periſh, it would be no great matter; the loſs would not be much, ſince they muſt periſh if they continue in the city: according to the Vulgate Latin verſion, theſe five horſes were all that were left: and let us ſend and ſee; whether the report of the lepers is true or not.

℣. 14. They took therefore two chariot-horſes, &c.] Not five, but two only, and thoſe the beſt, that drew in the king's chariot perhaps, and ſo were better fed, and fitter for this expedition: and the king ſent after the hoſt of the Syrians, ſaying, go and ſee; whether they are fled or no.

℣. 15. And they went after them unto Jordan, &c.] Not finding them in the camp, and knowing the rout they would take to their own land, they went as far as Jordan, over which they muſt paſs: and lo, all the way was full of garments and veſſels which the Syrians had caſt away in their haſte; in their fright and flight, ſuch of their clothes as hindered them in running; and their armour, as Joſephus [c] ſeems rightly to underſtand the word uſed, theſe they threw away for quicker diſpatch: and the meſſengers returned and told the king; that it was as the lepers ſaid, and what they themſelves had ſeen.

℣. 16. And the people went out and ſpoiled the tents of the Syrians, &c.] Of their riches, and of their proviſions; of which there was ſuch a plenty, not only for preſent uſe, but for ſale, ſo that a meaſure of fine flour was ſold for a ſhekel, &c according to the word of the Lord; by Eliſha, ℣ 1.

℣. 17. And the king appointed the lord, on whoſe hand he leaned, to have the charge of the gate, &c.] Not to keep out the enemy, of which there was no danger; but to prevent diſorders and tumults among the people, and that they might go out in an orderly and regular manner: and the people trod upon him in the gate; being eager to get out for food; and he endeavouring to keep order among them, they preſſed upon him, and threw him down, and trampled him under foot; or he was placed here to regulate the market, that every one might be ſupplied in courſe, but through the peoples preſſing to get proviſions, he was over-borne, and trod upon: and died, as the man of God had ſaid, who ſpake when the king came down to him; ſo that he ſaw the plenty, but partook not of it, as he ſaid, ſee ℣. 2.

℣. 18. And it came to paſs, as the man of God had ſpoken to the king, ſaying, &c.] As in ℣. 1. and what he ſaid to the king there, and to the lord, in ℣. 2. are repeated in this and the next verſe, that it might be obſerved how exactly the prophecies were fulfilled.

℣. 19. And that lord anſwered the man of God, and ſaid, &c.] As in ℣. 2. and he ſaid; that is, Eliſha, as in the ſame place.

℣. 20. And ſo it fell out unto him, &c.] As the prophet predicted: for the people trod upon him in the gate, and he died; ſee the note on ℣. 17.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of ſome advice Eliſha had formerly given to the Shunamite woman, and of the ſucceſs of it, ℣. 1—6. and of the ſickneſs of the king of Syria, who ſent to Eliſha, then being at Damaſcus, by Hazael, to know whether he ſhould recover; by whom a meſſage was returned, and Hazael was told by the prophet, he ſhould be king of Syria, and exerciſe great cruelty in Iſrael, ℣. 7—15. and of the bad reign of Jehoram, ſon of Jehoſhaphat, over Judah, ℣. 16—24. and of the reign of his ſon Ahaziah, ℣. 25—29.

℣. 1. Then ſpake Eliſha unto the woman, (whoſe ſon he had reſtored to life) &c.] His hoſteſs at Shunem, ch. iv. 8. &c. the following he ſaid to her, not after the famine in Samaria, but before it, as ſome circumſtances ſhew: ſaying, Ariſe, and go thou and thine houſhold, and ſojourn whereſoever thou canſt ſojourn; with the greateſt ſafety to her perſon and property, and with the leaſt danger to her moral and religious character: for the Lord hath called for a famine, and it ſhall alſo come upon the land ſeven years; which Jarchi ſays was the famine that was in the days of Joel; it was, undoubtedly, on account of the idolatry of Iſrael, and was double the time of that in the days of Elijah.

℣. 2. And the woman aroſe, and did after the ſaying of the man of God, &c.] Whoſe word ſhe had reaſon to believe; ſhe having a ſon given to her according to his word, and this reſtored to life when dead through his interceſſion: and ſhe went with her houſhold, and ſojourned in the land of the Philiſtines, which was not far from her native place, and where there was plenty of food, and ſhe could have as free an exerciſe of her religion as in the idolatrous kingdom of Iſrael.

℣. 3. And it came to paſs at the ſeven years end, that the woman returned out of the land of the Philiſtines, &c.] Either hearing that the famine was over, or believing that it was, the time being expired the prophet fixed for it: and ſhe went forth to cry unto the king for her houſe, and for her land; which her neareſt relations in her abſence had ſeized upon, as heirs to them; or thoſe in whoſe hands ſhe had entruſted them refuſed, upon her return, to deliver them to her; or the king's officers had ſeized upon them for him, as forfeited to the crown by her going out of the land without leave; and now ſhe needed a friend to ſpeak for her to the king, which, in time paſt, ſhe had no occaſion for, and thought ſhe never ſhould, ſee ch. iv. 13.

℣. 4. And the king talked with Gehazi the ſervant of the man of God, &c.] Eliſha's ſervant, juſt at the ſame time the woman made her application to him;

him; so that this was before he was dismissed from the service of the prophet, and consequently before the affair of Naaman's cure, and so before the siege of Samaria: saying, Tell me, I pray thee, all the great things that Elisha hath done; the miracles he wrought, as the dividing of the waters of Jordan, and healing those near Jericho; the affair of procuring water for the armies of the three kings in Edom he needed not to relate, since Jehoram was an eye-witness thereof; the next was the multiplying the widow's cruse of oil, when he in course came to those that were done for the Shunamite woman.

℣. 5. And it came to pass, as he was telling the king how he had restored a dead body to life, &c.] which was the Shunamite's son: that behold, the woman whose son he had restored to life, cried to the king for her house, and for her land; came and presented her petition to the king at that very instant: and Gehazi said, My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life; the very person I am speaking of.

℣. 6. And when the king asked the woman, she told him, &c.] The whole affair; how that she had a son according to the word of Elisha, when she had been barren, and her husband old; that this child was struck with sickness, and died; and that the prophet, through his prayers, restored it to life: so the king appointed unto her a certain officer; the word signifies an eunuch; him he ordered to attend upon her, and assist her, and see to it that she was put into the possession of her house and land: saying, Restore all that was hers, and all the fruits of the field, since the day that she left the land, even till now; not only her house and land, but all the rent, profits, and dues arising from thence during the time of her absence: the Jews except the rent of her house.

℣. 7. And Elisha came to Damascus, &c.] On what account, and when, is not certain, whether to convert Gehazi, as say the Jews[d]; or to confirm Naaman in the true religion he professed, for which he might be dismissed from his office, since another man was made general of the Syrian army; or on account of the famine; or rather it may be to anoint, or however to declare that Hazael would be king of Syria; see 1 Kings xix. 15. and Benhadad the king of Syria was sick; at the time he came thither, where his palace was, and now a Mahometan temple; a very extraordinary building, according to Benjamin the Jew[e]: and it was told him, saying, the man of God is come hither; the famous prophet in Israel, Elisha, through whom Naaman his general had been cured of his leprosy, of whom he had heard so much.

℣. 8. And the king said to Hazael, &c.] The captain-general of his army: take a present in thine hand, and go and meet the man of God; who perhaps was not as yet come into the city, only into the region of Damascus: or rather with thee; so the Vulgate Latin and Arabic versions; and which Noldius[f] approves of, since a burden of 40 camels, ℣. 9. could not be carried in the hand: and enquire of the Lord by him, saying, shall I recover of this disease; he did not desire him to pray the Lord that he might recover, only was curious to know whether he should or not, see ch. i. 2.

℣. 9. So Hazael went to meet him, and took a present with him, &c.] As was usual when a prophet or seer was consulted, see 1 Sam. ix. 7. even of every good thing of Damascus; which was a very fruitful place, and had abundance of gardens and orchards in it, which yielded excellent fruit, and of such it is probable the present consisted, and which was large: even 40 camels burden; which as they are strong creatures, will bear a great deal. Aben Ezra thinks, bread, flesh and wine, and fowls, were in the present, but not gold, silver and raiment, which the prophet had refused to take of Naaman; the Jews have a fable, that there was a precious stone in it, worth all the good things of Damascus: and came and stood before him, and said, thy son Benhadad, king of Syria, hath sent me to thee, saying, shall I recover of this disease? he calls him his son, in veneration of the prophet as a father, as such men were called.

℣. 10. And Elisha said unto him, go, say unto him, thou mayest certainly recover, &c.] That is, of the disease; and there was not only a probability that he might recover of it, it not being a mortal one, but a certainty that he should not die of it, as he did not, but die a violent death, which the prophet predicts in the next clause; though some take these words not as a command, what he should say, but as a prediction of what he would say; that he would go and tell him he should certainly recover, because he would not discourage him, though the prophet assures him in the next clause that he should die: there is a various reading of these words, we follow the marginal reading, but the textual reading is, say, thou shalt not certainly recover, or in living live; which agrees with what follows: howbeit, or for the Lord hath shewed me, that he shall surely die; though not of that sickness, nor a natural death, but a violent one, and that by the hand of this his servant, though he does not express it.

℣. 11. And he settled his countenance stedfastly, &c.] Refrained himself as much as possible, that he might not weep, as some Jewish writers interpret it; or as others, he turned his face on one side, and covered it with his hands, that Hazael might not see him weep; or rather he set his face on Hazael, and looked at him so wishly until he was ashamed; that is, Hazael; the prophet looked him out of countenance: and the man of God wept; at the thought of what calamities the man before him he looked on, would be the cause of in Israel, as the following words shew.

℣. 12. And Hazael said, Why weepeth my lord, &c.] Imagining it was for the death of Benhadad he had predicted, for which he could see no reason; of the title, my lord, see 1 Kings xviii. 7. and he answered, Because I know the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel; which he foresaw by a spirit of prophecy; and Israel being his own people, he sympathised in their calamities before they came: their strong holds wilt thou set on fire; which should be taken by him, see ch. x. 32. and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword; in battle: and wilt dash their children; against rocks and stones, or stone-walls, or upon the ground, floor, or pavement, as was usual in war[g], see Ps. cxxxvii. 9. and rip up their women with child; which was the height of barbarity and cruely. Ben Gersom and Ben Melech interpret this of breaking down the walls of fortified cities, built strong, like hills and mountains; but this is supposed in the first clause.

℣. 13. And Hazael said, But what, is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing? &c.] What

[d] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 47. 1.

[e] Itinerar. p. 55.

[f] Ebr. Concord. Part. p. 189. No. 862.

[g] Vid. Homer. Iliad. 22. ℣. 63, 64.

What doſt thou take me to be, a vile, impudent, fierce, and cruel creature, as a dog, to be guilty of ſo great inhumanity and barbarity as this? or what is thy ſervant? a dog, a mean abject creature, of no power and authority, uncapable of doing ſuch great things ſpoken of; to which ſenſe not only what is predicted of him, ſaid to be great, inclines, but what follows: and Eliſha anſwered, The Lord hath ſhewed me that thou ſhalt be king over Syria; and that thou ſhalt have power enough to do this; this declaration, according to Ben Gerſom, was the anointing of him, predicted 1 Kings xix. 15.

℣. 14. So he departed from Eliſha, and came to his maſter, &c.] Benhadad king of Syria: who ſaid to him, What ſaid Eliſha to thee? concerning his recovery, which was the thing uppermoſt in his mind, and he was eagerly deſirous to know how it would be: and he anſwered, He told me that thou ſhouldſt ſurely recover; which was falſe; for he only ſaid that he might, and not that he ſhould; and he concealed what he alſo declared, that tho' he might recover of his diſeaſe, yet that he ſhould ſurely die in another way.

℣. 15. And it came to paſs on the morrow, &c.] In ſuch haſte was Hazael to be king, as the prophet ſaid he would be: that he took a thick cloth, and dipt it in water, and ſpread it on his face, ſo that he died; not that Benhadad took or ordered ſuch a cloth to be dipped and laid on his own face, to allay the violent heat in him; but Hazael did this, and perhaps under ſuch a pretence; but his real deſign was to ſtrike in the heat, or ſuffocate him; for ſuch a thick cloth, one of the bed-cloths, made of goat's hair as is ſuppoſed, being dipped in water, would ſuck in a great deal; and being laid on his face, would preſs hard, and he not able to throw it off, it would let in much water into his mouth and noſtrils, and ſuffocate him, without leaving any marks of violence, which might render his death ſuſpicious: and Hazael reigned in his ſtead; having an intereſt in the army, of which he was general, and perhaps had done ſome exploits which had recommended him to the regard of the people.

℣. 16. And in the fifth year of Joram the ſon of Ahab king of Iſrael, &c.] Who began his reign in the 18th year of Jehoſhaphat, ch. iii. 1. Jehoſhaphat being then king of Judah; as he continued to be two years more; for this muſt be in the 23d year of his reign, and he reigned 25 years, 1 Kings xxii. 42. Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah began to reign; according to Dr. Lightfoot [h], there were three beginnings of his reign; firſt, when his father went with Ahab to Ramoth-Gilead, when he was left viceroy, and afterwards his father reaſſumed the kingdom; the ſecond time was, when Jehoſhaphat went with the kings of Iſrael and Edom againſt Moab; and this is the time here reſpected, which was in the fifth of Joram king of Iſrael; and the third time was at the death of his father; but now his father was living.

℣. 17. Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, &c.] The ſecond time, in the lifetime of his father: and he reigned eight years in Jeruſalem; which ended in the twelfth year of Joram king of Iſrael, ℣. 25.

℣. 18. And he walked in the way of the kings of Iſrael, as did the houſe of Ahab, &c.] Imitated them in idolatry: for the daughter of Ahab was his wife; whoſe name was Athaliah, ℣. 26. and by her he was drawn into idolatrous practices; of ſuch bad conſequence are marriages with idolaters; it is very much that ſo good a king as Jehoſhaphat his father was, ſhould contract ſuch an affinity; he ſuffered for it in more inſtances than one: and he did evil in the ſight of the Lord; was guilty of idolatry, than which nothing was more diſpleaſing to the Lord; for he made high places, and compelled his ſubjects to commit idolatry, 2 Chron. xxi. 11.

℣. 19. Yet the Lord would not deſtroy Judah for David his ſervant's ſake, &c.] Not for his merits, but for the mercy he aſſured him of: as he promiſed him to give to him always a light, and to his children; or a kingdom, as the Targum; therefore he would not utterly deſtroy the tribe, nor ſuffer the ſceptre or government to depart from it till the Meſſiah came, ſee Pſ. cxxxii. 11. 17.

℣. 20. In his days Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, &c.] Who had been tributary to Judah ever ſince the times of David, for the ſpace of 150 years: and made a king over themſelves; for though they are ſaid to have kings, thoſe were only deputy-kings, as in 1 Kings xxii. 47. and now the prediction of Iſaac began to be accompliſhed, Gen. xxvii. 40.

℣. 21. So Joram went over to Zair, &c. A city in Edom, the ſame with the Zaara of Ptolemy [i]; ſome take it to be the ſame with Seir, the mountain or country of that name: and all the chariots with him; all the chariots of war he had; and he roſe by night, and ſmote the Edomites which compaſſed him about; who came out of their cities in great numbers, and ſurrounded him, he having entered into their country in an hoſtile way, to ſubdue them: and the captains of the chariots; which belonged to the Edomites; thoſe he ſmote, 2 Chron. xxi. 9. and the people fled into their tents; the army being routed.

℣. 22. Yet Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day, &c.] Joram not purſuing the enemy, and taking the advantage of the victory, but returning to his own land, the reaſon of which follows: then Libnah revolted at the ſame time; a conſiderable city in his own kingdom, a levitical one; this revolt was occaſioned, perhaps, by his idolatrous practices, and which he compelled his ſubjects to; of this city ſee Joſh. x. 29. and xxi. 13.

℣. 23. And the reſt of the acts of Joram, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?] Not in the canonical book of chronicles, though ſome of his acts are recorded there, ſee 2 Chron. xxi. but in the annals of the kings of Judah, written by perſons appointed for that purpoſe.

℣. 24. And Joram ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died as they did: and was buried with his fathers in the city of David; but not in the ſepulchres of the kings, and without any funeral pomp, and without any mourning and lamentation for him, he being not beloved, and his life not at all deſirable, 2 Chron. xxi. 19, 20, and Ahaziah his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom more is ſaid in the following verſes.

℣. 25. In the twelfth year of Joram the ſon of Ahab king of Iſrael, did Ahaziah the ſon of Jehoram king

[h] Works, vol. 1. p. 84.

[i] Geograph. l. 5. c. 17.

king of Judah begin to reign.] He is called Jehoahaz, and ſaid to be the youngeſt ſon of Jehoram, 2 Chron. xxi. 17.

℣. 26. Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, &c. In 2 Chron. xxii. 2. he is ſaid to be forty-two years of age; the ſolution of that difficulty is reſerved for the note on that place: and he reigned one year in Jeruſalem; which was the whole of his reign: and his mother's name was Athaliah the daughter of Omri king of Iſrael; that is, his grandaughter; for ſhe was the daughter of Ahab the ſon of Omri, ℣. 18. it was uſual for grandchildren to be called children, ſons and daughters, and perhaps ſhe might be educated in the family of Omri.

℣. 27. And he walked in the way of the houſe of Ahab, and did evil in the ſight of the Lord, as did the houſe of Ahab, &c.] Worſhipping the calves, and Baal alſo: for he was the ſon-in law of the houſe of Ahab: he was the ſon of Jehoram, who was ſon-in-law to Ahab, having married his daughter, which accounts for his being guilty of the ſame idolatrous practices.

℣. 28. And he went with Joram the ſon of Ahab, &c.] His mother's brother, and ſo his uncle: to the war againſt Hazael king of Syria in Ramoth-gilead; which he went to recover out of the hands of the king of Syria, as his father Ahab had attempted in his time; in which he was aſſiſted by Jehoſhaphat, as now Joram was by a grandſon of his: and the Syrians wounded Joram; as they did his father Ahab at the ſame place, though his wound was not mortal, as his father's was.

℣. 29. And king Joram went back, &c.] From Ramoth, having taken it, and left his army there: to be healed in Jezreel, of the wounds which the Syrians had given him at Ramah; the ſame with Ramoth-gilead: when he fought againſt Hazael king of Syria; for Benhadad being dead, he was now king in his room, ℣. 15. and Ahaziah the ſon of Jehoram king of Judah, went down to ſee Joram the ſon of Ahab in Jezreel, becauſe he was ſick; of the wounds which he had received, which might occaſion a feveriſh diſorder; and ſo it was brought about in providence, that Ahaziah ſhould here meet with the deſtruction appointed for him, of which in the following chapter. See 2 Chron. xxii. 7.

CHAP. IX.

IN this chapter we are told, that one of the ſons of the prophets was ſent by Eliſha to anoint Jehu king of Iſrael, and to order him to ſmite and deſtroy the whole houſe of Ahab, ℣. 1—10. which being done unto him, and the order received by Jehu, he acquainted his captains with it, ℣. 11—15. who ſet out with him immediately to Jezreel, ℣. 16—21. where he ſlew Joram king of Iſrael, ℣. 22—26. and Ahaziah king of Judah, ℣. 27, 28, 29. and Jezebel, the widow of Ahab, and mother of Joram, ℣. 30—37.

℣. 1. And Eliſha the prophet called one of the children of the prophets, &c.] Who the Jews generally ſay [k] was Jonah the ſon of Amittai: and ſaid, gird up thy loins; his looſe and long garments about his loins, for quicker diſpatch in travelling: and take this box of oil in thine hand; for an uſe after directed to: and go to Ramoth-gilead; where Joram had left his army with his captains, to keep the city from the Syrians.

℣. 2. And when thou comeſt thither, &c.] To Ramoth-gilead; but from whence he went is uncertain, doubtleſs where there was a ſchool of the prophets, perhaps that which was erected near Jordan, on the other ſide of which lay Ramoth-gilead, ch. vi. 1, 2. look out there Jehu the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, the ſon of Nimſhi; the ſame that Elijah was ordered to anoint, but it was deferred till now, a reprieve being granted to Ahab upon his humiliation, 1 Kings xix. 16. and xxi. 29. and go in, and make him ariſe up from among his brethren; the captains of the army: and carry him into an inner chamber; a chamber within a chamber, as in the original; this he was to do for ſecrecy, that it might not be ſeen what he did to Jehu; and leſt he ſhould be prevented doing it by the captains, or be expoſed to danger for doing it; ſince that might be deemed treaſon to do what he was to do, and did, as follows.

℣. 3. Then take the box of oil, and pour it on his head, &c.] When in the chamber together alone: and ſay, thus ſaith the Lord, I have anointed thee king over Iſrael; which was done, not with the anointing oil in the temple, which could not be come at; and with which, as Kimchi from their Rabbins, ſays, only the kings of the houſe of David were anointed, and they only when there was a diviſion, or the crown was tranſlated to another family, as was the caſe now; but with common oil, or the oil of balſam, ſuch as the prophet had in his houſe: then open the door and flee, and tarry not; leſt he ſhould be examined by the captains, and come into danger; though before he went out he was to ſay what is recorded in ℣. 7, 8. 9, 10.

℣. 4. So the young man, even the young man the prophet, went to Ramoth-gilead.] It is repeated, that it might be obſerved, that it was a young man that went, who was more fit for this ſervice than Eliſha, partly becauſe of his age, and partly becauſe he would be leſs known; as alſo his age is remarked, this being a bold and daring action in a young man to anoint a new king, as well as it was honourable; and moreover, he was not only one of the ſons of the prophets, but was a prophet himſelf, though young, and ſtill a more fit perſon for ſuch a ſervice; though the Targum is, a young man, a diſciple of the prophets.

℣. 5. And when he came, behold, the captains of the hoſt were ſitting, &c.] Either at a table, being at dinner, or at a council of war: and he ſaid, I have an errand unto thee, O captain; looking and directing his ſpeech to Jehu; or I have a word to thee [l], ſomething to ſay to thee, intimating that he deſired to ſpeak to him alone; and Jehu ſaid, unto which of all us? not perhaps at firſt thoroughly underſtanding who he meant; or however was willing to have it repeated and explained, that it might be manifeſt to the whole company that he was intended: and he ſaid, to thee, O captain; and to him only.

℣. 6. And he aroſe, and went into the houſe, &c.] Into the inner chamber in it: and he poured the oil on

[k] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 18. p. 47.

[l] דבר לי אליך verbum mihi ad te, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.

on his head, and said unto him, thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I have anointed thee king over the people of the Lord, even over Israel; for though they were fallen into idolatry, and from the pure worship of God, yet the Lord had still a right unto them, and as yet he had not wrote a lo-ammi upon them; and there were many among them which had not bowed the knee to Baal.

℣. 7. And thou shalt smite the house of Ahab thy master, &c.] For Jehu was one of Ahab's captains, as he was now one of his son's, as appears from ℣. 25. but this was to be no objection with him to the destroying of his house, as being an act of high-treason, since he had an order for it from the King of kings, and Lord of lords; which otherwise would have seemed unlawful and criminal, and what follows will sufficiently vindicate the justice of God in it: that I may avenge the blood of my servants the prophets, and the blood of all the servants of the Lord, at the hand of Jezebel; who killed the prophets of the Lord, and caused to be put to death Naboth the servant of the Lord, and now their blood was to be avenged on her and her son Joram, and all her family.

℣. 8. For the whole house of Ahab shall perish, &c.] Be cut off by death, and that in a violent manner, not one should escape: and I will cut off from Ahab him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel; of these phrases, see the notes on 1 Kings xiv. 10. and xxi. 21.

℣. 9. And I will make the house of Ahab, &c.] The same is threatened in 1 Kings xxi. 22. see the note there.

℣. 10. And the dogs shall eat Jezebel in the portion of Jezreel, &c.] Or in the field of Jezreel; the Targum is, the inheritance of Jezreel; this is also threatened, 1 Kings xxi. 23. and there shall be none to bury her; or nothing of her to bury, as Kimchi, all being eat up but her skull, feet, and the palms of her hands, see ℣. 35. and he opened the door, and fled; that is, the young man of the sons of the prophets, as soon as he had said the above words, as he was ordered, lest he should be taken up for a traitor.

℣. 11. Then Jehu came forth to the servants of his lord, &c.] The rest of the captains of the army, who served under Joram as he did: and one said unto him, Is all well? one of the captains, the greatest of them, as Kimchi; he enquired whether he brought any ill news, since he came and went in such haste: wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? so prophane men, especially the worshippers of Baal, as those captains might be, were wont to call the prophets of the Lord, because of their habit, their manner of living, and the gestures they sometimes used in prophesying, and especially because of the things they prophesied of; and even prophets were sometimes called so, because, in the time of their prophesying, they appeared as madmen [m], and in a phrenzy: and he said unto them, Ye know the man, and his communication; you saw by his habit of what profession he is, and you may easily guess what he talked of, as such men usually do, about religion, and one whimsical thing or another, reproving men for their sins, and telling them what they ought to do; and such like things you may well imagine he has been talking of to me; you rightly call him a mad fellow, and you may well suppose his discourse was agreeable to his character, and not worth relating and hearing; this he said, to put them off enquiring any farther.

℣. 12. And they said, It is false, Tell us now, &c.] They did not believe he spoke truth, but concealed from them the real matter; which they concluded to be of some importance, by the hastiness of the messenger, the privacy between them, the countenance of Jehu, which discovered thoughtfulness and concern, and the trifling answer he sought to put them off with; all which increased their curiosity, and made them urgent and importunate to know the truth of the matter: and he said, Thus and thus spake he to me; such and such words as above: and particularly saying, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee king over Israel; and no doubt told them that he poured oil on his head, and anointed him, and he might shew them the oil.

℣. 13. Then they hasted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, &c.] That is, under Jehu, that he might be raised higher, and put on an eminence above them, agreeable to the high rank and dignity he was raised unto, and which they hereby acknowledged; and that he might be conspicuous to others: and this was done upon the top of the stairs, the first and highest of them, which led up either to an upper room, or to a scaffold erected for this purpose; the Targum is, on the degree of hours, a sun-dial, a stone on which were engraven the twelve hours of the day, and which, by the sun's shadow on it, it might be known what hour it was; and at or upon this stone they laid their clothes, for Jehu to sit upon; not their wearing apparel, but carpets, or pieces of tapestry, or such like things: and blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king; and they might come the more easily into such an acknowledgment of him as such, though he was anointed by one whom they had just called a mad fellow; being not so well affected to Ahab's family, and having a great respect for Jehu, the chief commander of the army, and especially being under a particular influence of the divine providence, which moved them to take such a step.

℣. 14. So Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat, the son of Nimshi, conspired against Joram, &c.] He and the captains with him entered into a confederacy to depose Joram, and set him up as king: now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria; having taken it, he left his army in it, under the command of his captains, of which Jehu was the chief, to keep it from the king of Syria; which gave Jehu a fairer opportunity, having the army at his command, and at a distance from Joram, of forming a conspiracy against him.

℣. 15. But king Joram was returned to be healed in Jezreel, &c.] As is recorded, ch. viii. 29. and here repeated for the reason above given: and Jehu said, If it be your minds; to engage one and all, and heartily, in this conspiracy, and to make me king: then let none go forth nor escape out of the city, to go to tell it in Jezreel; that so Joram might be surprised unawares, and have no opportunity either of fleeing or of preparing for his defence.

℣. 16. So Jehu rode in a chariot, &c.] In great pomp and majesty as a king: and went to Jezreel; set forward on a march thither with his captains, and part of his army at least, from Ramoth-gilead: which, according to Bunting [n], were 24 miles: for Joram lay there; to be cured of his wounds, as before observed: and Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to see Joram; see ch. viii. 29.

℣. 17.

[m] David de Pomis, Lexic. p. 204. 3.

[n] Travels, &c. p. 166.

℣. 17. And there ſtood a watchman on the tower of Jezreel, &c.] Who could ſee afar off when an enemy was coming, and his buſineſs was to give notice of it; and eſpecially he was now on his watch-tower, becauſe the king was there, and this was neceſſary, for his ſafety: and he ſpied the company of Jehu as he came, and ſaid, I ſee a company; a troop of ſoldiers, though he did not know who they were, and to whom they belonged, whether they were Syrians or Iſraelites; which was reported to the king: and Joram ſaid, take an horſeman, and ſend to meet them, and let him ſay, is it peace? he might fear ſome ill had befallen his army at Ramoth-gilead, and the Syrians had got the advantage of them; or they had made an irruption into his country, and were coming to attack him at Jezreel; or there was an inſurrection among his own people.

℣. 18. So there went one on horſeback to meet him, and ſaid, thus ſaith the king, is it peace? &c.] Are things well in the army, or any diſturbance in the kingdom? are you come as friends or enemies? and Jehu ſaid, what haſt thou to do with peace? or to aſk ſuch a queſtion: turn thee behind me; which he was obliged to do, Jehu having ſuch a company of ſoldiers with him; and this he did, that he might carry no tidings to Joram, that he might not know as yet who he and his company were: and the watchman told, ſaying, the meſſenger came to them, but he cometh not again; of this he ſent word to the king what he had obſerved.

℣. 19. Then he ſent out a ſecond on horſeback, which came to them, and ſaid, &c.] The ſame as the firſt meſſenger did, and had the ſame anſwer, and was bid to do the ſame as in the preceding verſe.

℣. 20. And the watchman told, ſaying, he came even unto them, and cometh not again, &c.] Was detained, as the other was: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi; for coming nearer, the watchman could diſcern the manner of his driving: for he driveth furiouſly; in great haſte, making much ſpeed, being a man of a very warm and active ſpirit; and now being eager to come up with Joram, and ſeize him unprepared, and aſcend the throne; the Targum is the reverſe, "for he driveth quietly or ſlowly," being deſirous of drawing Joram out of the city, and get him into his hands, and ſlay him, that he might not have the trouble of beſieging the place, which was able to hold out ſome time againſt him; and beſides, he remembered the prophecy of Eliſha, that Naboth's blood would be requited in the field of Jezreel, ℣. 26. and therefore was deſirous of drawing him out of the city, in order to ſlay him there.

℣. 21. And Joram ſaid, make ready, &c.] The chariot, put to the horſes; bind them, as the word ſignifies, to the chariot: and his chariot was made ready; by his ſervants immediately: and Joram king of Iſrael, and Ahaziah king of Judah went out, each in his chariot; not both in the ſame chariot, but each in his own, for the ſake of greater magnificence: and they went out againſt Jehu; not in an hoſtile manner, for they had no notion of him as an enemy; though it is much they had no ſuſpicion of him by his detaining the meſſengers; but Joram perhaps thought he was deſirous of delivering his meſſage himſelf; and in honour to him, and alſo being eager to know what it was, went out to meet him: and met him in the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite; which had been his, and where, or near it, he was ſtoned, and his blood ſhed; a very inauſpicious place to meet him in.

℣. 22. And it came to paſs when Joram ſaw Jehu, that he ſaid, is it peace, Jehu? &c.] Have things gone well at Ramoth-gilead? art thou come in triumph from thence? or obliged to fly from the Syrians? or art thou come in a peaceable, or in an hoſtile manner to me? and he anſwered, what peace; canſt thou expect at home or abroad, from me or others: ſo long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel, and her witchcraſts are ſo many? which may be underſtood both literally of corporal whoredom, and diabolical arts ſhe was addicted to, and figuratively of idolatry, often called whoredom in ſcripture, and of the wicked arts and methods ſhe made uſe of to inveigle and entice perſons into it; and both theſe very often went together; ſee Nahum iii. 4. and of which Joram was guilty, at leaſt in part; he connived at all in her, and did not attempt to reſtrain her, and therefore had no claim to peace, protection and ſafety.

℣. 23. And Joram turned his hand, and fled, &c.] Taking hold of the horſes reins with it to turn them, or by the motion of it directing the charioteer to turn them back towards Jezreel, whither he fled: and ſaid to Ahaziah, there is treachery, O Ahaziah; a conſpiracy formed, and rebellion raiſed by the captains, at the head of which he ſuppoſed Jehu was.

℣. 24. And Jehu drew a bow with his full ſtrength, &c.] To give the arrow all the force he could: and ſmote Jehoram between his arms; that is, between his ſhoulders, his back being turned to him, and the chariot an open one: and the arrow went out at his heart; quite through him: and he ſunk down in his chariot; and died immediately.

℣. 25. Then ſaid Jehu to Bidkar his captain, &c.] Not Joram's, but Jehu's captain, though he had been the former's, and his father Ahab's alſo: take up, and caſt him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite; near to which they were: for remember, how that when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father; either in the ſame chariot, or on horſeback ſide by ſide, his guards or retinue following him two and two: the Lord laid this burden upon him; this heavy denunciation of vengeance by Elijah the prophet; and they being together, and pretty near, heard it, as he might remember, which follows.

℣. 26. Surely I have ſeen yeſterday the blood of Naboth, &c.] Theſe are the words of the Lord to Elijah the day after Naboth was put to death: and the blood of his ſons, ſaid the Lord; who were put to death with him, that there might be no heirs to the eſtate: and I will requite thee in this place; take vengeance here, as he now did on his ſon: now therefore take and caſt him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the Lord; whereby it would be fulfilled, ſee 1 Kings xxi. 19. more is here recited than there, which Jehu well remembered.

℣. 27. But when Ahaziah the king of Judah ſaw this, &c.] That Joram was ſlain: he fled by the way of the garden-houſe; which perhaps, ſtood upon the ſpot where Naboth's vineyard was, turned into a garden by Ahab: and Jehu followed after him; as far as Samaria, where he was hid, 2 Chron. xxii. 9. and ſaid, Smite him alſo in the chariot; this order he gave to his ſoldiers to do to him, as he had done to Joram: and they did ſo, at the going up to Gur, which is by Ibleam; a city in the tribe of Manaſſeh, naſſeh, Joſh. xvii. 11. and he fled to Megiddo; after he was wounded; another city in the ſame tribe, Joſh xvii. 11. and died there; at Megiddo; though ſome think that from thence he was had by his ſervants to Samaria, and there hid, and being found, was brought from thence to Jezreel, where he was ſlain, and died. Jehu was ordered to deſtroy the whole houſe of Ahab, and Ahaziah was of that houſe by his mother's ſide, and walked in the way of it, and was in conjunction with it, and periſhed therewith; this, though here recorded, was after the death of Jezebel, and of the 70 ſons of Ahab, and of the brethren of Ahaziah.

℣. 28. And his ſervants carried him in a chariot to Jeruſalem, &c.] With the leave of Jehu, becauſe he was the grandſon of Jehoſhaphat, a ſincere worſhipper of God, 2 Chron. xxii. 9. and buried him in his ſepulchre with his fathers in the city of David; ſee 1 Kings. xxii. 50.

℣. 29. And in the eleventh year of Joram the ſon Ahab, began Ahaziah to reign over Judah.] In ch. viii. 25. it is ſaid to be in the 12th year of his reign; it was at the cloſe of the 11th, and the beginning of the 12th; or he began to reign with his father in the 11th as here, and in the 12th as there, when his father was dead.

℣. 30. And when Jehu was come to Jezreel, Jezebel heard of it, &c.] And of what he had done to Joram: and ſhe painted her face; or put Stibium on her eyes; a ſort of paint to make them look beautiful; perhaps the ſame with powder of leadore, the Moors now uſe to tinge their eye-brows with, and make them look black, which they reckon graceful, ſee the note on Ezek. xxiii. 40. this cuſtom now obtains among the white Indians, who, to heighten the luſtre of their complexion, and render their eyes more languiſhing; put a little black about them [n]: and tired her head; dreſſed her head in the moſt elegant manner; not with a view to tempt Jehu, which ſhe could not expect, being an aged woman; but for grandeur and majeſty, and in the pride and haughtineſs of her ſpirit, which ſhe retained to the laſt, and reſolved to keep up and ſhew in her extremity and calamity: and looked out at a window; in a bravado, as fearleſs of Jehu, and to daſh him out of countenance if ſhe could; or ſhe might hope, by ſuch a graceful and majeſtic appearance ſhe made, that he would be moved to ſpare her life; though this does not ſo well agree with what follows as the former.

