The Fifth Book of MOSES called DEUTERONOMY.

THIS Book is ſometimes called Elleh hadebarim, from the words with which it begins; and ſometimes by the Jews Miſhneh Torah, the repetition of the law; and ſo in the Syriac verſion, with which agrees the Arabic title of it; and when the Greeks, and we after them, call it Deuteronomy, it is not to be underſtood of a ſecond, a new, or another law, but of the law formerly delivered, but now repeated, and alſo more largely explained; to which are likewiſe added, ſeveral particular laws, inſtructions, and directions; all which were neceſſary, on account of the people of Iſrael, who were now a new generation, that either were not born, or not at an age to hear and underſtand the law when given on mount Sinai; the men that heard it there being all dead, excepting a very few; and theſe people were alſo now about to enter into the land of Canaan, which they were to enjoy as long as they kept the law of God, and no longer, and therefore it was proper they ſhould be reminded of it; and beſides, Moſes was now about to leave them, and having an hearty deſire after their welfare, ſpends the little time he had to be with them, by inculcating into them, and impreſſing on them the laws of God, and in opening and explaining them to them, and inforcing them on them, which were to be the rule of their obedience, and on which their civil happineſs depended. And ſometimes the Jews call this book the book of reproofs, becauſe there are in it ſeveral ſharp reproofs of the people of Iſrael for their rebellion and diſobedience; and ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem begin it by calling it the words of reproof which Moſes ſpake, &c. That this book was written by Moſes there can be no doubt, from ch. i. 1. and xxxi. 4, 9, 24. only the eight laſt verſes which give an account of his death, and of his character, were wrote by another hand, equally inſpired by God, as either Eleazar the prieſt as ſome, or Samuel the prophet as others; or as it is the more commonly received opinion of the Jews, Ezra; though it is highly probable they were wrote by Joſhua his ſucceſſor. This book was written and delivered by Moſes, at certain times in the laſt month of his life, and towards the cloſe of the 40th year of the children of Iſrael's coming out of Egypt. And that it is of divine authority need not be queſtioned, when the ſeveral quotations out of it are obſerved, as made by the apoſtles of Chriſt, in Acts iii. 22. Rom. xii. 19. Heb. x. 30. Gal. iii. 10. out of ch. xviii. 15. and xxxii. 35, 36. and xxvii. 26. and by our Lord himſelf, Matt. xviii. 16. from ch. xix. 15. Yea, it is remarkable, that all the paſſages of ſcripture produced by Chriſt to repel the temptations of Satan, are all taken out of this book, Matt. iv. 4, 7, 10. compared with Deut. viii. 3. and vi. 16, 13. and the voice from heaven directing the apoſtles to hearken to him, refers to a prophecy of him in ch. xviii. 15.

CHAP. I.

THE time and place when the ſubject-matter of this book was delivered to the Iſraelites, are obſerved by way of preface, ℣. 1——5. and it begins with reminding them of an order to them to depart from mount Horeb, and paſs on to the land of Canaan, which the Lord had given them, ℣. 6, 7, 8. and with obſerving the very great increaſe of their number, which made it neceſſary for Moſes to appoint perſons under him to be rulers over them, whom he inſtructed in the duty of their office, ℣. 9—18. and he goes on to obſerve, that when they were come to the mountain of the Amorites, they were bid to go up and poſſeſs the land; but inſtead of that, they deſired men might be ſent to ſearch the land firſt, which was granted, ℣. 19—23. and though theſe men upon their return brought of the fruits of the land, and a good report of it, particularly two of them; yet being diſcouraged by the report of the reſt, they murmured, diſtruſted, and were afraid to enter, though encouraged by Moſes, ℣. 24—33. which cauſed the Lord to be angry with them, and upon it threatened them, that they ſhould die in the wilderneſs, and only two of them ſhould ever ſee and enjoy the land, and therefore were bid to turn and take their journey in the wilderneſs, ℣. 34—40. but being convinced of their evil, they propoſed to go up the hill, and enter the land, which they attempted againſt the commandment of the Lord, but being repulſed by the Amorites, they fled with great loſs, to their great grief, and abode in Kadeſh many days, ℣. 41—46.

℣. 1. Theſe be the words which Moſes ſpake unto all Iſrael, &c.] Not what are related in the latter part of the preceding book, but what follow in this; and which were ſpoken by him, not to the whole body of the people gathered together to hear him, which they could not do without a miracle; but to the heads of the people, the repreſentatives of them, who were convened to hear what he had to ſay, in order to communicate it to the people; unleſs we can ſuppoſe that Moſes at different times to ſeveral parties of them delivered the ſame things, until they had all heard them: on this ſide Jordan; before the paſſage of the Iſraelites over it into the land of Canaan; for Moſes never went in thither, and therefore it muſt be the tract which the Greeks call Peræa, and which with reſpect to the Iſraelites when in the land of Canaan is called beyond Jordan, for here now Moſes was; and the children of Iſrael had been here with him a conſiderable time in the wilderneſs, the vaſt wilderneſs of Arabia, which reached hither: in the plain; the plains of Moab, between Beth-Jeſhimoth and Abel-ſhittim, where the Iſraelites had lain encamped for ſome time, and had not as yet removed; ſee Num. xxxiii. 49. over-againſt the Red ſea; the word ſea is not in the text, nor is there any thing in it which anſwers to Red; it ſhould be rendered over againſt Suph, which ſeems to be the name of a place in Moab, not far from the plains of it, and perhaps is the ſame with Supheh in Num. xxi. 14. for from the Red ſea they were at a conſiderable diſtance: between Paran and Tophel, and Laban, and Hazeroth, and Dizahab; theſe are names of places which were the boundaries and limits of the plains of Moab, or lay very near them; for Paran cannot be underſtood of the wilderneſs of Paran, which was too remote, but a city or town of that name. Tophel and Laban we read of no where elſe; a learned man [a] conjectures Tophel is the name of the ſtation where the Iſraelites loathed the manna as light bread, becauſe of the inſipidneſs of it, which he obſerves this word ſignifies; but that ſtation was either Zalmonah, or Punon, or this ſtation muſt be omitted in the account of their journies, and beſides was too remote. Jarchi helps this conjecture a little, who puts Tophel and Laban together, and thinks they ſignify their murmuring becauſe of the manna, which was white, as Laban ſignifies; but the above writer takes Laban to be a diſtinct ſtation, the ſame with Libnah, Numb. xxxiii. 20. and Hazeroth to be the ſtation between mount Sinai and Kadeſh, Num. xii. 16. But both ſeem to be too remote from the plains of Moab; and Dizahab he would have to be the ſame with Ezion-geber, Num. xxxiii. 35. which he ſays the Arabs now call Dſahab, or Meenah el Dſahab, that is, the port of Gold; and certain it is that Dizahab has the ſignification of gold, and is by Hillerus [b] rendered ſufficiency of gold, there being large quantities of it here; perhaps either through the riches of the port by trade, or by reaſon of a mine of gold at it, or near it; ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, where there is much gold, and the ſeptuagint verſion golden mines, Catachryſea; and Jerom [c] makes mention of a place of this name, and ſays they are mountains abounding with gold in the wilderneſs, 11 miles from Horeb, where Moſes is ſaid to write Deuteronomy; elſewhere [d] he calls it Dyſmemoab, i. e. the weſt of Moab, near Jordan, over-againſt Jericho.

℣. 2. There are eleven days journey from Horeb by the way of mount Seir to Kadeſh-barnea;] Not that the Iſraelites came thither in 11 days from Horeb, for they ſtaid by the way at Kibroth-hattaavah, a whole month at leaſt, and ſeven days at Hazeroth; but the ſenſe is, that this was the computed diſtance between the two places; it was what was reckoned a man might walk in 11 days; and if we reckon a day's journey 20 miles, of which ſee the note on Jonah iii. 3. the diſtance muſt be 220 miles. But Dr. Shaw [e] allows but 10 miles for a day's journey, and then it was no more than 110, and indeed a camp can't be thought to move faſter; but not the day's journey of a camp, but of a man ſeems to be intended, who may very well walk 20 miles a day for 11 days running; but it ſeems more ſtrange that another learned traveller [f] ſhould place Kadeſh-barnea at 8 hours, or 20 miles diſtance only from mount Sinai. Moſes computes not the time that elapſed between thoſe two places, including their ſtations, but only the time of travelling; and yet Jarchi ſays, though it was 11 days journey according to common computation, the Iſraelites performed it in three days; for he obſerves that they ſet out from Horeb on the 20th of Ijar, and on the 29th of Sivan the ſpies were ſent out from Kadeſh-barnea; and if you take from hence the whole month they were at one place, and the ſeven days at another, there will be but three days left for them to travel in. And he adds, that the ſhekinah, or divine majeſty, puſhed them forward, to haſten their going into the land; but they corrupting themſelves, he turned them about mount Seir 40 years. It is not eaſy to ſay for what reaſon theſe words are expreſſed, unleſs it be to ſhew in how ſhort a time the Iſraelites might have been in the land of Canaan, in a few day's journey from Horeb, had it not been for their murmurings and unbelief, for which they were turned into the wilderneſs again, and travelled about for the ſpace of 38 years afterwards. Aben Ezra is of opinion, that the 11 days, for the word journey is not in the text, are to be connected with the preceding words; and that the ſenſe is, that Moſes ſpake theſe words in the above places, in the 11 days they went from Horeb to Kadeſh.

℣. 3. And it came to paſs in the 40th year, &c.] That is, of the coming of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt: in the 11th month; the month Shebet, as the Targum of Jonathan, which anſwers to part of January and part of February: in the firſt day of the month, that Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael according to all that the Lord had given him in commandment unto them; repeated to them the ſeveral commandments, which the Lord had delivered to him at different times.

℣. 4. After he had ſlain Sihon the king of the Amorites, which dwelt in Heſhbon, &c.] Either Moſes, ſpeaking of himſelf in the third perſon, or rather the Lord, to whom Moſes aſcribes the victory; of this king, and his palace, and the ſlaughter of him, ſee Num. xxi. 24, 25, 26. and Og the king of Baſhan, which dwelt at Aſhtaroth in Edrei; or near Edrei;

Edrei, for Edrei was not the name of a country, in which Aſhtaroth was, but of a city at ſome diſtance from it, about ſix miles, as Jerom ſays [g]; hither Og came from Aſhtaroth his palace to fight with Iſrael, and where he was ſlain, ſee Num. xxi. 33. Aſhtaroth was an antient city formerly called Aſhtaroth Carnain, and was the ſeat of the Rephaim, or giants, from whom Og ſprung, Gen. xiv. 5. ſee the note there, and Deut. iii. 11. Jerom ſays [h] in his time there were two caſtles in Batanea (or Baſhan) called by this name, 9 miles diſtant from one another, between Adara (the ſame with Edrei) and Abila; and in another place he ſays [i] Carnaim Aſhtaroth is now a large village in a corner of Batanea, and is called Carnea, beyond the plains of Jordan; and it is a tradition that there was the houſe of Job.

℣. 5. On this ſide Jordan, in the land of Moab, &c.] On that ſide of Jordan in which the land of Moab was, and which with reſpect to the land of Canaan was beyond Jordan; this the Vulgate Latin verſion joins to the preceding verſe: began Moſes to declare this law; to explain it, make it clear and manifeſt; namely, the whole ſyſtem and body of laws, which had been before given him, which he willed [k], as ſome render the word, or willingly took upon him to repeat and explain unto them, which their fathers had heard, and had been delivered unto them; but before he entered upon this, he gave them a ſhort hiſtory of events which had befallen them, from the time of their departure from Horeb unto the preſent time, which is contained in this and the two next chapters: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 6. The Lord our God ſpake unto us in Horeb, &c.] The ſame with Sinai, as Aben Ezra obſerves; whilſt the Iſraelites lay encamped near this mountain, the Lord ſpoke unto them: ſaying, ye have dwelt long enough in this mount; or near it; for hither they came on the firſt day of the third month from their departure out of Egypt, and they did not remove from thence until the 20th day of the 2d month in the 2d year, Exod. xix. 1. Numb. x. 11. ſo that they were here a year wanting ten days; in which ſpace of time the law was given them, the tabernacle and all things appertaining to it were made by them, rulers both eccleſiaſtical and civil were appointed over them, and they were numbered and marſhalled in order under four ſtandards, and ſo ready to march; and all this being done, they muſt ſtay no longer, but ſet forward for the land of Canaan. It is well for perſons that they are not to ſtay long under the law, and the terrors of it, but are directed to mount Zion; ſee Heb. xii. 18—24.

℣. 7. Turn you and take your journey, &c.] That is, remove from Horeb, where they were, and proceed on in their journey, in which they had been ſtopped almoſt a year: and go to the mount of the Amorites; where they and the Amalekites dwelt, in the ſouth part of the land of Canaan, and which was the way the ſpies were ſent, Num. xiii. 17, 29. and xiv. 40, 43. and unto all the places nigh thereunto; nigh to the mountain. The Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi interpret them of Moab, Ammon, Gebal, or mount Seir: in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale; ſuch was the country near this mountain, conſiſting of champaign land, hills, and vallies: and in the ſouth; the ſouthern border of the land of Canaan, as what follows deſcribes the other borders of it: and by the ſea-ſide; the Mediterranean ſea, the weſtern border of the land, which Jarchi out of Siphri explains of Aſhkelon, Gaza, and Cæſarea, and ſo the Targum of Jonathan: into the land of the Canaanites; which was then poſſeſſed by them, the boundaries of which to the ſouth and weſt are before given, and next follow thoſe to the north and eaſt: and unto Lebanon; which was on the north of the land of Canaan: unto the great river, the river Euphrates; which was the utmoſt extent of the land eaſtward, and was either promiſed, as it was to Abraham, Gen. xv. 18. or enjoyed, as it was by Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 21.

℣. 8. Behold, I have ſet the land before you, &c.] Deſcribed it to them, and ſet its bounds, as well as had given them a grant of it: go in and poſſeſs the land, which the Lord ſware unto your fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to give unto them and their ſeed after them; and which being thus made ſure unto them, they had nothing more to do than to go and take poſſeſſion of it.

℣. 9. And I ſpake unto you at that time, &c.] About that time; for it was after the rock in Horeb was ſmitten, and before they encamped at mount Sinai, that Jethro gave the advice which Moſes took, and proceeded on it, as here related; ſee Exod. xviii. ſaying, I am not able to bear you myſelf alone; to rule and govern them, judge, and determine matters between them. Jethro ſuggeſted this to Moſes, and he took the hint, and was conſcious to himſelf that it was too much for him, and ſo declared it to the people, though it is not before recorded; ſee Exod. xviii. 18.

℣. 10. The Lord your God hath multiplied you, &c.] Which was the reaſon why he could not bear them, or the government of them was too heavy for him, becauſe they were ſo numerous, and the caſes brought before him to decide were ſo many: and behold you are this day as the ſtars of heaven for multitude; whereby it appeared that the promiſe to Abraham was fulfilled, Gen. xv. 5. they were now 600,000 men fit for war, beſides women and children, and thoſe under age, which muſt make the number of them very large.

℣. 11. The Lord God of your fathers make you a thouſand times ſo many more as ye are, &c.] This prayer he made, or this bleſſing he pronounced on them, to ſhew that he did not envy their increaſe, nor was any ways uneaſy at it, but rejoiced in it, though he gave it as a reaſon of his not being able to govern them alone: and bleſs you, as he hath promiſed you; with all kind of bleſſings, as he had often promiſed their fathers.

℣. 12. How can I myſelf alone bear your cumbrance, and your burden, and your ſtrife?] His meaning is, that he could not hear and try all their cauſes, and determine all their law-ſuits, and decide the ſtrifes and controverſies which aroſe between them; it was too heavy for him, and brought too much trouble and incumbrance upon him.

℣. 13. Take ye wiſe men, and underſtanding, and known among your tribes, &c.] Not only whoſe perſons were well known, but their characters and qualifications, for their probity and integrity, for their wiſdom and prudence in the management of affairs, for their ſkill and knowledge in things divine and human, civil and religious, and for their capacity in judging and determining matters in difference; ſee Exod. xviii. 21. and I will make them rulers; rulers over you; the people were allowed to chuſe their own officers, whom they were to bring to Moſes, and preſent before him, to be inveſted with their office. A like method was taken in the choice and conſtitution of deacons in the Chriſtian church, when the ſecular affairs of it lay too heavy upon the apoſtles, Acts vi. 3.

℣. 14. And ye anſwered me and ſaid, &c.] As the ſpeech of Moſes to the people is not expreſſed before, ſo neither this anſwer of theirs to him: the thing which thou haſt ſpoken is good for us to do; to look out for and preſent perſons to him as before deſcribed; this they ſaw was for their own good and profit, as well as for the eaſe of Moſes, and therefore readily agreed to it.

℣. 15. So I took the chief of your tribes, wiſe men, and known, &c.] The principal perſons among them, that were remarkable and well known for their wiſdom and underſtanding, whom the people preſented to him: and made them heads over you; rulers of them, as follows: captains over thouſands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens; ſee Exod. xviii. 21—25. and officers among your tribes; which Jarchi interprets of ſuch that bind malefactors and ſcourge them, according to the decree of the judges, even the executioners of juſtice; and ſo the Jews commonly underſtand them to be, though ſome have thought they were judges alſo.

℣. 16. And I charged your judges at that time, &c.] When they were appointed and conſtituted, even the heads and rulers before ſpoken of; this charge is alſo new, and not recorded before: ſaying, hear the cauſes between your brethren; hear both ſides, and all that each of them have to ſay; not ſuffer one to ſay all he has to ſay, and oblige the other to cut his words ſhort, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it; but give them leave and time to tell their caſe, and give the beſt evidence they can of it: and judge righteouſly; impartially, juſt as the caſe really appears to be, and according to the evidence given: between every man and his brother; between an Iſraelite and an Iſraelite: and the ſtranger that is with him; between an Iſraelite and proſelyte, whether a proſelyte of the gate, or of righteouſneſs; the ſame juſtice was to be done to them, as to an Iſraelite.

℣. 17. Ye ſhall not reſpect perſons in judgment, &c.] Or paſs judgment, and give ſentence according to the outward appearances, circumſtances, and relations of men; as whether they be friends or foes, rich or poor, old or young, men or women, learned or unlearned; truth and juſtice ſhould always take place, without any regard to what perſons are: but you ſhall hear the ſmall as well as the great; perſons in low life, and in mean circumſtances, as well as great and noble perſonages; or little cauſes and of no great moment, as well as thoſe of the utmoſt importance; all muſt be attended to, a cauſe about a prutah or a farthing, as well as one about a hundred pounds, in which Jarchi inſtances, and if that came firſt it was not to be poſtponed: you ſhall not be afraid of the face of man; of the frowns and threatenings of rich men, and of ſuch as are in power and authority; not be awed or intimidated by them from doing juſtice; ſee Job xxxi. 34. for the judgment is God's; judges ſtand in the place of God, are put into their office by him, and act under him and for him, and are accountable to him; and therefore ſhould be careful what judgment they make, or ſentence they paſs, leſt they bring diſcredit to him, and deſtruction on themſelves: and the cauſe that is too hard for you bring it unto me, and I will hear it; which is ſaid for their encouragement, as well as was an inſtruction to them, not to undertake a cauſe too difficult for them; ſee Exod. xviii. 22, 26.

℣. 18. And I commanded you at that time all the things which ye ſhould do;] Delivered to them all the laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, which were then given him at mount Sinai.

℣. 19. And when we departed from Horeb, &c.] As the Lord commanded them to do, when they were obedient: we went through all the great and terrible wilderneſs; the wilderneſs of Paran, called great, it reaching from mount Sinai to Kadeſh-barnea, 11 days journey, as Adrichomius [1] relates; and terrible, being ſo hard and dry, as not to be plowed nor ſown, and preſented to the ſight ſomething terrible and horrible, even the very image of death; to which may be added the fiery ſerpents and ſcorpions it abounded with, ch. viii. 15. which ye ſaw by the way of the mountain of the Amorites; that is, in the way that led to the mountain: as the Lord our God commanded us; to depart from Horeb, and take a tour through the wilderneſs towards the ſaid mountain: and we came to Kadeſh barnea; having ſtayed a month by the way at Kibroth-hattaavah, where they luſted after fleſh, and ſeven days at Hazeroth, where Miriam was ſhut out of the camp for leproſy during that time.

℣. 20. And I ſaid unto you, you are come unto the mountain of the Amorites, &c.] Which was inhabited by them, and was one of the ſeven nations the Iſraelites were to deſtroy, and poſſeſs their land, and which lay on the ſouthern part of the land of Canaan: which the Lord our God doth give unto us; not the mountain only, but the whole country of that people, and even all the land of Canaan.

℣. 21. Behold, the Lord thy God hath ſet the land before thee, &c.] The land of Canaan, on the borders of which they then were; ſee the note on ℣. 8. go up; the mountain, by that way of it which was the way the ſpies went, and up to which ſome of the Iſraelites preſumed to go when forbidden, they not complying with the call of God: and poſſeſs it, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath ſaid unto thee; as in ℣. 8. fear not, neither be diſcouraged; though the people of the land were numerous and ſtrong, and their cities large and walled.

℣. 22. And ye came near unto me every one of you, &c.] Not every individual of them, but the heads of their tribes, that repreſented them; this is not to be underſtood of the preſent generation perſonally, but of their fathers, who all died in the wilderneſs, ſave a very few of them; but they being the ſame people and nation, it is ſo expreſſed: and ſaid, we will ſend men before us; that is, they thought it was proper and prudent ſo to do, and came to Moſes to conſult him about it; for we are not to ſuppoſe that they had determined upon it, whether he approved of it or no: and they ſhall ſearch us out the land; that they might know what ſort of land it was, whether good or bad, fruitful or not, and whether woody or no; ſee Num. xiii. 19, 20. and bring us word again, by what way we muſt go up; or, concerning the way [m] in which we muſt go; which is the beſt way of entering it, moſt eaſy and acceſſible, where the paſſes are moſt open and leaſt dangerous: and into what cities we ſhall come; which it would be the moſt proper to attack and ſubdue firſt.

℣. 23. And the ſaying pleaſed me well, &c.] Taking it to be a rational and prudent ſcheme, not imagining it was the effect of fear and diſtruſt: and I took twelve men of you out of a tribe; whoſe names are given in Numb. xiii. 4—15.

℣. 24. And they turned and went up into the mountain, &c.] As they were ordered and directed by Moſes, Numb. xiii. 17. and came unto the valley of Eſhcol; ſo called from the cluſter of grapes they cut down there, as they returned: and ſearched it out; the whole land, and ſo were capable of giving a particular account of it.

℣. 25. And they took of the fruit of the land in their hands, &c.] Beſides the cluſter of grapes, which was carried between two men on a ſtaff, even pomegranates and figs, Numb. xiii. 23. and brought it down unto us; who lay encamped at the bottom of the mountain: and brought us word again; what ſort of a land it was: and ſaid, it is a good land which the Lord our God doth give us; that is, Caleb and Joſhua, two of the ſpies, ſaid this, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it, and ſo Jarchi; yea, all of them agreed in this, and ſaid at firſt that it was a land flowing with milk and honey, Numb. xiii. 27.

℣. 26. Notwithſtanding, ye would not go up, &c.] And poſſeſs it, as the Lord had bid them, and Moſes encouraged them to do, as well as Joſhua and Caleb, who were two of the ſpies ſent into it: but rebelled againſt the commandment of the Lord your God; diſregarded the word of the Lord, and diſobeyed his command, and thereby bitterly provoked him, which, rebellion againſt him their King and God, might well do.

℣. 27. And ye murmured in your tents, &c.] Not in a private manner; for though the murmurs began there, they having wept all night after the report of the ſpies; yet it became general and public, and they gathered together in a body, and openly expreſſed their murmurs againſt Moſes and Aaron, Numb. xiv. 1, 2. and ſaid, becauſe the Lord hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt; a ſtrange expreſſion indeed! when it was ſuch a plain amazing inſtance of his love to them, as could not but be ſeen by them; being done in ſuch a remarkable and extraordinary manner, by inflicting judgments on their enemies in a miraculous way, giving them favour in their eyes, to lend them their clothes and jewels, and bringing them out with ſuch an high hand, openly and publicly in the ſight of them, where they had been in the moſt wretched ſlavery for many years; yet this is interpreted an hatred of them, and as done with an ill deſign upon them, as follows: to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to deſtroy us; which now under the power of their fears and unbelief, they thought would be quickly their caſe; ſee ch. iv. 37.

℣. 28. Whither ſhall we go up, &c.] What way can we go up into the land? where is there any acceſs for us? the mountain we are come to, and directed to go up, is poſſeſſed by the Amorites, a ſtrong and mighty people, who keep and guard the paſſes, that there is no entrance: our brethren have diſcouraged our hearts; ten of the ſpies; for Joſhua and Caleb encouraged them with very powerful arguments, which had they liſtened to, it would have been well for them: ſaying, the people is greater and taller than we; more in number, larger in bulk of body, and higher in ſtature: the cities are great, and walled up to heaven; an hyperbolical expreſſion; their fears exaggerated the account of the ſpies; they told them they were great, large, and populous, walled, and ſtrongly fortified; which appeared in their frighted imaginations as if their walls were ſo high as to reach up to heaven, ſo that it was impoſſible to ſcale them, or get poſſeſſion of them: and moreover, we have ſeen the ſons of the Anakim there; the giants ſo called from Anak, the ſon of Arba, the father of them; their names are given, Num. xiii. 22, 33. ſee Joſh. xiv. 15. and xv. 13, 14, ℣. 29. Then I ſaid unto you, dread not, neither be afraid of them;] With ſuch like words he had exhorted and encouraged them before the ſpies were ſent, and he ſtill uſes the ſame, or ſtronger terms, notwithſtanding the report that had been made of the gigantic ſtature and walled cities of the Canaanites. This ſpeech of Moſes, which is continued in the two following verſes, is not recorded in Numb. xiv. 5. it is only there ſaid, that Moſes and Aaron fell on their faces, but no account is given of what was ſaid by either of them.

℣. 30. The Lord your God which goeth before you, &c.] In a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night: he ſhall fight for you; wherefore though their enemies were greater and taller than they, yet their God was higher than the higheſt; and cities walled up to heaven would ſignify nothing to him, whoſe throne is in the heavens: according to all that he did for you in Egypt before your eyes; which is obſerved to encourage their faith in God; for he that wrought ſuch wonders in Egypt for them, which their eyes, at leaſt ſome of them, and their fathers however had ſeen, what is it he cannot do?

℣. 31. And in the wilderneſs, &c.] Where he had fed them with manna, brought water out of rocks for them, protected them from every hurtful creature, had fought their battles for them, and given them victory over Amalek, Sihon, and Og: where thou haſt ſeen how the Lord thy God bare thee, as a man doth bear his ſon; in his arms, in his boſom, with great care and tenderneſs: in all the way that ye went, until ye came into this place; ſupplying their wants, ſupporting their perſons, ſubduing their enemies, and preſerving them from every thing hurtful to them; and therefore having God on their ſide, as appeared by ſo many inſtances of his favour to them, they had nothing to dread or fear from the Canaanites, though ever ſo mighty.

℣. 32. Yet in this thing ye did not believe the Lord your God;] That they might go up and poſſeſs the land at once, and that he would fight for them, and ſubdue their enemies under them; or notwithſtanding the favours beſtowed upon them, and becauſe of them, they did not believe in the Lord their God, and which was a great aggravation of their unbelief, and was the cauſe of their not entering into the good land, Heb. iii. 19.

℣. 33. Who went in the way before you, to ſearch you out a place to pitch your tents in, &c.] For when the cloud was taken up they journeyed, and when that reſted, there they pitched their tents; and hereby they were directed to places the moſt convenient for water for them and their flocks, or for ſafety from thoſe that might annoy them: in fire by night, to ſhew you by what way ye ſhould go; which otherwiſe they could not have found in dark nights, in which they ſometimes travelled, and in a wilderneſs where there were no tracks, no beaten path, no common way: and in a cloud by day; to ſhelter them from the ſcorching ſun, where there were no trees nor hedges to ſhade them, only cragged rocks and hills.

℣. 34. And the Lord heard the voice of your words, &c.] Of their murmurings againſt Moſes and Aaron, and of their threatenings to them, Joſhua and Caleb, and of their impious charge of hatred of them to God for bringing them out of Egypt, and of their raſh wiſhes that they had died there or in the wilderneſs, and of their wicked ſcheme and propoſal to make them a captain, and return to Egypt again: and was wroth, and ſware; by his life, himſelf; ſee Numb. xiv. 22, 28. ſaying; as follows.

℣. 35. Surely there ſhall not one of theſe men of this evil generation ſee the good land, &c.] The land of Canaan; not only not one of the ſpies that brought the ill report of that land, but of that body of people that gave credit to it, and murmured upon it: which I ſware to give unto your fathers; Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; ſee ℣. 8.

℣. 36. Save Caleb the Son of Jephunneh, he ſhall ſee it, &c.] Enter into it, and enjoy it, and Joſhua alſo; who was the other ſpy with him, that brought a good report of the land; ſee ℣. 38. and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children; not the whole land of Canaan, but that part of it which he particularly came to and ſearched; and where the giants were, and he ſaw them, and notwithſtanding was not intimidated by them, but encouraged the people to go up and poſſeſs it; and the part he came to particularly, and trod on, was Hebron, Numb. xiii. 22. and which the Targum of Jonathan, Jarchi, and Aben Ezra, interpret of that; and this was what was given to him and his at the diviſion of the land, Joſh. xiv. 13, 14, 15. and xv. 13, 14. becauſe he hath wholly followed the Lord; ſee Numb. xiv. 24.

℣. 37. Alſo the Lord was angry with me for your ſakes, &c.] Not at the ſame time, though as ſome think at the ſame place, near 38 years afterwards, they provoking him to ſpeak unadviſedly with his lips; ſee Numb. xx. 10, 11, 12. Pſ. cvi. 32, 33. ſaying, thou ſhalt not go in thither; into the land of Canaan; and though he greatly importuned it, he could not prevail; ſee ch. iii. 25, 26, 27.

℣. 38. But Joſhua the ſon of Nun which ſtandeth before thee, &c.] His ſervant and miniſter, which this phraſe is expreſſive of: he ſhall go in thither; into the good land, inſtead of Moſes, and as his ſucceſſor, and who was to go before the children of Iſrael, and introduce them into it, as a type of Chriſt, who brings many ſons to glory: encourage him; with the promiſe of the divine preſence with him, and of ſucceſs in ſubduing the Canaanites, and ſettling the people of Iſrael in their land; and ſo we read that Moſes did encourage him, ch. xxxi. 7, 8. for he ſhall cauſe Iſrael to inherit it; go before them as their captain, and lead them into it; fight their battles for them, conquer their enemies, and divide the land by lot for an inheritance unto them; ſo the heavenly inheritance is not by the law of Moſes, and the works of it, but by Joſhua, or Jeſus the ſaviour, by his atchievements, victories, and conqueſts.

℣. 39. Moreover, your little ones, which ye ſaid ſhould be a prey, &c.] To the Amorites, into whoſe hands they expected to be delivered, ℣. 27. ſee Numb. xiv. 3. and your children which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil; not being at years of underſtanding, and which is a common deſcription of children; it is particularly expreſſed in that day, for now they were the very perſons Moſes was directing his ſpeech unto, and relating this hiſtory, it being 38 years ago when this affair was, ſo that now they were grown up to years of diſcretion: they ſhall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they ſhall poſſeſs it; the relation of which now might ſerve greatly to encourage their faith, as well as it would be a fulfilment of the promiſe of the land made unto Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, which was not made of none effect through the unbelief of the Iſraelites, whoſe carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs, ſince their poſterity was to enjoy it, and did.

℣. 40. But as for you, turn ye, &c.] From the mountain of the Amorites, the border of the land of Canaan: and take your journey into the wilderneſs, by the way of the Red-ſea; ſee Numb. xiv. 25. Jarchi ſays this wilderneſs was by the ſide of the Red-ſea, to the ſouth of mount Seir, and divided between the Red-ſea and the mount; ſo that now they drew to the ſide of the ſea, and compaſſed mount Seir, all the ſouth of it, from weſt to eaſt.

℣. 41. Then ye anſwered, and ſaid unto me, &c.] Not being willing to go into the wilderneſs again, though they wiſhed they had died in it; nor to go the way of the Red ſea, which was their way back again to Egypt, though they had been for appointing a captain, and returning thither; but now they repented of what they had ſaid and done: we have ſinned againſt the Lord; by murmuring againſt his ſervants, and diſobeying his commands: we will go up and fight according to all that the Lord our God hath commanded us; which is more than they were bid to do; they were only ordered to go up and poſſeſs the land, and it was promiſed them the Lord would fight for them: and when ye had girded on every man his weapon; his ſword upon his thigh; a large number of them, for all of them were not ſo diſpoſed, though many were: Ye were ready to go up unto the hill; though before backward enough, when they were bid to do it. De Dieu from the uſe of the word [a] in the Arabic language, renders it, ye reckoned it eaſy to go up unto the hill; before it was accounted very difficult, by reaſon the paſſes were kept and guarded by the Amorites; but now there was no difficulty, when they were bid to go another way, but were ready at once to go up, which comes to the ſame ſenſe; he further obſerves, that the word in another conjugation in the ſame language, ſignifies to make light of, or deſpiſe [b], and ſo may be rendered, and ye deſpiſed; that is, rejected and deſpiſed the order given them to go into the wilderneſs by the way of the Red-ſea in the preceding verſe, by their attempting to go up the hill; though the word ſo taken will bear another ſenſe, agreeable to the firſt, that they now made a light matter of it, as if it was nothing, and there was no difficulty in it to go up the hill, which before was too hard and heavy for them.

℣. 42. And the Lord ſaid unto me, &c.] When the people had armed themſelves, and were in motion, or ready to ſet forward to aſcend the hill: ſay unto them, go not up, neither fight; neither go up the hill, and if they did contrary to this order, and ſhould meet with enemies, not fight them, but retreat: for I am not among you; the ark of the covenant, the ſymbol of his preſence, was then among them, but it did not go with them, it continued in the camp, Numb. xiv. 44. nor did the Lord exert his power, or ſhew himſelf preſent with them, or to be on their ſide, but left them to themſelves, and to their enemies: leſt ye be ſmitten before your your enemies; God not being with them to fight for them, protect and defend them, and give them victory.

℣. 43. So I spake unto you, &c.] The words, the orders he had received from the Lord to deliver to them: and ye would not hear; so as to obey them, and act according to them: but rebelled against the commandment of the Lord; as before, by not going up when he would have had them gone, and now by attempting it when he forbid them: and went presumptuously up into the hill; that is, of themselves, in their own strength, disregarding the commandment of God, and what they were threatened with; this they endeavoured to do, for they were not able to effect it; the Amorites perceiving them to make up the hill, came pouring down upon them in great numbers, and stopped them, and obliged them to retreat; see Numb. xiv. 45.

℣. 44. And the Amorites which dwelt in the mountain, &c.] Elsewhere called Canaanites, being one, and a principal one of the seven nations of Canaan, and who were joined and assisted in the attack by the Amalekites, Numb. xiv. 45. came out against you, and chased you, as bees do; which being disturbed in their hives come out in great numbers, and with great fury and ardour, (for though a small creature it has a great deal of spirit;) and pursue the aggressor, and leave him not till they have stung him, though thereby they lose their stings, and quickly their lives, at least their usefulness; so these Amorites, being irritated at the approach of the Israelites on their borders, came out in great numbers and with great wrath, and fell upon them and smote them, and pursued them a long way, as is after expressed, though these in the issue were destroyed themselves. The Syriac version renders it, as bees that are smoked; or irritated by smoke; which is a method that has been used, and was anciently, to dispossess them of their hives, and get their honey, as Bochart [p] from various writers has shewn, as from Virgil [q], Ovid [r], and others; and when they are too much smoked become exceeding angry, as Aristotle [s] and Pliny [t] observe; and which same writers take notice of the strength and force of their stings, as that they will kill with them the largest animals, even horses have been killed by them; and though such small feeble creatures, are not afraid to attack men and beasts; yea, sometimes people have been obliged to quit their habitations and have been driven out of their country by them, of which Ælianus [u] gives an instance; all which shews the aptness and propriety of this simile; see Ps. cxviii. 12. and destroyed you in Seir, even unto Hormah; pursued them as far as mount Seir, even to another place on the borders of Edom, which was called Hormah, either from the destruction now or afterwards made here; see the note on Numb. xiv. 45. though some take it not to be the proper name of a place, but an appellative, and render it, even unto destruction; so the Jerusalem Targum; that is, destroyed them with an utter destruction.

℣. 45. And ye returned and wept before the Lord, &c.] Those that remained when the Amorites left pursuing them, returned to the camp at Kadesh, where Moses and the Levites were, and the rest of the people; and here they wept at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and hence said to be before the Lord; they wept because of the slaughter that had been made among them, and because of their sin in going contrary to the will of God, and because they were ordered into the wilderness; and very probably they cried and prayed unto the Lord, that they might not be turned back, but that he would go with them, and bring them now into the promised land: but the Lord would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear unto you; was inexorable, and would not repeal the order to go into the wilderness again, where he had sworn in his wrath their carcases should fall; the sentence was irrevocable.

℣. 46. So ye abode in Kadesh many days, &c.] Yea, some years as some think: according to the days that ye abode there; that is, according to Jarchi, as they did in the rest of the journeys or stations; so that as they were 38 years in all at several places, they were 19 years in Kadesh; the same is affirmed in the Jewish chronology [w]; Maimonides says [x] they were 18 years in one place, and it is very probable he means this; but Aben Ezra interprets it otherwise, and takes the sense to be, that they abode as many days here after their return as they did whilst the land was searching, which were 40 days, Numb. xiii. 25. but without fixing any determinate time, the meaning may only be, that as they had been many days here before this disaster, so they continued many days after in the same place, before they marched onward into the wilderness again.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter Moses goes on with his account of the affairs of the people of Israel, and what befel them, how they turned into the wilderness again; but passes over in silence their travels there, till they came to mount Seir, where having been some time they were bid to depart, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and were directed not to meddle with the Edomites, or take any thing from them, but pay them for what they should have of them, since they lacked not, ℣. 4—8. nor to distress the Moabites, of whose country as formerly inhabited, and also of Edom, some account is given, ℣. 9—12. when they were bid to go over the brook Zered, to which from their coming from Kadesh-barnea was the space of 38 years, in which time the former generation was consumed, ℣. 13—16. and now passing along the borders of Moab, they were ordered not to meddle with nor distress the children of Ammon, of whose land also, and the former inhabitants of it, an account is given, ℣. 17—23. then passing over the river Arnon, they are bid to fight with Sihon king of the Amorites, and possess his land, ℣. 24, 25. to whom they sent messengers, desiring leave to pass through his land, and to furnish them with provisions for their money, as the Edomites and Moabites had done, ℣. 26—29. but he refusing, this gave them an opportunity to attack him, in which they succeeded, slew him and his people, and took possession of his country, ℣. 30—37.

℣. 1.

℣. 1. Then we turned, &c.] From Kadeſh, where they had been many days, and ſo alſo their backs on the land of Canaan, on the borders of which they had been: and took our journey into the wilderneſs, by the way of the Red-ſea, as the Lord ſpake unto me; ch. i. 40. and we compaſſed mount Seir many days; many think by mount Seir is meant the whole mountainous country of Edom, about which they travelled to and fro in the wilderneſs that lay near it for the ſpace of 38 years, which they ſuppoſe are meant by many days; but I rather think they came to this mount towards the cloſe of the 38 years, before they came to Kadeſh, from whence they ſent meſſengers to Edom, which they went round about for ſeveral days.

℣. 2. And the Lord ſpake unto me, &c.] Whilſt about mount Seir: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 3. Ye have compaſſed this mountain long enough, &c.] It was time to be gone from thence, as from Horeb, ch. i. 6. turn you northward; from the ſouthern border of Edom towards the land of Canaan, which lay north. It was from Ezion-geber in the land of Edom, from whence the Iſraelites came to Kadeſh, where they ſent meſſengers to the king of Edom, to deſire a paſſage through his land; ſee Numb. xxxiii. 36. and xx. 14.

℣. 4. And command thou the people, &c.] Give them a ſtrict charge: ſaying, ye are to paſs through the coaſt of your brethren the children of Eſau; not through the midſt of their country, for that the king of Edom would not admit of, but by or on the border of it: and they ſhall be afraid of you; leſt ſuch a numerous body of people as Iſrael were ſhould ſeize upon their country, and diſpoſſeſs them of it, they having been ſo long wanderers in a wilderneſs near them: take ye good heed unto yourſelves therefore; that they did not take any advantage of their fears, and fall upon them, and do them miſchief, or that they did not provoke them to battle and overcome them.

℣. 5. Meddle not with them, &c.] Contend not with them in battle, nor provoke them to it: for I will not give you of their land, no not ſo much as a foot-breadth; or as the ſole of a man's foot can tread on, ſignifying that they ſhould not have the leaſt part of it, not any at all. Jarchi makes mention of an expoſition of theirs, that he would give them nothing of it until ſhould come the day of the treading of the ſole of the foot in the mount of olives, Zech. xiv. 4. meaning not till the days of the Meſſiah, when Edom ſhould be a poſſeſſion of Iſrael; ſee Numb. xxiv. 18. Obad. ver. 19. becauſe I have given mount Seir unto Eſau for a poſſeſſion; and therefore not to be taken away from them; they have a right of inheritance of it; ſee Gen. xxxvi. 8. Joſh. xxiv. 4.

℣. 6. Ye ſhall buy meat of them for money that ye may eat, &c.] That is, if they would, as Aben Ezra obſerves; for though they had manna daily, yet if they would they might buy other food when they had an opportunity, as they would now have of Edom; but then they were not to take it by force or ſtealth, but pay for it, which they were able to do. The ſame writer obſerves, that ſome read the words with an interrogation, ſhall ye buy meat? no, there is no need of it; for the Lord had bleſſed them with a ſufficiency of it: and ye ſhall alſo buy water of them for money, that ye may drink; which was uſual in thoſe hot countries; ſee the note on Numb. xx. 19. or dig water [y]; that is, pay for digging of wells for water, or buy water out of wells dug in the land of Edom. Jarchi ſays in maritime places they expreſs buying by this word, and ſo it is uſed in the Arabic language; ſee the note on Hoſ iii. 2.

℣. 7. For the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee in all the works of thine hands, &c.] Had increaſed their cattle and ſubſtance, even though in a wilderneſs: he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderneſs; every ſtep they took, and he owned them and proſpered them in all things in which they were concerned: theſe forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee; not only to protect and defend them, but to provide all things neceſſary for them. This number of years was not fully completed, but the round number is given inſtead of the broken one: thou haſt lacked nothing; and ſince they had wherewith to pay for their food and drink, they are directed to do it, and not take any thing from the Edomites in an unjuſt way; nor make themſelves look poor when they were rich, as Jarchi ſays.

℣. 8. And when we paſſed by from our brethren the children of Eſau, which dwelt in Seir, &c.] Along their coaſts, by the borders of their country: through the way of the plain; the wilderneſs of Zin, where Kadeſh was: from Elath and Ezion-geber; two ports on the ſhore of the Red-ſea in the land of Edom; it was from the latter they came to Kadeſh; ſee Numb. xxxiii. 35, 36. Elath was ten miles from Petra, the metropolis of Edom, to the eaſt of it, as Jerom ſays [z]; it is by Joſephus [a] called Ælana, and by the Septuagint here Ailon; from whence the Elanitic bay has its name; he ſpeaks of it as not far from Ezion-geber, which he ſays was then called Berenice: we turned and paſſed by the way of the wilderneſs of Moab; the wilderneſs which is before Moab, towards the ſun-riſing or the eaſt, Numb. xxi. 11.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſaid unto me, &c.] When upon the borders of Moab: diſtreſs not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; beſiege not any of their cities, nor draw them into a battle, or provoke them to fight: for I will not give thee of their land for a poſſeſſion; at leaſt not as yet, the meaſure of their ſins not being fully up, and the time of their puniſhment not come; otherwiſe in David's time they were ſubdued, and became tributaries to him, and the Edomites alſo, 2 Sam. viii. 2, 14. becauſe I have given Ar unto the children of Lot for a poſſeſſion; ſo the Moabites were, they ſprung from Moab, a ſon of Lot by his firſt-born daughter, Gen. xix. 37. Ar was the metropolis of Moab, called Ar of Moab, Iſ. xv. 1. and is here put for the whole country of Moab; ſo Aben Ezra interprets it of Moab. Jarchi ſays it is the name of the province; in the ſeptuagint verſion it is called Aroer.

℣. 10. The Emim dwelt there in time paſt, &c.] We read of them as early as the times of Chedorlaomer, Gen. xiv. 5. when their dwelling was in Kirjathaim, a city which Sihon king of the Amorites took from the Moabites, and which being taken from him was with others given to the tribe of Reuben, Numb. xxxii. 37. Theſe are by ſome thought to be the ſame with the Zemim which Anah found and met with in the wilderneſs, and defeated, which we render mules, Gen. xxxvi. 24. They had their name from the fear and terror they put men into becauſe of their gigantic ſtature and great ſtrength, as follows; it is probable they were the deſcendants of Ham: a people great and many, and tall as the Anakim; who were very numerous, of a very very bulky ſize of body, and of high ſtature, like the giants the ſpies had ſeen at Hebron, the ſons of Anak, a noted giant there, Numb. xiii. 22, 33.

℣. 11. Which all were accounted giants as the Anakim, &c] Becauſe of their bulky ſize and tall ſtature; or, "the Rephaim were they accounted, "even they as the Anakim;" they were reckoned Rephaim, a name for giants in early times, even as the Anakim were; ſee Gen. xiv. 5. but the Moabites called them Emim; to diſtinguiſh them from the Rephaim; ſo that it ſeems this name of Emim was not originally their name, but they are called ſo by a prolepſis, or anticipation, in Gen. xiv. 5. ſince they had it from the Moabites, a people of a later date.

℣. 12. The Horim alſo dwelt in Seir before time, &c.] Which is the name of a mount, and ſo of the country from it; ſo called from Seir the Horite, who dwelt in it before it was poſſeſſed by Eſau and his ſons; but who the Horim or Horites were, from whence they had their name, is difficult to ſay; they were as early as the times of Chedorlaomer, Gen. xiv. 6. They ſeem to be ſo called from their dwelling in holes and caves in rocks, which the ſouthern part of Edom or Idumea was full of, and to be the ſame the Greeks call Troglodytæ: but the children of Eſau ſucceeded them; Eſau and his ſons marrying among them, made way for getting the country into their poſſeſſion, as appears from Gen. xxxvi. 2, 8. 12. 20, 25. and in which they afterwards ſettled themſelves by the dint of ſword, ſince it follows: when they had deſtroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their ſtead; even in Seir where they had dwelt, afterwards called Edom, from one of the names of Eſau, Gen. xxxvi. 8, 9, 20. as Iſrael did in the land of his poſſeſſion, which the Lord gave unto them; becauſe this is ſaid before the Canaanites were drove out of their land, and it was poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites, ſome think this was written by Ezra, or ſome other hand; but there is no need to ſuppoſe that; Moſes, by a ſpirit of prophecy, and in faith of the promiſes and prophecies of God relating to this affair, which were juſt now about to be fulfilled, might write this; beſides, it may refer to what was already done to the kingdoms of Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites; which had been taken from them, and given to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; and the above inſtances as well as this may be obſerved, to encourage the people of Iſrael that they ſhould ſucceed in diſpoſſeſſing the Canaanites, and ſettling in their land, in like manner as diſpoſſeſſions of this kind had already been made.

℣. 13. Now riſe up, ſaid I, and get you over the brook Zered, &c.] It is called the valley of Zered, Numb. xxi. 12. the word uſed ſignifying both a valley and a brook; and it is very probable there were both a valley and a brook of the ſame name; it muſt be near Dibon Gad, ſince in one place it is ſaid the Iſraelites came from Ijim and pitched in Zered; and in another place that they came from thence, and pitched in Dibon Gad, Numb. xxi. 11, 12. and xxxiii. 45. and we went over the brook Zered; which was fordable, or perhaps at this time dried up.

℣. 14. And the ſpace in which we came from Kadeſh-barnea, &c.] The ſpace of time; or, the days[b]; the number of them: until we were come over the brook Zered was thirty and eight years; that is, from the time that the ſpies were ſent and ſearched the land, and brought a report of it; for they were ſent from Kadeſh-barnea, Numb. xxxii. 8. unto the paſſage of the Iſraelites over Zered were 38 years; ſo long they had been travelling in the wilderneſs, after they were come to the borders of the land: until all the generation of the men of war were weſted out from among the hoſt; all that were twenty years old and upwards, and fit to go out to war upon occaſion, when the people were firſt numbered after they came out of Egypt; all that generation was now conſumed within the above ſpace of time, excepting two, Caleb and Joſhua: as the Lord ſware unto them; Numb. xiv. 21, 23, 30.