℣. 31. And as Jehu entred in at the gate, &c.] Either of the city of Jezreel, or of the king's palace: ſhe ſaid, Had Zimri peace, who ſlew his maſter? Elah the ſon of Baaſha king of Iſrael; no, he had not; he reigned but ſeven days, and being beſieged, burnt the king's houſe over him, and died, 1 Kings xvi. 10. 18. ſuggeſting that the like would be his fate, who had ſlain his maſter Joram; or the words may be rendered, O Zimri, the ſlayer of his maſter; calling Jehu ſo, becauſe of his likeneſs to Zimri.

℣. 32. And he lift up his face to the window, &c.] On hearing the above words: and ſaid, Who is on my ſide, who? and will aſſiſt in taking vengeance on this haughty, imperious, and abuſive woman: and there looked out to him two or three eunuchs; who uſed to wait on her, as ſuch did on women of quality, and attend them in their bedchambers; theſe, by their looks, ſignified they were ready to do any thing Jehu ſhould direct them, Jezebel having been, perhaps, a very cruel miſtreſs to them, and ſo was hated by them; and they might hope, by pleaſing Jehu, to be continued at court in their office.

℣. 33. And he ſaid, Throw her down, &c.] Out of the window upon the ground: ſo they threw her down; took her up, and caſt her headlong, as they were bid: and ſome of her blood was ſprinkled on the wall; of the palace where ſhe was: and on the horſes; which drew the chariot of Jehu; and he trod her under foot; with his horſes; according to Kimchi, her ſentence, and ſo her death, was ſtoning, as a retaliation of Naboth; for ſtoning was done two ways, both by caſting down perſons on ſtones, and by caſting ſtones upon them, ſee the note on Acts vii. 58.

℣. 34. And when he was come in, &c.] To the palace: he did eat and drink; to refreſh himſelf after ſo long a march, and doing ſuch execution: and ſaid, go ſee now this curſed woman; who had been the means of bringing a curſe on Iſrael thro' her idolatry, and upon Ahab and his family, and upon herſelf, body and ſoul, being curſed of God and of men: and bury her; forgetting the prophecy concerning her, tho' afterwards he remembred it: for ſhe is a king's daughter; the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Zidonians, 1 Kings xvi. 31. and therefore, in honour to royal dignity, though a curſed woman, he ordered the interment of her; or though ſhe is the daughter of one of the kings of the nations of the world, as Kimchi, yet honour muſt be given to whom it is due.

℣. 35. And they went to bury her, &c.] The ſervants of Jehu, according to his orders and inſtructions: but they found no more of her than the ſcull, and the feet, and the palms of her hands; the fleſh, and even all the reſt of her bones, being devoured by dogs, ſo that there was ſcarce any thing of her to be buried, as in ℣. 10. ſomething ſimilar to this happened to Aſcletarion, a mathematician, as related by Suetonius [o].

℣. 36. Wherefore they came again, and told him, &c.] How things were, and what only could be found of Jezebel: and he ſaid, This is the word of the Lord; or the fulfilment of it: which he ſpake by his ſervant Elijah the Tiſhbite, ſaying; as in 1 Kings xxi. 23.

℣. 37. And the carcaſe of Jezebel ſhall be as dung upon the face of the field, in the portion of Jezreel, &c.] For upon this ſpot her carcaſe fell when thrown out of the window of the king's palace, and here it was left; for the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which was in the portion of Jezreel, was hard-by the palace, 1 Kings xxi. 1. there ſeems to be ſome alluſion to her name Jezebel, which ſignifies where is dung? ſo that they ſhall not ſay, This is Jezebel; there being nothing left of her to be ſeen or pointed to, nor any grave, nor monument over it on which was ſuch an inſcription, Here lies Jezebel; or that might lead poſterity to ſay, This is Jezebel's grave. Now though the words of this verſe are not recorded elſewhere, as the words of the Lord, by Elijah, yet as Jehu was preſent when they were ſpoken, and within the hearing of them, he now remembered them, and could repeat them, theſe circumſtances bringing them freſh to his mind.

CHAP.

[n] Agreement of cuſtoms between Eaſt Indians and Jews, art. 15. p. 65.

[o] In Vita Domitian. c. 15.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter gives a farther account of the deſtruction of the houſe of Ahab by Jehu, or his orders, even of all his ſons and relations, ℣. 1—11. and alſo of the brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, ℣. 12—14. of his taking up Jehonadab the ſon of Rechab into his chariot, to be a witneſs of his zeal for the Lord, ℣. 15, 16, 17. and of his gathering together the prophets, prieſts, and worſhippers of Baal, and ſlaying them, ℣. 18—25. and of his extirpation of the idolatry of Baal, ℣. 26, 27, 28. nevertheleſs he continued the worſhip of the calves, ℣. 29, 30, 31. wherefore Iſrael was diſtreſſed by the king of Syria, ℣. 32, 33. and the chapter is concluded with the reign and death of Jehu, ℣. 34, 35, 36.

℣. 1. And Ahab had ſeventy ſons in Samaria, &c.] Theſe might not be all his immediate ſons, but ſome of them, his grandſons, as ſuch are ſometimes called in ſcripture: and Jehu wrote letters, and ſent to Samaria, unto the rulers of Jezreel; who fled thither, perhaps on Jehu's coming to Jezreel, having ſlain Joram, being the metropolis of the kingdom, to conſult about a ſucceſſor, or how to oppoſe Jehu, and to fruſtrate his deſigns: but the Septuagint verſion is, to the rulers of Samaria, which ſeems moſt likely to be the true reading: to the elders; the civil magiſtrates of the city of Samaria: and to them that brought up Ahab's children: who had the care of their education; who either always dwelt at Samaria, being the royal city, or were ſent with their charge thither, when Joram went to Ramoth-gilead, for ſafety, ſuppoſing he ſhould be worſted by the Syrians; or they fled thither with them upon the death of Joram: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Now as ſoon as this letter cometh to you, ſeeing your maſter's ſons are with you, &c.] Sons of Ahab, and ſome of Joram, and all either the ſons or grandſons of Ahab: and there are with you chariots and horſes; military ones: a fenced city alſo; as Samaria was, well walled and fortified, and able to hold out a long ſiege: and armour; of all ſorts, to arm themſelves and people with in their defence.

℣. 3. Look even out the beſt and meeteſt of your maſter's ſons, &c.] Moſt fit for government, whether on account of age or proper qualifications, as wiſdom, courage, &c. and ſet him on his father's throne; proclaim him king: and fight for your maſter's houſe; that the crown may continue in his family; all which he did not deſire might be, but in this ſarcaſtic and ſneering manner dares them to do it.

℣. 4. But they were exceedingly afraid, &c.] They were intimidated at once; for they ſaw the purport of thoſe letters, that ſhould they attempt any thing of this kind, he would come upon them with his forces: and ſaid, Behold, two kings ſtood not before him; the kings of Iſrael and Judah, Joram and Ahaziah; but they were unarmed, and therefore how ſhould they ſtand before an armed body of men Jehu had with him; this ſhews the puſillanimity of theſe men to make uſe of ſuch an argument as this: how then ſhall we ſtand? that is, before Jehu; but they were in much better circumſtances than the two kings, as they are truly repreſented in ℣. 2.

℣. 5. And he that was over the houſe, &c.] The king's palace in Samaria, who had the cuſtody, care, and government of it: and he that was over the city; the commander and governor of it, that had the higheſt poſt in it under the king: the elders alſo; all other ſubordinate officers and magiſtrates: and the bringers up of the children; who had the education of the king's ſons committed to them: ſent to Jehu, ſaying, We are thy ſervants, and will do all that thou ſhalt bid us; they were ready to do homage, and ſwear allegiance to him as their king, and obey all his commands as faithful ſubjects: we will not make any king; or ſet up any on the throne, no not any of the ſons or grandſons of Ahab: do thou that which is good in thine eyes; we will never oppoſe thee.

℣. 6. Then he wrote a letter the ſecond time to them, &c.] Having gained his point by the former: ſaying, If ye be mine; acknowledge yourſelves my ſubjects and ſervants; and if ye will hearken to my voice; obey my commands: take ye the heads of the men your maſter's ſons; that is, take off their heads: and come to me to Jezreel by to-morrow this time; meaning with the heads along with them: (now the king's ſons being ſeventy perſons, were with the great men of the city, which brought them up;) they were in their houſes, and under their tuition, and ſo had an authority over them, and could diſpoſe of them at pleaſure; they were not ordinary perſons to whoſe care they were committed, but the principal men of the city.

℣. 7. And it came to paſs when the letter came to them, &c.] They did not in the leaſt heſitate, but immediately complied with the contents of it: that they took the king's ſons, and ſlew 70 perſons; which was the whole number of them: and put their heads in baſkets, and ſent them to Jezreel; as a preſent to Jehu, juſt as they carried the firſt-fruits, as Abarbinel obſerves.

℣. 8. And there came a meſſenger, and told him, ſaying, They have brought the heads of the king's ſons, &c.] Perhaps this meſſenger to Jehu came from the great men of Samaria themſelves, to let him know that they had obeyed his orders: and he ſaid, Lay ye them in two heaps at the entring in of the gate, until the morning; very probably it was towards or at the evening they were brought; and he ordered them to be taken out of the baſkets, and laid in two heaps at the entring of the gate of the city, that they might be taken notice of, and publicly viewed by the people that paſſed and repaſſed the gate; and where they met in great numbers, either on account of the market there, or court of judicature there held, eſpecially in mornings; and here they were to remain till the morning, though not without a guard, that they might ſtill be more expoſed to view; Noldius [p] renders it, without the door of the gate, for they were brought at night when the gate was ſhut.

℣. 9. And it came to paſs in the morning, that he went out, and ſtood, and ſaid to all the people, &c.] who were gathered together to this ſhocking ſight, or on the above accounts: Ye be righteous; having had no concern in taking off the heads of thoſe men:

[p] Ebr. Conc. Part. p. 68. No. 340.

men: behold, I conſpired againſt my maſter, and ſlew him; I own it, and ſome may blame me for it, and charge me with treaſon and murder: but who ſlew all theſe? not he, but the chief men of Samaria, and therefore muſt be more guilty than he, having ſhed the blood of ſo many perſons, who had not offended againſt God and man to ſo great a degree as Joram; this he ſaid to leſſen his own ſin, and wipe off the reproach of it, that his character might appear fairer in the eyes of the people, concealing, at the ſame time, his orders for the ſlaying of them.

℣. 10. Know now, that there ſhall fall unto the earth nothing of the word of the Lord, which the Lord ſpake concerning the houſe of Ahab, &c.] He would have them obſerve, that all this, and what elſe ſhould follow of the ſame kind, were and would be brought about by the providence of God, according to divine predictions, and as juſt puniſhments on Ahab's family for their ſins; and therefore, neither he nor others were to be blamed for what was done, ſince they were only inſtruments made uſe of by the Lord, who both foretold all this, and gave orders for the execution of it: for the Lord hath done that which he ſpake by his ſervant Elijah; ſee 1 Kings xxi. 21. 29.

℣. 11. So Jehu ſlew all that remained of the houſe of Ahab in Jezreel, &c.] Which to do, and to juſtify himſelf in ſo doing, was the deſign of what he ſaid in the preceding verſes: and his great men; his miniſters of ſtate and counſellors, that adviſed him to, and abetted him in, his idolatrous practices, and ſo juſtly ſuffered for the ſame; and perhaps ſome of them at leaſt were thoſe very men that cut off the heads of his ſons in complaiſance to Jehu: and his kinſfolks; more diſtantly related to him, or his acquaintance and familiars, his aſſociates in ſin and wickedneſs: and his prieſts; who officiated for him, and offered his ſacrifices to Baal; the prieſts he kept in his palace, and eat at his table: until he left him none remaining; either of his kindred or his prieſts, that is, that were at Jezreel; for there were others at Samaria, ℣. 17. 19.

℣. 12. And he aroſe, and departed, and came to Samaria, &c.] To make a clear riddance there of all that belonged to Ahab, as at Jezreel, and aboliſh idolatry there: and as he was at the ſhearing-houſe in the way; or, the houſe of the binding of the ſhepherds, who, in ſhearing their ſheep, bind their legs together; the Targum is, "the houſe of the gathering of the ſhepherds;" where they uſed to meet and converſe together; with ſome it is the proper name of a place, Betheked, a country village between Jezreel and Samaria. Jerom ſpeaks [q] of a village of this name, ſituated in a large plain, about 15 miles from a place called Legion, which village he takes to be this here.

℣. 13. Jehu met with the brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, &c.] At the above place; theſe were the ſons of his brethren, called his brethren, as Lot was called Abraham's brother, being his brother's ſon; for as for his brethren, they had been ſlain by the Arabians before he was made king, 2 Chron. xxii. 1. 8. and ſaid, Who are ye? though perhaps he knew who they were: and they anſwered, We are the brethren of Ahaziah; the ſons of his brethren: and we go down to ſalute the children of the king, and the children of the queen; meaning either the children of Ahab and Jezebel, or of Joram and his queen; for they knew nothing of the death of Joram and Jezebel, and the revolution made in the kingdom, and therefore with great ſimplicity tell who they were, and where they were going, and on what account.

℣. 14. And he ſaid, Take them alive, &c.] Gave orders to his guards to ſeize them, and make them captives: and they took them alive, and ſlew them at the pit of the ſhearing-houſe; where they waſhed the ſheep when they ſheered them: even 42 men, neither left he any of them; they being, by their grandmother's ſide, of the houſe of Ahab, and ſo within the commiſſion of Jehu to ſlay them, at leaſt as he thought; though his chief view might be, leſt they ſhould make any pretenſions to the crown, being deſcended from that houſe, or ſhould hereafter attempt to avenge the death of their relations; but by the judgment of God they were cut off as idolaters.

℣. 15. And when he was departed thence, &c.] From Betheked, or the ſhearing-houſe: he lighted on Jehonadab the ſon of Rechab coming to meet him; a Kenite, a deſcendant of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes, a wiſe and good man, as appears by the laws and rules he gave to his poſterity, who continued to the times of Jeremiah, and were then obſervant of them, Jer. xxxv. 6—10. this good man hearing of Jehu's coming to the throne, and of his deſtruction of the idolatrous family of Ahab, and of his zeal for the worſhip of God, and againſt idolatry, came forth from his tent to meet him, and congratulate him upon it: and he ſaluted him; Jonadab ſaluted Jehu, according to Abarbinel; or bleſſed him [r], wiſhed him all happineſs in his kingdom, and ſucceſs in the reformation of it; though moſt underſtand it of Jehu's ſaluting Jonadab, which ſeems beſt to agree with the following: and ſaid to him, is thy heart right as my heart is with thy heart? that is, haſt thou the ſame cordial affection, and ſincere reſpect for me, as I have for thee? and Jehonadab anſwered, it is; to which ſome join the next clauſe, and read, and it is; which is doubling the anſwer for the confirmation of it, as Kimchi ſays; though he alſo obſerves, that the latter may be interpreted as the anſwer of Jehu, by way of interrogation, is it? then give me thine hand; and to the ſame purpoſe is our verſion, if it be, and he gave him his hand; Jonadab gave Jehu his hand as a token of ſincere friendſhip [s], and cordial reſpect, and for the confirmation of the covenant between them, as Ben Melech; who alſo obſerves, that Jehu might bid him give him his hand to help him up into the chariot, ſince it follows, and he took him up to him into the chariot; to ride with him to Samaria; the company of ſuch a man, ſo famous for wiſdom and goodneſs, he knew would give him much countenance among the people, and ſanction to what he did.

℣. 16. And he ſaid, come with me, and ſee my zeal for the Lord of hoſts, &c.] In deſtroying idolaters and idolatry, with an intent to do which he was going to Samaria; this ſeems to ſavour very much of vain-glory, hypocriſy, and a phariſaical ſpirit: ſo they made him ride in his chariot; the ſervants of Jehu by his order opened the chariot-door, and aſſiſted Jonadab in getting into it.

℣. 17. And when he came to Samaria, he ſlew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria, &c.] All that were in any connexion with him, as related to his family, family, or as miniſters of his in civil or religious things: till he had deſtroyed him; his whole houſe, as he was ordered: according to the word of the Lord, which he ſpake to Elijah; which is obſerved, to ſhew the exact fulfilment of prophecy, ſee 1 Kings xxi. 21.

[q] De loc. Heb, fol. 89. K. &c. Virgil. Æneid. l. 3. prope finem.

[r] ויברכהו & benedixit ei. V. L. Montanus. Vid. Servium in ib.

[s] Ipſe pater dextram Anchiſes, Vid. Cornel. Nepot. Vit. Themiſtocl. l. 2. c. 8. & Datam. l. 14. c. 10.

℣. 18. And Jehu gathered all the people together, &c.] The people of Samaria, at leaſt the principal of them: and ſaid unto them, Ahab ſerved Baal a little, but Jehu ſhall ſerve him much; which ſome underſtand as ſpoken ironically; but the words ſeem to be ſpoken with a deſign to deceive the idolatrous inhabitants of Samaria, making them to believe that he was hearty in the worſhip of Baal, and ſhould ſhew a greater reſpect to it, and more conſtantly attend it than Ahab had done; and this he ſaid with a view to draw them to the temple of Baal, and there deſtroy them, as the ſequel ſhews; and in which he is not to be juſtified, however good his intention was; for evil is not to be done, that good may come.

℣. 19. Now therefore call unto me all the prophets of Baal, all his ſervants, and all his prieſts, let none be wanting, &c.] All that were employed in the ſeveral parts of religious worſhip given him, and in performing any rite and ceremony belonging to it; in invocation of him, and ſinging praiſes to him, as the prophets; in offering ſacrifices to him as the prieſts; or in aſſiſting them in their ſervice, who may be meant by his ſervants or miniſters: for I have a great ſacrifice to do to Baal; by which, though he might mean a ſacrifice of his prophets, prieſts, ſervants and worſhippers, he would have it otherwiſe underſtood, and his deſign was to deceive, which cannot be juſtified: whoſoever ſhall be wanting, he ſhall not live; but be put to death; this he ſaid, pretending his great zeal for Baal, when his view was by this threatening to get all his worſhippers together to deſtroy them, that none might eſcape, as follows: but Jehu did it in ſubtlety, to the intent that he might deſtroy the worſhippers of Baal; the Targum renders it, with wiſdom; but Jarchi and Ben Gerſom much better, in deceit; the word ſignifies ſupplantation, ſuch as Eſau charged Jacob with.

℣. 20. And Jehu ſaid, proclaim a ſolemn aſſembly for Baal, &c.] Such as with the Jews was an holy convocation, when they were forbidden and reſtrained from doing any work on that day; and ſuch a day Jehu would have appointed and proclaimed for Baal, that the people might be at leiſure to attend: and they proclaimed it; according to his order, in Samaria.

℣. 21. And Jehu ſent through all Iſrael, &c.] Perſons to proclaim this ſolemn aſſembly: and all the worſhippers of Baal came, ſo that there was not a man left that came not; ſome no doubt came cheerfully, having no ſuſpicion of him, and the rather, as he might have been a worſhipper of Baal in the times of Ahab; and as for what he had done to Baal's prieſts, they might conſider that only as they were in connexion with Ahab's family, whom to deſtroy was his political intereſt; and they were glad at heart their new king was ſo affected to Baal, and fond to ſee ſuch a grand ſolemnity as they expected this to be; and others that might be ſuſpicious of him, yet as they muſt die if they did not appear, and there was a poſſibility they might live, choſe therefore to come: and they came into the houſe of Baal; the temple which Ahab had built for him in Samaria, 1 Kings xvi. 32. and the houſe of Baal was full from one end to the other; not only the body of the temple, but all the outward court, every mouth, or corner, as in the original text: and this ſingle houſe might be ſufficient for all in the land; ſince the number of them might be greatly leſſened by the miniſtry of Elijah and Eliſha, as well as by the deſtruction the former made of the prophets of Baal; and by the ſchools of the prophets ſet up in divers places, from whence prophets were ſent out to inſtruct the people; and by Joram's putting away the image of Baal, which no doubt leſſened the number of his worſhippers.

℣. 22. And he ſaid unto him that was over the veſtry, &c.] That had the care of the garments, in which the prieſts of Baal miniſtred: bring forth veſtments for all the worſhippers of Baal; not for the prieſts only, but for all that worſhipped; and this he ordered for the greater ſolemnity of this ſervice, as he would have it thought; but in truth, that the worſhippers of Baal might be ſeparated, and diſtinguiſhed from the worſhippers of the Lord, that not one of them might be among them: and he brought them forth veſtments; out of the chamber or wardrobe in which they were, and they put them on.

℣. 23. And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the ſon of Rechab, into the houſe of Baal, &c.] Who no doubt was led into the ſecret, and knew the deſign of Jehu, or he would not have gone into ſuch an idolatrous place: and ſaid unto the worſhippers of Baal, ſearch and look, that there be here with you none of the ſervants of the Lord, but the worſhippers of Baal only; pretending a great regard to the purity of their worſhip and ſacrifices, that they might not be profaned [t] by the company of ſuch who were not worſhippers of Baal, but of Jehovah; whereas his view was to prevent any of the worſhippers of God periſhing with them, who might out of curioſity go in among them, to behold the manner of their ſervice.

℣. 24. And when they went in to offer ſacrifices and burnt offerings, &c.] To Baal, all things being ready for them: Jehu appointed 80 men without; without the temple of Baal, at the ſeveral doors and avenues of it: and ſaid, if any of the men whom I have brought into your hands eſcape; he that letteth him go, his life ſhall be for the life of him; ſhould be put to death for it in his room; the life of a watchman ſet to guard, ſhould go for the life of one that eſcaped.

℣. 25. And it came to paſs, as ſoon as he had made an end of offering the burning-offering, &c.] The chief of the prieſts of Baal, whoſe office it was to do this ſervice: that Jehu ſaid to the guard, and to the captains, go in and ſlay them, let none come forth; this he ſaid to the 80 men ſet to guard the temple, and the officers over them; and perhaps they might alſo have a reinforcement, ſince ſuch a number ſeems ſcarcely ſufficient to deſtroy ſo many as were here; tho' indeed it muſt be conſidered they were armed men: and they ſmote them with the edge of the ſword; put them all to death: and the guard and the captains caſt them out; thoſe that were ſlain, as the Targum, their dead bodies; but it can hardly be thought they would be at the trouble of caſting them out, when the houſe was to be pulled down, and made a jakes of, as follows; rather therefore it ſhould be rendered, they caſt or flung themſelves [u] with great force, and in great haſte, as Kimchi, and ruſhed out of the temple, being being eager to do as follows: and went to the city of the houſe of Baal; to pull it down; to ſome city near Samaria, where was a temple of Baal; or rather this may deſign the buildings about the temple of Baal, in which the prieſts and their families lived, and were ſo large, that they might be called a city of themſelves.

[t] —— procul, o procul eſte profani. Virgil. Æneid. 6. ℣. 258.

[u] וישלכו & proripuerunt ſe, De Dieu.

℣. 26. And they brought forth the images out of the houſe of Baal, and burnt them] Leſſer images, the images of other deities, or what was placed as decorations of the temple.

℣. 27. And they broke down the temple of Baal, &c.] Which ſome take to be Belus, others Saturn, others the ſun, which ſeems moſt probable: and broke down the houſe of Baal; his temple, demoliſhed it: and made it a draught-houſe until this day; a common ſewer, a jakes; a fit place for dunghil-gods to be thrown into, and an idol-temple to be turned into.

℣. 28. Thus Jehu deſtroyed Baal out of Iſrael.] His images and temples being ſerved thus in all places throughout the land of Iſrael, where there were any.

℣. 29. Howbeit, from the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin, &c.] Which is the common character given of that king, a blot never to be wiped off: Jehu departed not from after them, to wit, the golden calves that were in Bethel, and that were in Dan; he did not abſtain from the worſhip of them, partly becauſe he might not think it idolatry, becauſe God was worſhipped in them; hence he calls the worſhippers of the calves the ſervants of the Lord, ℣. 23. and partly that he might not diſpleaſe the princes of the people of Iſrael, who generally gave in to the worſhip of them; but chiefly leſt the kingdom of Iſrael ſhould return to the houſe of David, the worſhip of the calves being a piece of ſtate-policy, to keep them from going to Jeruſalem to worſhip, leſt thereby they ſhould be drawn off from their allegiance to the king of Iſrael.

℣. 30. And the Lord ſaid unto Jehu, &c.] By a prophet, he not being one himſelf; and this is generally ſuppoſed, by the Jews[w], to be Jonah the ſon of Amittai: becauſe thou haſt done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes; in rooting out the idolatry of Baal, which was right in the ſight of God, and was materially a good work, though it might not be done from a good principle, nor every ſtep taken in doing it juſtifiable: and haſt done unto the houſe of Ahab according to all that was in mine heart; that he had decreed within himſelf ſhould be done, and had foretold by his prophets would be done, the doing of which was acceptable and well-pleaſing to him: thy children of the fourth generation ſhall ſit on the throne of Iſrael; as they did, namely, Jehoahaz, Joaſh, Jeroboam, and Zachariah, though the laſt reigned but ſix months, juſt enough to fulfil this promiſe.

℣. 31. But Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord God of Iſrael with all his heart, &c.] As to his moral converſation, he was not careful that it was according to the law of God, and what he did agreeable to it, it was not ſincerely, and from the right principle: for he departed not from the ſins of Jeroboam, which made Iſrael to ſin; which he would, if he had had a cordial reſpect to all the commandments of the law.

℣. 32. In thoſe days the Lord began to cut Iſrael ſhort, &c.] To bring their dominions into a narrower compaſs; this was done in the days of Jehu, though he was ſo active and courageous, wherefore the hand of God was the more ſeen in it: and Hazael ſmote them in all the coaſts of Iſrael; which bordered on his country, when he did what Eliſha foretold he would, ch. viii. 12.

℣. 33. From Jordan eaſtward, &c.] This was principally the coaſt on which Hazael ſmote them, to the eaſt of the land of Canaan: all the land of Gilead, the Gadites, and the Reubenites, and the Moabites; the country on the other ſide Jordan, given to theſe tribes by Moſes, at their requeſt, which were before the kingdoms of Sihon and of Og: from Aroer, which is by the river Arnon, even Gilead and Baſhan; countries which the Iſraelites firſt conquered, and were the firſt they loſt.

℣. 34. Now the reſt of the acts of Jehu, and all that he did, and all his might, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?] Of the preceding kings from the times of Jeroboam, in which their ſeveral acts were recorded, and his alſo.

℣. 35. And Jehu ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died as they did: and they buried him in Samaria; where Omri and Ahab his predeceſſors were buried, 1 Kings xvi. 28. and xxii. 37. and Jehoahaz his ſon reigned in his ſtead; who reigned ſeventeen years, chap. xiii. 1.

℣. 36. And the time that Jehu reigned was 28 years.] Which was longer than any king of Iſrael had reigned.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter relates, how that Joaſh the ſon of Ahaziah, king of Judah, being hid and preſerved, when his grand-mother murdered all the ſeed royal, after ſix years was produced, ℣. 1, 2, 3. when Jehoiada the prieſt ſet a ſufficient guard about him, and the king's houſe, and anointed him king, ℣. 4—12. and Athaliah his grand-mother, who had reigned ſix years, was put to death by the order of the prieſt, ℣. 13—16. and then a covenant was made between the Lord, and the king, and the people, and between the king and the people; and he was placed on the throne to the ſatisfaction of the people, and the quiet thereof, ℣. 17—21.

℣. 1. And when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah ſaw that her ſon was dead, &c.] Who was the daughter of Ahab, and grand-daughter of Omri, ch. viii. 18, 26. ſhe aroſe, and deſtroyed all the ſeed royal; that were left, for many had been ſlain already; the ſons of Jehoſhaphat, the brothers of Joram were ſlain by him, 2 Chron. xxi. 4. and all Joram's ſons, excepting Ahaziah, were ſlain by the Arabians, 2 Chron. xxii. 1. and the ſons of the brethren brethren of Ahaziah were ſlain by Jehu, ℣. 8. theſe therefore ſeem to be the children of Ahaziah, the grand-children of this brutiſh woman, whom ſhe maſſacred out of her ambition of rule and government, which perhaps ſhe was intruſted with whilſt her ſon went to viſit Joram king of Iſrael; other reaſons are by ſome aſſigned, but this ſeems to be the chief. For the ſame reaſon Laodice, who had ſix ſons by Ariarathes king of the Cappadocians, poiſoned five of them, the youngeſt eſcaping her hands, was murdered by the people [x], as this woman alſo was.

[w] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 19.

℣. 2. But Jehoſheba the daughter of king Joram, &c.] Not by Athaliah, but another woman; for an high-prieſt, as her huſband was, would not have married the daughter of ſuch an idolatrous woman, nor would ſhe have married her to him: ſiſter of Ahaziah, took Joaſh the ſon of Ahaziah, and ſtole him from among the kings ſons which were ſlain; among whom he lay; either being caſt there by the murderer, or her aſſociates, ſuppoſed to be dead, or by his nurſe, that he might be thought to be ſo, who acquainting his aunt with it, went and privately took him away: and they hid him, even him and his nurſe in the bed-chamber from Athaliah, ſo that he was not ſlain; that is, Jehoſheba, and her huſband hid him and his nurſe in a bed-chamber; or chamber of beds [y], in which there were more beds than one; one of the chambers of the prieſts and Levites in the temple, that is, which were adjoining to it; for into the ſanctuary itſelf it was not uſual to bring beds [z]; wherefore the houſe of the Lord, in the next verſe, muſt be underſtood largely, as including all the appendages of it.

℣. 3. And he was with her hid in the houſe of the Lord ſix years, &c.] In the temple; not in the holy of holies, as Jarchi, but in a chamber of the prieſts and Levites, of which there were ſeveral in the temple, as Kimchi, and others; and the huſband of Jehoſheba being high-prieſt, had one of them for his own uſe; and here the child was hid ſix years, ſo that he was but a year old when he was firſt taken and preſerved, for he was made king when ſeven years of age, ℣. 21. and Athaliah did reign over the land; the only inſtance we hear of a woman reigning in Iſrael, and this was not by right, but by uſurpation; and ſo, according to the Jewiſh canons, a woman might not rule; which thus runs [a], they don't ſet a woman in the kingdom, as it is ſaid, Deut. xvii. 15. a king over them, not a queen; and ſo in all places of power and authority in Iſrael, they put in them none but a man.

℣. 4. And the ſeventh year Jehoiada ſent and ſet the rulers over hundreds with the captains, and the guard, &c.] This was the huſband of Jehoſheba, who was high-prieſt, 2 Chron. xxii. 11. theſe rulers over hundreds were not thoſe appointed over the people for civil affairs, as by the advice of Jethro, but over the prieſts and Levites in their courſes; five of whom are mentioned by name, and were employed in gathering together the Levites, and the chief of the fathers, throughout all the cities of Judah, 2 Chron. xxiii. 1, 2. and the captains here are the heads of the fathers there, who were the heads of the courſes, they were ſent to gather; and the guard, thoſe of the late king, whom Athaliah had turned out of their poſt, and took in others in their room, unleſs rather the temple-guard is meant; and brought them to him into the houſe of the Lord; the temple, that part of it where was the court of the prieſts and Levites: and made a covenant with them; to join with him, aſſiſt him, and ſtand by him in the reſtoration of the king, and the reformation of the kingdom: and took an oath of them in the houſe of the Lord; to keep ſecrecy, and be faithful to him: and ſhewed them the king's ſon; for the truth of which he could produce his wife, the ſiſter of the late king, and alſo the nurſe of this child with him.

℣. 5. And he commanded them, ſaying, this is the thing that ye ſhall do, &c.] Theſe were the rulers over hundreds among the prieſts and Levites, and which he, as high-prieſt, could command, and whom he could convene without ſuſpicion, being ſuch as he had a connexion with, and were unarmed men: and for the better underſtanding of what follows, it ſhould be obſerved, that the prieſts in the times of David, were divided into 24 courſes, which were by turns to ſerve a week in the temple; the courſe that came in, entered when the ſabbath began, and that which went out, went out when it ended, and each courſe conſiſted of 1000 men: now with reſpect to both theſe courſes, both that which went in, and that which went out, Jehoiada gave them the following charge: a third part of you that enter in on the ſabbath; on the beginning of it, to do duty in the temple the week following: ſhall even be keepers of the watch of the king's houſe; which, according to ſome, was that part of the temple where the king was hid and brought up, ſuppoſed to be the north part of it: or rather theſe were ſet at the north gate of the temple, which led to the royal palace, leſt any ſhould ruſh out of that, and kill the king.

℣. 6. And a third part ſhall be at the gate of Sur, &c.] Generally thought by the Jews to be the eaſtern gate, ſo called, as they ſay, becauſe ſuch as were defiled were bid to depart, or go back, as this word ſignifies, and not enter the temple; it is called the gate of the foundation, 2 Chron. xxiii. 5. becauſe, according to Ben Gerſom, here the foundation of the ſanctuary was firſt laid; it is ſaid [b] to have five other names beſides theſe: and a third part at the gate behind the guard; the temple-guard, which had a captain of them, Acts. iv. 1. this gate is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with ſippim, or the threſhold-gate, 2 Chron. xxiii. 4. and to be the ſouthern one: ſo ſhall ye keep the watch of the houſe that it be not broken down; guard the temple, that none break or ruſh into it, of Athaliah's party.

℣. 7. And two parts of all you that go forth on the ſabbath, &c.] The courſe that went out of ſervice at the end of the ſabbath; theſe were not ſuffered, not any of them, to go into the country, but were detained for the preſent purpoſe, and divided into two parts: even they ſhall keep the watch of the houſe of the Lord about the king; theſe were placed in the temple where the king was, or where he ſhould be brought forth, and be a guard on his right and left; this interpretation ſeems to be agreeable to the order of the text here, and is the ſenſe of Jarchi; but there is this objection to it, that by ſuch a diſtribution of both courſes, no proviſion is made for the ſervices of the temple; wherefore Dr. Lightfoot [c] divides them into ſix parts, each into three, one third of the courſe that came in, for ſervice, the other to keep the watch at the king's houſe, and the other third at the gate Sur; and the courſe

[x] Juſtin. e Trogo, l. 37. c. 1.
[z] T. Bab. Tamid, c. 1. fol. 26. 2. in Targ. in 2 Chron. xxiii. 5.
[y] בחדר המטות in cubiculo lectorum, Pagninus, Montanus. So Sept. &c.
[a] Maimon. Hilchot Melachim, c. 1. §. 5.
[b] T. Hieroſ. Yoma apud Beckium
[c] Proſpect of the Temple, c. 20.

courſe that went out, one third of them was placed at the gate behind the guard, and the other two to keep the watch of the houſe for the king's ſafety; but according to the account in 2 Chron. xxiii. 4, 5. there were but three ranks or orders of them in all; wherefore the ſenſe of Kimchi, Ben Gerſom, and Abarbinel ſeems moſt agreeable, that the firſt conſiſted of thoſe that went in on the ſabbath, not of all, but half of them, the other half being employed in the ſervice of the ſanctuary; and the other two of the courſe that went out, even all of them, they being entirely at leiſure, who were divided into two parts, and diſpoſed of as above.

℣. 8. And ye ſhall compaſs the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand, &c.] Afterwards given them, ℣. 10. and he that cometh within the ranges, let him be ſlain; any ſtrange man that was not of them, that came into the ranks in which they were formed, was to be put to death as a ſpy, who might go and inform the queen what was doing; according to Jarchi, the word for ranges ſignifies the place through which the king went from his own houſe to the houſe of God [d]; and here it ſeems the guards were placed: and be ye with the king as he goeth out, and as he cometh in; when brought forth to be crowned and anointed, and returned again.

℣. 9. And the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the prieſt commanded, &c.] Of whom ſee ℣. 4. and they took every man his men; every one his hundred: that were to come in on the ſabbath, with them that ſhould go out on the ſabbath; both the courſes, of which ſee ℣. 5. 7. and came to Jehoiada the prieſt; with the ſaid courſes, at leaſt as many of them as were to be employed in the preſent ſervice.

℣. 10. And to the captains over hundreds did the prieſt give king David's ſpears and ſhields, that were in the temple of the Lord.] Such as he had taken in war from his enemies, and had dedicated for the ſervice of the temple, to defend it on occaſion, and laid up there; thoſe the prieſts gave to the captains, to arm their men with, who came unarmed, and ſo unſuſpected, and in this way might be armed without being ſeen and known.

℣. 11. And the guard ſtood every man with his weapons in his hand, round about the king, &c.] As ordered, ℣. 8. from the right corner of the temple, to the left corner of the temple; from the north-eaſt to the ſouth-eaſt: along by the altar and the temple; the altar of burnt-offering, which ſtood in the court.

℣. 12. And he brought forth the king's ſon, &c.] Out of the apartment in the temple, where he had been brought up: and put the crown upon him; the crown-royal, which ſeems to have been kept in the temple: and gave him the teſtimony; the book of the law, which he was to read in all his days, and according to it govern the people; and which was a teſtimony of the will of God both to him and them: Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it of royal garments put upon him: and they made him king, and anointed him; proclaimed and declared him king, and anointed him for the confirmation of it, becauſe of the pretenſion Athaliah made to the kingdom; otherwiſe, as the Jewiſh writers ſay, the ſon of a king was not anointed; and hence, they ſay, it was, that Solomon was anointed, becauſe of the claim of Adonijah: and they clapt their hands; in token of joy: and ſaid, God ſave the king; or, let the king live; or, may he proſper, as the Targum; may health and proſperity attend him in his government. In 2 Chron. xxiii. 11. it is ſaid, Jehoiada and his ſons anointed him, and ſaid thoſe words; among whom muſt be Zechariah, whom this king afterwards ſlew, which was an inſtance of great ingratitude, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21, 22.

℣. 13. And when Athaliah heard the noiſe of the guard, and of the people, &c.] Their acclamations and ſhouts at the coronation of the king; for by this time the people had got ſome knowledge of the affair, and ran, and came flocking to ſee the new king, and expreſs their joy on this occaſion, and whom they greatly praiſed, 2 Chron. xxiii. 12. ſhe came to the people into the temple of the Lord; the outward court, where the people were aſſembled; and ſhe ſeems to come alone, unattended, in great ſurprize and conſternation, and was admitted to paſs the guards, being the queen, and alone, and perhaps by the particular order of Jehoiada, tho' contrary to the general orders he gave, ℣. 8.

℣. 14. And when ſhe looked, behold, the king ſtood by a pillar, as the manner was, &c.] Of kings, when they came into the temple on any occaſion, civil or religious, therefore it is called his pillar, 2 Chron. xxiii. 13. ſee 2 Kings xxiii. 3. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 1. ſome think this was the brazen ſcaffold erected by Solomon, 2 Chron. vi. 13. though Vitringa [e] and biſhop Patrick ſuppoſe it to be the poſt of the eaſt-gate of the inner court, from Ezek. xlvi. 2. according to Jacob Leo [f], this was the royal throne in the court of the Iſraelites, near the high or upper gate, on a marble pillar, where the kings of the houſe of David ſat, when they came into the ſanctuary to ſee the Lord in the ſecond temple; this throne was like an high tower, ſtanding upon two pillars, each twenty cubits high, and their circumference twelve; here ſat Joaſh, and Hezekiah, and Joſiah; however, Athaliah ſaw Jehoaſh with the crown on his head, and in the place where kings uſed to ſit or ſtand: and the princes, and the trumpeters by the king; the rulers of the courſes of the prieſts, and the levites, blowing the trumpets: and all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets; it is added, in 2 Chron. xxiii. 13. that the ſingers played alſo on muſical inſtruments; that were then and there aſſembled: and Athaliah rent her clothes; through grief, and as one almoſt diſtracted: and cried, Treaſon, treaſon; to try if ſhe could get any to take her part, and ſeize on the new king, and thoſe that ſet him up.

℣. 15. But Jehoiada the prieſt commanded the captains of the hundreds, the officers of the hoſt, &c.] Of the prieſts and levites: and ſaid unto them, Have her forth without the ranges; the ranks of the guards, which were at the gate leading to the palace, or rather within them [g]; the meaning is, that he ordered her to be had out of the court of the temple, and be put within their ranks, and incloſed by them, that her blood might not be ſhed in the temple, and yet not eſcape them; and him that followeth her, kill with the ſword; that takes her part, and offers to help and aſſiſt her, paſſing through the ranks after her, diſpatch him at once; for the prieſt had ſaid, Let her not be ſlain in the houſe of the Lord; that it might not be defiled with her blood, blood; by which it appears that the guards had orders concerning her before, ſhould ſhe come to the temple, ſee ℣. 13.

[d] Vid. David. de Pomis Lexic. fol. 205. 3. [e] Prolegom. de Synagog. vet. c. 4. p. 32. [f] Apud Wagenſeill. Sotah, p. 680. [g] מבית לשדרת intra ordines, Munſter, Junius, Tremellius, Piſcator, Noldius, p. 79. N°. 365. So Jarchi, Kimchi, Ben Gerſom, & Ben Melech.

℣. 16. And they laid hands on her, &c.] Or rather, "ſet a place for her," as the Targum; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi; made a ſpace, opened a way for her to come out of the temple into their ranks, that ſhe might be there taken and ſlain, and not in the temple: and ſhe went by the way by the which the horſes came into the king's houſe; either the high road in which the horſes and carriages went to the palace, or the way to the king's ſtables near the palace: and there was ſhe ſlain; they let her go ſo far, which was far enough from the temple, and then they ſlew her.

℣. 17. And Jehoiada made a covenant between the Lord, and the king and the people, that they ſhould be the Lord's people, &c.] Renewed the covenant between the Lord on the one part, and the king and the people on the other; aſſuring them, that as God had declared that he would be their God, he would yet be their God to bleſs and protect them, they continuing in obedience to him; and obliging them to promiſe that they would ſerve the Lord their God, and him only, and root out all idolatry from the land, and reſtore, and continue in, the pure worſhip of God: between the king alſo and the people; he promiſing, on his part, that he would govern them according to the law of God, and protect them in their rights and properties, privileges and liberties; and they, on their part, that they would honour and obey him, and be his faithful ſubjects. In 2 Chron. xxiii. 16. Jehoiada is ſaid to make this covenant between him, &c. which may be underſtood of the Lord; or if of himſelf, the meaning is, that it was made between him, the king and people, and the Lord.

℣. 18. And all the people of the land, &c.] That were at Jeruſalem, and the parts adjacent, that came from the country, hearing what was done: went into the houſe of Baal; a temple of his Athaliah had built, either in Jeruſalem, or near it; perhaps on the mount of Olives, called the mount of corruption, ch. xxiii. 13. from the idolatry there committed: and brake it down, his altars and his images brake they in pieces thoroughly; made an entire deſtruction of them all, temple, altars, the images of Baal and other deities: and ſlew Mattan the prieſt of Baal before the altar; either as he was ſacrificing, or that he might be a ſacrifice, or where he had fled for refuge: and the prieſt appointed officers over the houſe of the Lord; prieſts to offer ſacrifices, Levites to ſing the praiſes of God, porters at the door of the temple, and watches in it, and reſtored the courſes of the prieſts, and every thing to its proper order, which had been neglected, or had ceaſed during the uſurpation of Athaliah; ſee 2 Chron. xxiii. 18, 19.

℣. 19. And he took the rulers over hundreds, and the captains, and the guard, &c.] Of which ſee ℣. 4. and all the people of the land; as many as were aſſembled together on this occaſion: and they brought down the king from the houſe of the Lord; the temple, which was built on an eminence: and came by the way of the gate to the king's houſe; the gate of the royal palace, where the king's guards were placed, and did their duty: and he ſat on the throne of the kings; where the kings of Judah uſed to ſit, and this finiſhed the formality of his being made king.

℣. 20. And all the people of the land rejoiced, &c.] That one of the houſe of David was ſet upon the throne, which they might fear was extinct, as it very near was; the lamp of David was almoſt quenched, only this ſingle life left, from whom a race of kings proceeded, and the king Meſſiah; the promiſe of God cannot fail, ſee Pſ. cxxxii. 11, 17. this occaſioned great joy: and the city was quiet; was very eaſy at, yea pleaſed with the dethroning and death of Athaliah; there was no tumult on account thereof, nor ſuch diſturbances as ſhe occaſioned in her life: and they ſlew Athaliah with the ſword beſide the king's houſe; as related in ℣. 16. where ſhe was buried, or what became of her carcaſe, is not ſaid; ſome have thought ſhe was caſt into the brook Kedron, becauſe Joſephus ſays [h], Jehoiada ordered her to be had into that valley, and there ſlain.

℣. 21. Seven years old was Jehoaſh when he began to reign.] Being a year old when his father was killed, and having been hid ſix years in the temple.

CHAP. XII.

IN this chapter ſome account is given of the reign of Jehoaſh, that it was long, and the beginning of it good, during the life of Jehoiada, ℣. 1—3. how urgent he was to have the temple repaired, and what methods were taken for that purpoſe, ℣. 4—16. how meanly, as well as impiouſly he behaved, when the king of Syria was about to come up to Jeruſalem and beſiege it, ℣. 17, 18. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of his death, and the manner of it, ℣. 19—21.

℣. 1. In the ſeventh year of Jehu, Jehoaſh began to reign, &c.] So that he reigned 21 or 22 years cotemporary with Jehu's reign, for Jehu reigned 28 years: and 40 years reigned he in Jeruſalem; the ſame number of years David and Solomon reigned: and his mother's name was Zibiah of Beerſheba; a city in the tribe of Simeon, in the extreme part of the land of Canaan ſouthward; her name in the Chaldee dialect is Tabitha, the ſame with Dorcas in Greek, Acts ix. 36.

℣. 2. And Jehoaſh did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord all his days, &c.] Worſhipping the only true God, and ruling and walking according to the law of God: wherein Jehoiada the prieſt inſtructed him; and ſo long as he obſerved his inſtructions, and as long as that prieſt lived, he reigned well; for to that period, all his days, muſt be limited; for after his death he was ſeduced by the princes of Judah to idolatry, and lived ſcandalouſly, and died ignominiouſly; ſee 2 Chron. xxiv. 2, 17, 25.

℣. 3. But the high places were not taken away, &c.] Uſed before the temple was built, or ſet up in Reboboam's time, 1 Kings xiv. 23. contrary to the law of God, which required that ſacrifices ſhould only be offered in the place the Lord choſe to dwell in, Deut. xii. 5, 6. the people ſtill ſacrificed, and burnt incenſe in the high places; as they had done done in the times of Athaliah, and though the pure worſhip of God was reſtored at Jeruſalem; and indeed this they did in all preceding reigns; nor was it in the power of the beſt of kings, at leaſt they did not think it ſafe to attempt to remove them till Hezekiah's time; ſo fond were the people of them becauſe of their antiquity, and ſuppoſed ſanctity, and for the ſake of eaſe.

[h] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 7. §. 3.

℣. 4. And Jehoaſh ſaid to the prieſts, &c.] Being minded, or having it in his heart to repair the temple, as in 2 Chron. xxiv. 4. not only becauſe it was the ſanctuary of the Lord, though that chiefly, but becauſe it had been a ſanctuary to him, where he was hid and preſerved ſix years: all the money of the dedicated things that is brought into the houſe of the Lord; or rather, that is to be brought, as De Dieu and others render it, the particulars of which follow: even the money of every one that paſſeth the account; or that paſſeth among them that are numbered, as in Exod. xxx. 13, 14. that were upwards of twenty years of age, and bound to pay the half ſhekel for the ranſom of their ſouls; and it is called the collection or burden Moſes laid on them in the wilderneſs, 2 Chron. xxiv. 6. 9. the money that every man is ſet at; the price the prieſt ſet upon or eſtimated a man at, or whomſoever that belonged to him, that he devoted to the Lord, which by the law he was bound to pay for his redemption, and till that was done, he and they were not his, but the Lord's, of which ſee Lev xxvii. 1—8. and here the Targum calls it, the money of the redemption of ſouls, which is the gift of a man for the redemption of his ſoul: and all the money that cometh into any man's heart to bring into the houſe of the Lord; vows and free-will offerings made of their own accord.

℣. 5. Let the prieſts take it to them, every man of his acquaintance, &c.] Of thoſe that were moſt known by them; for the prieſts had cities aſſigned them in ſeveral parts of the land, and they that dwelt with them in them, or in the parts adjacent to them, were beſt known by them; and they were ſent into all the cities, ſome to one and ſome to another, where they were moſt acquainted, to collect money, both what was due by law, and what the people ſhould freely give, ſee 2 Chron. xxiv. 5. and let them repair the breaches of the houſe, wherefoever any breach ſhall be found; that is, of the temple, which, according to the Jewiſh chronology [i], had been built but 155 years; and being built very ſtrong, would have needed no conſiderable repairs as yet, but that it had been broken up and miſuſed by Athaliah and her ſons, 2 Chron. xxiv. 7.

℣. 6. But it was ſo, that in the 23d year of king Jehoaſh, the prieſts had not repaired the breaches of the houſe.] Either the people being backward to pay in the money, or the prieſts converted it to their own uſe; or however were negligent of doing the work enjoined them by the king, either in collecting the money, or in uſing it as they were directed.

℣. 7. Then king Jehoaſh called for Jehoiada the prieſt, and the other prieſts, &c.] The common prieſts, Jehoiada being high-prieſt: and ſaid unto them, why repair ye not the breaches of the houſe? in which they appeared to him very dilatory; the reaſon might be, the people were not forward to pay in their money, and they might not chuſe to begin the repairs until they had got it all in, or at leaſt what was ſufficient to carry them through them: now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance; ſuſpecting that what they had received they kept for their own uſe: but deliver it for the breaches of the houſe; into other hands for that uſe, and ſo diſmiſſed them at once from collecting the money, and being concerned in the repairs of the temple.

℣. 8. And the prieſts conſented to receive no more money of the people, &c.] And delivered up what they had: neither to repair the breaches of the houſe; being very willing to be quit of both ſervices, and eſpecially ſince they ſeemed to be ſuſpected.

℣. 9. But Jehoiada the prieſt took a cheſt, &c.] By the commandment of the king, 2 Chron. xxiv. 8. to put the money collected into, to prevent any fraud, or ſuſpicion of any: and bored a hole in the lid of it; to drop the money into, by which means it could not be taken out without taking off the lid: and ſet it beſide the altar; the altar of burnt-offering, in the court: on the right ſide, as one cometh into the houſe of the Lord; that is, on the north; for the entrance into the temple was at the eaſt: in 2 Chron. xxiv. 8. it is ſaid to be ſet without at the gate of the houſe; which Dr. Lightfoot [k] thinks reſpects another time, and that either another cheſt was made, or the ſame that was firſt placed by the altar, in the court of the prieſts, and ſo in their hands, and the money not coming in apace, was removed without the court at the entrance of it, whither the people brought it readily: and the prieſts that kept the door; the door of the outward court, the Levites, the porters, or rather, as the Targum, the prieſts, the treaſurers, who were appointed to this ſervice in the room of the others diſmiſſed; and ſo Kimchi and other Jewiſh commentators interpret this of the keepers of the veſſels of the ſanctuary, and not of the doors of it: theſe put therein all the money that was brought into the houſe of the Lord; by the people from the ſeveral parts of the country, who by proclamation were required ſo to do, and very readily did, 2 Chron. xxiv. 9, 10.

℣. 10. And it was ſo, when they ſaw that there was much money in the cheſt, &c.] Which might eaſily be gueſſed at by the number of the people which contributed: that the king's ſcribe, and the high prieſt came up; to the temple; the high prieſt did not chuſe to come alone, leſt he ſhould be ſuſpected, but to have the king's ſecretary with him, that the money might be taken out of the cheſt, and told in the preſence of them both: in 2 Chron. xxiv. 11. inſtead of the high prieſt, it is the high prieſt's officer, which the Targum there calls the Sagan of the high prieſt, or his deputy, who perhaps attended when the high prieſt could not: and they put up in bags, and told the money that was found in the houſe of the Lord; that is, they poured the money out of the cheſt, or emptied it, as in 2 Chron. xxiv. 11. and told it, and very likely ſet down the ſum in writing, and put it up in bags, very probably ſealed.

℣. 11. And they gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the overſight of the houſe of the Lord, &c.] Who were appointed overſeers of the workmen employed in the repairs of the temple; which overſeers were laymen, and not prieſts, they being diſcharged from

[i] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 18.

[k] Proſpect of the Temple, ch. 30. p. 20. 22.

from any concern in the repairs: this money told, Kimchi interprets of its being coined; he ſuppoſes money coined and uncoined to be brought, which was put in ſeparate bags; and that which was not coined, they coined it before they delivered it to the overſeers to pay the workmen with: and they laid it out to the carpenters and builders that wrought upon the houſe of the Lord; paid them with it, ſome that wrought in cutting the timber, and others in building with it.

℣. 12. And to maſons, and hewers of ſtone, &c.] Which they cut out of the mountain, and the maſons repaired the ſtone walls with: and to buy timber; felled in Lebanon: and hewed ſtone; fitted for building with: to repair the breaches of the houſe of the Lord; where both timber and ſtone were wanting: and for all that was laid out for the houſe to repair it; in whatſoever elſe it needed, as iron and braſs to mend it, 2 Chron. xxiv. 12.

℣. 13. Howbeit, there were not made for the houſe of the Lord, bowls of ſilver, &c.] Either to hold the blood of the ſacrifices, or the drink-offerings of wine: ſnuffers; to trim the lamps with; or, as Jarchi and other writers, both Jewiſh and chriſtian, muſical inſtruments: baſons; veſſels to ſprinkle the blood with, as the word ſignifies: trumpets; ſilver ones, to call the aſſembly, blow over the ſacrifices, &c. any veſſels of gold, or veſſels of ſilver; for any other uſe: theſe were not made of the money that was brought into the houſe of the Lord; yet, in 2 Chron. xxiv. 14. it is ſaid they were, which is to be reconciled thus; they did not make any of thoſe things at firſt, until the houſe was repaired, and the charges of it defrayed; and then of what remained they made veſſels for the houſe, which were wanting, that Athaliah had beſtowed on Baalim, 2 Chron. xxiv. 7.

℣. 14. But they gave that to the workmen, and repaired therewith the houſe of the Lord.] They took care that the workmen ſhould firſt be paid for the repairs of the temple.

℣. 15. Moreover, they reckoned not with the men into whoſe hand they delivered the money to be beſtowed on the workmen, &c.] That is, the king's ſecretary and the high prieſt, or his officer, never called to account the overſeers of the workmen, to whom they committed the money to pay them with; never examined how they laid it out, and for what: for they dealt faithfully; they ſaw they acted ſuch an honeſt and upright part, and ſuch an high opinion had they of them, that they never examined their accounts, or called for their bills.

℣. 16. The treſpaſs-money, and ſin-money was not brought into the houſe of the Lord, &c.] Which was the money perſons at a diſtance ſent for their treſpaſs and ſin-offerings inſtead of cattle, with which the ſacrifices were bought; and what remained of the money was not brought into the temple, and made uſe of in the above manner: it was the prieſts; the overplus of it, and ſuch of the ſacrifices which by the law were appropriated to them.

℣. 17. Then Hazael king of Syria went up and fought againſt Gath, and took it, &c.] When Jehoiada was dead, and Jehoaſh was become an apoſtate, the Lord ſuffered the king of Syria to be a ſcourge to him; who firſt attacked Gath, and took it, which was formerly one of the principalities of the Philiſtines, but was ſubdued by David, and had been in the hands of the Iſraelites ever ſince; the king of Syria began with this as neareſt to him, to open the way for what he had farther in view: and Hazael ſet his face to go up to Jeruſalem; he made ſuch preparations, and took ſuch meaſures, as plainly indicated what his deſign was.

℣. 18. And Jehoaſh king of Judah took all the hallowed things that Jehoſhaphat, and Jehoram, and Ahaziah his fathers, kings of Judah had dedicated, &c.] To ſacred uſes, and had laid up in the temple: and his own hallowed things; which he had devoted to the ſame uſes: and all the gold that was found in the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord; which were gifts and preſents from divers perſons for ſacred ſervices: and ſent it to Hazael king of Syria, and he went away from Jeruſalem; to bribe him, that he might deſiſt from his purpoſe; which ſhewed a meanneſs of ſpirit, and was the effect of his idolatry and apoſtacy, having forſaken the Lord, and being forſaken by him; in whom ſhould have been his truſt and confidence, and then he need not have been afraid to meet the king of Syria.

℣. 19. And the reſt of the acts of Jehoaſh, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?] In the regiſters and annals of thoſe princes; ſome of them are to be met with in 2 Chron. xxiv.

℣. 20. And his ſervants aroſe, &c.] This was after he had ſlain Zechariah the ſon of Jehoiada, who reproved him for his idolatry; and after a ſecond expedition of the king of Syria, who came to Jeruſalem, and ſpoiled it, and left Jehoaſh diſeaſed, as is recorded in 2 Chron. xxiv. and made a conſpiracy; not to get the kingdom into their hands, for his ſon ſucceeded him, but to avenge the death of Zechariah: and ſlew Jehoaſh in the houſe of Millo, which goeth down to Silla; theſe are both names of places; perhaps the latter is mentioned, to diſtinguiſh this Beth-Millo from Millo in Zion; or rather that itſelf is meant, and deſcribed by the deſcent from it to a cauſeway, as Silla may ſignify, which led to the royal palace.

℣. 21. For Jozachar the ſon of Shimeath, &c.] Said to be an Ammoniteſs, and this man's name Zabad, 2 Chron. xxiv. 26. and Jehozabad the ſon of Shomer, his ſervants; who is ſaid in the ſame place to be the ſon of Shimrith a Moabiteſs: theſe ſmote him, and he died; juſtly did he fall by the hands of ſuch perſons for his idolatry: and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David; but not in the ſepulchres of the kings, becauſe of his idolatry and murder of a prieſt of the Lord: and Amaziah his ſon reigned in his ſtead; the conſpirators not ſeeking the kingdom, but vengeance on him for his ſins, which, whether right in them to do, was ſuffered by the Lord.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the wicked reign of Jehoahaz ſon of Jehu king of Iſrael, and of the low eſtate he was brought into by the Syrians, ℣. 1—9. and of the reign of his ſon Joaſh, ℣. 10—13, and of the ſickneſs and death of Eliſha; of the viſit Joaſh made him in his ſickneſs; and of his prediction of the king's ſucceſs againſt the Syrians; and of the reviving of a dead man caſt into the prophet's ſepulchre, ℣. 14—21. and of the ſucceſs of Joaſh againſt the Syrians, according to the prediction of the prophet, ℣. 22—25.

℣. 1. In the 23d year of Joaſh the ſon of Ahaziah king of Judah, &c.] The ſame year he was ſo zealous and buſy in repairing the temple, ch. xii. 6. Jehoahaz the ſon of Jehu began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria; whereas, Joaſh began to reign in the ſeventh year of Jehu, and Jehu reigned but 28 years, ch. x. 36. and xii. 1. this could be but the 21ſt of Joaſh; to reconcile which it muſt be obſerved, that it was at the beginning of the 7th year of Jehu, that Joaſh began to reign, and at the beginning of the 23d of Joaſh that Jehoahaz began to reign, as the Jewiſh commentators obſerve: and reigned 17 years; the two laſt of which were in common with his ſon, as Junius, ſee ℣. 10.

℣. 2. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Committed idolatry: and followed the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, which made Iſrael to ſin; worſhipping the golden calves: he departed not therefrom; from the worſhip of them.

℣. 3. And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, &c.] They doing as their kings did: and he delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Ben-hadad the ſon of Hazael, all their days; the word their ſhould not be ſupplied, ſince it was not true that Iſrael was delivered into the hands of both thoſe kings of Syria as long as they lived; for they were delivered out of the hands of Benhadad, ℣. 25. but the word his ſhould be inſerted for it, as to be underſtood of the days of Jehoahaz, ſee ℣. 22.

℣. 4. And Jehoahaz beſought the Lord, and the Lord hearkened unto him, &c.] He did not apply in his diſtreſs to the calves he worſhipped, but to the Lord; who had a regard to his prayer, not for his ſake, or any righteouſneſs of his, or even his repentance and humiliation, which was only external; but for the ſake of Iſrael, and becauſe they were oppreſſed, who were his people, and he their God, though they had ſadly departed from him: for he ſaw the oppreſſion of Iſrael; not only with his eye of omniſcience, but with an eye of mercy and compaſſion: becauſe the king of Syria oppreſſed them; by his incurſions upon them, and wars with them.

℣. 5. And the Lord gave Iſrael a Saviour, &c.] Not an angel ſent by him, nor a captain raiſed up among them, nor the prophet Eliſha, who predicted their deliverance, nor Jehoahaz himſelf, but his ſon Joaſh, ℣. 25. ſo that they went out from under the hand of the Syrians; were not in ſubjection to them, nor haraſſed by them, nor in fear of them: and the children of Iſrael dwelt in their tents, as before time; in peace and ſafety.

℣. 6. Nevertheleſs, they departed not from the ſins of the houſe of Jeroboam, who made Iſrael to ſin, but walked therein, &c] Continued to worſhip the calves ſtill, which was an inſtance of great ingratitude; the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, he departed not; Jehoahaz the king: and there remained the grove in Samaria; which Ahab made there, 1 Kings xvi. 33. neither Jehu nor his ſon had it cut down, though Baal was deſtroyed.

℣. 7. Neither did he leave of the people to Jehoahaz, but 50 horſemen, &c.] This is to be connected with ℣. 4. the verſes 5, 6 being to be read in a parentheſis, as in our verſion, and to be underſtood of the king of Syria, who left no more to the king of Iſrael, not of the people of the land, but of his army, than 50 horſemen, all the reſt being either taken and carried captive by him, or ſlain: and 10 chariots; military chariots, with the men they carried: and 10,000 footmen; foot-ſoldiers; to ſo ſmall a number was his army reduced through wars with the Syrians: for the king of Syria had deſtroyed them, and had made them like the duſt by threſhing; as corn or chaff may be reduced to duſt by over much threſhing; or as mire and clay by treading on it.

℣. 8. Now the reſt of the acts of Jehoahaz, and all that he did, and his might, &c.] Which he exerted againſt the Syrians, being a man of courage, though not ſucceſsful, becauſe the Lord was not with him, but againſt him: are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael? where their acts, and the events of their reigns, were recorded.

℣. 9. And Jehoahaz ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died, as they did: and they buried him in Samaria; where Omri, and all the kings of Iſrael, that deſcended from him, were buried: and Joaſh his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom a ſhort account is given in the following verſes.

℣. 10. In the 37th year of Joaſh king of Judah, began Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, &c.] But inaſmuch as his father began to reign in the 23d of Joaſh, and reigned 17 years, ℣. 1. this king muſt begin to reign in the 39th or 40th of Joaſh; for the reconciling of which it may be obſerved, that two of the years of his reign may be ſuppoſed to be imperfect; or rather that his ſon reigned two or three years in his life-time, being raiſed up before his father's death to be a ſaviour of Iſrael from the Syrians; and ſo his father lived to ſee his prayer anſwered, ℣. 4, 5. and reigned 16 years.

℣. 11. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] As his father did, and his character is deſcribed in the ſame words, ſee ℣. 2, 6.

℣. 12. And the reſt of the acts of Joaſh, and all that he did, &c.] Though none of his acts as yet are recorded, but his ſinful ones: and his might; or valiant actions in war with the Syrians, ℣. 25. and wherewith he fought againſt Amaziah king of Judah; of which there is an account in the following chapter: are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael? in the hiſtory of the tranſactions of their reigns.

℣. 13. And Joaſh ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Or died: and Jeroboam ſat upon his throne; who was his ſon; it is not ſaid, that he began to ſit on it, or to reign, nor to reign in his father's ſtead; hence it is concluded, as by Kimchi and others, that his father ſet him on his throne in his life-time; time; and the Jewiſh chronology [l] expreſsly aſſerts, that he reigned with him one year: and Joaſh was buried in Samaria with the kings of Iſrael; ſee ℣. 9. the hiſtory of his life and actions does not ceaſe here, but after an account of the ſickneſs and death of Eliſha, it is re-aſſumed, which was neceſſary to interpoſe to lead on to it.

℣. 14. Now Eliſha was fallen ſick of his ſickneſs, whereof he died, &c.] The prophets don't live for ever; this ſickneſs was unto death; Eliſha died, and was not tranſlated as Elijah was: and Joaſh the king came down unto him; from his palace to the prophet's houſe, to viſit him in his ſickneſs; which was an inſtance of great condeſcenſion and reſpect, and eſpecially in a wicked prince that could not be reformed by him: and wept over his face; held his head over him, and wept, perceiving he was near his end, and ſenſible that his death would be a public loſs; the nation having often reaped the benefit of his prayers, though his counſel and advice was neglected and deſpiſed: and ſaid, O my father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof; the ſame words Eliſha ſaid to Elijah, as he went up to heaven, which very probably Joaſh had heard of; ſee the note on ch. ii. 12. and here, as there, the Targum is, "my maſter, my maſter, who was better to Iſrael by his prayers than chariots and horſemen."

℣. 15. And Eliſha ſaid unto him, take bow and arrows, &c.] The uſual inſtruments of war in thoſe days: and he took unto him bow and arrows; which though they might not be had in the houſe of the prophet, he could have ſome from his guards that attended him.

℣. 16. And he ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, put thine hand upon the bow, and he put his hand upon it, &c.] His left-hand: and Eliſha put his hands upon the king's hands; on both his hands, which were put, the one on the bow, the other on the arrow [m]; hereby ſignifying, that though the king would draw the bow in battle, the Lord, whom the prophet repreſented, would give the ſucceſs; and that it would be by his help, and through his bleſſing on his arms, that he would obtain victory over his enemies.

℣. 17. And he ſaid, open the window eaſtward, &c.] Syria lying eaſt of the land of Iſrael, as the Jewiſh commentators in general obſerve, and for which they quote Iſ. ix. 12. but it lay north-eaſt, or rather more to the north; wherefore this may reſpect the eaſtward part of the land of Iſrael, which the Syrians had got poſſeſſion of, and ſhould be recovered as this ſign ſhewed, ſee ch. x. 33. and he opened it, then Eliſha ſaid, ſhoot, and he ſhot; the arrow, out of the window, being opened: and he ſaid, the arrow of the Lord's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria; meaning, that that arrow was a ſign of the Lord's deliverance of Iſrael from the Syrians, by whom they had been ſadly oppreſſed, and reduced very low: for thou ſhalt ſmite the Syrians in Aphek, till thou haſt conſumed them; not the whole nation, but that army they ſhould bring thither; which was a city in the land of Iſrael, where the Syrians were routed in Ahab's time; 100,000 were ſlain near it, on one day, and 27,000 by the fall of the wall of it, 1 Kings xx. 26, 29, 30. hence ſome read the words here, as in Aphek.

℣. 18. And he ſaid, take the arrows, and he took them, &c.] The reſt of them: and he ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, ſmite upon the ground; the floor of the room in which the prophet lay: and he ſmote thrice, and ſtayed; made a ſtop, ceaſed ſmiting; he might think this action trifling, and beneath him, only was willing to pleaſe the prophet, but did not do it with a good will, and therefore ſmote no more; though this was an emblem of his ſmiting the Syrians, which he might not underſtand.

℣. 19. And the man of God was wroth with him, &c.] Becauſe he ceaſed ſmiting, and ſmote no oftener; for it was revealed to the prophet, by an impulſe upon his mind, that by the number of times he ſmote on the ground, it would be known how often he ſhould get the victory over his enemies; but this was to be left to the king's own will, how often he would ſmite, and thereby the prophet would know alſo with what ſpirit he would purſue his victories, and the advantages he would gain: and ſaid, thou ſhouldſt have ſmitten five or ſix times, then hadſt thou ſmitten Syria until thou hadſt conſumed it; as a nation, as well as routed their ſeveral armies: whereas now thou ſhalt ſmite Syria but thrice; beat them only three times in battle, according to the number of his ſmitings on the ground.

℣. 20. And Eliſha died, and they buried him, &c.] In Samaria. Epiphanius ſays [n], in Sebaſtopolis of Samaria, Samaria itſelf was called Sebaſte in after-times; though the Jews ſay [o], he was buried in mount Carmel, in the cave of Elijah; according to the Jewiſh chronology [p], he died in the 10th year of Joaſh, and he propheſied more than 60 years; 66 as Abarbinel, ſince he began to propheſy in the 19th year of Jehoſhaphat; and, according to Clemens [q] of Alexandria, when he was 40 years of age; but it ſeems rather, as Kimchi obſerves, that he died in the beginning of the reign of Joaſh, and even before his father's death, when he was a partner with him in the throne, and before any ſalvation or deliverance from the Syrians was wrought: and the bands of the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year; at the ſpring of the year, when there was fruit on the earth, thoſe troops of robbers came to plunder and ſpoil; ſeveral of the Jewiſh writers obſerve, that in the word for coming, ב is inſtead of ה, and ſo may be rendered, in that year, in that ſelf-ſame year that Eliſha died; and ſo read the Syriac, Arabic and the Vulgate Latin verſions.

℣. 21. And it came to paſs as they were burying a man, &c.] That is, as they were going to bury him; for as yet they were not come to the place they deſigned to bury him at, as appears by what follows: that behold, they ſpied a band of men; one of the bands of the Moabites, which came to rob and plunder, and which was about the place where they intended to bury the man; or they ſuppoſed would be there by that time they got to it, or at leaſt before they could bury him, and therefore being frightened ſtopped: and they caſt the man into the ſepulchre of Eliſha; that being neareſt, they opened it, or rather rolled away the ſtone from it, and threw the body in, in great haſte: and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Eliſha; or went and touched [r]; that is, as Kimchi interprets it, being caſt in, he rolled till he came to the body of the prophet, and touched it: he

[l] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 19.
[m] See Virgil. Æneid. 11. ℣. 831, 862.
[n] De vitis prophet. c. 6.
[o] Cippi Heb. p. 46.
[p] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 19.
[q] Stromat, l. 1. p. 326.
[r] וילך ויגע abit & tetigit, Pagninus, Montanus.

be revived, and ſtood upon his feet; which might ſerve to confirm the faith of Joaſh in the predictions of the prophet concerning his victories; is a proof of the reſurrection of the dead, and of eternal life, and an emblem of our being quickened through the death of Chriſt. The Jews ſay [s], this man was Shallum the ſon of Tikvah, and huſband of Huldah the propheteſs, and was a good man, much given to alms, for which he was rewarded; and they farther ſay, he went to his own houſe, and lived many years, and begat children, and particularly Hananeel, mentioned in Jer. xxxii. 7. which is not likely; though others ſay [t], he was a wicked man, Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah, 1 Kings xxii. 24 and therefore not ſuffered to continue in the prophet's grave; but the former is more probable; and, according to Joſephus [u], it was the band of robbers that left this man, whom they had murdered, in the grave of Eliſha. This grave ſeems to have been in the field, where the Jews of old, and in later times buried, as in the field of Hebron, the potter's field, &c. ſo the Greeks, as Pauſanias relates [w], and the Romans alſo [x], buried by the way-ſide.

℣. 22. But Hazael king of Syria oppreſſed Iſrael all the days of Jehoahaz.] That he reigned alone, at leaſt, before he took his ſon Joaſh to reign with him.