℣. 15. For indeed the hand of the Lord was againſt them, &c.] His power was exerted in a way of wrath and vengeance on them, for their murmurings at the report of the ſpies; and therefore it is no wonder they were conſumed, for ſtrong is his hand, and high is his right hand; and when lifted up it falls heavy, and there is no ſtanding up under it, or againſt it; it ſmote them with one diſeaſe or another, or brought one judgment or another upon them; as the ſword of Amalek, by which many were cut off, and the plague at Shittim in the plains of Moab, in which died 24000; beſides the deſtruction of Korah and his company, which was quickly after the affair of the ſpies, and the plague at that time, of which died 14700; and thus by one ſtroke after another, he went on to deſtroy them from among the hoſt until they were conſumed, even all of them but two, as follows.

℣. 16. So it came to paſs when all the men of war were conſumed, &c.] By waſting diſeaſes and judgments of one kind or another: and dead from among the people; the riſing and ſurviving generation.

℣. 17. That the Lord ſpake unto me, &c.] At the brook Zered, having paſſed that, or at Dibon Gad, which was their next ſtation: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 18. Thou art to paſs over through Ar, &c.] That is, over the river Arnon, by the city Ar of Moab, which was ſituated by it; ſee ℣. 9. and ſo Moſes and the people of Iſrael were to paſs along by that, and by the coaſt of Moab; for they were not admitted to enter the land and paſs through it; only to travel on the borders of it, and that they were to begin to do this day; the day the Lord ſpake to Moſes.

℣. 19. And when thou comeſt nigh over-againſt the children of Ammon, &c.] Who dwelt near the Moabites, and were brethren, both deſcending from Lot, Gen. xix. 37, 38. diſtreſs thou not, nor meddle with them; lay no ſiege to any of their cities, nor provoke them to war, nor engage in battle with them: for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon any poſſeſſion; that is, any part of it which was now in their hands; otherwiſe half their land was given to the tribe of Gad; but then that was what Sihon king of the Amorites had taken from them, and which Iſrael retook from him, and ſo poſſeſſed it not as the land of the Ammonites, but of the Amorites, one of the ſeven nations, whoſe land they were to inherit; ſee Joſh. xiii. 25. Judg. xi. 13—23. becauſe I have given it unto the children of Lot for a poſſeſſion; the Ammonites were the children of Lot by his ſecond daughter, Gen. xix. 38.

℣. 20. That alſo was accounted a land of giants, &c.] Ammon was ſo reckoned as well as Moab, ℣. 10, 11. giants dwelt therein in old time; the Rephaim dwelt there, as they did alſo in Aſhteroth Karnaim, Gen. xiv. 5. and the Ammonites call them Zamzummim;

[b] והימים et dies, Montanus; dies autem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

Zamzummim ; they are thought to be the ſame with the Zuzim, in Gen. xiv. 5. who had their name, as Hillerus [c] thinks, from Mezuzah, a door-poſt, from their tall ſtature, being as high as one ; and, for a like reaſon Saph the giant might have his name, 2 Sam. xxi. 18. The word Zamzummim, according to him [d], ſignifies contrivers of evil and terrible things ; they were inventors of wickedneſs, crafty and ſubtle in forming wicked and miſchievous deſigns, which ſtruck terror into people, and made them formidable to them.

℣. 21. A people great and many, and tall as the Anakim, &c.] As the Emim were, ℣. 10. but the Lord deſtroyed them before them ; deſtroyed the Zamzummim before the children of Ammon ; or otherwiſe they would have been an overmatch for them, being ſo numerous, and of ſuch a gigantic ſtature : and they ſucceeded them, and dwelt in their ſtead ; and in this way, and by theſe means, he gave them their land for a poſſeſſion, ℣. 19.

℣. 22. As he did to the children of Eſau which dwelt in Seir, &c.] He did the like things for them as he did for the Ammonites : when he deſtroyed the Horim from before them ; which is repeated from ℣. 12. other inſtances of the like kind being here recited : and they ſucceeded them, and dwelt in their ſtead even unto this day ; ſee the note on ℣. 12.

℣. 23. And the Avim which dwelt in Hazerim, even unto Azzah, &c.] The ſame with the Avites, who appear to have inhabited ſome part of the land of the Philiſtines, in which Azzah or Gaza was, which was one of the five lordſhips of the Philiſtines, Joſh. xiii. 3. The word Hazerim ſignifies courts, and a learned man [e] interprets it of tents or huts placed in a ſquare or circular form, ſo as to have an area in the middle ; and in ſuch the Avim may be ſuppoſed to dwell, while in Paleſtine as far as Gaza : the Caphtorim which came forth out of Caphtor deſtroyed them ; according to the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, theſe were Cappadocians that came out of Cappadocia ; but it ſeems manifeſt that they were originally of Egypt, ſee Gen. x. 14. and Bochart [f] thinks they went from thence into that part of Cappadocia that was near Colchis ; but things not anſwering their expectations, they returned, and drove out the Avim from their country : and dwelt in their ſtead ; ſee the notes on Jer. xlvii. 4. and on Amos ix. 7. Though it ſeems as if they were not utterly deſtroyed, but ſome eſcaped into Aſſyria, and ſettled there, where was a place called Ava from them ; and from whence they were ſent by the king of Aſſyria to repeople the cities of Samaria, after the captivity of the ten tribes ; ſee 2 Kings xvii. 24. Now theſe ſeveral inſtances are obſerved to encourage the children of Iſrael to hope and believe that they ſhould be able to diſpoſſeſs the Canaanites, and inherit their land ; ſuch diſpoſſeſſions having been very frequent, when it was the will of God they ſhould take place.

℣. 24. Riſe ye up, take your journey, and paſs over the river Arnon, &c.] Which was on the border of Moab, and divided between Moab and the Amorites, Numb. xxi. 13. behold, I have given into thy hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heſhbon, and his land ; that is, he had determined to give it to the Iſraelites, for as yet it was not actually given ; of this king, and the place he was king of, ſee the notes on Numb. xxi. 21, 26. begin to poſſeſs it, and contend with him in battle ; provoke him to war, fight with him, take his land from him, and enter upon the poſſeſſion of it, hereby aſſuring of victory.

℣. 25. This day will I begin to put the dread of thee, &c.] And ſo fulfil the prophecies delivered by Moſes in Exod. xv. 14, 15, 16. and the fear of thee upon the nations that are under the whole heaven ; not only the neighbouring nations, the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, Philiſtines, and Canaanites, but nations more remote even throughout the whole world : who ſhall report of thee ; of what was done for Iſrael in Egypt, and at the Red-ſea, and in the wilderneſs ; and particularly of the delivery of Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, and of their kingdoms into their hands : and ſhall tremble, and be in anguiſh becauſe of thee ; leſt they ſhould proceed on, and make conqueſts of their lands alſo ; ſee Joſh. ii. 9. 10, 11.

℣. 26. And I ſent meſſengers out of the wilderneſs of Kedemoth, &c.] A city in the tribe of Reuben, and given by them to the Levites in after times, having been taken from the Amorites with others ; near this lay a wilderneſs, which took its name from it, and ſeems to be the ſame with Jeſhimon, Numb. xxi. 20, 21. ſee Joſh. xiii. 18. and xxi. 37. Aben Ezra takes it to be the wilderneſs of Matthanah, which according to Jerom [g] was ſituated on Arnon, 12 miles to the eaſt of Medaba ; ſee Numb. xxi. 18, 30. from hence meſſengers were ſent by Moſes, unto Sihon king of Heſhbon, with words of peace ; in a peaceable and reſpectful manner, deſiring to be at peace and in friendſhip with him, and a continuance of it, which was done to leave him inexcuſable ; as afterwards a like method was ordered to be taken, when they came to any city to proclaim peace, and if an anſwer of peace was given, no hoſtilities were to be committed, ch. xx. 10. ſaying ; as follows.

℣. 27. Let me paſs through thy land, &c.] See the note on Numb. xxi. 22. I will go along by the highway ; the king's highway, as in the place referred to, the public road : I will neither turn to the right hand, nor to the left ; to go into his fields and vineyards, and gather the fruit, or tread down the corn and vines, or do any manner of miſchief to them ; ſee the above place.

℣. 28. Thou ſhalt ſell me meat for money that I may eat, &c.] If they thought fit to have proviſion of them, they deſired no other but to pay for it : and give me water for money, that I may drink ; ſee ℣. 6. only I will paſs thorow on my feet ; for they were all footmen, Numb. xi. 21. of the phraſe, ſee the note on Numb. xx. 19.

℣. 29. As the children of Eſau which dwell in Seir, and the Moabites which dwell in Ar did unto me, &c.] Which reſpects, as Jarchi obſerves, not the affair of paſſing through their land requeſted, for neither of them granted that, but buying food and drink ; for though the Edomites at firſt ſeem not to have granted that, yet afterwards they did. The mountain of Seir, and the city Ar, are put for the whole countries of Edom and Moab : until I ſhall paſs over Jordan, into the land which the Lord our God giveth us ; this is obſerved to remove any ſuſpicion or jealouſy of their ſeizing his country, and taking poſſeſſion of it, and dwelling in it ; ſince they only propoſed to paſs through it on their journey to the land of Canaan, which lay on the other ſide Jordan, over which they muſt paſs in order to poſſeſs it, which they had a right unto by the gift of God.

℣. 30. But Sihon king of Heſhbon would not let us us pass by him, &c.] Or through his country, as was desired: for the Lord God hardened his spirit, and made his heart obstinate; as he did Pharaoh's, for whom he will he hardens; so that he would not listen to the proposals made to him, nor grant the requests asked of him, but with pride and haughtiness of spirit despised and disdained Israel: that he might deliver him into thine hand; that so an opportunity might offer of fighting with him, and taking his country from him; whereas had he been peaceable and flexible, he had continued in the enjoyment of his land, and Israel would not have had that advantage against him; but God, who has the hearts of kings, and of all men in his hands, so wrought upon him that he should take the steps he did, which made way for the delivery of him and his country into the hands of the Israelites: as appeareth this day: for when Moses made this speech, the kingdom of Sihon was possessed by the Israelites, Numb. xxi. 24, 25.

℣. 31. And the Lord said unto me, &c.] After or about the time when the messengers were sent to Sihon, perhaps when they had returned and had brought his answer: behold I have begun to give Sihon and his land before thee; by hardening his heart, which was a sure token of his ruin, and a leading step to the delivery of him into the hands of Israel: begin to possess, that thou mayest inherit his land; move towards it and enter into it, not fearing any opposition made by him.

℣. 32. Then Sihon came out against us, &c.] Perceiving they were upon their march towards his land or into it, he gathered all his people and went out of Heshbon their capital city, where he resided: he and all his people, to fight at Jahaz; a city which he had taken from the king of Moab, and which in after times, after the captivity of the ten tribes, came into their hands again, Is. xv. 4. Jer. xlviii. 21. See the note on Numb. xxi. 23.

℣. 33. And the Lord our God delivered him before us, &c.] With their lands: and we smote him, and his sons, and all his people; with the edge of the sword; slew them all: the Cetib or textual reading is his son, though the Keri or margin is his sons, which we follow. So Jarchi observes it is written his son, because he had a son mighty as himself, he says.

℣. 34. And we took all his cities at that time, &c.] As Heshbon, and others mentioned in Numb. xxi. 25, 30, 32. and in xxxii. 3, 34—38. and utterly destroyed the men, and the women, and the little ones of every city, we left none to remain; for the Amorites were one of the seven nations who were devoted to destruction, the measure of whose iniquity was now full, and therefore vengeance was taken.

℣. 35. Only the cattle we took for a prey unto ourselves, &c.] These they did not destroy, but preserved alive for their own use and profit, and took them as their own property: and the spoil of the cities which we took; as household-goods, gold, silver, and whatever valuable was found by them; this they took as plunder and shared it among themselves.

℣. 36. From Aroer, which is by the brink of the river Arnon, &c.] Upon the border of Moab, and the principal city of it; see Jer. xlviii. 19: and from the city that is by the river; or even the city that is in the midst of the river, the city Aroer which seems to be meant; see Josh. xii. 2. and xiii. 9. This river is afterwards called the river of Gad, 2 Sam. xxiv. 5. in the midst of it Aroer was, perhaps because it was possessed by the Tribe of Gad: even unto Gilead; mount Gilead and the country adjacent to it, which belonged to Og king of Bashan: there was not one city too strong for us; that could hold out against them, when attacked and besieged by them, but presently surrendered: the Lord our God delivered all unto us; Moses ascribes all the victories and success they had unto the Lord, not to their own might and power, but to the power of God with them, and his blessing on them.

℣. 37. Only unto the land of the children of Ammon thou camest not, &c.] Which was then in their possession; otherwise what Sihon had took away from them, that the children of Israel came into and enjoyed, as before observed, ℣. 19. nor unto any place of the river Jabbok; any town or city situated on this river, which was the border of the children of Ammon, chap. iii. 16. see the note on Gen. xxxii. 22. nor unto the cities in the mountains; much less did they penetrate into the innermost parts of their country, the mountainous part thereof, and the cities there: nor unto whatsoever the Lord our God forbad us; whether in Edom, Moab or Ammon, particularly the latter, of which he is more especially and peculiarly speaking.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the account is carried on of the conquest of the Amorites by Israel, of Og king of Bashan and his kingdom, ℣. 1—11. and of the distribution of their country to the tribes of Reuben and Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh, ℣. 12—17. and then the command to the said tribes is observed, to go out armed before their brethren, and assist them in the conquest of the land of Canaan, and then return to their possessions, ℣. 18, 19, 20. and also that to Joshua not to fear, but to do to the Canaanitish kings and kingdoms what he had seen done to the two kings of the Amorites, ℣. 21, 22. After which Moses relates the request he made, to go over Jordan and see the good land, which was denied him, only he is bidden to look from the top of an hill to see it, ℣. 23—27. And the chapter is closed with the charge he was to give Joshua, ℣. 28. which was received in the valley where they abode, ℣. 29.

℣. 1. Then we turned and went up the way to Bashan, &c.] Which seems to have been higher than the kingdom of Sihon: this was a fine country for pasturage, for the breeding of cattle larger and lesser, and was famous for its oaks: it is the same country which in Josephus and others goes by the name of Batanea: and Og the king of Bashan came out against us; got his forces together, and came out from Ashteroth, the royal city where he dwelt: he and all his people, to battle at Edrei; another city in his kingdom, about six miles from the former; see chap. i. 4. and Numb. xxi. 33.

℣. 2. And the Lord said unto me, &c.] When Og was marching with all his forces against Israel: fear him not &c; see the Note on Numb. xxi. 34.

℣. 3. So the Lord our God delivered into our hands Og also the king of Bashan, and all his people, &c.] As well as Sihon king of Heshbon: and we smote him, till none was left to him remaining; or left alive, all all were slain with the sword; see the note on Numb. xxi. 35.

℣. 4. And we took all his cities at that time, &c.] Not only Edrei where the battle was fought, and Ashteroth his capital city, but all the rest in his kingdom: there was not a city which we took not from them; not one stood out, but all surrendered on summons; the number of which follows: threescore cities; which was a large number for so small a country, and shews it to be well inhabited: all the region of Argob; which was a small province of the kingdom of Og in Bashan: Aben Ezra and Jarchi observe, that it was called after a man, i. e. whose name was Argob; the Targum of Onkelos names it Tracona, and the Targum of Jonathan Targona, the same with Trachonitis in Josephus and other authors; see Luke iii. 1. Jerom relates [h] that in his time, about Gerasa, a city of Arabia, 15 miles from it to the west, there was a village which was called Arga, which seems to carry in it some remains of the antient name of this country; and the Samaritan version, in all places where Argob is, calls it Rigobaah; and in the Misnah [i] mention is made of a place called Ragab, beyond Jordan, famous for its being the second place for the best oil.

℣. 5. All these cities were fenced with high walls, gates, and bars, &c.] That is, all the cities in the kingdom of Bashan; and though they were, it hindered not their falling into the hands of the Israelites; and this might serve to encourage them against those fears they were possessed of by the spies, with respect to the cities in the land of Canaan; see Numb. xiii. 28. Deut. i. 28. besides unwalled towns a great many; small towns and villages adjacent to the several cities, as is common.

℣. 6. And we utterly destroyed them, &c.] Not the cities, but the inhabitants of them: as we did to Sihon king of Heshbon; they did not destroy his cities, for they took them and dwelt in them; but the people that lived there, as follows here: utterly destroying the men, women, and children of every city; see ch. ii. 34.

℣. 7. But all the cattle, and the spoil of the cities, &c.] The oxen and sheep, camels and asses; their gold and silver, and the furniture of their houses; their stores of corn, and of other fruits of the earth, even all their substance of whatsoever kind: we took for a prey to ourselves; made them their own property, and used them for their own profit and service, whereby they became greatly enriched.

℣. 8. And we took at that time out of the hands of the two kings of the Amorites, &c.] Sihon king of Heshbon, and Og king of Bashan: the land that was on this side Jordan; where Moses then was, being in the plains of Moab, and was the country beyond Jordan, with respect to the land of Canaan, and when in that: from the river of Arnon unto mount Hermon; Arnon was a river which divided Moab and the Amorites, Numb. xxii. 13. and Hermon was a mountain of Gilead, which ended where Lebanon began, and was the northerly border of this country. It was remarkable for the dew that fell on it; see Ps. cxxxiii. 3. and the note there.

℣. 9. Which Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion, &c.] Which name it has in Ps. xxix. 6. a name the inhabitants of Sidon gave it, but for what reason it is not easy to say; however, that it was well known to Tyre and Sidon, appears from snow in summer time being brought to the former, as will be hereafter observed: and the Amorites call it Shenir; in whose possession it was last. Bochart [k] thinks it had its name from the multitude of wild cats in it, Shunar in the Chaldee tongue being the name of that creature; but Jarchi says Shenir in the Canaanitish language signifies snow; so in the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, it is called the mountain of snow; and the Hebrew who read to Jerom, and taught him, affirmed to him that this mountain hung over Paneas, from whence snow in summer-time was brought to Tyre for pleasure [l], and the same is confirmed by Abulfeda [m]. There is said to be upon the top of it a famous temple, which is used for worship by the heathens, over against Paneas and Lebanon [n]; and it is highly probable, there was one even at this time, when it was possessed by the Amorites, since it is called mount Baal Hermon, Judg. iii. 3. from the worship of Baal, or some other idol upon it, as it should seem. Besides these it had another name, mount Sion, Deut. iv. 48. but to be distinguished from mount Zion near Jerusalem. The names of it in this place are very differently interpreted by Hillerus [o]; though he thinks it had them all on account of the snow on it, which was as a net all over it; for Hermon he observes signifies a net, a drag-net, and Shenir an apron, and Sirion a coat of mail, all from the covering of this mount with snow.

℣. 10. All the cities of the plain, &c.] There was a plain by Medaba, and Heshbon and her cities were in a plain, with some others given to the tribe of Reuben, Josh. xiii. 16, 17. and all Gilead; mount Gilead, and the cities belonging to it, a very fruitful country, half of which fell to the share of the Reubenites, and the rest to the half tribe of Manasseh: and all Bashan; of which Og was king, called Batanea, a very fertile country, as before observed: unto Salcah and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan; which seem to be frontier cities of the latter; see ch. i. 4. and iii. 1. The former Adrichomius [p] says was situated by the city Geshur and mount Hermon, and was the boundary of the country of Bashan to the north; and according to Benjamin of Tudela [q], it was half a day's journey from Gilead; as Edrei seems to be its boundary to the south.

℣. 11. For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of giants, &c.] The meaning seems to be, either that he was the only one that was left of the race of the giants the Ammonites found when they took possession of this country, ch. ii. 20. or that was left when the Amorites took it from the Ammonites; and who having by some means or other ingratiated himself into their affections, because of his stature, strength, and courage, and other qualifications they might discern in him, made him their king: behold, his bedstead was a bedstead of iron; his body being so large and bulky, he might think it most proper and safest for him to have a bedstead made of iron to lie upon, or to prevent noxious insects harbouring in it; nor was it unusual to have bedsteads made of other materials than wood, as of gold, silver, and ivory; see the note on Amos vi. 4. Some learned men [r] have been of opinion, that the beds of Typho in Syria, made mention of by Homer [s], refer to this bedstead of Og: is it not in Rabbah of the children of Ammon? which was the royal city of the Ammonites, in the times of David, 2 Sam. xii. 26. now called Philadelphia, as Jerom says [t]. This bedstead might be either sent thither by Og before the battle at Edrei for safety, or rather might be sold by the Israelites to the inhabitants of Rabbah, who kept it as a great curiosity: nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man; a common cubit, so that it was four yards and a half long, and two yards broad. Onkelos renders it, after the king's cubit; and the king's cubit at Babylon, according to Herodotus [u], was larger by three fingers than the common one; such as the cubit in Ezekiel xl. 5. which was a cubit and an hand's breadth; and this makes the dimensions of the bedstead yet larger. And by this judgment may be made of the talness of Og's stature, though this is not always a sure rule to go by; for Alexander, when in India, ordered his soldiers to make beds of five cubits long, to be left behind them, that they might be thought to be larger men than they were, as Diodorus Siculus [w] and Curtius [x] relate; but there is little reason to believe that Og's bedstead was made with such a view. Maimonides observes [y], that a bed in common is a third part larger than a man; so that Og, according to this way of reckoning, was six cubits high, and his stature doubly larger than a common man's; but less than a third part may well be allowed to a bed, which will make him taller still; the height of Og is reckoned by Wolfius [z] to be $13\frac{1296}{1440}$ feet of Paris measure.

℣. 12. And this land which we possessed at that time, &c.] Or took possession of, having conquered it; for it still remained in their possession: from Aroer which is by the river Arnon; on the borders of Moab, from thence as far as Gilead was the land which was taken from Sihon king of Heshbon, ch. ii. 36. and half mount Gilead, and the cities thereof; which were taken from Og king of Bashan, ℣. 10. gave I unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites; at their request, on certain conditions to be performed by them, afterwards repeated.

℣. 13. And the rest of Gilead, &c.] The other half of the mount, with the cities belonging to it: and all Bashan, being the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half tribe of Manasseh; see Numb. xxxii. 33. all the region of Argob, with all Bashan; the region of Trachonitis, in Bashan; see ℣. 4. which was called the land of giants; or of Rephaim; this Jarchi says is the country of the Rephaim given to Abraham, Gen. xv. 20.

℣. 14. Jair the son of Manasseh took all the country of Argob, &c.] Or Trachonitis; the small towns belonging to Gilead, as in Numb. xxxii. 41. unto the coasts of Geshuri and Maachathi; these were little kingdoms in Syria, on which the country of Argob bordered, and had kings over them in the time of David, and came not into the possession of the Israelites; see Josh. xiii. 13. 2 Sam. iii. 3. and x. 6, 8. and xv. 8. and called them after his own name Bashan-havoth-jair unto this day; see Numb. xxxii. 41.

℣. 15. And I gave Gilead unto Machir;] The son of Manasseh; not to him personally, who cannot be thought to have been living at this time, but to his posterity, to the Machirites; see Numb. xxxii. 40.

℣. 16. And unto the Reubenites and unto the Gadites, &c.] The tribes of Reuben and Gad: I gave from Gilead even unto the river Arnon; see ℣. 12. half the valley and the border; or rather, half the river, the river Arnon; and so it is rendered the middle of the river, in Josh. xii. 2. and so here the middle of the torrent by the Vulgate Latin and Septuagint versions, and by Onkelos: even unto the river Jabbok which is the border of the children of Ammon; beyond which the land given to the tribes of Reuben and Gad reached not; see ch. ii. 37.

℣. 17. The plain also and Jordan, &c.] The plain by Jordan, the plains of Moab on the side of it, together with the river: and the coast thereof; the country adjoining to it: from Chinnereth even unto the sea of the plain, even the salt-sea; that is, from Genesaret, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, called the land of Gennesaret, Matt. xiv. 34. from thence to the sea of Sodom, the sea of the plain, where the cities of the plain stood, Sodom, Gomorrah, &c. and the salt-sea, so called from the salt and nitrous waters of it, the lake Asphaltites: under Ashdoth-Pisgah eastward; mentioned among the cities given to the tribe of Reuben, Josh. xiii. 20. rendered the springs of Pisgah, ch. iv. 49. the word having the signification of effusions, pourings out; so the Targums.

℣. 18. And I commanded you at that time, &c.] Not all Israel, but the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh; for what follows only concerns them: saying, the Lord your God hath given you this land to possess it; the land before described, lately in the hands of Sihon and Og; this at their request Moses gave them, by the direction of the Lord, on the following condition: you shall pass over armed before your brethren the children of Israel, all that are meet for the war; that is, they should pass over Jordan with the rest of the tribes, being armed to assist them in the conquest of Canaan: for this phrase which we render before your brethren, does not signify that they went in the forefront of them, only that they were present with them, and joined them in their war against their enemies; see Numb. xxxii. 29, 30. and therefore should be rendered with your brethren [a]; even as many of them as were able to bear arms, at least as many as Joshua would chuse to take of them; for he did not take them all by a great many; see Josh. iv. 13.

℣. 19. But your wives, and your little ones, and your cattle, &c.] These were to be left behind: for I know that ye have much cattle; which made the countries of Gilead and Bashan, so famous for pasturage, agreeable to them; see Numb. xxxii. 1. these under the care of servants, and also their wives and children, shall abide in your cities which I have given you; and which they rebuilt and repaired, Numb. xxxii. 34—42.

℣. 20. Until the Lord have given rest unto your brethren, as well as unto you, &c.] Rest from their enemies, and habitations to dwell quietly in; so the land of Canaan is called a rest, ch. xii. 9. typical of the rest which remains for the people of God: and until they also possess the land which the Lord your God hath given them beyond Jordan; for so Canaan was with respect to Moses and the people with him, who were then in the plains of Moab; otherwise the country in which he was with respect to Canaan is usually called beyond Jordan; this the Lord had given in promise to Israel, and they were just now ready to enter into and possess it, by virtue virtue of his gift, and which made it ſure unto them: and then ſhall ye return every man unto his poſſeſſion, which I have given you; as accordingly they did, Joſh. xxii.

℣. 21. And I commanded Joſhua at that time, &c.] After the conqueſt of the two kings, and the aſſignment of their countries to the above tribes; and after Moſes had it made known to him that he ſhould quickly die, and Joſhua ſhould be his ſucceſſor; then, by the direction of God, he gave him the following charge: ſaying, thine eyes have ſeen all that the Lord your God hath done unto theſe two kings; Sihon and Og; how their kingdoms were taken from them, and given to Iſrael, and they ſlain with the ſword; this Joſhua was an eye-witneſs of, and was no doubt greatly concerned in the battles with them, being the general of the Iſraelitiſh armies; at leaſt this was ſometimes his poſt, and he can't be thought to have been un-employed in theſe wars: ſo ſhall the Lord do unto all the kingdoms whither thou paſſeſt; all the kingdoms in the land of Canaan, where there were many, thirty-one at leaſt; theſe would be all conquered and put into the hands of the Iſraelites, and their kings ſlain.

℣. 22. Ye ſhall not fear them, &c.] On account of the numbers, ſtrength, courage, and gigantic ſtature of the inhabitants, at leaſt ſome of them; nor on account of their walled towns, and fortified cities: for the Lord your God he ſhall fight for you; as he did particularly at Jericho, the walls of which city fell at the ſound of rams horns; and at Gibeon, when he caſt down hailſtones on their enemies, and more were ſlain by them than with the ſword; and in all their battles, it was he that gave them ſucceſs and victory.

℣. 23. And I beſought the Lord at that time, &c.] When he was told he ſhould die, and Joſhua ſhould ſucceed him; or when the two kings were ſlain, and their kingdoms conquered; this being the beginning, pledge, and earneſt, of what God had promiſed to do for the people of Iſrael; Moſes was very deſirous of living to ſee the work compleated, and therefore ſought the Lord by prayer and ſupplication: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 24. O Lord God, thou haſt begun to ſhew thy ſervant thy greatneſs and thy mighty hand, &c.] To give a ſpecimen of the greatneſs of his power in ſubduing the two kings and their kingdoms, and delivering them up into the hands of the Iſraelites. Moſes had ſeen inſtances of the mighty power of God in Egypt, at the Red-ſea, and in the wilderneſs; but this was the beginning of his power, in vanquiſhing the Canaanites, and putting their land into the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites, as he had promiſed; of which the Amorites were a part, and a principal nation of them: and thus God, when he begins a work of grace upon the ſoul of man, begins to ſhew the exceeding greatneſs of his power, and which is further exerted in carrying it on, and bringing it to perfection: for what God is there in heaven or in earth, that can do according to thy works, and according to thy might? here Moſes ſpeaks according to the notion of heathens, who ſuppoſed there were other gods in heaven and in earth beſides the true God; and upon this ſuppoſition obſerves, let there be as many as they will, or can be imagined, there is none of them like the Lord God of Iſrael for power and might; or are able to do ſuch works as he has done, in nature, in the creation of all things out of nothing, in providence, in ſupporting what he has made, and in governing the world; and in thoſe amazing inſtances of his power, in bringing down judgments upon wicked men, kings, and kingdoms; and in the deliverance of his own people from them, and putting them and their kingdoms into the poſſeſſion of them; which were the wondrous works of might Moſes had in view, and a ſenſe of which was impreſſed on his mind, at this time.

℣. 25. I pray thee, let me go over and ſee the good land that is beyond Jordan, &c.] The land of Canaan, the land flowing with milk and honey; a land which he deſcribes as a moſt excellent one, ch. viii. 7, 8. To ſee this land, he was very deſirous of going over the river Jordan, beyond which it lay with reſpect to the place where he now was: that goodly mountain and Lebanon; or, that goodly mountain, even Lebanon; which lay to the north of the land of Canaan, and was famous for cedar and odoriferous trees. But if two diſtinct mountains are meant, the goodly mountain may deſign mount Moriah, on which the temple was afterwards built, and of which Moſes might have a foreſight; and ſome by Lebanon think that is meant, which was built of the cedars of Lebanon, and therefore goes by that name, Zech. xi. 1. and a foreview of this made the mountain ſo precious to Moſes, and deſirable to be ſeen by him. So the Targum of Jonathan; "that goodly mountain in which is built the city of Jeruſalem, and mount Lebanon, in which the ſhekinah ſhall dwell;" to which agrees the note of Aben Ezra, who interprets the goodly mountain of Jeruſalem, and Lebanon of the houſe of the ſanctuary. In the Septuagint it is called Antilibanus. Mount Libanus had its name not from frankincenſe growing upon it, as ſome have thought; for it does not appear that any did grow upon it, for that came from Seba in Arabia Felix; but from the whiteneſs of it, thro' the continual ſnows that were on it, juſt as the Alps have their name for the ſame reaſon; and ſo Jerom ſays [b] of Lebanon, that the ſnow never fails from the tops of it, or is ever ſo overcome by the heat of the ſun, as wholly to melt; to the ſame purpoſe alſo Tacitus [c] ſays, and Mr. Maundrell [d], who was there in May, ſpeaks of deep ſnow on it, and repreſents the cedars as ſtanding in ſnow.

℣. 26. But the Lord was wroth with me for your ſakes, &c.] Not at this time, and for this prayer of his, but on account of he and Aaron not ſanctifying him at the waters of Meribah; or of ſome expreſſions of unbelief, and unadviſed words, which dropped from his lips through their provocation of him; ſee Numb. xx. 12. Pſ. cvi. 32, 33. and would not hear me; now, and grant the above requeſt, having before declared that he and Aaron ſhould not bring the people of Iſrael into the land he had given them; and Moſes with all his intreaties could not prevail upon him to repeal the ſentence: and the Lord ſaid unto me, let it ſuffice; that he had ſeen the conqueſt of the two kings, and the delivery of their kingdoms into the hands of Iſrael; and that he had brought the people through the wilderneſs to the borders of the land of Canaan, and that he ſhould have a diſtant ſight of the land, as after directed: ſpeak no more unto me of this matter; intimating it would be in vain, and to no purpoſe, to ſolicit ſuch a favour, ſince it would never be granted; it was a determined point, and he would never recede from it.

℣. 27. Get thee up into the top of Piſgah, &c.] Which was the higheſt eminence of mount Nebo, and ſo a very proper place to take a proſpect from; ſee Deut. xxxii. 49. and xxxiv. 1. and liſt up thine eyes weſtward, and northward, and ſouthward, and eaſtward; to all the four points of the heaven, and to all the four quarters and borders of the land of Canaan: and behold it with thine eyes; even the land of Canaan, and particularly Lebanon, though it lay to the north of it, that mountain he had ſuch a deſire to ſee. Moſes, though old, his natural ſight was very ſtrong, and not in the leaſt dim; and it is not improbable that it might be more than ordinarily increaſed and aſſiſted at this time: for thou ſhalt not go over this Jordan; into the land of Canaan; this affair of not being ſuffered to enter there, Moſes frequently takes notice of, no leſs than four or five times, it being what lay near his heart.

℣. 28. But charge Joſhua, and encourage him, and ſtrengthen him, &c.] Charge him to take the care of the children of Iſrael, to introduce them into the good land, and put them into the poſſeſſion of it; encourage him againſt all fear of his and their enemies, and ſtrengthen him with promiſes of the preſence of God, and of his gracious help and aſſiſtance: for he ſhall go over before this people; over the river Jordan, at the head of them, as their leader and commander; a type of Chriſt, the leader and commander of his people, who as their king goes forth at the head of them, and will introduce them all into his father's kingdom and glory: and he ſhall cauſe them to inherit the land which thou ſhalt ſee; and no more; not enter into, but Joſhua ſhould; and having conquered it, ſhould divide it by lot for an inheritance to them, and their children after them; a type of Chriſt, in whom and by whom the ſaints obtain an inheritance by lot, Epb. i. 11.

℣. 29. So we abode in the valley over againſt Beth-Peor;] In the plains of Moab, over againſt a temple built for Baal Peor upon a mountain, ſo called from that idol, or that idol from the mountain; this is the valley where Moſes was buried, ch. xxxiv. 6.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter contains an exhortation to Iſrael, to keep the commands, ſtatutes, and judgments of God, urged from the ſuperior excellency of them to thoſe of all other nations, ℣. 1—8. from the manner in which they were delivered, out of the midſt of fire, by a voice of words, but no ſimilitude ſeen, ℣. 9—15. and particularly the Iſraelites are cautioned againſt idolatry, from the conſideration of the goodneſs of God to them, in bringing them out of Egypt, ℣. 16—20. and the rather Moſes is urgent upon them to be diligent in their obedience to the laws of God, becauſe he ſhould quickly be removed from them, ℣. 21—24. and ſhould they be diſobedient to them, it would provoke the Lord to deſtroy them, or to carry them captive into other lands, ℣. 25—28. though even then if they repented and ſought the Lord, and became obedient, he would be merciful to them, and not forſake them, ℣. 29, 30, 31. and they are put in mind again of the amazing things God had done for them, in ſpeaking to them out of fire, and they alive; in bringing them out of another nation, and driving out other nations to make room for them; all which he improves, as ſo many arguments to move them to obedience to the divine commands, ℣. 32—40. and then notice is taken of the three cities of refuge, ſeparated on this ſide Jordan, ℣. 41, 42, 43. and the chapter is concluded with obſerving, that this is the law, and theſe the teſtimonies, Moſes declared and repeated to the children of Iſrael in the country of Sihon and Og, who were delivered into their hands, and their lands poſſeſſed by them, which laid them under freſh obligations to yield obedience to God, ℣. 44—49.

℣. 1. Now therefore hearken, O Iſrael, unto the ſtatutes and unto the judgments, &c.] The laws of God, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, which they are exhorted to attend to and obey, in conſideration of the great and good things the Lord had done for them, ever ſince they came from Horeb, where they were given them; ſuch as providing for them, and feeding them in the wilderneſs, preſerving them from every hurtful thing, and delivering their enemies into their hands, the two kings of the Amorites, which they are put in mind of in the preceding chapters; hence this begins with therefore hearken; for nothing is a greater incentive to obedience, than the kindneſs and goodneſs of God: which I teach you for to do that ye may live; the law was taught by Moſes, but the goſpel of grace and truth by Jeſus Chriſt; and it was taught by him, as well as it was to be hearkened to by them, in order to yield obedience to it; for not bare hearing, but doing the law, is the principal thing, of any avail; and which was to be done, that they might live; not a ſpiritual and eternal life, which are not by the works of the law, but are had only from Chriſt, through his grace and righteouſneſs; but a corporal life, and a comfortable enjoyment of the bleſſings of it, and particularly that that might be continued to them: and go in and poſſeſs the land which the Lord God of your fathers giveth you; the land of Canaan, which the Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, had promiſed to give to their poſterity, and which they were to hold by their obedience to his laws.

℣. 2. Ye ſhall not add to the word which I command you, neither ſhall you diminiſh ought from it, &c.] Neither make new laws of their own, and join them to the law of God, and ſet them upon a level with it, or prefer them before it; as the ſcribes and Phariſees did in Chriſt's time, who by their traditions made the word of God of none effect, as do the papiſts alſo by their unwritten traditions; nor abrogate nor detract from the law of God, nor make void any part of it: or elſe the ſenſe is, neither do that which is forbidden, nor neglect that which is commanded; neither be guilty of ſins of omiſſion nor commiſſion, nor in any way break the law of God, and teach men ſo to do by word or by example; not a jot or tittle is either to be put to it, or taken from it, Prov. xxx. 5, 6. Matth. v. 18, 19. Rev. xxii. 18, 19. that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you; in his name; or which he delivered unto them as his commandments, and which were to be kept juſt as they were delivered, without adding to them, or taking from them.

℣. 3. Your eyes have ſeen what the Lord did becauſe of Baal-Peor, &c.] Becauſe of the idolatry the the people of Iſrael fell into by worſhipping that idol, being drawn into it by the daughters of Moab and Midian, through the counſel of Balaam, with whom they committed fornication; which led them to the other ſin, and both highly provoking to God. The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan are, "what the Word of the Lord has done to the worſhippers of the idol Peor;" for all the men that followed Baal-peor the Lord thy God hath deſtroyed them from among you; 24000 perſons died on that account; which being a recent thing, freſh in memory, and what they were eye-witneſſes of, was a caution to them to avoid the ſame ſins, as it is to us on whom the ends of the world are come, Numb. xxiii. 9. 1 Cor. x. 6, 7, 8, 11.

℣. 4. But ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God, &c.] To the worſhip of the Lord your God, as the Targum of Jonathan; attended the ſervice of the ſanctuary, were obſervant of the laws of God, and walked in his ſtatutes and judgments; did not apoſtatize from him by idolatry or otherwiſe, but kept cloſe unto him, and followed him fully: are alive every one of you this day; which is very remarkable, that in ſuch a vaſt number of people not one ſhould die in ſuch a ſpace of time, it being ſeveral months ſince that affair happened; and beſides, in that time there was a war with the Midianites, and yet not one perſon died in that war, nor as it ſeems by this account by any diſeaſe or diſaſter whatever; ſee Numb. xxxi. 49.

℣. 5. Behold, I have taught you ſtatutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, &c.] He had faithfully delivered them, without adding to them, or diminiſhing from them, and had diligently inſtructed the Iſraelites in them, had taken pains to lead them into a thorough knowledge and underſtanding of them: that ye ſhould do ſo in the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it; do in like manner as the commandments of the Lord direct to; or that which is right[e]; proper and fitting to be done, by doing which they ſhould continue in the land they were about to poſſeſs, and therefore when in it were to be careful to perform them; ſome of them could not be done till they came into it, and all were to be done in it.

℣. 6. Keep therefore and do them, &c.] Obſerve them, take notice of what is expreſſed by them, and perform them, both as to matter and manner, as they require: for this is your wiſdom and your underſtanding in the ſight of the nations; that is, their wiſdom and underſtanding would appear to other nations by their obſervance of the commands of God: which ſhall hear all theſe ſtatutes; which they had a report, and got knowledge of by ſome of the philoſophers who travelled into thoſe parts, and by the tranſlation of the bible into the Greek language: and ſay, ſurely this great nation is a wiſe and underſtanding people; that had ſuch a body of laws, in which they were inſtructed, and according to which they were governed, and in which they walked; that were ſo agreeable to reaſon, truth, juſtice, and equity; inſomuch that ſo far as they became known, they were admired and copied after, both by Greeks and Romans; and hence it was that the oracle[f] declared, that only the Chaldeans and Hebrews were a wiſe people; the Hebrews came from Chaldea, as Abraham the father of them.

℣. 7. For what nation is there ſo great, &c.] Not ſo much for their number, for they were the feweſt of all people; nor for the largeneſs of their territories, for the land they were going to poſſeſs was but a ſmall country; nor for their wealth and riches, and warlike exploits, though they were not contemptible in either; but for their happy conſtitution in church and ſtate, being directed and governed in both by laws, which came immediately from God himſelf; for their knowledge of divine things, and for ſpiritual bleſſings and privileges they were favoured with, of which a ſpecial inſtance is given: who hath God ſo nigh unto them as the Lord our God is, in all things that we call upon him for? God was nigh unto them in reſpect of relation, being their covenant God and Father, and they his ſons and daughters, to whom the adoption belonged; and with reſpect to place and preſence, his tabernacle being in the midſt of them, the ſeat of his ſhekinah, or divine majeſty, being in the moſt holy place, between the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat; and he going before them in the pillar of cloud by day, and in the pillar of fire by night, and who might be applied unto at all times for whatſoever they ſtood in need of; and who was always near unto them, to give them advice and counſel, help, and aſſiſtance; to hear their prayers, and communicate unto them things temporal and ſpiritual they ſtood in need of: and ſo the Lord is nigh to all that call upon him in faith, with fervency, and in ſincerity and truth; and herein the glory and greatneſs of a people, as of Iſrael, lies, in being nearly related to God, a people near unto him, both as to union and communion; and in having a communication of good things from him. God is both a God at hand and afar off, Jer. xxiii. 23; ſee Pſ. cxlv. 18.

℣. 8. And what nation is there ſo great, that hath ſtatutes and judgments ſo righteous, &c.] Founded in juſtice and equity, and ſo agreeable to right reaſon, and ſo well calculated and adapted to lead perſons in the ways of righteouſneſs and truth, and keep them from doing any injury to each others perſons and properties, and to maintain good order, peace, and concord among them: as all this law which I ſet before you this day? which he then repeated, afreſh declared, explained and inſtructed them in; for otherwiſe it had been delivered to them near 40 years ago. Now there was not any nation then in being, nor any ſince, to be compared with the nation of the Jews, for the wiſe and wholeſome laws given unto them; no, not the more cultivated and civilized nations, as the Grecians and Romans, who had the advantage of ſuch wiſe law-givers as they were accounted, as Solon, Lycurgus, Numa, and others; and indeed the beſt laws that they had, ſeem to be borrowed from the Jews.

℣. 9. Only take heed to thyſelf, &c.] To walk according to this law, and not ſwerve from it: and keep thy ſoul diligently; from the tranſgreſſions and breaches of it: leſt thou forget the things which thine eyes have ſeen; either the ſtatutes and judgments ſet before them, and the circumſtances of the delivery of them; or the puniſhment inflicted on the breakers of them; or the favours beſtowed on thoſe that obſerved them: and leſt they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life; out of thy mind and memory, and have no place in thy affections, through a neglect and diſuſe of them: but teach them thy ſons, and thy ſons ſons; their children and grand-children, that they may be trained up in them in their youth, and ſo not depart from them when grown up, and in years; ſee ch. vi. 7.

the Lord in Horeb, &c.] Above all things Moſes would have them take care not to forget the day the law was given from mount Sinai, which was ſo awful and ſolemn, when they ſaw the fire, the ſmoke, the lightning, and heard the thunder and the ſound of the trumpet; all which were very ſhocking and terrifying: and though the men of this generation were but young then, being under twenty years of age, yet many of them were old enough to obſerve theſe things, and which one would think ſhould never wear out of their minds: when the Lord ſaid unto me, gather me the people together; not the elders of the people only, but the whole body of the people, as he did, and brought them to the foot of mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 17. and I will make them hear my words; the ten commands which were ſpoken by the Lord himſelf aloud, with an articulate voice, in the hearing of all the people; and was ſuch a terrible voice of words, that they that heard it intreated it might be ſpoken to them no more, Heb. xii. 19. that they may learn to fear me all the days that they ſhall live upon the earth; to reverence him the law-giver, who is able to ſave and to deſtroy; to fear to offend him by breaking his laws, ſo holy, juſt, and good, and delivered in ſuch an awful and ſolemn manner: and that they may teach their children; the words they had heard, teach them obedience to them, and to be careful not to act contrary to them; ſince that would bring down judgments upon them, and deprive them of the favour they enjoyed, of which they had ſeen inſtances.

℣. 11. And ye camē near and ſtood under the mountain, &c.] At the foot of it, in the lower part of the mountain, as the Targum of Jonathan, and agrees with Exod. xix. 17. and the mountain burnt with fire unto the midſt of heaven; the flame and ſmoke went up into the middle of the air: with darkneſs, clouds, and thick darkneſs; which thick darkneſs was occaſioned partly by the ſmoke which went up like the ſmoke of a furnace, and partly by the thick clouds, which were on the mount, and covered the face of the heavens, which were black and tempeſtuous with them; the Septuagint renders it a tempeſt, Exod. xix. 18. Heb. xii. 18. which denotes the obſcurity of the law, and the terrors it works in the minds of men.

℣. 12. And the Lord ſpake unto you out of the midſt of the fire, &c.] For the Lord deſcended on mount Sinai in a cloud, in fire, and was in the thick darkneſs, from whence he delivered out the ten commands: ye heard the voice of the words; diſtinctly and plainly, not only the ſound of them, but the words themſelves, and ſo as to underſtand what was meant by them: but ſaw no ſimilitude; not any likeneſs of the perſon ſpeaking, by which they could form any idea of him in their minds, which was purpoſely done to prevent idolatry: only ye heard a voice; that was all.

℣. 13. And he declared unto you his covenant; &c.] So the law was called, becauſe it contained on the part of God, things which he would have done or avoided, to which were annexed promiſes of long life and happineſs in the land he gave them; and they, on their part, agreed to hearken to it, and obey it, Exod. xxiv. 3, 7. which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; which ſee at large in Exod. xx. 1—17. and in this book afterwards repeated, ch. v. 6—21. and he wrote them upon two tables of ſtone; to denote the durableneſs of them; the Targum of Jonathan ſays on tables of ſapphire; but it is moſt likely that they were written on tables of marble, ſince there were great quantities of it in mount Sinai; ſee the note on Exod. xxxi. 18.

℣. 14. And the Lord commanded me at that time, &c.] When the ten commandments were delivered on mount Sinai, and Moſes was ordered to come up to God in the mount: to teach you ſtatutes and judgments; laws ceremonial and judicial, beſides the ten commands given them: that ye may do them in the land whither ye go over to poſſeſs it; the land of Canaan, which was on the other ſide of Jordan, and over which they muſt go in order to poſſeſs it; and when they came there, they were to hold the poſſeſſion of it by attending to thoſe laws which forbad the ſins for which the old inhabitants of it were expelled out of it; and beſides theſe, there were alſo ſeveral laws, both ceremonial and judicial, which were to be peculiarly obſerved in the land, as well as others they were obliged to do whilſt without it.

℣. 15. Take ye therefore good heed unto yourſelves; &c.] As to keep all the laws given them, ſo particularly to avoid idolatry: for ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude, on the day the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb, out of the midſt of the fire; and therefore as they had nothing that directed and led them, ſo they had nothing that could be a temptation to them, to make any form or likeneſs, and worſhip it.

℣. 16. Leſt ye corrupt yourſelves, &c.] And not themſelves only, but the word and worſhip of God by idolatry, than which nothing is more corrupting and defiling, nor more abominable to God: and make you a graven image, the ſimilitude of any figure; a graven image, in the likeneſs of any figure, an idea of which they had formed in their minds: the likeneſs of male or female; of a man or a woman; ſo ſome of the heathen deities were in the likeneſs of men, as Jupiter, Mars, Hercules, Apollo, &c. and others in the likeneſs of women, as Juno, Diana, Venus, &c. Some think Oſiris and Iſis, Egyptian deities, the one male, the other female, are reſpected; but it is not certain that theſe were worſhipped by them ſo early.

℣. 17. The likeneſs of any beaſt that is on the earth, &c.] As there are ſcarce any but the likeneſs of them has been made and worſhipped, or the creatures themſelves, as the ox by the Egyptians; the ſheep by the Thebans, the goat by the Mendeſians, and others by different people: the likeneſs of any winged fowl that flieth in the air; as the hawk and the bird called Ibis, and another by the name of Cneph by the Egyptians, and the eagle by others.

℣. 18. The likeneſs of any thing that creepeth on the ground, &c.] As ſerpents by many; and indeed that creature is introduced into almoſt all the idolatries of the heathens, which ſeems to take its riſe from the ſerpent Satan made uſe of to deceive our firſt parents: the likeneſs of any fiſh that is in the waters beneath the earth; as the crocodile and hippopotamus, or river-horſe, by the Egyptians; and Dagon and Derceto, ſuppoſed to be figures in the form of a fiſh among the Phœnicians.