℣. 23. And the Lord was gracious to them, &c.] To Iſrael, notwithſtanding their apoſtacy from him, and the idolatry of the calves they were guilty of: and had compaſſion on them; being in oppreſſion and diſtreſs: and had reſpect unto them; looked upon them with an eye of pity and mercy: becauſe of his covenant with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; made ſo long ago he ſtill remembered: and would not deſtroy them, neither caſt he them from his preſence as yet; or ſuffered them to be carried captive into another land, as he afterwards did in the times of Hoſhea.

℣. 24. So Hazael the king of Syria died, and Benhadad his ſon reigned in his ſtead.] This was Benhadad the 3d; the firſt of this name was of the Damaſcene kings; but though the kingdom was now in another family, yet this name, being reſpectable with the Syrians, was retained in it.

℣. 25. And Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz took again out of the hand of Benhadad the ſon of Hazael, the cities which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz his father by war, &c.] Which were in the countries of Gilead and Baſhan, and belonged to the tribes of Reuben, Gad and Manaſſeh, ch. x. 33. three times did Joaſh beat him; in ſo many pitched battles, but where is not ſaid, no doubt one of them was in Aphek, at leaſt, ℣. 17. and perhaps the other two on the other ſide Jordan; this agrees with the three times he ſmote the ground, ſignificant thereof, ℣. 18. and recovered the cities of Iſrael; thoſe before mentioned; otherwiſe, if thoſe had not been recovered, not ten tribes, only ſeven and a half, would have been carried captive by the king of Aſſyria; whereas Joſephus [y] ſays expreſsly, the ten tribes were carried captive.

CHAP. XIV.

IN this chapter we have the good reign of Amaziah king of Judah, his victories over the Edomites, and war with Jehoaſh king of Iſrael, by whom he was taken, who died quickly after, ℣. 1—16. but Amaziah lived 15 years afterwards, and was ſlain by a conſpiracy againſt him, and Azariah his ſon reigned in his ſtead, ℣. 17—22. and a ſhort account is given of the reign of Jeroboam the ſecond, king of Iſrael, ℣. 23—29.

℣. 1. In the ſecond year of Joaſh ſon of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael reigned Amaziah the ſon of Joaſh king of Judah.] As Joaſh king of Iſrael began to reign in the 37th of Joaſh king of Judah, ch. xiii. 10. who reigned 40 years, Amaziah muſt therefore begin his reign in the fourth of Joaſh king of Iſrael; this therefore muſt be underſtood of his ſecond year after he reigned alone, for he reigned two or three years in his father's life-time.

℣. 2. He was 25 years when he began to reign, and reigned 29 years in Jeruſalem, &c.] Fourteen years cotemporary with Joaſh king of Iſrael, who reigned 16 years, ch. xiii. 10. and 15 after him, ℣. 17. and his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jeruſalem; of whom we no where elſe read.

℣. 3. And he did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] At leaſt externally, and at the beginning of his reign: yet not like David his father; not with a perfect heart, with that ſincerity and uprightneſs as he did, ſee 2 Chron. xxv. 2. he did according to all things as Joaſh his father did; who at firſt reigned well, and then fell into idolatry, as this his ſon did.

℣. 4. Howbeit, the high places were not taken away, &c.] Though he firſt did that which was right before God; nor did his father take them away; ſee ch. xii. 3.

℣. 5. And it came to paſs as ſoon as the kingdom was ſtrengthened in his hand, &c.] That he was well ſettled on the throne, and had a ſhare in the affection of the people, and the idolatry and murder his father had committed, were worn off of the minds of the people, and the friends of the conſpirators againſt him were become few or none: that he ſlew his ſervants that had ſlain the king his father; charged them with the murder in a court of judicature, obtained a ſentence againſt them, and had them executed.

℣. 6. But the children of the murderers he ſlew not, &c.] Which is an inſtance of his clemency and goodneſs, and of his ſtrict regard to juſtice, and to the law of God; though he might fear theſe being ſpared, would one time or other revenge their fathers deaths: according to that which is written in the book of the law of Moſes, ſee Deut. xxiv. 16. wherein the Lord commanded, ſaying, the fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, nor the children, &c. to which command Amaziah was obedient.

℣. 7. He ſlew of Edom in the valley of Salt ten thouſand,

[s] Pirke Eliezer, c. 33. [t] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 47. 1. Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 11. 2. [u] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 8. §. 6. [w] Corinthiac. five, l. 2. p. 97. [x] Vid. Kirchman. Funer. Roman. l. 2. c. 22. [y] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 14. §. 1.

thouſand, &c.] Of which valley, ſee the note on 2 Sam. viii. 13. the Edomites having revolted from Judah in the days of Joram, ch. viii. 20, 22. Amaziah undertook to reduce them with an army of 300,000 choice men; and beſides theſe, hired alſo of Iſrael 100,000 valiant men, for 100 talents of ſilver; but at the inſtance of a prophet of the Lord he diſmiſſed the latter, and went againſt Edom only, with his men, and ſlew of the Edomites 10,000, beſides other 10,000 he took alive, and caſt headlong from a rock, which came into his hands, ſee 2 Chron. xxv. 5—12. and took Selah by war; which ſignifies a rock, the ſame with Petra, the metropolis of Arabia Petræa, the country of the Edomites. The city itſelf was not a rock, nor built on one, but was ſituated in a plain, ſurrounded with rocks and mountains, as Strabo[z] and Pliny[a] relate, from whence it ſeems to have its name; and by the Syrians called Recem, where Rocan a king of Midian reigned[b], called in the Greek verſion of Numb. xxxi. 8. Recon; though Vitringa[c] is of opinion, that not Petra, the metropolis of Edom, is meant, but Maaleh-Akrabbim, Joſh. xv. 3. Judg. i. 36. which lay on the ſouth-border of Judea, near the Salt-ſea: and called the name of it Joktheel; which ſignifies the obedience of God; in memory of his obedience to the prophet of the Lord, in conſequence of which he obtained this victory: and the name continued unto this day; the time of the writing this book.

v. 8. Then Amaziah ſent meſſengers to Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz ſon of Jehu king of Iſrael, &c.] The occaſion of it was this, when Amaziah diſmiſſed the hired ſoldiers of Iſrael they were diſpleaſed, and fell upon the cities of Judea from Samaria to Beth-haron, ſlew 3000 men, and took much ſpoil, 2 Chron. xxv. 13. wherefore, when Amaziah returned from the ſlaughter of the Edomites, being elated with his victories, he ſent the following meſſage to the king of Iſrael, in order to revenge the injuries his ſoldiers had done; and perhaps retaining an old grudge for what Jehu, the grandfather of the king of Iſrael, had done to his anceſtors, and it may be in hope of reducing the ten tribes to obedience to the houſe of David: ſaying, come let us look one another in the face; that is, in battle, as the Targum adds; it was a challenge to meet him him in the field of battle, and fight with him, and try each other's courage, and ſee who was the beſt man.

v. 9. And Jehoaſh the king of Iſrael ſent to Amaziah the king of Judah, &c.] By the return of his meſſengers: ſaying, the thiſtle that was in Lebanon, ſent to the cedar that was in Lebanon; intending by this proverbial way of ſpeaking to humble the pride of Amaziah; comparing him to a thiſtle or thorn, a low, mean, abject, weak, prickly and troubleſome ſhrub, and himſelf to a cedar, a tree high and lofty, ſtrong, large and ſpreading; ſaying, give thy daughter to my ſon to wife; ſignifying, that if in a peaceable manner he had deſired to contract affinity with him, and ſo eſtabliſh mutual friendſhip, he ſhould have deſpiſed him as being as much below him, as the thiſtle is below a cedar; and therefore ſhould ſtill more deſpiſe and defy him, who addreſſed him in an hoſtile manner, and in ſuch haughty language: and there paſſed by a wild beaſt that was in Lebanon, and trod down the thiſtle; and ſo there was an end put at once to its pride and ambition, and to its treaty with the cedar; intimating hereby, that his ſoldiers would as eaſily vanquiſh and deſtroy the army of Amaziah, as a wild beaſt can deſtroy a thiſtle.

v. 10. Thou haſt indeed ſmitten Edom, and thine heart hath lifted thee up, &c.] Swelled him with pride and vanity on account of the victory he had obtained over the Edomites; which pride was at the bottom of his meſſage to him, and that goes before a fall: glory of this, and tarry at home; be content with the glory of it, and boaſt of it at home, but don't ſwagger abroad, and inſult thy neighbours: for why ſhouldſt thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou ſhouldſt fall, even thou, and Judah with thee? ſuggeſting to him, that he had better be quiet, ſince it would be to the hurt, if not the ruin of him and his kingdom.

v. 11. But Amaziah would not hear, &c.] Being given up to a judicial hardneſs of heart through pride; for this was of God, and by his over-ruling providence, that he might be puniſhed for his idolatry, in ſetting up the gods of Edom to be his gods, and offering to them, 2 Chron. xxv. 14, 20. therefore Jehoaſh king of Iſrael went up; from Samaria to the land of Judah, which was higher ground: and he and Amaziah looked one another in the face; in the field of battle: at Beth-ſhemeſh, which belongeth to Judah; which is obſerved, not merely to diſtinguiſh it from another Beth-ſhemeſh in Naphtali, but to obſerve, that the king of Iſrael waited not for him to give him the challenge, but met his adverſary in his own country, whither he carried the war, not ſuffering him to come into his.

v. 12. And Judah was put to the worſe before Iſrael, &c.] Could not face them; but, as Joſephus[d] ſays, a ſudden fear and conſternation ſeized them, and before they joined iſſue with the Iſraelites, turned their backs: and they fled every man to their tents; to their cities, as the Targum, and left their king alone.

v. 13. And Jehoaſh king of Iſrael took Amaziah king of Judah, the ſon of Jehoaſh the ſon of Ahaziah, at Beth-ſhemeſh, &c.] And then they looked one another in the face indeed, but Amaziah muſt look very ſillily; and came to Jeruſalem; the metropolis of Judah, with his royal priſoner: and broke down the wall of Jeruſalem; in at the breach, of which he went with his chariot, as Joſephus ſays[e], in triumph: from the gate of Ephraim unto the corner-gate, 400 cubits; the gate of Ephraim was to the north of the city, towards the tribe of Ephraim, from whence it had its name; and the corner-gate was that which joined the northern and weſtern walls together, or rather the northern and eaſtern walls; for Rauwolff[f] ſays, there is ſtill the corner-gate in its old place, where the north and eaſt walls meet on large and high rocks, and is ſtill called by ſome the gate of Naphtali.

v. 14. And he took all the gold and ſilver, and all the veſſels that were found in the houſe of the Lord, &c.] In 2 Chron. xxv. 24. it is added, with Obed-edom, who, and his family, had the care of them by lot, ſee 1 Chron. xxvi. 15. and in the treaſures of the king's houſe; which were alſo ſpoiled and plundered: and hoſtages; either ſuch as the king of Judah had taken from Edom, as pledges of their fidelity, that they might not rebel; or which the king of Iſrael took of Judah, even ſons of the princes, as the Targum, for ſecurity, that they would give him no more trouble: and returned to Samaria;

[z] Geograph. l. 16. p. 536. [a] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 28. [b] Hieron. de loc. Heb. fol. 93. M. & 94. A. Vid. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 7. §. 1. [c] Comment. in Jeſaiam, c. 16. 1. [d] Antiq. l. 9. c. 9. §. 3. [e] Ib. [f] Travels, par. 3. ch. 3. p. 228. by Ray.

Samaria; without attempting to bring the kingdom of Judah into ſubjection to him, which he might ſuppoſe he could not hold, and having enough to do with the Syrians, his avowed enemies.

℣. 15. Now the reſt of the acts of Jehoaſh which he did, and his might, &c.] His valiant and mighty acts which he did in his wars with the Syrians, ch. xiii. 25. and how he fought with Amaziah king of Judah; a ſhort account of which is given in the preceding verſes: are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael? a book very often mentioned and referred to, as containing the hiſtory of the events and tranſactions of every reign.

℣. 16. And Jehoaſh ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died as they did: and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Iſrael; where they were: and Jeroboam his ſon reigned in his ſtead; which was Jeroboam the ſecond.

℣. 17. And Amaziah the ſon of Joaſh king of Judah lived after the death of Jehoaſh ſon of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael 15 years.] Which, with the 14 he reigned cotemporary with him, made the 29 years he reigned, ℣. 2. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, 25 years.

℣. 18. And the reſt of the acts of Amaziah, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?] Not in the canonical book of Chronicles; though there are ſome things of him recorded there, which are not here; but in the annals of each reign, written by the king's hiſtorian appointed for that purpoſe.

℣. 19. Now they made a conſpiracy againſt him in Jeruſalem, &c.] Againſt Amaziah; the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the principal men of it; perhaps thoſe whoſe ſons the king of Iſrael had carried away as hoſtages, which they imputed to the ill conduct of Amaziah, as well as the breaking of the wall of Jeruſalem, and the pillaging of the temple, and the king's palace: and he fled to Lachiſh; a fortified city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 39. but they ſent after him to Lachiſh, and ſlew him there; in a private manner, as Joſephus[g] relates.

℣. 20. And they brought him on horſes, &c.] That is, in a chariot or hearſe drawn by horſes; though the Jews[h] ſuppoſe he was carried on horſes, and that, becauſe he worſhipped the gods of the Edomites, who were themſelves carried on horſes; and he was not carried on the ſhoulders of men, becauſe he neglected to ſerve the god of Iſrael, whoſe myſteries were carried on the ſhoulders of men: and he was buried at Jeruſalem with his fathers in the city of David; and very probably in the ſepulchre of the kings, though his father was not.

℣. 21. And all the people of Judah took Azariah, &c.] Called Uzziah in the next chapter, and ſo in the book of Chronicles; both names ſignifying much the ſame, the one the help of the Lord, the other the ſtrength of the Lord: (which was 16 years old;) yet as he began to reign in the 27th of Jeroboam, ch. xv. 1. and Jeroboam began to reign in the 15th of Amaziah, ℣. 23. he could be but four years of age, the ſolution of which is deferred to ch. xv. 1. and made him king inſtead of his father Amaziah; which was after his death, and not when he fled to Lachiſh, as Kimchi thinks.

℣. 22. He built Elath, &c.] A port which belonged to Edom, Deut. ii. 8. 1 Kings ix. 26. which very probably David took from them when he made them tributary, and which they retook, when they revolted, and Amaziah got again when he defeated them; and this his ſon rebuilt and fortified: and reſtored it to Judah; annexed it to the kingdom of Judah, as in the days of David and Solomon: after that the king ſlept with his fathers; after the death of his father Amaziah.

℣. 23. In the 15th year of Amaziah, the ſon of Joaſh king of Judah, Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh king of Iſrael began to reign in Samaria, &c.] So that he reigned 14 or 15 years cotemporary with him; for Amaziah reigned 29 years: and reigned 41 years; Joſephus ſays[i] 40, giving only the round number.

℣. 24. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Was guilty of idolatry: he departed not from all the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin; the worſhip of the calves is eſpecially meant; he was in all reſpects of the ſame caſt with his anceſtor of the ſame name, from whom he had it in veneration of him.

℣. 25. He reſtored the coaſt of Iſrael, &c.] The cities upon it, which had been taken away from them by their enemies: from the entring of Hamath; which was the northern border of the land of Canaan, the entrance into it from Syria, ſee Numb. xxxiv. 8. unto the ſea of the plain; of Jordan, called ſometimes the Salt Sea and the Dead Sea; the lake Aſphaltites, as Joſephus[k], where formerly ſtood Sodom and Gomorrah: according to the word of the Lord God of Iſrael, which he ſpake by the hand of his ſervant Jonah the ſon of Amittai; the ſame with him whoſe prophecy among the ſmall prophets bears this name; and though his prophecy concerning Jeroboam's ſucceſs and victories is not there, nor any where elſe recorded at length, yet needed not to be doubted of; this is the firſt of the prophets ſpoken of whoſe books are extant: which was of Gath-hepher; a city in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 13. which contradicts a notion of the Jews, that no prophet came out of Galilee, when the very firſt of thoſe that were the penmen of the books of prophecies was from thence, ſee John vii. 52.

℣. 26. For the Lord ſaw the affliction of Iſrael, that it was very bitter, &c.] Being ſorely oppreſſed by their enemies, eſpecially the Syrians; and he was moved to have compaſſion upon them, and ſhew mercy to them: for there was not any ſhut up, nor any left, nor any helper in Iſrael; they were in the moſt forlorn and helpleſs condition; ſee the note on Deut. xxxii. 36.

℣. 27. And the Lord ſaid not that he would blot out the name of Iſrael from under heaven, &c.] Had not as yet declared it by any of his prophets, that he would do it, as he afterwards did by Hoſea, ch. i. 4. 9. and was fulfilled in the reign of Hoſhea king of Iſrael, ch. xvii. but he ſaved them by the hand of Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh; the inſtrument of their deliverance from the hands of their enemies, and of recovering their borders as aforetime.

℣. 28. Now the reſt of the acts of Jeroboam, and all that he did, and his might, how he warred, &c.] His valiant acts and warlike exploits: and how he recovered Damaſcus and Hamath, which belonged to Judah, for Iſrael; which cities, in the times of David and Solomon, were tributary to Judah, but afterwards fell into the hands of the Syrians, from whom Jeroboam recovered them, and annexed them to the kingdom of Iſrael; or, as Kimchi, though Jeroboam was king of Iſrael, yet having taken them, them, he reſtored them to the king of Judah, to whom they belonged: are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael? where all events of any moment were regiſtered.

[g] Ut ſupra. [h] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. paralip. fol. 85. L. [i] Ut ſupra, c. 10. §. 1. [k] Ibid.

℣. 29. And Jeroboam ſlept with his fathers, even with the kings of Iſrael, &c.] Died, and was buried with them: and Zachariah his ſon reigned in his ſtead; who was of the fourth generation from Jehu, as was promiſed to him, ch. x. 30.

CHAP. XV.

THIS chapter begins with the reign of Azariah king of Judah, ℣. 1—7. and then gives a ſhort account of the ſeveral kings of Iſrael, to the laſt of them; of Zachariah, ℣. 8—12. of Shallum, ℣. 13, 14, 15. of Menahem, ℣. 16—22. of Pekahiah, ℣. 23—26. of Pekah, ſucceeded by Hoſhea, the laſt of them, ℣. 27—31. and is concluded with the reign of Jotham king of Judah, ℣. 32—38.

℣. 1. In the 27th year of Jeroboam king of Iſrael, began Azariah the ſon of Amaziah king of Judah to reign.] Now Amaziah lived only to the 15th year of Jeroboam, ch. xiv. 2. 17. 23. in which year, and not in his 27th, it might be thought Azariah his ſon began to reign. There are various ways taken to remove this difficulty, not to take notice of a corruption of numbers, 27 for 17, which ſome inſiſt on. Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel are of opinion, that thoſe 27 years of Jeroboam's reign are not to be underſtood of what were paſt, but of what were to come before the family of Jehu was extinct; and that he reigned 26 years, and his ſon 6 months, which made 27 imperfect years. Others ſuppoſe that Jeroboam reigned with his father 11 or 12 years before his death; and reckoning from the different periods of his reign, this was either the 27th year, or the 15th or 16th: and others, that the reign of Azariah may be differently reckoned, either from the time his father fled to Lachiſh, where he might remain 11 or 12 years, or from his death, and ſo may be ſaid to begin to reign either in the 15th or 27th of Jeroboam; or there was an interregnum of 11 or 12 years after the death of his father, he being a minor of about 4 years of age, which was the 15th of Jeroboam, during which time the government was in the hands of the princes and great men of the nation; and it was not till Azariah was 16 years of age, and when it was the 27th of Jeroboam's reign, that the people agreed to make him king, ſee ch. xiv. 24. and which ſeems to be the beſt way of accounting for it.

℣. 2. Sixteen years old was he when he began to reign, &c.] By the conſent of the people and princes of Judah, ch. xiv. 21. and he reigned 52 years in Jeruſalem; excluſive of the 11 or 12 years of his minority, from his father's death: and his mother's name was Jecholiah of Jeruſalem; of whom there is no farther account any where.

℣. 3. And he did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] At the beginning of his reign, and in an external way: according to all that his father Amaziah had done; who did not do what he did as David, ſincerely and cordially, ch. xiv. 3. 2 Chron. xxv. 2.

℣. 4. Save that the high places were not removed, &c.] That is, he did right, excepting in that inſtance, and which was the caſe of his father and other kings before him, and others afterwards, till Hezekiah came: the people ſacrificed, and burnt incenſe ſtill on the high places; ſee ch. xii. 3.

℣. 5. And the Lord ſmote the king, &c.] With leproſy; the reaſon of it was, becauſe he intruded into the prieſt's office, and went into the temple to burn incenſe on the altar of incenſe, 2 Chron. xxvi. 19, 20. ſo that he was a leper unto the day of his death; but how long it was to it from his being ſmitten cannot be ſaid with certainty; Dr. Lightfoot [l] thinks he died the ſame year he was ſmitten: and dwelt in a ſeveral houſe; without Jeruſalem, as the Targum; for lepers, according to the law, were to dwell ſeparate without the camp or city, Lev. xiii. 46. the word for ſeveral ſignifies free [m]; here he lived alone, free from the company and converſation of men, free from the buſineſs of government, his ſon doing that for him, and in the country, where he might freely walk about, as lepers did, and take the air; the Jews ſay [n], his houſe was among the graves, where he was free among the dead, as the phraſe is, Pſ. lxxxviii. 5. but not likely; much better is what Abendana obſerves from R. Jonah, that the word, in the Arabic [o] language, ſignifies a little houſe, and ſo this might be in which he dwelt out of the city, in compariſon of his palace: and Jotham the king's ſon was over the houſe; had the direction of the palace, and the management of all affairs in it; judging the people of the land; adminiſtring juſtice in all caſes, for which they came to him, and ſo filled up his father's place; he did not depoſe his father, nor take upon him to be king, only did the buſineſs of one.

℣. 6. And the reſt of the acts of Azariah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?] In the hiſtory of the reigns of thoſe kings; ſome of them are recorded in the canonical book of the Chronicles, 2 Chron. xxvi. and ſome were written by the prophet Iſaiah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 22.

℣. 7. So Azariah ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Or died, when he had reigned 52 years: and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David; but not in the ſepulchres of the kings, but in the field of the burial, or the burying-ground which belonged to them, becauſe he was a leper, 2 Chron. xxvi. 23. Benjamin of Tudela [p] places his grave near the pillar of Abſalom, and the fountain of Siloah, near the brook Kidron: and Jotham his ſon reigned in his ſtead; who reigned 16 years; a farther account of him, and his reign, we have in the latter part of this chapter, after the reigns of ſeveral of the kings of Iſrael.

℣. 8. In the 38th year of Azariah king of Judah, did Zachariah the ſon of Jeroboam reign over Iſrael in Samaria ſix months.] Since Azariah began to reign in the 27th of Jeroboam, ℣. 1. and Jeroboam reigned 41 years, ch. xiv. 23. his laſt year muſt be the 15th or 16th of Azariah, in which year Zachariah muſt

[l] Works, vol. 1. p. 99. apud Jarchium in loc.

[m] בבית החפשית in domo libero, V. L. Tigurine verſion, &c.

[o] חפש in exigua domo reſedit aſſidue, Caſtel. Lexic. col. 1345.

[n] T. Hieroſ.

[p] Itinerar. p. 43.

must have begun to reign, had he immediately ſucceeded his father in the throne; there muſt be therefore an interregnum of 22 years at leaſt, which might be owing to the diſſentions among the princes and people about the ſucceſſion, and a diſlike to Zachariah on ſome account; however, after all, he muſt reign, though but ſix months, to fulfil the word of the Lord, ſee ℣. 12.

℣. 9. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, as his fathers had done, &c.] Even all his predeceſſors, from the time of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, from whoſe ſin, in worſhipping the calves, they departed not.

℣. 10. And Shallum the ſon of Jabeſh conſpired againſt him, &c.] A friend of his, as Joſephus [q] calls him, encouraged by the diſſatisfaction of the people to him: and ſmote him before the people, and ſlew him; in a public manner, the people conſenting to it, and approving of it, not liking Zachariah to be their king: and reigned in his ſtead; tho' but a very ſhort time.

℣. 11. And the reſt of the acts of Zachariah, &c.] During his ſix months reign, and what he might do before in the interregnum: behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael; for be they more or fewer, good or bad, they were all recorded there, which were of any moment.

℣. 12. This was the word of the Lord which he ſpake unto Jehu, &c.] Which was now fulfilled in the ſhort reign of Zachariah: ſaying, Thy ſons ſhall ſit on the throne of Iſrael unto the 4th generation; ſee ch. x. 30. and ſo it came to paſs; as every word of the Lord does, not one fails; for after Jehu reigned Jehoahaz, Jehoaſh, Jeroboam the 2d, and Zachariah, all deſcendants of Jehu.

℣. 13. Shallum the ſon of Jabeſh began to reign in the 39th year of Uzziah king of Judah, &c.] The ſame with Azariah; he is ſometimes called by one name, and ſometimes by the other, ſee ch. xiii. 21. and he reigned a full month in Samaria; and no longer; ſo ſoon were the conſpiracy againſt his ſovereign, and the murder of him puniſhed.

℣. 14. For Menahem the ſon of Gadi went up from Tirzah, &c.] A city in the tribe of Manaſſeh, the royal city of the kings of Iſrael before Omri, of which ſee the note on Joſh. xii. 24. whether Menahem was of this city, or was now beſieging it with an army he had the command of, as Joſephus [r] ſuggeſts, is not certain; however, hearing what had befallen Zachariah, he came from hence: and came to Samaria; which, according to Bunting [s], was ſix miles from Tirzah: and ſmote Shallum the ſon of Jabeſh in Samaria, and ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead; judging he had as good a right to the throne as Shallum had.

℣. 15. And the reſt of the acts of Shallum, and his conſpiracy which he made, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael.] In which, no doubt, an account of the cauſe of the conſpiracy, and of the perſons aſſiſting to him in it, was given, with other things done in his ſhort reign.

℣. 16. Then Menahem ſmote Tiphſah and all that were therein, and the coaſts thereof from Tirzah, &c.] The Jewiſh writers commonly take this Tiphſah to be without the land of Iſrael, the ſame with that in 1 Kings iv. 24. on the borders of Syria, and near the Euphrates; but it ſeems to be ſome place nearer Samaria, and Tirzah; according to Bunting [t], it was but ſix miles from Samaria: becauſe they opened not to him, therefore he ſmote it; they refuſed to open the gates of their city to him, and receive him, and acknowledge him as their king; therefore he exerciſed ſeverity on the inhabitants of it, and the parts adjacent, as far as Tirzah, putting them to the ſword: and all the women therein that were with child, he ript up; which was a moſt ſhocking inſtance of barbarity, and which he did, to terrify others from following their example. Ben Gerſom interprets it of ſtrong towers built on mountains, which he demoliſhed, deriving Haroth, which we render women with child, from Har a mountain.

℣. 17. In the 39th year of Azariah king of Judah, began Menahem the ſon of Gadi to reign over Iſrael, &c.] Shallum reigning but one month, both their reigns began the ſame year.

℣. 18. And he did that which was evil, &c.] The ſame character is given of him as of thoſe before him, ℣. 9.

℣. 19. And Pul the king of Aſſyria came againſt the land, &c.] The land of Iſrael, he invaded it; a Jewiſh chronologer [u] calls him Pul-Belicho; and he is generally thought to be the ſame with Belochus or Beleſis, governor of Babylon, who, with Arbaces the Mede, ſlew Sardanapalus, ſaid to be the laſt of the Aſſyrian kings, and tranſlated the empire to the Chaldæans; he ruling over Babylon and Niniveh, and Arbaces over the Medes and Perſians; but Pul was not a Babylonian, but an Aſſyrian [w], and the firſt king of the Aſſyrians, at leaſt, the ſcriptures ſpeak of: we read no more of him; but one Metaſthenes, a Perſian hiſtorian, feigned and publiſhed by Annius, and ſo named by him inſtead of Megaſthenes, calls him Phul-Belochus, and ſays [x] he reigned 48 years: and Menahem gave Pul 1000 talents of ſilver; and a talent of ſilver, according to Brerewood [y], was 375 pounds; but biſhop Cumberland [z] calculates it at 353 pounds 11 ſhillings and 10 pence halfpenny; 1000 of them made a large ſum of money, according to the former 375,000 pounds; and this he gave to him, not only to deſiſt from the invaſion of his land, but that his hand might be with him; and not againſt him: and to confirm the kingdom in his hand; which being got by uſurpation, and ſupported by cruelty, was but tottering.

℣. 20. And Menahem exacted the money of Iſrael, even of all the mighty men of wealth, &c.] Who were moſt able to pay it, by which means he eaſed the poor, and might thereby attach them to him: of each man 50 ſhekels of ſilver, to give to the king of Aſſyria; that is, he required them to pay 50 ſhekels a-piece to make up the above ſum as a preſent to Pul; though the words in the original text lie more naturally thus, to give to the king of Aſſyria 50 ſhekels of ſilver for one man; that is, for every man in his army; which amounted to about ſix pounds a man: ſo the king of Aſſyria turned back; to his own country: and ſtayed not there in the land; in the land of Iſrael, neither to diſtreſs nor to help Menahem, for which he gave him the money.

℣. 21. And the reſt of the acts of Menahem, &c.] We

[q] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 11. §. 1.
[r] Ut ſupra.
[s] Travels, &c. p. 169.
[t] Ibid.
[u] David Ganz. Tremach David, par. 2. fol. 5. 2.
[w] See the Univerſal Hiſtory, vol. 4. B. 1. ch. 8. §. 5.
[x] De judicio temp. & Annal. Perſ. fol. 221. 2.
[y] De Ponder. & Pret. vet. Num. c. 4.
[z] Scripture-weights and meaſures, c. 4. p. 120.

We are referred to the ſame book of Chronicles for them as for thoſe of the reſt of the kings, which ſeems to be a form the hiſtorian uſes of them all.

℣. 22. And Menahem ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died a natural death, and in peace, though an uſurper and a tyrant: and Pekahiah his ſon reigned in his ſtead; the kingdom he had uſurped continued in his family.

℣. 23. In the 50th year of Azariah king of Judah, Pekahiah the ſon of Menahem began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, &c.] As it was in the 39th of Azariah that his father began his reign, and he reigned 10 years, they muſt end in the 49th of Azariah, and therefore there muſt be an interregnum of a year; perhaps the title of Pekahiah might be diſputed, and it was a year before he could get ſettled on the throne: and reigned two years; being ſlain by one of his captains, as after related.

℣. 24. And he did that which was evil, &c.] Beſides other ſins, he cleaved to that of worſhipping the calves, a piece of ſtate-policy all the kings of Iſrael gave into.

℣. 25. But Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, a captain of his, &c.] The word ſignifies a third man, the third to the king, as ſome think; Joſephus [a] calls him a chiliarch, one that had the command of 1000 men: conſpired againſt him, and ſmote him in Samaria, in the palace of the king's houſe; Joſephus [b] ſays it was at a banquet: with Argob, and Arieh; whom, according to Abarbinel, Pekah ſlew with the king, being mighty men, who were always about him; but they ſeem rather to be conſpirators with Pekah, and aſſiſting to him in ſmiting the king; the former of theſe, Ben Gerſom thinks, was governor of Argob, a country on the other ſide Jordan, and the latter had his name from his fortitude, which ſignifies a lion: and with him 50 men of the Gileadites; which may ſeem to ſtrengthen the above notion concerning Argob, ſince the Gileadites were of the ſame ſide of Jordan, and were near Argob, ſee Deut. iii. 13. and he killed him, and reigned in his room; as his father killed Shallum, and reigned in his ſtead.

℣. 26. And the reſt of the acts of Pekahiah, &c.] The ſame form of expreſſion is uſed as before, ℣. 21. of all the kings.

℣. 27. In the 52d year of Azariah king of Judah, Pekah the ſon of Remaliah began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, &c.] Which was the laſt year of the reign of Azariah: and reigned 20 years; which was a long reign for an uſurper and murderer.

℣. 28. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Not only in committing the above crimes of uſurpation and murder, but idolatry, and particularly the worſhipping of the calves, hinted at in the text.

℣. 29. In the days of Pekah king of Iſrael, came Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, &c.] Into the land of Iſrael; he is called by a Jewiſh chronologer [c] Pul-Aſir; ſo Phul-Aſſar by Metaſthenes [d], who ſays he reigned 25 years; he very probably was the ſon of Pul the Aſſyrian king, mentioned ℣. 19. and is thought to be the ſame that Ælianus [e] calls Tilgamos; ſome think he had the firſt part of his name from Diglath, or Diglito, by which the river Tigris is called in Pliny [f], with which Aſſyria was waſhed; and that Pil, or Pul is Baal, Bel, Jupiter, and Azar is Mars [g]; of all which his name is compoſed: and took Ijon, and Abel-beth-maachah; of which ſee 1 Kings xv. 20. and Janoah; a city in the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. xvi. 6. and Kedeſh, and Hazor; cities in Naphtali: Joſh. xix. 36, 37. and Gilead; a country beyond Jordan, which belonged to the Reubenites, Gadites, and half tribe of Manaſſeh: and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali; that is, upper Galilee, which lay in Naphtali: and carried them captive to Aſſyria; which was the firſt captivity of Iſrael, in which half their tribes were carried away.

℣. 30. And Hoſhea the ſon of Elah made a conſpiracy againſt Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, and ſmote him, and ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead, &c.] Did by him as he had done by Pekahiah, ℣. 28. this was meaſure for meaſure, as the Jews ſay: and this he did in the 20th year of Jotham the ſon of Uzziah; and yet Jotham is ſaid to reign but 16 years, ℣. 33. this muſt be reckoned therefore either from the time of his being viceroy, and judging Iſrael in his father's life-time, ℣. 5, or this was the 4th year of Ahaz, and the 20th year, reckoning from the time Jotham began to reign, who is the rather mentioned, becauſe as yet the hiſtorian had taken no notice of Ahaz.

℣. 31. And the reſt of the acts of Pekah, &c.] Not recorded here, were to be read in the book of chronicles of the kings ſo often referred to.

℣. 32. In the 2d year of Pekah the ſon of Remaliah king of Iſrael, began Jotham the ſon of Uzziah king of Judah to reign.] Pekah began to reign in the 52d year of Azariah, or Uzziah, which was his laſt year, ℣. 27. and which was the firſt of Pekah; Uzziah reigned full 52, and then Jotham ſucceeded, which was the beginning of the 2d of Pekah.

℣. 33. Five and twenty years old was he when he began to reign, &c.] Alone, after the death of his father: and he reigned 16 years in Jeruſalem; and his reign, upon the whole, was a good reign: and his mother's name was Jeruſha, the daughter of Zadok: a perſon well known in thoſe times; Dr. Lightfoot [h] thinks he was high-prieſt.

℣. 34. And he did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Jarchi, in 2 Chron. xxvii. 2. obſerves, from a writer of theirs, that in all the kings of Judah before him, even in the beſt, ſome ſins were found; but in Jotham there was nothing ſcandalous and reproachful; and it is a high character Joſephus [i] gives of him, that there was no virtue wanting in him; he was pious towards God, juſt towards men, and careful of the public good; but the inſpired hiſtorian chiefly reſpects matters of religious worſhip; he did not give into idolatry: he did according to all that his father Uzziah had done; that is, according to what was well done by him; he did not imitate him in going into the temple to burn incenſe, which is particularly excepted, 2 Chron. xxvii. 2.

℣. 35. Howbeit the high places were not removed, &c.] As they were not by his father, and the ſame is obſerved of the beſt of kings before: the people ſacrificed and burnt incenſe ſtill in the high places; from which they could not be brought off by prophets or kings: he built the higher gate of the houſe of the Lord; which was between the temple and the king's palace, which led to it; this he repaired and beautified, or added ſomething to it; or otherwiſe it was built by Solomon, and therefore called the new gate, Jer. xxvi. 10. and xxxvi. 10.

[a] Ut ſupra. [b] Ibid. [c] David Ganz. ut ſupra. [d] Ut ſupra. [e] De Animal. l. 12. c. 21. [f] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 27. l. 9. c. 11. §. 2. [g] Hyde Hiſt. Relig. Perſ. p. 65, 66. [h] Works, vol. 1. p. 100. [i] Antiqu.

10. it is the ſame that was afterwards called the gate of Nicanor; the eaſt-gate, as ſay the Jewiſh writers [k].

℣. 36. Now the reſt of the acts of Jotham, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?] Of which mention is often made by the inſpired hiſtorians; ſome of Jotham's other acts are recorded in the canonical book of Chronicles, 2 Chron. xxvii.

℣. 37. In thoſe days, &c.] At the end of the days of Jotham, or after his death, things might be in deſign, and preparations made before, but nothing of what follows came to paſs in his life, but in the times of his ſon: the Lord began to ſend againſt Judah, Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the ſon of Remaliah; to make war with them as a ſcourge to Ahaz for his ſins; of which in the following chapter.

℣. 38. And Jotham ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father, &c.] Died, and was buried with the kings of Judah in their ſepulchres: and Ahaz his ſon reigned in his ſtead; an account of whoſe reign we have in the next chapter.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter contains the reign of Ahaz only, relates his idolatry, ℣. 1—4. his hiring the king of Aſſyria with the treaſure of the temple, and his own, to aſſiſt him againſt the kings of Iſrael and Syria, who beſieged him, ℣. 5—9. his ſeeing the altar of an idol at Damaſcus, the faſhion of which he took, and ordered one like it to be built at Jeruſalem, ℣. 10—16. his defacing and removing ſome things in the temple, ℣. 17, 18. and the chapter is concluded with his death and burial, ℣. 19, 20.

℣. 1. In the 17th year of Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, Ahaz the ſon of Jotham, king of Judah began to reign.] Jotham began to reign in the ſecond of Pekah, and he reigned 16 years, and therefore his laſt year would fall in the 18th of Pekah; but as his firſt year might be at the beginning of the ſecond of Pekah, his laſt was towards the end of the 17th of Pekah's, as here; ſee ch. xv. 32.

℣. 2. Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned 16 years in Jeruſalem, &c.] The ſame number of years his father did: and did not that which was right in the ſight of the Lord God, like David his father; his more remote progenitor, nor even like his more immediate father, from whom he received ſuch good inſtructions, and of whom he had ſo good an example; but grace is neither propagated by blood, nor obtained through the force of education.

℣. 3. But he walked in the way of the kings of Iſrael, &c.] Worſhipping the calves as they did; which as it was contrary to the religious ſentiments in which he was educated, ſo againſt his political intereſt, which was the only, or at leaſt the principal thing, which ſwayed with the kings of Iſrael to continue that idolatry: yea, and made his ſon to paſs through the fire; between two fires to Molech, by way of luſtration; which might be true of Hezekiah his ſon, and others of his ſons, for he had more he burnt with fire, as appears from 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. both ways were uſed in that ſort of idolatry, ſee the note on Lev. xviii. 21. according to the abominations of the heathen, whom the Lord caſt out from before the children of Iſrael; the old Canaanites; ſo the Carthaginians, a colony of the Phœnicians, uſed in time of calamity to offer human ſacrifices, and even their children, to appeaſe their deities [l]. Theodoret ſays, he had ſeen in ſome cities, in his time, piles kindled once a year, over which not only boys, but men would leap, and infants were carried by their mothers through the flames; which ſeemed to be an expiation or purgation, and which he takes to be the ſame with the ſin of Ahaz.

℣. 4. And he ſacrificed and burnt incenſe in the high places, and on the hills, &c.] Which none of the kings of Judah before him ever did; for tho' they connived at this practice in the people, they never encouraged it by their own example; and very probably he offered ſacrifices there to idols, ſee 2 Chron. xxviii. 25. whereas the people ſacrificed to the true God, though at a wrong place: and under every green tree; and which is never ſaid of the people, and ſeems to confirm it, that Ahaz ſacrificed to other gods, ſince the heathens uſed to place idols under green trees, and worſhip them, whom the Jews imitated, Jer. ii. 2. and iii. 6.

℣. 5. Then Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah ſon of Remaliah king of Iſrael, came up to Jeruſalem to war, &c.] To fight with Ahaz, moved to it by the Lord, to chaſtize Ahaz for his idolatry, ch. xv. 37. 2 Chron. xxviii. 5. but could not overcome him; ſo as to take Jeruſalem, and ſet up another king there, as their ſcheme was, Iſ. vii. 5, 6. though they had both at other times got great advantages over him, and ſlew many of his people, and carried them captive, ſee 2 Chron. xxviii. 5—8.

℣. 6. At that time Rezin king of Syria, recovered Elath to Syria, &c.] A port on the Red-ſea, that formerly belonged to Edom, taken from them by David, retaken by them when they revolted in Joram's time, and perhaps taken by Amaziah again, ſince his ſon Azariah rebuilt it, and reſtored it to Judah, ch. xiv. 22. and it ſeems by this, that it had been in the hands of the Syrians, who now recovered it; unleſs inſtead of Aram, rendered Syrians, we could ſubſtitute Edom, which Le Clerc has ventured to do without any authority: and drave the Jews from Elath; who were in poſſeſſion of it. This is the firſt time that the inhabitants of the kingdom of Judah are called Jews, from the name of their original patriarch, and principal tribe; though ſome think [m] they had this name from the time this tribe went up firſt againſt the Canaanites Judg. i. 1, 2. however, it is a miſtake of R. Elias Levita [n], that it is never found in the bible they were called Jews, but from the time the ten tribes were carried captive, and not before; and a greater miſtake ſtill it is of Tacitus [o], that they were called Jews or Judæans, as if they were Idæans from mount Ida in Crete, from whence he ſuppoſes they came: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt [k] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 7. 1. Gloſſ. in ib. Maimon. Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 7. §. 6.

[l] Juſtin e Trogo. Hiſt. l. 18. c. 6. Curt. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 3. Peſcennius Feſtus apud Lactant. de falſ. relig. l. 1. c. 21.
[m] Polydor. Virgil. de invent. l. 4. c. 1.
[n] Tiſhbi, p. 143. So David de Pomis Lexic. fol. 83. 4.
[o] Hiſt. l. 5. §. 2.

dwelt there unto this day; the marginal reading is Edomites; and so read the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions; and Kimchi observes that it is written Aramim, Syrians, because the king of Syria took it, and by his means the Edomites returned to it, but is read Edomim, Edomites, because it belonged to the children of Edom; and it is certain the Edomites had come and smitten Judah, 2 Chron. xxviii. 17.

℣. 7. So Ahaz sent messengers to Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, &c.] Of whom see ch. xiv. 29. saying, I am thy servant, and thy son; signifying, that he would be his vassal, and become tributary to him, and serve him as a servant his master, or a son his father, on condition he would come to his assistance, and so he became his servant; hence his son Hezekiah is said to rebel against the king of Assyria, ch. xviii. 7. come up and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel, which rise up against me; which assistance he had no reason to call in, since the Lord had promised him deliverance from both those kings, and gave him a sign of it, Is. vii. 4—16.

℣. 8. And Ahaz took the silver and gold that was found in the house of the Lord, &c.] Which Uzziah and Jotham had put there; for all that was found there in the times of Amaziah was taken away by Jehoash king of Israel, ch. xiv. 14. and in the treasures of the king's house; whatever gold and silver he had of his own: and sent it for a present to the king of Assyria; to obtain his help and assistance.

℣. 9. And the king of Assyria hearkened unto him, &c.] Complied with his request: for the king of Assyria went up against Damascus, and took it; the metropolis of the kingdom of Syria, and so made a powerful diversion in favour of the king of Judah: and carried the people of it captive to Kir; not Cyrene, as the Vulgate Latin version, a country belonging to Egypt, which the king of Assyria had no power over; but a place in upper Media, as Josephus [p] relates, which belonged to the Assyrian king; see Is. xxii. 6. compared with xxi. 2. of this captivity Amos had prophesied some time before, Amos i. 5. and slew Rezin; the king of Syria, which also was foretold in the same prophecy.

℣. 10. And king Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, &c.] When he heard he was come thither, and had taken it, to congratulate him on the victory, and to give him thanks for his assistance; which place from Jerusalem was 160 miles, according to Bunting [q]: and saw an altar that was at Damascus; where, in all probability, he attended at the sacrifice on it along with the king of Assyria: and king Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar, and the pattern of it, according to all the workmanship thereof; not only the size and form of it, but all the decorations and figures on it, with which it was wrought. This Uriah was very probably the high-priest, for it can scarcely be thought that Ahab would write to any other, or that any other priest would or could have complied with his request; and he seems to be the same Isaiah took to be a witness in a certain affair, though he now degenerated from the character he gives of him, Is. viii. 2.

℣. 11. And Urijah the priest built an altar according to all that king Ahaz had sent from Damascus, &c.] Exactly according to the size, form, figure, and carved work of it, though expressly contrary to the command of God; which fixed both the form and matter of the altar of God, with every thing appertaining to it, which he, being high-priest, could not be ignorant of, Exod. xxvii. 1. &c. but he was a time-server, and sought to curry favour with his prince: so Urijah the priest made it against king Ahaz came from Damascus; both king and priest were in haste to have this altar made. Ahaz could not stay till he came home, but sent directions about it from Damascus, and the priest was so expeditious in observing his commands, that he got it done before he came thence to Jerusalem.

℣. 12. And when the king was come from Damascus, the king saw the altar, &c.] Looked at it, and liked it, being exactly according to the pattern he had sent: and the king approached the altar, and offered thereon; either by a priest, or it may be in his own person, having no regard to the laws and appointments of God, and especially as his sacrifices were not offered to him, but to the gods of Damascus and Syria, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23.

℣. 13. And he burnt his burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, &c.] Which went together according to the law of God, and was imitated by the heathens: and poured his drink-offering; a libation of wine, as probably it was, like what they used according to the Levitical law: the sprinkling of the blood of his peace-offerings upon the altar; as used according to the same law; for all sorts of sacrifices were offered by idolaters, as by the people of God, in imitation of them.

℣. 14. And he brought also the brazen altar which was before the Lord, &c.] That which Solomon made, 2 Chron. iv. 1. which stood in the court by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord, Lev. i. 5. from the fore front of the house; the frontispiece of the temple, which was at the eastern gate of it: from between the altar and the house of the Lord; for it seems Urijah had placed the new altar behind the old one, more out of sight; the brazen altar standing between that and the eastern gate, or entrance into the temple; wherefore he removed the brazen altar, and put his new one in the room of it: and put it; that is, the brazen altar of Solomon, on the north-side of the altar; of the new altar, at the right-hand as they went into the temple; where it was as in a corner, in greater obscurity, and the new altar more in view as they came into the temple.

℣. 15. And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, &c.] Who was not to be commanded by the king in matters of worship, but to attend to the laws and institutions of God: saying, upon the great altar; meaning the new one, which either was of a larger size than the altar of God, or was greater in the esteem of Ahaz: burn the morning burnt-offering, and the evening meat-offering; the daily sacrifice, morning and evening; and the king's burnt-sacrifice, and his meat-offering, with the burnt-offering of all the people of the land, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings; such as were offered up at any time on the account of the rulers of the land in particular, or of the whole congregation of Israel, see Lev. iv. and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt-offering, and all the blood of the sacrifice; as it used to be sprinkled upon the altar of the Lord: and the brazen altar shall be for me to enquire by; to search, enquire and consider what was to be done with it; for altars were never enquired enquired by as oracles; the meaning is, that it was never to be made uſe of but by him, and when he pleaſed.

[p] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 12. §. 3.

[q] Travels, &c. p. 185.

℣. 16. Thus did Urijah the prieſt, according to all that king Ahaz commanded.] Not only concerning the ſtructure of the altar, but the ſacrifices to be offered on it; like king, like prieſt, both apoſtates and idolaters.

℣. 17. And king Ahaz cut off the borders of the baſes, and removed the laver from off them, &c.] In the temple there were ten lavers for the prieſts to waſh in, which are here meant, the ſingular being put for the plural; and theſe had baſes of braſs, on which they were ſet; and about theſe baſes were borders, which had on them figures of various creatures, lions, oxen and cherubim; and theſe Ahaz cut off, either to deface them, in contempt of them, or to convert the braſs to other uſes, as he might alſo the baſes themſelves, ſince he removed the lavers from off of them, ſee 1 Kings vii. 27—30. and took down the ſea from off the brazen oxen that were under it; the molten ſea Solomon made, which he ſet upon 12 oxen made of braſs; this Ahaz took down from thence, either to abate its magnificence, and render it deſpicable, or for the ſake of the braſs, of which the oxen were made, ſee 1 Kings vii. 23—26. and put it upon a pavement of ſtones; not upon the floor of the temple, for that was of wood, fir or cedar, but on rows of ſtones, placed inſtead of baſes for it to ſtand upon.

℣. 18. And the covert for the ſabbath that they had built in the houſe, &c.] Uſed on the ſabbath-day, either for the people to ſit under to hear the law explained by the prieſts; or for the courſe of the prieſts to be in, that went out that day, to give way to the courſe that entered, which yet did not depart from the temple till evening; or rather for the king himſelf to ſit under, whilſt attending the temple-ſervice of that day, and might be the cover of the ſcaffold, 2 Chron. vi. 13. and be very rich cloth of gold; and therefore he took it away for the king of Aſſyria, or to ſignify that he ſhould not frequent the place any more: and hence it follows, and the king's entry without, turned he from the houſe of the Lord; the way which led from the king's palace to it, he turned it a round-about way, that it might not be diſcerned there was a way from the one to the other: and this he did for the king of Aſſyria; to gratify him, that he might from hence conclude, that he had wholly relinquiſhed the worſhip of God in the temple, and ſhould cleave to the gods of Damaſcus and Syria; or for fear of him, that he might not ſee the way into the temple, and take away the veſſels; or find him, ſhould he be obliged to hide himſelf there, when in danger by him.

℣. 19. Now the reſt of the acts of Ahaz which he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?] Some others are written in the canonical book of Chronicles, 2 Chron. xxviii. and were, it is highly probable, in the annals of the kings of Judah, now loſt.

℣. 20. And Ahaz ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David, &c.] But not in the ſepulchres of the kings of Iſrael, as David and Solomon, he being ſuch a wicked prince, 2 Chron. xxviii. 27. and Hezekiah his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom much is ſaid in the following part of this hiſtory.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter relates the captivity of the ten tribes of Iſrael, and how it came about, ℣. 1—6. the cauſe of it, their idolatry, which they perſiſted in, notwithſtanding the remonſtrances made againſt it, ℣. 7—23. in whoſe ſtead were placed people from different parts, who exerciſed a mixt religion, partly heatheniſh, and partly Iſraelitiſh, ℣. 24.

℣. 1. In the 12th year of Ahaz king of Judah, began Hoſhea the ſon of Elah to reign in Samaria over Iſrael nine years.] In this account there is ſome difficulty, ſince it was in the 20th of Jotham, that is, the fourth of Ahaz, that Hoſhea conſpired againſt Pekah king of Iſrael, and ſlew him, when it might be reaſonably thought he began his reign: now either there was an interregnum until the 12th of Ahaz, or Hoſhea however was not generally received and acknowledged as king till then, as others think; he being a tributary to the king of Aſſyria, and a kind of vice-roy, is not ſaid to reign until he rebelled againſt him; after which he reigned nine years, four in the times of Ahaz, and five in the reign of Hezekiah, ch. xviii. 9, 10. in this way the author of the Jewiſh chronology goes[r], in which he is followed by other Jewiſh writers; and this bids as fair as any to remove the difficulty, unleſs theſe nine years refer to the time of his reign before the 12th of Ahaz; and the ſenſe be, that in the 12th of Ahaz he had reigned nine years; but it is ſaid he began to reign then.

℣. 2. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, but not as the kings of Iſrael that were before him.] He did not worſhip Baal, as ſome of them had done; and he could not worſhip the calves, as all of them had, for they were carried away by the Aſſyrians in the former captivities, as the Jews[s] ſay; and who alſo obſerve[t], that he removed the garriſons ſet on the borders of the land to watch the Iſraelites, that they might not go up to Jeruſalem; and this being done on the 15th of Ab, that day was afterwards obſerved as a feſtival on that account; and they further remark[u], that the captivity of the ten tribes was in the reign of this king, who was better than the reſt, to ſhew that it was not barely the ſins of the kings on whom the Iſraelites would caſt the blame, that they were carried captives, but their own, according to Hoſ. v. 3.

℣. 3. Againſt him came up Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria, &c.] Which ſome take to be the ſame with Tiglath-pileſer, ſee 1 Chron. v. 26. but he rather ſeems to be his ſon; his name was to be found, as Joſephus[w] relates, in the archives of the Tyrians, againſt whom he had an expedition; his name is Salmanaſſar in Metaſthenes[x], who ſays he reigned reigned 17 years: and Hoſhea became his ſervant, and gave him preſents; to depart from him; he became tributary to him, and agreed to pay him a yearly tax.

[r] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 22. [s] Ibid. [t] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 88. Kimchi in loc. [u] Seder Olam Rabba, ut ſupra. [w] Antiq. l. 9. c. 14. §. 2. [x] De Judicio temp. fol. 221. 2.

℣. 4. And the king of Aſſyria found conſpiracy in Hoſhea, &c.] That he was forming a ſcheme to rebel againſt him, and caſt off his yoke; of this he had intelligence by ſpies he ſent, and placed to obſerve him very probably: for he had ſent meſſengers to So king of Egypt; to treat with him, and enter into alliance with him, to help him againſt, and free him from the king of Aſſyria. This king of Egypt is ſuppoſed to be Sabacon the Ethiopian, who reigned in Egypt ninety years; of whom Herodotus [y] and Diodorus Siculus [z] make mention; by Theodoret he is called Adramelech the Ethiopian, who dwelt in Egypt: and brought no preſents to the king of Aſſyria, as he had done year by year; did not pay him his yearly tribute: therefore the king of Aſſyria ſhut him up, and bound him in priſon; that is, after he took Samaria, the ſiege of which is next related; unleſs it can be thought that he met with him ſome where out of the capital, and ſeized him, and made him his priſoner, and after that beſieged his city; which is not ſo likely.

℣. 5. Then the king of Aſſyria came up throughout all the land, &c.] Of Iſrael, there being none to oppoſe his march; Hoſhea not daring to come out, and meet him and fight him: and went up to Samaria, and beſieged it three years; ſo long the city held out againſt him, ſee ch. xviii. 9, 10.

℣. 6. In the ninth year of Hoſhea, the king of Aſſyria took Samaria, &c.] Which was the laſt year of his reign, and to be reckoned either from the time of his reigning in full power and authority, or from his firſt caſting off the Aſſyrian yoke; ſee the note on ℣. 1. and carried Iſrael away into Aſſyria; not only the inhabitants of Samaria, but all the ten tribes inhabiting the ſeveral parts of the kingdom, for which Joſephus is expreſs [a]: and placed them in Halah, and in Habor, by the river of Gozan; ſome of them he placed here, which were in Aſſyria. Halah is the Calachena of Ptolemy at the north of Aſſyria, and Habor is the mount Chobaras of the ſame; from which mountain as you go to the Caſpian ſea, about midway, is the city Gauzania, the ſame with Gozan, which might give name to this river [b]. The Jews ſay [c], this is the river Sambation, which runs ſo ſwiftly, that there is no paſſing except on the ſabbath-day, and which then the Jews cannot paſs becauſe of the prophanation of the ſabbath; and is the reaſon they give, why the 10 tribes are there detained; and Manaſſeh ben Iſrael [d] fancies Habor to be Tabor, a province in Tartary, where ſome Jews are: and in the cities of the Medes; others of them he placed there, under his juriſdiction, the ſame with Hara, 1 Chron. v. 26. which with the Greeks is called Aria; and Herodotus ſays [e], theſe Medes formerly were called by all Arii. It appears from hence, that the kingdom of Media was now ſubject to the king of Aſſyria: ſome [f] take Halach to be Colchi, and Habor to be Iberia, and Hara to be Armenia, and Gauzani to be Media, which all bounded the north of Aſſyria.

℣. 7. For ſo it was, that the children of Iſrael had ſinned againſt the Lord their God, &c.] By committing idolatry, which is the ſin enlarged upon in the following diſcourſe, as the cauſe of their being carried captive: which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt; which is obſerved to ſhew their ingratitude, and to aggravate their ſin of idolatry: and had feared other gods; which could do them neither good nor hurt, wherefore it muſt be great ſtupidity to fear them.

℣. 8. And walked in the ſtatutes of the heathen, whom the Lord caſt out from before the children of Iſrael, &c.] Meaning the Canaanites, in whoſe idolatrous ways they walked, and whom they imitated; though their ejection out of the land ſhould have been a warning to them, and they were the more inexcuſable, as they were particularly cautioned againſt walking in them, Lev. xviii. 3. and of the kings of Iſrael, which they had made; their laws and ſtatutes, to worſhip the golden calves, and not go up to Jeruſalem to worſhip.

℣. 9. And the children of Iſrael did ſecretly thoſe things that were not right againſt the Lord their God, &c.] As being partly conſcious to themſelves that they were not right, and aſhamed to commit them openly; and partly, as fooliſhly imagining that being done privately, they were not ſeen and obſerved of God, having imbibed ſome atheiſtical notions of him, that he was not omniſcient, or ſaw not, and had forſaken the earth; or they covered [g] theſe actions of theirs under feigned and plauſible pretences, that what they did they were obliged to by their kings, and with political views, and that they worſhipped the true God in the calves; but theſe were coverings too thin not to be ſeen through: and they built them high places in all their cities, from the tower of the watchmen, to the fenced city; not content with thoſe built in former times, they built new ones; and theſe not in their metropolis only, but in all the cities of the kingdom; and not in large cities only, but in every town and village, between one fortified city and another; even wherever there was a watch-tower erected, either for ſhepherds to watch their flocks, or for keepers of gardens, orchards and vineyards to watch the fruits of them, that they were not taken away.

℣. 10. And they ſet them up images and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree.] That is, ſtatues and idols; for groves of trees could not be ſet under green trees; but they placed idols of ſtone, and of wood, as the latter were, in ſuch places as heathens were wont to do; ſee Jer. iii. 6. and the note on 1 Kings xiv. 23. ſo the Indians to this day have idols diſperſed here and there in the fields, placed in little groves, or at the foot of ſome hill that caſts a ſhadow [h].

℣. 11. And there they burnt incenſe in all the high places, &c.] As even the tribe of Judah did, which is obſerved in all the preceding reigns: as did the heathen whom the Lord carried away before them: the Canaanites, and therefore they might juſtly expect to be carried captive alſo: and wrought wicked things to provoke the Lord to anger; by their ſeveral immoralities, but eſpecially their idolatries.

℣. 12. For they ſerved idols, &c.] Baalim, as the Targum; dunghil gods, as the word ſignifies, as

[y] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 137. [z] Bibliothec. l. 1. p 59. [a] Antiq. l. 9. c. 10. §. 1. [b] Vid. Witſium de 10 trib. Iſrael. c. 4. §. 2. [c] Rambam apud Eliam in Tiſhbi, p. 134. [d] Spes Iſraelis, §. 17. p. 55. [e] Polymnia, ſive, l. 7. c. 60. So Pauſanias Corinthiac. ſive, l. 2, p. 91. Vid. Voſſium in Melam, de ſitu Orbis, l. 1. c. 2. p. 13. [f] See Brerewood's Enquiries, p. 104. [g] יחפאו occultaverunt, Montanus, Vatablus, Grotius; palliaverunt, Piſcator. [h] Agreement of cuſtoms between the Eaſt-Indians and Jews, art. 5. p. 34.

as they are often called in ſcripture; and Sterculius was one of the names of Saturn, an heathen deity, which he had, as is ſuppoſed, by his finding out the method of making land fruitful with dung[1]: whereof the Lord ſaid unto them, Ye ſhall not do this thing; ſee Exod. xx. 3, 4, 5. 23.

℣. 13. Yet the Lord teſtified againſt Iſrael, and againſt Judah, by all the prophets, and by all the ſeers, &c.] Againſt their ſins, reproving them for them, dehorting them from them, exhorting them to repent and leave them; as in all preceding reigns, by Ahijah the Shilonite, by Elijah and Eliſha, by Hoſea, Amos, and Micah, and others: ſaying, Turn ye from your evil ways; repent of them, and reform from them, the worſhip of the calves particularly: and keep my commandments, and my ſtatutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers; which was given them and enjoined them at mount Sinai: and which I ſent to you by my ſervants the prophets; by whom he put them in mind of them, explained them, and urged obedience to them.

℣. 14. Notwithſtanding, they would not hear, &c.] Their inſtructions, advice, and admonitions, and obey them: but hardened their necks, like to the neck of their fathers, that did not believe in the Lord their God; as Terah and Nahor, who were idolaters; or rather, their fathers in the wilderneſs, that made and ſerved the golden calf, and thoſe that rebelled againſt Moſes and Aaron; it is a metaphor taken from oxen, that will not ſubmit their necks to the yoke, but draw back from it, or caſt it off, ſee Acts vii. 51.

℣. 15. And they rejected his ſtatutes, and his covenant that he made with their fathers, &c.] At Sinai and Horeb, ſee Exod. xxiv. 8. Deut. xxix. 1. and his teſtimonies which he teſtified againſt them; calling heaven and earth to witneſs what he would do to them, if they broke his laws, Deut. iv. 26. and xxx. 19, and xxxii. 1. and which were ſo many teſtifications of his mind and will what they ſhould do, or otherwiſe what ſhould be done to them; Ben Gerſom alſo interprets this of the feaſts of the paſſover and tabernacles, which were witneſſes of Iſrael's coming out of Egypt, and of the ſanctification and redemption of the firſt-born, a teſtimony of the ſlaying the firſt-born in Egypt: and they followed vanity; idols, which are vain things for help, can neither hear, ſee, ſpeak, &c. and became vain; as ſottiſh and ſtupid as the idols they worſhipped; which is the uſual fruit and effect of idolatry, ſee Rom. i. 21—28. and went after the heathen that were round about them; imitated them in their idolatrous practices, as the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, &c. concerning whom the Lord had charged them, that they ſhould not do like them; of this charge ſee Deut. vi. 13, 14.

℣. 16. And they left all the commandments of the Lord their God, &c.] Which their idolatry led them to; and indeed he that offends in one point is guilty of them all, James ii. 10. and made them molten images, even two calves; which they ſet up at Dan and Bethel, in the times of their firſt king Jeroboam, 1 Kings xiii. 28. 29. and made a grove; as Ahab, another of their kings did, 1 Kings xvi. 33. and worſhipped all the hoſt of heaven; not the angels, ſometimes ſo called, but beſides the ſun and moon, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, Venus: and ſerved Baal; which was ſervice to the ſun, as Abarbinel interprets it; this was the god of the Zidonians Ahab worſhipped, having married a princeſs of that people, 1 Kings xvi. 31, 32.

℣. 17. And they cauſed their ſons and their daughters to paſs through the fire, &c.] To Baal or Moloch, which were the ſame, and repreſented the ſun, which, as the above writer obſerves, preſides in the element of fire; this was done either by way of luſtration, or ſo as to be burnt, ſee ch. xvi. 3. and uſed divination and inchantments; to get knowledge of what was to be done at preſent, or of things to come, neglecting the word of God and his prophets, and acting againſt the expreſs law of God, Deut. xviii. 10, 11, 12. and ſold themſelves to do evil in the ſight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger; as Ahab their king did, ſee 1 Kings xxi. 20. 25. they were as much the ſervants of ſin, as if they had ſold themſelves to be ſlaves to it.

℣. 18. Therefore the Lord was very angry with Iſrael, &c.] Nothing being more provoking to him than idolatry: and removed them out of his ſight; not out of the reach of his all-ſeeing eye, but from all tokens of his favour, from the good land he had given them, and all the benefits and privileges of it: there was none left but the tribe of Judah only; and part of Benjamin, which was annexed to it, and incorporated in it, and made one kingdom, and maintained the ſame worſhip; and there was the lot of Simeon, which was within the tribe of Judah; and the prieſts and the Levites, and various individuals of the ſeveral tribes, that came and ſettled among them for the ſake of worſhip; but no perfect, diſtinct tribe beſides.

℣. 19. Alſo Judah kept not the commandments of the Lord their God, &c.] But were infected with the idolatry of the ten tribes, and drawn into it by their example, and perſiſted therein, notwithſtanding what befel the ten tribes; which are aggravations of the ſins of them both, ſee Jer. iii. 7—10. but walked in the ſtatutes of Iſrael which they made; worſhipping the calves as they did, particularly in the times of Ahaz, he ſetting the example, ſee ch. xvi. 3.

℣. 20. And the Lord rejected all the ſeed of Iſrael, &c.] The ten tribes, with loathing and contempt, and wrote a lo-ammi on them, rejected them from being his people, gave them a bill of divorce, and declared them no more under his care and patronage: and afflicted them; as he did before he utterly caſt them off, as by famine, drought, and peſtilence, Amos iv. 6—11. and delivered them into the hands of ſpoilers; as firſt, into the hands of Hazael and Benhadad, kings of Syria, and then of Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, ch. xiii. 3. 22. and xv. 24. until he had caſt them out of his ſight; by ſuffering them, as now, to be carried captive by Salmaneſer, ℣. 6.

℣. 21. For he rent Iſrael from the houſe of David, &c.] In the times of Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon, when ten tribes revolted from him, ſignified by the rending of a garment in twelve pieces, ten of which were given to Jeroboam; and it is here aſcribed to the Lord, being according to his purpoſe and decree, and which was brought about by his providence, agreeable to a prophecy of his, ſee 1 Kings xi. 30, 31. and they made Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat king; of themſelves, without conſulting the Lord and his prophets; and which was reſented by him, though it was his will, and he had foretold it, that Jeroboam ſhould be king, ſee Hoſ. viii. 4. and Jeroboam drave Iſrael from following the Lord;

[1] Vid. Macrob. l. 1. c. 7. Lactant. de falſ. relig. l. 1. c. 20.

Lord; forbidding them to go up to Jeruſalem to worſhip; the Targum is, "made them to err:" and made them ſin a great ſin; obliging them to worſhip the calves he ſet up.

℣. 22. For the children of Iſrael walked in all the ſins of Jeroboam which he did, &c.] They obſerved his injunction, not to go to Jeruſalem to worſhip, and they worſhipped the calves he did: they departed not from them; in all ſucceeding reigns, until the time of their captivity.

℣. 23. Until the Lord removed Iſrael out of his ſight, &c.] Suffered them to be carried captive into the land of Aſſyria: as he had ſaid by all his ſervants the prophets; by Hoſea, Amos, Micah, and others; ſee their prophecies, and alſo 1 Kings xiii. 32. and xiv. 15, 16. ſo was Iſrael carried away out of their own land to Aſſyria, unto this day; the time of the writing this book; nor have they returned unto our days, near 2500 years ago.

℣. 24. And the king of Aſſyria brought men from Babylon, &c.] Which was at this time under the dominion of the king of Aſſyria; though in a little time after this it revolted, and had a king of its own, ch. xx. 12. this king of Aſſyria was either Salmaneſer, who carried Iſrael captive, or it may be rather his ſon Eſar-haddon, ſee Ezr. iv. 2. and from Cuthah; which, according to Joſephus [k], was a city in Perſia, where was a river of the ſame name; but it was rather a place in Erach, in the country of Babylon, ſee the note on Gen. x. 6. and from Ava; the ſame with Ivah, If. xxxiii. 13. where perhaps a colony of the Avim had ſettled, Deut. ii. 23. and from Hamath; a city of Syria, which lay on the northern borders of the land of Canaan, Numb. xxxiv. 8. and from Sepharvaim; thought by ſome to be the Sippara of Ptolemy, or the Sipparani of Abyderus, in Meſopotamia; though Vitringa takes it to be a city in Syro-Phœnicia, ſee the note on If. xxxvi. 19. and placed them in the cities of Samaria, inſtead of the children of Iſrael; not in Samaria, which was now deſtroyed, according to the prophecy in Mic. i. 6. as Abarbinel and other Jewiſh writers note; and they poſſeſſed Samaria; as an inheritance; ſowed it with corn, and planted vineyards there: and dwelt in the cities thereof; in the ſeveral parts of the kingdom.

℣. 25. And ſo it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, that they feared not the Lord, &c.] Did not ſerve him in any manner, but their idols only, which they brought with them; whereas, it was uſual with heathens to ſerve the gods of the country, as they reputed them, where they came, along with their own; but even this thoſe men did not do: therefore the Lord ſent lions among them; even into their cities, into which lions ſometimes came [l], eſpecially when old, out of the thickets of Jordan and other places where they haunted, ſee Jer. xlix. 19. which ſlew ſome of them; this the Lord did to aſſert his ſovereignty, authority, and mighty power, and to let them know, that he could as eaſily clear the land of them, as they, by his permiſſion, had cleared the land of the Iſraelites. Joſephus [m] calls this a plague that was ſent among them.

℣. 26. Wherefore they ſpake to the king of Aſſyria, &c.] In letters, or by meſſengers they ſent unto him: ſaying, The nations which thou haſt removed; from different places before-mentioned: and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land; taking Jehovah the God of Iſrael to be a topical deity, limited peculiarly to the land of Iſrael, whereas he was the God of the whole earth; a like notion obtained among the Syrians, ſee 1 Kings xx. 28. now they ſay they know not his manner or judgment [n], the laws, ſtatutes, ordinances, and judgments according to which he was worſhipped by the people of Iſrael: therefore he hath ſent lions among them, and behold, they ſlay them; they perceived it was not a common caſe, nor could they impute it to any ſecond cauſe, as want of food with the lions, &c. but the hand of a ſuperior being was in it: and they could think of no other reaſon, but becauſe they know not the manner of the God of the land; how he was to be worſhipped; and becauſe they did not worſhip him, and knew not how to do it, it was reſented in this manner by him.

℣. 27. Then the king of Aſſyria commanded, ſaying, &c.] Gave the following orders and directions: Carry thither one of the prieſts whom ye brought from thence; for they carried away all the people of every claſs, civil and religious: and let him go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land; it is in the plural number, let them go, &c. [o] there might be more prieſts than one ordered, or however, others, to attend and aſſiſt him in his work; the Jews ſay [p], two were ſent to circumciſe them, and teach them the book of the law; and they give their names, Doſthai, or Doſithæus, and Zachariah; and Joſephus [q] ſays, the people deſired that prieſts might be ſent to them of the captives.

℣. 28. Then one of the prieſts whom they had carried away from Samaria, came and dwelt in Bethel, &c.] According to an Arabic writer [r], his name was Uzziah; but Epiphanius [s] ſays his name was Eſdras; but he wrongly makes him to be ſent by Nebuchadnezzar, 30 years after the captivity of the Jews in Babylon: this prieſt was, doubtleſs, one of the prieſts of the calves; for there were none elſe in the kingdom of Iſrael carried captive, and as ſeems alſo by his chuſing to dwell in Bethel, where probably he formerly dwelt, and officiated in the ſervice of the calf there, and by teaching to make prieſts of the loweſt order of the people, as Jeroboam's prieſts were, ℣. 32. and taught them how they ſhould fear the Lord; ſerve and worſhip him; he might not teach them the worſhip of the calves, that being a political buſineſs, and now no end to be anſwered by it; and beſides, they were now carried out of the land. This prieſt taught, no doubt, according to the law of Moſes, but was not the author of the Pentateuch; which ridiculous conceit of Le Clerc is ſufficiently expoſed by Witſius [t].

℣. 29. Howbeit, every nation made gods of their own, &c.] Served and worſhipped thoſe they brought with them, and which were the work of their own hands, even the nations, or thoſe out of the nations, mentioned ℣. 24. theſe, notwithſtanding the inſtructions they had about the worſhip of the God of Iſrael, retained and ſerved their own deities: and put them in the houſes of the high places which the Samaritans had made, every nation in their cities wherein they dwelt; as the Iſraelites had built high places every where for idolatry, and put images in them, ℣. 9, 10, 11. theſe heathens thens placed their gods there in the room of them, which were as follow.