℣. 19. And leſt thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, &c.] The ſtarry heaven, which to do in itſelf is not ſinful; and may be lawfully and commendably done, to raiſe admiration at the wonderful works of God in them, and lead to adore the author of them; but if not guarded againſt may be enſnaring: and when thou ſeeſt the ſun and the moon, and the ſtars, even all the hoſt of heaven; thoſe bright luminaries, ſo glorious to behold, and ſo uſeful and beneficial to the earth, and the inhabitants of it: ſhouldſt be driven to worſhip them, and ſerve them; ſhould have an impulſe on their minds and their hearts, be inclined and drawn to the worſhip of them, partly by conſidering their ſplendor, glory and uſefulneſs, and partly by the example of others; for the worſhipping of theſe ſeems to be and is the firſt kind of idolatry men gave into, at leaſt it was very antient; ſee Job xxxi. 26, 27. which the Lord thy God hath divided unto all nations under the whole heaven; the ſun and the moon by their conſtant revolutions viſit all the parts of the world, and ſtars are fixed in both hemiſpheres, ſo that all nations of the earth receive the benefit and advantage of all theſe heavenly bodies; but were never deſigned to be the objects of their worſhip, as might be learnt from their being divided to them, ſometimes one part of the earth enjoying them, and then another, and not preſent with them all at one and the ſame time, which, if deities, would have been neceſſary; ſee Pſ. xix. 6. Matt. v. 45.

℣. 20. But the Lord hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, &c.] The alluſion is to the trying and melting of metals, and freeing them from droſs, by putting them into furnaces ſtrongly heated, ſome of which are of earth, others of iron; the word as the Jewiſh writers [g] obſerve, ſignifies ſuch an one in which gold and ſilver and other things are melted; ſee Pſ. xii. 6. Prov. xvii. 3. even out of Egypt; which is here compared to an iron furnace, becauſe of the cruelty with which the Iſraelites were uſed in it, the hardſhips they were put under, and the miſery and bondage they were kept in; but out of all the Lord brought them, as he does all his people ſooner or later out of their afflictions, ſometimes called the furnace of affliction, Iſ. xlviii. 10. where their graces are tried, and they are purged, purified, and refined from their droſs and tin. This the Lord did to Iſrael, he brought them out of their diſtreſſed ſtate and condition: to be unto him a people of inheritance as ye are this day; to be the Lord's inheritance, as they now were, chap. xxxii. 9. as well as they were quickly to inherit the land of Canaan, for which they were brought out of the land of Egypt; and indeed they were already, even that day, entered on their inheritance, the kingdom of the Amorites being delivered into their hands.

℣. 21. Furthermore the Lord was angry with me for your ſakes, &c.] See chap. iii. 26: and ſware that I ſhould not go over Jordan; this circumſtance of ſwearing is no where elſe expreſſed: and that I ſhould not go in unto that good land; the land of Canaan; he might ſee it as he did from Piſgah, but not enter into it: which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance; to them and to their children after them.

℣. 22. But I muſt die in this land, &c.] The land of Moab, in a mountain in it he died, and in a valley there he was buried, chap. xxxii. 50. and xxxiv. 5, 6. I muſt not go over Jordan; this he repeats, as lying near his heart; he had earneſtly ſolicited to go over, but was denied it: but ye ſhall go over, and poſſeſs that good land; this he firmly believed and aſſures them of, relying on the promiſe and faithfulneſs of God.

℣. 23. Take heed unto yourſelves, &c.] Since he ſhould not be long with them to adviſe, inſtruct, and caution them: leſt ye forget the covenant of the Lord your God, which he made with you; what that required of them, and what was promiſed unto them on the performance of it, and what they muſt expect ſhould they break it, and particularly be ſo forgetful of it, and the firſt articles in it, as follows: and make you a graven image, or the likeneſs of any thing which the Lord thy God hath forbidden thee; a graven image in the likeneſs of men or women, of any beaſt on the earth, or fowl in heaven, or fiſh in the ſea.

℣. 24. For the Lord thy God is a conſuming fire, &c.] To his enemies; his wrath is like fire to burn up and deſtroy all that oppoſe him and break his commands, and eſpecially idolaters; whoſe ſin of all others is the moſt provoking to him, ſince it ſtrikes at his being, his honour and glory; wherefore it follows, even a jealous God; who is jealous of his honour in matters of worſhip, and will not ſuffer his glory to be given to another, nor his praiſe to graven images, without reſenting it or puniſhing for it.

℣. 25. When thou ſhalt beget children and childrens children, &c.] Children and grand-children, and ſeveral ages and generations have paſſed: and ſhalt have remained long in the land; many years and even ages, or have grown old [h] in it: now they were in their infancy, and as ſuch were about to enter into it; during the times of the judges, they were in their childhood, or youth; in the times of David and Solomon, they were in their manhood; after that, in their decline; and in the times of Jeconiah and his brethren, in their old age, when for their ſins they were carried captive: and ſhall corrupt yourſelves, and make a graven image, or the likeneſs of any thing; ſee the note on ℣. 16. and ſhall do evil in the ſight of the Lord thy God, to provoke him to anger; that ſin of idolatry, that God-provoking ſin, is chiefly intended.

℣. 26. I call heaven and earth to witneſs againſt you this day, &c.] Should they be guilty of ſuch a ſin, ſince they were ſo ſtrongly and publickly cautioned againſt it; and even the heaven and the earth were called upon as witneſſes of the law being ſet before them, which ſo expreſsly forbids it, chap. xxx. 19. that ye ſhall ſoon utterly periſh from off the land, whereinto you go over Jordan to poſſeſs it; though they were now about to go over Jordan and inherit the land of Canaan, yet they would not enjoy it long, but be taken and carried captive out of it; as the ten tribes were by Salmaneſer king of Aſſyria, and the two tribes by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and both for their idolatry and other crimes.

℣. 27. And the Lord ſhall ſcatter you among the nations, &c.] As they were by both captivities; the ten tribes were diſperſed among the cities of the Medes, and the two tribes throughout the empire of Babylon: and ye ſhall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the Lord ſhall lead you; or be men of number [i], ſo few that they might be eaſily numbered; which intimates that it ſhould be otherwiſe with them than when in Egypt; there they were multiplied and increaſed the more they were afflicted, but in theſe captivities they ſhould be greatly diminiſhed.

℣. 28. And there ye ſhall ſerve gods, the work of mens hands, wood and ſtone, &c.] Idols made by men, cut out of wood and ſtone; theſe they ſhould be enticed into the ſervice of, or compelled to ſerve; which was ſtill more brutiſh and ſtupid than to worſhip the ſun, moon and ſtars, which were not the works of mens hand, but the glorious works of

of the eternal God. But ſince in their captivities they were not ſubject to idolatry, but were cured of it thereby; another ſenſe of the words is given by ſome, as by Onkelos and Jonathan, who paraphraſe the words of ſerving the people, that ſerve idols; but what follows confirms the firſt ſenſe: which neither ſee, nor hear, nor taſte, nor ſmell; ſenſeleſs things, which have none of the ſenſes of ſeeing, hearing and ſmelling, nor the faculty of eating, which they need not to ſupport life, of which they are deſtitute; and therefore it muſt be monſtrous ſtupidity to worſhip ſuch lifeleſs, ſenſeleſs objects; ſee Pſ. cxv. 4, 5, 6, 7.

℣. 29. But if from thence thou ſhalt ſeek the Lord thy God, &c.] By prayer and ſupplication, acknowledging and confeſſing ſin, and deſiring that God would be gracious and forgive it, and bring them out of their miſerable condition; even if out of thoſe depths of affliction and diſtreſs, and though ſcattered about in the world, and in the uttermoſt parts of it: thou ſhalt find him; to be a God hearing and anſwering prayer, gracious and merciful, ready to help and deliver: if they ſeek him with all their heart and with all their ſoul; ſincerely and affectionately.

℣. 30. When thou art in tribulation, &c.] In a ſtrange land, in the power of a foreign enemy, and uſed ill: and all theſe things are come upon thee; captivity, thraldom, hard labour, and want of the neceſſaries of life: even in the latter days; in their preſent captivity for the rejection of the Meſſiah: if thou turn to the Lord thy God; as the Jews will when they are converted and brought to a ſenſe of their ſin, and of their need of Chriſt, and ſeek to him as their Saviour, as they will do in the latter day, Hoſ. iii. 5. and 2 Cor. iii. 16. and ſhalt be obedient unto his voice; not of the law only, but of the goſpel alſo, proclaiming peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation by him whom they have pierced.

℣. 31. For the Lord thy God is a merciful God, &c.] In Chriſt, in whom he has proclaimed his name as ſuch, of which Moſes had a comfortable view, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7, 8. and therefore could atteſt it from his own knowledge and experience: he will not forſake thee; though in a ſtrange country, but bring them from thence into their own land again, and favour them with his gracious preſence in his houſe and ordinances: neither deſtroy thee; from being a people; and in a very wonderful manner are they preſerved among the nations of the earth to this day: nor forget the covenant of thy fathers, which he ſware unto them; that a Saviour ſhould come and turn away ungodlineſs from them, and take away their ſins; ſee Rom. xi. 26, 27.

℣. 32. For aſk now of the days that are paſt, which were before thee, &c.] Enquire into and conſult the annals of former times, of ages paſt: ſince the day that God created man upon the earth; trace them quite up to the creation of the world, and men in it: and aſk from the one ſide of heaven to the other; traverſe the whole globe, and examine the records of every nation in it in both hemiſpheres: whether there hath been any ſuch thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? whether they can give any account of any thing ſeen, heard or done like what follows; ſuggeſting that they cannot furniſh out an inſtance to be mentioned with it.

℣. 33. Did ever people hear the voice of God ſpeaking out of the midſt of fire, &c.] None ever heard the voice of God as they did, much leſs ſpeaking ſuch words as they heard, and ſtill leſs out of the midſt of fire, which was their caſe; ℣. 12, 15. as thou haſt heard, and live? which was ſtranger ſtill, when they might have expected they ſhould, and doubtleſs feared they would be, as it was wonderful they were not, conſumed by it.

℣. 34. Or hath God aſſayed to go and take him a nation from the midſt of another nation, &c.] As he now had done, namely the nation of Iſrael out of the nation of the Egyptians; this he not only had aſſayed to do, but had actually done it; whereas no ſuch inſtance like it could be produced, and eſpecially as done in the manner this was: by temptations, by ſigns, and by wonders, and by war; the word temptations may be conſidered as a general word, as Aben Ezra thinks, and may ſignify the temptations by ſigns, &c. or the various eſſays and trials, ways, means and methods taken by the Lord to bring about the event; by ſigns may be meant thoſe which were required of Moſes, and done by him before the people of Iſrael, and before Pharaoh, as proofs of his miſſion from the Lord, Exod. iv. 1—9. 30. and vii. 9; and by wonders, the ten plagues of Egypt, which were done by a ſupernatural and miraculous operation and were amazing things; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 11, 12, 13; and by war, either the ſlaying of the firſt-born, with the deſtruction of the judges and gods of Egypt, as Aben Ezra; or the Lord's fighting for Iſrael at the Red Sea, as Jarchi; he ſaved them and deſtroyed the Egyptians, and ſhewed himſelf to be a man of war, Exod. xiv. 14, 25. and xv. 3. and by a mighty hand and ſtretched out arm; phraſes frequently uſed when this affair is ſpoken of, and are expreſſive of the mighty power of God in the above inſtances, and in the iſſue of them, bringing Iſrael out of Egypt; though Aben Ezra interprets it of the pillar of fire and cloud in which the Lord went before them: and by great terrors; which the ſame writer interprets of the drowning of Pharaoh and his hoſt in the ſea, and dividing it for Iſrael; but may be underſtood not only of the terrors which poſſeſſed him and his people then, but at other times, eſpecially at the time of the thunder and lightning, and when they ſat in thick darkneſs, and particularly when all their firſt-born were ſlain; ſee chap. xxvi. 8. according to all that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt before your Eyes; among the men of Egypt, as the above writer, Pharaoh and his courtiers: the above things were done as before them for their terror, ſo before Iſrael for their encouragement.

℣. 35. Unto thee it was ſhewed, &c.] What the Lord did in Egypt: that thou mighteſt know that the Lord he is God, there is none elſe beſides him; that he is the one only living and true God, and there is no other: this phraſe is often uſed by the prophet Iſaiah, to expreſs the ſame great article of faith.

℣. 36. Out of heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might inſtruct thee, &c.] Thunder is the voice of God, and by which he inſtructs men in the greatneſs of his power, Job. xxvi. 14. and xl. 9. and Pſ. xxix. 3, &c. unleſs his voice in giving the law, which was for the inſtruction of Iſrael, is meant; for that was heard on earth, on mount Sinai, to which the following refers: and upon earth he ſhewed thee his great fire; on mount Sinai, which burned with it: and thou heardeſt his words out of the midſt of the fire; the ten commands, and therefore may well be called a fiery law; ſee ℣. 12, 15. 33.

℣. 37. And becauſe he loved thy fathers, &c.] Not their immediate fathers, whoſe carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs, wilderneſs, and entered not into the good land becauſe of their unbelief, but their more remote fathers or anceſtors, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, who had ſome ſingular teſtimonies of the love of God to them. Abraham is called the friend of God, and Iſaac was the ſon of promiſe in whom the ſeed was called; and Jacob is particularly ſaid to be loved by God, when Eſau was hated: therefore he choſe their ſeed after them; not to eternal life and ſalvation, but to the enjoyment of external bleſſings and privileges, to be called by his name, and to ſet up his name and worſhip among them, and to be a ſpecial people to him above all people on the earth, as to outward favours both civil and eccleſiaſtical: and brought thee out in his ſight with his mighty power out of Egypt; which was done not only in the ſight of the Egyptians openly, they not daring to hinder them, as the wonders wrought to oblige them to let them go out, done in the ſight of the Iſraelites as before obſerved, but in the ſight of God, he going before them in the pillar of cloud and fire, ſmiling upon them the Iſraelites, and looking with a frown upon the hoſt of the Egyptians, and conducting the people by the angel of his preſence.

℣. 38. To drive out nations from before thee, greater and mightier than thou art, &c.] The ſeven nations of the land of Canaan, which were more in number and mightier in power and ſtrength than they, and particularly the Amorites, who were already driven out and diſpoſſeſſed of their country, even the kingdoms and nations of Sihon and Og: to bring thee in to give thee their land for an inheritance, as it is this day; referring, as Aben Ezra obſerves, to the inheritance of the land of the two kings of the Amorites, which the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh were put into the poſſeſſion of already.

℣. 39. Know therefore this day, and conſider it in thine heart, &c.] Own and acknowledge it now with thy mouth, and lay it up and conſider it in thine heart hereafter, as a truth of the greateſt importance to be profeſſed and held faſt, and to be thought of and meditated upon continually, and never to be forgotten: that the Lord he is God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath; that he has made both, and is the poſſeſſor and lord of them, and does what he pleaſes with them; that the one is his throne, his dwelling-place, and the other his footſtool; and that the inhabitants of both are his creatures, and under his authority and command, and he can diſpoſe of them as he pleaſes: there is none elſe; no God in heaven or in earth beſide him.

℣. 40. Thou ſhalt keep therefore his ſtatutes, and his commandments, &c.] All his laws, moral, ceremonial and judicial, partly being under obligation to him for all the great and good things done by him for them before enumerated, and partly and chiefly becauſe he is the Lord God in heaven and in earth, and has a right to command and ought to be obeyed: which I command thee this day; in the name of the Lord, and which he repeated, opened and explained, and charged them afreſh to obſerve; otherwiſe they were ſuch that had been given long ago: that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee; that they and theirs might enjoy temporal mercies, and continue in the land of Canaan, and partake of all the bleſſings in it as follows, and of the ſanctuary of the Lord, and the privileges of it: and that thou mayeſt prolong thy days upon the earth, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for ever; that is, that they and theirs might live long in the land of Canaan, which the Lord gave for an inheritance for ever, provided they kept his law, and were obedient to his commands; ſee Deut. vi. 25. Iſ. i. 19. and tho' they have had ſeveral interruptions by their captivities, and eſpecially by their preſent very long one, yet when they ſhall return and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, they ſhall have their land reſtored to them again, and ſhall never more be diſpoſſeſſed of it.

℣. 41. Then Moſes ſevered three cities, &c] To be cities of refuge, according to the command of God, Numb. xxxv. 14. this he did when he had conquered the two kingdoms of the Amorites, that God had given them for an inheritance to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, ℣. 38. though Jarchi ſays, and ſo other Jewiſh writers, that perſons were not received into them until the three cities appointed in the land of Canaan were ſeparated for the like uſe; ſee the note on Numb. xxxv. 14. and theſe were, on this ſide Jordan, toward the riſing ſun; on that ſide of the river on which the plains of Moab lay, and the kingdoms of the Amorites, and to the eaſt of Jordan: ſo Jarchi remarks "on that ſide which is on the eaſt of Jordan"; ſee Joſh. xx. 8.

℣. 42. That the ſlayer might flee thither, &c.] For refuge; the ſlayer of a man, but not any ſlayer, but which ſhould kill his neighbour unawares; by accident to him, without any deſign and intention to kill him; ignorantly, as the Septuagint verſion; and ſo Onkelos: and hated him not in times paſt; it having never appeared that there had been a quarrel between them, and that the ſlayer had ſhewn any enmity to the man ſlain any time before the fact, or bore a grudge againſt him, or ſpite unto him: and that fleeing unto one of theſe cities he might live; in peace and ſafety unto his own death, or unto the death of the high prieſt, when he was releaſed from his confinement to the city of his refuge, and might return to his tribe, houſe, family, and poſſeſſions.

℣. 43. Namely Bezer in the wilderneſs, &c.] In Joſh. xx. 8. it is added upon the plain, this perhaps was the wilderneſs of Moab, in the plains of it, the ſame with Bozrah, Jer. xlviii. 24. ſee chap. ii. 8. and 1 Maccab. v. 28. it was in the plain country of the Reubenites, or lay in that part of the country which was allotted to them, and which they gave to the Levites, 1 Chron. vi. 78. and Ramoth in Gilead of the Gadites; it lay in that part of mount Gilead, and among the cities of it, which fell to the ſhare of the tribe of Gad, and was by them given to the Levites, 1 Chron. vi. 80. this city is frequently in ſcripture called Ramoth-Gilead; ſee 1 Kings iv. 13. and xxii. 20. and Golan in Baſhan, of the Manaſſites, or Gaulon, as the Septuagint, and from hence the country round about was called Gaulanitis; all Baſhan the kingdom of Og, was given to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, and out of it this city was given by them to the Levites, 1 Chron. vi. 71. and appointed a city of refuge: now as theſe cities were typical of Chriſt, there may be ſomething obſerved in the names of them as agreeing with him. Bezer ſignifies a fortified place; Chriſt is the fortreſs, mountain, and place of defence for his people, and ſtrong hold to which the priſoners of hope turn, the ſtrong tower whither the righteous run and are ſafe. Ramoth ſignifies exaltations; which may point both at the exaltation of Chriſt in human nature at the right hand of God, and the exaltation of his people by him, who are raiſed by him from a low eſtate to ſit among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory, and by whom he is exalted in his perſon, office, and grace. Golan ſignifies revealed or manifeſted; ſo Chriſt has been manifeſt in the fleſh, and is revealed to ſinners, when they are called by his grace; to whom they flee for refuge, and lay hold on him, the hope ſet before them.

℣. 44. And this is the law which Moſes ſet before the children of Iſrael;] Not the law concerning the cities of refuge, but the law of the ten commands repeated in the following chapter; ſo Jarchi remarks, "this which he ſhould ſet in order after "this ſection;" as he does in the next chapter, where he repeats in order the ten precepts, and makes obſervations on the manner of the delivery of them, and urges obedience to them.

℣. 45. Theſe are the teſtimonies, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments, &c.] The laws moral, ceremonial, and judicial, delivered in the following chapters; which are renewed, repeated, and explained: which Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, after they came forth out of Egypt; in the third month after they came from thence, theſe laws were delivered to him at mount Sinai, and he declared them to them; and now afreſh, near 40 years after, repeated them to them in the plains of Moab.

℣. 46. On this ſide Jordan, in the valley, over-againſt Beth-peor, &c.] Where the Iſraelites abode ſome time; ſee ch. iii. 29. in the land of Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt at Heſhbon; which was now conquered, and in the hands of the Iſraelites: whom Moſes and the children of Iſrael ſmote after they came out of Egypt; not as ſoon as, or quickly after they came from thence; for it was but a few months ago, ſince this conqueſt was made, whereas it was near forty years ſince they came out of Egypt.

℣. 47. And they poſſeſſed his land, and the land of Og king of Baſhan, &c.] Seized upon them, and took them as their own, and divided them for an inheritance among two of their tribes and half another: two kings of the Amorites; which is more than once obſerved, that it might be taken notice of, that theſe were of the nations of the Canaanites Iſrael were to root out, and poſſeſs their land: which were on this ſide Jordan toward the ſun riſing; which lands and kingdoms lay to the eaſt of Jordan, on that ſide of it on which were the plains of Moab, where Moſes and Iſrael now were.

℣. 48. From Aroer which is by the bank of the river Arnon, &c.] A city of Moab, which was ſituated on the bank of the river Arnon, that was on the border of Moab, ch. ii. 36. and iii. 12. even unto mount Sion which is Hermon; the meaning is, that the lands of theſe two kings conquered by Iſrael reached from the city Aroer on the river Arnon to mount Hermon, the one being the ſouthern, the other the northern boundary of them. Here Hermon has another name Sion, and is to be carefully diſtinguiſhed from mount Zion near Jeruſalem; it lying in a different country, and being written with a different letter in the Hebrew language. In the Septuagint verſion it is called Seon, and by the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem the mount of ſnow; ſee the note on ch. iii. 9.

℣. 49. And all the plain on this ſide Jordan eaſtward, &c.] The plains of Moab, on that ſide of Jordan to the eaſt: even unto the ſea of the plain; the ſea of Sodom, the ſalt ſea: under the ſprings of Piſgah; that roſe from mount Piſgah, the ſame with Aſhdoth-Piſgah, ch. iii. 17.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter Moſes, after a ſhort preface, ℣. 1—5. repeats the law of the decalogue, or ten commands, with ſome little variation, ℣. 6—21. and then reminds the Iſraelites of the terrible manner in which it was delivered to them, ℣. 22, 23. which put them upon making a requeſt that Moſes might be a mediator between God and them, and hear what the Lord had to ſay, and report it to them; to which they promiſed obedience, ℣. 24—27, and which being agreeable to the Lord was granted ℣. 28—31. and this laid them under a greater obligation to obſerve the commands of God, and keep them, ℣. 32, 33.

℣. 1. And Moſes called all Iſrael, &c.] The heads of the ſeveral tribes, and elders of the people, as he had on occaſion been uſed to do; unleſs it can be thought that at different times he repeated the following laws to ſeparate parties and bodies of them, until they had all heard them: and ſaid unto them, hear, O Iſrael, the ſtatutes and judgments which I ſpeak in your ears this day; the laws moral, ceremonial, and judicial, which he was about to repeat, and afreſh declare unto them, being what they had all a concern in, and under obligation to regard.

℣. 2. The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb;] Which is Sinai, as Aben Ezra obſerves; it being the ſame mountain, only it had two tops, which bore theſe different names; for certain it is that the decalogue after repeated was given at Sinai, and had the nature and form of a covenant; ſee Exod. xxiv. 7, 8.

℣. 3. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, &c.] That is, not with them only, as Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Abendana remark; for certain it is that this covenant was made, or law was given, to the immediate fathers of this preſent generation of Iſraelites, whoſe carcaſes had fallen in the wilderneſs; unleſs this is to be underſtood of their more remote anceſtors, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, with whom the covenant of grace was made, or afreſh made manifeſt, eſpecially with the former; when the law, the covenant here ſpoken of, was not delivered until 430 years after, Gal. iii. 16, 17. but with us, even us who are all of us here alive this day; many of them were then preſent at the giving of the law, and though under twenty years of age, could remember it, and the circumſtances of it; and beſides, they were the ſame people to whom it was given, though not conſiſting wholly of the ſame individuals.

℣. 4. The Lord talked with you face to face in the mount, &c.] Meaning not in that free, friendly, and familiar manner, in which he ſometimes talked with Moſes, of whom this phraſe is uſed, Exod. xxxiii. 11. but publickly, audibly, clearly, and diſtinctly, or without the interpoſition of another; he did not ſpeak to them by Moſes, but to them themſelves; he talked to them without a middle perſon between them, as Aben Ezra expreſſes it; without making uſe of one to relate to them what he ſaid; but he talked to them directly, perſonally: out of the midſt of the fire; in which he deſcended, and with which the mountain was burning all the time he was ſpeaking; which made it very awful and terrible, and pointed at the terrors of the legal diſpenſation.

v. 5. I ſtood between the Lord and you at that time, &c.] Between the Word of the Lord and you, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; that is, about that time, not at the exact preciſe time the ten commandments were delivered, for theſe were ſpoken immediately to the people; but when the ceremonial law was given, which was ordained by angels, in the hand of a mediator, Gal. iii. 19. and which was at the requeſt of the people as follows, terrified by the appearance of the fire out of which the moral law was delivered: to ſhew you the word of the Lord; not the decalogue, that they heard with their own ears, but the other laws which were afterwards given, that were of the ceremonial and judicial kind: for ye were afraid by reaſon of the fire, and went not up into the mount; leſt they ſhould be conſumed by it; and indeed bounds were ſet about the mount, and they were charged not to break through: ſaying; this word is in connexion with the preceding verſe, the Lord's talking out of the midſt of the fire, when he ſaid what follows.

v. 6. I am the Lord thy God, &c.] This is the preface to the ten commandments, and is the ſame with that in Exod. xx. 2. ſee the note there; and thoſe commands are here delivered in the ſame order, and pretty near in the ſame words, with a little variation, and a few additions; which I ſhall only obſerve, and refer to Exod. xx. for the ſenſe of the ſeveral laws.

v. 12. Keep the ſabbath-day to ſanctify it, &c.] Or obſerve it, by ſetting it apart as a time of natural reſt, and for the performance of holy and religious exerciſes; ſee Exod. xx. 8. where the phraſe is a little varied, remember the ſabbath-day to keep it holy; it having been inſtituted before: as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee; not at Sinai only, for the ſame might then have been obſerved of all the reſt of the commands, but before the giving of the law, at the firſt of the manna; ſee Exod. xvi. 23.

v. 14. Nor thine ox, nor thine aſs, &c.] In Exod. xx. 10. it is only in general ſaid, nor thy cattle; here by way of illuſtration and explanation the ox and the aſs are particularly mentioned; the one being uſed in plowing ground, and treading out the corn, and the other in carrying burdens; and it is added, nor any of thy cattle; as their camels, or whatever elſe they were wont to uſe in any kind of ſervice; they were none of them to do any kind of work on the ſabbath-day. The following clauſe alſo is not uſed before, which expreſſes the end of this inſtitution: that thy man-ſervant and thy maid-ſervant may have reſt as well as thee; which if the cattle had not reſt, they could not have, being obliged to attend them at the plow or elſewhere; and this reſpects not only hired, but bond-ſervants and maidens.

v. 15. And remember that thou waſt a ſervant in the land of Egypt, &c.] Even a bond-ſervant; for Egypt was an houſe of bondage, and there the Iſraelites were made to ſerve in hard bondage; of which they are reminded, that their hearts might be touched with it, and inclined to ſhew pity to perſons in ſomewhat ſimilar circumſtances; calling to mind how ſweet a little reſt would have been unto them when in Egypt: and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand and by a ſtretched out arm; ſignifying that their deliverance from their ſtate of bondage was not owing to themſelves, nor to any creature, but to the mercy and kindneſs of God, and to his almighty power; and therefore they were under the greateſt obligations to obſerve any command and inſtitution of his he ſhould think fit to make; and particularly this of the ſabbath, which was made on that account, as follows: wherefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the ſabbath-day; in commemoration of their reſt from Egyptian bondage.

v. 16. Honour thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee, &c.] And is the firſt commandment with promiſe, as the apoſtle obſerves, Eph. vi. 2, 3. with a promiſe of long life and happineſs in the land of Canaan, as follows: that thy days may be prolonged; ſee Exod. xx. 12. here it is added, and that it may go well with thee; and which the apoſtle alſo has in the place referred to: in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee; the land of Canaan; which the ſame apoſtle explains to a greater latitude, that thou mayeſt live long on the earth; applying it to Chriſtians under the goſpel-diſpenſation, whether Jews or Gentiles.

v. 17, 18, 19, 20. Thou ſhalt not kill, &c.] The following commands begin with the copulative and, different from the manner in which they are expreſſed, Exod. xx. which joins theſe together, and them with the preceding ones; hence the law is by ſome ſaid to be one copulative, and may ſerve to illuſtrate a paſſage in Jam. ii. 10.

v. 21. Neither ſhalt thou deſire thy Neighbour's wife, &c.] Here a neighbour's wife is put before his houſe, different from Exod. xx. 17. and his field is added, which with what follows take in every thing that is a man's property; and which is not to be deſired or coveted in an unlawful manner by another, and much leſs ſhould any means be made uſe of to deprive him of it; but luſt is the thing intended and prohibited, be it after what it may, which is another man's; ſee Matth. v. 28. Rom. vii. 7. of a man's field, ſee Iſ. v. 8. Mic. ii. 2.

v. 22. Theſe words the Lord ſpake unto all your aſſembly in the mount, &c.] The above ten words or commands, which were ſpoken ſo audibly and loudly by the Lord himſelf on mount Sinai, that the whole congregation of the people of Iſrael heard them: out of the midſt of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkneſs; in which the Lord was; ſee ch. iv. 11. with a great voice, and he added no more; ceaſed ſpeaking; after he had delivered the ten commands, he ſaid no more at that time. The Targum of Jonathan is, "with a great voice which ceaſed not." It ceaſed not until all were delivered, and then it did; it was a continued voice, yet clear and diſtinct: and he wrote them in two tables of ſtone; marble ſtone, as the Targum of Jonathan; which is much more likely than what the paraphraſe has on ch. iv. 13. this is an emblem of the duration of the law: and delivered them unto me; to Moſes, and by him to be delivered to the people, who though they had heard them would be apt to forget them; and therefore they were written, that they might read them, and meditate on them, and be careful to keep them.

v. 23. And it came to paſs when ye heard the voice out of the midſt of the darkneſs, &c.] The thick darkneſs, where God was, and with which the mountain was covered, Exod xx. 21. for the mountain did burn with fire; which is a reaſon both why the Lord ſpoke out of the midſt of the fire, the the mountain on which he deſcended burning with it; and alſo for his ſpeaking out of the midſt of darkneſs, becauſe not only a thick cloud covered the mountain, but it was altogether on a ſmoke, which aſcended as the ſmoke of a furnace, Exod. xix. 16, 18. That ye come near unto me, even all the heads of your tribes and your elders; or wiſe-men, as the Targum of Jonathan; by which it appears that not only the common people were affrighted at what they heard and ſaw on mount Sinai, but thoſe of the firſt rank and eminence among them, who were the moſt famous for their authority and wiſdom.

℣. 24. And ye ſaid, behold the Lord our God hath ſhewed us his glory and his greatneſs, &c.] In deſcending on mount Sinai in the manner he did, and giving the law from thence with ſuch ſolemnity; for there was a glory in the miniſtration of it, as the apoſtle argues 2 Cor. iii. 7—11. it being delivered with ſo much majeſty, and ſuch a glorious apparatus attending it; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 2. Aben Ezra interprets this of the appearance of fire in which the Lord was, and his greatneſs, of the thunders and lightnings, and the voice of the trumpet: and we have heard his voice out of the midſt of the fire; the ten words, as the ſame interpreter rightly notes, which were vocally and audibly expreſſed out of the fire: we have ſeen this day, that God doth talk with man, and he liveth; they had proof of it in themſelves; God had been talking with them out of the fire, and yet it did not reach and conſume them, but they were ſtill alive.

℣. 25. Now therefore why ſhould we die, &c.] Since we are now alive, and have ſo wonderfully eſcaped the danger we were expoſed unto, let us be careful that we are not liable to it again: for this great fire will conſume us; if it continues, and we are expoſed to it; perhaps ſome of them might remember the fire that burnt in the uttermoſt parts of the camp at Taberah, and the deſtruction of Korah and the 250 men with him by fire, Numb. xi. 1. and xvi. 35. if we hear the voice of the Lord our God any more, then we ſhall die; for it was ſuch a voice of words, they could not endure as to the matter of them, and therefore intreated the word might not be ſpoken to them any more; it being the killing letter, and the miniſtration of condemnation and death; and the manner in which it was delivered was ſo terrible, that they concluded they could not live, but muſt die if they heard it again; and imagined that if the fire continued, the flames of it would ſpread and reach them, and they would not be able to eſcape them.

℣. 26. For who is there of all fleſh, &c.] What man was there in any age, that was ever heard of or can be named: that hath heard the voice of the living God; who lives in and of himſelf, and is the author and giver of life to all his creatures, whereby he is diſtinguiſhed from and is oppoſed unto the lifeleſs deities of the Gentiles; and which makes him and his voice heard the more awful and tremendous, and eſpecially as ſpeaking out of the midſt of the fire; which was the preſent caſe: as we have and lived? of this there never was the like inſtance; for though ſome had ſeen God and lived, as Jacob did, and therefore called the name of the place where he ſaw him Penuel, Gen. xxxii. 30. and Moſes had heard the voice of the angel of the Lord out of a buſh, which ſeemed to be burning, and was not conſumed, Exod. iii. 2, 4. yet none ever heard the voice of the Lord out of real fire, and particularly expreſſing ſuch words as he did, but the Iſraelites. Zoroaſtres, the founder of the Magi among the Perſians, and of their religion, ſeems to have had reſpect to this, and to have applied falſly this to himſelf, which belonged to Moſes and the people of Iſrael; for it is ſaid[k], "one "reaſon the Perſians have fire in ſo much venera- "tion is, becauſe they ſay that Zoroaſtres being "caught up to heaven, did not ſee God, but "heard him ſpeaking with him out of the midſt of "fire."

℣. 27. Go thou near, &c] To the mount, and to God on it: and hear all that the Lord our God ſhall ſay; for they ſuppoſed by the continuance of the Lord on the mount, and the fire burning on it, that he had more to ſay, which they were not averſe to hear; but deſired it might be not immediately delivered to them, but by the means of Moſes; the ſound of the words, and the ſight of the fire, being ſo terrible to them: and ſpeak thou unto us all that the Lord our God ſhall ſpeak unto thee; they did not doubt, knowing the faithfulneſs of Moſes, his declaring all unto them that ſhould be told him by the Lord; and they were deſirous that he ſhould, they did not want to have any thing withheld from them, only they could not bear to ſee and hear things immediately from the Lord: and we will hear it and do it; hearken to it, and receive it as the word of God, and not man, and yield a ready and chearful obedience, even to every thing that ſhould be required; ſee Exod. xx. 19. and xxiv. 3—7.

℣. 28 And the Lord heard the voice of your words, when ye ſpake unto me, &c.] Not only in a general way, as he hears and knows all that is ſpoken by men; for there is not a word on the tongue, formed upon it, and uttered by it, but what is altogether known to him; but in a ſpecial and particular manner obſerved, took notice of, approved, and was well pleaſed with what theſe people ſaid: and the Lord ſaid unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this people which they have ſpoken unto thee; not only heard the ſound of them, but took notice of the ſenſe and meaning of them, and liſtened to them with pleaſure and delight: they have well ſaid all that they have ſpoken; expreſſing ſuch an awe and reverence of the divine majeſty, deſiring to have a mediator between God and them, and purpoſing and promiſing to hearken to and obey whatſoever he ſhould command by him.

℣. 29. Oh that there were ſuch an heart in them, &c.] Not that there is properly ſpeaking ſuch volitions and wiſhes in God; but, as Aben Ezra obſerves, the ſcripture ſpeaks after the language of the children of men; and may be conſidered as upbraiding them with want of ſuch an heart, and with weakneſs to do what they had promiſed; and at moſt as approving of thoſe things they ſpoke of as grateful to him, and profitable to them: the words may be rendered, who will give[l] that they had ſuch an heart; not to me, but to them, as Aben Ezra notes; they can't give it to themſelves, nor can any creature give it to them; none but God can, and therefore they ought to have prayed to him to give them an heart to hearken and do; agreeable to which is the Arabic verſion, "it "is to be wiſhed by them, that ſuch an heart "would continue with them;" which they by their language ſignified was in them: that they would fear me; which is not naturally in the heart of

of man, is a gift of God, a part of the covenant of grace, is implanted in regeneration, and is no inconſiderable branch of it; it is oppoſed to pride, and is conſiſtent with faith and joy, and is increaſed by views of the grace and goodneſs of God, and is a diſtinguiſhing character of a good man: and keep all my commandments always; not only one but all, and not only at ſome certain times but continually; and which are to be kept in faith from a principle of love, with a view to the glory of God, and in the ſtrength of Chriſt; and to this the fear of God is neceſſary, for where there is no fear of God, there is no regard to his commandments; but where there is a reverential fear of God, there are faith, hope, love, and every other grace; yea, the Spirit, the author of all, who is in the ſaints to enable them to walk in the ſtatutes of the Lord, and to keep his judgments and do them; and ſuch keep the commandments of God, not from a ſlaviſh fear, but from a ſenſe of divine goodneſs: that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever; for the fear of God, and the keeping of his commandments, iſſue in the good of men, in their own good, their inward peace, and ſpiritual welfare; in the good of others, their neighbours, ſervants, and children, by way of example and inſtruction; and even in the public peace and proſperity of a nation in which they dwell: not that theſe things are meritorious of eternal life, but are what are approved of by the Lord, and are grateful to him; which is the chief view in the expreſſion of the text.

℣. 30. Go ſay to them, get you into your tents again;] Which they had left, being brought by Moſes at the direction of God to the foot of mount Sinai, to receive the law from his mouth; this being done they are ordered to return to their tents again, to their families, wives, and children.

℣. 31. But as for thee, ſtand thou here by me, &c.] On the mount by him whither he was called up; Moſes was not permitted to go to his tent when the children of Iſrael were, but was ordered to wait upon the Lord to receive inſtructions from him, which he was to communicate to the people, being a kind of a mediator between God and them, as they requeſted, and which was granted them: and I will ſpeak unto thee all the commandments, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments; all laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, which belong to them as men, as in a church-ſtate, and members of a body-politic: which thou ſhalt teach them, that they may do them; for all doctrine is in order to practice, without which all inſtructions, and theoretical notions, ſignify little; and theſe they were more eſpecially to do, and ſome of them peculiarly, in the land which I give them to poſſeſs it; the land of Canaan, and which laid on them no ſmall obligation to do the commandments of God; ſince of his free favour and good will, and as a pure gift of his, he had beſtowed upon them a land flowing with milk and honey, into which he was juſt now about to bring them; as nothing can more ſtrongly engage ſouls to a chearful obedience to the ſervice of God, whether in private or in public, than the conſideration of the great and good things which God of his rich grace beſtows upon them, and has promiſed to them, and prepared for them, and will quickly put them into the poſſeſſion of; and upon ſuch an account Moſes preſſes the obſervance of the commands of God in the following verſes.

℣. 32. Ye ſhall obſerve to do therefore as the Lord your God doth command you, &c.] Obſerve every precept as to matter and manner which the Lord has commanded, and that under a ſenſe of the great obligations laid on them by him, in giving them freely ſo good a land to poſſeſs: you ſhall not turn to the right hand or to the left; but walk in the way of the commandments of God, and not depart from them at all, but follow the Lord in his own ways fully. The phraſe is expreſſive of a ſtrict and cloſe attention to the word of God, without deviating from it in the leaſt; for every ſin, which is a tranſgreſſion of ſome command of God or another, is a going out of the way that directs unto; ſee Iſ. xxx. 21.

℣. 33. Ye ſhall walk in all the ways which the Lord your God hath commanded you, &c.] None are to be avoided or departed from on any conſideration whatever; ſee Pſ. cxix. 6. an inſtance of this we have in Zacharias and Elizabeth, Luke i. 6. that ye may live; corporally, comfortably in all the outward enjoyments of life needful for them, particularly in the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, and the benefits of it; for theſe promiſes of life upon obedience ſeem to reach no farther, unleſs as types and emblems of what is enjoyed through the obedience and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as the following phraſes ſhew: and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye ſhall poſſeſs; the land of Canaan; though the Jewiſh writers [m] carry it farther, even to heaven and eternal happineſs; and ſo may we in the ſenſe before given.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter Moſes proceeds on in his exhortations to the people of Iſrael, to attend to the commandments of God, that it might be well with them, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and begins with a principal and fundamental article of religion, which deſerved their firſt and chief regard, the unity of God, and the love of him, ℣. 4, 5. which they were carefully to inſtruct their children in, and ever to be mindful of themſelves, ℣. 6—9. and when they were come into the land of Canaan, and into a plentiful enjoyment of all good things in it, they are exhorted to be careful not to forget the Lord their kind benefactor; but to fear him, ſerve him, and not go after other gods, ſince he is jealous of his honour and worſhip, ℣. 10—15. and not to tempt him, as they had done, but diligently keep his commandments, that it might be well with them in that land, ℣. 16—19. and when their children enquired the reaſon and meaning of ſuch teſtimonies, ſtatutes, and judgments, that were enjoined them, they were to give them the hiſtory of their caſe in Egypt, their deliverance from thence, the wonders that were wrought for them, and the introduction of them into the good land of Canaan; and to let them know that theſe commands were ſome of them in commemoration of theſe bleſſings; and by theſe they were laid under obligation to regard them all, and the rather ſince they were not only for the glory of God, but for their own good, ℣. 20—25.

℣. 1.

[m] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 27. p. 418.

℣. 1. Now theſe are the commandments, the ſtatutes, and the judgments, &c.] Not the ten commandments repeated in the preceding chapter, but all others, whether moral, ceremonial, or judicial, afterwards declared; for what Moſes now did was only to give a repetition and freſh declaration of ſuch laws as he had before received, and delivered to the people; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan thus paraphraſes this clauſe, "this is a declaration of "the commandments, ſtatutes, and judgments:" which the Lord your God commanded to teach you; that is, which he commanded him, Moſes, to teach them, though not fully expreſſed, as may be learned from ch. iv. 1, 5. and v. 31. that ye might do them in the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it; this is often obſerved, to imprint upon their minds a ſenſe of their duty, even of obedience to the laws of God, which they were carefully and diligently to perform in the land of Canaan they were going into, and by which they were to hold their poſſeſſion of it.

℣. 2. That thou mighteſt fear the Lord thy God, &c.] Being taught to know the greatneſs of his being, and the nature of his mind and will, and the manner of his worſhip; and not with a ſlaviſh fear, but with a filial one, a reverential affection for God; being inſtructed in their duty, as of children, to their God and father; ſee ch. v. 29. to keep all his ſtatutes, and his commandments, which I command thee; not in his own name, but in the name, and by the authority of God, whoſe miniſter and meſſenger he was; and all, having the ſtamp of divine authority on them, were to be obſerved and kept, and not one to be neglected or departed from: thou and thy ſon, and thy ſon's ſon, all the days of thy life; a man and his children, and grandchildren; he was to take care, that they kept all the commandments of the Lord as long as he lived, and had any concern with them: and that thy days may be prolonged; long life being reckoned a very great outward mercy; a long enjoyment of, and continuance in the land of Canaan, is chiefly deſigned, which is uſually expreſſed when this is obſerved; ſee ch. iv. 26, 40. and v. 16, 33.

℣. 3. Hear therefore, O Iſrael, and obſerve to do it, &c.] Or them, the commandments given them: that it may be well with thee; in body and eſtate: and that ye may increaſe mightily; not only in wealth and riches, but chiefly in numbers: as the Lord God of thy fathers hath promiſed thee; a promiſe of increaſe of numbers was frequently made to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; as that their ſeed ſhould be as the ſtars of heaven, and as the duſt of the earth, and the ſand on the ſea-ſhore innumerable; ſee Gen. xv. 5. and xxii. 17. and xxvi. 4. and xxviii. 14. and this eſpecially in the land that floweth with milk and honey; a very common periphraſis of the land of Canaan, becauſe of the plenty of good things in it; ſee Exod. iii. 8.

℣. 4. Hear, O Iſrael, &c.] Theſe are the words of Moſes, ſtirring up the people to an attention to what he was about to ſay of this great and momentous article the unity of God, to prevent their going into polytheiſm and idolatry. From one of the words here uſed, the Jews call this ſection Kiriath-ſhema, which they oblige themſelves to read twice a day, morning and evening [n]; the laſt letter of the firſt word in this verſe, Shema, hear, and the laſt letter of the laſt word in it, Echad, one, are greater than ordinary; which ſeems deſigned to excite the attention to what is contained in this paſſage: the Lord our God is one Lord; the doctrine of which is, that the Lord who was the covenant-God and father of his people Iſrael, is but one Jehovah; he is Jehovah, the being of beings, a ſelf-exiſtent being, eternal and immutable; and he is but one in nature and eſſence; this appears from the perfection of his nature, his eternity, omnipotence, omnipreſence, infinity, goodneſs, ſelf-ſufficiency, and perfection; for there can be but one eternal, one omnipotent, one omnipreſent, one infinite, one that is originally and of himſelf good; one ſelf, and all ſufficient, and perfect being; and which alſo may be concluded from his being the firſt cauſe of all things, which can be but one; and from his relations to his creatures, as their king, ruler, governor, and law-giver. And for this purpoſe theſe words are cited in Mark xii. 29, 30. but then they no ways contradict the doctrine of a Trinity of perſons in the unity of the divine eſſence, the Father, Word, and holy Spirit, which three are one; the one God. the one Jehovah, as here expreſſed; ſee 1 Joh. v. 7. and ſo the ancient Jews underſtood this paſſage. In an ancient book of theirs it is ſaid [o] Jehovah, Elohenu, Jehovah, (i. e. Jehovah, our God, Jehovah); theſe are the three degrees with reſpect to this ſublime myſtery; in the beginning God (Elohim) created the heavens and the earth; and again [p] Jehovah, Elohenu Jehovah, they are one; the three forms (modes or things) which are one; and elſwhere [q] it is obſerved, there are two, and one is joined to them, and they are three; and when the three are one, he ſays to (or of) them, theſe are the two names which Iſrael heard, Jehovah, Jehovah, and Elohenu (our God) is joined unto them; and it is the ſeal of the ring of truth, and when they are joined they are one in one unity; which is illuſtrated by the three names the ſoul of man is called by, the ſoul, ſpirit, and breath; and elſwhere they ſay [r] the holy bleſſed God, and his ſhekinah, are called one; ſee Joh. x. 30.

℣. 5. And thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God, &c.] Which is the firſt and chief commandment in the law, the ſum and ſubſtance of the firſt table of it; and includes in it, or at leaſt has connected with it, knowledge of God, eſteem of him, delight in him, faith and truſt in him, fear and worſhip of him, and obedience to him, which when right ſprings from it. God is to be loved becauſe of the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hand, of nature, providence, and grace; and becauſe of the relations he ſtands in to men, and eſpecially to his own people; and becauſe of his peculiar love to them; and indeed he is to be loved by all men for his care of them, and bleſſings of goodneſs beſtowed on them; the manner in which this is to be done follows: with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy might; with a ſuperlative love, above all creatures whatever; with the whole of the affections of the heart, with great fervency and ardour of ſpirit, in the ſincerity of the ſoul, and with all the ſtrength of grace a man has, with ſuch love that is as ſtrong as death. Jarchi interprets loving God with all the heart, that is, with thy heart not divided about God, a heart not divided between God and the creature; all thy might he interprets of mammon or ſubſtance; and indeed that is one way in which men may ſhew their love to God, by by laying out their ſubſtance in his ſervice, and for the ſupport of his cauſe and intereſt in the world. Aben Ezra by the heart underſtands knowledge, and by the ſoul the ſpirit of man that is in his body, and by might perfect love in the heart.

℣. 6. And theſe words which I command thee this day, &c.] To hearken to, obſerve, and take notice of, that God is one, and is to be loved in the ſtrongeſt manner that poſſibly can be: ſhall be in thine heart; on the table of the heart, as the Targum of Jonathan; ſee 2 Cor. iii. 3. be cordially received, have a place in the affections of the heart, and be retained in mind and memory.

℣. 7. And thou ſhalt teach them diligently unto thy children, &c.] Care and diligence are to be uſed, and pains taken, to inſtruct children as ſoon as they are capable in the knowledge of God, and of his commandments; that they are to love him, fear him, ſerve, and worſhip him; this is to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, Eph. vi. 4. it may be rendered thou ſhalt whet or ſharpen them [s], the words or commandments; it is expreſſive of diligence and induſtry in teaching, by frequent repetition of things, by inculcating them continually into their minds, endeavouring to imprint them there, that they may be ſharp, ready, and expert in them: and ſhalt talk of them when thou ſitteſt in thine houſe; at the time of meals, or at leiſure-hours, or even when employed in any buſineſs in the houſe which will admit of it; every opportunity ſhould be taken to inſtil the knowledge of divine things into their tender minds: and when thou walkeſt by the way; in a journey, and any of his children with him; or for diverſion, in the garden, field, or vineyard; occaſion may be taken on ſight of any of the works of creation to lead into a diſcourſe concerning God, his nature, perfections, and works, and the obligations his creatures lie under to love, fear, and ſerve him: and when thou lieſt down, and when thou riſeſt up; at the time of going to bed, and riſing from it; which as they are ſeaſons of prayer to God, may be improved in inſtruction of children.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt bind them for a ſign upon thine hand, &c.] As a man ties any thing to his hand for a token, that he may remember ſomewhat he is deſirous of; though the Jews underſtand this literally, of binding a ſcroll of parchment with this ſection and others written in it, upon their left hand, as the Targum of Jonathan here interprets the hand: and they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes; and which the ſame Targum interprets of the Tephilim, or phylacteries, which the Jews wear upon their foreheads, and on their arms, and ſo Jarchi; of which ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 5.