[k] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 14. §. 1. [l] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c 44. Plin. Nat Hiſt. l. 8. c. 16. [m] Ut Supra. [n] משפט judicium, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [o] ילכו וישבו eant & ſedeant, Montanus. [p] Pirke Eliezer, c. 38. [q] Antiqu. l. 9. c. 14. §. 3. [r] Abulpharag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. Dyn. 3. p. 65. [s] Cont. Hæreſ. l. 1. hær. 8. [t] Miſcellan. tom. 1. l. 1. c. 14. §. 7. 28.

℣. 30. And the men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth, &c.] That is, those that came from Babylon made and served an idol of this name, which, according to the Jewish writers [u], were the figures of an hen and chickens; but others suppose them to be the Pleiades, or seven stars, the stars being had in great veneration by the Babylonians; though others rather think those Succoth-benoth, tabernacles, or booths of the daughters, as the words may be rendered, have respect to the apartments in the temple of Venus, or Mylitta with the Babylonians and Assyrians, in which women, once in their lives, prostituted themselves to whomsoever asked them, in honour of Venus; of which filthy practice of theirs Herodotus [w] makes mention; and Valerius Maximus speaks [x] of a temple of Sicca Venus, which is near in sound to this, where the like impurities were committed: and the men of Cuth made Nergal; which, according to the Jews, was in the likeness of a cock; but others, because the first part of the word signifies a lamp, suppose fire is meant, worshipped by the Persians, from whom it is thought these men came; but rather the word signifies, as Hillerus [y] observes, the fountain of light, and denotes the sun, worshipped by the Babylonians, Cuth being a province of theirs; from hence one of the princes of Babylon had part of his name, Jer. xxxix. 3. and the men of Hamath made Ashima; which, the Jews say, was in the form of a goat, without any wool on it, or an ape [z]; but according to Hillerus [a], with the Arabs, Ashima is the name of a lion, a symbol of the sun, under which form it might be worshipped; unless Ashima is the same with Shamaim, the heavens, worshipped by the heathens; we read of the Ashemath of Samaria, by which they swore, Amos viii. 14. though that was before these men came thither.

℣. 31. And the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak, &c.] The former of which is represented by the Jews in the shape of a dog, deriving the word from Nabach to bark, as if it was the same with the Anubis Latrator of Virgil [b], an Egyptian deity; though that is said [c] to have its name from NOYB, which in the Egyptian language signifies gold, the statues of it being made of gold; and the latter in the form of an ass, for what reason I cannot say; but the first word, according to Hillerus [d], signifies, the remote one seeth, that is, the sun, which beholds all things; and Tartak is a chain, and may denote the fixed stars, chained as it were in their places; or the Satellites of the planets, chained to their orbs: and the Sepharvites burnt their children in fire to Adrammelech and to Anammelech the gods of Sepharvaim; which were the same with Moloch; which may be concluded, partly from the worship paid them, and partly from the signification of their names; both end with Melech king, which Moloch also signifies; the first may be interpreted the mighty king, and the latter the king that answers in an oracular way; from the first, one of the sons of Sennacherib king of Assyria had his name, Is. xxxvii. 36. though the Jews, according to their fancy, represent the one in the likeness of a mule, and the other in the likeness of a horse; and some make the one to be a peacock, and the other a pheasant [e]; the Septuagint version puts the article before them in the feminine gender, excepting the two last, taking them for she-deities, or leaving the word εἰκονα, images, to be understood.

℣. 32. So they feared the Lord, &c.] Worshipped the God of Israel in the manner they were taught: and made unto themselves of the lowest of them priests of the high places, which sacrificed for them in the houses of the high places; these were made after the manner of Jeroboam's priests, 1 Kings xi. 31. and were to sacrifice to the God of Israel in the high places, and temples built there; for otherwise they had, no doubt, priests of their own to sacrifice to their gods, and which they brought with them.

℣. 33. They feared the Lord, and served their own gods, &c.] Worshipped both: after the manner of the nations, whom they carried away from thence; the Israelites, whom they had carried captive from Samaria; they worshipped the Lord in their idols, as they did, who pretended to worship God in the calves; so they worshipped the supreme God in and by their idols, and made use of them as mediators with him.

℣. 34. Unto this day they do after the former manners, &c.] Which may be understood either of the new colonies in Samaria, doing after the former customs in their own land, or after the customs of the idolatrous Israelites; or of the Israelites in captivity continuing in their idolatry, not being in the least reformed by their troubles; or of such of them as were left in the land, who repented not of their idolatries, nor reformed from them: they fear not the Lord; did not worship him, at least not alone, and much less in a spiritual manner, with reverence and godly fear: neither do they after their statutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel; that is, they did not observe the statutes and ordinances of the law given on mount Sinai respecting religious worship, to act according to them.

℣. 35. With whom the Lord had made a covenant, &c.] As he did at Sinai, ℣. 15. and charged them, saying, Ye shall not fear other gods, nor bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them; all which is contained in the first and second commandments of the law.

℣. 36. But the Lord, which brought you up out of the land of Egypt, with a great power, and a stretched out arm, &c.] Which is observed, to shew the obligations they lay under, in point of gratitude, to serve the Lord: him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice; and him only, and not other gods; none but he being the object of religious fear and divine worship, and to whom sacrifices should be offered.

℣. 37. And the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment which he wrote for you, &c.] On the two tables of stone: ye shall observe to do for evermore; those commands relating to religious worship, especially the object of it, and to moral duties, being of eternal obligation; and all other statutes and ordinances of a ceremonial kind he ordered to be written for them, being such that they were to regard until the Messiah came, and a new world began: and ye shall not fear other gods;

[u] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 63. 2. [w] Clio, sive, l. 1. c. 199. [x] L. 2. c. 6. §. 15. [y] Onomastic. Sacr. p. 601. [z] David de Pomis Lexic. fol. 17. 2. [a] Onomast Sacr. p. 609. [b] Æneid. l. 6. So Ovid. Metamorph. l. 9. fab. 12. ℣. 689. [c] Jablonski apud Michael. Obs. Sacr. Exercit. 4. p. 66, 67. [d] Ut supra, p. 606. [e] Vid. Kimchium in loc.

gods; which is repeated, that it might be obſerved, as it alſo afterwards is.

℣. 38. And the covenant that I have made with you, ye ſhall not forget, &c.] The law given at mount Sinai; the firſt table of which chiefly concerned the worſhip of the one true and living God, and forbid the worſhip of any other, as follows: neither ſhall ye fear other gods; or make them the object of worſhip.

℣. 39. But the Lord your God ye ſhall fear, &c.] Or worſhip him, both internally and externally, according to his revealed will; for the fear of God includes both internal and external worſhip: and he ſhall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies; that is, provided they feared and ſerved him as he required, and it became them to do.

℣. 40. Howbeit, they did not hearken, but did after their former manner.] They did not repent of their idolatries, but perſiſted in them, and even when they were in captivity in Aſſyria, or ſuch of them as were left in the land.

℣. 41. So theſe nations feared the Lord, and ſerved their graven images, &c.] Juſt in like manner as the Iſraelites had done, who ſerved the Lord and the calves, and worſhipped God and Baal: both their children, and their children's children; that is, the children and children's children of the Samaritans: as did their fathers, ſo do they unto this day; to the writing of this book, which ſome aſcribe to Jeremiah, to whoſe times, and even longer, they continued this mixed and mongrel worſhip, for the ſpace of 300 years, to the times of Alexander the great, of whom Sanballat, governor of Samaria, got leave to build a temple, on Gerizzim, for his ſon-in-law Manaſſeh, of which he became prieſt; and the Samaritans were prevailed upon to relinquiſh their idolatry, and to worſhip only the God of Iſrael; and yet it ſeems but ignorantly, and not without ſuperſtition, to the times of Chriſt, John iv. 22.

CHAP. XVIII.

THIS chapter begins with the good reign of Hezekiah king of Judah, the reformation he made in the kingdom, and the proſperity that attended him when Iſrael was carried captive, ℣. 1—12. and gives an account of the ſiege of Jeruſalem by the king of Aſſyria, and of the diſtreſs Hezekiah was in, and the hard meaſures he was obliged to ſubmit unto, ℣. 13—18. and of the reviling and blaſphemous ſpeech of Rab-ſhakeh, one of the generals of the king of Aſſyria, urging the Jews to a revolt from their king, ℣. 19—37.

℣. 1. Now it came to paſs in the third year of Hoſhea ſon of Elah king of Iſrael, &c.] That is, in the third year of his rebelling againſt the king of Aſſyria, when he ſhook off his yoke, and refuſed to be tributary to him any longer, ſee ch. xvii. 1. that Hezekiah the ſon of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign; having finiſhed the account of the kingdom of Iſrael, and the captivity of the people, the hiſtorian returns to the kingdom of Judah, and the things of it.

℣. 2. Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign, &c.] Now as Ahaz his father began to reign at 20, and reigned 16, he muſt die at 36; ſo that this ſon of his muſt be born to him when at 11 years of age, for only ſo many years there be between 25 and 36, which may ſeem wonderful; but, as Grotius obſerves, Hezekiah had now entered into the 25th year, and he might be juſt turned of 24, and ſo his father might be 12 years of age at his birth; beſides, as it is uſual for the divine hiſtorian to take away or add the incomplete years of kings, Ahaz might be near 21 when he began to reign, and might reign almoſt 17, which makes the age of Ahaz to be about 38; and Hezekiah being but little more than 24, at his death there were 13 or near 14 years difference in their age, and which was an age that need not be thought incredible for begetting of children. Bochart[f] and others[g], have given many inſtances of children begotten by perſons under that age, even at 10 years of age[h]: four years after his birth, the famous city of Rome began to be founded[i], A. M. 3256. and before Chriſt 748, as commonly received, though it is highly probable it was of a more early date; according to Dionyſius Halicarnaſſenſis, it was founded in the firſt year of the 7th Olympiad, in the times of Ahaz, A. M. 3118[k]: and he reigned 29 years in Jeruſalem; ſo that he reigned 23 years or more after the captivity of the 10 tribes: his mother's name alſo was Abi the daughter of Zachariah; perhaps the daughter of the ſame that was taken by Iſaiah for a witneſs, Iſ. viii. 3. who very probably was a very good woman, and took care to give her ſon a religious education, though he had ſo wicked a father.

℣. 3. And he did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, according to all that David his father did.] Some of the kings of Judah that were better than ſome others, are ſaid to do that which was right, but not like David; or they did as he did, but not according to all that he did, as is here ſaid of Hezekiah.

℣. 4. He removed the high places, &c.] Which the beſt of the kings of Judah never attempted, and which is obſerved of them to their diſcredit: and broke the images, and cut down the groves; the idols his father ſet up and ſerved, ch. xvi. 4. 2 Chron. xxviii. 24. 26. groves and idols in them, were early inſtances of idolatry; ſee Judg. iii. 7. and the note there; and their uſe for temples are ſtill continued, not only among ſome Indian nations[l], but among ſome chriſtians in the northern parts of Europe[m]: and brake in pieces the brazen ſerpent that Moſes had made; which he made in the wilderneſs, and which was brought by the children of Iſrael with them into the land of Canaan, and was kept as a memorial of the miracle wrought by looking to it, being laid up in ſome proper place where it had been preſerved to this day: for unto thoſe days the children of Iſrael did burn incenſe to it; not from the time it was brought into Canaan, nor even in later times, in the days of Aſa and Jehoſhaphat, who would never have ſuffered it; very probably this piece of idolatry began in the times of Ahaz, who encouraged every thing of that kind: for this ſerpent they had a great veneration, being made made by Moſes, and a means in his time of healing the Iſraelites; and they imagined it might be of ſome ſervice to them, in a way of mediation to God; and worthy of worſhip, having ſome degree of divinity, as Kimchi and Ben Gerſom; but Laniado [m] excuſes them from all ſhew of idolatry, and ſuppoſes what they did was for the honour of God only; hence ſprung the hereſy of the Ophites, according to Theodoret: and he called it Nehuſhtan; perceiving they were enſnared by it, and drawn into idolatry to it, by way of contempt, he called it by this name, which ſignifies braſs; ſuggeſting that it was only a mere piece of braſs, had no divinity in it, and could be of no ſervice to them in divine things; and that it might no longer be a ſnare to them, he broke it into pieces; and, as the Jews [n] ſay, ground it to powder, and ſcattered it to every wind, that there might be no remains of it.

[f] Ep. Carbonell. tom. 1. oper. p. 920. [g] Vid. Hieronymi opera, tom. 3. Ep. Vital. fol. 25. C. [h] T. Bab. Avodah Zarah, fol. 44. 1. [i] Uſſer. Annal. p. 86, 87. [k] Vid. Breithaupt. Not. in Hiſt. Gorion. Heb. l. 5. c. 1. [l] See Dampier's Voyage, vol. 1. p. 411. [m] Vid. Fabritii Bibliograph. Antiqu. c. 9. §. 11.

℣. 5. He truſted in the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] To be his protector and defender, and had no dependence on idols as an arm of fleſh; the Targum is, he truſted in the Word of the Lord God; not in Nehuſhtan, but in him the brazen ſerpent was a type of, even in the Word and Son of God, his alone ſaviour and redeemer: ſo that after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah; for tho' Joſiah was like him in ſome things, yet not in all: nor any that were before him; from the times of the diviſion of the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah; and Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel think, that David and Solomon are not to be excepted; David ſinning in the caſe of Uriah, and Solomon falling into idolatry, crimes that Hezekiah was not guilty of.

℣. 6. For he clave to the Lord, &c.] To his worſhip and ſervice; to the fear of the Lord, as the Targum: and departed not from following him; from his worſhip, as the ſame paraphraſe: but kept his commandments, which the Lord commanded Moſes; both moral, ceremonial and judicial.

℣. 7. And the Lord was with him, &c.] The Word of the Lord was for his help, as the Targum: and he proſpered whitherſoever he went forth; that is, to war: and he rebelled againſt the king of Aſſyria; which is explained in the next clauſe: and ſerved him not; he refuſed to be his ſervant, as his father Ahaz had been, ch. xvi. 7. to which he was not obliged by any agreement of his; and if it was in his power, might lawfully ſhake off his yoke, which is all that is meant by rebelling againſt him; he refuſed to be tributary to him.

℣. 8. He ſmote the Philiſtines even unto Gaza, and the borders thereof, &c.] Who in his father's time had invaded Judah, and taken many cities and towns in it, which Hezekiah now recovered, and drove them to their own territories, of which Gaza was one; ſee 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city; that is, places both great and ſmall, cities, towns and villages; of this phraſe, ſee ch. xvii. 9.

℣. 9. And it came to paſs in the fourth year of king Hezekiah, &c.] In the beginning of it: which was the ſeventh year of Hoſhea ſon of Elah king of Iſrael; the beginning of his ſeventh: that Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria came up againſt Samaria, and beſieged it; ſee ch. xvii. 5.

℣. 10. And at the end of three years they took it, &c.] That is, at the firſt end of them, at the beginning, in which ſenſe the phraſe is taken in Deut. xv. 1. Jer. xxxiv. 14. even in the ſixth year of Hezekiah, that is, the ninth year of Hoſhea king of Iſrael, Samaria was taken; ſee ch. xvii. 6.

℣. 11. And the king of Aſſyria did carry away Iſrael unto Aſſyria, &c.] Of the places he diſpoſſeſſed them of in, after mentioned, ſee the note on ch. xvii. 6.

℣. 12. Becauſe they obeyed not the voice of the Lord, &c.] In his law, and by his prophets: but tranſgreſſed his covenant, and all that Moſes the ſervant of the Lord commanded; which evils are at large inſiſted on in the preceding chapter as the cauſe of their captivity: and would not hear them, nor do them; contrary to the agreement of their fathers at Sinai, who promiſed to do both, Exod. xxiv. 3, 7.

℣. 13. Now in the 14th year of king Hezekiah, &c.] Eight years after the captivity of Iſrael: did Sennacherib king of Aſſyria come up againſt all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them; many of them, the frontier towns, and proceeded as far as Lachiſh; ambitious of enlarging his dominions, his father having ſubdued the kingdom of Iſrael, and being alſo provoked by Hezekiah's refuſing to pay him tribute. Mention is made of this king by name, by Herodotus and other heathen writers, ſee the note on Iſ. xxxvi. 1. in Tobit i. 15. he is called Sennacherib, and is ſaid to be ſon of Enemaſſar, that is, Shalmaneſer; however, he ſucceeded him in his kingdom; though ſome [o] take him to be the ſame with Shalmaneſer: he is ſaid by Metaſthenes [p] to reign ſeven years, and was ſucceeded by Aſſaradon, who, according to him, reigned ten years.

℣. 14. And Hezekiah king of Judah ſent to the king of Aſſyria to Lachiſh, &c.] A city in the tribe of Judah, about 20 miles from Jeruſalem, towards the ſouth-weſt [q], which the king of Aſſyria was now beſieging, 2 Chron. xxxii. 9. at firſt Hezekiah made proviſion to defend himſelf, and encouraged his people not to be afraid of the king of Aſſyria, 2 Chron. xxxii. 1—8. but underſtanding he had taken his fortified cities, and made ſuch progreſs with his arms, he was diſheartened, and ſent an ambaſſy to him to ſue for peace; judging it more adviſeable to buy it, than to expoſe his capital to a ſiege; in which he betrayed much weakneſs and diſtruſt of the power and providence of God: ſaying, I have offended; not the Lord, but the king of Aſſyria, by rebelling againſt him, or refuſing to pay the yearly tribute to him; he owned he had acted imprudently, and had given him juſt occaſion to invade his land: return from me; from his land, from proceeding to Jeruſalem, which he ſeemed to have a deſign upon, and go back to his own country with his army, and make no farther conqueſts: that which thou putteſt on me, I will bear; what mulct or fine he ſhould lay upon him, or tribute he ſhould impoſe upon him, or whatever he ſhould demand of him, he would ſubmit to: and the king of Aſſyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah 300 talents of ſilver, and 30 talents of gold; to be paid to him directly; which, according to Brerewood [r], amounted to 247,500 pounds.

℣. 15. And Hezekiah gave him all the ſilver that was found in the houſe of the Lord, and in the treaſures of the king's houſe.] To make up the 300 talents of ſilver, for which purpoſe he exhauſted both, which had been done more than once before by the kings of Judah; theſe were their reſources in times of diſtreſs; ſee ch. xii. 18. and xvi. 8.

℣. 16.

[m] Cli Yaker, fol. 538, 2. [n] T. Bab. Avodah Zarah, fol. 44. 1. [o] Lud. Vives in Aug. de civ. Dei, l. 18. c. 24. [p] De judicio temp. fol. 221. 2. [q] Bunting's Travels, &c. p. 99. [r] De ponder. & pret. vet. num. c. 5.

℣. 16. At that time did Hezekiah cut off the gold from the doors of the temple of the Lord, &c.] The plates of gold with which they were covered; or ſcraped off the gold from them, as the Targum interprets it: and from the pillars which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid; or the poſts, as the Targum, the lintel or ſide-poſts of the doors of the temple; which tho' covered in Solomon's time, the gold was worn off, or had been taken off by Ahaz, but was renewed by Hezekiah; and who, in this time of diſtreſs, thought he might take it off again, no doubt with a full purpoſe to replace it, when he ſhould be able. This is one of the three things the Talmudic writers [s] diſapprove of in Hezekiah: and gave it to the king of Aſſyria; to make up the 30 talents of gold he demanded.

℣. 17. And the king of Aſſyria ſent Tartan, and Rabſaris, and Rabſhakeh from Lachiſh to king Hezekiah, with a great hoſt againſt Jeruſalem, &c.] Notwithſtanding he took the above large ſum of money of him, ſo falſe and deceitful was he: theſe were three generals of his army, whom he ſent to beſiege Jeruſalem, whilſt he continued the ſiege of Lachiſh; only Rabſhakeh is mentioned in Iſ. xxxvi. 2. he being perhaps chief general, and the principal ſpeaker; whoſe ſpeech, to the end of this chapter, intended to intimidate Hezekiah, and diſhearten his people with ſome circumſtances which attended it, are recorded word for word in Iſ. xxxvi. throughout; ſee the notes on it.

CHAP. XIX.

THIS chapter relates that king Hezekiah, on a report made to him of Rabſhakeh's ſpeech, ſent a meſſage to the prophet Iſaiah to pray for him, who returned him a comfortable and encouraging anſwer, ℣. 1—7. and that upon Rabſhakeh's return to the king of Aſſyria, he ſent to Hezekiah a terrifying letter, ℣. 8—13. which Hezekiah ſpread before the Lord, and prayed unto him to ſave him and his people out of the hands of the king of Aſſyria, ℣. 14—19. to which he had a gracious anſwer ſent him by the prophet Iſaiah, promiſing him deliverance from the Aſſyrian army, ℣. 20—34. which accordingly was deſtroyed by an angel in one night, and Sennacherib fleeing to Nineveh, was ſlain by his two ſons, ℣. 35—37.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when king Hezekiah heard it, &c.] The report of Rabſhakeh's ſpeech, recorded in the preceding chapter, that he rent his clothes, and covered himſelf with ſackcloth; rent his clothes becauſe of the blaſphemy in the ſpeech; and he put on ſackcloth, in token of mourning, for the calamities he feared were coming on him and his people: and he went into the houſe of the Lord; the temple, to pray unto him. The meſſage he ſent to Iſaiah, with his anſwer, and the threatening letter of the king of Aſſyria, Hezekiah's prayer upon it, and the encouraging anſwer he had from the Lord, with the account of the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian army, and the death of Sennacherib, are the ſame verbatim as in Iſ. xxxvii. throughout; and therefore the reader is referred thither for the expoſition of them; only would add what Rauwolff [t] obſerves, that ſtill to this day (1575) there are two great holes to be ſeen, wherein they flung the dead bodies (of the Aſſyrian army), one whereof is hard by the road towards Bethlehem, the other towards the right-hand againſt old Bethel.

CHAP. XX.

IN this chapter is an account of Hezekiah's ſickneſs, and of the means of his recovery, and of the ſign given of it, ℣. 1—11. of the king of Babylon's congratulatory letter to him upon it, when he ſhewed to the meſſengers that brought it his treaſures, in the pride and vanity of his heart, ℣. 12, 13. for which he was reproved by the prophet Iſaiah, and was humbled, and ſubmitted to the ſentence pronounced on his houſe, ℣. 14—19. and the chapter is concluded with his reign and death, ℣. 20, 21.

℣. 1, 2, 3. In theſe days was Hezekiah ſick unto death, &c.] Of this ſickneſs of Hezekiah, the meſſage of the prophet Iſaiah to him, and his prayer upon it, ſee the notes on Iſ. xxxviii. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 4. And it came to paſs afore Iſaiah was gone out into the middle court, &c.] Of the king's palace, which is called the other court within the porch, 1 Kings vii. 8. ſo it is according to the marginal reading, which we follow; but the textual reading is, the middle city; Jeruſalem was divided into three parts, and this was the middle part Iſaiah was entring into: but before he did, ſo it was, that the word of the Lord came to him, ſaying; as follows.

℣. 5. Turn again, and tell Hezekiah the captain of my people, &c.] The king of them, as the Targum: thus ſaith the Lord God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have ſeen thy tears; ſee the note on Iſ. xxxviii. 5. behold, I will heal thee; inſtantly, miraculouſly; and none but God could heal him, his diſeaſe being in its kind mortal, and he had been told from the Lord, that he ſhould die: on the third day thou ſhalt go up unto the houſe of the Lord; the temple, to give thanks for his recovery; and this he ſhould do on the third day from thence; ſo ſoon ſhould he be well, which would ſhew the cure to be miraculous.

℣. 6. And I will add unto thy days 15 years, &c.] See the note on Iſ. xxxviii. 5. and I will deliver thee, and this city, out of the hand of the king of Aſſyria; by which it appears that this ſickneſs and recovery were before the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian army: and I will defend this city for mine own ſake, and for my ſervant David's ſake; for the ſake of his honour and glory in the temple, and the ſervice of it, that were in Jeruſalem, and for the ſake of his promiſe to David and his ſeed.

℣. 7. And Iſaiah ſaid, Take a lump of figs, &c.] Not moiſt figs, but a cake of dried figs, as the word uſed ſignifies, and ſo the leſs likely to have any any effect in curing the boil: and they took, and laid it on the boil, and he recovered; made a plaſter of it, and laid it on the ulcer, and it was healed. Phyſicians obſerve [u], that as ſuch like inflammations conſiſt in a painful extenſion of the fibres by the hindrance of the circulation of the blood, thro' the extreme little arteries, which may be mitigated, or diſſipated, or ripened, by ſuch things as are emollient and looſening, ſo conſequently by figs; and in a time of peſtilence, figs beaten together with butter and treacle have been applied to plague-boils with great ſucceſs; yet theſe figs being only a cake of dry figs, and the boil not only malignant, but deadly, and the cure ſo ſuddenly performed, ſhew that this was done not in a natural, but in a ſupernatural way, though means were directed to be made uſe of.

[s] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 10. 2.

[t] Travels, par. 3. ch. 22. p. 317.

℣. 8. And Hezekiah ſaid unto Iſaiah, &c.] Or had ſaid [w], before the plaſter of figs was directed to, or, however, laid on, and as ſoon as he was told he ſhould be healed: What ſhall be the ſign that the Lord will heal me, and that I ſhall go up into the houſe of the Lord the third day? not that he diſbelieved the promiſe of God, or doubted of a cure, but this he requeſted for the confirmation of his faith; which good men ſometimes aſked, when they doubted not, as Gideon; and Ahaz, Hezekiah's father, was bid to aſk a ſign for the like purpoſe, and it was reſented in him that he did not; ſee Judg. vi. 17. 36. Iſ. vii. 11, 12, 13.

℣. 9. And Iſaiah ſaid, This ſign ſhalt thou have of the Lord, that the Lord will do the thing that he hath ſpoken, &c.] Cure him of his diſorder, ſo that he ſhould be able to go to the temple on the third day: ſhall the ſhadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees? that is, the ſhadow of the ſun on a dial-plate; it was left to his option to chuſe which he would, as the confirming ſign of his recovery.

℣. 10. And Hezekiah anſwered, It is a light thing for the ſhadow to go down ten degrees, &c.] That is, it was comparatively ſo, otherwiſe to go down ten degrees at once would be extraordinary and miraculous; but that was more agreeable to the nature and courſe of it to go forward, and ſo the miracle would be leſs apparent: nay, but let the ſhadow return backward ten degrees; which was directly contrary to its natural order and courſe, whereby the miracle would appear more clear and manifeſt: theſe degrees are by ſome ſaid [x] to be half hours, and not full ones, ſince it is obſerved the ſun ſhines not twenty full hours on any dial, unleſs under the pole; the ſun is ſuppoſed to have been now at the fifth full hour; the ſun was brought back five whole hours, then came forward five, then came forward two degrees, or one hour, to the ſixth hour, which made ſixteen; then it was ſix hours to ſun-ſet; ſo that day was prolonged twenty-two hours: the Chineſe [y] relate, that in the time of Kingcungus, the planet Mars, for ſake of the king, went back three degrees.

℣. 11. And Iſaiah the prophet cried unto the Lord, &c.] Or prayed, as the Targum; and was very earneſt in prayer, that what Hezekiah had deſired might be granted: and he brought the ſhadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz; Ben Gerſom underſtands it not of the ſun itſelf, but of the ſhadow of it only; ſee the note on Iſ. xxxviii. 8.

℣. 12. At that time Berodach-baladan, &c.] He is called Merodach-baladan, Iſ. xxxix. 1. ſo here in the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; ſee the note there; and by Metaſthenes [z] his father is called Merodach, and he Ben Merodach, who reigned twenty-one years, and his father fifty-two; from hence to the end of ℣. 19. the ſame account is given in the ſame words as in Iſ. xxxix. throughout, except in ℣. 13. where it is, hearkened unto them, and there, glad of them; heard the letter the ambaſſadors brought with pleaſure; ſee the notes there.

℣. 20. And the reſt of the acts of Hezekiah, and all his might, &c.] Which he exerted in his wars with his enemies, and in the reformation of religion, and abolition of idolatry: and how he made a pool, and a conduit, and brought water into the city; at the ſame time that he cut it off from the enemy without, ſee 2 Chron. xxxii. 3, 4. 30. are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? a book often referred to in this hiſtory, but ſince loſt; many of his acts are recorded in the canonical book of Chronicles, 2 Chron. xxix. xxx. xxxi. xxxii.

℣. 21. And Hezekiah ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died as they did; no mention is here made of the place of his burial, but there is in 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. where he is ſaid to be buried in the principal part of the ſepulchres of the ſons of David, and to have honour done him at his death by the inhabitants of Judah and Jeruſalem, by the vaſt concourſe of people attending his interment, and by burning ſpices for him, and making a public mourning on his account a certain ſtated time: and Manaſſeh his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whoſe wicked reign an account is given in the next chapter.

CHAP. XXI.

IN this chapter a ſhort hiſtory is given of the two wicked reigns of Manaſſeh and Amon; Manaſſeh is charged with great idolatry, with enchantments and witchcrafts, and ſeducing the children of Iſrael, ℣. 1—9. and a prophecy is given out of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem for his ſins, ℣. 10—16. and an account is given of his death and burial, ℣. 17, 18. and of his ſon and ſucceſſor Amon, and the evils committed by him, ℣. 19—22. and of the conſpiracy againſt his life, which ſucceeded, and Joſiah his ſon reigned in his ſtead, ℣. 23—26.

℣. 1. Manaſſeh was twelve years old when he began to reign, &c.] So that he was born three years after Hezekiah's recovery from his ſickneſs, and in the 17th year of his reign: and reigned 55 years in Jeruſalem; among which muſt be reckoned the time of his captivity in Babylon; his reign was the longeſt longeſt of any of the kings of Judah: and his mother's name was Hephzi-bah; the name the church goes by, and ſignifies "my delight or pleaſure is in her," Iſ. lxii. 4. no doubt ſhe was a good woman, or Hezekiah would not have made choice of her for a wife; it is a tradition of the Jews [a], that ſhe was the daughter of Iſaiah, whoſe name, they ſay, is not mentioned, becauſe ſo wicked a king was unworthy of ſuch a grandfather.

[u] Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 3. p. 620. Vid. Levin. Lemnii Herb. Bibl. Explicat. c. 19. p. 60. [w] ויאמר dixerat autem, V. L. Vatablus. [x] Weemſe's Chriſt. Synagog. l. 1. c. 6. §. 6. p. 167. See his Expoſition of the judicial Laws, c. 25. p. 90, &c. [y] Martin. Sinic. Hiſt. l. 4. p. 138. [z] Ut ſupra.

℣. 2. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Was guilty of idolatry: after the abomination of the heathen, whom the Lord caſt out before the children of Iſrael; the old Canaanites; he committed idolatry in imitation of them, and as the Phœnicians now did.

℣. 3. For he built up again the high places which Hezekiah his father had deſtroyed, &c.] The temples and altars upon them, ſee ch. xviii. 4. and he reared up altars for Baal; in the high places he rebuilt: and made a grove, as did Ahab king of Iſrael; which was either an idol itſelf, or a ſhade of trees where idols were placed; or rather Aſherah, rendered a grove, is the ſame with Aſtarte, the goddeſs of the Zidonians, the figure of which he made and worſhipped; for groves were not ſo ſoon and eaſily planted, raiſed, and made; ſo the ſame in 1 Kings xvi. 33. and worſhipped all the hoſt of heaven, and ſerved them; the ſun, moon, and ſtars, particularly the planets, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, and Venus.

℣. 4. And he built altars in the houſe of the Lord, &c.] In the holy place, as diſtinct from the courts in the next verſe; and theſe were ſacred to the idols of the Gentiles: of which the Lord ſaid, In Jeruſalem will I put my name; in the temple there, devoted to his ſervice, called by his name, and where his name was called upon, ſee Deut. xii. 5. and xvi. 6. and to erect altars to idols here muſt be very abominable to him.

℣. 5. And he built altars for all the hoſt of heaven, &c.] Sun, moon, and ſtars: in the two courts of the houſe of the Lord; in the court of the prieſts, and in the court of the people; and all this muſt be ſuppoſed to be done, not as ſoon as he began to reign, but when he was grown up to man's eſtate, and had children, as the next verſe ſhews; unleſs it can be thought that thoſe nobles in Judah, who liked not the reformation made by Hezekiah, took the advantage of his youth, and adviſed him to theſe idolatries.

℣. 6. And he made his ſon paſs through the fire, &c.] To Molech, after the manner of the old Canaanites and Phœnicians; his ſon Amon, that ſucceeded him, and other children, as appears from 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6. where mention is made of the place where it was done, the valley of the ſon of Hinnom: and obſerved times; lucky or unlucky, which was judged of by omens, and by the poſition of the ſtars; and uſed enchantments, and dealt with familiar ſpirits and wizards; to get knowledge of things to come; all which are forbid and condemned by the law of Moſes; ſee Deut. xviii. 10, 11, 12. he wrought much wickedneſs in the ſight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger; in all thoſe evils before-mentioned, which were very abominable in the ſight of God.

℣. 7. And he ſet a graven image of the grove that he had made in the houſe, &c.] Which was either an image that had been placed in a grove planted by him, and now removed into the houſe or temple of the Lord; or, as ſome think, this was a repreſentation of a grove, a carved grove of gold or ſilver, in the midſt of which an image was placed in the temple; though what Selden obſerves [b], ſeems beſt of all, that this was an image of Aſherah, as in the original text; that is, of Aſtarte or Aſhtoreth, the goddeſs of the Zidonians, 1 Kings xi. 5. the ſame the Phœnicians are ſaid to call Aſtroarche, and affirm it to be the moon [c]: in 2 Chron. xxxiii. 7. it is called a carved image the idol he had made; and an Arabic writer [d] ſays, it had four faces, which ſeems to be a figure of the cherubim; but, according to Suidas [e], it was the ſtatue of Jupiter, who alſo ſays it had four faces: of which the Lord ſaid to David, and to Solomon his ſon; that is, of which houſe or temple: in this houſe, and in Jeruſalem, which I have choſen out of all the tribes of Iſrael, will I put my name for ever; ſee 1 Kings viii. 29. and ix. 3. and the note on ℣. 4.

℣. 8. Neither will I make the feet of Iſrael move any more out of the land which I gave their fathers, &c.] Or ſuffer them to be carried captive into another land, as in the times of the Judges; that is, on the following condition: only if they will obſerve to do according to all the law that my ſervant Moſes commanded them; by obedience to which they had the tenure of the land of Canaan, Iſ. i. 19.

℣. 9. But they hearkened not, &c.] To the voice of God in his law by Moſes, and were not obedient to it: and Manaſſeh ſeduced them to do more evil than did the nations, whom the Lord deſtroyed before the children of Iſrael; he ſet up more idols, and drew the people into more, and greater idolatries, than the old Canaanites; and theſe were the more aggravated by having a law given to them, and prophets ſent to inſtruct them in it, and by the benefits and bleſſings beſtowed upon them by the lawgiver, which laid them under greater obligations to him; ſee Jer. ii. 11, 28.

℣. 10. And the Lord ſpake by his ſervants the prophets, &c.] Who propheſied in the days of Manaſſeh; and were, according to the Jewiſh chronology [f], Joel, Nahum and Habakkuk: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 11. Becauſe Manaſſeh king of Judah hath done theſe abominations, &c.] Before named, ℣. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. and hath done wickedly above all that the Amorites did that were before him; one of the ſeven nations of Canaan, a principal of them, and which is put for all the reſt: and hath made Judah alſo to ſin with his idols; the worſhip of them, as the Targum; which he did both by his edicts, and by his example.

℣. 12. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] Who though kind and gracious to Iſrael as their Covenant-God, is yet juſt and righteous, as well as he is a ſovereign Being and Lord of all: behold, I am bringing ſuch evil upon Jeruſalem and Judah, that whoſoever heareth of it, both his ears ſhall tingle; it will make ſuch a noiſe in the world, and be ſo horrible and terrible; and if the report of it would be ſo dreadful, as to make a man's ears tingle, and his heart tremble, what muſt it be to endure it! Ezek. xxii. 14. ſee 1 Sam. iii. 11.

℣. 13. And I will ſtretch over Jeruſalem the line of Samaria, &c.] The Targum is, the line of deſtruction; and the ſenſe is, that the ſame meaſure ſhould be meaſured to Jeruſalem, as was to Samaria; via; that is, the ſame lot and portion ſhould befal one as the other, that is, be utterly deſtroyed: and the plummet of the houſe of Ahab; the Targum is, the weight or plummet of tribulation; ſignifying, that the ſame calamities ſhould come upon the families of Jeruſalem, and eſpecially on the family of Manaſſeh, as came upon the family of Ahab. It is a metaphor from builders that take down, as well as raiſe up buildings by rule and meaſure, ſee 2 Sam. viii. 2. and I will wipe Jeruſalem, as a man wipeth a diſh, wiping it, and turning it upſide down; as when one takes a diſh or cup that has broth in it, or any liquid, as oil; and the Septuagint render it alabaſter, in which ointment uſed to be put; and wipes it clean, that nothing may appear in it; and then turns it with its mouth downward, that if any thing ſhould remain, it might drain out; ſignifying hereby the emptying of Jeruſalem of its palaces and houſes, wealth and riches, and of all its inhabitants; and yet the empty diſh being preſerved, ſeems to denote the reſtoration of Jeruſalem after the 70 years captivity. According to the Vulgate Latin verſion, the metaphor is taken from the blotting out of writing-tables, and turning and rubbing the ſtyle upon them till the writing is no more ſeen.

[a] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib, paralipom. fol. 86. F. [b] De Dis Syris, Syntagm. 2. c. 2. p. 233. [c] Herodian. l. 5. c 15. [d] Abulpharag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. Dyn. 3. p. 66. [e] In voce Μανασσης. [f] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 20. p. 55.

℣. 14. And I will forſake the remnant of mine inheritance, &c.] The whole land of Canaan was the Lord's inheritance; 10 tribes in it were already removed, only Judah with Benjamin was left, and the Lord threatens to forſake that remnant: and deliver them into the hands of their enemies, and they ſhall become a prey and ſpoil to all their enemies; which was fulfilled in their captivity in Babylon.

℣. 15. Becauſe they have done that which was evil in my ſight, &c.] Committed idolatry: and have provoked me to anger ſince the day their fathers came forth out of Egypt, even to this day; being always prone to idolatry, ſo provoking to God, and which they were guilty of quickly after they came out of Egypt, in the worſhip of the golden calf, and had ever ſince at times been criminal this way; and now the meaſure of their iniquity being almoſt up, would be reckoned for together.

℣. 16. Moreover, Manaſſeh ſhed innocent blood very much, &c.] Putting to death the prophets that reproved him and his people for their idolatries, and ſuch who would not comply therewith; and it is commonly ſaid, both by Jewiſh and chriſtian writers, that Iſaiah was ſlain, and even ſawn aſunder by him, ſee the note on Heb. xi. 37. till he had filled Jeruſalem from one end to another; a metaphor taken from filling a veſſel brim full: beſide his ſin wherewith he made Judah to ſin, in doing that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord; the ſin of idolatry he drew them into, and even obliged them to commit.

℣. 17. Now the reſt of the acts of Manaſſeh, and all that he did, &c.] Both good and bad, for he repented, and was humbled, and did many good things afterwards, though not recorded in this book: and his ſin that he ſinned; his idolatry: are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah? in which were recorded the moſt memorable events of their reigns; and in the canonical book of Chronicles are many things concerning Manaſſeh, which are not written here; ſee 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11—16.

℣. 18. And Manaſſeh ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Or died, after a reign of 55 years, and a life of 67: and was buried in the garden of his own houſe, in the garden of Uzza; whether the burial of him here was his own choice, judging himſelf unworthy to lie with the kings of Judah, who had been guilty of ſuch great ſins, or whether the will of others on the ſame account, is not certain; and as much at a loſs are we for the reaſon of this garden being called the garden of Uzza, whether from Uzzah that died for touching the ark, 2 Sam. vi. 6, 7, or from king Uzziah, ch. xv. 7. The Jews buried in gardens in the times of Chriſt, who himſelf was buried in one, John xix. 41. The Romans had ſometimes ſepulchres in their gardens [g], Galba the emperor was buried in his gardens [h]; and ſo had other nations. Cyrus king of Perſia was buried in a garden [i]: and Amon his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom we have the following account.

℣. 19. And Amon was 22 years old when he began to reign, &c.] Being born in the 45th of his father's life, and in the 33d of his reign: and he reigned two years in Jeruſalem; which, as Abarbinel obſerves, was the uſual time the ſons of wicked kings reigned, and inſtances in the ſon of Jeroboam, Baaſha and Ahab, 1 Kings xv. 25. and xvi. 8. and xxi. 51. An Arabic writer [k] ſays, he reigned 12 years, but according to the Jews only two: and his mother's name was Meſhullemeth, the daughter of Haruz of Jotbah; there was a place called Jotbath, which was one of the ſtations of the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, Numb. xxxiii. 33. Deut. x. 7. but it can ſcarcely be thought to be the ſame place.

℣. 20. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Committed idolatry: as his father Manaſſeh did; he imitated him in that, but not in his repentance and humiliation, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 23.

℣. 21. And he walked in all the way his father walked in, &c.] In his wicked way, his idolatry, witchcraft and murders: and ſerved the idols that his father ſerved, and worſhipped them; Baal, Aſhtoreth, and all the hoſt of heaven, and all the carved images his father made, which it ſeems he only removed, but did not break in pieces, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 22.

℣. 22. And he forſook the Lord God of his fathers, &c.] Of David, Solomon, &c. and walked not in the way of the Lord; preſcribed by him in his law for the worſhip of him.

℣. 23. And the ſervants of Amon conſpired againſt him, &c.] Some of his domeſtic ſervants, and perhaps his courtiers, not on account of his idolatry, but for ſome ill uſage of them: and ſlew the king in his own houſe; which they had an opportunity to do, being his ſervants.

℣. 24. And the people of the land ſlew all them that had conſpired againſt king Amon, &c.] On occaſion of his death, there ſeems to have been an inſurrection of the people in a body, to avenge the death of their king, who might be beloved on account of his idolatry, ſo depraved was the nation; or it may be only to avenge his death becauſe he was their king, whoſe life theſe men ought not to have taken away: and the rather this may be thought to be the reaſon, by what follows, and the people of the land made Joſiah his ſon king in his ſtead; who had been propheſied of by name above 300 years before, ſee 1 Kings xiii. 2.

℣. 25. Now the reſt of the acts of Amon which he did, are they not written in the book of the Chro-

[g] Vid. Kirchman. de funer. Roman. l. 2. c. 22. p. 274. Tacit. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 49.
[h] Eutrop. Hiſt. Roman. l. 7. Sueton. vit. Galb. c. 20.
[i] Strabo. Geograph. l. 15. p. 502.
[k] Abulpharag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. Dyn. 3. p. 67.

nicles of the kings of Judah?] See the note on ℣. 17.

℣. 26. And he was buried in his ſepulchre, in the garden of Uzza, &c.] Where his father Manaſſeh was buried, ℣. 18. and Joſiah his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom many things are ſaid in the two following chapters.

CHAP. XXII.

THIS chapter begins with the age and character of Joſiah king of Judah, ℣. 1, 2. and relates his orders for repairing the temple, ℣. 3—7. his attention to the book of the law which was found, and read to him, and the effect it had upon him, ℣. 8—11. the command he gave to certain perſons to enquire of the Lord about it, who applied to Huldah the propheteſs, ℣. 12—14. who returned an anſwer by them to the king, foretelling the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and giving the reaſon of it, and at the ſame time aſſuring the king it ſhould not be in his days, ℣. 15—20.

℣. 1. Joſiah was eight years when he began to reign, &c.] And muſt be born when his father was but 16, for Amon lived but 24 years, ch. xxi. 19. and he reigned 31 years in Jeruſalem; and ſo muſt die at 39 years of age: and his mother's name was Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah of Boſcath; a city of the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 39. ſee the note there.

℣. 2. And he did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] In the affair of religious worſhip eſpecially, as well as in other things: and walked in all the ways of David his father; in his religious ways, in which he never departed from his God: and turned not aſide to the right-hand or to the left; but kept an even, conſtant path of worſhip and duty, according to the law of God.

℣. 3. And it came to paſs in the 18*th year of king Joſiah*, &c.] Not of his age, but of his reign, as appears from 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8. nor is what follows the firſt remarkable act he did in a religious way; for elſewhere we read of what he did in the 8th and 12th years of his reign, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3—7. that the king ſent Shaphan the ſon of Azaliah, the ſon of Meſhullam the ſcribe, to the houſe of the Lord; the king's ſecretary; the Septuagint verſion is, the ſcribe of the houſe of the Lord, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion; that kept the account of the expences of the temple; with him two others were ſent, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8. ſaying; as follows.

℣. 4. Go up to Hilkiah the high-prieſt, &c.] Who had an apartment in the temple; there was an Hilkiah, a prieſt, in thoſe times, who was the father of Jeremiah the prophet, Jer. i. 1, 2. whom an Arabic writer [l] takes to be the ſame with this; but it is not likely: that he may ſum the ſilver which is brought into the houſe of the Lord; which the people voluntarily offered for the repairing of it; this he would have the prieſt take an account of, that the ſum total might be known; his meaning is, that he ſhould take it out of the cheſt in which it was put, and count it, that it might be known what it amounted to; ſee ch. xii. 9, 10. ſome underſtand this of melting and coining the ſilver thus given: which the keepers of the door have gathered of the people; who were Levites, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9. either porters of the door, or rather the treaſurers, as the Targum; the keepers of the veſſels of the ſanctuary, that had the care of them, as the Jewiſh commentators generally interpret it.

℣. 5. And let them deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work, that have the overſight of the houſe of the Lord, &c.] That were overſeers of the workmen, whoſe names are mentioned, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12. into their hands the money was to be delivered by the high-prieſt, when he had taken the account of it, and perhaps along with the king's ſcribe, ſee ch. xii. 10, 11, and let them give it to the doers of the work, which is in the houſe of the Lord, to repair the breaches of the houſe; as their wages for their work; it ſeems it had not been repaired from the times of Jeboaſh, a ſpace of 218 years, according to the Jewiſh chronology [m]; but Kimchi and Abarbinel make it 224.

℣. 6. Unto carpenters, and builders, and maſons, &c.] Who were employed, ſome in mending the wood-work, and others in repairing the ſtone-walls: and to buy timber and hewen ſtone to repair the houſe; not only money was to be given them for their workmanſhip, but to buy timber and ſtone to work with.

℣. 7. Howbeit, there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, &c.] No account was kept between the high-prieſt, and the king's ſcribe who delivered the money, and the overſeers of the workmen who received it from them; the latter were not called to any account by the former, nor any audit made of their accounts: becauſe they dealt faithfully; they were perſons of ſuch known honour and integrity, that their fidelity was not in the leaſt called in queſtion, but were truſted without examining their accounts, and how they diſpoſed of the money committed to them, ſee ch. xii. 15.

℣. 8. And Hilkiah the high prieſt ſaid unto Shaphan the ſcribe, &c.] Not at the firſt time of his meſſage to him, but afterwards that he attended on him upon the ſame buſineſs; after the high-prieſt had examined the temple to know what repairs it wanted, and where: I have found the book of the law in the houſe of the Lord; ſome think this was only the book of Deuteronomy, and ſome only ſome part of that; rather the whole pentateuch, and that not a copy of it, but the very autograph of Moſes, written with his own hand, as it ſeems from 2 Chron. xxxiv. 14. Some ſay he found it in the holy of holies, on the ſide of the ark; there indeed it was put originally; but had it been there, he might have found it before, and muſt have ſeen it, ſince, as high-prieſt, he entered there once every year; more probably ſome pious predeceſſor of his had taken it from thence in a time of general corruption, as in the reign of Manaſſeh, and hid it in ſome private place, under a lay of ſtones, as Jarchi, in ſome hole in the wall, which upon ſearch about repairs was found there: and Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it; and tho' there might be ſome copies of it in private hands, yet ſcarce; and perhaps Shaphan had never ſeen one, at leaſt a perfect one, or however had never read it through, as now he did.

℣. 9.

[l] Abulpharag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 68.

[m] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 24. p. 67.

℣. 9. And Shaphan the ſcribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, &c.] Of the delivery of his meſſage to the high-prieſt, and of what had been done upon it: and ſaid, thy ſervants have gathered the money that was found in the houſe; meaning Hilkiah and himſelf, who had examined the cheſt in the temple, into which the money was put for the repairs of it, and had taken it out, and told it: and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the overſight of the houſe of the Lord; according to the king's orders.

℣. 10. And Shaphan ſhewed the king, &c.] Farther related to him what follows: ſaying, Hilkiah the high-prieſt hath delivered me a book; but did not ſay what book it was: and Shaphan read it before the king; part of it; and it is thought by Kimchi and Ben Gerſom, that he particularly read the reproofs and threatenings in the book of Deuteronomy; they ſuppoſe that Hilkiah read thoſe to Shaphan, and directed him to read them to the king, that he might take into conſideration a farther reformation.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, &c.] From whence it appears, that he had never wrote out a copy of it, as the kings of Iſrael were ordered to do, when they came to the throne, Deut. xvii. 18, 19. nor had read it, at leaſt not the whole of it; and yet it ſeems ſtrange, that he ſhould be 26 years of age, as he now was, and had proceeded far in the reformation of worſhip, and yet be without the book of the law, and the high-prieſt alſo; it looks as if it was, as ſome have thought, that they had till now only ſome abſtracts of the law, and not the whole; and perhaps the reformation hitherto carried on, chiefly lay in aboliſhing idolatry, and not ſo much in reſtoring the ordinances of worſhip to their purity; for it was after this, that the ordinance of the paſſover was ordered to be kept; and when the king obſerved, on hearing the law read, that it had not been kept as it ſhould, that ſuch ſevere threatenings were denounced againſt the tranſgreſſors of it: that he rent his clothes; as expreſſive of the renting of his heart, and of his humiliation and ſorrow for the ſins he and his people were guilty of.

℣. 12. And the king commanded Hilkiah the prieſt, &c.] The high-prieſt, as he is called, ℣. 4, 8. and Ahikam the ſon of Shaphan; whether the ſame with Shaphan the ſcribe, before mentioned, or another of the ſame name, is not certain: and Achbor the ſon of Michaiah; who is called Abdon, the ſon of Micah, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 20. and Shaphan the ſcribe; who brought and read the book to the king: and Aſahiah a ſervant of the king's; that waited on him conſtantly: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 13. Go ye, enquire of the Lord, &c.] Of ſome of his prophets, as Jeremiah, who began to propheſy in the 13th year of Joſiah's reign, and had been a prophet five years, Jer. i. 1, 2. for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found; for he obſerved that this book threatened and foretold not only the captivity of the ten tribes, but of Judah, and of their king; and Jarchi thinks, he had a particular reſpect to that meſſage, the Lord ſhall bring thee and thy king, &c. Deut. xxviii. 36. and therefore was deſirous of knowing what he and his people muſt do to avert thoſe judgments: for great is the wrath of the Lord that is kindled againſt us; which he concluded from the threatenings denounced: becauſe that our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according to all which is written concerning us; he clearly ſaw that his anceſtors more remote and immediate had been very deficient in obſerving the laws, commands, and ordinances enjoined them in that book; and therefore feared, that what was threatened would fall upon him, and his people, who, he was ſenſible, came ſhort of doing their duty.

℣. 14. So Hilkiah the prieſt, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Aſahiah, went down to Huldah the propheteſs, &c.] Such as were Miriam and Deborah; in imitation of thoſe ſatan had very early his women-propheteſſes, the Sibyls, ſo called from their being the council and oracle of God, and conſulted as ſuch on occaſion, as Huldah now was; and the firſt of the Sibyls, according to Suidas [n], was a Chaldean or a Perſian; and ſome ſay an Hebrew; and Pauſanias expreſsly ſays [o], that with the Hebrews above Paleſtine, was a woman-propheteſs, whoſe name was Sabba, whom ſome called the Babylonian, other the Egyptian ſibyl. Ælian relates [p] that one of them was a Jeweſs: the wife of Shallum, the ſon of Tikvah, the ſon of Hirhas, keeper of the wardrobe; but whether the king's wardrobe in the palace, or the prieſt's in the temple, is not certain; he is called Haſrah, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 22. who is here called Hirhas: now ſhe dwelt in Jeruſalem in the college; in the college of the prophets; in the houſe of inſtruction, as the Targum; the ſchool where the young prophets were inſtructed and trained up; though Jarchi obſerves, that ſome interpret this within the two walls; Jeruſalem it ſeems had three walls, and within the ſecond this woman lived; there were gates in the temple, as he alſo obſerves, called the gates of Huldah [q], but whether from her cannot be ſaid: this place of her dwelling ſeems to be mentioned as a reaſon why theſe meſſengers went to her, becauſe ſhe was near, as well as well known for her prophetic ſpirit, prudence and faithfulneſs, and not to Jeremiah, who in all probability was at Anathoth; and ſo alſo is the reaſon why they went not to Zephaniah, if he as yet had begun to propheſy, becauſe he might be at a diſtance alſo: and they communed with her; upon the ſubject the king ſent them about.

℣. 15. And ſhe ſaid unto them, &c.] The king's meſſengers: thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael; being immediately inſpired by him, ſhe ſpake in his name, as prophets did: tell the man that ſent you to me; which may ſeem ſomewhat rude and unmannerly to ſay of a king; but when it is conſidered ſhe ſpake not of herſelf, but perſonating the King of kings, and Lord of lords, it will be ſeen and judged of in another light.

℣. 16. Thus ſaith the Lord, behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of it, &c.] Deſtruction to the place, and captivity to the inhabitants of it: even all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read; particularly what is contained in the 26th of Leviticus, and 28th of Deuteronomy, even all the curſes in it, as in 2 Chron. xxxiv. 24.

℣. 17.

[n] In voce Σιβυλλα, Suidas.

[o] Phocica, ſive, l. 10. p. 631.

[p] Var. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 35.

[q] Miſn. Middot, c. 1. §. 3.

℣. 17. Becauſe they have forſaken me, &c.] My worſhip, as the Targum; his word and ordinances: and have burnt incenſe unto other gods; to Baal, to the hoſt of heaven, and other heathen deities: that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; their idols of wood, ſtone, gold, and ſilver, which their hands had made, to worſhip; than which nothing was more provoking to God: therefore my wrath ſhall be kindled againſt this place, and ſhall not be quenched; the decree for the deſtruction of Jeruſalem was gone forth, and not to be called back; the execution of it could not be ſtopped, or hindered by cries, prayers, intreaties, or otherwiſe; this wrath of God was an emblem of the unquenchable fire of hell, Matt. iii. 12. Mark ix. 44.

℣. 18. But to the king of Judah which ſent you to enquire of the Lord, &c.] That is, with reſpect to him, or what may concern him: thus ſhall ye ſay unto him; carry back this meſſage to him as from the Lord he deſired to enquire of: Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, As touching the words which thou haſt heard; read out of the law, concerning the deſtruction of the land, and its inhabitants therein threatened.

℣. 19. Becauſe thine heart was tender, &c.] Soft, like wax, and ſuſceptible of impreſſions; or was moved, or trembled, as the Targum; for God has reſpect to ſuch as are of contrite hearts, and tremble at his word, Iſ. lxvi. 2. and thou haſt humbled thyſelf before the Lord; external humiliation, ſuch as in Ahab, was regarded by the Lord, much more internal and cordial humiliation is regarded by him, ſee 1 Kings xxi. 29. when thou heardeſt what I ſpake againſt this place, and againſt the inhabitants thereof, that they ſhould become a deſolation, and a curſe; as in Lev. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii. and haſt rent thy clothes, and wept before me; as expreſſive of the inward contrition, ſorrow, and grief of his heart: I alſo have heard thee, ſaith the Lord; his cries and prayers.

℣. 20. Behold therefore, I will gather thee unto thy fathers, &c.] To his godly anceſtors, to ſhare with them in eternal life and happineſs; otherwiſe it could be no peculiar favour to die in common, as his fathers did, and be buried in their ſepulchres: and thou ſhalt be gathered into thy grave in peace; in a time of public peace and tranquility; for though he was ſlain in battle with the king of Egypt, yet it was what he was perſonally concerned in, and it was not a public war between the two kingdoms, and his body was carried off by his ſervants, and was peaceably interred in the ſepulchre of his anceſtors, ch. xxiii. 29, 30. as well as he died in ſpiritual peace, and entered into eternal peace, which is the end of the perfect and upright man, as he was, Pſ. xxxvii. 37. but this chiefly regards his not living to be diſtreſſed with the calamities of his nation and people, as follows: and thine eyes ſhall not ſee all the evil which I will bring upon this place; he being removed firſt, though it came upon it in the days of his ſons: and they brought the king word again; of what Huldah the propheteſs had ſaid unto them.

CHAP. XXIII.

THIS chapter treats of Joſiah's reading the book of the law, and of him and the people renewing the covenant with God, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and of his removing idols and idolatry in every ſhape, and witchcraft out of the land, which he did in the ſincerity of his heart, ℣. 4—25. yet the wrath of God was ſtill determined upon the land, ℣. 26, 27, 28. and Joſiah was taken away by an untimely death, ℣. 29, 30. and was ſucceeded by two ſons of his, one after another, whoſe reigns were wicked, ℣. 31—37.

℣. 1. And the king ſent, and they gathered unto him all the elders of Judah, and of Jeruſalem.] Joſiah ſent meſſengers throughout the land, and convened all the principal men in it at Jeruſalem.

℣. 2. And the king went up into the houſe of the Lord, &c.] To the temple, from his palace: and all the men of Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem with him; they met him there: and the prieſts, and the prophets; the prophets Jeremiah, Zephaniah, and Uriah, who, though they might not be at Jeruſalem when the book of the law was found, yet, upon this meſſage of the king's, might come up thither from the countries where they were; the Targum interprets the word ſcribes; and ſome take them to be the ſons of the prophets, their diſciples; in 2 Chron. xxxiv. 30. they are called Levites: and all the people both ſmall and great; a very numerous aſſembly: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant which was found in the houſe of the Lord; that is, he cauſed it to be read by others, and perhaps by more than one, the congregation being ſo large.

℣. 3. And the king ſtood by a pillar, &c.] As the manner of kings was, ch. xi. 14. and is thought to be the brazen ſcaffold erected by Solomon, on which he ſtood at the dedication of the temple, and now Joſiah at the reading of the law, 2 Chron. vi. 13. it is ſaid to be his place, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 31. ſee the note on ch. xi. 14. and made a covenant before the Lord; agreed and promiſed in the preſence of God, both he and his people: to walk after the Lord; the worſhip of the Lord, as the Targum; cloſely to attend to that: and to keep his commandments, and his teſtimonies, and his ſtatutes; all the laws of God, moral, civil, and ceremonial: with all their heart, and all their ſoul; cordially and ſincerely; to perform the words of the covenant that were written in this book; lately found, and now read unto them: and all the people ſtood to the covenant; agreed to it, and promiſed to keep it; ſo the Targum, "all the people took upon them the covenant," engaged to obſerve it.

℣. 4. And the king commanded Hilkiah the high-prieſt, and the prieſts of the ſecond order, &c.] Or the ſecond courſe of the prieſts; the courſe of Jedaiah, 1 Chron. xxiv. 7. as ſome think; or rather, the two chief prieſts next to the high-prieſt, who were of the line both of Eleazer and Ithamar; though the Targum interprets it of the Sagan of the prieſts, a deputy of the high-prieſt, ſuch as in after-times the high-prieſt had always appointed for him on the day of atonement [r]: and the keepers of the door; the porters at the door and gates of the temple; or rather the treaſurers, as the Targum; ſuch as were appointed over the veſſels of the ſanctuary, as the Jewiſh writers generally interpret it, and which beſt agrees agrees with what follows: to bring forth out of the temple of the Lord, all the vessels that were made for Baal; used in burning incense, or offering sacrifices to him: and for the grove; the idol of the grove, or Asherah, that is, Ashtoreth, or Astarte, the same with Venus, or the moon, as Baal was the sun, the one the husband, and the other the wife, according to the Jews [s]: and for all the host of heaven; the stars: and he burnt them without Jerusalem in the fields of Kidron; or plain of Kidron, as the Targum; thro' which the brook Kidron ran: and carried the ashes of them unto Beth-el; where one of Jeroboam's calves was set, and was the source of idolatry; and this he did in contempt of that place; and to shew his detestation of the idolatry there, he made it a dunghil of ashes of things used in idolatrous service; this he could do, that place being in the hands of the kings of Judah from the times of Abijah, 2 Chron. xiii. 19.

[r] Miſn. Yoma, c. 1. §. 1.

ver. 5. And he put down the idolatrous priests, &c.] The Cemarim, so called, because they wore black clothes, as Kimchi and others, whereas, the priests of the Lord were clothed in white linen, see the note on Zeph. i. 4. whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places, in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; for though those high places were destroyed by Hezekiah, they were rebuilt by Manasseh his son, and priests put in them to officiate there, whom Josiah now deposed, ch. xxi. 3. them also that burnt incense unto Baal; in the same high places; these were the priests, and the others in the preceding clause are thought to be ministers unto them; to the sun, and to the moon, and to the planets; the five planets besides the sun and moon, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, and Venus; or to the twelve celestial signs in the firmament, as some [t]; though Theodoret takes it to be a single star, the evening-star: and to all the host of heaven; or even to the host of heaven, all the stars thereof: this part of worship, burning incense, which was peculiar to the most high God, yet was frequently made by idolaters to their deities; and from the word [u] by which it is here and elsewhere expressed may Nectar be derived, so much spoken of by the heathen poets, as of a sweet smell [w], and as delicious to their gods; and so Porphyry [x] represents the gods as living on smoke, vapours, and perfumes; and frankincense is said, by Diodorus Siculus [y], to be most grateful to them, and beloved by them; this therefore is a much better derivation of the word Nectar than what Suidas [z], gives, that is, as if it was Neoctar, because it makes those young that drink it; or than the account Athenæus [a] gives of it, that it is a wine in Babylon so called.

ver. 6. And he brought out the grove from the house of the Lord, &c.] Not a real grove of trees, but a carved one, as some think; or rather, the image of the grove, ch. xxi. 7. that is, the idol Ashtoreth, or Astarte, which was set up there; so Theodoret says; some interpreters call it Astoreth, the name of Venus, whom they call Astarte: this Josiah ordered to be brought without Jerusalem, unto the brook Kidron, and burnt it at the brook Kidron; the black brook, where the filth of the sacrifices was carried: and stampt it small to powder; as Moses did the golden calf: and cast the powder thereof upon the graves of the children of the people; the common people, see Jer. xxvi. 23. or rather, on the graves of the worshippers of idols, as it seems from 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4. the Targum is, "on the graves of the children of Galia," which, Kimchi says, is the name of an idol; this was done partly in contempt of the idol, groves being, according to law, impure; and partly to the reproach of the deceased, and the memory of them, for their idolatry, and to deter from it those that survived them.

ver. 7. And he brake down the houses of the sodomites that were by the house of the Lord, &c.] Near the temple were apartments, in which men, the worshippers of idols, prostituted their bodies to each other; committing that unnatural sin with one another, which has its name from Sodom, and from which those are so called, and which sin they committed in honour of the idols they worshipped; to such vile affections were they, in a judicial manner, delivered up, because of their idolatry; see Rom. i. 27, 28. the word signifies holy ones, they being called so by an antiphrasis; though Abarbinel thinks these were the idolatrous priests, whom the worshippers of idols reckoned holy, and so built houses for them near the temple to lodge in; the Targum is, "and broke down the houses of things consecrated to idols," where they were put; and Theodoret on the place observes, that by an homonymy, they called the dæmons or idols themselves holy ones; and it is not likely, indeed, that the sodomites should be where the women wove hangings for the grove; that is, for Astarte, as the same writer observes: or curtains, as the Jewish writers generally interpret it, in which either the idol was inclosed, or these made apartments for the idolaters to commit their abominable wickedness privately; tho' the Syriac and Arabic versions are, "they wove garments for the idols that were there;" and so the Septuagint version, of the Complutensian Edition; that is, they wove garments for the goddess Astarte, which they dressed her with; the word signifies houses, and may mean the shrines of the idol made of woven work.

ver. 8. And he brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah, &c.] Who were of the sons of Aaron, and had served in the high places there: and defiled the high places where the priests had burnt incense; by casting dead carcasses, or the bones of dead men, or dung, or any thing that was unclean, into them, by way of contempt: from Geba to Beer-sheba; which were the northern and southern boundaries of the land of Judah: and brake down the high places of the gates; of the cities where some think tutelar gods were placed to be worshipped by persons as they went in or out of them: and particularly that which were in the entring in of the gate of Joshua the governour of the city, which were on a man's left hand at the gate of the city; of the city of Jerusalem, where this Joshua was chief magistrate under the king; at whose door stood an high place, which, Kimchi thinks, might be greater than the rest, and therefore mentioned alone, yet was not spared on account of its greatness, or of the person to whom it belonged.

ver. 9. Nevertheless, the priests of the high places came not up to the altar of the Lord at Jerusalem, &c.] To sacrifice there, as the Targum; though they were removed from the high places, they were not admitted to officiate at the altar of the Lord, [s] Zohar in Gen. fol. 34. 3. [t] David de Pomis Lexic. fol. 77. 3. [u] קטר suffitum fecit. Et diis acceptus —— Nidor. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 12, fab. 4. [w] Theocrit. Idyll. xvii. ver. 29. [x] De abstinentia, l. 2. c. 42. Celsus apud Origen. l. 8. p. 417. [y] Biblioth. l. 2. p. 132. [z] In voce Νεκταρις. [a] Deipnosophist. l. 1.

Lord, having offered in forbidden places: but they did eat of the unleavened bread with their brethren; the prieſts that were pure, as the ſons of Zadok; though they might not offer ſacrifices, they were allowed to partake of the holy things with the prieſts, as the meat-offerings made of flour unleavened, Lev. ii. 4, 5. which are here meant, and put for all the reſt on which the prieſts lived, ſee Ezek. xliv. 10—15.

℣. 10. And he defiled Topheth, &c.] A place ſo called, as is generally thought, from the beating of drums or timbrels in it, that the ſhrieks of the infants ſacrificed here to Molech, might not be heard by their parents, and they repent of delivering them to him, and take them away. So the Indians now, at the burning of wives with their deceaſed huſbands, attend them with drums and trumpets; and at ſuch time as the fire is put to the wood, the drums and trumpets make a terrible noiſe for fear their cries ſhould be heard [b]; ſee the notes on Iſ. xxx. 33. Jer. vii. 31. this he defiled by caſting any ſort of filth or unclean thing into it, in contempt of the idolatry there committed, and to alienate the minds of men from it: which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom; a valley that belonged to the poſterity of a man of this name, near to Jeruſalem, ſee Joſh. xv. 8. hence the Greek word Geenna for hell, in the New Teſtament: that no man might make his ſon or his daughter paſs through the fire to Molech; which piece of idolatry uſed to be committed in this place.

℣. 11. And he took away the horſes that the kings of Judah had given to the ſun, &c.] Conſecrated to it; theſe were not images of horſes, as ſome have thought, but real living ones; and the kings that gave them for the ſervice of the ſun, and for ſacrifice to it, very probably were Manaſſeh and Amon: that horſes were ſacred to the ſun with many heathen nations, as the Maſſagetæ, a people in Scythia, and the Perſians, and Babylonians, and Ethiopians, is affirmed by various writers [c]; and from them the Jews received this notion. According to the Jewiſh commentators, theſe were horſes provided for the worſhippers of the ſun to ride upon, and meet the ſun in the morning at its riſing, and pay their homage to it; but certain it is, that the heathen nations before mentioned ſlew the horſes, and ſacrificed them as burnt-offerings to the ſun, as is aſſerted by Herodotus [d], Xenophon [e], Strabo [f], Pauſanias [g], Philoſtratus [h], and other writers [i]; and ſo the Indians [k] ſacrificed them to Apollo, the ſame with the ſun; theſe being the ſwifteſt of creatures, they offered them to the ſwifteſt of their gods, as Herodotus and Heliodorus obſerve, in the places before referred to. The ſtables, in which theſe horſes were kept, were at the entering of the houſe of the Lord, by the chamber of Nathan-melech the chamberlain, which was in the ſuburbs; ſo that they reached from the temple to the ſuburbs of Jeruſalem, to that part of them where this officer had a chamber, or lodgings, being in ſome place of power and authority there; though, according to L'Empereur [l], it is the ſame with Parbar, 1 Chron. xxvi. 18. and ſhould not be rendered ſuburbs, it being between the compaſs or wall of the temple, and the court: and burnt the chariots of the ſun with fire; theſe were either chariots, in which the king and his nobles rode, when they went to meet and worſhip the riſing ſun; or rather ſuch as were ſacred to the ſun, as well as the horſes, or Joſiah would not have burnt them; they ſeem to be ſuch in which the images of the ſun were carried. Herodotus [m] makes mention as of ſacred horſes, ſo of a ſacred chariot. Xenophon [n] ſpeaks of the chariot of the ſun as being of a white colour, and drawn in proceſſion at the worſhip of the ſun; as does alſo Pauſanias [o] of a chariot, in which were the Sun, Jupiter, and Juno, and near them other deities; which notion of ſacred chariots, the heathens might take from the chariot of the cherubim Jehovah ſate and rode in, 1 Chron. xxviii. 18.

℣. 12. And the altars that were on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, which the kings of Judah had made, &c.] Which were on the roof of the royal palace; the roofs of houſes in Judah being flat, Deut. xxi. 8. altars might be built upon them; ſo in Arabia, altars were built on the tops of houſes to offer incenſe thereon daily to the ſun [p]; as here by Manaſſeh and Amon very probably, which might be choſen becauſe nearer the heavens; for which reaſon the heathens made uſe of high places to worſhip in, ſee Jer. xix. 13. and xxxii. 29. Zeph. i. 5. and the altars which Manaſſeh had made in the two courts of the houſe of the Lord; ch. xxi. 5. did the king beat down; ordered to be demoliſhed: and brake them down from thence, and caſt the duſt of them into the brook Kidron; that there might be no remains of them to be put to any ſuperſtitious uſe.

℣. 13. And the high places that were before Jeruſalem, &c.] Not only that were within the city, and at the gates of it, but what were without it: which were on the right-hand of the mount of corruption; the mount of Olives, ſo called from the idolatry and corrupt worſhip performed in it, by way of reproach, with a ſmall alteration of the letters of the word משחית for משחה; at the right-hand, or ſouth of this mountain, as the Targum; though others ſay [q], on the north ſide of the mount of Olives, four furlongs from Jeruſalem, were high places: which Solomon king of Iſrael had builded for Aſhtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemoſh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon; of which ſee the notes on 1 Kings xi. 5, 7. did the king defile; by caſting unclean things into them. Rauwolff [r] ſays, "before mount Zion toward the ſouth, at the other ſide of the rivulet Kidron, lies the mount of tranſgreſſion, called Maſhith, 2 Kings xxiii. 13. this is higher and ſteeper than any hereabout; there you ſtill ſee ſome old walls of habitations, wherein the concubines of Solomon did live;" and Mr. Maundrel [s] obſerves, that below the hill ſtands now a village called Siloe, where it is ſaid he kept them.