℣. 9. And thou ſhalt write them upon the poſts of thine houſe, and on thy gates;] To put them in mind of them when they went out and came in, that they might be careful to obſerve them; this the Jews take literally alſo, and write in a ſcroll of parchment this ſection with ſome paſſages; and, as the Targum of Jonathan here, fix them in three places, over againſt the bed-chamber, upon the poſts of the houſe, and on the gate at the right hand of it; and this is what they call the Mezuzah; and the account given of it is this. In a parchment prepared for the purpoſe, they write the words in Deut. vi. 4. to the 9th, and ch. xi. 13. to the 20th, and then roll up the parchment, and write on it Shaddai; and put it either into a cane (or reed) or elſe into a like hollow piece of wood, and ſo faſten it to the wall on the poſts of the door at the right hand of entrance; and thus as often as they go in and out, they make it a part of their devotion to touch this parchment, and kiſs it [t].

℣. 10. And it ſhall be when the Lord thy God ſhall have brought thee into the land, &c.] The land of Canaan, on the borders of which they now were, and were juſt going into: which he ſware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob, to give thee; of his own free favour and good will, without any merit and deſert of theirs, and in which would be found great and goodly cities, which thou buildedſt not; large and capacious, delightfully ſituated, well built, and ſtrongly fortified, without any pains or expence of theirs; all ready for them to take poſſeſſion of, and dwell in; and ſo ſhould no longer reſide in tents or booths, as they had for forty years paſt, but in ſpacious and noble cities.

℣. 11. And houſes full of all good things which thou filledſt not, &c.] Not only full of good, convenient, and rich houſhold furniture, but of the fruits of the earth, of corn, and wine, and oil, and alſo perhaps of gold and ſilver: and wells digged, which thou diggedſt not; which in thoſe hot and dry countries were in much eſteem, and of great worth; ſee Gen. xxvi. 18—22. vineyards and olive-trees which thou plantedſt not; which Canaan abounded with much more than Egypt, where there were but few vines and olive-trees, though of both theſe there were more where the Iſraelites lived than elſe where; ſee the note on Gen. xlvii. 11. and theſe therefore might be ſuch as they had ſeen in Egypt, in that part of it in which they dwelt, Goſhen, which was in the Heracleotic nome, and that Strabo [u] ſays only produced perfect olives and fruit-bearing trees, but the reſt of Egypt wanted oil; and this nome is the ſame which the Arabs now call the province of Fium, of which Leo Africanus [w] ſays, it produces a large quantity of olives; ſo that this might be obſerved for the encouragement of the Iſraelites: when thou ſhalt have eaten and be full; having ſuch plenty of good things the land would furniſh them with.

℣. 12. Then beware leſt thou forget the Lord, &c.] To love, fear, and worſhip him, and keep his commands; creature-enjoyments being apt to get poſſeſſion of the heart, and the affections of it; ſee Prov. xxx. 9. which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage; into a land abounding with all the above good things, and therefore under the higheſt obligations to remember the Lord and his kindneſſes, and to ſerve and glorify him; ſee Exod. xx. 2.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him, &c.] Serve him through fear; not through ſlaviſh fear, a fear of hell and damnation; but through filial fear, a reverential affection for that God that had brought them out of a ſtate of bondage into great and glorious liberty, out of Egypt into Canaan's land, out of a place of miſery into a land of plenty; and therefore ſhould fear the Lord and his goodneſs, and from ſuch a fear of him ſerve him, in every part of worſhip public and private enjoined; this paſſage Chriſt refers to in Matt. iv. 10. and ſhalt ſwear by his name; when they made a covenant with any, or were called to bear a teſtimony for the deciſion of any controverſy which which could not be otherwiſe finiſhed; or whenever they took an oath on any account, which ſhould never be taken raſhly or on any trivial account, and much leſs falſly; it ſhould be taken not in the name of any idol, or of any other but the true and living God; the Targum of Jonathan is, "in the "name of the Word of the Lord, in truth ye ſhall "ſwear."

℣. 14. Ye ſhall not go after other gods, &c.] To ſerve and worſhip them, and ſwear by them; and which indeed are no gods, only nominal and fictitious ones; idols which are nothing in the world, and ought to have no veneration and adoration given them; to go after them is to worſhip them, and this is to depart from the true God, and go a whoring after falſe deities: of the Gods of the people which are round about you; the gods of the Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, Philiſtines, and Egyptians; all of which had their peculiar deities.

℣. 15. For the Lord thy God is a jealous God among you, &c.] He was near to them, in the midſt of them, his tabernacle being placed between their camps; and was a God jealous of his honour and glory in matters of worſhip, and would reſent any affront given him in that way: leſt the anger of the Lord thy God be kindled againſt thee; there being nothing more apt to ſtir up his wrath than idolatry: and deſtroy thee from off the face of the earth; ſuffer them to be carried captive out of their own land, and to be ſcattered among the nations of the world, and be utterly deſtroyed.

℣. 16. Ye ſhall not tempt the Lord your God, &c.] By ſtriving with him or againſt him, by murmuring at or complaining of his providential dealings with them, or by requring a ſign of him, or miracles to be done by him; this is another paſſage uſed by Chriſt to repel the temptations of Satan, Matt. iv. 7. as ye tempted him in Maſſah; a place ſo called from the Iſraelites tempting the Lord there, Exod. xvii. 7. the Targum of Jonathan adds, with ten temptations; ſee Numb. xiv. 21.

℣. 17. You ſhall diligently keep the commandments of the Lord your God, &c.] Not only the ten commands, but all others: and his teſtimonies, and his ſtatutes, which he hath commanded thee; thoſe of a judicial and ceremonial kind.

℣. 18. And thou ſhalt do that which is right and good in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] And what is ſuch, appears from the declaration of his mind and will in the commandments he has given, and obeying which is therefore doing what is right and good; for his commandment is holy, juſt, and good, being agreeable both to his nature and will, Rom. vii. 12. that it may be well with thee; as it is with thoſe that fear God, and keep his commandments: and that thou mayeſt go in and poſſeſs the good land, which the Lord ſware unto thy fathers; to give to them and to their poſterity, even the land of Canaan; but if they did not what was right and good in the ſight of God, they might expect to be kept out of it, as their immediate parents were, whoſe carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs.

℣. 19. To caſt out all thine enemies from before thee, &c.] This the Lord promiſed, and as it ſeems with an oath, that he would do for them; drive out their enemies, and make way for the ſettlement of them in their country: as the Lord hath ſpoken; ſee Gen. xv. 18, 19, 20. and xxii. 17. Exod. xxiii. 28.

℣. 20. And when thy ſon aſketh thee in time to come, &c.] Or to morrow [x]; that is, in after times, as Jarchi interprets it; any time after this, and particularly after they were come into the land of Canaan, when the ſeveral laws, ſtatutes, and ordinances appointed, would take place and be obeyed: what mean the teſtimonies, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments, which the Lord our God hath commanded you? what is the reaſon of the various rites, cuſtoms, and uſages, the obſervance of which is directed to, ſuch as the feaſts of paſſover, pentecoſt, tabernacles, ſacrifices, and other duties of religion.

℣. 21. Then ſhalt thou ſay unto thy ſon, &c.] In order to lead him into the ſpring and original of them, and to acquaint him with the goodneſs of God, which laid them under obligation to obſerve them: we were Pharaoh's bondmen in Egypt; were brought into bondage and ſlavery to Pharaoh king of Egypt, into whoſe country their anceſtors came, and where they reſided many years, and at length were reduced to the utmoſt ſervitude and miſery: and the Lord brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand; by the exertion of his mighty power, which the Egyptians and their king could not withſtand, as a token of his care and kindneſs to us; by the ties of which we are bound in gratitude to obſerve his commands. The Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord brought us, &c." and it was Chriſt the Son of God that was from firſt to laſt concerned in that affair, even from the appearance to Moſes in the buſh to Iſrael's coming out of Egypt.

℣. 22. And the Lord ſhewed ſigns and wonders, great and ſore, &c.] Meaning the ten plagues, which were ſigns of the power of God, marvellous works, great above the power of nature, and very ſore or evil [y]; very diſtreſſing to the Egyptians; for they came and lay heavy upon Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his houſhold before our eyes; upon the king, his courtiers, and the whole land, and which were done publickly in the ſight of the people of Iſrael, as well as the Egyptians; and there were ſome then living, though at that time when wrought under twenty years, who ſaw with their own eyes what were done to them, and could never forget them. Here alſo the Targum of Jonathan has it, "and the Word of the Lord ſent ſigns, &c."

℣. 23. And he brought us out from thence, &c.] By means of thoſe miraculous plagues, even out of a ſtate of bondage and miſery; and in order that he might bring us in, to give us the land which he ſware unto our fathers; to bring them into the land of Canaan, give it to them, and put them in the poſſeſſion of it; and ſo fulfil his promiſe and his oath made to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob.

℣. 24. And the Lord commanded us to do all theſe ſtatutes, &c.] Some of which were deſigned on purpoſe to commemorate the wonderful deliverance out of Egypt, as particularly the paſſover; and all of them they were obliged in gratitude to obey, in conſideration of ſuch great favours beſtowed upon them: to fear the Lord our God for our good always; as it is always for the good of men, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, to fear the Lord; for there is no want to them that fear him, nor will the Lord withold good things from them; ſee Pſ. xxxiv. 9, 10. that he might preſerve us alive as it is at this day; in bodily health and ſtrength, and in the enjoyment enjoyment of the good land, and all the bleſſings and benefits of it.

℣. 25. And it ſhall be our righteouſneſs, &c.] Or a mercy, benefit, and bleſſing to us; or this ſhall be reckoned our righteouſneſs, and that by which we ſhall be juſtified: if we obſerve to do all theſe commandments before the Lord our God, as he hath commanded us; in order to have ſuch a juſtifying righteouſneſs, a man muſt keep all the commandments of God, not one excepted; and that perfectly, without the leaſt breach of them in thought, word, or deed; and that before the Lord, in his ſight, not as it may appear to a man himſelf, or to others, but as it appears to God, who ſees the heart, and weighs all actions; and a man muſt keep them in the manner the Lord has commanded, even with all his heart, ſoul, and ſtrength, as in ℣. 5. and this is not poſſible for a ſinful man to do; and therefore righteouſneſs cannot be by the law. Only Chriſt could thus keep all the commandments of God, and his obedience is our righteouſneſs; and he only is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believes, and to him we muſt ſeek for it.

CHAP. VII.

IN this chapter the Iſraelites are exhorted to deſtroy the ſeven nations of the land of Canaan, when they entered into it, and to make no alliances with them of any kind, nor ſuffer any remains of idolatry to continue, ℣. 1—5. to obſerve which and other commands of God, they are urged from the conſideration of their being freely choſen of God above all other people, and of their being redeemed out of the houſe of bondage, and of the Lord's being a covenant-keeping God to them, ℣. 6—11. and it is promiſed them for their further encouragement to keep the commands of God, that they ſhould have an increaſe of all temporal good things, and no evils and calamities ſhould come upon them, ℣. 12—16. and leſt they ſhould be diſheartened at the numbers and might of their enemies, they are put in mind of what God had done for them in Egypt, and of what he had promiſed to do for them now, ℣. 17—20. and they are aſſured that the nations ſhould be caſt out before them by little and little, until they were utterly deſtroyed, ℣. 21—24. and the chapter is concluded with an exhortation to deſtroy their images, and not admit any thing of that ſort to be brought into their houſes, ℣. 25, 26.

℣. 1. When the Lord thy God ſhall bring thee into the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, &c.] The land of Canaan they were juſt now going into to take poſſeſſion of; their introduction into which is here, as in many other places, aſcribed not to themſelves, or their leaders, but to the Lord as their covenant-God: and hath caſt out many nations before thee; even all that were in it, the ſeven following: the Hittites, and the Girgaſhites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebuſites; the Canaanites were a particular nation in the land of Canaan, which had their name from Canaan himſelf; the reſt were called from ſeveral ſons of his; ſee Gen. x. 15, 16, 17. the country of the Gergaſenes, the ſame with the Girgaſhites, continued its name unto the times of Chriſt, Matt. viii. 28. ſeven nations greater and mightier than thou; more in number, and more robuſt in body, ſome being of a gigantic ſtature; there were ten of theſe nations in Abraham's time, three of them were ſince ſunk or ſwallowed up among the reſt, the Kenites, and Kenizzites, and the Rephaim; for inſtead of the Kadmonites the Hivites are here put, which ſeem to be the ſame.

℣. 2. And when the Lord thy God ſhall deliver them before thee, &c.] Into their hands: thou ſhalt ſmite them, and utterly deſtroy them; men, women, and children; which was ordered not merely to make way and room for the people of Iſrael to inherit their land, but as a puniſhment for capital crimes they had been guilty of, ſuch as idolatry, inceſt, murder, &c. wherefore though they were reprieved for a while for Iſrael's ſake, till their time was come to poſſeſs the land, they were at length righteouſly puniſhed; which obſerved, abates the ſeeming ſeverity exerciſed upon them: thou ſhalt make no covenant with them; to dwell in their cities and houſes, and enjoy their lands and eſtates, on any condition whatever; and though they did make a league with the Gibeonites, that was obtained by fraud, they pretending not to be of the land of Canaan, but to come from a very diſtant country: nor ſhew mercy unto them; by ſparing their lives, beſtowing any favours upon them, or giving them any help and aſſiſtance when in diſtreſs: the Jews extend this to all other heathen nations beſides theſe ſeven; wherefore, if an Iſraelite, as Maimonides [z] ſays, ſhould ſee a Gentile periſhing, or plunged into a river, he may not take him out, nor adminiſter medicine to a ſick perſon. Hence Juvenal [a] the poet upbraids them with their unkindneſs and incivility; and ſays that Moſes delivered it as a Jewiſh law, in a ſecret volume of his, perhaps referring to this book of Deuteronomy, that the Jews might not direct a poor traveller in his way unleſs he was one of their religion, nor one athirſt to a fountain of water; and which led Tacitus [b], the heathen hiſtorian, to make this remark upon them, that they entertained an hoſtile hatred againſt all other people.

℣. 3. Neither ſhalt thou make marriages with them, &c.] Unleſs they became proſelytes, as Rahab, who was married by Salmon, and ſo thoſe of other nations, as Ruth the Moabiteſs, and ſo any captive taken in war; otherwiſe it was not lawful, bad conſequences have followed upon it, which it is the deſign of this law to prevent; that is, being enſnared and drawn aſide into idolatry, which was the caſe of Solomon: thy daughter thou ſhalt not give unto his ſon, nor his daughter ſhalt thou take unto thy ſon; for according to the Targum of Jonathan, whoſoever marries with them, it is as if he married with their idols; and this law, according to the Jewiſh writers [c], is binding with reſpect to other nations beſides the ſeven; and whoſoever marries any heathen, of whatſoever nation, is to be beaten.

℣. 4. For they will turn away thy ſon from following me, &c.] From the pure worſhip of God, his word, ſtatutes, and ordinances: that they may ſerve other gods; worſhip their idols; that is, the daughters of heathens, married to the ſons of Iſraelites, would entice them from the worſhip of the true God.

God to idolatry; ſo the Targum of Jonathan; as Solomon's wives drew him aſide: or he will turn away thy ſon [d]; meaning, as Jarchi obſerves, that the ſon of an heathen that marries the daughter of an Iſraelite, will turn away the ſon born of her to idolatry, called here the grandfather's ſon; though Aben Ezra ſays this reſpects the ſon mentioned in the preceding verſe, that is, the ſon married to an heathen woman, and not to a ſon born in ſuch marriage: ſo will the anger of the Lord be kindled againſt you, and deſtroy thee ſuddenly; by ſome immediate judgment ſtriking dead at once; there being nothing more provoking to God than idolatry, that being directly contrary to his being, nature, perfections, honour, and glory, of which he is jealous.

℣. 5. But thus ſhall ye deal with them, &c.] The inhabitants of the land of Canaan: ye ſhall deſtroy their altars; on which they ſacrificed to their idols: and break down their images; of their gods, and the ſtatues and pillars erected to the honour of them: and cut down their groves; ſacred to idols, which were uſually planted on hills, and about heathen temples, and under which idols were placed to be worſhipped. The Targum of Jonathan calls them trees of their adoration, under which they worſhipped; though there was a worſhip paid to them, not indeed directly to them, or for their ſakes, but for the ſake of the idols they were ſacred to, or were placed under them; ſo Maimonides [e] ſays a tree which at firſt was planted to be worſhipped, is forbidden of any uſe (or profit); and this is the אשרה or grove ſpoken of in the law, a tree planted and lopped, of which a graven image is made for an idol; and ſo the tree that has been worſhipped, though the body of it is not forbidden, all the ſhoots and leaves, and the branches, and the fruits it produces all the time it is worſhipped, are forbidden to be uſed: though the word here uſed ſometimes ſeems to ſignify, not a grove of trees, but ſome image itſelf, ſince we read of it in the temple, 2 Kings xxi. 7. and xxiii. 6. and burn their graven images with fire; diſtinguiſhed from their molten images, which may be meant in a preceding clauſe, and which are particularly mentioned as to be deſtroyed as well as theſe, Numb. xxxiii. 52.

℣. 6. For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God, &c.] Not ſanctified in a ſpiritual ſenſe, or having principles of grace and holineſs in them, from whence holy actions ſprang, at leaſt not all of them; but they were ſeparated from all other people in the world to the pure worſhip and ſervice of God in an external manner, and therefore were to avoid all idolatry, and every appearance of it: the Lord thy God hath choſen thee to be a ſpecial people unto himſelf, above all people that are upon the face of the earth; for ſpecial ſervice and worſhip, and to enjoy ſpecial privileges and benefits, civil and religious; though they were not choſen to ſpecial grace here, and eternal glory hereafter; at leaſt not all of them, only a remnant according to the election of grace; yet they were typical of the choſen people of God in a ſpecial ſenſe; who are choſen out of the world to be a peculiar people, to be holy here and happy hereafter; to enjoy communion with God in this life and that to come, as well as to ſerve and glorify him now and for evermore.

℣. 7. The Lord did not ſet his love upon you, nor chuſe you, &c.] He had done both, and the one as the effect and evidence of the other; he loved them, and therefore he choſe them; but neither of them, becauſe ye were more in number than any people; not for the quantity of them, nor even for the quality of them: for ye were the feweſt of all people; fewer than the Egyptians, from whence they came, and than the Canaanites they were going to drive out and inherit their land, ℣. 1. Thoſe whom God has loved with an everlaſting love, and as a fruit of it has choſen them in Chriſt before the world began to grace and glory, holineſs and happineſs, are but a ſmall number, a little flock; though many are called, few are choſen; nor are they better than others, being by nature children of wrath even as others, and as to their outward circumſtances the poor of this world.

℣. 8. But becauſe the Lord loved you, &c.] With an unmerited love; he loved them, becauſe he loved them; that is, becauſe he would love them; his love was not owing to any goodneſs in them, or done by them, or any love in them to him, but to his own goodwill and pleaſure: and becauſe he would keep the oath which he had ſworn unto your fathers; the promiſe he had made, confirmed by an oath: hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand; out of the land of Egypt: and redeemed you out of the houſe of bondmen; where they were bondmen to the Egyptians: from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt; who detained them, and refuſed to let them go.

℣. 9. Know therefore that the Lord thy God he is God, &c.] The only true and living God, and not the idols of the Gentiles, who are falſe and lifeleſs ones, and therefore not the proper objects of adoration: the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy; as appeared by fulfilling the promiſe made to their fathers, in bringing them out of Egypt, and now them to the borders of the land of Canaan given them for an inheritance: with them that love him and keep his commandments to a thouſand generations; ſee Exod. xx. 6. which are not the cauſes or conditions of his covenant and mercy, nor of his keeping them, but deſcriptive of the perſons that enjoy the benefit thereof.

℣. 10. And repayeth them that hate him to their face to deſtroy them, &c.] Openly, publickly, and at once, they not being able to make any reſiſtance. Onkelos interprets it in their life-time, and ſo Jarchi; which agrees with the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: or to his face [f]; the face of God; that is, he will puniſh them that hate him to his face, who are audacious, bold, impudent ſinners; ſinners before the Lord, as the men of Sodom were, Gen. xiii. 13. he will not be ſlack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face; not defer the execution of his judgment and vengeance, which may ſeem to ſlumber and linger, but will quickly and openly bring it upon the ſinner; this alſo the Chaldee paraphraſes explain as before.

℣. 11. Thou ſhalt therefore keep the commandments, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments, &c.] The laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, urged thereunto both by promiſes and threatenings, in hopes of reward, and through fear of puniſhment: which I command thee this day to do them; in the name of the Lord, and by his authority; by virtue of which he made a new declaration of them, to put them in mind of them in order to obſerve them.

℣. 12. Wherefore it ſhall come to paſs, if ye hearken to theſe judgments, and keep and do them, &c.] Attentively liſten to the declaration made of them, and be careful to obſerve them: that the Lord thy God ſhall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he ſware unto thy fathers; to bring them into the land of Canaan, and continue them in it; yea to ſend the Meſſiah to them, and bring him the ſalvation of Iſrael out of Zion; ſee Luke i. 68—73.

℣. 13. And he will love thee, &c.] As he has done, and reſt in his love, and give further inſtances and proofs of it: and bleſs thee, and multiply thee; that is, bleſs thee with a multiplication of offſpring, which was what was often promiſed to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; that their ſeed ſhould be as the ſtars of heaven, the duſt of the earth, and the ſand of the ſea: he will alſo bleſs the fruit of thy womb; not only give ſtrength to conceive, but carry on the pregnancy, preſerve the fœtus, and prevent miſcarrying: and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil; which were the principal produce of it: the increaſe of thy kine, and the flocks of thy ſheep; their larger and leſſer cattle, oxen and ſheep: in the land which he ſware unto thy fathers to give thee; the land of Canaan, given in promiſe, and that eſtabliſhed by an oath.

℣. 14. Thou ſhalt be bleſſed above all people, &c.] Even with temporal bleſſings, beſides thoſe of a religious kind; they having the oracles of God, the covenants, the giving of the law, the ſervice of God, and the promiſes, Rom. iii. 1, 2. and ix. 4. there ſhall not be male or female barren among you; which to be was reckoned a reproach, and the contrary a bleſſing, Luke i. 25. Pſ. cxxvii. 5. and cxxviii. 3, 4 or among your cattle; the Targum of Jonathan is, nor thy beaſts barren of wool, and milk, and lambs.

℣. 15. And will take away from thee all ſickneſs, &c.] Bodily ſickneſs and diſeaſes, prevent the coming of them, or remove them when come: and will put none of the evil diſeaſes of Egypt (which thou knoweſt) upon thee; meaning either the plagues that were inflicted upon them to oblige them to let the Iſraelites go, of which they had perfect knowledge; or elſe ſome noxious and nauſeous diſeaſes, which were common among, and peculiar to, the Egyptians, particularly what is called the botch of Egypt; ſee Exod. xv. 26. likewiſe the leproſy; ſee the note on Lev. xiii. 2. Deut. xxviii. 27. but will lay them upon all them that hate thee; with which God ſometimes puniſhes his and his people's enemies; ſee Judges v. 9. Rev. xv. 10, 11.

℣. 16. And thou ſhalt conſume all the People which the Lord thy God ſhall deliver thee, &c.] All the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, which the Lord ſhould deliver into their hands; them they were not to ſpare, but utterly deſtroy men, women and children: thine eye ſhall have no pity upon them; ſee ℣. 2. and the note there: neither ſhalt thou ſerve their gods, for that will be a ſnare unto thee; which will bring into utter ruin and deſtruction; ſee Exod. xxiii. 33.

℣. 17. If thou ſhalt ſay in thine heart, &c.] Should have ſecret thoughts ariſe in the heart, miſgivings of heart, fears and doubts there, which though not outwardly expreſſed, might be inwardly retained: theſe nations are more than I; ſeven to one, and perhaps any one of them as powerful as Iſrael: how can I diſpoſſeſs them? of the land they inherit, and take poſſeſſion of it.

℣. 18. Thou ſhalt not be afraid of them, &c.] Neither on account of their number, nor their ſtrength: but ſhalt well remember what the Lord thy God did unto Pharaoh, and unto all Egypt; a people more numerous and potent than the Canaanites, among whom the Lord wrought ſuch wonderful things by his power, which obliged them to let Iſrael go; and his power was now the ſame, he could do as great things to the Canaanites as he had to the Egyptians; and as he had delivered them out of the hands of the Egyptians, he could as eaſily deliver the Canaanites into their hands, and put them into the poſſeſſion of their country.

℣. 19. The great temptations which thine eyes ſaw, and the ſigns, and the wonders, &c.] The miracles wrought in Egypt; ſee chap. iv. 34. and the mighty hand, and ſtretched out arm, whereby the Lord thy God brought thee out; that is, out of Egypt, which was an inſtance and proof of his almighty power: ſo ſhall the Lord thy God do unto all the people of whom thou art afraid; not perform the ſame miraculous operations among them, but exert the ſame power in the deſtruction of them, and in diſpoſſeſſing them of their land, as in deſtroying the Egyptians, and delivering Iſrael from among them.

℣. 20. Moreover the Lord thy God will ſend the hornet among them, &c.] Not a ſingle one, but ſeveral of them, and which may be underſtood of creatures ſo called, which reſemble waſps, only twice as large, an inſect very bold and venomous; ſee Exod. xxiii. 28. Aben Ezra interprets it of the leproſy: until they that are left, and hide themſelves from thee be deſtroyed; ſuch of the Canaanites who eſcaped the ſword of the Iſraelites, and hid themſelves in holes and caverns of the earth; theſe the hornets would find out and ſting them to death, until they were all deſtroyed. Thus God can make uſe of ſmall creatures, even inſects, to deſtroy nations the moſt populous and mighty.

℣. 21. Thou ſhalt not be affrighted at them, &c.] At their numbers, nor at their gigantic ſtature: for the Lord thy God is among you; in the tabernacle, in the holy of holies, which was in the midſt of them, and beſides would give proof of his powerful preſence among them, in protecting them, and deſtroying their enemies; a mighty God and terrible; mighty to ſave his people and terrible to others.

℣. 22. And the Lord thy God will put out thoſe nations before thee by little and little, &c.] Which is obſerved for their encouragement, who ſeeing that all were not deſtroyed at once, might fear the work would never be thoroughly accompliſhed; ſee Exod. xxiii. 30. thou mayeſt not conſume them at once; though it was in the power of their hands to do it, there being ſome wiſe reaſons for ſparing them a while, at leaſt for not cutting them off all at once, and one follows: leſt the beaſts of the field increaſe upon thee; through ſo many places being waſte without inhabitants, and there being none to deſtroy theſe creatures; and who therefore in courſe would become more numerous, and ſo more troubleſome and diſtreſſing to the Iſraelites. The Targum of Jonathan adds by way of explanation, "when "they ſhall come to devour their carcaſes", the carcaſes of the ſlain Canaanites; who, if deſtroyed at once, would be ſo many that they would lie unburied, which would invite the beaſts of the field to come out of their lurking places to feed upon them, and which might lead them on to miſchief among the Iſraelites.

℣. 23. But the Lord thy God ſhall deliver them unto thee, &c.] Gradually, by little and little, until at length they ſhould all come into their hands: and ſhall deſtroy them with a mighty deſtruction until they be deſtroyed; even all of them.

℣. 24. And he ſhall deliver their kings into thine hand, &c.] Who were very numerous, for tho' there were but ſeven nations, there were more kings, even one and thirty, Joſh. xii. 9—24. thou ſhalt deſtroy their name from under heaven; not only deſtroy the name of the reigning kings, ſo as that they ſhould not be remembered and made mention of any more, but put an end to the name and race of kings among them, ſo that they ſhould never have any more, as they never had: there ſhall no man be able to ſtand before thee, until thou have deſtroyed them; the nations and their kings.

℣. 25. The graven images of their gods ſhall ye burn with fire, &c.] Which is repeated from ℣. 5. that it might be the more obſerved and ſtrictly performed, and which unleſs done, they could not expect the utter deſtruction of their enemies, who were left in the land to try and prove them with reſpect to this very thing: thou ſhalt not deſire the ſilver or gold that is on them; the raiment of gold or ſilver with which they were bedecked, or the plates of gold and ſilver, with which they were covered, or any ornament about them, as chains and the like, that were of either of theſe metals; ſee Ezek. xvi. 16, 17, 18. Jer. x. 9. nor take it unto thee, leſt thou be ſnared therein; nor take it into their poſſeſſion, or bring it into their houſes, as in the next verſe, leſt they ſhould be under a temptation to worſhip it, or keep it as a ſuperſtitious relick: for it is an abomination to the Lord thy God; not only the idol itſelf, being put in the place of God, and ſo derogatory to his honour and glory, but the gold and ſilver on it being devoted to a ſuperſtitious and idolatrous uſe; and even the taking of it and appropriating it to a man's own uſe, was an abomination, and reſented by the Lord as ſuch.

℣. 26. Neither ſhalt thou bring an abomination into thy houſe, &c.] An idol, ſo the Targum of Jonathan, the abominations of idols and their utenſils, or what is miniſtred to them, with any thing that appertains to them, or is uſed in the ſervice of them, as well as the gold and ſilver upon them; this care was taken as much as poſſible to prevent idolatry, and all appearance of it, and to ſhew what might lead on and be a temptation to it: leſt thou be a curſed thing like it; as an idol is, and ſo is every one that worſhips it; for what more expoſes to the curſe of God than idolatry, a breach of the firſt table of the law? and therefore ſubjects a man to the curſe of it; nay, the bringing of an idol into a man's houſe brings a curſe into it, and makes him liable thereunto; for if the curſe enters into the houſe of the thief or perjurer, much more into the houſe of a man guilty of idolatry in any degree of it; ſee Zech. v. 3, 4. but thou ſhalt utterly deteſt it; the Targum of Jonathan adds, as the pollution of an abominable thing: and thou ſhalt utterly abhor it, for it is a curſed thing; devoted to deſtruction; and to have any thing to do with it is the way to entail a curſe, and bring to everlaſting ruin and deſtruction; ſee Rev. xxi. 8.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter Moſes repeats the exhortation to obſerve the commands of God, and urges the Iſraelites to it, from the conſideration of the great and good things God had done for them in the wilderneſs, and even in thoſe inſtances which were chaſtiſements, and were of an humbling nature, ℣. 1—6. and on the conſideration of the bleſſings of the good land they were going to poſſeſs, ℣. 7, 8, 9. for which bleſſings they are exhorted to be thankful, and are cautioned againſt pride of heart through them, and forgetfulneſs of God, and of his goodneſs to them whilſt in the wilderneſs, and when brought into the land of Canaan, which they were to aſcribe to his power and goodneſs and not their own, ℣. 10—18. and the chapter is concluded with a warning againſt idolatry, leſt they periſh through it as the nations before them, ℣. 19, 20.

℣. 1. All the commandments which I command thee this day, ſhall ye obſerve to do, &c] It is repeated over and over again, to impreſs it on their minds, and to ſhew the importance and neceſſity of it, how greatly it was expected from them, and how much it was incumbent on them: that ye may live and multiply, and go in, and poſſeſs the land which the Lord ſware unto your fathers; for, their temporal life, and the mercies and comforts of it, the multiplication of their offspring, and of their ſubſtance, their entrance into the land of Canaan, poſſeſſion of it, and continuance in it, all depended on their obedience to the commands of God; ſee chap. xix. 30.

℣. 2. And thou ſhalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee theſe forty years in the wilderneſs, &c.] For this was now the fortieth year of their coming out of Egypt into the wilderneſs, into which they quickly came after their departure from thence, and had been in one wilderneſs or another ever ſince, in which God went before them in a pillar of cloud and fire, and directed their way; and now they are called upon to remember all the occurrences in the way, what favours and mercies had been beſtowed upon them, what proviſions had been made for them, what enemies they had been delivered from or overcome, as well as what afflictions and chaſtiſements had attended them: and ſo the people of God ſhould call to mind how they were brought to ſee their wilderneſs-ſtate and condition by nature; how they were brought out of it, and ſtopt in their career of ſin, and turned from their evil ways and led to Chriſt; what gracious promiſes have been made to them; what light has been afforded them; what communion they have had with God; what pleaſure in his ordinances; what food they have been fed with; what temptations have befallen them, and how delivered out of them; and what afflictions have been laid upon them, and how ſupported under them, and freed from them: to humble thee; under the mighty hand of God, to bring down the pride of their hearts and hide it from them; to lay them low in their own eyes, and clothe them with humility, that the Lord alone might be exalted: and to prove thee; whether they would be obedient to his laws, or how they would behave towards him both in proſperity and adverſity, and to try their graces, their faith and patience, fear and love: to know what was in thine heart; that is, to make it known to themſelves and others; for God knew all that was in it, the wickedneſs of it, the unbelief, rebellion, and froward-

neſs of it, and needed not any ways and means to get into the knowledge of it; ſee 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. whether thou wouldſt keep his commandments or no; which they had in ſuch a ſolemn manner promiſed to do; chap. v. 27, 28, 29.

℣. 3. And he humbled thee, &c.] Or afflicted thee with want of bread: and ſuffered thee to hunger; that there might be an opportunity of ſhewing his mercy, and exerting his power: and fed thee with manna, which thou kneweſt not, neither did thy fathers know; a ſort of food they had never ſeen before, and when they ſaw it, knew not what it was, but aſked what is it? Exod. xvi. 15. Thus the Lord humbles his people by his ſpirit and grace, and brings them to ſee themſelves to be in want, and creates in them deſires after ſpiritual food, and feeds them with Chriſt the hidden manna, whoſe perſon, office, and grace they were before ignorant of: that he might make thee know, that man doth not live by bread only; which is the ſtay and ſtaff of life, and which ſtrengthens man's heart, and is the main ſupport of it, being the ordinary and uſual food man lives upon, and is put for all the reſt: but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live; not ſo much by the food he eats, as by the bleſſing of God upon it, and who can make one ſort of food as effectual for ſuch a purpoſe as another; for every creature of God is good being received with thankfulneſs, and ſanctified by the word and prayer; and particularly he could and did make ſuch light food as manna was, to anſwer all the purpoſes of ſolid bread for the ſpace of forty years in the wilderneſs; the Targum of Jonathan is, "but by all "which is created by the Word of the Lord is the "life of man;" which ſeems to agree with 1 Tim. iv. 3, 4. for the meaning is not that the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and when come into the land of Canaan ſhould not live by corporal food only, but by obedience to the commands of God, by means of which they ſhould continue under his protection, which was indeed their caſe; nor that man does not live in his body only by bread, but in his ſoul alſo by the word of God, and the doctrines of it, which is certainly true; ſpiritual men live a ſpiritual life on Chriſt, the Word of God, and bread of life, and on the goſpel and the truths of it, the wholſome words of our Lord Jeſus, and are nouriſhed up with the words of faith and ſound doctrine, by means of which their ſpiritual life is ſupported and maintained; but this is not what is here intended.

℣. 4. Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, &c.] They wanted not clothes all the forty years they were in the wilderneſs; which ſome account for by the riſing generation being ſupplied with the clothes of thoſe that died in the wilderneſs, and with the ſpoils they took from Amalek, Exod. xvii. 1. and others, as Aben Ezra obſerves, remark that they brought much clothes with them out of Egypt, which no doubt they did; ſee Exod. xii. 35. and he adds, as worthy of notice, that the manna they lived upon did not produce ſweat, which is prejudicial to clothes; but be it ſo, that they were ſufficiently provided with clothes, it muſt be miraculous that theſe clothes they wore ſhould not wax old. This in a ſpiritual ſenſe may denote the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is often compared to raiment, the property of which is that it never waxes old, wears out, or decays; it is an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and will never be aboliſhed, but will anſwer for the ſaints in a time to come; ſee Iſ. li. 6, 8. Dan. ix. 24. neither did thy foot ſwell theſe forty years; or puff up like paſte, as Jarchi explains it, which is often the caſe in long journies; the Septuagint verſion is, did not become callous; a calliouſneſs or hardneſs is frequently produced by travelling; in chap. xxix. 5. it is explained of the ſhoes on their feet not waxing old; ſo Ben Melech, and the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and the Syriac and Arabic verſions here, "thy "feet were not naked", were not without ſhoes; theſe were no more wore out by travel than their clothes upon their backs, and this was equally as miraculous: the Gibeonites pretending to come from a far country, and to have travelled much, and long, put on old garments and old ſhoes, to make it probable and plauſible, Joſh. ix. 5, 13. This may be an emblem of the perſeverance of the ſaints in faith and holineſs: ſhoes upon the feet denote a goſpel-converſation, which is very beautiful, Cant. vii. 1. the feet of ſaints being ſhod with the preparation of the goſpel of peace; which, as ſhoes to the feet, guides and directs the chriſtian walk, ſtrengthens and makes fit for walking, keeps tight and preſerves from ſlipping and falling, and protects from what is hurtful, accompanied by the power and grace of God.

℣. 5. Thou ſhalt alſo conſider in thine heart, &c.] Frequently think of, and meditate upon, revolve in their thoughts, well weigh in their minds, and take into thorough and deliberate conſideration in their hearts; it being a matter of great moment and importance to them for their peace and comfort and the glory of God, namely what follows: that as a man chaſteneth his ſon, ſo the Lord thy God chaſteneth thee; that they ſtood in the ſame relation to God as a ſon to a father, and therefore happy and honourable; that all their afflictions came from God, were appointed, ſent, directed and over-ruled by him for his own glory and their good; that theſe were the chaſtenings and corrections of a father, and were not done in wrath but in love, and therefore ſhould be patiently endured; and it became them to conſider well from what hand they came, and in what manner, and for what ends and purpoſes, how they ought to behave under them, and what they ſhould do, as follows.

℣. 6. Therefore thou ſhalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, &c.] Not only becauſe they are the commands of God, and of a covenant-God and father, which are reaſons ſufficient for the obſervance of them; but becauſe the Lord had dealt ſo bountifully with them, in providing food and raiment for them in the wilderneſs, which always continued with them; and becauſe when he afflicted them, it was a fatherly chaſtiſement, with great tenderneſs and compaſſion, and for their good; all which laid them under obligations to keep the commands of God, whatſoever he had enjoined them, whether of the moral, ceremonial, or judicial kind: to walk in his ways, and to fear him; to walk in the ways he directed, to be under an awe of his majeſty, a fear of offending him, and a reverential affection for him, ſuch as children have to a father.

℣. 7. For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, &c.] The land of Canaan, abounding with good things after enumerated, a land flowing with milk and honey, having in it plenty of every thing both for convenience and delight; which is another reaſon why they were under obligations to to ſerve the Lord, to walk in his ways and keep his commandments: a land of brooks of water; rivers and torrents, ſuch as Jordan, Jabbok, Kiſhon, Kedron, Cherith and others: of fountains; as Siloam, Gihon, Etam, the baths of Tiberias and thers: and depths that ſpring out of vallies and hills; deep waters, caverns, wells and lakes which had their riſe from ſuch places, of which there were many. With this agrees the account of it by our countryman, Mr. Sandys [g], as it was in the beginning of the laſt century; that it was adorned with beautiful mountains and luxurious vallies, the rocks producing excellent waters, and no part empty of delight or profit.

℣. 8. A land of wheat and barley, &c.] There were two harveſts in it, one a barley-harveſt, which began at the paſſover, and the other a wheat-harveſt, which began at pentecoſt: inſtances of the great plenty of theſe might be obſerved in the vaſt quantities conſumed in the times of Solomon; in his houſhold, and in the yearly diſtribution he made to Hiram, 1 Kings iv. 22, 28. and v. 11. 2 Chron. ii. 10. yea there was ſuch plenty of wheat in this land, that it not only ſupplied the inhabitants of it, but even furniſhed other countries with it; with this the merchants of Iſrael and Judah traded at the market of Tyre, Ezek. xxvii. 17. ſee Acts xii. 20. According to the Jewiſh writers the beſt fine wheat-flour was at Mechumas and Mezonichah, and the next to them was Chephraim or Ephraim, in the valley [h]: and vines; with which this land abounded every where; the places moſt noted were Lebanon, Eſhcol, Engedi, Aſcalon, Gaza and Sarepta; according to the above writers [i] Cerotim and Hatolim were the firſt for wine, and the ſecond to them were Beth Rimah and Beth Laban in the mountain, and Caphar Sigmah in the valley; the wine of Sharon is alſo highly commended by them [k]: and fig-trees and pomegranates; according to Joſephus [l] the country of Geneſaret furniſhed with the beſt grapes and figs for ten months without intermiſſion, and the reſt of fruits throughout the whole year. Figs and pomegranates, the ſpies brought with them when they returned from ſearching the land, as well as grapes, are a ſpecimen of the fruits of it, Numb. xiii. 23. a land of oil-olive; the mount of Olives was famous for olive trees, and had its name from thence; the whole land abounded with them, and though oil was ſo much in common uſe with the Jews, they ſupplied their neighbours with it; ſee 1 Kings v. 11. 2 Chron. v. 10. Ezek. xxvii. 17. It was uſual alſo, as we are told, for the ten tribes to ſend oil into Egypt [m]; according to the Jewiſh doctors Tekoah was the firſt place for oil, and the ſecond Ragab beyond Jordan [n], very probably the ſame with Argob, chap. iii. 4. and honey; beſides the great quantities of honey produced by bees in this country, there was much of another ſort that dropped from trees, called wild honey, the food of John the Baptiſt in the wilderneſs, Matt. iii. 4. Pliny [o] ſpeaks of a ſort of honey which he calls Elæomeli or oil-honey, which is ſaid to flow from the olive-trees in Syria; but this honey here is generally thought by the Jewiſh writers to be an honey which was made of the fruit of palm-trees, frequent in this country, and eſpecially about Jericho; of which Joſephus [p] ſays, that the palm-trees about Jericho, the latter of them (i. e. of the fruit of them) being preſſed emit a large quantity of honey ſcarce exceeded by any; and Maimonides [q] ſays, that the honey ſpoken of in the law, particularly in this place, is honey of palm-trees, ſo Ben Melech; and it was not unuſual for people of other nations to make honey of the fruit of them. Herodotus [r] reports, that the Babylonians made honey out of palm-trees; ſo the Arabs call honey of palm-trees, Dibs, Dibis, Dipſo [s], the ſame with the word here uſed; agreeable to which both the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe the words, "out "of whoſe palm-trees honey is made."

℣. 9. A land wherein thou ſhalt eat bread without ſcarceneſs, &c.] That is, ſhould have plenty of all ſorts of proviſions, which bread is often put for: thou ſhalt not lack any thing in it; for neceſſity and convenience, and for delight and pleaſure: a land whoſe ſtones are iron; in which were iron mines: and out of whoſe hills thou mayeſt dig braſs; both which are taken out of the earth and the ſtones of it, Job xxviii. 2. and were to be found in the land of Canaan, and particularly in the tribe of Aſher, as ſeems from chap. xxxiii. 25. and more particularly at Sidon and Sarepta, which were in that tribe; the latter of which ſeems to have its name from the melting of metals there, and the former is ſaid in Homer [t] to abound with braſs.

℣. 10. When thou haſt eaten and art full, then thou ſhalt bleſs the Lord thy God, &c.] For as the Lord would furniſh them with plenty of food, they might eat of it liberally, provided they did not indulge to intemperance, as every one may whom God has bleſſed with a fulneſs of good things; and this ſhews that we are to return thanks to God for a plentiful meal, as well as to aſk a bleſſing on it: for the good land which he hath given thee; which ſupplied them with ſuch plenty that they enjoyed full meals every day.

℣. 11. Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, &c.] The father of mercies, and fountain of goodneſs, the author and donor of every good and perfect gift. Plenty is apt to induce a forgetfulneſs of God, when on the contrary one would think it ſhould keep him in continual remembrance, and engage to daily thankfulneſs to him: in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his ſtatutes, which I command thee this day; gave a repetition of and in the name of God afreſh enjoined them, even laws moral, ceremonial and judicial, which when not obſerved God is forgotten.

℣. 12. Leſt when thou haſt eaten and art full, &c.] Not only once and again, but continually day after day, being indulged with great plenty: and haſt built goodly houſes, and dwelt therein; who for 40 years had only dwelt in tents, moving from place to place in the wilderneſs.

℣. 13. And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, &c.] Having good paſture for them in ſo fruitful a land: and thy ſilver and thy gold is multiplied; by trading with other nations: and all that thou haſt is multiplied; children, ſervants and ſubſtance.

℣. 14. Then thine heart be lifted up, &c.] As the heart is apt to be when riches increaſe; hence the advice in 1 Tim. vi. 17. and thou forget the Lord thy God; from whom all good things come, and who can take them away when he pleaſes, and therefore ſhould be ever kept in mind, for ever looked to and truſted in for the continuance of them; yet ſuch is the evil heart of man, and ſuch the the ſtupifying nature of riches, that they bring on forgetfulneſs of the author of them, lead off from dependence on him and obedience to him; in order to prevent which, an enumeration is given of wonderful inſtances of divine goodneſs to Iſrael, as follows: which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage; into a land abounding with all the above good things, and therefore it muſt be the higheſt ingratitude to forget ſuch a God, and diſobey his commands.

℣. 15. Who led thee through that great and terrible wilderneſs, &c.] The wilderneſs of Paran, which was great and large, reaching from Sinai to Kadeſh, eleven days journey, and terrible to the ſight, nothing being to be ſeen but dry rocks and barren mountains; ſee ch. i. 19. and eſpecially for what follows: wherein were fiery ſerpents and ſcorpions; fiery ſerpents, ſuch as bit the Iſraelites, of which ſee Numb. xxi. 6. and ſcorpions, a kind of ſerpents, venomous and miſchievous, which have ſtings in their tails they are continually thruſting out and ſtriking with, as Pliny ſays [u]; and have their name from their great ſting; for Ariſtotle [w] ſays, this alone of inſects has a large ſting: and drought where there was no water; a dry and barren place where no water was to be had; ſee Pſ. lxiii. 1. or it may be rather another kind of ſerpents may be meant, which is called Dipſas; and ſo the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, and Samaritan verſions render it; the biting of which produces ſuch a thirſt as proves mortal, and which muſt be intolerable in a wilderneſs where no water is; and from whence it has its name, which ſignifies thirſty, as does the Hebrew word here uſed: who brought thee forth water out of the rock of flint; which was done both at Horeb and Kadeſh, Exod. xvii. 6. Numb. xx. 11. and was very extraordinary; by ſtriking flint fire is ordinarily produced, and not water. Dr. Shaw obſerves [x], that it may be more properly named, with other ſorts of granite marble here to be met with, the rock of Amethyſt, from their reddiſh or purple colour and complexion.

℣. 16. Who fed thee in the wilderneſs with manna, &c.] Even all the forty years they were in it, Exod. xvi. 35. which thy fathers knew not; when they firſt ſaw it, Exod. xvi. 15. that he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee; they were kept humble, being dependent on God for their daily bread, having nothing in the wilderneſs to ſupport themſelves with; and this tried them, whether they would truſt in God for their daily ſupply, and be thankful for it, or no: to do thee good at thy latter end; that by living on ſuch light bread, and this only and continually, his goodneſs might appear the greater, and be the ſweeter to them, when they came into a land abounding with all good things; which is not to be underſtood of the latter end and laſt days of their commonwealth, as our verſion, with the Septuagint, Samaritan, Arabic verſions, and others, and the Targum of Onkelos; but of time following nearer, and the phraſe ſhould be rendered hereafter [y]; which better agrees with the promiſe of a divine bleſſing; though, come when it would, it was the more acceptable for the trial; as heaven will be the ſweeter to the ſaints, through the afflictions, hardſhips, ſtraits, and difficulties, which attend them here.

℣. 17. And thou ſay in thine heart, &c.] Theſe words are in connection with the former part of the 14th verſe: and thou forget the Lord thy God; the author and giver of all the good things enjoyed, and think within themſelves, though they might not expreſs it in words at length: my power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth; ſo aſcribing that to themſelves, their labour, and diligence, which ought to be aſcribed to the bounty and bleſſing of God; ſee Hoſ. xii. 8.

℣. 18. But thou ſhalt remember the Lord thy God, &c.] That he was the author of their beings, the God of their lives and mercies; what great and good things he had done for them in Egypt, and in the wilderneſs; and particularly in putting them into the poſſeſſion of ſuch a fruitful country, abounding with all that heart could wiſh for: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth; for though men may have ſeeming opportunities for getting wealth, may have capacities for the management of buſineſs for the acquiſition of it, and may not be wanting in diligence and induſtry, yet may not attain it; it is the bleſſing of God that makes rich, and to that it ſhould be imputed whenever it is enjoyed; ſee Pſ. cxxvii. 2. Prov. x. 22 Eccl. ix. 11. 1 Chron. xxix. 12. that he may eſtabliſh his covenant which he ſware unto thy fathers, as it is this day; that he would give the land of Canaan to their ſeed, and make them a rich and flouriſhing people, as they would be and were when poſſeſſed of the land, which is ſuppoſed throughout his diſcourſe.