℣. 14. And he brake in pieces the images, &c.] Of Aſhtoreth, Chemoſh and Milcom, in the above high places; which as theſe high places had been rebuilt by Manaſſeh or Amon, ſo new images of theſe deities were placed there: and cut down the groves;

I

[b] Agreement of cuſtoms between the Eaſt-Indians and Jews, art. 25. p. 85, 86. [c] Juſtin e Trogo, l. 1. c. 10. Curt. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 3. Ovid. Faſt. l. 1. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 6. c. 26. Heliodor. Ethiop. l. 10. c. 6. 28. [d] Clio, ſive, l. 1. c. 216. [e] Cyropæd. l. 8. c. 23, 24. [f] Geograph. l. 11. p. 353. [g] Laconica, ſive, l. 3. p. 201. [h] Vit. Apollon. l. 1. c. 20. [i] Vid Lactant. de falſ. relig. l. 1. c. 21. [k] Laon. Chalcondyl. de rebus Turc. l. 3. p. 108. [l] Not. in Miſn. Middot, c. 2. §. 3. N°. 3. So Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 10. col. 177. [m] Polymnia, ſive, l. 7. c. 55. [n] Ut ſupra, c. 23. [o] Eliac. 1. ſive, l. 5. p. 307. [p] Strabo, Geograph. l. 16. p. 539. [q] Vid. Adrichom. Theatrum, T. S. p. 171. [r] Travels, par. 3. c. 4. p. 233. [s] Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 102.

groves; in which they were ſet: and filled their places with the bones of men; of idolatrous prieſts and worſhippers, buried in parts adjacent; theſe he dug up and ſcattered in the high places and groves to defile them, bones of the dead being by law unclean, Numb. xix. 16.

℣. 15. Moreover, the altar that was at Bethel, and the high place which Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin, had made.] For the worſhip of the calf there: both that altar, and the high place, he brake down; according to an ancient prophecy of the man of God, 1 Kings xiii. 3. and of Amos in later times, ch. ix. 1. and burnt the high place, and ſtampt it ſmall to powder; that there might be no remains of it: and burnt the grove; either the grove of trees on it, or the idol that was in it.

℣. 16. And as Joſiah turned himſelf, &c.] From the high place, and the altar at Bethel; for he not only gave orders for the deſtroying of idolatrous places and idols, but he ſaw them executed himſelf: he ſpied the ſepulchres that were there in the mount; the graves of idolatrous prieſts and worſhippers, who choſe to be buried near thoſe places of idolatry; nor was it unuſual for perſons to be buried on hills and mountains, ſee Joſh. xxiv. 30, 33. and this was a cuſtom in other nations formerly [t], particularly among the Indians [u] now, who in many things agree with the Jews: and ſent and took the bones out of the ſepulchres, and burnt them upon the altar; where they had ſacrificed to idols: and polluted it; with their bones, which, according to the law, were defiling, and which was done in contempt of their idolatrous worſhip there: according to the word of the Lord which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed theſe words; or things; foretold that ſuch a king by name would ariſe, and burn mens bones upon the altar, and which had been foretold more than 350 years before this time.

℣. 17. Then he ſaid, what title is that that I ſee? &c.] A high and large monument over a grave, with an inſcription on it, more remarkable than any of the reſt, which made Joſiah take notice of it; and the Jews have a tradition, as Kimchi obſerves, that on one ſide of the grave grew nettles and thiſtles, and on the other ſide odoriferous herbs; which is not to be depended on; but what he farther obſerves may be right, that the old prophet, as he gave order to his ſons to lay his body in the ſame grave with the man of God, believing his words would be fulfilled, ſo he likewiſe gave orders to have a diſtinguiſhed monument or pillar erected over the grave; and which people in aftertimes took care to ſupport, in memory of the man of God, that thereby it might be known; by which means not only the bones of the man of God were preſerved from being burnt, but thoſe of the old prophet alſo buried with him: and the men of the city told him, it is the ſepulchre of the man of God, which came from Judah, and proclaimed theſe things that thou haſt done againſt the altar of Bethel; ſee 1 Kings xiii. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 18. And he ſaid, let him alone; let no man move his bones, &c.] Not take them out of the grave, as they had done the reſt: ſo they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria; the old prophet, whereby his end was anſwered in being buried with him, 1 Kings xiii. 31, 32.

℣. 19. And all the houſes alſo of the high places, &c.] The temples of the idols there, and the houſes for the prieſts to dwell in: that were in the cities of Samaria, which the kings of Iſrael had made to provoke the Lord to anger, Joſiah took away; particularly in the cities of Manaſſeh, Ephraim and Simeon, unto Napthali, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 6. the Iſraelites that remained there acknowledging Joſiah as their king; and perhaps after the defeat of Sennacherib, many of the cities of Iſrael might put themſelves under the protection of Hezekiah, and eſpecially upon the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian empire; and Manaſſeh, with his liberty, might have his kingdom enlarged by the king of Babylon; and which being continued and increaſed in the times of Joſiah, might be the reaſon of his oppoſing the king of Egypt in favour of the king of Babylon: and did to them according to all the acts that he had done in Bethel; defiled them, and broke down the altars in them.

℣. 20. And he ſlew all the prieſts of the high places that were there, &c.] The idolatrous prieſts who ſacrificed to Baal, and other heathen deities; for as for others that burnt incenſe in high places, yet to the true God, thoſe he ſpared, though they were not ſuffered to officiate at the altar of God: the others he ſlew upon the altars; where they ſacrificed: and burnt mens bones upon them; the bones of the prieſts, and worſhippers of idols, as he had done at Bethel: and returned to Jeruſalem; after he had gone through the land, both of Judah and Iſrael, and aboliſhed idolatrous worſhip every where.

℣. 21. And the king commanded all the people, &c.] Not at Jeruſalem only, but throughout the whole kingdom: ſaying, keep the paſſover unto the Lord your God, as it is written in this book of the covenant; which had been lately found and read, and they had agreed to obſerve, and in which this ordinance was ſtrictly enjoined, and was a commemoration of their deliverance out of Egypt, and a direction of their faith to the Meſſiah, the antitype of the paſſover.

℣. 22. Surely there was not holden ſuch a paſſover, from the days of the judges that judged Iſrael, &c.] As the king commanded; the people obeyed and kept the paſſover, according to the law of the Lord; the manner of its being kept is not here recorded, but is at large in 2 Chron. xxxv. where it is obſerved there had not been ſuch an one from the days of Samuel, the laſt of the judges; ſo that the days of the judges here mean the laſt days of them: nor in all the days of the kings of Iſrael, nor of the kings of Judah; ſince the diviſion of the kingdoms; for as for the kings of Iſrael, they kept it not; and though it was obſerved in the times of Hezekiah king of Judah, yet not univerſally, and by ſome in their uncleanneſs; for it is a miſtake of Clemens of Alexandria [w], that it was not kept in the times between Samuel and Joſiah; in the days of David and Solomon it might be kept by greater numbers, but not with ſuch purity, and with ſuch chearfulneſs and joy of heart, or with ſo many other ſacrifices attending it, or ſo exactly agreeable to the law of God, and with ſuch munificence and liberality; the king, and the chief of the prieſts and [t] Vid. Servium in Virgil. Æneid. 11. ℣. 849. —— fuit ingens monte ſub alto.

[u] Manaſſeh ben Iſrael Spes Iſraelis, §. 6. p. 29.
[w] Stromat. l. 1. p. 328.

and Levites providing out of their own ſubſtance for the people and their brethren.

℣. 23. But in the 18th year of king Joſiah, wherein this paſſover was holden to the Lord in Jeruſalem.] This ſhews that Joſiah muſt begin the reformation very early that year, ſince he did all that is before recorded in this and the preceding chapter by the 14th of Niſan, the day on which the paſſover was kept, which month anſwers to part of our March and part of April, ſee ch. xxii. 3. and was the ſame year the repairs of the temple were finiſhed.

℣. 24. Moreover, the workers with familiar ſpirits, and the wizards, &c.] Who were not to be ſuffered among the Iſraelites, Deut. xviii. 11. and the images; or Teraphim: and the idols, and all the abominations; which were worſhipped by the heathens, and introduced among the Jews, and forbidden by the word of God: that were ſpied in the land of Judah, and in Jeruſalem, did Joſiah put away; for which, it ſeems, diligent ſearch was made, and wherever they were diſcovered were removed: that he might perform the words of the law, which were written in the book that Hilkiah the prieſt found in the houſe of the Lord; both with reſpect to witchcraft and idolatry; ſee Lev. xx. 27. Exod. xx. 4, 5. and xxiii. 24.

℣. 25. And like unto him was there no king before him, &c.] The ſame is ſaid of Hezekiah, ch. xviii. 5. Hezekiah might excel him in ſome things, as Joſiah might excel Hezekiah in others: that turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his ſoul, and with all his might; with ſuch ſincerity, heartineſs, zeal, and conſtancy: according to all the law of Moſes; having reſpect to every commandment, eſpecially relative to worſhip, with the greateſt preciſion and exactneſs: neither after him aroſe there any like him; for all to the captivity were wicked princes.

℣. 26. Notwithſtanding, the Lord turned not from the fierceneſs of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled againſt Judah, &c.] Notwithſtanding the great reformation wrought among them; for though Joſiah was a ſincere reformer, and did what he did heartily, as to the Lord, according to his will, and for his glory; yet the people were not ſincere in their compliance, they turned to the Lord not with their whole heart, but feignedly, Jer. iii. 10. becauſe of all the provocations that Manaſſeh had provoked him withal; by ſhedding innocent blood, and committing idolatry, which the people conſented to and approved of, and even now privately committed idolatry, as the prophecies of Jeremiah and Zephaniah ſhew; and it may eaſily be concluded, that their hearts were after their idols, by their openly returning to them in the days of the ſons of Joſiah.

℣. 27. And the Lord ſaid, I will remove Judah alſo out of my ſight, as I have removed Iſrael.] Not from his all-ſeeing eye, but from being the object of his ſpecial care and protection; the meaning is, that he would ſuffer them to be carried out of their land into captivity, as Iſrael was; this he had ſaid in his heart, was determined upon; the decree was gone forth, and it was irrevocable: and will caſt off this city Jeruſalem, which I have choſen; for the place of his worſhip, the people having forſaken his worſhip there, and followed after idols: and the houſe of which I ſaid, My name ſhall be there; the temple, called after his name, and where his name was to be, and had been called upon.

℣. 28. Now the reſt of the acts of Joſiah, and all that he did, &c.] For aboliſhing idolatry, and reſtoring the true worſhip of God: are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? and alſo of Iſrael, in which an account was kept of the tranſactions of their reign; many other of the acts of Joſiah are recorded in the canonical book of Chronicles, 2 Chron. xxxiv. xxxv.

℣. 29. In his days Pharaoh-necboh king of Egypt, &c.] Who is called in the Targum Pharaoh the lame, becauſe he was lame in his feet, perhaps gouty; Herodotus [x] alſo calls him Necos the ſon of Pſammiticus; now it was in the laſt days of Joſiah this king reigned in Egypt, or however that the following event was: that he went up againſt the king of Aſſyria to the river Euphrates; to Carchemiſh, a city ſituated upon it; ſee 2 Chron. xxxv. 26. Jer. xlvi. 2. the king he went againſt was the king of Babylon, who had conquered the Aſſyrian monarchy, and therefore called king of it; ſome take him to be Nabopolaſſar; according to Marſham [y], he was Chyniladanus: and king Joſiah went againſt him; to ſtop him, that he might not paſs through his country, and attack the king of Babylon, whoſe ally, perhaps, Joſiah was; or however, thought himſelf obliged to him by the privileges, power, and authority he allowed him to exerciſe in the land of Iſrael: and he ſlew him at Megiddo, when he had ſeen him; as ſoon as they came face to face, and engaged in battle, ſee ch. xiv. 8. 11. that is Pharaoh ſlew Joſiah at the firſt onſet. Megiddo was a city in the tribe of Manaſſeh, Joſh. xvii. 11. Herodotus [z] calls it Magdolus, which ſeems to be a city on the borders of Egypt, the ſame with Migdol, Jer. xliv. 1. where he ſays Nechoh conquered the Syrians; in Joſephus [a] it is called Mendes very wrongly. Joſiah ſeems to have engaged in this action without conſulting the Lord and his prophets.

℣. 30. And his ſervants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, &c.] They took him out of the chariot in which he was wounded, and put him into another, where he died of his wounds by the way; being mortally wounded, he is ſaid to be dead, or a dead man, ſee 2 Chron. xxxv. 34. and brought him to Jeruſalem; which, according to Bunting [b], was 44 miles from Megiddo: and buried him in his own ſepulchre; which either he had provided for himſelf in his lifetime, or which in common belonged to the kings of Judah, ſee 2 Chron. xxxv. 24. and the people of the land took Jehoahaz the ſon of Joſiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's ſtead: though he was not the eldeſt ſon, Jehoiakim, who was afterwards placed in his room, being two years older, as appears from ℣. 31. 36. and this is the reaſon, as the Jewiſh commentators in general agree, that he was anointed; which they ſay was never done to the ſon of a king, unleſs there was a competitor, or ſome objection to, or diſpute about, the ſucceſſion, as in the caſe of Solomon and others.

℣. 31. Jehoahaz was 23 years old when he began to reign, &c.] Who ſeems to be the ſame with Shallum, Jer. xxii. 11. and he reigned three months in Jeruſalem; a ſhort reign, being depoſed by the king of Egypt, as after-related: and his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah; a city a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. x. 29. and xv. 42.

[x] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 158. [y] Chronic. Secul. 18. p. 568. [z] Ibid. c. 159. [a] Antiqu. l. 10. c. 5. §. 1. [b] Travels, &c. p. 188.

℣. 32. And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, &c.] Committed idolatry: according to all that his fathers had done; his grandfather and great grandfather, Amon and Manasseh; so soon after Josiah's death was the revolt to idolatry.

℣. 33. And Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah in the land of Hamath, &c.] Places in Syria; Hamath was formerly a kingdom in Syria, and Riblah is said by Jerom [c] to be Antioch of Syria, near to which was the fountain of Daphne; and in the Targums, of Jonathan and Jerusalem on Numb. xxxiv. 11. Daphne is put for Riblah; and Josephus [d] says, Antioch was by Daphne of Syria; and in 2 Maccab. iv. 33. Daphne is said to be by Antioch; with which place Pompey was greatly delighted, because of the pleasantness of it, and the abundance of waters about it [e]; hither, it is probable, Jehoahaz went with an army to avenge his father's death on the king of Egypt, or to assist the king of Babylon, or both; and here Pharaoh met with him, and took him, and bound him; he seems to be of a martial spirit, from Ezek. xix. 3. that he might not reign in Jerusalem; whither afterwards the king of Egypt came, and took it; and so Herodotus [f] says, that after he had conquered the Syrians at Migdol, he took Cadytis, a great city of Syria, which seems to be Jerusalem, the holy city: and put the land to a tribute of 100 talents of silver, and a talent of gold; the land of Judah; and 100 talents, according to Bunting [g], amounted to 37,500 pounds of our money; and a talent of gold, according to Brerewood [h], was 4500 pounds; but bishop Cumberland [i] makes it 5067 pounds 3 shillings and 10 pence; a talent of gold could not be so large in Homer's time, since he speaks of seven of them given at once in a way of hospitality [k].

℣. 34. And Pharaoh-nechoh made Eliakim the son of Josiah king in the room of Josiah his father, &c.] Not in the room of Jehoahaz; for he did not allow him to be a king, and to have any lawful right to the throne; but deposing him, set up his elder brother: and turned his name to Jehoiakim; to shew his subjection to him, and that he held his government by him: and took Jehoahaz away; with him, from Jerusalem, when he departed thence: and he came to Egypt, and died there; and never returned to Jerusalem, according to the prophecy of Jeremiah, Jer. xxii. 11.

℣. 35. And Jehoiakim gave the silver and gold to Pharaoh, &c.] The 100 talents of silver and the talent of gold, which he imposed as a tribute upon the land; but he taxed the land, to give the money according to the commandment of Pharaoh; he did not take it out of his own treasures, nor the treasures of the house of the Lord, which perhaps might be exhausted, but levied it of the people of the land: he exacted the silver and the gold of the people of the land; required them to pay it in: of every one according to his taxation, to give it unto Pharaoh-nechoh; every one was taxed according to his abilities, in proportion to what he was worth, or to the estate he was possessed of.

℣. 36. Jehoiakim was 25 years old when he began to reign, &c.] And therefore must be two years older than his brother Jehoahaz, who was deposed: and he reigned 11 years in Jerusalem; and therefore must die at the age of 36: and his mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah; which Josephus [l] calls Ibuma; but he speaks of a village in Galilee called Ruma [m]; but whether the same with this is not certain.

℣. 37. And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his fathers had done.] Amon and Manasseh; see ℣. 32.

CHAP. XXIV.

THIS chapter relates the rebellion of Jehoiakim against the king of Babylon, which prepared the way for the ruin of the kingdom of Judah, according to the decree of God, and also the death of Jehoiakim, and the conquest the king of Babylon made of part of the land of the king of Egypt, ℣. 1—7. and the short and wicked reign of Jehoiachin his son, when he and the royal family, with great numbers of the inhabitants of the land, were carried captive to Babylon, ℣. 8 — 16. and his uncle was made king in his room, ℣. 17—20.

℣. 1. In his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, &c.] Against Jerusalem; this was in the latter end of the third, or the beginning of the fourth of Jehoiakim's reign, and the first of Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxv. 1. and xlvi. 2. when Jehoiakim was taken, but restored upon promise of subjection and obedience, and hostages given, at which time Daniel and his companions were carried captive, with some of the vessels of the temple; see the notes on Dan. i. 1, 2. and Jehoiakim became his servant three years; which were the 5th, 6th and 7th years of his reign: then he turned and rebelled against him; being encouraged by the king of Egypt, who promised to assist him against the king of Babylon; Nebuchadnezzar is the Nabocolasser in Ptolemy's canon; and Berosus [n] testifies, that 70 years before the Persian monarchy he made war against the Phœnicians and Jews, and it is from this time the 70 years captivity is to be dated.

℣. 2. And the Lord sent against him, &c.] By Nebuchadnezzar, against whom he rebelled: bands of the Chaldees, and bands of the Syrians, and bands of the Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon; who were all subject to the king of Babylon, or were voluntary troops in his service, and bore an hatred to the Jews: according to Eupolemus [o], this army consisted of Medes and Babylonians, and besides 10,000 chariots, there were in it 180,000 foot, and 120,000 horse: and sent them against Judah to destroy it; this was not until the 11th of Jehoiakim, Nebuchadnezzar being diverted by the siege of Tyre, or other important business, from chastizing the king of Judah until this time: according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by his servants the prophets; Isaiah, Jeremiah, Zephaniah, and Huldah the prophetess.

℣. 3.

[c] Comment. in Ezekiel. xlvii. fol. 261. C. [d] Antiqu. l. 17. c. 2. §. 3. [e] Rufi Fest. Breviar. Eutrop. Hist. Rom. l. 6. [f] Ut supra. [g] Ut supra, p. 288. [h] De Ponder. & Pret. vet. Num. c. 4. [i] Scripture-weights and measures, ch. 4. p. 21. [k] Odyss. 9. ℣. 258. & Odyss. 24. ℣. 321. [l] Antiqu. l. 10. c. 5. §. 2. [m] De bello Jud. l. 3. c. 6. §. 21. [n] Apud Clement. Alex. Stromat. 1. p. 329. [o] Apud Euseb. Evangel. præpar. l. 9. c. 39. p. 454.

℣. 3. Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his ſight, &c.] It was the ſure and certain decree of God they ſhould be carried captive, and therefore he ſtirred up the ſpirit of Nebuchadnezzar, and gave him orders to go againſt it: for the ſins of Manaſſeh, according to all that he did; which were ſtill continued among the Jews, and committed by them, though repented of by Manaſſeh, and he returned from them.

℣. 4. And alſo for the innocent blood that he ſhed, for he filled Jeruſalem with innocent blood, &c.] See ch. xxi. 16. which cruel uſage of the prophets, and ſervants of the Lord, was ſtill continued; ſee Jer. xxvi. 21—24. which the Lord would not pardon; he pardoned the ſins of Manaſſeh, who repented, but not the ſins of thoſe perſons who imitated him, but repented not; or though he perſonally pardoned the ſins of Manaſſeh, ſo that he was ſaved everlaſtingly, yet the temporal puniſhment of the nation for thoſe ſins, in which they were involved with him, was not averted.

℣. 5. Now the reſt of the acts of Jehoiakim, &c.] In 2 Chron. xxxvi. 8. it is added, his abominations, and that which was found in him; which beſides his rebellion againſt the king of Babylon, and his ſhedding innocent blood, is interpreted of marks made in his body for ſuperſtitious and idolatrous purpoſes; ſo Lyra.

℣. 6. So Jehoiakim ſlept with his fathers, &c.] He died as they did, but was not buried with them, and indeed had no burial at all, according to the prophecy of Jeremiah, Jer. xxii. 18, 19. for falling into the hands of the king of Babylon, he was bound in chains, in order to be carried to Babylon, but died as ſoon as he came out of Jeruſalem, at the gates of which he was caſt, and had no burial, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6. At this time alſo ſome of the veſſels of the temple were carried away, and put in the idol's temple at Babylon, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7. Jer. xxvii. 16. and Eupolemus [p] ſays, that whatever gold, ſilver and braſs were in the temple, were carried away: and Jehoiachin his ſon reigned in his ſtead; called ſometimes Jechoniah, and by contempt Coniah, Jer. xxii. 24, 28.

℣. 7. And the king of Egypt came not any more out of his land, &c.] To receive the tribute he impoſed on the land of Judah, or to help the kings thereof, Jehoiakim and Jehoiachin; not till the times of Zedekiah, and then was obliged to retire, without giving any aſſiſtance, Jer. xxxvii. 7. the reaſon follows, for the king of Babylon had taken from the river of Egypt unto the river Euphrates, all that pertained to the king of Egypt; all that lay between the river Nile, or the Rhinocolura, and the river Euphrates, ſo that he could not ſtir out of his dominions, which lay beyond.

℣. 8. Jehoiachin was 18 years old when he began to reign, &c.] In 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. he is ſaid to be but eight years old; which may be reconciled by obſerving, that he might be made and declared king by his father, in the firſt year of his reign, who reigned 11 years, ſo that he was eight years old when he began to reign with him, and 18 when he began to reign alone [q]. Dr. Lightfoot [r] gives another ſolution of this difficulty, that properly ſpeaking he was 18 years old when he began to reign, but in an improper ſenſe, the ſon of eight years, or the 8th year, as the Hebrew phraſe is; that is, he fell in the lot of the 8th year of the captivity of Judah, which was in the latter end of the third, or the beginning of the fourth of his father's reign, and the firſt of Nebuchadnezzar's, and it was now in the eighth of Nebuchadnezzar that he was king, ſee ℣. 12. but very probably in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. there is a miſtake in the Copyiſt of 8 for 18, ſince in the Arabic and Syriac verſions it is there 18, as here: he reigned in Jeruſalem three months; the ten days beſides are here omitted for ſhortneſs, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. and his mother's name was Nehuſhta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jeruſalem; a perſon no doubt well known in thoſe times.

℣. 9. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, according to all that his father had done.] Being partner with him in his throne, he was in his ſins, and continued therein, ſee ch. xxiii. 37.

℣. 10. At that time, &c.] When Jehoiachin reigned: when the year was expired; ſo it is in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. or at the revolution of the year; which ſome take to be autumn, the beginning of the civil year with the Jews; but rather it was the ſpring, the time when kings went out to battle, 2 Sam. xi. 1. the ſervants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up againſt Jeruſalem; that is, his army under proper generals and officers, and by his orders: and the city was beſieged; in form by the Chaldean army.

℣. 11. And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came againſt the city, &c.] He came in perſon following his army: and his ſervants did beſiege it; very cloſely.

℣. 12. And Jehoiachin king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon, &c.] Not to fight with him, but to ſubmit to him, and to ſurrender the city to him, and be at his mercy: he and his mother, and his ſervants, and his princes, and his officers; the royal family, courtiers and nobles: and the king of Babylon took him in the eighth year of his reign; of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, and which was the eighth of the firſt captivity, and from whence the 70 years captivity were reckoned.

℣. 13. And he carried out thence all the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord, and the treaſures of the king's houſe, &c.] The gates of the city being thrown open to him, he entered and plundered the temple, and the royal palace, and took from thence all the riches thereof: and cut in pieces all the veſſels of gold which Solomon king of Iſrael had made in the temple of the Lord, as the Lord had ſaid; ch. xx. 17. and ſo the prophecy of Iſaiah was fulfilled. No more is ſaid of theſe veſſels in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. than that they were brought to Babylon; and ſo Piſcator renders the word here, took, or carried them away; and certain it is, that they were carried whole to Babylon, Dan. v. 2, 3. but as Hezekiah is ſaid to cut off the doors of the temple, that is, ſtrip or ſcrape off the gold of them, ch. xviii. 16. ſo Nebuchadnezzar cut off from the temple, or ſtripped it of the golden veſſels in it; of great part of them, the greater part thereof; for that there were ſome left, is plain from Jer. xxvii. 18—22.

℣. 14. And he carried away all Jeruſalem, &c.] The inhabitants of it; not every individual of them, but the chief of them, the more honourable rich, and uſeful; for the poorer ſort were left, as afterwards expreſſed: and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even 10,000 captives; which was the number of them in the whole; the particulars are after delivered: and all the craftſmen and

[p] Ut ſupra. [q] So in Seder Olam Rabba, c. 25. [r] Works, vol. 1. p. 122.

and ſmiths; beſides the nobles and the ſoldiers, he took all the artificers that exerciſed any handicraft trade or buſineſs; carpenters and blackſmiths, as ſome interpret theſe two words; ſo that there were none left to make arms for them; the laſt word may be rendered incloſers, and are by ſome interpreted of incloſers of jewels in metals, as gold and ſilver: none remained, ſave the poorcſt ſort of the people of the land; who were left to till it, and to dreſs the vines; ſee ch. xxv. 12.

℣. 15. And he carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon, &c.] Where he continued at leaſt 37 years, ch. xxv. 27. and the king's mother; whoſe name was Nehuſhta, ℣. 8. and the king's wives; for though he was ſo young, it ſeems he had many wives, as was the cuſtom of thoſe times; or his women, who were either his concubines, or ſervants in his family: and his officers; in his court: and the mighty of the land; the princes and nobles thereof; or the fools of the land, as the word is written; ſo the people generally were: thoſe carried he into captivity from Jeruſalem to Babylon; which, according to Bunting [s], were 680 miles diſtant from each other.

℣. 16. And all the men of might, even 7000, &c.] The particulars of the 10,000 carried captive are here given; 7000 of which were the principal men of the land: and craftſmen, and ſmiths 1000; which made 8000: all that were ſtrong, and apt for war; of theſe conſiſted the other 2000; ſo Abarbinel reckons them; but, according to the Jewiſh chronologer [t], which Jarchi and other Jewiſh commentators follow, the 7000 were out of the tribe of Benjamin and the reſt of the tribes, and the 3000 out of the tribe of Judah, which are ſuppoſed to be thoſe Jeremiah ſpeaks of, ch. lii. 28. even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylon; among theſe were Ezekiel the prophet, and Mordecai, the uncle of Eſther.

℣. 17. And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah his father's brother king in his ſtead, &c.] The third ſon of Joſiah, 1 Chron. iii. 15. and changed his name to Zedekiah; for the ſame reaſon the king of Egypt changed the name of Eliakim, ch. xxiii. 24. to ſignify his ſubjection to him; though ſome think it was to put him in mind of the juſtice of God, as the name ſignifies, that would overtake him, ſhould he be treacherous to him, and rebel againſt him; ſo the Jewiſh Midraſh.

℣. 18, 19, 20. Zedekiah was 21 years old when he began to reign, &c.] So that he was but between nine and ten years of age when his father Joſiah died; for Jehoahaz reigned three months, Jehoiakim eleven years, and his ſon three months and ten days: and he reigned eleven years in Jeruſalem: and his mother's name was Hamutal the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah; by which it appears that he was the brother of Jehoahaz by father and mother's ſide, ch. xxiii. 31. This and the two following verſes are expreſſed in the ſame words, as in Jer. lii. 1, 2, 3. ſee the notes there: in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 12, 13. beſides what is here ſaid, is written, that he humbled not himſelf before Jeremiah the prophet of the Lord, that ſpoke in his name, but oppoſed him; and rebelling againſt the king of Babylon, broke his oath, and hardened his neck and heart againſt the Lord, and was obſtinate, ſtubborn, and ſelf-willed.

CHAP. XXV.

IN this chapter is an account of the ſiege, taking and burning of the city of Jeruſalem, and of the carrying captive the king and the inhabitants to Babylon, ℣. 1—12. as alſo of the pillars and veſſels of the temple brought thither, ℣. 13—17. and of the putting to death ſeveral of the principal perſons of the land, ℣. 18—22. and of the miſerable condition of the reſt under Gedaliah, whom Iſhmael ſlew, ℣. 23—26. and the chapter, and ſo the hiſtory is concluded with the kindneſs Jehoiachin met with from the king of Babylon, after 37 years captivity, ℣. 27—30.

℣. 1—7. And it came to paſs in the 9th year of his reign, &c.] Of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah. From hence to the end of ℣. 7. the account exactly agrees with Jer. lii. 4—11. ſee the notes there.

℣. 8—12. And in the 5th month, on the 7th day of the month, &c.] In Jer. lii. 12. it is the 10th day of the month; which, how to be reconciled, ſee the note there: which is the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar; who, according to Ptolemy's canon, reigned 43 years; Metaſthenes [u] ſays 45; and from hence, to the end of ℣. 12. facts are related as in Jer. lii. 12—16. whither the reader is referred.

℣. 13—17. And the pillars of braſs that were in the houſe of the Lord, &c.] The two pillars in the temple, Jachin and Boaz. Benjamin of Tudela ſays [w], that in the church of St. Stephen in Rome, theſe pillars now are with the name of Solomon engraved on each; and the Jews at Rome told him, when there, (in the 12th century) that on the 9th of Ab (the day the temple was deſtroyed) every year ſweat was found upon them like water; the one, I ſuppoſe, will equally be believed as the other, ſince it is here expreſsly ſaid, that the Chaldæans broke them in pieces. From hence, to the end of ℣. 17. is the ſame with Jer. lii. 17—23. where it is rather more largely and fully expreſſed; only there is this difference here in ℣. 17. the height of the chapiter of a pillar is ſaid to be three cubits, there five cubits; for the reconciliation of which, ſee the note there.

℣. 18—21. And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief-prieſt, and Zephaniah the ſecond prieſt, &c.] The ſagan, or deputy-prieſt, who officiated for the high-prieſt, when by any means he was rendered unfit and uncapable; ſo Joſeph, the ſon of Ellem, as Joſephus [x] relates, officiated for Matthias, when defiled with a nocturnal pollution; and ſeven days before the day of atonement, they always ſubſtituted one under the high-prieſt, leſt any thing of this kind ſhould happen to him [y]. From hence, to the end of ℣. 21. the account is the ſame as in Jer. lii. 25—27. only here in ℣. 19. it is ſaid, that five men that were in the king's preſence were taken, taken, there ſeven men; to account for which, ſee the note there.

[s] Travels, &c. p. 198. [t] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 25. [u] De judicio temp. & Annal. Perſ. fol. 221. 2.
[w] Itinerar. p. 13. [x] Antiqu. l. 17. c. 6. §. 4. [y] Miſn. Yoma, c. 1. §. 1.

℣. 22—24. And as for the people that remained, &c.] That were left in the land to be vine-dreſſers and huſbandmen; over theſe the king of Babylon made Gedaliah governor, to whom the captains, with their ſcattered troops came, and ſubmitted for a time; of whom, ſee the notes on Jer. xl. 7, 8, 9.

℣. 25. And it came to paſs in the ſeventh month, &c.] Not of Gedaliah's government, but of the year, the month Tiſri or September, near two months after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; the Jews ſay 52 days after it; of the death of Gedaliah, and the man that ſlew him, as here related, ſee the notes on Jer. xli. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 26. And all the people, both ſmall and great, &c.] High and low, rich and poor, among whom were the king's daughters, committed to the care of Gedaliah, and alſo the prophet Jeremiah and Baruch, ſee Jer. xli. 16. and xliii. 6. and the captains of the armies roſe, and came to Egypt; contrary to the expreſs command of God; theſe were Johanan, and the captain of the forces with him, Jer. xliii. 4, 5. for they were afraid of the Chaldees; leſt they ſhould come and avenge the death of Gedaliah, appointed governor of Judea, ſee Jer. xli. 17. and xliii. 3.

℣. 27—30. And it came to paſs in the 37th year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, &c.] Who muſt then be 55 years of age: in the 12th month, on the 27th day of the month; in Jer. lii. 31. it is ſaid to be the 25th day; of the reaſon of which difference, ſee the note there: that Evil-merodach king of Babylon; who is ſuppoſed, by ſome [z], to be the ſame with Belſhazzar, and his ſucceſſor Nerigliſſar, the ſame with Darius the Mede in Daniel. From hence, to the end of the chapter, the ſame account is given of the kindneſs of this king to Jehoiachin, as in Jer. lii. 31—34. ſee the notes there. Metaſthenes [a] calls him Amilinus Evil-merodach, and ſays he reigned 30 years, and makes Belſhazzar, or Balt-aſſar, as he calls him, his third ſon.

[z] Vid. Lampe, Eccleſ. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 7. §. 18.

[a] Ut ſupra.

The END of the SECOND VOLUME.

11 FE 59

The Miſtakes obſerved in this SECOND VOLUME correct thus.

PAGE 129. col. 1. line 34. read next clauſe. P. 172. c. 1. l. 12. r. conditions. P. 196. c. 2. l. 67. r. Gibeah. P. 210. c. 1. l. 11. r. city. P. 218. c. 2. l. 43. r. Zin. P. 224. c. 1. l. 6. put a comma after Simeon. P. 240. c. 2. l. 23. r. Shechem. P. 253. c. 2. l. 55. r. kingdoms. P. 256. c. 1. l. 17. r. were now. P. 315. c. 2. l. 34. r. land of Egypt. P. 336. c. 1. l. 38. r. ſay. P. 348. c. 1. l. 67. r. went on. P. 350. c. 1. l. 26. r. four whole months. P. 355. c. 2. l. 1. r. advice. P. 363. c. 1. l. 58. r. women. P. 372. c. 2. l. 22. r. not to be. P. 378. c. 1. l. 15. r. his. L. 45. d. the. P. 385. c. 2. l. 61. r. tabernacle. P. 391. c. 1. l. 40. r. bows. P. 431. c. 2. l. 48. r. expecting. P. 466. c. 2. l. 65. r. after uſed. P. 476. c. 2. l. 47. r. Carmania. P. 489. c. 1. l. 17. r. Laius. P. 500. c. 2. l. 22. r. mean. P. 535. c. 1. l. 10. d. wild. L. 11. r. wild roe. P. 551. c. 1. l. 56. r. to be. P. 561. c. 1. l. 3. r. on enquiry. P. 566. c. 2. l. 21. put the comma at not, after ſinner; and l. 22. a ſemicolon after ſon. P. 567. c. 1. l. 44. d. above. P. 570. c. 1. l. 37. r. Ammon; ſo in p. 571. c. 1. l. 38. 54. P. 662. c. 1. l. 25. r. Jon. ii. 4. P. 669. c. 2. l. 5. r. ſervants. P. 692. c. 1. l. 25. r. off. P. 702. c. 1. l. 41. r. wood. P. 730. c. 2. l. 17. r. to be done. P. 772. c. 1. l. 37. r. Abydenus. P. 775. c. 2. l. 4, 5. r. diſpoſed of them in. P. 780. c. 1. l. 17. r. 8 years old. P. 781. c. 1. l. 67. r. paſſage. P. 783. c. 2. l. 41. r. houſes.