℣. 19. And it ſhall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, &c.] Either the mercies they received from him, not acknowledging they came from him, but aſcribing them to themſelves; or their duty to him, to whom they were ſo greatly obliged: and walk after other gods, and ſerve them, and worſhip them; which would be to forget him indeed, forſaking his worſhip, and giving homage and adoration to idols, which is what is intended by theſe expreſſions: I teſtify againſt you this day that ye ſhall ſurely periſh; by one judgment and calamity or another, as the ſword, famine, peſtilence, and captivity; there being nothing more provoking to God than idolatry, which ſo much detracts from his honour and glory; and which beſides, in ſuch a people, ſo highly favoured of God, it argued the baſeſt ingratitude.

℣. 20. As the nations which the Lord deſtroyeth before your face, ſo ſhall ye periſh, &c.] Be cut off by the ſword, or caſt out as they were, the ſame ſins, particularly idolatry, being committed by them. This is to be underſtood of the ſeven nations of the land of Canaan, which the Lord would be gradually deſtroying when Iſrael came into the poſſeſſion of their land; and they might righteouſly expect the ſame treatment, ſhould they be guilty of the ſame ſins: becauſe ye would not be obedient to the voice of the Lord your God; expreſſed in his law, eſpecially in the two firſt precepts of it, which require the worſhip of one God, and forbid the worſhipping of idols; or to the Word of the Lord, as the Targum of Jonathan, Chriſt, the eſſential Word, in whom the name of the Lord was, and whoſe voice Iſrael was to obey, Exod. xxiii. 20, 21, 22.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

IN this chapter the Iſraelites are aſſured of the ejection of the Canaanites, though ſo great and mighty, to make room for them, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and they are cautioned not to attribute this to their own righteouſneſs, but to the wickedneſs of the nations which deſerved to be ſo treated, and to the faithfulneſs of God in performing his promiſe made to their fathers, ℣. 4, 5, 6. and that it might appear, that it could not be owing to their righteouſneſs, it is affirmed and proved that they had been a rebellious and provoking people from their coming out of Egypt to that time, as was evident from their idolatry at Horeb; a particular account of which is given, and of the diſpleaſure of the Lord at it, ℣ 7—21. and of their murmurings, with which they provoked the Lord at other places, ℣. 22, 23, 24. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of the prayer of Moſes for them at Horeb, to avert the wrath of God from them for their making and worſhipping the golden calf, ℣. 25—29.

℣. 1. Hear O Iſrael, &c.] A pauſe being made after the delivery of the preceding diſcourſe; or perhaps what follows might be delivered at another time, at ſome little diſtance; and which being of moment and importance to the glory of God, and that Iſrael might have a true notion of their duty, they are called upon to liſten with attention to what was now about to be ſaid: thou art to paſs over Jordan this day; not preciſely that very day, but in a ſhort time after this; for it was on the firſt day of the eleventh month, that Moſes began the repetition of the laws he was now going on with, ch. i. 3. and it was not until the tenth day of the firſt month of the next year that the people paſſed over Jordan, Joſh. iv 19. which was about two months after this: to go in and poſſeſs nations greater and mightier than thyſelf; the ſeven nations named ch. vii. 1. where the ſame characters are given of them: cities great and fenced up to heaven; as they were ſaid to be by the ſpies, ch. i. 28. and were no doubt both large and ſtrongly fortified, and not to be eaſily taken by the Iſraelites, had not the Lord been with them, ℣. 3.

℣. 2. A people great and tall, &c.] Of a large bulky ſize, and of an high ſtature, ſo that the ſpies ſeemed to be as graſhoppers to them, Numb. xiii. 33. the children of the Anakim, whom thou knoweſt; by report, having had an account of them by the ſpies, who deſcribed them as very large bodied men, and of a gigantic ſtature, the deſcendants of one Anak, a giant; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "a people ſtrong and high like the giants;" from theſe Bene Anak, children of Anak, or Phene Anak, as the words might be pronounced, the initial letter of the firſt word being of the ſame ſound, Bochart[z] thinks the country had its name of Phœnicia: and of whom thou haſt heard ſay, who can ſtand before the children of Anak? or the children of the giants, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; which they had heard either from the ſpies who had ſuggeſted the ſame, Numb. xiii. 31. or as a common proverb in the mouths of moſt people in thoſe days.

℣. 3. Underſtand therefore this day, &c.] Or be it known to you for your encouragement, and believe it: that the Lord thy God is he which goeth over before thee as a conſuming fire; did not only go before them over the river Jordan, in a pillar of cloud and fire, to guide and direct them, and was as a wall of fire around them to protect and defend them, but as a conſuming fire before which there is no ſtanding, to deſtroy their enemies; ſee ch. iv. 24. Heb. xii. 29. he ſhall deſtroy them, and he ſhall bring them down before thy face; be they as great and as mighty, as large and as tall as they may, they'll not be able to ſtand before the Lord, but will ſoon be made low, and be eaſily brought down to the earth by him, and to utter deſtruction; which would be done in a public and viſible manner, ſo as that the hand of the Lord would be ſeen in it by the Iſraelites: ſo ſhalt thou drive them out, and deſtroy them quickly, as the Lord hath ſaid unto thee; that is, the far greater part of them, and ſo many as to make room for the Iſraelites, and which was quickly done. The Jews commonly ſay[a], that they were ſeven years in ſubduing the land; otherwiſe they were not to be driven out and deſtroyed at once, but by little and little; ſee ch. vii. 22.

℣. 4. Speak not thou in thine heart, &c.] Never once think within thyſelf, or give way to ſuch a vain imagination, and pleaſe thyſelf with it: after that the Lord thy God hath caſt them out from before thee; to make way for the Iſraelites, and put them into the poſſeſſion of their land; which is to be aſcribed not to them, but to the Lord: ſaying, for my righteouſneſs the Lord hath brought me in to poſſeſs this land; ſuch a thought as this was not to be ſecretly cheriſhed in their hearts, and much leſs expreſſed with their lips; nothing being more foreign from truth than this, and yet a notion they were prone to entertain. They were always a people, more or leſs, from firſt to laſt, tainted with a conceit of their own righteouſneſs and goodneſs, which they laboured to eſtabliſh, and were ready to attribute all the good things to it they enjoyed; and nothing is more natural to men, than to fancy they ſhall be brought to the heavenly Canaan, by and for their own righteouſneſs; which is contrary to the perfections of God, his purity, holineſs, and juſtice, which can never admit of an imperfect righteouſneſs in the room of a perfect one; to juſtify any one thereby, is contrary to the goſpel-ſcheme of ſalvation; which is not by works of righteouſneſs men have done, but by the grace and mercy of God through Chriſt; it would make uſeleſs, null, and void, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which only can juſtify men in the ſight of God, give a title to heaven and happineſs, and an abundant entrance into it; and would occaſion boaſting, not only in the preſent ſtate, but even in heaven itſelf; whereas the ſcheme of ſalvation is ſo framed and fixed, that there may be no room for boaſting, here or hereafter: ſee Rom. iii. 27, 28. Eph. ii. 8, 9. Tit. iii. 5, 7. but for the wickedneſs of theſe nations the Lord doth drive them out from before thee; namely, their idolatry, inceſt, and other notorious crimes; ſee Lev. xviii. 3—28. which ſufficiently juſtifies God in all his dealings with theſe nations.

℣. 5. Not for thy righteouſneſs, or for the uprightneſs of thine heart, &c.] Neither for their external righteouſneſs before men, or their outward conformity conformity to the law, nor for the inward ſincerity of their hearts, and their upright intentions in doing good, in which they were defective: doſt thou go to poſſeſs their land? this is repeated, and enlarged on, and explained, that this notion might be entirely removed from them, and not entertained by them; ſimilar to which is that of men, who fancy that their ſincere obedience, though imperfect, will be accepted of God inſtead of a perfect one, on account of which they ſhall be juſtified and ſaved; but by the deeds of the law no fleſh living can be juſtified in the ſight of God, nor by any works of righteouſneſs done by the beſt of men, and in the beſt manner they are capable of, will any be ſaved: but for the wickedneſs of thoſe nations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee; which is repeated, that it might be taken notice of as the true reaſon of the Lord's dealing with them in ſuch ſeverity; and which becauſe it would be now doing, when the Iſraelites paſſed over Jordan, and went in to poſſeſs the land, it is expreſſed in the preſent tenſe doth drive, the work being not yet finiſhed; ſin was the cauſe of their ejection out of their land, and another thing was the reaſon of the Iſraelites poſſeſſing it, and not their righteouſneſs next expreſſed: and that he may perform the word which the Lord ſware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; it was to fulfil his covenant, and make good his word of promiſe to their fathers, and not on account of any righteouſneſs of theirs; and the ſalvation of the Lord's people in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and their enjoyment of the heavenly Canaan, are owing to the gracious purpoſes and promiſes of God, and to his covenant-engagements, as well as to the undertakings, obedience, and righteouſneſs of his Son, and not to any righteouſneſs of theirs.

℣. 6. Underſtand therefore that the Lord thy God giveth thee not this good land to poſſeſs it for thy righteouſneſs, &c.] This is again repeated to impreſs it upon their minds, that it was not for any goodneſs of theirs, but as a gift of divine goodneſs to them, that they were put into the poſſeſſion of the good land, which greatly exceeded any merits of theirs, and was entirely owing to the kindneſs of God to them, and not to any righteouſneſs of theirs; and this he frequently inculcates, that they might have a thorough underſtanding of it. And ſo the doctrines of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and not man's, and of ſalvation by the grace of God, and not the works of men, are points of knowledge and underſtanding; and to lead men into an acquaintance with them, is the general deſign of the goſpel; and he can't be reckoned an underſtanding man, but ignorant of God and his righteouſneſs, of the law and the ſpirituality of it, of Chriſt and the way of ſalvation by him, of the Spirit and of ſpiritual things, of the goſpel and its doctrines, nor can he be wiſe unto ſalvation, who expects to get to heaven by his own works of righteouſneſs; and it might be added, that he is ignorant of himſelf, of his ſtate and condition, of his ſinfulneſs and vileneſs, and of the nature of his beſt works; as the Iſraelites in a good meaſure ſeemed to be, whoſe conviction is laboured in the following part of this chapter: for thou art a ſtiff-necked people; refractory and unruly, like an heifer unaccuſtomed to the yoke, that draws back from it, and wriggles its neck out of it; ſo untoward and perverſe were this people, and diſobedient to the commands of God; wherefore there was no ſhew of reaſon that they were put into the poſſeſſion of Canaan for their righteouſneſs; and to make it appear that they were ſuch a people as here deſcribed, ſeveral inſtances are given.

℣. 7. Remember and forget not how thou provokedſt the Lord thy God to wrath in the wilderneſs, &c.] Aben Ezra remarks that this was after they journeyed from Horeb; but before they came thither, even as ſoon as they were in the wilderneſs they provoked the Lord, as by their murmuring for water at Marah, when they had been but three days in the wilderneſs; and for bread in the wilderneſs of Sin, and for water again at Rephidim; all which were before they came to Horeb or Sinai, and which agrees with what follows: from the day that thou didſt depart out of the land of Egypt until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious againſt the Lord; though they had ſuch a ſeries of mercies, yet their life was a continued courſe of rebellion againſt the Lord; which is a ſad character of them indeed, and given by one that thoroughly knew them, was an eye-witneſs of facts, and had a hearty reſpect for them too, and cannot be thought to exaggerate things; ſo that they were far from being righteous perſons in themſelves, nor was there any reaſon to conclude it was for their righteouſneſs the land of Canaan was given them.

℣. 8. Alſo in Horeb ye provoked the Lord to wrath, &c.] The word alſo ſhews that they had provoked him before, but this inſtance is given as a very notorious one; here they made the golden calf and worſhipped it, whilſt Moſes was on the mount with God, receiving inſtructions from him for their good. Near to this place a rock had been ſmitten for them, from whence flowed water for the refreſhment of them and their cattle; here the Lord appeared in the glory of his majeſty to them, and from hence, for it is the ſame mount with Sinai, the law was given to them in ſuch an awful and terrible manner; and yet none of theſe things were ſufficient to reſtrain them from provoking the Lord to wrath by their ſins: ſo that the Lord was angry with you to have deſtroyed you; ſo very angry with them, and ſo juſtly, that he propoſed to Moſes to deſtroy them, and make of him a great nation in their room, Exod. xxxii. 10.

℣. 9. When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of ſtone, &c.] The tables of the law, the ſame law which forbid idolatry, and which they had lately heard from the mouth of God himſelf: even the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you; which they had agreed unto, and ſolemnly promiſed they would obſerve and do, Exod. xxiv. 7. then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights; and this long ſtay was one reaſon of their falling into idolatry, not knowing what was become of him, Exod. xxiv. 18. and xxxii. 1. I neither did eat bread, nor drink water; all thoſe 40 days and nights, Exod. xxxiv. 28.

℣. 10. And the Lord delivered unto me two tables of ſtone, written with the finger of God, &c.] The letters were of his deviſing and forming, the writing was his, the engraving them on the ſtones was his own doing; and which was done to ſhew its original, to enſtamp a divine authority on it, and to denote its duration; ſee Exod. xxxi. 18. and xxxii. 16. and on them was written according to all the words which the Lord ſpake with you in the mount; the ten commands, exactly in the ſame order, and in the ſame words, without any variation, as they were delivered to them with an articulate voice in their hearing; but now were written in this manner, that they might be read by them, and remain with them; ſee Exod. xxxiv. 28. out of the midſt of the fire; in which the Lord was, and from whence whence he ſpake: in the day of the aſſembly; when all the people of Iſrael were gathered together at the foot of the mount; ſee Exod. xix. 17. Deut. iv. 10, 11, 12.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs at the end of forty days and forty nights, &c.] The time of Moſes's ſtay in the mount, when it was juſt up, and not before: that the Lord gave me the two tables of ſtone, even the tables of the covenant, as in ℣. 9. Aben Ezra obſerves, that this ſhews that the day the tables were given to Moſes the calf was made.

℣. 12. And the Lord ſaid unto me, &c.] The omniſcient God, who knew what was doing in the camp of Iſrael, though Moſes did not, of which he informs him: ariſe, get thee down quickly from hence; from the mount where he was; and the word ariſe does not ſuppoſe him to be ſitting or lying along, neither of which poſtures would have been ſuitable, conſidering in whoſe preſence he was; but is only expreſſive of urgency and haſte of his departure; it is not uſed in Exod. xxxii. 7. for thy people which thou haſt brought forth out of Egypt have corrupted themſelves; their way, as the Targum of Jonathan; that is, by idolatry, than which nothing is more corrupting and defiling; the Lord calls them not his people, but the people of Moſes, being highly diſpleaſed with them; and aſcribes their coming out of Egypt to Moſes the inſtrument, and not to himſelf, as if he repented of bringing them from thence: they are quickly turned aſide out of the way which I commanded them; it being but about ſix weeks ago, that the command forbidding idolatry, the ſin they had fallen into, had been given them: and they have made them a molten image; the image of a calf made of melted gold.

℣. 13. Furthermore the Lord ſpake unto me, ſaying, &c.] After he had given him the two tables, and before his departure from the mount: I have ſeen this people; took notice of them, their ways, and their works: and behold, it is a ſtiff-necked people; unwilling to ſubmit to, and bear the yoke of my commandments; ſee Exod. xxxii. 9.

℣. 14. Let me alone that I may deſtroy them, &c.] Do not ſay one word to me on their behalf, or intreat me to ſpare them, and not deſtroy them: and blot out their name from under heaven; that no ſuch nation may be heard of, or known by the name of Iſrael: and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they; of his family, whereby the Lord's promiſe to Abraham would not have been made void, but equally firm and ſure, ſince this mightier and greater nation would have been of his ſeed; ſee the note on Exod. xxxii. 10.

℣. 15. So I turned and came down from the mount, &c.] As the Lord commanded: and the mount burned with fire; as it had for ſix weeks paſt, ever ſince the Lord's deſcent upon it; and ſo it continued, for the words may be rendered, and the mount was burning [b]; and yet this did not deter the Iſraelites from idolatry: and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands; one table in one hand, and the other in the other hand.

℣. 16. And I looked, &c.] When he was come down from the mount, and was nigh the camp: and behold, ye had ſinned againſt the Lord your God; that plainly appeared by what they had done, and at which he was amazed; and therefore a behold is prefixed to it, it being ſuch a groſs ſin, having ſo much impiety and ingratitude, and ſtupidity in it: and made you a molten calf; that he ſaw with his eyes, and them dancing about it; ſee Exod. xxxii. 19. ye had turned aſide quickly out of the way which the Lord had commanded you; ſee ℣. 12.

℣. 17. And I took the two tables, and caſt them out of my two hands, &c.] In wrath and indignation at the ſin they were guilty of: and brake them before your eyes; as an emblem of their breach of them by tranſgreſſing them.

℣. 18. And I fell down before the Lord, &c.] In prayer for Iſrael who had ſinned; but this he did not immediately after he had broken the tables, but when he had firſt ground the calf to powder, ſtrowed it on the water, and made the children of Iſrael drink it; and when he had chided Aaron, and ordered the ſons of Levi to ſlay every man his brother: as at the firſt forty days and forty nights; which is to be connected, I think, not with what goes before; for we read not that he fell down before the Lord, at the firſt time he was with him ſo long in the mount; but with what follows: I did neither eat bread, nor drink water; as he neither eat nor drank the firſt forty days, ſo neither did he theſe ſecond forty; ſee ℣. 9. becauſe of all your ſins which ye ſinned, in doing wickedly in the ſight of the Lord to provoke him to anger; for they were guilty of more ſins than one; beſides idolatry, they were guilty of unbelief, ingratitude, &c. which were notorious and flagrant, were done openly and publickly, in ſight of his glory and majeſty on the mount; all which muſt be very provoking to him, and on account of theſe Moſes prayed and faſted.

℣. 19. For I was afraid of the anger and hot diſpleaſure wherewith the Lord was wroth againſt you, &c.] Which was exceeding vehement, as appeared by his words to Moſes, forbidding to intercede for them, that he might conſume them, and make of him a greater nation; wherefore he dreaded the iſſue of it, leſt it ſhould be to deſtroy you; that that ſhould be his full reſolution and determination; however, he made uſe of means, and betook himſelf to faſting and prayer; ſo heartily affected was he to this people when his temptations lay another way: but the Lord hearkened unto me at that time alſo; as he had at other times, when this people had ſinned, and he intreated for them; in which he was a type of Chriſt, the mediator and advocate, whom the Father always hears.

℣. 20. And the Lord was very angry with Aaron to have deſtroyed him, &c.] For complying with the requeſt of the people in making a calf for them, and for that miſerable ſhift he made to excuſe himſelf; which ſo provoked the Lord, that he threatened to deſtroy him, and he was in danger of being cut off, had it not been for the interceſſion of Moſes: and I prayed for Aaron alſo the ſame time; who either was included in the general prayer for the people, Exod. xxxii. 31. or a particular prayer was made for him, though not recorded, and which alſo ſucceeded.

℣. 21. And I took your ſin, the calf which ye had made, &c.] Which was the object of their ſin, which lay in making and worſhipping it; ſee Iſ. xxxi. 7. and burnt it with fire and ſtamped it; with his feet after it was burnt, to bring it into ſmall pieces: and ground it very ſmall; or, as the Targum of Jonathan, "ground it in a mortar well;" the burnt and broken pieces: even until it was as ſmall as duſt; being ground to powder, as in Exod. xxxii. 20. and I caſt the duſt thereof into the brook that deſcended out of the mount; and made the children of Iſrael to drink of it, as in the fore cited place; ſee the note there; all this was done before the prayer for Aaron and the people.

[b] בער de monte ardente, V. L. Heb. burning, Ainſworth.

℣. 22. And at Taberah, and at Maſſah, and at Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked the Lord to wrath ;] Theſe places are not mentioned in the ſtrict order in which the provocations were made at them ; for they provoked the Lord at Maſſah by murmuring for water, before they provoked him at Taberah, by complaining as it ſhould ſeem of their journeying ; for Maſſah was before they came to Sinai, and Taberah after they departed from thence ; though ſome, as Aben Ezra obſerves, ſay that Taberah is Maſſah ; but it could not be the Maſſah in Rephidim, for that was on one ſide of mount Sinai, and Taberah on another ; though different places might be ſo called from their tempting the Lord at them ; rather Taberah and Kibroth-hattaavah ſeem to be the ſame ; where the people died with the fleſh in their mouths they luſted after, and were buried ; ſince no mention is made of their removal at that time from the one place to the other, nor of Taberah in the account of their journeys, only Kibroth-hattaavah ; ſee Exod. xvii. 7. Numb. xi. 3, 24.

℣. 23. Likewiſe when the Lord ſent you from Kadeſh-barnea, &c.] From whence the ſpies were ſent to ſearch the land, though previous to it they had the following order to go up and poſſeſs it ; ſee Numb. xxxii. 8. Deut. i. 19, 20, 21. ſaying, go up and poſſeſs the land which I have given you ; this they were bid to do, before they deſired the ſpies might be ſent to ſearch it firſt ; and after they had returned and made their report, they were encouraged to go up and take poſſeſſion of it : then ye rebelled againſt the commandment of the Lord your God ; refuſing to go up into it : and ye believed him not ; that he would caſt out and deſtroy the inhabitants of it, and put them into the poſſeſſion of it ; which they diſtruſted by reaſon of the gigantic ſtature of ſome that dwelt in it, and their fortified cities : nor hearkened to his voice ; whether commanding or encouraging.

℣. 24. You have been rebellious againſt the Lord from the day that I knew you ;] Either from the time he firſt had and took knowledge of them and viſited them, before his departure from Egypt to the land of Midian ; (ſee Exod. ii. 11——14. compared with Acts vii. 25.) or from the time that he was ſent to them to deliver them out of Egypt ; ſee Exod. v. 20, 21. and eſpecially from the time he brought them into the wilderneſs.

℣. 25. Thus I fell down before the Lord forty days and forty nights, as I fell down at the firſt, &c.] Which Jarchi ſays are the ſelf-ſame ſaid above, ℣. 18. but doubled or repeated, becauſe of the order of his prayer. The words at the firſt are not in the text ; and as before obſerved, we do not read that Moſes fell down at the firſt forty days he was in the mount, unleſs it can be thought he did, Exod. xxxii. 11. wherefore this falling down ſeems to be as he fell down at the ſecond forty days ; and ſo this was a third forty days, according to the Jewiſh writers, and of which opinion were Dr. Lightfoot and others ; ſee the note on Exod. xxxiv. 28. becauſe the Lord had ſaid he would deſtroy you ; threatened them with deſtruction, and ſeemed as if it was his intention to deſtroy them ; nay, even after Moſes's firſt prayer, though he bid him go and lead the people on, yet he declared that he would viſit their ſin upon them, Exod. xxxii. 34.

℣. 26. And I prayed therefore unto the Lord, &c] What follows is a different Prayer from that in Exod. xxxii. 31, 32. and agrees better with that in ℣. 11, 12, 13. delivered before he came down from the mount, yet could not be the ſame, becauſe delivered at another forty days and nights : and ſaid, O Lord God, deſtroy not thy people, and thine inheritance ; becauſe they were his inheritance, a people whom he had choſen for his peculiar treaſure ; this is the firſt argument uſed, another follows : which thou haſt redeemed through thy greatneſs ; redeemed out of the houſe of bondage, the land of Egypt, by his great power, as next explained : which thou haſt brought forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand : inflicting plagues on the Egyptians, particularly deſtroying their firſt-born, which made them the Iſraelites urge to depart.

℣. 27. Remember thy ſervants Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, &c.] The covenant he had made with them, the promiſes he had made to them of the multiplication of their ſeed, and of giving the land of Canaan to them ; which is a third argument uſed with the Lord not to deſtroy them : look not unto the ſtubbornneſs of this people, nor to their wickedneſs, nor to their ſin ; not to the natural temper and diſpoſition of the people, which was to be ſtubborn, obſtinate, ſtiff-necked and ſelf-willed ; nor to their wickedneſs, which appears in various inſtances ; nor to that particular ſin of idolatry they had now been guilty of ; tacitly owning that if God looked to theſe things, there was ſufficient reaſon to deſtroy them.

℣. 28. Leſt the land whence thou broughteſt us out, ſay, &c.] The land of Egypt, the inhabitants of it : becauſe the Lord was not able to bring them into the land which he promiſed them ; the land of Canaan, the inhabitants of it being ſo mighty, and their cities ſo ſtrongly fortified. Here Moſes expreſſes his concern for the glory of God, and the honour of his perfections, and makes that a fourth argument why he ſhould not deſtroy them : and becauſe he hated them, he hath brought them out to ſlay them in the wilderneſs ; out of Egypt, a plentiful country, into a wilderneſs where nothing was to be had ; but his choice of them for his inheritance, his redemption of them out of bondage and miſery, the care he took of them, and the proviſion he had made for them in the wilderneſs, clearly ſhewed that they were not the objects of his hatred but of his love.

℣. 29. Yet they are thy people, &c] Though they had ſinned againſt him : and thine inheritance ; which he would not forſake and caſt off ; at leaſt Moſes hoped on this account he would not, and makes uſe thereof as an argument with him, why he ſhould not, and which he repeats, adding, in effect what he had ſaid before : which thou broughteſt out by thy mighty power, and ſtretched-out arm ; even out of the land of Egypt ; the doing of which was plainly the effect of his all-mighty power, and an evidence of it, conſidering the weakneſs of Iſrael and the ſtrength of Egypt, and the manner in which the Lord brought about this ſurpriſing event.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

IN this chapter an account is given of an order to Moſes to hew two tables of ſtone, on which the Lord would write the words that were on the firſt, and to make an ark and put them into it, all which was accordingly done, ℣. 1—5. and of ſome of the journeys of the children of Iſrael, ℣. 6, 7. and of the ſeparation of the tribe of Levi to the ſervice of the ſanctuary, ℣. 8, 9. and of Moſes's ſtay in the mount forty days and nights, and his ſucceſs there, and the direction he had to lead on the people of Iſrael towards Canaan's land, ℣ 10, 11. and who by various arguments are exhorted to fear the Lord, and ſerve him, and keep his commands, ℣. 12—22.

℣. 1. At that time the Lord ſaid unto me, &c.] On the 40th day, mentioned in the preceding chapter, as Aben Ezra, or at the end of forty days, as Jarchi; not of the firſt forty, for then were given him the firſt two tables of ſtone with the law written on them, which he broke when he came down; but at the end of the ſecond forty days, as ſome think, when he had fallen before the Lord, and entreated him for the people, and as a token of his reconciliation to them, gave the following order: hew thee two tables of ſtone like unto the firſt, &c. Of the ſame ſort of ſtone, of the ſame ſize and form with thoſe God gave him in the mount the firſt time he was there, and which he broke in his deſcent from thence; they were the work of God, but theſe were to be hewed by Moſes: the order ſeems to be given between the requeſt Moſes made to ſee the glory of the Lord, and the proclamation made of it; ſee Exod. xxxiv. 1. and come up unto me into the mount; mount Sinai; this was certainly the third time of his going up there, and where he continued forty days and nights; but whether he continued there ſo long the ſecond time may be a matter of queſtion, though he certainly did the third time; ſee Exod. xxxii. 30, 31. and xxxiv. 1, 4, 28. and make thee an ark of wood; Jarchi thinks this was not the ark Bezaleel made, but made after, and is that which went out to battle; and ſome take it to be a temporary ark, made for the preſent purpoſe till that was finiſhed; but Aben Ezra is of opinion it is the ſame that Bezaleel made: and it may be ſaid to be made by Moſes, becauſe he was not only ordered to make it, but it was by his orders and the direction he gave to Bezaleel that it was made; and this ſeems the more probable, becauſe there the tables remained, ℣. 5.

℣. 2. And I will write on the tables the words that were in the firſt tables which thou brakeſt, &c.] Though they were hewn by Moſes, the writing on them was the Lord's; and the very ſame laws, in the ſame words, without any alteration or variation were written by him on theſe as on the former; partly to ſhew the authenticity of them, that they were of God and not Moſes, of a divine original and not human; and partly to ſhew the invariableneſs of them, that no change had been made in them, though they had been broken by the people; of which Moſes's breaking the tables was a repreſentation: and thou ſhalt put them in the ark; which being a type of Chriſt may ſignify the fulfilment of the law by him, who is the end, the fulfilling end of the law for righteouſneſs to every believer; and that as this was in his heart to fulfil it, ſo it is in his hand as a rule of faith and converſation to his people.

℣. 3. And I made an ark of Shittim-wood, &c.] That is, ordered it to be made, and it was made by Bezaleel, and that of ſhittim-wood; ſo the ark that was put into the holy of holies was made of this wood; ſee Exod. xxv. 10. and the note there, and xxxvii. 1. and hewed two tables of ſtone like unto the firſt; two marble ones, as the Targum of Jonathan; that is, he ordered them to be hewed, and took care that they ſhould be exactly made as the former were, of which he had perfect knowledge, having received them of the Lord, and brought them with him down the mount: and went up into the mount, having the two tables in my hand; in order to have the words of the law, the ten commands, written on them, theſe being only hewn ſtones without any thing on them; they were very probably marble, of which great quantities were near at hand.

℣. 4. And he wrote on the tables according to the firſt writing, &c.] The ſame laws, in the ſame letters: the ten commandments which the Lord ſpake unto you in the mount; in mount Sinai, on which he deſcended, and from whence he delivered the decalogue by word of mouth in an audible manner, that all the people could hear it: out of the midſt of the fire; in which he deſcended, and where he continued, and from whence he ſpake, ſo that it was indeed a fiery law: in the day of the aſſembly; when all the people of Iſrael were aſſembled together at the bottom of the mount to hear it: and the Lord gave them unto me; the two tables when he had wrote upon them the ten commands.

℣. 5. And I turned myſelf, &c.] From the Lord, out of whoſe hands he had received the tables: and came down from the mount; with the two tables in his hand as before, one in one hand, and the other in the other hand: and put the tables in the ark which I had made; or ordered to be made: and there they be, as the Lord commanded me; there they were when Moſes rehearſed what is contained in this book, on the plains of Moab, about 38 years after the putting them into it; and there they continued to be when the ark was brought into Solomon's temple, 1 Kings viii. 9. and there they were as long as the ark was in being; which may denote the continuance of the law in the hands of Chriſt under the goſpel-diſpenſation as a rule of walk and converſation to his people.*

℣. 6. And the children of Iſrael took their journey from Beeroth of the children of Jaakan, &c.] Not when or ſoon after they removed from Sinai; for if this place is the ſame with Bene Jaakan, as is generally ſuppoſed, they had a great many journies, manſions, and ſtations before they came to it; ſee Numb. xxxiii. 31. and beſides, ſince Aaron, according to this account, died at their next ſtation from hence, that was 38 years after their departure from mount Sinai; and it is hard to ſay what ſhould be the reaſon of making mention of theſe two or three journies here; and whereas they are here ſaid to journey from the place here mentioned to Moſera; on the contrary in Numb. xxxiii. 31. they are ſaid to depart from Moſera and pitch in Bene Jaakan; which is accounted for by their going backwards and forwards, and ſo both may be true. Aben Ezra is of opinion, that Beeroth Bene Jaakan, or the wells of the children of Jaakan, is not the ſame with Bene Jaakan, nor Moſera the ſame with Moſeroth; but Beeroth is Kadeſh, and Moſera is the name of the deſert of mount Hor; and it is certain that Moſeroth was the 27th ſtation, and Moſera, or the deſert of mount Hor, where Aaron died, was the 34th, and therefore muſt be diſtant; ſee Numb. xxxiii. 30—37. which ſeems to agree with what follows: there Aaron died, and there he was buried; it is certain that Aaron died on mount Hor, Numb. xx. 23, 28. and xxxiii. 38, 39. or there died and was buried when in the deſert of Moſera: and Eleazer his ſon miniſtred in the prieſts office in his ſtead; ſo that though the high-prieſt died, the office continued, and the law of it remained in force, and the tribe of Levi was ſeparated for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, as afterwards expreſſed.

℣. 7. From thence they journeyed unto Gudgodah,] &c.] Which Jarchi takes to be the ſame with Horhagidgad, and ſo do moſt; ſee Numb. xxxiii. 32, 33. but Aben Ezra ſays it is not, but is a general name, including Zalmanah, Punoen and Oboth, places the Iſraelites came to after they removed from mount Hor, where Aaron died; ſee Numb. xxxiii. 41, 42, 43. and from Gudgodah to Jotbath, a land of rivers of waters; which the above writer takes to be the ſame with Beer, the well, Numb. xxi. 16. and by this deſcription of it, it was a place where there was much water.

℣. 8. At that time the Lord ſeparated the tribe of Levi, &c.] Not at the time that Moſes came down from the mount with the tables of the law, but ſome conſiderable time after, even after the tabernacle was erected; nor at the time that Aaron died, and Eleazar ſucceeded him, but many years before that; unleſs there was a freſh ſeparation of them, or a renewal of it when Eleazar became high-prieſt in his father's ſtead; and ſo that being mentioned is the reaſon of its being repeated here: to bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord; even that into which the law, ſometimes called the covenant, was put, and therefore here called the ark of the covenant: when this was carried from place to place, as it was eſpecially in the wilderneſs, it was the buſineſs of the Levites to bear it, particularly the Kohathites; Numb. iii. 31. and x. 21. ſee 1 Chron. v. 1. to ſtand before the Lord to miniſter unto him; that is, to his prieſts, in the tabernacle, and to keep and guard that: and to bleſs in his name unto this day; not to bleſs the people, which was the work of the prieſt, but to ſing praiſe in the name of the Lord, to give thanks unto him, and bleſs and praiſe him.

℣. 9. Wherefore Levi hath no part nor inheritance with his brethren, &c.] In the diviſion of the land of Canaan, becauſe being ſeparated to the ſervice of the ſanctuary, he had no leiſure to plow and ſow, as Jarchi obſerves: the Lord is his inheritance, as the Lord thy God promiſed him; not in a ſpiritual ſenſe, for ſo the Lord was an inheritance and portion of other Iſraelites; though theſe being taken off of worldly employments, and devoted to ſanctuary-ſervice, might have more communion with God than others; but in a temporal ſenſe, proviſion being made particularly by tithes, which were the Lord's, for their maintenance; and ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan paraphraſe the words; "gifts which the Lord gave him are his inheritance; ſee Numb. xviii. 20, 21.

℣. 10. And I ſtayed in the mount, according to the firſt time, forty days and forty nights, &c.] which is to be connected with ℣. 6. and relates what paſſed before he came down from the mount with the two tables; as that he ſtayed there as long as he did when he received the firſt tables, and faſted alſo as long as he did then; ſee Exod. xxxiv. 28. and the Lord hearkened unto me at that time alſo; to his prayer on the behalf of the people: and the Lord would not deſtroy thee; though he had threatened it, and their ſin had deſerved it.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſaid unto me, ariſe, take thy journey before the people, &c.] Here Moſes goes on with his relation of things at mount Sinai, how that upon his ſupplication for the people, on account of the deſtruction they were threatened with for their idolatry, the Lord was graciouſly pleaſed not only to hear him and forgive the people, but ordered him to go before them, and lead them on towards the land of Canaan he had promiſed them, Exod. xxxii. 34. and xxxiii. 1. that they may go in and poſſeſs the land, which I ſware unto their fathers to give unto them; and which had it not been for their after murmurings and rebellions, they had been in the poſſeſſion of it in a little time, eſpecially after their departure from Sinai.

℣. 12. And now Iſrael, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, &c.] For all theſe favours beſtowed upon them, the forgiveneſs of their ſins, and a freſh intimation of their poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, and the renewal of the promiſe of it made to their fathers: but to fear the Lord thy God; to fear him with a filial fear, to fear him and his goodneſs, and him for his goodneſs ſake, and particularly for his pardoning grace and mercy vouchſafed to them; ſee Pſ. cxxx. 4. to walk in all his ways; preſcribed and directed to by him, every path of duty, whether moral, ceremonial, or judicial; and to love him, and to ſerve the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul; for that is the beſt ſervice which ſprings from love, and love conſtrains unto, and which is hearty and ſincere, as that is, and is performed in the beſt manner ſuch are capable of.

℣. 13. To keep the commandments of the Lord, and his ſtatutes, &c.] Both the ten commands and all others: which I command thee this day for thy good; promiſes of temporal good things, introduction into the land of Canaan, poſſeſſion of it, and continuance in it, being made to obedience to them.

℣. 14. Behold the heaven, and the heaven of heavens are the Lord's thy God, &c.] Made and poſſeſſed, by him; the airy and ſtarry heaven, the third heaven, which is the heaven of heavens, the ſeat of the divine majeſty, the habitation of angels and glorified ſaints: the earth alſo, with all therein is; that is his property, and at his diſpoſal, being made by him, and all that is upon it, or contained in it, even whatſoever is on or in the whole terraqueous globe; ſee Pſ. cxv. 15, 16.

℣. 15. Only the Lord had a delight in thy fathers to love them, &c.] Though the heavens and the earth, and all the inhabitants of them are the Lord's by creation, yet he had a ſpecial regard unto, and a peculiar complacency in, the fathers of the Iſraelites, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; from whence aroſe ſome particular expreſſions of love to them, ſignified by various acts of kindneſs done them, and promiſes made unto them: and he choſe their ſeed after them, even you above all the people, as it is this day; to be a ſpecial people to him, to enjoy civil and religious privileges greater than any other; and particularly to have his law given to them, them, his tabernacle and worſhip ſet up among them, which were at this time, and which gave them the preference to all other nations; ſee chap. iv. 7, 8. and vii. 6, 7, 8. Pſ. cxlvii. 19, 20. Rom. iii. 1, 2. and ix. 4, 5.

℣. 16. Circumciſe therefore the foreſkin of your heart, &c.] Content not yourſelves with, nor put your confidence in outward circumciſion of the fleſh, but be concerned for the circumciſion of the heart; for removing from that whatever is diſagreeable to the Lord, even all carnality, ſenſuality, hypocriſy, and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, and for having that put there which is well pleaſing in his ſight; and which though it is the work of God, and he only can do it and has promiſed it, yet ſuch an exhortation is made to bring men to a ſenſe of their need of it, and of the importance of it, and to ſhew how agreeable it is to the Lord, and ſo to ſtir them up to ſeek unto him for it; ſee ch. xxx. 6. and be no more ſtiff-necked; froward, obſtinate and diſobedient, as they had been hitherto; ch. ix. 6, 13, 24.

℣. 17. For the Lord your God is God of gods, &c.] Of angels and civil magiſtrates, who are ſometimes ſo called; theſe are his creatures, act for him and under him, and are accountable to him: the Lord of lords; of the kings and princes of the earth, who have their crowns, ſcepters, and kingdoms from him, and hold them of him, by and under whom they reign and decree judgment, and who are ſubject to his authority and controul: a great God; as the perfections of his nature, the works of his hands, the bleſſings of his providence and grace, and the extenſiveneſs of his dominion in heaven, earth, and hell ſhew him to be: a mighty and a terrible; mighty and powerful to help, protect and defend his people; terrible to his and their enemies, even to the kings of the earth: which regardeth not perſons; but beſtows his favours whether in a way of providence or grace, according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure, without regard to the works and merits of men, their characters or circumſtances: nor taketh reward; or bribes, to avert threatened and deſerved Judgments; ſee Job xxxvi. 18, 19.

℣. 18. He doth execute the judgment of the fatherleſs and widow, &c.] Who have none to help them, and whoſe patron and defender he is, and will do them juſtice himſelf, and take care that it is done them by others, or avenge their injuries, for he is a father of the fatherleſs, and a judge of the widow, in his holy habitation; Pſ. lxviii. 5. and loveth the ſtranger, in giving him food and raiment; one that is in a foreign country, at a diſtance from his native land, and deſtitute of friends, ſuch God in his providence takes care of, and expreſſes his love and kindneſs to, by giving them the neceſſaries of life, food and raiment.

℣. 19. Love ye therefore the ſtranger, &c.] Becauſe the Lord loves him; and another reaſon follows, particularly binding on the Iſraelites: for ye were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt; and therefore ſhould ſympathiſe with ſuch, and ſhew them compaſſion, relieve them in diſtreſs, and afford them whatever they want, and is in the power of their hands to communicate to them; remembering their own condition in Egypt, and how welcome ſuch a treatment would have been to them then, as well as the kind and careful providence of God towards them at that time.

℣. 20. Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, &c.] Which includes the whole worſhip of him external and internal: him ſhalt thou ſerve; heartily and ſincerely, according to his revealed will, and him only: and to him ſhalt thou cleave; and not turn aſide to follow other gods, and worſhip them: and ſwear by his name; and his only, whenever it is neceſſary to take an oath, which ſhould not be done raſhly or on trivial accounts, and never by any creature, but by the living God; ſee ch. vi. 13.

℣. 21. He is thy praiſe, &c.] The object and matter of it, who deſerves the praiſes of all his creatures, becauſe of his perfections, works, and bleſſings of goodneſs; for all mercies temporal and ſpiritual come from him, and therefore he is greatly to be praiſed for them: praiſe is his due, and it is comely in his people to give it to him; ſee Jer. xvii. 14. and he is thy God, which hath done for thee theſe great and terrible things, which thine eyes have ſeen; which were done upon the Egyptians for their ſakes, both in the land of Egypt and at the Red-ſea; and alſo what he had done for them in the wilderneſs, to Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, Pſ. cvi. 22. and cxxxvi. 10—21.

℣. 22. Thy fathers went down into Egypt with 70 perſons, &c.] That is, in all; for there were not 70 beſides Jacob and the patriarchs his ſons, but with them; ſee Gen. xlvi. 26, 27. and now the Lord thy God hath made thee as the ſtars of heaven for multitude; as he promiſed they ſhould be, Gen. xv. 5.

CHAP. XI.

IN this chapter, the exhortation to love the Lord, and keep his commands, is repeated and urged again and again from various conſiderations; as not only from the chaſtiſement of Pharaoh and the wicked Egyptians, but of ſuch Iſraelites who offended the Lord, and tranſgreſſed his law, ℣. 1—7. from the goodneſs and excellency of the land they were going to inherit, ℣. 8—11. from the bleſſing of rain that would come upon it, and be productive of all good things for man and beaſt, in caſe of obedience, and a reſtraint of it in caſe of diſobedience, ℣. 12—17. from the continuance of them and their offſpring in the land, ſhould they be careful to obſerve the commands themſelves, and teach them their children, ℣. 18—21. and from the extenſiveneſs of their conqueſts and dominions, ℣. 22—25. and from the different iſſue and effects of their conduct and behaviour, a bleſſing upon them if obedient, but a curſe if diſobedient, ℣. 26, 27, 28. and the chapter is concluded with an exhortation to pronounce the bleſſing on mount Gerizzim, and the curſe on mount Ebal; the ſituation of which places is deſcribed when they ſhould come into the land of Canaan, of which they are aſſured, ℣. 29—32.

℣. 1. Therefore thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God, &c.] Becauſe he is ſo great and glorious in himſelf, and becauſe he had done ſuch great and good things for them, the Iſraelites, particularly in the multiplication of them, the laſt thing mentioned: and keep his charge; whatſoever the Lord had charged them to obſerve, even what follow: and his ſtatutes and his judgments, and his commandments alway; all his laws, ceremonial, judicial, and moral; and that conſtantly and continually, all the days of their lives.

℣. 2. And know you this day, &c.] Take notice of, and diligently attend unto, what is now about to be delivered: for I ſpeak not unto your children which have not known, and which have not ſeen, the chaſtiſement of the Lord your God; who have no knowledge and experience of the chaſtiſement of the Lord on themſelves, or on their foes or friends; and with whom the argument drawn from it could not come with that force, and make that impreſſion, as it might be thought it would being uſed with them who had perfect knowledge of it. The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render it doctrine, which being children they were not inſtructed ſo perfectly in, as they were who were adult perſons, to whom Moſes directs his diſcourſe: his greatneſs, his mighty hand, and ſtretched-out arm; the exceeding greatneſs of his power, diſplayed in the following inſtances.

℣. 3. And his miracles, and his acts which he did in the midſt of Egypt, &c.] The miraculous works done there, the ten plagues inflicted on the Egyptians for refuſing to let Iſrael go: unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, and unto all his land; for thoſe plagues not only affected him and his court, and his metropolis, but all parts of the land, the inhabitants of it every-where.

℣. 4. And what he did unto the army of Egypt, unto their horſes, and to their chariots, &c.] At the Red-ſea, when they purſued Iſrael in order to bring them back or deſtroy them, after they had let them go, which army was very numerous; ſee Exod. xiv. 7, 9. how he made the water of the Red-ſea to overflow them; or, to flow over their faces [b], as they purſued after you; ſo that they could not ſee their way, nor ſteer their courſe after them; and not only ſo, but were covered with the waters of the ſea, drowned in them, and ſunk to the bottom of them: and how the Lord hath deſtroyed them unto this day; either continued to deſtroy them yet more and more by one means or another; or elſe the deſtruction made by the ſeveral plagues upon them, and particularly that of their army at the Red-ſea, which was the ſtrength and glory of the nation, was ſo general and extenſive, that they never recovered it to that day; and ſo were in no capacity of coming out againſt them, and attacking them, and doing them any hurt, all the forty years they had been in the wilderneſs; of which no doubt they had knowledge, and of their condition and circumſtances there.

℣. 5. And what he did unto you in the wilderneſs, until ye came unto this place;] Meaning not ſo much the good things he did for them in divers places, as the chaſtiſements and corrections he had exerciſed them with for their murmurings, rebellions, idolatry, and uncleanneſs, as at Taberah, Kibroth-hattaavah, on the coaſt of Edom, and plains of Moab; by fire, by ſword, by plagues, and fiery ſerpents; the inſtances both before and after being of this ſort.

℣. 6. And what he did unto Dathan and Abiram, the ſons of Eliab, the ſon of Reuben, &c.] When they with Korah and his company quarrelled with Moſes and Aaron about the prieſthood, Numb. xvi. 1, &c. how the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed them up; the hiſtory of which ſee in Numb. xvi. 30—33. and their houſholds and their tents; not their houſes and their tents, as the Septuagint and ſome other verſions; for though the word ſignifies houſes, and is often uſed for them, yet here it muſt ſignify families, their wives, and children; ſince they had no houſes, but dwelt in tents, all which were ſwallowed up with them: and all the ſubſtance that was in their poſſeſſion; gold, ſilver, cattle, houſhold-goods, and whatever they were poſſeſſed of: or was at their feet [c]; or which followed them, their living creatures; or was for them, as Aben Ezra interprets it; for their uſe, ſervice, and neceſſity: and this was done in the midſt of all Iſrael; openly and publickly, they beholding it, as follows; and therefore ſhould be rendered, before all Iſrael [d]; and beſides, the tents of Dathan and Abiram, Reubenites, were not in the midſt of Iſrael.

℣. 7. But your eyes have ſeen all the great acts of the Lord which he did;] Even all before related, with many others; and therefore the inſtruction they ſhould learn from thence, ſhould be as follows.

℣. 8. Therefore ſhall you keep all the commandments which I command you this day, &c.] For the reaſons before ſuggeſted, as well as for what follow; that ye may be ſtrong; healthful in body, and couragious in mind, for ſin tends to weaken both; whereas obſervance of the commands of God, contributes to the health and ſtrength of the body, and the vigour of the mind; both which were neceſſary to the preſent expedition they were going upon: and go in and poſſeſs the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it; the land of Canaan, they were marching towards in order to poſſeſs it; and nothing would more inſpire them with courage, and cauſe them to enter it manfully without fear of their enemies, than obedience to the commands of God; whoſe preſence being promiſed them on that account, they might expect it, and ſo had nothing to fear from the inhabitants of the land.

℣. 9. And that ye may prolong your days in the land, &c.] Not only enter it, and take poſſeſſion of it, but continue in it long, which depended upon their obedience to the laws of God: which the Lord ſware unto your fathers to give unto them and to their ſeed; had promiſed with an oath, ſo that they might be aſſured of the enjoyment of it, though they could not be of their continuance in it, unleſs they obeyed the divine commands: a land that floweth with milk and honey; abounds with all good things, whoſe fruits are fat as milk, and ſweet as honey; ſo the Targum of Jonathan.

℣. 10. For the land whither thou goeſt in to poſſeſs it, &c.] The land of Canaan they were about to take poſſeſſion of: is not as the land of Egypt from whence ye came out; either the whole land of Egypt, or that part of it, Rameſes, in which Iſrael dwelt, and which was the beſt of it, as Jarchi obſerves, and yet Canaan exceeded that; though the deſign of this paſſage is not ſo much to ſet forth the ſuperior excellency and fertility of the land of Canaan to that of Egypt, which was certainly a very fruitful country; ſee Gen. xiii. 10. but to obſerve ſome things in which they differed, whereby they both became fruitful, and in which Canaan had the advantage: where thou ſowedſt thy ſeed, and wateredſt it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs; as a gardener when he has ſowed his ſeed, or planted his plants, waters them that they may grow, by carrying his water-pot from bed to bed, which requires much labour labour and toil. In Egypt rain ſeldom fell, eſpecially in ſome places it was very rare, though that there was none at all is a vulgar miſtake; ſee the note on Zech. xiv. 18[e]. To ſupply the want of it the river Nile overflowed once a year, which not only moiſtened the earth, but left mud or ſlime upon it, which made it fruitful; but this was not ſufficient, for what thro' the river not overflowing enough ſometimes, and ſo as to reach ſome places, and through the heat of the ſun hardening the earth again, it was found neceſſary to cut canals from it, and by water from thence to water it, as a gardener waters his ſeed and plants; and it is to this watering that reſpect is here had, not to the overflowing of the Nile, for that was before the ſeed was ſown; but to the watering of it out of the canals, which was done after it was ſown; the former was without any trouble of theirs, the latter with much labour; the manner in which it is done is expreſſed by the phraſe with thy foot, which the Targum explains by thy ſelf, by their own labour and induſtry. Jarchi is more particular; "the land of Egypt had need to have water brought from the Nile with thy foot;" he ſeems to have underſtood the phraſe to ſignify carrying water on foot from the Nile to the place where it was wanted; but the cuſtom ſtill in uſe in Egypt, when they water their fields, plantations, or gardens, will give us a clear underſtanding of this phraſe; as a late traveiler informs us [f], the water is drawn out of the river (Nile) by inſtruments, and lodged in capacious ciſterns; when plants require to be refreſhed, they ſtrike out the plugs that are fixed in the bottoms of the ciſterns, and then the water guſhing out, is conducted from one rill to another by the gardener, who is always ready as occaſion requires to ſtop and divert the torrent by turning the earth againſt it with his foot, and opening at the ſame time with his mattock a new trench to receive it: and to the ſame purpoſe another learned perſon [g] has obſerved, that at other times (than the flowing of the Nile) they are obliged to have recourſe to art, and to raiſe the water out of the river and ſome deep pits by the help of machines, which water is afterwards directed in its courſe by channels cut in the ground, which convey the water to thoſe places where it is wanted; and when one part of the ground is ſufficiently watered, they then ſtop that channel, by thruſting ſome earth into the entrance of it with their foot, and then alſo with their foot open a paſſage into the next channel, and ſo on: and Philo the Jew [h] ſpeaks of a machine with which they uſed to water fields, and was worked with the feet by going up the ſeveral ſteps within, which gave motion to it.

℣. 11. But the land whither ye go to poſſeſs it, is a land of hills and vallies, &c.] And ſo could not be watered by the overflow of a river, and by canals cut out of it, and in the manner Egypt was; which was for the moſt part a plain and flat country, but not ſo Canaan, in which were many hills and mountains, as thoſe about Jeruſalem, Carmel, Tabor, Lebanon, and others; and plains and vallies, as the valley of Jezreel, &c. and which made it more delightful and pleaſant for proſpects; ſee ch. viii. 7. and drinketh water of the rain of heaven; by which it was watered, refreſhed, and made fruitful; not by means of men, but by the Lord himſelf, and ſo with much more eaſe to men, and without the toil and labour they were obliged to in Egypt, as well as it was both more healthful and pleaſant; for the damps that aroſe from the overflow of the Nile, were ſometimes prejudicial to health; and during the ſeaſon of its overflow, which was in the ſummer, they were obliged to keep in their houſes, and could not walk abroad for weeks together; to which inconveniences the land of Canaan was not ſubject; but then, as its fertility depended on rain from heaven, the Iſraelites would be under the greater obligation to obſerve the commands of God, who could give and withhold it at his pleaſure, and as they conducted themſelves; which ſeems to be the general drift of this paſſage.

℣. 12. A land which the Lord thy God careth for, &c.] In a very particular and ſpecial manner; otherwiſe he has a general care of the whole world, and all the parts of it; for as the earth is his, and the fulneſs thereof, his providential care reaches every-where; but as this ſpot was what he had choſen for his own reſidence, and the place of his worſhip, and for an habitation for his peculiar people; he exerciſed a more peculiar care over it, to make it fruitful, commodious, and pleaſant; or which he ſeeketh [i]; that is, the good of it, and to make it convenient, uſeful, and delightful to his people; yea, which he ſought for and deſired for his own habitation, Pſ. cxxxii. 13, 14. the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year; his eyes of providence, to give the former and the latter rain, and that there be ſeed-time and harveſt in their ſeaſons, and that the fruits of it be produced at their proper time; ſome at the beginning, others at the end of the year, and others in the intervening months, and all wiſely ſuited to the good of the inhabitants of it.

℣. 13. And it ſhall come to paſs, if you ſhall hearken diligently unto my commandments which I command you this day, &c.] In the name, and by the authority of the Lord, the only lawgiver: to love the Lord your God, and to ſerve him with all your heart, and with all your ſoul; ſee ch. x. 12. Jarchi interprets this of prayer; but it is not to be reſtrained to that only, but includes the whole ſervice of God, in all the parts of it, performed from a principle of love to him, and in ſincerity and truth.

℣. 14. That I will give you the rain of your land in his due ſeaſon, &c.] Such a quantity of it as the land required, a ſufficiency of it to make it fruitful, and that in proper time: the firſt rain and the latter rain; the former rain in Marcheſvan, the latter rain in Niſan, as the Targum of Jonathan; the firſt fell about our October, which was at or quickly after ſeed-time, to water the ſeed that it might take root, and grow and ſpring up; and the latter fell about March, a little before harveſt, to ripen the corn, and ſwell and plump the ears of it; and make them yield more and better; ſee the note on Joel ii. 23. that thou mayeſt gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil; which were the principal things the land afforded for the ſuſtenance of men; bread-corn, the ſtay and ſtaff of human life, and which ſtrengthens man's heart, and makes him fit for labour; wine, which is his drink, and makes the heart of man gladſome and chearful; and oil, which in theſe countries was uſed inſtead of butter, and was fattening, and made the face to ſhine, Pſ. civ. 15. The in-gathering of theſe fruits were at different times; the barley-harveſt firſt, the wheat-harveſt next, and after that the vintage, and the gathering thering of the olives; and by means of rain in due ſeaſon, they were favoured with each of theſe.

℣. 15. And I will ſend graſs in thy fields for thy cattle, &c.] By giving plentiful ſhowers of rain at proper times, to cauſe it to ſpring up and grow, that ſo there might be food for the cattle of every ſort, greater or leſſer; ſee Pſ. civ. 13, 14. Zech. x. 1. that thou mayeſt eat and be full; which refers to the preceding verſe, as well as to this; and the ſenſe is, that the Iſraelites might eat of and enjoy the fruits of the earth to ſatiety; namely, their corn, wine, and oil; and that their cattle might have graſs enough to ſupply them with.

℣. 16. Take heed to yourſelves, that your heart be not deceived, &c.] By obſerving the influence of the heavens upon the fruitfulneſs of the earth, and ſo be drawn to the worſhip of the hoſt of them, the ſun, moon, and ſtars; or by the examples of nations round about them; and by the plauſible arguments they may make uſe of, taken from the traditions of anceſtors, from antiquity, and the conſent of nations, and the great numbers of worſhippers, and the like: and ye turn aſide; from the true God, and the worſhip of him; or from the law, as Jarchi, which directs to the worſhip of one God, and forbids idolatry, or the worſhipping of images: and ſerve other gods, and worſhip them; other gods than the one only living and true God; gods that made not the heavens and the earth, and which cannot give rain, nor any bleſſing and mercy of life, nor help and deliver their worſhippers when in diſtreſs.

℣. 17. And then the Lord's wrath be kindled againſt you, &c.] For their idolatry, nothing being more provoking to him than that, it being contrary to his nature and being, as well as to his will, and to his honour and glory: and he ſhut up the heaven, that there be no rain; the treaſures and ſtore-houſes of it there, or the windows of it, the clouds, which when opened let it down, but when ſhut withhold it; the key of rain is one of the keys which the Jews ſay [k] the Lord keeps in his own hand, and with it he opens and no man ſhuts, and ſhuts and no man opens; ſee Deut. xxviii. 12. Mal. iii. 10. and that the land yield not her fruit; which is unavoidably the caſe when rain is withheld: and leſt ye periſh quickly from off the good land which the Lord giveth you; for if the land does not yield its fruit ſufficient to ſupport the inhabitants of it, they muſt in courſe periſh.

℣. 18. Therefore ſhall ye lay up theſe my words in your heart, and in your ſoul, &c.] Treaſure up the laws of God delivered to them in their minds, retain them in their memories, and cheriſh a cordial affection for them; which would be an antidote againſt apoſtacy, idolatry, and other ſins, Pſ. cxix. 11. and bind them for a ſign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes; of this and the two following verſes, ſee the notes on ch. vi. 7, 8, 9.

℣. 21. That your days may be multiplied, &c.] Long life being a very deſireable bleſſing, and which is promiſed to thoſe that obey and keep the law; ſee ch. xxx. 19, 20. Pſ. xci. 16. and the days of your children; which are dear to parents, and the continuance of whoſe lives, next to their own, is moſt deſireable, yea, as deſireable as their own; and eſpecially it is deſireable that they might have a poſterity deſcending from them, to enjoy for ever their eſtates and poſſeſſions; as it was to the people of Iſrael, that they might have a ſeed always to dwell in the land which the Lord ſware unto your fathers to give them; the land of Canaan, ſo often ſpoken of as the promiſe, oath, and gift of God: as the days of heaven upon the earth; that is, as long as the heavens and the earth ſhall be, and the one ſhall be over the other, as they will be to the end of time.

℣. 22. For if ye ſhall diligently keep all theſe commandments which I command you to do them;] Obſerve and take notice of them, even all of them, and ſo as not merely to have a theory or notional knowledge of them, but to put them in practice: to love the Lord your God; and ſhow it by obeying his commands, and which is the end of the commandment, and the principle from which all obedience ſhould flow: to walk in all his ways, and to cleave unto him; ſee ch. x. 12, 20.

℣. 23. Then will the Lord drive out all thoſe nations from before you, &c.] By little and little, even all the ſeven nations which then inhabited the land of Canaan; and this he would do to make room for them, that they might inherit the land; ſee ch. vii. 1. and ye ſhall poſſeſs greater nations, and mightier than yourſelves; countries whoſe inhabitants were more in number, and greater in ſtrength, than they; and therefore the conqueſt of them was not to be aſcribed to themſelves, but to the Lord; this is often obſerved; ſee ch. vii. 1. and ix. 1.

℣. 24. Every place wherein the ſoles of your feet ſhall tread, &c.] Meaning in the land of Canaan; though the Jews vainly apply this to every land, and country, and place, therein where any of them come; pleaſing themſelves with this fooliſh fancy, that all ſhall be theirs that the foot of any of them have trod upon, or they have dwelt in; but that it reſpects only the land of Canaan, appears by the following deſcription of it and its boundaries: from the wilderneſs; the wilderneſs of Paran, which lay to the ſouth of it, where Kadeſh was, from whence the ſpies were ſent, and was the ſouthern border of it: and Lebanon; which was a range of mountains to the north of it, and was the northern border of the land: from the river, the river Euphrates; which was the eaſtern border of it, when it was carried to its utmoſt extent, as in the days of Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 21. even unto the uttermoſt ſea ſhall your coaſt be; the mediterranean ſea, which was the weſtern border of the land of Canaan, or the hinder ſea, and ſo it is called Zech. xiv. 8. it lay at the back of them; for if a man ſtands with his face to the eaſt, the ſouth will be on his right hand, and the north on his left, and the weſt will be behind him, or at the back of him.

℣. 25. There ſhall no man be able to ſtand before you, &c.] Meaning not a ſingle man, ſuch an one as Og, or any of the ſons of Anak, the giants; becauſe it could never be thought, imagined, or feared, that one man only ſhould be able to ſtand againſt 600,000 fighting men, but any people or nation, though greater and mightier than they: for the Lord your God ſhall lay the fear of you, and the dread of you, upon all the land that ye ſhall tread upon; that is, upon all the land of Canaan, and the inhabitants of it; who ſhould hear what wonderful things had been done for them in Egypt, and at the Red-ſea, and in the wilderneſs; and what they had done to Sihon and Og, and to their countries, and which accordingly was fulfilled, Joſh. ii. 9, 10, 11. as he hath ſaid unto you; had promiſed them, Deut. ii. 25. and which was propheſied of in the prophetic ſong at the Red-ſea; ſee Exod. xv. 14, 15, 16.

[k] Targum Jon. in Deut. xxviii. 12.

℣. 26. Behold, I ſet before you this day a bleſſing and a curſe, &c.] Meaning the law of God, and the ſtatutes, judgments, and commandments of it; which, if obeyed, bleſſings would be beſtowed upon them; but if diſobeyed, they would be liable to the curſes of it, as the following words explain it; ſee ch. xxx. 15—19. every one of the Iſraelites were called upon to ſee and conſider this matter, it being an intereſting one to them all.

℣. 27. A bleſſing, if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God, &c.] That is, a bleſſing ſhould come upon them, even all temporal bleſſings they ſtood in need of; they ſhould be bleſſed in body and eſtate, in their families, and in their flocks, in town and country; ſee Deut. xxviii. 1—6. which I command you this day; afreſh repeated to them, and enjoined them the obſervation of it in the name of the Lord.

℣. 28. And a curſe, if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God, &c.] Accurſed in body and eſtate, in baſket and ſtore; in their families, flocks, and herds; within doors and without; in city, and country; going out, or coming in; in this world, and that to come, if divine goodneſs prevent not; ſee ch. xxviii. 15—20. and xxix. 20. but turn aſide out of the way which I command you this day; which the law he gave them, and repeated to them, directed them to walk in: to go after other gods, which ye have not known; to ſerve and worſhip the gods of other nations, ſtrange gods, which neither they nor their fathers knew any thing of, or ever received any good thing from; and which indeed are no gods, and nothing in the world, as an idol is.

℣. 29. And it ſhall come to paſs when the Lord thy God hath brought thee into the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, &c.] Which is often obſerved, as being near at hand; and when and where many things were to be done, which could not be done in the place and circumſtances they now were, particularly what follows: that thou ſhalt put the bleſſing on mount Gerizzim, and the curſe upon mount Ebal; that is, pronounce the one on one mountain, and the other on the other mountain, or at leaſt towards them, or over-againſt them. The Targum of Jonathan is, "ye ſhall ſet ſix tribes on mount Gerizzim, and ſix tribes on mount Ebal; (ſee ch. xxvii. 12, 13.) bleſſing they ſhall turn their faces againſt mount Gerizzim, and curſing they ſhall turn their faces againſt mount Ebal;" with which agrees the account given in the Miſnah; "ſix tribes went to the top of mount Gerizzim, and ſix to the top of mount Ebal; and the prieſts and the Levites, and the ark, ſtood below in the middle; the prieſts ſurrounded the ark, and the Levites the prieſts, and all Iſrael were on this and on that ſide of the ark, as in Joſh. viii. 33. then they turned their faces againſt Gerizzim, they opened with the bleſſing, bleſſed is he that maketh not any graven or molten image, and both anſwered Amen; then they turned their faces againſt mount Ebal, and opened with the curſe, Deut. xxvii. 15. and both anſwered Amen [s];" ſee the performance of this command in Joſh. viii. 33, 34.

℣. 30. Are they not on the other ſide Jordan, &c.] Oppoſite to that where Moſes now was in the plains of Moab, even in Samaria; ſo in the Miſnah [t] it is ſaid, "as ſoon as Iſrael paſſed over Jordan, they came to mount Gerizzim and mount Ebal, which are in Samaria;" but thoſe mountains were not near Jordan nor Jericho, to which the people of Iſrael came firſt, but 60 miles from thence; tho' they were, as Moſes ſays, on the other ſide from the place they now were: by the way wherewith the ſun goeth down; or, as the Targum of Jonathan, "after the way of the ſun-ſetting;" following that, or taking their direction from thence, ſignifying that they lay to the weſt of Jordan: in the land of the Canaanites; of that particular tribe or nation which were eminently called Canaanites, for theſe dwelt by the ſea by the coaſt of Jordan, Numb. xiii. 29. or as further deſcribed, that dwell in the champain over-againſt Gilgal; in the plain open champain country oppoſite to Gilgal; not that Gilgal Joſhua encamped at before he came to Jericho, which in Moſes's time was not known by that name, but another, as Dr. Lightfoot [u] obſerves, and he thinks Galilee is meant: beſide the plains of Moreh, near to Shechem, Gen. xii. 6. and that Gerizzim, one of theſe mountains, was not far from Shechem, is evident from Judg. ix. 6, 7. and ſo in the Miſnah [w] it is ſaid, that theſe mountains were on the ſide of Shechem, which is in the plains of Moreh, as in Deut. xi. 30. Gen. xii. 6. as the plains of Moreh here denote Shechem, ſo there: Benjamin of Tudela ſays [x] there is a valley between them in which lies Shechem; and in his time there were on mount Gerizzim fountains and orchards, but mount Ebal was dry like ſtones and rocks. The Targum of Jonathan here, inſtead of Moreh, reads Mamre; ſee Gen. xiii. 18.

℣. 31. For ye ſhall paſs over Jordan, to go in to poſſeſs the land which the Lord your God giveth you, &c.] They were now near it, and by this they are aſſured they ſhould paſs over it, in order to take poſſeſſion of the land God had given them, and which gift of his was a ſufficient title to it: and ye ſhall poſſeſs it, and dwell therein; ſhould not only take poſſeſſion of it, but make their abode in it; they are aſſured hereby of continuance in it, on condition they obeyed the laws of God, as follows.

℣. 32. And ye ſhall obſerve to do all the ſtatutes and judgments, &c.] Take notice of them, and heed unto them, ſo as to practiſe them: which I ſet before you this day; repeated in order to them, on the obſervance of which depended their continuance in the land of Canaan; and therefore this is ſo often repeated and urged.

CHAP. XII.

IN this chapter orders are given to deſtroy all altars, pillars, groves, and images, made for the worſhip of idols in the land of Canaan, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and to bring all ſacrifices and holy things unto the place which the Lord ſhould chuſe for his habitation, and not do as they then did, not being come to their reſt, ℣. 4—14. fleſh for their common food might be killed and eaten in their own houſes, pro-provided they did not eat the blood; but poured it out upon the earth, ℣. 15—25. tithes, vows, and free-will offerings, were to be eaten in the holy place, ℣. 17, 18, 19. and burnt-offerings to be offered on the altar of the Lord, and the blood of them to be poured out upon the altar, ℣. 26, 27, 28. all which they were carefully to observe, ℣. 29. and they are cautioned against idolatry, and enquiring after the manner of it, as practised by the old inhabitants of the land, and introducing their customs into the service of God, ℣. 30—32.

℣. 1. These are the statutes and judgments which ye shall observe to do, &c.] Which are recorded in this and the following chapters; here a new discourse begins, and which perhaps was delivered at another time, and respects things that were to be observed: in the land which the Lord God of thy fathers giveth thee to possess it; the land of Canaan, often described by this circumlocution, to put them in mind that it was promised to their fathers by their Covenant-God, was his gift to them, and which they would quickly be in the possession of; and therefore when in it should be careful to observe the statutes and judgments of God constantly: even all the days that ye live upon the earth; or land, the land of Canaan; for though there were some laws binding upon them, live where they would, there were others peculiar to the land of Canaan, which they were to observe as long as they and their posterity lived there; see 1 Kings viii. 40.

℣. 2. Ye shall utterly destroy all the places wherein the nations which ye shall possess served their gods, &c.] The temples erected for the worship of them by the Canaanites, of which there were many, as appears by the various names of places given them from the temples in them, as Beth-shemesh, Beth-Baalmeon, Beth-peor, and others: upon the high mountains and upon the hills; which they chose to worship on, being nearer the heavens, and which they thought most acceptable to their gods; and some of them had their names from hence, as Baal-peor, in like manner as Jupiter Olympius was called by the Greeks; see Jer. ii. 20. and iii. 6. and under every green tree; which being shady and solitary, and pleasant to the sight, they fancied their gods delighted in, and this notion prevailed among other nations; and there is scarce any deity but what had some tree or another devoted to it; as the oak to Jupiter, the laurel to Apollo, the ivy to Bacchus, the olive to Minerva, the myrtle to Venus, &c. see Jer. ii. 20. and iii. 6.

℣. 3. And you shall overthrow their altars, &c.] Which were of stone, as Jarchi observes; whereas the altar ordered to be made by the Lord, before the altar of burnt-offering in the tabernacle was made, was of earth, Exod. xx. 24. these were to be demolished, lest the Israelites should be tempted to make use of them; and besides, the Lord would not have any remains of idolatry in the land where his tabernacle and worship were, as being abominable to him: and break down their pillars; or statues erected to the honour of their idols; according to Jarchi it was a single stone hewed out at first for the basis of a statue[y]; perhaps such as were called Bætulia, in imitation of the stone Jacob set up for a pillar at Bethel, Gen. xxviii. 18, 19. and burn their groves with fire; which were planted about their temples, and under which also their idols were placed, and where they privately committed the most abominable lewdness under the notion of religion. The Targum of Jonathan renders the word abominations, meaning idols; and so Jarchi interprets it by a tree that is worshipped; see the note on ch. vii. 5. and you shall hew down the graven images of their gods; which were made of wood: and destroy the names of them out of the place; by never making any mention of them in common discourse, and by changing the names of places called from them; and especially by destroying all the relicks of them, and whatever appertained to them, which might lead to the mention of them; see Hos. ii. 17.

℣. 4. Ye shall not do so unto the Lord your God;] Not sacrifice to him on hills and mountains, and under green trees; though the Jews commonly refer this to the destruction of the names of God, and of any thing appertaining to the temple; that though the temples and the altars of the heathens were to be overthrown, yet not a stone was to be taken from the house of God, or that belonged to it, nor any of his names to be blotted out; so the Targum of Jonathan and Maimonides[z], who also observes[a], that whoever removes a stone by way of destruction from the altar, or from the temple, or from the court, is to be beaten; so he that burns the holy wood.

℣. 5. But unto the place which the Lord your God, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, that the Word of the Lord your God: shall chuse out of all your tribes to put his name there; to place his tabernacle, set up his worship, take up his residence, and cause the shekinah, or his divine majesty to dwell there, as the next clause explains it; out of what tribe it should be chosen, and where it should be, is not said. Maimonides[b] gives three reasons for it; he says there are three great mysteries why the place is not clearly, but obscurely mentioned; 1. lest the Gentiles should seize upon it, and make war for the sake of it, supposing this place to be the end of the law; 2. lest they in whose hands the place then was, should by all means waste and destroy it; 3. which is the chief, lest every tribe should desire to have it in its own lot and jurisdiction; and so strifes might arise among them on account of it, as happened to the priesthood: even unto his habitation shall ye seek; the temple at Jerusalem is meant, where the Lord took up his dwelling, and whither men were to come and seek unto him by prayer and supplication for whatsoever they needed, and to enquire of him in matters doubtful, and they wanted counsel in: and thither thou shalt come; with sacrifices of every sort, where they were to be slain and offered to the Lord, and become acceptable to him, as is more largely declared in the following part of this chapter.

℣. 6. And thither ye shall bring your burnt-offerings, &c.] For the daily sacrifice, and upon any other account whatsoever; this was before ordered to be brought to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and now to the place where that should be fixed, Lev. xvii. 8, 9. and your sacrifices; all other distinct from burnt-offerings, as sin-offerings, trespass-offerings, and peace-offerings, especially the latter. Jarchi interprets them of peace-offerings of debt, such as a man was obliged to bring; but as the distance of some persons from Jerusalem was very great, and it was troublesome and expensive, they might, according to the Jewish writers, bring them the next grand festival, when all the males were obliged to appear there; so ſo ſays Maimonides [c], all offerings of a man, whether by obligation (ſuch as he was bound to bring) or free-will-offerings, he muſt bring at the firſt feaſt that comes; and another of their writers obſerves [d], that if only one feaſt has paſſed, and he has not brought his vow, he tranſgreſſes an affirmative precept, Deut. xii. 6. the firſt feaſt on which thou comeſt thither, thou muſt needs bring it; and if three have paſſed, he tranſgreſſes a negative precept, Deut. xxiii. 21. and your tithes; tithes of beaſts, and the ſecond tithes, according to Jarchi: and heave-offerings of your hand; theſe according to the ſame writer were the firſt-fruits, and ſo it is rendered in the Septuagint verſion; and thus Maimonides [e] ſays, the firſt-fruits are called Trumot, or heave-offerings; ſee Lyod. xxii. 29. and your vows and your free-will-offerings; which were ſpecies of peace-offerings, Lev. vii. 16. and the firſtlings of your herds and of your flocks; which were ſanctified and devoted to the Lord, Exod. xiii. 2.

℣. 7. And there ye ſhall eat before the Lord your God, &c.] The prieſts and the Levites, what was their portion, ſo Aben Ezra; but the people alſo are included, and by what follows ſeem chiefly deſigned, who were to eat their part of the ſacrifices, particularly of the tithes and peace-offerings, in the holy place that ſhould be choſen and appointed; ſee ch. xiv. 22, 23, 26, 27. and ye ſhall rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto; in all the labours of their hands, and what they got thereby, which they were chearfully to enjoy, and expreſs their thankfulneſs for it in this way; ſee Eccl. v. 18, 19. ye and your houſholds; their wives, ſons, daughters, men, and maid-ſervants; yea, with them Levites, ſtrangers, fatherleſs, and widows, were to partake of ſome of their free-will-offerings, ch. xvi. 10, 11. wherein the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee; and theſe offerings were euchariſtical, and by way of thankſgiving for the bleſſing of God upon their labours, for it is that which maketh rich, Prov. x. 22.

℣. 8. Ye ſhall not do after all the things that we do here, &c.] In the wilderneſs, where they had no abiding, but were continually removing from place to place, and could not always obſerve punctually and preciſely the exact order and time of their ſacrifices and other things, nor offer them at any certain place, and many were doubtleſs neglected by them; ſee Amos v. 25. every man whatſoever is right in his own eyes; that did he, brought the above things when and where he pleaſed; not that there was no regard had to the laws and rules given, as if there was no prieſt in Iſrael; but they were not ſo exactly in all circumſtances conformed to, as they would be obliged to when they came into the land of Canaan, and had a certain place to bring their offerings to; ſo ſome in Aben Ezra obſerve, that one would give the firſtling, another not, becauſe it depended on the land, or was what they were obliged to only when they came into the land of Canaan; ſee Exod. xiii. 11. but he thinks the ſenſe is, that they did not all fear God, and ſo did not do their duty.

℣. 9. For ye are not yet come to the reſt, &c.] The land of Canaan, which was typical of the reſt which remains for the people of God in heaven; for though they now enter into a ſpiritual reſt in Chriſt, they are not yet come to their eternal reſt; they are in a world of trouble, through Sin, Satan, and wicked men; but they ſhall come to it, as Iſrael did to Canaan; for God has promiſed and prepared it, and it remains for them; Chriſt prayed for it, is alſo gone to prepare it, and the Spirit is the ſeal and earneſt of it, and works up the ſaints, and makes them meet for it: and to the inheritance which the Lord your God giveth you; and the land of Canaan being an inheritance, and the gift of God, was alſo a type of the heavenly inheritance; which ſaints are now born unto, and have both a right unto, and meetneſs for, through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and grace of God; but as yet are not entered on it, but that is reſerved for them in heaven, and they are preſerved and kept for that; and ere long ſhall inherit it, as the free gift of God their Father to them, and which is peculiar to them as children. Jarchi and Ben Melech by the reſt underſtand Shiloh, and by the inheritance Jeruſalem; ſo in the Miſnah [f]; ſee 1 Chron. xxiii. 25. the Targum of Jonathan is, "ye are not come to the houſe of the ſanctuary, which is the houſe of reſt, and to the inheritance of the land."

℣. 10. But when ye go over Jordan, &c.] Which lay between the place where they now were, and the land of Canaan, and which they would quickly go over: and dwell in the land which the Lord your God giveth you to inherit; the land of Canaan, and which ſhews that that is meant by the inheritance: and when he giveth you reſt from all your enemies round about; which was done when the land was ſubdued, and divided among the tribes of Iſrael. Joſh. xxii. 4. and which confirms the ſenſe of Canaan being the reſt; though this was more completely fulfilled in the days of David, when he and Iſrael had reſt from all their enemies round about, 2 Sam. vii. 1. and who brought the ark of the Lord to Jeruſalem; and into whoſe heart the Lord put it to prepare to build a temple at Jeruſalem for him, and which was erected and finiſhed in the days of his ſon Solomon: ſo that ye dwell in ſafety; from their enemies, as they more eſpecially did in the reigns of David and Solomon; which ſeems plainly to deſcribe the time when the place not named ſhould appear to be choſen by the Lord to put his name in, as follows.

℣. 11. Then there ſhall be a place, &c.] Fixed and ſettled, and will be known to be the place: which the Lord your God ſhall chuſe, to cauſe his name to dwell there; where he himſelf would dwell, and where his name would be called, and he would be worſhipped: thither ſhall ye bring all that I command you, your burnt-offerings and your ſacrifices, your tithes, and the heave-offerings of your hands; of which ſee the note on ℣. 6. and all your choice vows which ye vow unto the Lord; or, the choice of your vows [g]; which, as Jarchi obſerves, was brought of their choiceſt things, as they ought to be; ſee Mal. i. 14.

℣. 12. And ye ſhall rejoice before the Lord your God, &c.] In the place choſen and fixed, where a temple would be built for him, and he would take up his reſidence; eating with joy and gladneſs that part of the offerings which belonged to them, keeping as it were a feaſt before the Lord, in token of gratitude for what they had received from him: ye and your ſons, and your daughters, and your men-ſervants, and your maid-ſervants; which explains what is meant by their houſhold, ℣. 7. wives are not mentioned, becauſe it could not be thought they would eat and rejoice, or keep ſuch a feaſt without without them, and therefore needleſs to name them: and the Levite that is within your gates; ſuch alſo were to partake of this entertainment, who were uſeful in inſtructing their families in the knowledge of divine things, and ſerviceable to them on many accounts in the worſhip of God: foraſmuch as he hath no part nor inheritance with you; in the diviſion of the land, and ſo having nothing to manure and cultivate, was deſtitute of the fruits of the earth, and could make no improvement and increaſe of his ſubſtance, as they could.

℣. 13. Take heed to thyſelf, that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings, &c.] And ſo any other, this is put for all the reſt: in every place that thou ſeeſt; which might take with their fancy, ſeem pleaſant, and ſo a proper and ſuitable place to ſacrifice in, as on high places, and under green trees; but they were not to indulge their own fancies and imaginations, or follow the cuſtoms of others, but keep to the rules preſcribed them by the Lord, and to the place fixed by him for his worſhip.

℣. 14. But in the place which the Lord ſhall chuſe in one of thy tribes, &c.] Which tribe is not named, nor what place in that tribe; ſee the note on ℣. 5. there thou ſhalt offer thy burnt-offerings; on the altar of burnt-offering there placed: and there ſhalt thou do all that I command thee; reſpecting ſanctuary-ſervice, and particularly thoſe things obſerved in ℣. 6.

℣. 15. Notwithſtanding thou mayeſt kill and eat fleſh in all thy gates, &c.] They might kill ſuch cattle that were allowed for food, and eat the fleſh of them in the ſeveral cities and houſes in which they dwelt; they were not obliged to bring theſe to the place God ſhould chuſe, and kill them there, as they had been wont to bring them to the tabernacle whilſt in the wilderneſs: whatſoever thy ſoul luſteth after; whatever they had a mind to, or their appetite craved, and were deſirous of, provided it was not any thing forbidden, but was allowed to be eaten: according to the bleſſing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee; which it was in the power of their hands to procure for themſelves; they might live according to their abilities, and keep a table anſwerable to what God had bleſſed them with; from which they were ſo far from being reſtrained, that it was rather commendable in them ſo to do, provided they did not indulge to luxury and intemperance: the clean and the unclean may eat thereof; that is, ſuch in their families who laboured under any ceremonial uncleanneſs by the touch of a dead body, or by reaſon of iſſues and menſtrues; theſe, as well as thoſe who were free from any thing of this kind, might eat of common food in their houſes, though they might not eat of the holy things; ſee Lev. vii. 20, 21. as of the roe-buck and as of the hart; that is, as thoſe were clean creatures, and allowed for food, ch. xiv. 5. ſo they might eat of oxen or ſheep, or lambs or rams, and goats, though they were creatures uſed in ſacrifice.

℣. 16. Only ye ſhall not eat the blood, &c.] All manner of blood being forbidden, of fowl or of beaſts, whether ſlain for ſacrifice or for common food: ye ſhall pour it out upon the earth as water; which cannot be gathered up again for uſe, but is ſwallowed up in the earth.

℣. 17. Thou mayeſt not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oil, &c.] This can't be underſtood of the tithe given to the Levites, or of that which the Levites out of theirs gave to the prieſts, for that was only eaten by them; but of the tithe which every three years they were to lay up within their gates, and which they were to eat with their families and others; but the other two years they were to carry it to the place the Lord choſe, or turn it into money, and when they came thither purchaſe with it what they pleaſed, and eat it they and their houſhold, and others with them, before the Lord; ſee Deut. xiv. 22——29. the firſtlings of thy herds or of thy flocks; theſe alſo the firſt-born males belonged to the Lord, and ſo to the prieſts, and could not be eaten by the people any where; and muſt be underſtood either of the next firſtlings, which were the people's, or of the female firſtlings, which they might devote to the Lord, and ſo not allowed to eat at home, but in the choſen place: nor any of thy vows which thou voweſt, nor thy free-will-offerings; which were ſpecies of peace-offerings, and ſo to be eaten not in their own cities, but in the place appointed: or heave-offerings of thine hand; the firſt-fruits; ſee ch. xxvi. 1—11. theſe were ſuch they were not bound to bring, but brought them freely.

℣. 18. But thou muſt eat them before the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chooſe, &c.] Which may be ſaid to be eaten before him, being eaten in the place where his ſanctuary ſtood, in which he dwelt: thou, and thy ſon and thy daughter, and thy man-ſervant and thy maid-ſervant, and the Levite that is within thy gates; who were all to come with him to this place; ſee the note on ℣. 12. and thou ſhalt rejoice before the Lord thy God, in all that thou putteſt thine hand unto; chearfully make and keep this feaſt in the manner directed to, rejoicing with his family and his friends, with the Levites and with the poor, expreſſing his thankfulneſs to God for his bleſſing on his labour.

℣. 19. Take heed to thyſelf that thou forſake not the Levite, &c.] By withholding from him the tithes appointed for his maintenance; or rather by neglecting to take him with him in order to partake of the feaſt or entertainment before ſpoken of: as long as thou liveſt upon the earth; ſo that it was not one time only, but always; whenever he eat theſe holy things before the Lord, as long as he lived, he was to be careful he had the Levite with him, for a reaſon given, ℣. 12.

℣. 20. When the Lord thy God ſhall enlarge thy border as he hath promiſed thee, &c.] Brought them into the land of Canaan, where they ſhould have large and good paſtures for the feeding of their cattle, which they had not in the wilderneſs, and ſo a greater increaſe of them: and thou ſhalt ſay, I will eat fleſh; which they were ſparing of, or eat but little of in the wilderneſs, leſt their herds and their flocks ſhould be conſumed; but now having room to feed them, and an increaſe of them, they would give themſelves a greater liberty of eating fleſh: becauſe thy ſoul longeth to eat fleſh; would have a craving appetite unto it, having ſo long eat none or very little: thou mayeſt eat fleſh whatſoever thy ſoul luſteth after; of any ſort that is clean, and allowed to be eaten, and as much of it as is craved, only intemperance muſt be guarded againſt.

℣. 21. If the place which the Lord thy God hath choſen to put his name be too far from thee, &c.] Or rather for[h], or ſeeing the place will be too far from thee; for it is allowed before that they might kill and eat fleſh for common food in their gates, ℣. 15. then thou ſhalt kill of thy herd and of thy flock; of thy oxen and of thy ſheep, creatures uſed in ſacrifice; but this was no bar to the uſe of them for common food alſo: which the Lord hath given given thee as I have commanded thee; ℣. 15. and thou ſhalt eat in thy gates whatſoever thy ſoul luſteth after; fleſh of any ſort, lawful to be eaten.

℣. 22. Even as the roe-buck and the hart is eaten, &c.] Which were not only clean creatures, as before obſerved, but were commonly and frequently eaten, there being plenty of them in thoſe parts: ſo thou ſhalt eat them; their oxen and calves, their ſheep and lambs, their goats and their kids: the unclean and the clean ſhall eat of them alike; no difference being to be made on that account, with reſpect to common food; ſee the note on ℣. 15. which all alike might partake of, notwithſtanding any ceremonial uncleanneſs that any might be attended with.

℣. 23. Only be ſure that thou eat not the blood, &c.] This is repeated again, that they might be careful to obſerve the law concerning that: for the blood is the life; which is the reaſon given for the prohibition of it, Lev. xvii. 11. ſee the note there: and thou mayeſt not eat the life with the fleſh; by which it ſeems that the meaning of the law was that the blood might not be eaten in or with the fleſh, but to be let out of it, or the fleſh not to be eaten raw but dreſſed; for there were divers laws about eating of blood, which are differently expreſſed.

℣. 24. Thou ſhalt not eat it, &c] Neither with the fleſh, nor ſeparately: thou ſhalt pour it upon the earth as water; as the blood of ſacrifices was poured upon the altar, the blood of common fleſh was to be poured upon the earth, ſignifying it was not to be uſed, and no account to be made of it; ſee the note on ℣. 16.

℣. 25. Thou ſhalt not eat it, that it may be well with thee, and with thy children after thee, &c] That they and their poſterity might be ſpared, and continue long, and enjoy much proſperity; for thoſe that eat blood, contrary to this command of God, it is threatened that he would ſet his face againſt them, and they ſhould be cut off, Lev. vii. 27. and xvii. 10. when thou ſhalt do that which is right in the ſight of the Lord; not only obſerve this command, but all others.

℣. 26. Only thy holy things which thou haſt, &c.] Which the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan interpret of the tithe of their holy things, and Aben Ezra of their burnt-offerings and peace-offerings; they ſeem to include all in ℣. 17. and thy vows thou ſhalt take, and go unto the place which the Lord ſhall chuſe; ſo often referred to, but not named; ſee on ℣. 5.

℣. 27. And thou ſhalt offer thy burnt-offerings, the fleſh and the blood, upon the altar of the Lord thy God, &c.] And on that only, even the altar of burnt-offering: and the blood of thy ſacrifices; one as well as another, not only of the burnt-offerings, but of the ſin-offerings, treſpaſs offerings, and peace-offerings: ſhall be poured out upon the altar of the Lord thy God; either ſprinkled on it, or poured out at the bottom of it; ſee Lev. i. and iii. and iv. and thou ſhalt eat the fleſh; that is, of the peace-offerings, for of them only might the people eat, and that only before the Lord.

℣. 28. Obſerve and hear all theſe words which I command thee, &c.] Reſpecting the demolition of all monuments of idolatry, and bringing all holy things to the place the Lord ſhould chuſe to dwell in; and eating common fleſh in their own houſes, only to be careful not to eat blood: that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee for ever; for, as has been often obſerved, their continuance in the land of Canaan, and enjoyment of all good things in it, depended upon their obedience to the commands of God; ſee Iſ. i. 19. when thou doeſt that which is good and right in the ſight of the Lord thy God; which is to do all his commandments; for theſe are what are good and right in his ſight, and it is for the good of men to do them.

℣. 29. When the Lord thy God ſhall cut off the nations from before thee, &c.] The ſeven nations of the land of Canaan, ch. vii. 1. whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs them, and thou ſucceedeſt them, and dwelleſt in their land; or to inherit them, and thou doſt inherit them, by dwelling in their land.

℣. 30 Take heed to thyſelf, that thou be not ſnared by following them, &c.] Their examples and cuſtoms, and ſo be drawn into the ſame idolatrous practices; ſee Pſ. cvi. 35, 36. after that they be deſtroyed from before thee; for their idolatries and other ſins: and that thou enquire not after their gods; what they were, their names, forms, and figures: ſaying, how did theſe nations ſerve their gods? what was the manner of worſhip they gave them? what rites, cuſtoms, and ceremonies, did they uſe in their adoration of them? even ſo will I do likewiſe; or however, if this was not determined on when the enquiries were made, there was danger that this would be the reſult of them, and therefore the caution is given.

℣. 31. Thou ſhalt not do ſo unto the Lord thy God, &c.] Not ſerve and worſhip him after the manner of the Gentiles, nor introduce their rites and cuſtoms into his ſervice, uſed by them in the worſhip of their gods: for every abomination which he hateth have they done unto their gods; as murder, adultery, &c. which God has expreſſed his averſion to, and indignation at; one inſtance of the former ſort is given here: for even their ſons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods; not only men have they ſacrificed to them, but ſuch near relations; and not only cauſed them to paſs through the fire, but burnt them in it; ſo the Carthaginians are ſaid to do, who learned this inhuman practice from the Phœnicians; they were a colony of the inhabitants of this land of Canaan. Of the Phœnicians, Porphyry ſays [i], that in great calamities, as war or peſtilence, they ſacrificed to Saturn ſome one of thoſe that were deareſt to them, appointed by ſuffrage. The Phœnician hiſtory, adds he, is full of ſuch ſacrifices, which Sanchoniatho wrote in the Phœnician language; and Curtius ſays [k], the cuſtom of ſacrificing a fine boy to Saturn was received by the Carthaginians from their founders (the Tyrians and Phœnicians), and which they continued even to the deſtruction of their city.

℣. 32. What thing ſoever I command you, obſerve to do it, &c.] In the manner it is commanded and directed to; the laws of God, both as to matter and manner, were to be obeyed juſt as they were delivered: thou ſhalt not add thereto, nor diminiſh from it; neither add any cuſtoms and rites of the heathens to them, nor neglect any thing enjoined on them; ſee Prov. xxx. 6. Rev. xxii. 18, 19.

CHAP. XIII.

IN this chapter the Iſraelites are taught how to diſcern a falſe prophet, ſhun and puniſh him, ℣. 1—5. what to do with enticers to idolatry, not only not to conſent to them, but without favour and affection to them, endeavour to bring them to juſt puniſhment, and be the firſt that ſhould inflict it on them, ℣. 6—11. and how to behave towards a city drawn into idolatry, as to enquire the truth of it, then make war againſt it; deſtroy all in it, men, women, children and cattle; and burn the ſpoil of it, and ſuffer not any thing at all belonging to it to cleave unto them, ℣. 12—18.

℣. 1. If there ariſe among you a prophet, &c.] A falſe prophet, a lying prophet, as the Targum of Jonathan; one that pretends to be a true prophet, and to be ſent of God, and to come from him with a meſſage from him, a new revelation or doctrine, or in his name, to foretel things to come; the former is chiefly meant. Such prophets did ariſe in Iſrael before the time of Chriſt, and have ſince aroſe under the chriſtian name; ſee 2 Pet. ii. 1. or a dreamer of dreams; the ſame with the prophet, only to be diſtinguiſhed by the different manner of their having the mind and will of God revealed to them, pretended to; either by viſion or by dream, which were the two uſual ways in which the Lord ſpake to the true prophets, Numb. xii. 6. ſo that the prophet is one, who pretended he had a viſion from the Lord, and the dreamer one that had a dream from him, or ſomething revealed to him in a dream; and dreams are ſometimes uſed for falſe doctrines, vain, deceitful and illuſory; ſee Jer. xxiii. 25—28. The Targum of Jonathan calls him "a dreamer of a dream of pride": ſuch perſons are generally prompted by the pride of their own hearts to take ſuch a method to make themſelves famous, and reſpected among men; and uſually bring ſuch doctrines with them which are agreeable to the pride and vanity of human nature: and giveth thee a ſign or a wonder; for the confirmation of his miſſion and doctrine; ſuch as Moſes wrought before the children of Iſrael and before Pharaoh. Signs are expreſſions or repreſentations of things to come to paſs; wonders, ſuch as either do, or ſeem to exceed the common courſe of nature or be contrary to it.

℣. 2. And the ſign and wonder come to paſs whereof he ſpake unto thee, &c.] The ſign he promiſed to give, or the miracle he propoſed to do, to ſhew the reality of his miſſion, and the truth of his doctrine, which is performed, or ſeemingly performed, by legerdemain, by magic art, or by the help of the devil; which the Lord ſometimes ſuffered for the trial of the faith and obedience of his people, and for the hardening of others in their unbelief, and which iſſues in their deſtruction; ſee 2 Theſſ. ii. 9—12. ſaying, let us go after other gods (which thou haſt not known) and let us ſerve them; other gods beſides the one living and true God, the creator of all things, ſtrange gods, the idols of the people, as the Targum of Jonathan; ſuch as they had never heard of, nor had any knowledge of, nor any benefit from, as they had of the Lord their God. Now the doctrines of theſe and of their worſhip are what the falſe prophet or dreamer is ſuppoſed to come with, and inculcate into the minds of the people; and for the confirmation of which, and in order to draw them into the reception of them, and act according to them, he propoſed to give a ſign or wonder.

℣. 3. Thou ſhalt not hearken to the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, &c.] Even though he does give the ſign and work the wonder; for it might be reaſonably concluded there muſt be fallacy in him, and that neither he nor his miraculous ſign could come from God, who would never ſend a perſon to enable him to do ſigns and wonders, to perſuade men to believe and act contrary to a former declaration of his mind and will; to break a plain law of his, as in ch. v. 7, 8, 9. this would be to contradict and deny himſelf; whatever therefore is contrary to a known law or eſtabliſhed doctrine, either of law or goſpel, let it come from whom it will, or pretend to be confirmed by miracles, is not to be received; ſee Gal. i. 8, 9. for the Lord your God proveth you, whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your ſoul; for ſhould they be prevailed upon by ſuch a prophet, to hearken to his doctrine, and embrace it, and act according to it, it would be a plain caſe that they did not cordially love the Lord, ſince they could ſo eaſily, and by ſuch pretences be drawn aſide from the true worſhip of him, and ſerve other gods; on the other hand it would be a proof of their ſincere affection for God, and of their cloſe and ſtrict attachment to him, that notwithſtanding ſuch ſpecious pretences made, and ſuch miracles wrought, yet abode by him and his worſhip, and could not be wrought upon to forſake him and follow other gods and ſerve them; ſee 1 Cor. xi. 19.

℣. 4. Ye ſhall walk after the Lord your God, &c.] As he has directed according to the laws and rules which he has given, both with reſpect to their moral and civil conduct, and their religious worſhip of him; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "ye ſhall walk after the worſhip of the Lord your God": and fear him, and keep his commandements; fear to offend him, and ſo keep his commandments; or keep his commandments from or thro' fear; not a ſervile but a filial one, a reverential affection for him; this is the whole duty of man, Eccl. xii. 13. and obey his voice; in his word, or by his prophets and miniſters: it may very well be underſtood of the voice of Chriſt, the angel that went before them, whoſe voice they were continually to hearken to and obey, Exod. xxiii. 21, 22. and you ſhall ſerve him, and cleave unto him; it may reſpect all religious worſhip both private and public; the Targum of Jonathan reſtrains it to prayer, but it not only includes that but all other acts of piety and devotion, and which are to be conſtantly performed and not departed from; for ſo to do is to cleave to the Lord, as a man to his wife, or a woman to her huſband, in which conjugal relation God and his people Iſrael were, he was an huſband unto them, and to do otherwiſe is to go a whoring from him after other gods.

℣. 5. And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, ſhall be put to death, &c.] Which death, according to the Targum of Jonathan was to be killed with the ſword: becauſe he hath ſpoken to turn you away from the Lord your God; or ſpoken revolt againſt gainſt the Lord [l], high treaſon againſt him, delivering out doctrine that tends to cauſe his ſubjects to rebel againſt him, and revolt from him; and therefore he is juſtly deſerving of death, to draw off a people from him he had been ſo good and kind unto; ſo that to apoſtacy would be added the ſin of ingratitude: which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the houſe of bondage; and ſo was not only their Lord by creation whom they ought to ſerve, but by redemption, which laid them under double obligation to ſerve him: to thruſt thee out of the way which the Lord thy God commanded thee to walk in;) not by external force, but by the power of perſuaſion, by enticing words and arguments: ſo ſhalt thou put the evil away from the midſt of thee; the evil man, by putting him to death, and the evil of idolatry, by not liſtening to the words of the falſe prophet.

℣. 6. If thy brother, the ſon of thy mother, &c.] A brother by mother's ſide, which is generally ſuppoſed to be the neareſt relation, at leaſt moſt out of queſtion, ſo more liable to be regarded as being beloved: or thy ſon, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy boſom; moſt dearly beloved by him, as indeed each of theſe relations are by a man, there being none nearer or dearer to him: or thy friend, which is as thine ſoul; as dear to him as himſelf, and ſo ſtrictly united in friendſhip, as if one ſoul dwelt in two bodies; ſuch cloſe friends were Jonathan and David, 1 Sam. xviii. 1. Some Jewiſh writers think the father is not mentioned, becauſe of the reverence of him, with which all after-dealings with him obliged to, would ſeem inconſiſtent; but the reverence of God is to be preferred to the reverence of parents; and beſides, if ſuch near relations that are here mentioned, than which there are none nearer, are not to be ſpared if guilty of the ſin after warned againſt, then not a father, who is in the ſame tranſgreſſion: entice thee ſecretly; when alone with him, which might be judged the moſt proper time to work upon him, there being none to oppoſe the enticer, or to aſſiſt the enticed; ſo Satan took the opportunity of Eve being alone when he attacked her with his temptation, and the ſame method is taken by his children: ſaying, let me go and ſerve other gods which thou haſt not known, thou nor thy fathers; not even their immediate anceſtors, and ſo the calf was not of theſe gods; nor their more remote anceſtors, as Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, who were no idolaters; nor even Terah, tho' he was one, yet the gods of the Canaanites and of the neighbouring nations, which ſeem to be here meant, at leaſt principally, were ſuch that he knew not. This circumſtance may ſeem to carry in it an argument rather why they ſhould not, than why they ſhould ſerve ſuch gods; wherefore the words of the enticer ſeem to be only theſe, let us go and ſerve other gods, and what follows are the words of the Lord, deſcriptive of thoſe gods, and ſo a diſſuaſive from ſerving them.

℣. 7. Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, &c.] As of the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites and Phœnicians: nigh unto thee; as the above were, being on the borders of their land: the Targum of Jonathan interprets this of the idols of the ſeven nations, that is of the land of Canaan: or far off from thee; as the Babylonians, Perſians, and others: from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; which includes all the idols in the world worſhipped by whatſoever nation, and which were forbidden; and which ſhews the univerſality of idolatry in thoſe times, and that that is an inſufficient argument in its favour. Jarchi interprets this of the ſun and moon and the hoſt of heaven, who go from one end of the world to the other; and this ſeems to have been the firſt and moſt common idolatry of the Gentile world, and which were worſhipped in the ſeveral deities they ſet up.

℣. 8. Thou ſhalt not conſent unto him, &c.] To commit the idolatry enticed unto, or join with him in it: nor hearken to him; not ſo much as patiently to hear him, but at once expreſs an abhorrence of and indignation at what he recommends: neither ſhall thine eye pity him; pitied he might be for his ignorance, ſtupidity and wickedneſs, and on account of the miſerable eſtate and condition he was in, and of thoſe dreadful conſequences which would follow upon it, if not converted from it; but no mercy was to be ſhown him on account of nearneſs of relation: neither ſhalt thou ſpare; to reprove him ſharply, and to expoſe him to public vengeance: neither ſhalt thou conceal him; neither him nor his ſin, but make both public, acquaint others with it, and endeavour to bring him before the civil magiſtrate to be examined, tried and judged; ſo far ſhould they be from hiding his offence from others, or excuſing and extenuating it, or from harbouring his perſon privately when ſought for upon information.

℣. 9. But thou ſhalt ſurely kill him, &c.] Not privately and ſecretly when and where he entices, nor the enticed himſelf by his own authority, but after being examined, judged and condemned by the civil magiſtrate; and none might judge a falſe prophet but the Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem, the Sanhedrim of ſeventy-one [m]; ſee Luk. xiii. 33. but the difficulty is how ſuch an one could be convicted, ſince the affair was tranſacted ſecretly, ℣. 6. and there were none preſent to be witneſſes, none but the enticer and the enticed; ſo that either the enticer muſt be brought to a confeſſion of his guilt, or the teſtimony of the enticed alone muſt be taken. The Jewiſh doctors ſay [n], that they laid in wait for the enticer, which they never did for any other perſon, and the method they took was this; the enticed brought two perſons, and put them behind a hedge, ſo that they might ſee the enticer, and hear his words, and he not ſee them; and he ſaid to the enticer, ſay what thou haſt ſaid to me privately; which ſaid, the enticed anſwered to him, how ſhall we leave our God which is in heaven, and go and ſerve wood and ſtone? if he returned (from his evil) hereby, or was ſilent, he was free; but if he ſaid unto him, ſo we are obliged, and thus it is comely for us; they that ſtood afar off, behind the hedge (or in a dark room) brought him to the Sanhedrim, and ſtoned him, that is, after examination, trial, judgment and condemnation: thine hand ſhall be firſt upon him to put him to death; he was to throw the firſt ſtone at him, partly to ſhew his indignation againſt the ſin he had enticed him to, and that it had not at all affected him ſo as to incline him unto it; and partly to ſhew that he had bore a true teſtimony, of which a ſuſpicion might have been created in the minds of ſome, had he been backward to the execution of him: and afterwards the hand of all the people; who then could proceed with more certainty and ſatisfaction: this ſhews that the perſon enticed had not a right to kill the enticer, without a judicial proceſs, and the order of the civil magiſtrate.

℣. 10, And thou ſhalt ſtone him with ſtones that he die, &c.] It was not ſufficient to anſwer the end of the law to caſt a few ſtones at him, but he was to be ſtoned to death: becauſe he hath ſought to thruſt thee away from the Lord thy God; to compel by force of argument, or the dint of perſuaſion, to relinquiſh the profeſſion of the true God, faith in him, and the worſhip of him: which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage; which aggravated the ſin of the enticer, and would have made the ſin of the enticed the more hainous had he fallen into it.

℣. 11. And all Iſrael ſhall hear, and fear, &c.] Shall hear of the death the enticer was put unto, and ſhall fear to act ſuch a part he did, and be upon their guard againſt any ſuch perſon, and be cautious that they are not drawn into ſin by him: and ſhall do no more any ſuch wickedneſs as this is among you; either to entice unto idolatry or commit it; which is a piece of wickedneſs againſt the firſt table of the law, and a very hainous one, and exceeding offenſive and provoking to God, being ſo directly againſt his being, perfections and glory.

℣. 12. If thou ſhalt hear ſay in one of thy cities, &c.] A report concerning them, any one of them: which the Lord thy God hath given thee to dwell there; which he had not only given them, but had put them into the poſſeſſion of, and it was become their dwelling-place, or was inhabited by Iſraelites; otherwiſe they were already given unto them, but did not inherit and inhabit them, and it might be poſſible that there might be ſome city or cities, at leaſt for a time, which though given them, were not inhabited by them, but by the Canaanites, and ſuch cities this law did not concern: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 13. Certain men, the children of Belial, &c.] Which ſignify either perſons without a yoke, who have thrown off the yoke of God's law and will not ſubmit to it, or unprofitable ones, as wicked men be, both to God, themſelves and others: are gone out from among you; not locally, but with reſpect to their religious ſentiments and practices, having ſeparated themſelves from the people of God, and from the ſervice of the ſanctuary, the true worſhip of God, and a profeſſion of it, and given into the worſhip of idols: and have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city; withdrawn them by the force of perſuaſion from the worſhip of the true God, and drawn them into idolatry: ſaying, let us go and ſerve other gods; unite as one man in the worſhip of the gods of the Gentiles: (which ye have not known): this was not ſaid by the children of Belial, but is added by the Lord by way of explanation, ſhewing what gods they were that theſe men adviſed them to ſerve, and confirms the obſervation made on ℣. 6.

℣. 14. Then ſhalt thou enquire, make ſearch, and ask diligently, &c.] That is, of the witneſſes, as the Targum of Jonathan; and this is a caſe that is only taken into conſideration, and judged of by the great Sanhedrim, or that of ſeventy-one at Jeruſalem[o]; and the method they took was this, when it fell under their cognizance: the great Sanhedrim ſend and enquire and ſearch till they know clearly that the whole city, or the greater part of it, are thruſt away, and are turned to idolatry; after that they ſend two diſciples of the wiſe-men to admoniſh them and bring them back; if they return and repent, it is well, but if they continue in their folly, the Sanhedrim order all Iſrael to go up againſt them to war, and they beſiege them, and ſet themſelves in battle array againſt them, until the city be broken up; and when it is broken up, immediately they ſet up many courts of judicature, and they judge them; and againſt whomſoever two witneſſes come that he ſerved idols, after they have admoniſhed him they ſeparate him; if all the worſhippers be the feweſt, they ſtone them, and the reſt of the city are delivered; if they are found the greater number, they bring them to the great Sanhedrim, and finiſh their judgment there, and they ſlay all thoſe that have ſerved, with the ſword: and behold if it be truth, and the thing certain; that ſuch wicked men have riſen and have prevailed upon the inhabitants of the city where they live, to leave the worſhip of the true God, and go into idolatry, when there is full proof of this, and it is paſt all queſtion, that ſuch abomination is wrought among you; as idolatry is, which is an abomination to God, and ought to be ſo to all mankind, and eſpecially to a people that profeſs his name.

℣. 15. Thou ſhalt ſurely ſmite the inhabitants of that city with the edge of the ſword, &c.] This could not be the work of a ſingle perſon, nor of the whole Sanhedrim, but was what the whole nation was to join in, according to the above note: deſtroying it utterly; pulling down the houſes, and demoliſhing its walls and fortifications, or burning it, as afterwards explained: and all that is therein; men, women and children: and the cattle thereof with the edge of the ſword; this ſeverity was uſed to ſhew the Lord's indignation againſt the ſin of idolatry, and to deter perſons from it, both individuals and bodies of men.

℣. 16. And thou ſhalt gather all the ſpoil of it into the midſt of the ſtreet thereof, &c.] All the wealth and ſubſtance of the inhabitants, their houſhold-goods, ſhop-goods, merchandiſe, utenſils in trade and buſineſs, and every thing that can be named. The Jews ſay [p] if there is no ſtreet, they make one (or a market-place), if that is without it, they bring them into the midſt of it: and ſhall burn with fire the city, and all the ſpoil thereof every whit; be it what it may be, or let it be whoſe property it will; and all this ſhall be done: for the Lord thy God; as by his appointment and command, and in obedience to him, ſo for his honour and glory, and the vindication of his righteous law; and it ſhall be an heap for ever, it ſhall not be built again; but lie a waſte as Jericho, though not an entire waſte; for according to the Jewiſh writers, tho' it might not be built as it was before, it might be made into gardens and orchards [q].

℣. 17. And there ſhall cleave nought of the curſed thing to thine hand, &c.] That is, they might not take any thing whatever to their own uſe; for all being devoted to deſtruction was curſed, and brought a curſe upon the man that ſhould make it his own property, as Achan did, when Jericho was deſtroyed: that the Lord may turn from the fierceneſs of his anger; ſtirred up by the idolatry of the city: and ſhew thee mercy, and have compaſſion upon thee; who ſeeing wrath gone forth, might dread the conſequences leſt it ſhould ſpread itſelf further: and multiply thee, as he hath ſworn to thy fathers; Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; this is obſerved to encourage them to execute his orders punctually in the deſtruction of the idolatrous city; ſince God could and would multiply them, as he had promiſed their fathers, with an oath, ſo that they ſhould not be the fewer by ſuch an inſtance of his ſeverity.

℣. 18. When thou ſhalt hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, &c.] Not only in this caſe, but in all others: to keep all his commandments which I command thee this day; the repetition of which he made unto them, and enjoined the obſervance of them in the name of the Lord: to do that which is right in the eyes of the Lord thy God; which they would do, if they kept the commandments of the Lord, which are holy, juſt and good, and muſt be right in his ſight becauſe commanded by him.

CHAP. XIV.

IN this chapter ſome cautions are given againſt the uſe of ſome rites and ceremonies in mourning for the dead, with the reaſon thereof, ℣. 1, 2. and inſtructions about what are lawful to be eaten, and what not, whether of beaſts, fiſhes, or fowl, ℣. 3—21. and concerning eating one ſort of tithes both at the place God ſhould chuſe, and within their own gates, ℣. 22—29.

℣. 1. Ye are the children of the Lord your God, &c.] Some of them were ſo by the ſpecial grace of adoption, and all of them by national adoption; which was the peculiar privilege of the people of Iſrael, and laid them under great obligation to honour and obey the Lord their God, who ſtood in the relation of a father to them, and they of children to him, Mal. i. 6. The Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it beloved children; ſo the apoſtle calls the ſaints, the dear children of God, who therefore ought to be followers of him, Eph. v. 1. and for a like reaſon this relation is obſerved here, namely to quicken a regard to the exhortations of the Lord, his cautions, commands, laws and ordinances, particularly to what follows: ye ſhall not cut yourſelves; for the dead, as appears from the next clauſe, as the heathens did, who not only tore their garments, but their fleſh in ſeveral parts of their bodies, in their mouths, cheeks, breaſts, &c. [r]. and uſed other extravagant ſigns of mourning, which the apoſtle cautions againſt, 1 Theſſ. iv. 13. and were condemned by the heathens themſelves [s]. Though ſome think this refers to inciſions the heathens made in their fleſh to the honour of their gods, cutting the names of them therein to whom they devoted themſelves; or laſhing their bodies at the worſhip of them, as the worſhippers of Baal did when they called upon him, 1 Kings xviii. 28. and ſo the Jeruſalem Targum "make not marks, marks", that is here and there, in many places, or bruiſes black and blue by ſtriping and beating themſelves, for ſtrange worſhip, or at it in honour of their gods; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt to agree with what follows; ſee Lev. xix. 28. nor make any baldneſs between your eyes for the dead; by ſhaving the fore part of their head or their eyebrows, or both, which uſed to be done in lamentations for the dead; ſee Jer. xvi. 6, 7. if this could be thought to have any reſpect to rites and ceremonies uſed in the worſhip of dead and lifeleſs idols, the cuſtoms of the Egyptians might be referred to, who are ſaid to ſhave their heads and their eyebrows in their ſacred rites to Iſis [t].

℣. 2. For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God, &c.] Set apart by him from all other people, and devoted to his worſhip and ſervice, and many of them were ſanctified and made holy in a ſpecial and ſpiritual ſenſe; and therefore ſhould not conform to the cuſtoms of Gentiles, whether in their extravagant mourning for the dead, or in their religious ſervices; ſee ch. vii. 6. and the Lord hath choſen thee to be a peculiar people, above all the nations that are upon the earth; to be his peculiar treaſure, to be his peculiar ſervants and worſhippers, to enjoy peculiar bleſſings and privileges, and behave in a peculiar manner different from all other people; and have no connection with them, eſpecially in things ſacred; and in order to keep them a diſtinct, peculiar people from all others, a peculiar diet was appointed them, that ſo being prohibited to eat ſuch things as others did, they might be kept out of their company and converſation, and ſo from being drawn into their idolatrous practices; the rules concerning which follow; ſee ch. vii. 6.

℣. 3. Thou ſhalt not eat any abominable thing.] That is ſo either in its own nature, or becauſe forbidden by the Lord; what are ſuch are declared in the following verſes.

℣. 4. Theſe are the beaſts which they ſhall eat, &c.] That is which they might lawfully eat of, which were allowed for their food; for they were not obliged to eat of them, if they did not chuſe it: the ox, the ſheep, and the goat; which were creatures uſed in ſacrifice and the only ones, yet nevertheleſs they might be uſed for food if choſen.

℣. 5. The hart, the roe-buck, and the fallow deer, &c.] All of the deer kind, and very agreeable food; harts were very common in the land of Canaan and parts adjacent; Ælianus ſays [u] harts are bred in the great mountains in Syria, Amanus, Lebanon and Carmel: the roe-buck, or Dorcas, from whence a good woman had her name, Act. ix. 36. is ſpoken of by Martial [w] as very delicious food, and ſo are fallow deer; the word Jachmur here uſed, having the ſignification of redneſs in it, may be uſed for that ſort which are called red deer: [x] it is obſerved that in the Arabic language it is uſed for an animal with two horns, living in the woods, not unlike an hart, but ſwifter than that; and it is aſked, is it not the Alce or Elch? [y] and the wild goat, and the pygarg, and the wild ox, and the chamois; the wild goat is reckoned by Pliny [z] among the half wild creatures in Africa; according to the philoſopher [a] there are none but in Syria, on which Canaan bordered, and were very remarkable ones, having ears a ſpan and nine inches long, and ſome reached to the ground. The Hebrew name for this creature is Akko; and there is a four-footed wild beaſt, by the Tartarians called Akkyk, and by the Turks, Akoim, and which with the Scythians and Sarmatians are to be met with in flocks; it is between a hart and a ram, its body whitiſh, and the fleſh exceeding ſweet [b]; it ſeems to be the ſame with the Tragelaphus, of which there were in Arabia, as Diodorus Siculus

Siculus [b] ſays; the next is the pygarg, which we ſo render from the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, or white buttocks, ſo called from the hinder part of it being white; a ſpecies of the eagle with a white tail is called a pygarg, but here a four-footed animal is meant; and which is mentioned as ſuch along with hinds, does and goats by Herodotus [c], Ælian [d], and Pliny [e]; it has its name Diſhon in Hebrew, from its aſh-colour, and the Tragelaphus, or goat-deer, has part of its back aſh-coloured, and has aſh-coloured ſpots or ſtreaks on its ſides [f]: ſome take it to be the Strepſiceros, a kind of buck or goat with writhed horns, which the Africans, as Pliny ſays [g], call Addaca, which is thought by ſome to be a corruption of Al-Daſhen, ſo Junius; the Targum of Jonathan takes it for the Unicorn or Rhinoceros; and the Talmudiſts ſay [h] that the unicorn, though it has but one horn, is free, i. e. lawful to be eat: the wild ox was common in Arabia; Strabo [i] ſpeaks of multitudes of wild oxen in ſome parts of Arabia, on the fleſh of which and other animals the Arabians live; in the Septuagint verſion it is called the Oryx, which is a creature that has but one horn, and divides the hoof [k], and ſo might be eaten; ſee the note on Iſ. li. 20. the laſt the Chamois, has a French name, and is a creature of the goat-kind, from whoſe ſkin the chamois leather is made; in the figure of its body it ſeems to approach very much to the ſtag kind [l]; perhaps it is the ſame with the Cemas of Ælian [m], mentioned by him along with roe-bucks. Some take it to be the Tarandus, of which Pliny ſays [n] it is of the bigneſs of an ox, has an head bigger than a hart and not unlike it; its horns are branched, hoofs cloven, and is hairy like a bear. In the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan this is the Pygarg; theſe ſeveral ſorts of beaſts were allowed to be eaten; the three firſt there is no difficulty about them, but the other ſeven, it is hard to determine what they are, at leaſt ſome of them. Dr. Shaw [o] thinks that the deer, the antilope, the wild bear, the goat-deer, the white buttocks, the buffalo and jeraffa may lay in the beſt claim to the Ailee, Tzebi, Yachmur, Akko, Diſhon, Thau, and Zomer, here.

℣. 6, 7, 8. And every beaſt that parteth the hoof, &c.] In this and the two following verſes two general rules are given, by which it might be known what beaſts were fit for food and what not; one is, if they parted the hoof, and the other if they chewed the cud, ſuch might be eaten; but ſuch that only chewed the cud, but did not divide the hoof, as the camel, hare and coney, might not be eaten, and ſo if they divided the hoof, and did not chew the cud, as the ſwine, they were alike unlawful; ſee the notes on Lev. xi. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

℣. 9, 10. Theſe ye ſhall eat of, all that are in the waters, &c.] The fiſhes there, even ſuch as have fins and ſcales, but they that have not were not to be eaten; ſee the notes on Lev. xi. 9, 10, 11, 12.

℣. 11. Of all clean birds ye ſhall eat.] Which the Targum of Jonathan deſcribes, every one that has a craw, and whoſe crop is naked, and has a ſuperfluous talon, and is not rapacious; but ſuch as are unclean are expreſſed by name in the following verſes, ſo that all except them might be reckoned clean and fit for food. Maimonides [p] obſerves, that only the number of the unclean are reckoned, ſo that all the reſt are free.

℣. 12. But theſe are they of which they ſhall not eat, &c.] Jarchi obſerves, that the unclean birds are particularly mentioned, to teach that the clean ſort are more than the unclean, and therefore the particulars of the feweſt are given; theſe are all the ſame names as in Lev. xi. 13—19. excepting one, the glede, ℣. 13. which is a kind of kite or puttock; the Jeruſalem Targum renders it the vulture, and the Targum of Jonathan, the white Dayetha or vulture; and Ariſtotle ſays [q] there are two ſorts of vultures, the one ſmall and whiter, the other larger and of many forms or colours; in Hebrew its name here is Raah, and is thought to be the ſame with Daah in Lev. xi. 14. there tranſlated the Vulture, which has its name there from flying, and here from ſeeing, for which it is remarkable; ſee Job xxviii. 7. and the letters ר and ד are pretty much alike and are ſometimes changed, but there is another here in ℣. 13. mentioned, the Dayah, which is not mentioned in Lev. xi. though ſome think it the ſame with the Ayah, rendered both here and there the Kite; perhaps it means another ſort of vulture, the black vulture, as the Targum of Jonathan.

℣. 19. And every creeping thing that flieth is unclean, &c.] Which the Targum of Jonathan thus paraphraſes; "all flies and waſps (or hornets) and worms of lentiles and of beans, which are ſeparated from food, and fly as birds, they are unclean; ſee the notes on Lev. xi. 20, 23.

℣. 20. But of all clean fowls ye may eat.] Even of all fowls but thoſe before excepted; Aben Ezra inſtances in the locuſt, as being a clean fowl, that might be eaten; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan is "every clean locuſt ye may eat"; ſee Lev. xi. 22.

℣. 21. Ye ſhall not eat of any thing that dieth of itſelf, &c.] This law is repeated from Lev. xvii. 15. ſee the note there: thou ſhalt give it unto the ſtranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; not to the proſelyte of righteouſneſs, for he might not eat of it any more than an Iſraelite, and if he did, he was obliged to waſh his cloaths, and bathe himſelf in water, and was unclean until the evening, as in Lev. xvii. 15. but to a proſelyte of the gate, who took upon him, as Jarchi obſerves, not to ſerve idols, one that has renounced idolatry, but has not embraced the Jewiſh religion; ſuch an one might eat of things that died of themſelves, or were not killed in a proper manner. The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan call him an uncircumciſed ſtranger or proſelyte, who had not ſubmitted to circumciſion, as the proſelyte of righteouſneſs did: or thou mayeſt ſell it unto an alien, an idolater, one that was neither a proſelyte of righteouſneſs nor of the gate, an entire alien from the commonwealth of Iſrael; one that was occaſionally in the land of Canaan, or was travelling in it or through it, to ſuch an one it might be ſold: for thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God; ſeparated from all others, and devoted to his ſervice, and therefore muſt live on clean food and good meat, and not eat what others might: thou ſhalt not ſeethe a kid in its mother's milk; this is the third time this law is mentioned; ſee Exod. xxiii. 19. and xxxiv. 26, and the notes there; the the reaſon of which repetition the Jewiſh writers ſay [s], is, that it is once ſaid to forbid the eating it, a ſecond time to forbid any uſe of it or profit by it, and a third time to forbid the boiling of it.

℣. 22. Thou ſhalt truly tithe all the increaſe of thy ſeed, &c.] This was a different tithe from that which was made and given to the Levites, and out of which a tithe was taken and given to the prieſts, and which they only eat of, but this; as appears by the following verſe, was what the owners themſelves eat of, and ſo the tithing was left to be made by them themſelves, and which they were to be ſure to make, and to make it truly and faithfully: that the field bringeth forth year by year; being ploughed and ſowed yearly, the produce of it was to be tithed yearly; the Jewiſh writers [t] obſerve on this, that it muſt be what the earth produces and is fit for food; and it muſt be thy ſeed, which is ſpecially thine and is not common, but has an owner, and this excludes muſhrooms, &c. which thou ſoweſt not, and therefore can't be called thy ſeed.

℣. 23. And thou ſhalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which he ſhall chuſe to place his name there, &c.] See ch. xii. 5. there the tithe of all the fruits of the earth was to be eaten; this is the ſecond tithe, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi, and which is more particularly deſcribed as follows: the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil; ſee ch. xii. 17. and the note there: and the firſtlings of thine herds, and of thy flocks; of which ſee the note on the above place: that thou mayeſt learn to fear the Lord thy God always; which ſuch a conſtant practice would inure unto; ſee ch. x. 12.

℣. 24. And if the way be too long for thee, &c.] The way from the place where any Iſraelite might live, to carry it; the tithe and the firſtlings, it would be too expenſive or too troubleſome in any way that could be deviſed: or if the place ſhall be too far from thee, which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe to ſet his name there; which by the event appeared to be the city of Jeruſalem, and this from ſome parts of the land of Canaan was very diſtant: when the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee; with a large increaſe of the fruits of the earth, and of flocks and herds.

℣. 25. Thou ſhalt then turn it into money, &c.] The tithe, which would be lighter and eaſier carriage: and bind up the money in thine hand; put it into a bag or purſe, and tie it up and carry it in the hand; which ſome think was ordered, that it might not be mixed with other money; but it ſeems only to have reſpect to journeying and making it fit for that. The Jewiſh writers [u], ſome of them give a different ſenſe of the word we render bind up, and interpret it of marking the ſilver, or impreſſing a form, figure or image on it with the hand; they mean that it muſt be coined money; ſo Maimonides [w], they mayn't prophane the ſacred tithe with money not coined, nor with money not current, nor with money which is not in a man's power; for it is ſaid, in thine hand; which the man is poſſeſſed of and is his own property: and ſhalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe; carrying the money along with him, for which he ſold the tithe.

℣. 26. And thou ſhalt beſtow that money for whatſoever thy ſoul luſteth after, &c.] He might buy what proviſion he would with it, what he beſt liked, and was moſt agreeable to his appetite: for oxen, or for ſheep; he might purchaſe beef or mutton, or any other ſort of meat that could be got, and was lawful to be eaten, as before directed: or for wine, or for ſtrong drink; to drink with his food, whether wine or any other liquor; the Targum of Jonathan is, wine new or old which he choſe; but the latter, ſtrong drink, Aben Ezra ſays was a liquor made of honey and of dates, of wheat and of barley: or for whatſoever thy ſoul deſireth; whether eatable or drinkable: and thou ſhalt eat there before the Lord thy God; he having put his name in that place and dwelling there, as the Lord did in the temple of Jeruſalem: and thou ſhalt rejoice, thou and thy houſhold; eat their food with chearfulneſs and gladneſs, making a feaſt of it and keeping it as ſuch, he and his whole family, his wife and children, or as many as were with him; and all males were obliged to appear at the three grand yearly feſtivals, and it was at one of theſe this was to be done.

℣. 27. And the Levite that is within thy gates thou ſhalt not forſake him, &c.] As not from giving him the firſt tithe, as Jarchi remarks, ſo he was not to forget him in this; he was not to leave him behind, but take him with him to partake of this entertainment: for he hath no part nor inheritance with thee in the land; ſee ch. xii. 12.

℣. 28. At the end of three years thou ſhalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increaſe the ſame year, &c.] This, according to Aben Ezra, was a third tithe, and did not excuſe the ſecond tithe; ſo Tobit ſays, ch. i. 7. "I gave the third tithe to the repair of the temple", as in one copy but, according to another, to the ſtranger, fatherleſs and widow, which better agrees with what follows; but the Jewiſh writers generally underſtand this as the ſame with the ſecond tithe, which on the two firſt years from the ſabbatical year was carried to Jeruſalem, or money in lieu of it, with which proviſions were bought and eaten there, but on the third year were eaten in their own cities with the poor, and in the ſtead of the other; ſo ſays Maimonides [x] on the third and ſixth years from the ſabbatical year, after they have ſeparated the firſt tithe they ſeparate from what remains another tithe, and give it to the poor, and it is called the poors tithe, and not on thoſe two years is the ſecond tithe, but the poor's tithe, as it is ſaid at the end of three years, &c. and ſtill more expreſsly elſewhere [y]; after they have ſeparated the firſt tithe every year, they ſeparate the ſecond tithe, Deut. xiv. 22. and on the third and ſixth years, they ſeparate the poor's tithe inſtead of the ſecond; and this was done, not at the latter end of the third year, but, as Aben Ezra interprets it, at the beginning; for the word uſed ſignifies an extremity, and the beginning of the year is one extremity of it as well as the latter end of it: and lay it up within thy gates; not to be hoarded up, or to be ſold at a proper time, but to be diſpoſed and made uſe of as follows.

℣. 29. And the Levite, becauſe he hath no part nor inheritance with thee, &c.] Shall come and take the firſt tithe, according to Jarchi; but tho' this he was to do, yet is not what is intended here, but he was to partake of the ſecond tithe, or what was in the room of it, the poor's tithe with whom he is here joined: and the ſtranger, and the fatherleſs, leſs and the widow which are within thy gates ſhall come; and take the ſecond tithe, as the above writer rightly interprets it, and which he ſays is the poors of this year; ſee ch. xii. 12, 18. and ſhalt eat and be ſatisfied; make a plentiful meal, eat freely as at a feaſt; and, as the ſame writer obſerves, they were not obliged to eat it at Jeruſalem, according to the way they were bound to eat the ſecond tithe of the two years, that is, the two preceding this: that the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doeſt; as might be expected, when his commands, and particularly thoſe reſpecting the tithes and firſtlings, were obeyed.

CHAP. XV.

THIS chapter treats of a releaſe of debts every ſeventh year, to which a bleſſing is promiſed if attended to, ℣. 1—6, which ſeventh year of releaſe ſhould not hinder lending to a poor man in diſtreſs, even though it was nigh at hand, ℣. 7—11. and of letting ſervants go free, whether man-ſervant or maid-ſervant, at the end of ſix years ſervitude, ℣. 12—15. but if unwilling to go, and deſirous of ſtaying, muſt have his ear bored through with an awl, and ſerve to the year of jubilee, ℣. 16, 17, 18. and of ſanctifying and eating the firſtlings of the herd and flock where the Lord directs, ℣. 19—23.

℣. 1. At the end of every ſeven years thou ſhalt make a releaſe;] Not of ſervants, for they were not to be diſmiſſed from their ſervice until they had ſerved ſix years, as is directed to in a following law; for if they were to be ſet free whenever a ſabbatical year came, they might be diſcharged when they had not ſerved more than a year, or than half a year, or than a month or two. Indeed when the year of jubilee intervened, they were releaſed be it at what time it would; but not in a ſabbatical year, which was a year of releaſe of debts, as the following verſes ſhew, as well as there was then a reſt of the land from tillage, Lev. xxv. 2, 3, 4. Now this was done at the end or extremity of every ſeventh year; not at the latter end or extremity of it, for if the debt of a poor man might be exacted of him in the year, and until the end of it, it would not in this reſpect have been a ſabbatical year, or a year of reſt and quiet; but this was done at the firſt extremity of it, at the beginning of it, as Aben Ezra and Ben Melech obſerve; though Maimonides [b] aſſerts it to be after the ſeven years were ended; for he ſays, "the ſeventh year releaſeth not monies but at the end of it, according to Deut. xv. 1. that as in Deut. xxxi. 10. after ſeven years is meant, ſo the releaſe of monies is after ſeven years.

℣. 2. And this is the manner of the releaſe, &c.] Or the rules to be obſerved in making it: every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour ſhall releaſe it; that is, forgive the debt, or free the debtor from any obligation to payment. Some think this was only a releaſe of debts for this year, in which there was no plowing nor ſowing, and ſo a poor man could not be in any circumſtances to pay his debts, but might be exacted afterwards; but it rather ſeems to be a full releaſe, ſo as the payment of them might not be demanded, neither this year nor afterwards; indeed, if a perſon afterwards ſhould be in a capacity to pay his debts, he would be obliged in conſcience, duty, and honour to pay them, though no reſerve was made in this law, which no where appears: he ſhall not exact it of his neighbour, or of his brother; he might receive it, if payment was offered, but he might not demand it, or ſue for it; or give his neighbour or brother, whether in a natural or religious ſenſe, any trouble about it: the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "his brother an Iſraelite;" one of the ſame nation and religion with him, though he might not be related in the bonds of conſanguinity: becauſe it is called the Lord's releaſe; appointed and commanded by him, and was for his honour and glory, as a God gracious and merciful to the poor, and beneficent to thoſe creditors; and which was proclaimed in his name, by the civil magiſtrate, according to his order; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "becauſe the houſe of judgment, or the ſanhedrim, proclaimed it a releaſe before the Lord." Now this was typical of a releaſe of debts, or of forgiveneſs of ſins, which is an act of God's grace through Chriſt, and for his ſake. Sins are called debts, not what men owe to God, for then it would be right to commit them, and they might be committed with impunity, yea with praiſe, ſince it would be doing what is fit and right, and well-pleaſing to God; but men are debtors to fulfil the law, and in caſe of failure, or a breach of it, are bound to the debt of puniſhment; and theſe debts are very numerous, and men are uncapable of paying them: and by a releaſe of theſe is meant not a liberty of ſinning, nor a freedom from the being or bondage of ſin, but from the guilt of it, and from obligation to puniſhment for it; and is properly the forgiveneſs of ſin, which is expreſſed by various phraſes, as a non-imputation, a non-remembrance, a covering, blotting out, and removing of ſin, and here typically a releaſe of debts; ſee Matt. vi. 12. and God only can make it; he is the creditor, ſin is committed againſt him, and he only can forgive it, which he does freely, fully, and at once; ſee Luke vii. 41, 42.

℣. 3. Of a foreigner thou mayeſt exact it again, &c.] Either on the ſeventh year, or after it: but that which is thine with thy brother thine hand ſhall releaſe; a debt that lies between them, where the one is the creditor, and the other debtor, the creditor ſhall freely and fully forgive the debtor. So thoſe only are releaſed or forgiven by the Lord, who are his own, whom he has reſerved for himſelf, or choſen to everlaſting life; who are intereſted in the covenant of his grace, one article in which is the forgiveneſs of ſins; and who are redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, a branch of which redemption is remiſſion of ſin; and who are called by grace, and believe in Chriſt, to whom pardon of ſins is promiſed; but thoſe who are foreigners and ſtrangers, and are not the Lord's choſen, redeemed, and called people, have no ſhare in this bleſſing of grace; nor ſuch who are rich in their own eſteem, and need nothing; but thoſe who are poor and unable to pay their debts, and are ſenſible of their ſpiritual poverty, and apply to the Lord for the forgiveneſs of their ſins.

℣. 4. Save when there ſhall be no poor among you, &c.] Then ſuch a law could not take place, there would would be no debts to be releaſed; for this was never deſigned to ſcreen rich perſons from the payment of their juſt debts, or whoever were in a capacity of ſo doing, only ſuch as were really poor, and unable to pay; and it ſuppoſes that this might ſometimes be the caſe, that there were none poor in Iſrael, or needed the benefit of ſuch a law; and, according to the Targum of Jonathan, it is ſuggeſted there would be none, if they were obſervant of the commands of God: and ſome take it for a promiſe, rendering the words neverthelefs [c], notwithſtanding ſuch a law, there ſhall be no poor among you; but then it muſt be underſtood conditionally: others interpret this as the end to be anſwered by this law, to the end [d] there may be no poor among you; by obſerving this law, all debts being releaſed once in ſeven years, it would prevent perſons falling into diſtreſs and poverty, to ſuch a degree as to be in want, and become beggars; and Julian the emperor obſerves, that none of the Jews begged [e], which he attributes to the care that was taken of their poor: for the Lord ſhall greatly bleſs thee in the land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to poſſeſs it; which is either a reaſon why there would be no poor, ſhould they obſerve the commandments of the Lord; or a reaſon why they ſhould releaſe the debts of the poor, becauſe they were ſo greatly bleſſed with a fruitful land, which brought them ſuch an increaſe, as enabled them to free their poor debtors, when in circumſtances unable to pay them.

℣. 5. Only if thou carefully hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, &c.] In his word, and by his prophets; this being the caſe, there would be no more poor among them, or however they would be ſo bleſſed of God, that they would be capable of releaſing the debts of the poor, without hurting themſelves and their families: to obſerve to do all theſe commandments which I command thee this day; a phraſe often uſed to put them in mind of the commands of God, and the neceſſity of keeping them, their temporal happineſs depending thereon.

℣. 6. For the Lord thy God bleſſeth thee as he promiſed thee, &c.] He is faithful that has promiſed, and he always gives the bleſſing he promiſes according to the nature of the promiſe; if abſolute, and without conditions, he gives it without reſpect to any; but if conditional, as the promiſes of temporal good things to Iſrael were, he gives according as the condition is performed: and thou ſhalt lend unto many nations, but thou ſhalt not borrow; ſignifying they ſhould be ſo rich and increaſed in goods, and worldly ſubſtance, that they ſhould be able to lend to their neighbouring nations round about, but ſhould ſtand in no need of borrowing of any of them. This is ſometimes ſaid of the language of theſe people, the Hebrew language, that it lends to all, but borrows of none, being an original primitive language; ſee ch. xxviii. 12. and thou ſhalt reign over many nations; which was fulfilled in the times of David and Solomon: but they ſhall not reign over thee; that is, as long as they obſerved the commands of God; otherwiſe, when they did not, they were carried captive into other countries, and other people reigned over them, as at this day.

℣. 7. If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren, &c.] As there would be, according to the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, if they did not keep the commandments of the law, and continue therein: within any of thy gates in thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee; a native of the land was to be preferred to a foreigner, and a brother, whether in relation or religion, to a proſelyte of the gate; and the poor of a city to which a man belonged, to the poor of another city, as Jarchi obſerves; which he gathers from this phraſe, within any of thy gates: thou ſhalt not harden thine heart, nor ſhut thine hand from thy brother; ſo as not to pity his diſtreſſed caſe, and have no bowels of compaſſion for him, and feel for his want, and ſo as not to diſtribute to his neceſſities, and relieve him.

℣. 8. But thou ſhalt open thine hand wide unto him, &c.] And give him bountifully and liberally; in order to which the heart muſt be firſt opened, the affections moved, and a willing mind diſpoſed to give generouſly: and ſhalt ſurely lend him ſufficient for his need in that which he wanteth; enough to anſwer his preſent exigencies, but not to cauſe him to abound, or to ſupply him with things needleſs and ſuperfluous.

℣. 9. Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, &c.] Or, thy heart of Belial [f]; thy worthleſs heart, and which is without a yoke unſubjected to the law of God, as every carnal heart is; and in which Belial, Satan, the prince of this world, works effectually, and inclines to evil thoughts, affections, and deſires, which are to be guarded againſt: ſaying, the ſeventh year, the year of releaſe is at hand; perhaps the next year, or within a few months: and thine eye be evil againſt thy brother, and thou give him nought; being of an uncompaſſionate and covetous diſpoſition, ſhall refuſe to give or lend him any thing on this conſideration, becauſe the year of releaſe will quickly come, when if poor and unable to pay him, he would be obliged to releaſe his debt: and he cry unto the Lord againſt thee; go to the throne of grace, and in prayer bring a charge, and lodge a complaint of unkindneſs and uncharitableneſs: and it be a ſin unto thee; the Lord ſhall reckon it as a ſin, a very hainous one, and call to an account for it.

℣. 10. Thou ſhalt ſurely give him, &c.] Or lend to him; though lending in ſuch a caſe and circumſtances, that perſon being extremely poor, and the year of releaſe at hand, is the ſame as giving. Jarchi remarks that money muſt be given him, even a hundred times if he aſks it; but the limitation is to what he wants, and what is ſufficient for his preſent wants, ℣. 8. and thine heart ſhall not be grieved, when thou giveſt unto him; grieved at parting with his money he has little or no hope of ſeeing again, grudging it to him to whom it is given; when, on the other hand, it ſhould be given freely and chearfully, for God loves a chearful giver: becauſe that for this thing the Lord thy God ſhall bleſs thee in all thy works, and in all thou putteſt thine hand unto; that is, for lending or giving largely, liberally, and chearfully, to perſons in diſtreſs; ſee Prov. xi. 24, 25. Iſ. xxxii. 8. 2 Cor. ix. 6, 7, 8, 9.

℣. 11. For the poor ſhall never ceaſe out of the land, &c.] There would be always ſuch objects to exerciſe their charity and beneficence towards, Joh. xii. 8. which is no contradiction to ℣. 4. for had they been obedient to the laws of God, they would have been ſo bleſſed that there would have been none; ſo the Targums; but he foreſaw that they would not keep his commands, and ſo this would be be the caſe, and which he foretels that they might expect it, and do their duty to them, as here directed: therefore I command thee, ſaying, thou ſhalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother; not give ſparingly, but largely, in proportion to the neceſſities of the poor, and according to the abilities of the lender or giver; and this muſt be done to a brother, one that is near in the bonds of conſanguinity, and to him a man muſt give or lend firſt, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and then to thy poor; the poor of thy family, as the ſame writer: and to thy needy in the land; that are in very diſtreſſed circumſtances, though not related, and particularly ſuch as are in the ſame place where a man dwells; for, as the ſame writer remarks, the poor of thy land are to be preferred to the poor of another place.

℣. 12. And if thy brother, an Hebrew man or an Hebrew woman be ſold unto thee, &c.] By others, as by the ſanhedrim for theft, for which a man might be ſold, but not a woman, as Jarchi obſerves; but then a father might ſell his daughter for an hand-maid, if little, and under age; and to ſuch caſes this law is ſuppoſed to refer; ſee Exod. xxi. 2, 7. and xxii. 3. though a man on account of poverty might ſell himſelf: and ſerve thee ſix years; as he was bound to do, if his maſter lived ſo long; if he died before the ſix years were out, he was obliged to ſerve his ſon, but not his daughter, nor his brother, nor his heirs, as the Jewiſh writers affirm[g]: then in the ſeventh year thou ſhalt let him go free from thee; that is, at the end of the ſixth, and beginning of the ſeventh year; ſee Exod. xxi. 2.

℣. 13. And when thou ſendeſt him out free from thee, &c.] When he diſcharged him from his ſervitude, and made him a freeman: thou ſhalt not let him go away empty; without any thing to ſupport himſelf, or to put himſelf in a way of buſineſs; he having in the time of his ſervitude worked entirely for his maſter, and ſo could not have got and ſaved any thing for himſelf.

℣. 14. Thou ſhalt furniſh him liberally, &c.] Not only to ſupply his preſent wants, but for his future uſe, and to ſet him up in the world: loading thou ſhalt load him[h], ſo ſome render the words; give him as much as he can carry, and well ſtand up under; the word uſed has the ſignification of chains wore about the neck for honour or ornament, and ſo may ſignify he ſhould be very honourably diſmiſſed, with plain marks of honour and reſpect; and the order is, to ſupply him out of thy flock, and out of thy floor, and out of thy wine-preſs; with ſheep or lambs out of the flock, with corn out of the floor, wheat, or barley, or both, and wine out of the wine-preſs; which take in all the neceſſaries and comforts of life: of that wherewith the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee, thou ſhalt give unto him; be it what it will, and in proportion to it, as of money as well as goods; it is aſked, How much ſhall be given to him? not leſs than the value of 30 ſhekels, whether of one kind or whether of many kinds, according to the thirty ſhekels for the mulct of a ſervant, Exod. xxi. 32[i]. All this may be an emblem both of the ſervitude the people of God are in to ſin, ſatan, and the law, whilſt in a ſtate of nature; and of their freedom from it by Chriſt, and of the ſufficiency and fulneſs of food and raiment, and large meaſures of divine grace; even all things richly to enjoy, all things pertaining to life and godlineſs, which are given to them when brought out of that ſtate; who otherwiſe come out of it deſtitute of all good things, having neither food nor clothes, nor money to buy either, but have all from Chriſt freely and fully.

℣. 15. And thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bondman in the land of Egypt, &c.] Where they were uſed hardly, and their lives were made bitter in hard bondage; and therefore ſhould ſhew the greater compaſſion to ſervants, whoſe caſe they could not but ſympathize with, and have a fellow feeling of: and the Lord thy God redeemed thee; from the houſe of bondage and ſtate of ſlavery, after they had been in it many years: therefore I command thee this thing to day; to releaſe their ſervants at the end of ſix years, and not ſend them away empty, but generouſly contribute to them at their diſmiſſion; ſince when he redeemed them he gave them the ſpoil of Egypt, and of the ſea, as Jarchi remarks; they came out of their bondage-ſtate with jewels, and gold, and ſilver, and raiment, even with great ſubſtance; and at the Red-ſea their ſpoil was increaſed which they took from Pharaoh and his hoſt when drowned there; now as they came out of their ſervitude not empty but full, being ſufficiently paid for their hard ſervice, ſo they ſhould remember to give to their ſervants liberally, when they made them free.

℣. 16. And it ſhall be if he ſay unto thee, I will not go away from thee, &c.] Out of his houſe, nor quit his ſervice: becauſe he loveth thee and thine houſe; his maſter and his family, and ſo, loth to leave them, but chuſes rather to ſtay with them than have his liberty; hence the Jews ſay[k], if his maſter has not a wife and children, his ear is not to be bored: becauſe he is well with thee; lives well with him, is well uſed by him, wants for nothing, and enjoys peace and quietneſs, and has every thing to make him happy as ſuch a ſtate will admit of, and with the which he is well contented, and highly pleaſed. This is an emblem of the chearful and conſtant obedience of the people of Chriſt to him their maſter, flowing from love to him; whom they love above all perſons and things, with all their heart and ſoul, and his houſe alſo, the place of his worſhip, his ordinances, truths, miniſters and children; and therefore chuſe to be where they are, finding that they are there well uſed, fare well, having bread enough and to ſpare, ſpiritual proviſions in plenty; are well clothed with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, have the good company of the ſaints and excellent in the earth, in whom is all their delight; and, above all, the preſence of their Lord and maſter, and the ſmiles of his countenance.

℣. 17. Then thou ſhalt take an aul, and thruſt it through his ear unto the door, &c.] Not of his maſter's houſe, but of the ſanhedrim, or court of judicature, according to the Targum of Jonathan, before whom he was to be brought, and declare his deſire to continue with his maſter; ſee the note on Exod. xxi. 6. and he ſhall be thy ſervant for ever; that is, unto the jubilee, as the ſame Targum; for then all ſervants were releaſed, and ſo Jarchi calls it the ever of jubilee: and alſo unto thy maid-ſervant thou ſhalt do likewiſe; not bore her ear, for as both Jarchi and Aben Ezra, and others ſay, ſhe was not to be bored; though ſome are of opinion that a maid-ſervant who was willing to continue with her maſter was to be bored as a man-ſervant; but this reſpects the manner of diſmiſſing her, or letting her go free, when ſhe was not to go empty, but but to be liberally furniſhed and ſupplied, as a man-ſervant was.

℣. 18. It ſhall not ſeem hard to thee when thou ſendeſt him away free from thee, &c.] He ſhould not grudge him his liberty, nor what he gives to him when he diſmiſſes him: for he hath been worth a double hired ſervant to thee in ſerving thee ſix years; ſince a hired ſervant a man is obliged to pay him wages for his work, beſides his food, whereas a bond-ſervant received no wages. Aben Ezra remarks, that this proves that a man might not hire himſelf for more than three years; or however, whereas a hired ſervant was ſometimes hired for ſo many years, and this is the longeſt time of any we read of, a ſervant ſerving his maſter ſix years, his ſervice muſt be worth double the ſervice of an hired ſervant, which at moſt was but three years: and the Lord thy God ſhall bleſs thee in all thou doeſt; thus well uſing thy ſervants, whether men-ſervants or maid-ſervants.

℣. 19. All the firſtling males that come of thy herd, or of thy flock, thou ſhalt ſanctify unto the Lord thy God, &c.] According to the law in Exod. xiii. 2, 12, 13. ſee the notes there: thou ſhalt do no work with the firſtling of thy bullock; as to plough or tread out the corn with it, which were done with other heifers: nor ſhear the firſtling of thy ſheep; nor was the wool ſhorn of it to be made uſe of; one of the Jewiſh canons runs thus, "if any man weave an hand's breadth of the wool of a firſtling into cloth, the cloth is to be burnt [1]."

℣. 20. Thou ſhalt eat it before the Lord thy God year by year, &c.] Which if underſtood of male-firſtlings, as in connection with the preceding verſe, only prieſts might eat of them, being devoted to the Lord; ſo Jarchi ſays, to the prieſt he ſpeaks; but if this reſpects the Iſraelites in common, then they muſt be underſtood either of female firſtlings or ſecond firſtlings, which the people voluntarily ſeparated, and which they were not to eat in their own houſes, but in the place which the Lord ſhall chuſe, which was the city of Jeruſalem; ſee ch. xii. 5. thou and thy houſhold; the houſhold of the prieſt, as Aben Ezra interprets it; but if it deſigns the ſame as in ch. xii. 17, 18. then the Iſraelites and their families are meant.

℣. 21. And if there be any blemiſh therein, &c.] In the firſtling, as if it be lame or blind, or have any ill blemiſh: thou ſhalt not ſacrifice it unto the Lord thy God; blemiſhes in any beaſt made it unfit for ſacrifices which were required; and ſo all peace-offerings, vows, and free-will offerings, were to be free from any, Lev. xxii. 19—24. ſee Mal. i. 14. ſuch were not fit for an holy ſacrifice or an holy feaſt.

℣. 22. Thou ſhalt eat it within thy gates, &c.] Though it might not be ſacrificed, nor eaten as an euchariſtic feaſt at Jeruſalem, it might be eaten as common food in their own houſes: the unclean and the clean perſon ſhall eat it alike; ſuch as were ceremonially unclean by the touch of a dead body or the like, might partake of it with thoſe that were clean, no difference was to be made: as the roe-buck and as the hart; which were clean creatures, and uſed for food, though not for ſacrifice; ſee ch. xii. 15, 22.

℣. 23. Only thou ſhalt not eat the blood thereof, &c.] Of the firſtling: thou ſhalt pour it upon the ground as water; ſee the note on ch. xii. 16, 23, 24.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter treats of the three grand yearly feſtivals, of the feaſt of paſſover, when, where, and what was to be ſacrificed, how to be dreſſed, and in what manner to be eaten, ℣. 1—8. of the feaſt of pentecoſt, when to begin it, where and how it was to be obſerved, ℣. 9—12. and of the feaſt of tabernacles, when, where, and how long it was to be kept, ℣. 13, 14, 15. which three times in the year all the males were to appear before the Lord, and not empty, ℣. 16, 17. an order is given for the appointment of judges in the land, to execute judgment, ℣. 18, 19, 20. and the chapter is cloſed with a caution againſt planting groves, and ſetting up images, ℣. 21, 22.

℣. 1. Obſerve the month of Abib, &c.] Sometimes called Niſan; it anſwered to part of our March, and part of April; it was an obſervable month, to be taken notice of; it was called Abib, from the corn then appearing in ear, and beginning to ripen, and all things being in their verdure; the Septuagint calls it the month of new fruit; it was appointed the firſt of the months for eccleſiaſtic things, and was the month in which the Iſraelites went out of Egypt, and the firſt paſſover was kept in it, and therefore deſerving of regard; ſee Exod. xii. 2. and xiii. 4. for in the month of Abib the Lord thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night; for though they did not ſet out until morning, when it was day-light, and are ſaid to come out in the day, yet it was in the night the Lord did wonders for them, as Onkelos paraphraſes this clauſe; that he ſmote all the firſt-born in Egypt, and paſſed over the houſes of the Iſaaelites, the door-poſts being ſprinkled with the blood of the paſſover-lamb ſlain that night, and therefore was a night much to be obſerved; and it was in the night Pharaoh aroſe and gave them leave to go; and from that time they were no more under his power, and from thence may be reckoned their coming out of bondage; ſee Exod. xii. 12, 29, 30, 31, 42.

℣. 2. Thou ſhalt therefore ſacrifice the paſſover unto the Lord thy God, &c.] In the month Abib, and in the night of that month they came out of Egypt, even on the fourteenth day of it at night, between the two evenings, as the Targum of Jonathan; which was a lamb, and typical of Chriſt, the paſſover ſacrificed for us, 1 Cor. v. 7. of the flock and of the herd; the particle of may be left out, and the words be rendered the flock and the herd; that is, thou ſhalt ſacrifice alſo the offerings which were offered throughout the ſeven days of unleavened bread, and theſe were both ſheep and oxen, Numb. xxviii. 19, 24. and are expreſsly called paſſover-offerings and peace-offerings, 2 Chron. xxx. 21—24. and xxxv. 7, 8, 9. for what was ſtrictly and properly the paſſover was only of the flock, a lamb, and not of the herd, or a bullock; though Aben Ezra ſays there were ſome that thought that in Egypt it was only a lamb or a kid, but now it might be a bullock; which he obſerves is not right. It may be indeed that the word paſſover here is a general term, comprehending the whole paſſoverpaſſover-ſolemnity, and all the ſacrifices of the ſeven days: the Jews commonly underſtand this clauſe of the Chagigah, or feaſt of the 15th day, the firſt day of unleavened bread, and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "and the ſheep and the oxen on the morrow"; ſome diſtinguiſh them thus, the flock for the duty of the paſſover, the herd for the peace-offerings, ſo Aben Ezra; or as Jarchi interprets it, the flock of the lambs and kids, and the herd for the Chagigah or feſtival; in the Talmud[m]; the flock, this is the paſſover; the herd, this is the Chagigah, ſo Abendana: there was a Chagigah of the fourteenth day, which was brought with the lamb and eaten firſt, when the company was too large for the lamb that they might eat with ſatiety [n]; but this was not reckoned obligatory upon them [o], but they were bound to bring their Chagigah on the 15th day: in the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe to place his name there; that is, at Jeruſalem, as the event has ſhewn; hence we read of the parents of our Lord going up to Jeruſalem every year at the feaſt of the paſſover, Luke ii. 41.

℣. 3. Thou ſhalt eat no leavened bread with it, &c.] With the paſſover, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it; that is, with the paſſover-lamb, nor indeed with any of the paſſover, or peace-offerings as follows; ſee Exod. xii. 8. ſeven days ſhall ye eat unleavened bread therewith; with the paſſover; this plainly ſhews, that by the paſſover in the preceding verſe is not meant ſtrictly the paſſover-lamb, for that was eaten at once on the night of the 14th of the month, and not ſeven days running, and therefore muſt be put for the whole ſolemnity of the feaſt and all the ſacrifices of it, both the lamb of the 14th, and the Chagigah of the 15th, and every of the peace-offerings of the reſt of the days were to be eaten with unleavened bread; even the bread of affliction; ſo called either from the nature of its being heavy and lumpiſh, not grateful to the taſte nor eaſy of digeſtion, and was mortifying and afflicting to be obliged to eat of it ſeven days together; or rather from the uſe of it, which was, as Jarchi obſerves, to bring to remembrance the affliction they were afflicted with in Egypt: for thou cameſt forth out of the land of Egypt in haſte; and had not time to leaven their dough; ſo that at firſt they were obliged through neceſſity to eat unleavened bread, and afterwards by the command of God in remembrance of it; ſee Exod. xii. 33, 34, 39. that thou mayeſt remember the day when thou cameſt forth out of the land of Egypt, all the days of thy life; how it was with them then, how they were hurried out with their unleavened dough; and that this might be imprinted on their minds, the maſter of the family uſed [p], at the time of the paſſover, to break a cake of unleavened bread, and ſay, this is the bread of affliction, &c. or bread of poverty; as it is the way of poor men to have broken bread, ſo here is broken bread.

℣. 4. And there ſhall be no leavened bread ſeen with thee in all thy coaſts ſeven days, &c.] For before the paſſover they were to ſearch diligently every room in the houſe and every hole and crevice, that none might remain any where; ſee Exod. xii. 15, 19. and xiii. 7. neither ſhall there be any thing of the fleſh which thou ſacrificedſt the firſt day at even remain all night until the morning; which may be underſtood both of the fleſh of the paſſover-lamb, as Aben Ezra, according to Exod. xii. 10. and of the fleſh of flocks and herds, or of the Chagigah; according to Jarchi this ſcripture ſpeaks of the Chagigah of the fourteenth, which was not to remain on the firſt day of the feaſt (the 15th) until the morning of the ſecond day (the 16th).

℣. 5. Thou mayeſt not ſacrifice the paſſover within any of thy gates, &c.] Or cities, as the Targum of Jonathan, ſo called becauſe they uſually had gates to them, in which public affairs were tranſacted; but in none of theſe, only in the city of Jeruſalem, the place the Lord choſe, might they kill the paſſover and eat it, and other paſſover-offerings: which the Lord thy God giveth thee; in the land of Canaan, and which land was given them of God.

℣. 6. But at the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe to place his name in, &c.] To place the ark and the mercy-ſeat with the cherubim over them, where he cauſed his ſhekinah, or divine majeſty to dwell; and this was at Jeruſalem, where the temple was built by Solomon: there thou ſhalt ſacrifice the paſſover; kill and eat the paſchal lamb: at even, at the going down of the ſun; between the two evenings it was killed, before the ſun was ſet, and afterwards at night it was eaten; the Targum of Jonathan is "and at evening, at the ſetting of the ſun, ye ſhall eat it until the middle of the night"; at the ſeaſon that thou cameſt forth out of Egypt; or as the ſame Targum "the time of the beginning of your redemption out of Egypt"; which was when Pharaoh roſe at midnight and gave them leave to go; from thence their redemption commenced, though they did not actually ſet out until the morning.

℣. 7. And thou ſhalt roaſt and eat it in the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe, &c.] The word for roaſt ſignifies to boil, and is juſtly ſo uſed, and ſo Onkelos here renders it, and the Septuagint verſion both roaſt and boil; but it is certain that the paſſover-lamb was not to be boiled, it is expreſsly forbiden, Exod. xii. 8, 9. wherefore ſome think the Chagigah is here meant, and the other offerings that were offered at this feaſt; and ſo in the times of Joſiah they roaſted the paſſover with fire, according to the ordinance of God; but the other holy offerings ſod or boiled they in pots, cauldrons and pans, and divided them ſpeedily among the people, 2 Chron. xxxv. 13. but the paſſover-lamb ſeems plainly to be meant here by the connexion of this verſe with the preceding verſes; wherefore Jarchi obſerves, that this is to be underſtood of roaſting with fire, tho' expreſſed by this word: and thou ſhalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents; not in the morning of the 15th, after the paſſover had been killed and eaten on the 14th, but in the morning, after the feaſt of unleavened bread, which laſted ſeven days, was over; though ſome think that they might if they would depart home after the paſſover had been obſerved, and were not obliged to ſtay and keep the feaſt of unleavened bread at Jeruſalem, but march to their own cities; and ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome ſay a man may go on a feaſt day to his houſe and country, but, ſays he, we don't agree to it; and it appears from the obſervation of other feaſts, which laſted as long as theſe, that the people did not depart to their tents till the whole was over; ſee 1 Kings viii. 66. 2 Chron. vii.

vii. 10. and with this agrees the Targum of Jonathan, "and thou ſhalt turn in the morning of the going out of the feaſt, and go to thy cities". Jarchi indeed interprets it afterwards of the ſecond day.

℣. 8. Six days ſhalt thou eat unleavened bread, &c.] In other places it is ordered to be eaten ſeven days, Exod. xii. 15, 19. and xiii. 6, 7. and here it is not ſaid ſix only; it was to be eaten on the ſeventh as on the other, though that is here diſtinguiſhed from the ſix, becauſe of ſpecial and peculiar ſervice aſſigned to it, but not becauſe of an exemption from eating unleavened bread on it. The Jews ſeem to underſtand this of different corn of which the bread was made, and not of different ſort of bread; the Targum of Jonathan is, on the firſt day ye ſhall offer the ſheaf (the firſt fruits of the barley-harveſt) and on the ſix days which remain ye ſhall begin to eat the unleavened bread of the new fruits, and ſo Jarchi: and on the ſeventh day ſhall be a ſolemn aſſembly to the Lord thy God; a holy convocation, devoted to religious exerciſes, and the people were reſtrained, according to the ſenſe of the word, from all ſervile work, as follows: thou ſhalt do no work therein; that is, the buſineſs of their callings, their trades and manufactories; they were obliged to abſtain from all kind of work excepting what was neceſſary for the dreſſing of food, and in this it differed from a ſabbath; ſee Exod. xii. 16. Lev. xxiii. 8.

℣. 9. Seven weeks then ſhalt thou number unto thee, &c.] And then another feaſt was to take place, called from hence the feaſt of weeks, and ſometimes Pentecoſt from its being the 50th day: begin to number the ſeven weeks, from ſuch time as thou beginneſt to put the ſickle to the corn; for the ſheaf of the wave-offering, as the firſt fruits of barley-harveſt, which was done on the morrow after the ſabbath in the paſſover-week, and from thence 7 weeks or 50 days were reckoned, and the 50th day was the feaſt here ordered to be kept; ſo the Targum of Jonathan "after the reaping of the ſheaf ye ſhall begin to number ſeven weeks"; ſee Lev. xxiii. 15.

℣. 10. And thou ſhalt keep the feaſt of weeks unto the Lord thy God, &c.] The feaſt of Pentecoſt, at which time the Spirit was poured down upon the apoſtles, Act. ii. 1. with a tribute of a free-will offering of thine hand; there were two wave-loaves which were ordered to be brought and ſeven lambs, one young bullock and two rams for a burnt-offering, together with the meat and drink-offerings belonging thereunto, and a kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, and two lambs for a peace-offering, Lev. xxiii. 17, 18, 19. and beſides all this, there was to be a voluntary contribution brought in their hands; for this was one of thoſe feaſts at which all the males were to appear before the Lord, and none of them empty: which thou ſhalt give unto the Lord thy God, according as the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee; no certain rate was fixed, it was to be a free gift, and in proportion to a man's abilities, or what the Lord had bleſſed him with.

℣. 11. And thou ſhalt rejoice before the Lord thy God, &c.] Make a liberal feaſt, and keep it chearfully, in the preſence of God, in the place where he reſides, thankfully acknowledging all his mercies and favours: thou, and thy ſon, and thy man-ſervant, and thy maid-ſervant, and the Levite that is within thy gates; that dwelt in the ſame city, who were all to come with him to Jeruſalem at this feaſt, and to partake of it with him: and the ſtranger, and the fatherleſs, and the widow, that are among you, in the place which the Lord thy God hath choſen to place his name there; who ſhould be at Jeruſalem at this time.

℣. 12. And thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bondman in Egypt, &c.] And now delivered from that bondage; the conſideration of which ſhould make them liberal in their freewill-offering, and generous in the feaſt they provided, and compaſſionate to the ſtranger, widow and fatherleſs: and thou ſhalt obſerve and do theſe ſtatutes; concerning the paſſover, the feaſt of unleavened bread, and of Pentecoſt, and the peace-offerings and the freewill-offerings belonging to them: and nothing could more ſtrongly oblige them to obſerve them than their redemption from their bondage in Egypt; as nothing more engages to the performance of good works, than the conſideration of our ſpiritual and eternal redemption by Chriſt, 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20. Tit. i. 14. 1 Pet. i. 17, 18, 19.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt obſerve the feaſt of tabernacles ſeven days, &c.] Which began on the fifteenth day of Tiſri, or September; ſee Lev. xxiii. 34, &c. after that thou haſt gathered in thy corn and thy wine; and therefore ſometimes called the feaſt of in-gathering, Exod. xxiii. 16. barley-harveſt began at the paſſover, and wheat-harveſt at Pentecoſt; and before the feaſt of tabernacles began, the vintage and the gathering of the olives were over, as well as all other ſummer-fruits were got in.

℣. 14. And thou ſhalt rejoice in thy feaſt, &c.] At this feaſt of tabernacles and in-gathering of the fruits of the earth, in token of gratitude and thankfulneſs for the goodneſs of God beſtowed on them: the Targum of Jonathan adds, with the flute and the pipe, making uſe of inſtrumental muſic to increaſe the joy on this occaſion: thou and thy ſon, &c. ſee the note on ℣. 11.

℣. 15. Seven days ſhalt thou keep a ſolemn feaſt unto the Lord thy God, &c.] The feaſt of tabernacles ſtill ſpoken of: in the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe; the city of Jeruſalem: becauſe the Lord thy God ſhall bleſs thee in all thy increaſe, and in all the works of thine hands; both in the increaſe of their fields, vine-yards and olive-yards, and alſo in their ſeveral handicraft-trades and occupations they were employed in; ſo Aben Ezra interprets all the works of their hands of merchandize and manufactories: therefore thou ſhalt ſurely rejoice; extremely, heartily and ſincerely, and not fail to expreſs joy on this occaſion, and manifeſt it by a generous freewill-offering to the Lord, and a bountiful entertainment for himſelf, his family, friends and others.

℣. 16. Three times a year ſhall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God, &c.] This has been obſerved before, Exod. xxiii. 17. and xxxiv. 23. and is repeated here for the ſake of mentioning the place where they were to appear, which before now was not obſerved, and indeed it is chiefly for that the other feſtivals are here recited: in the place which he ſhall chuſe; which though not expreſſed is now eaſily underſtood; and the three times at which they were to appear there, were, in the feaſt of unleavened bread, and in the feaſt of weeks, and in the feaſt of tabernacles; or paſſover, Pentecoſt and tabernacles; and of numbers of people going up from the country to each of theſe feaſts, we have inſtances in the New Teſtament; to the paſſover, Luk. ii. 42, 44. John, xi. 55. to Pentecoſt, Act. ii. 5—11. to tabernacles, John, vii. 2, 10. and they ſhall not appear before the Lord empty; Aben Ezra obſerves the meaning is, not empty of the tribute of the freewill-offering of their hand, and which Jarchi more fully explains, of the burnt-offerings of appearance, and of the peace-offerings of the Chagigah, or money answerable to them; which, according to the Misnah [q] was a meah of silver for a burnt-offering, and two pieces of silver for the Chagigah, which weighed 32 barley-corns [r].

℣. 17. Every man shall give as he is able, &c.] The quantity to be given is not fixed in the law, but the wise men appointed it, as observed on ℣. 16. but it is left by the Lord to the generosity of the people, only giving this general rule, that they should do according to their ability, and as the Lord had prospered them; see 1 Cor. xvi. 2. so Jarchi, 'every man that hath many eatables and much goods shall bring many burnt-offerings and many peace-offerings.'

℣. 18. Judges and officers shalt thou make thee, &c.] Judges were fixed in the Sanhedrim, or court of judicature, and those that have law-suits come before them; officers are masters of the staff and whip, and they stand before the judges, and go into markets, streets and shops, to order the weights and measures, and to smite all that do wrong; and all they do is by order of the judges; so Maimonides [s]: the qualifications of judges to be chosen and constituted by the people are thus described by him. In the Sanhedrim greater or lesser, they place only men wise and understanding, expert in the wisdom of the law, and masters of great knowledge, and that know some of the other sciences, as medicine, arithmetic, astronomy and astrology, the ways of soothsayers, diviners and wizards, and the vanities of idolatry, that they may know how to judge them; and they set in the Sanhedrim only priests, levites and Israelites, who are genealogized; nor do they set an old man there, nor an eunuch, nor a king, but an high-priest, if he is qualified with wisdom; and they must be free from blemishes, and of a good stature and appearance, and understand many languages, and not hear by an interpreter; and though all this was not precisely required of the Sanhedrim of three judges, yet these same things ought to be in every one of them, wisdom, and meekness, and fear, and hatred of money, and love of truth, and love of men, and to be of a good report [t]: and these were to be placed in all thy gates which the Lord thy God giveth thee throughout thy tribes; that is, in every city, as Onkelos, and so Jarchi; and usually the courts of judicature were held in the gates of cities, and it was only in the land of Israel, not without it, that they were obliged to set up courts of judicature, as Maimonides [u] observes; who also asks, How many courts were fixed in Israel, and what the number they consisted of? to which he answers, They fixed at first the great court in the sanctuary, and it was called the great Sanhedrim, and its number were 71; and again they set up two courts of 23, one at the door of the court, and the other at the door of the mountain of the house (and so in the Misnah) [w]; and they set up in every city in Israel in which were 120 (men or families) or more, a lesser Sanhedrim, which sat in the gate, and their number were 23 judges; in a city in which there were not 120, they placed three judges, for there is no court less than three [x]: and they shall judge the people with just judgment; give a right and just sentence in all cases that come before them, according to the laws of God, and the rules of justice and equity.

℣. 19. Thou shalt not wrest judgment, &c.] Or pervert it, pass a wrong sentence, or act contrary to justice; this is said to the judges as a direction to them, and so what follows: thou shalt not respect persons; so as to give the cause on account of outward circumstances and relations; as in favour of a rich man against a poor man merely for that reason, or of a near relation or intimate friend and acquaintance against a stranger, but justice should be administred without favour or affection to any; as Jarchi puts it, he was to make no difference in his address and behaviour to contending parties before him; he was not to be tender and soft to one and hard to the other, or let one stand and another sit: neither take a gift; as a bribe to give the cause wrong: at Thebes in Egypt, as Diodorus Siculus [y] relates, in a court on a wall, were images of judges to the number of thirty; in the midst of them was the chief judge, having truth hanging down from his neck (which seems to be in imitation of the Urim of the high-priest of the Jews) his eyes shut, and many books by him; by which image was shewn, that judges should receive nothing, and that the chief judge should look to truth only: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous; see Exod. xxiii. 8. the Jews have a saying, that a judge that takes a bribe and perverts judgment, does not die of old age, or till his eyes become dim [z].

℣. 20. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow, &c.] Or justice, justice [a], strict justice and nothing else: that thou mayest live and inherit the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee; that is, continue in the possession of it.

℣. 21. Thou shalt not plant thee a grove of any trees, &c.] Of any sort of trees, as oaks or any other; not but that it was lawful to plant trees and groves of them, but not for a religious or idolatrous use: particularly near unto the altar of the Lord thy God, which thou shalt make thee; as the heathens did near their altars, lest it should be thought to be done for a like superstitious and idolatrous use; which evil the Jews sometimes fell into in the times of wicked reigns, and which their good and pious kings removed and destroyed; see 2 Kings xviii. 4. and xxi. 3. and xxiii. 4, 7, 14, 15. and Hecatæus [b] an heathen historian, relates of the city of Jerusalem, that there were there no image, nor plantation, nor grove, nor any such thing.

℣. 22. Neither shalt thou set up any image, &c.] Graven or molten, of man, beast, fish or fowl; the word signifies a statue or pillar [c] which was set up for idolatry; for, as Aben Ezra observes, what was not set up for idolatry was not forbidden, as when erected in memory of any action or remarkable event; see Josh. xxii. 10, &c. which the Lord thy God hateth; as he does every species of idolatry, or that has any tendency to it; it being so opposite to his being, perfections and glory; and therefore nothing should be done like it, because it is so hateful to him.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter begins with a caution not to ſacrifice any thing to the Lord that is blemiſhed or ill-favoured, ℣. 1. an order is given to put to death men or women guilty of idolatry, where it is clearly proved upon them, ℣. 2—7. and it is directed that when caſes are too hard for inferior judges to determine, they ſhould be brought to Jeruſalem to the prieſts, levites and judges, which formed the great conſiſtory there, whoſe ſentence was to be adhered unto on pain of death, ℣. 8—13. and rules are given about the choice of a king, and he is informed what he muſt not do, and what he ſhould do, ℣. 14—20.

℣. 1. Thou ſhalt not ſacrifice unto the Lord thy God any bullock or ſheep wherein is blemiſh, &c.] No ſacrifice of any ſort, whether burnt-offering, ſin-offering, or peace-offering, was to have any blemiſh in it; typical of the unblemiſhed and immaculate lamb of God, who being without ſin offered himſelf without ſpot to God, and ſo could take away the ſins of others by the ſacrifice of himſelf; ſee Lev. xxii. 18—25. or any ill-favouredneſs; any ſickneſs or diſeaſe upon it of any ſort, which made it ill-favoured to the ſight, or diſagreeable to the ſmell, or however unacceptable for ſacrifice: for that is an abomination to the Lord thy God; every ſuch blemiſhed and ill-favoured ſacrifice; ſee Mal. i. 8. 14.

℣. 2. If there be found among you within any of thy gates which the Lord thy God giveth thee, &c.] In any of their cities in the land of Canaan: man or woman that hath wrought wickedneſs in the ſight of the Lord thy God; as all that is wrought is in the ſight of the omniſcient God; here it means not any kind of wickedneſs, for there is none lives without committing ſin of one ſort or another, all which is known to God the ſearcher of hearts, but ſuch wickedneſs as is after deſcribed: in tranſgreſſing his covenant; that is, his law, and particularly the firſt table of it, which reſpects divine worſhip, and which is in the nature of a marriage-contract or covenant; which, as that is tranſgreſſed by adultery committed by either party, ſo the covenant between God and Iſrael was tranſgreſſed by idolatry, which is ſpiritual adultery, and going a whoring after other gods, as it follows.

℣. 3. And hath gone, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan adds, after the evil imagination or concupiſcenſe, luſting after other lovers, and forſaking the true God, and departing from his worſhip: and ſerved other gods; ſtrange gods, the idols of the people, other gods beſides the true God; the creature beſides the creator: and worſhipped them: by bowing down before them, praying to them, or aſcribing their mercies and bleſſings to them, and giving them the glory of them: either the ſun, or moon, or any of the hoſt of heaven; the two great luminaries, and the planets, conſtellations and ſtars, any of them; which kind of idolatry very early obtained, and was in uſe at this time among the heathens, and was an iniquity to be puniſhed by the judge, Job, xxxi. 26, 27, 28. which ſin, though ſo ſtrictly forbidden, the people of Iſrael ſometimes fell into, 2 Kings xxi. 3. and xxiii. 4. which I have not commanded; and which is a ſufficient reaſon in matters of worſhip, to avoid and abſtain from any thing, that God has not commanded it; for in things of that nature nothing ſhould be done but what he has ordered, who is a jealous God, and will not ſuffer any to take upon them to direct what ſhould be done as a religious ſervice and duty; and if any are ſo preſumptuous, they muſt expect it will be reſented; ſee Iſ. i. 12. and eſpecially with reſpect to the object of worſhip, as here, and which relate to things if not forbid expreſsly, yet tacitly, to do which was an abomination to the Lord.

℣. 4. And it be told thee, and thou haſt heard of it, and enquired diligently, &c.] A report of this kind was not to be neglected; though it was not to be concluded upon as certain by hear-ſay, it was to be looked into, and the perſons that brought it thoroughly examined; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "and enquired the witneſſes well," what proof and evidence they could give of the fact, who the perſons were, when and where, and in what manner the ſin was committed: and behold it be true, and the thing certain; upon examining the witneſſes the caſe is plain and out of all queſtion: that ſuch abomination is wrought in Iſrael; to do it in any country was abominable, but much more ſo in the land of Iſrael, among the profeſſing people of God, who had the knowledge of the true God, and had had ſo many proofs of his deity, his power and providence, as well as received ſo many favours and bleſſings from him, and had ſuch laws and ſtatutes given them as no other people had.

℣. 5. Thou ſhalt bring forth that man or that woman which have committed the wicked thing, &c.] Idolatry in any of the above inſtances: this muſt be ſuppoſed to be done after he or ſhe have been had before a court of judicature, and have been tried and found guilty, and ſentence paſſed on them, then they were to be brought forth to execution: unto thy gates; the Targum of Jonathan ſays, unto the gates of your Sanhedrim, or court of judicature; but Jarchi obſerves, that this is a miſtake of the paraphraſt, for he ſays, we are taught by tradition that thy gate is the gate in which he has ſerved or committed idolatry; and ſo ſays Maimonides [d], they don't ſtone a man but at the gate where he ſerved or worſhipped; but if the greateſt part of the city are heathens, they ſtone him at the door of the Sanhedrim; and this is received from tradition, that to thy gates, is the gate at which he ſerved, and not where his judgment is finiſhed: even that man or that woman; this is repeated, and the woman as well as the man is expreſſed, to ſhew that no compaſſion is to be had on her as is uſual, nor to be ſpared on account of the weakneſs and tenderneſs of her ſex, but ſhe as well as the man muſt be brought forth and executed according to her ſentence, without any mercy ſhown; and this is obſerved to ſhew the reſentment of the divine majeſty, and his indignation at this ſin: and ſhalt ſtone them with ſtones until they die; of the manner of ſtoning men and women, ſee the note on Acts vii. 58.

℣. 6. At the mouth of two witneſſes, or three witneſſes, ſhall he that is worthy of death be put to death, &c.] The idolater found guilty was to be ſtoned: two witneſſes were ſufficient to prove a fact, if three the the better, but on the teſtimony of one, ſentence might not be pronounced. Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome ſay, if two witneſſes contradict two other, a third turns the ſcale and determines the matter; and others ſay, that two who are wiſe men will do, and three of others; and becauſe it is ſaid at the mouth of theſe witneſſes, it is concluded, that a teſtimony ſhould be verbal and not written; ſhould not be recorded, neither in pecuniary caſes nor in capital ones, but from the mouth of the witneſſes, as it is ſaid at the mouth, &c. at their mouth, and not from their hand-writing [e]: but at the mouth of one witneſs he ſhall not be put to death; ſo careful is the Lord of the lives of men, that none ſhould be taken away but upon full and ſufficient evidence, even in caſes in which his own glory and honour is ſo much concerned.

℣. 7. The hands of the witneſſes ſhall be firſt upon him to put him to death, &c.] Of every one of them, as Aben Ezra; they were to caſt the firſt ſtone at him, which would be a farther trial and confirmation of their teſtimony; for if they readily and without reluctance firſt began the ſtoning of the idolater, it would not only ſhew their zeal for the honour of the divine being, but an unconſciouſneſs of guilt in their teſtimony, and be an encouragement to others to proceed with ſafety: and afterwards the hands of all the people; ſhould be employed in taking up ſtones, and caſting at him until he was dead: ſo thou ſhalt put the evil away from among you; both the evil man and the evil committed by him, which by this means would be prevented from ſpreading, ſeeing by his death others would be deterred from following his example; as well as the evil of puniſhment, which otherwiſe would have come upon the nation, had they connived at ſo groſs an iniquity.

℣. 8. If there ariſe a matter too hard for thee in judgment, &c.] This is ſpoken to inferior judges in cities in the country, who ſometimes might have caſes too wonderful and myſterious, as the word ſignifies, or ſecret and hidden, ſuch as were out of their reach and beyond their capacity, and ſo be very difficult for them to determine what ſhould be done: between blood and blood; that is, whether a man is guilty of ſhedding innocent blood or not; when ſuch a caſe is depending between a perſon charged with it and the relatives of the deceaſed, or between a man-ſlayer and the avenger of blood, and the queſtion is, whether he may have the benefit of a city of refuge or not, and there are ſome circumſtances attending it which make it difficult how to determine: between plea and plea; of the plaintiff on one ſide and of the defendant on the other, and both have ſo much to ſay in their own cauſe, that it is hard to decide which is in the right and which in the wrong, whether in capital or pecuniary caſes; it chiefly if not ſolely reſpects civil things in controverſy: and between ſtroke and ſtroke; blow or wound which one man received from another, and for which he commences a ſuit of law upon it, Exod. xxi. 18, 19. or for aſſault and battery; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it of blows and bruiſes; but the Jewiſh writers generally interpret it of the plague, or ſtroke of leproſy; ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; but the examination of ſuch a caſe did not belong to the civil magiſtrate, but to a prieſt; nor was ſuch a perſon had up to Jeruſalem to be ſearched, but was ſhut up in a houſe until further evidence could be got; and beſides the ſigns of the leproſy are ſo diſtinctly given, that at waiting a proper time, there was ſeldom or ever any difficulty about determining it: being matter of controverſy within thy gates; or what are matters of controverſy about any thing elſe; for the phraſe is general, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and takes in every thing in which any thing difficult might occur; ſo Jarchi interprets it of things which the wiſe men of a city are divided about; one pronounces a perſon or thing unclean, another clean, one condemning and another juſtifying, and ſo far rightly; for this reſpects not controverſies between men, that may be brought into courts of judicature, but controverſies or diviſions ariſing in theſe courts upon them, between the judges themſelves, they not agreeing in their opinions: then ſhalt thou ariſe and get thee up into the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe; to Jeruſalem, to the great Sanhedrim or court of judicature, to which the inferior judges were to apply themſelves in matters of moment and difficulty, for inſtruction, information and direction; it being ſuppoſed that in ſuch a court ſuch like caſes may have been brought before them, and they were expert and underſtanding in them.

℣. 9. Thou ſhalt come unto the prieſts, the levites, &c.] The prieſts that are of the tribe of Levi, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi; for Aben Ezra ſays, there are prieſts that are not of the genealogy of Levi; ſuch there were indeed in Jeroboam's time, 1 Kings xii. 31. and xiii. 33. Maimonides [f] obſerves, that it is ordered that there ſhould be in the great Sanhedrim prieſts and levites, as it is ſaid: and thou ſhalt come unto the prieſts, and the judge that ſhall be in thoſe days, and enquire; judge is here put for judges, of which the great court conſiſted, being prieſts, levites and Iſraelites; ſee the note on ch. xvi. 18. tho' others think that only a ſingle perſon is meant, ſuch as Othniel, Ehud, Gideon, Samſon, &c. but then as there was not always ſuch an one in being, I ſhould rather think that the judge here if a ſingle perſon, is the preſident or prince of the great Sanhedrim, who ſucceeded Moſes, and ſat in his place; and of him and his court, the prieſts, and levites and Iſraelites that compoſed it, enquiry was to be made: and they ſhall ſhew thee the ſentence of judgment; give their judgment in the difficult caſe propoſed, and declare what is right to be done, and what ſentence is to be pronounced.

℣. 10. And thou ſhalt do according to the ſentence which they of that place, which the Lord ſhall chuſe, ſhall ſhew thee, &c.] The judges of the inferior courts were to return and proceed on the difficult caſe according to the judgment of the great court at Jeruſalem, and follow the directions and inſtructions they ſhould give them: and thou ſhalt obſerve to do according to all that they inform thee; not only obſerve and take notice of what they ſay, but put it in practice, and not in ſome things and ſome circumſtances only, but in all and every thing they ſhould give them information about relating to the caſe in queſtion.

℣. 11. According to the ſentence of the law which they ſhall teach thee, &c.] For they were not to make any new law, but to teach the law of God, and ſo far as their ſenſe and opinion of things agreed with that law, they were to be regarded: and according to the judgment which they ſhall tell thee thou ſhalt do; what were law and juſtice, what were fit and right to be done, according to the will of God, which they ſhould declare unto them, that was carefully to be done by them: thou ſhalt not decline from the ſentence they ſhall ſhew thee, to the right right hand nor to the left; by ſetting up after all their own judgments againſt theirs to whom they had applied for information and direction, which to have done would have been very inſolent and affronting; they were not to depart from the determination they made of the caſe, on pretence of knowing better, nor even in any minute circumſtance to deviate from it, but ſtrictly and cloſely to keep unto it; though not to follow them ſo implicitly as to receive from them and embrace things the moſt abſurd and unreaſonable, as Jarchi ſuggeſts; who ſays, that their ſenſe was to be abided by, even if they ſhould ſay that the right hand is the left and the left hand the right.

℣. 12. And the man that will do preſumptuouſly, &c.] The judge of the country-court that makes his application to that at Jeruſalem for information and direction; if after all he is conceited in his own opinion and rejects theirs, and is obſtinate and will not be guided and directed, but will take his own way and purſue his own ſenſe of things, and act according to that: and will not hearken to the prieſt that ſtandeth to miniſter there before the Lord thy God; the prieſts of the tribe of Levi, of whom the court generally conſiſted, ℣. 9. prieſt for prieſts; though ſome think the high-prieſt is meant, to whom the character very well agrees; but he was not always at the head of the Sanhedrim, nor indeed a member of it, unleſs he had the proper qualifications; ſee ch. xviii. 18. or unto the judge; or judges; ſee the note on ℣. 9. L'Empereur [g] thinks, that the ſupreme ſenate, or grand Sanhedrim, was two-fold, according to the diverſity of eccleſiaſtic and political matters; ſince where it treats of the ſupreme ſenators, or chief perſons in the court, the prieſt is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the judge (i. e. prieſts or judges); now the man that has aſked advice of them and will not be directed by it, but takes his own way, this being ſo great a contempt of and inſult upon the great ſenate of the nation: even that man ſhall die; and this was by ſtrangling, for ſo the rebellious elder, as ſuch an one is called, was to die according to the Miſnah [h]; and it is ſaid [i], that the death ſpoken of in the law abſolutely (without ſpecifying what kind of death) is ſtrangling: and thou ſhalt put away the evil from Iſrael; the evil man that is rebellious againſt the ſupreme legiſlature of the nation, and the evil of contumacy he is guilty of, deterring others from it by his death.

℣. 13. And all the people ſhall hear and fear, &c.] All the people of Iſrael in their ſeveral cities, and particularly the judges in thoſe cities; they ſhall hear of what is done to the obſtinate and diſobedient elder, and ſhall be afraid to commit the like offence, leſt they ſhould come into the ſame puniſhment: and do no more preſumptuouſly; after his example; hence Jarchi ſays, they wait till the feaſt comes and then put him to death; and ſo it is ſaid [k], they bring him up to the great Sanhedrim which is at Jeruſalem, and there keep him until the feaſt (the next feaſt) and put him to death at the feaſt as it is ſaid, all the people ſhall hear and fear.

℣. 14. When thou art come unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, &c.] The land of Canaan: and ſhalt poſſeſs it, and ſhalt dwell therein; be entirely in the poſſeſſion of it and ſettled in it; it ſeems to denote ſome time of continuance in it, as it was, before they thought of ſetting a king over them, about which are the following inſtructions: and ſhalt ſay, I will ſet a king over me, like as all the nations that are round about me; which was what would and did lead them to ſuch a thought and reſolution; obſerving that the neighbouring nations had kings over them, they were deſirous of being like them as to the form of their civil government, and have a king as they had.

℣. 15. Thou ſhalt in any wiſe ſet him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe, &c.] The Jews take this to be a command to ſet a king over them; whereas it is only a permiſſion in caſe they ſhould deſire and determine on having one, as God foreſaw they would; and this with a limitation and reſtriction to appoint none but whom God ſhould chuſe, and which was their duty and intereſt to attend unto; for none could chuſe better for them, and was what he had a right unto, and it became them to ſubmit to it, ſince he was their king in a civil and ſpecial ſenſe, and another was only his vicegerent; accordingly we find when they expreſſed their deſire to have a king in the time of Samuel, and it was granted, though not without ſome reſentment, the Lord choſe their firſt king for them, Saul, and after him, David, and even Solomon, David's ſon; and though in after-times they appointed kings without conſulting him, it is complained of, Hoſ. viii. 4. hence this clauſe is prefaced in the Targum of Jonathan, "ye ſhall ſeek inſtruction from the Lord, and after ſet him king, &c." which was to be done by the mouth of a prophet, or by Urim, as Aben Ezra obſerves: one from among thy brethren ſhalt thou ſet king over thee; that is, one of their own nation, an Iſraelite, a brother both by nation and religion: thou mayeſt not ſet a ſtranger over thee that is not thy brother; one of another nation, that is not of the family of Iſrael, as Aben Ezra notes, even not an Edomite, though called ſometimes their brother; and Herod, who was an Idumean, was ſet up, not by them but by the Romans; now in this their king was a type of the king Meſſiah, of whom it is ſaid, their nobles ſhall be of themſelves, Jer. xxx. 21.

℣. 16. But he ſhall not multiply horſes to himſelf, &c.] That he might not put his truſt and confidence in outward things, as ſome are apt to truſt in horſes and chariots; and that he might not tyrannize over and diſtreſs his ſubjects by keeping a number of horſes and chariots as a ſtanding army, and chiefly for a reaſon that follows; he was to have no more than for his own chariot, ſo Jarchi, and ſo the Miſnah [l] and Maimonides [m]; the Targum of Jonathan reſtrains it to two: nor cauſe the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he ſhould multiply horſes; which was a country that abounded with them, and therefore he was not to encourage, and much leſs oblige his ſubjects to travel thither or trade with that people for the ſake of increaſing his ſtock of horſes, Iſ. xxxi. 1. 3. foraſmuch as the Lord hath ſaid unto you, ye ſhall henceforth return no more that way; not that going into Egypt on any account whatſoever was forbidden, as for trade and merchandiſe in other things, or for ſhelter and ſafety, for which ſome good men fled thither; but for outward help and aſſiſtance againſt enemies, and for horſes on that account, and particularly in order to dwell there, from which the Jews in the times of Jeremiah were diſſuaded by him, and threatened by the Lord with deſtruction, in caſe they ſhould, Jer. xlii. 15—22. ſaid this is not certain; it may be when they propoſed to make a captain, and return unto Egypt; or he ſaid this in his providence, this was the language of it ever ſince they came out of it, or however this he now ſaid; ſee ch. xxviii. 68.

℣. 17. Neither ſhall he multiply wives to himſelf, that his heart turn not away, &c.] From attending to the duty of his office, the care and government of his people, and from ſerious religion; and particularly from the worſhip of the true God, as the heart of Solomon was turned away from it by his numerous idolatrous wives, 1 Kings xi. 3, 4. it is a common notion of the Jews that a king might have eighteen wives, and no more [k]: neither ſhall he greatly multiply to himſelf ſilver and gold; he might increaſe his wealth, but not greatly, leſt his heart ſhould be lifted up with pride by it, and leſt his ſubjects ſhould be oppreſſed and burthened with taxes for that purpoſe; or he being poſſeſſed of ſo much ſhould make uſe of it to enſlave them, and eſpecially ſhould be ſo elated with it, as to deny God, and deſpiſe his providence, and diſobey his laws; ſee Prov. xxx. 9. The Jews generally ſay [l], that he ought not to multiply more than what will pay the ſtipends or wages of his ſervants, and only for the treaſury of the houſe of the Lord, and for the neceſſity of the congregation (or common-wealth), and for their wars; but not for himſelf, and his own treaſury.

℣. 18. And it ſhall be when he ſitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, &c.] When he is ſettled on it, and is even amidſt all the pomp and glory of it: that he ſhall write him a copy of this law in a book; which copy the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions interpret of this book of Deuteronomy, which is a ſummary, abſtract, and repetition, of the ſeveral laws of God to the people of Iſrael; though the Jewiſh writers commonly underſtand it of the whole Pentateuch, the five books of Moſes; which perhaps may be enlarging it too much, as it would be reducing it to too little, to reſtrain it to this law concerning kings, as the Targum of Jonathan. The word Miſhneh rendered copy, ſignifies double; hence ſome take it to mean a double exemplar or copy of the law he was obliged to write out, whereby it would be the more imprinted on his mind, and he would be furniſhed with it for his uſe at home and abroad, as the Jewiſh writers obſerve; ſo Jarchi by the copy underſtands two books of the law, one to be left in his treaſury, the other to go out and in with him. The ſame is ſaid in the Talmud [m], and with which Maimonides [n] agrees, whoſe words are, "at the time a king ſits on the throne of his kingdom, he writes for himſelf a book of the law, beſides what his fathers left him; and he copies it out of the book of the court by the order of the Sanhedrim of ſeventy-one; if his fathers have left him none or it is loſt, he writes two books of the law, one he leaves in the houſe of his treaſures, which he is commanded, as every one of Iſrael is, and the ſecond never departs from him;" but one may ſeem ſufficient on all occaſions, and for all purpoſes; and this was to be wrote out of that which is before the prieſts and Levites; the original copy of it, which was depoſited in the ſide of the ark; ſee Deut. xxxi. 26. 2 Kings xxii. 8.

℣. 19. And it ſhall be with him, &c.] Always, when at home or abroad, ſitting on his throne or lying down, or wherever he went, unleſs in ſuch places where it was not proper to read it, as the Jews obſerve [o]: and he ſhall read therein all the days of his life; every day of his life; meditate on it night and day as a good man does, that he might be well verſed in it, and know how to govern his people according to it: that he may learn to fear the Lord his God; to ſerve and worſhip him both internally and externally, he having the fear of God always before his eyes, and on his heart, which the holy law of God directs to and inſtructs in: to keep all the words of this law, and theſe ſtatutes to do them; not only ſuch as concerned him as a king, but all others that concerned him as a man, a creature ſubject to the Lord, and as an Iſraelite belonging to the church and commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſo includes all laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial.

℣. 20. That his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, &c.] On account of his office, the dignity of it, conſidering that he was ſubject to the law of God, and accountable to the Lord for all his actions: and that he turn not aſide from the commandment to the right hand or to the left; not in the leaſt deviate from the law of God, in the whole of his conduct, and particularly in the exerciſe of his kingly office: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom; ruling well according to the laws of God being the way to rule long: he and his children in the midſt of Iſrael; this ſhews, as Jarchi obſerves, that if his ſon was fit for the kingdom, he was to be preferred to any other man; for tho' it was elective, yet to be continued in the ſame family, provided they walked in the ways of the Lord, and obſerved his laws.

CHAP. XVIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the proviſion made for the prieſts and Levites, with the reaſon of it, ℣. 1—5. of allowance of a country Levite to miniſter at Jeruſalem, and take his portion with the reſt, ℣. 6, 7, 8. and of ſeveral perſons of bad practices not to be ſuffered among the people of Iſrael, ℣. 9—14. and of an extraordinary prophet that ſhould be raiſed up among them, to whom they ſhould hearken, or it would be the worſe for them, ℣. 15—19. but a falſe prophet was to be put to death, of whom a ſign is given by which he might be known, ℣. 20, 21, 22.

℣. 1. The prieſts the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi, ſhall have no part nor inheritance with Iſrael, &c.] That is, in the land of Canaan, in the diviſion of it among the tribes: they ſhall eat the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and his inheritance; the meat-offerings, ſee Lev. ii. 2, 3. and vi. 17, 18. and whatſoever of the ſin-offerings and peace-offerings which were the Lord's; ſo Ben Melech ſays, the fleſh of the offerings which belonged to the prieſts was called fire-offerings, after part of it was conſumed by fire. All theſe with other things, Numb. xviii. 8, 9. were given as the Targum of Jonathan nathan expreſſes it for their inheritance, in lieu of their having none in the land of Canaan.

℣. 2. Therefore ſhall they have none inheritance among their brethren, &c.] Neither of the field, nor of the vineyard, as the above Targum, becauſe proviſion was made for them otherwiſe, and eſpecially becauſe the Lord is their inheritance, as he hath ſaid unto them, Numb. xviii. 20. ſee the note there; which as it may be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe of their intereſt in God, as their Covenant-God, and of their enjoyment of him, and communion with him; ſo chiefly in a temporal ſenſe of all thoſe things in the ſacrifices which the Lord claimed to himſelf, and theſe he gave unto them; ſo the ſame Targum interprets this of the twenty-four gifts of the prieſthood, enumerated Numb. xviii.

℣. 3. And this ſhall be the prieſts due from the people, from them that offer ſacrifice, &c.] Not from the prieſts, as Jarchi obſerves, but from thoſe that bring the ſacrifices to the prieſts, particularly the peace-offerings: whether it be ox or ſheep; the one of the herd, the other of the flock, creatures uſed in ſacrifice, and takes in goats and the kids of them, rams and lambs: and they ſhall give unto the prieſt the ſhoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw; the firſt of theſe deſigns the upper part of the arm that joins to the neck and back, and the next the two cheeks with the tongue, as both Jarchi and Aben Ezra obſerve, and indeed the whole head is meant; the maw which the Septuagint interpreters call εννυ-ρον, and other writers ηννυ-ρον, is, according to the philoſopher [p], the fourth and laſt ventricle or ſtomach, and which he thus deſcribes; "after the echinus or rough tripe is that which is called ηννυ-ρον, the maw, which is in bigneſs larger than the echinus, and in form longer, and has many large and ſmooth folds;" and ηννυ-ρον ὑος, the maw of an ox, and the belly of a ſwine, are reckoned by the poet [q] as delicious food.

℣. 4. The firſt-fruit alſo of thy corn, and of thy wine, and of thy oil, &c.] This is the Terumah or heave-offering, the offering of the firſt-fruits; what the meaſure or quantity was is not declared, but is fixed by the Jews; ſee the note on Exod. xxii. 29. and the firſt of the fleece of thy ſheep ſhalt thou give him: concerning which in the Miſnah [r] it is ſaid, the firſt of the fleece is uſed in the land and without the land, of which they give the weight of five ſhekels in Judea, which are ten ſhekels in Galilee; and they give white wool, and not defiled, enough to make of it a little garment. He that buys a fleece of the ſheep of a Gentile, he is free from the firſt of the fleece; but if he buys it of his neighbour, if he leaves any of it, the ſeller is bound, if none the buyer is bound; if there are two ſorts, ruſſet and white, and he ſells the ruſſet but not the white, the males but not the females, every one gives for himſelf. It may be obſerved in this account, that as much wool was to be given as would make a ſmall garment; enough, ſays one of the commentators [s], to make a little garment to miniſter in; and the leaſt garment fit for a prieſt to miniſter in is a girdle. Jarchi's paraphraſe of it is, "when thou ſheareſt thy flock every year, give the firſt of it to the prieſt; it does not determine the quantity, but our Rabbins fix it to the ſixtieth part;" with which agrees the obſervation of another writer [t], that there is no quantity fixed for the firſt of the fleece from the law, but from the words of the ſcribes it muſt not be leſs than the ſixtieth part. There is no obligation to the firſt of the fleece until five ſheep are ſhorn, and the fleece of every one of the five muſt not be leſs than twelve ſhekels weight; but if there is one fleece of them leſs than twelve ſhekels, though the five fleeces are more than ſixty ſhekels, ſo this is free; ſo that, as Maimonides [u] ſays, the firſt of the fleece is not leſs than the weight of a ſhekel.

℣. 5. For the Lord thy God hath choſen him out of all thy tribes, &c.] That is, has choſen the tribe of Levi out of all the other tribes of Iſrael: to ſtand to miniſter in the name of the Lord; the prieſts to miniſter to the Lord by offering ſacrifices, and the Levites to miniſter to the prieſts in aſſiſting them in their ſervice; and both their miniſtry were in the name of the Lord, and for his glory, and done ſtanding; for there was no ſitting in the ſanctuary [w]; the ſacerdotal miniſtry was only performed ſtanding [x], whatever was done ſitting was rejected [y]; ſee Heb. x. 11. him and his ſons for ever; Levi and his poſterity, or the poſterity of the tribe of Levi, were choſen by the Lord to this ſervice, to be employed in it as long as the ceremonial law continued, on which ſtood the Levitical prieſthood; but both are now aboliſhed by Chriſt, having their accompliſhment in him, Heb. vii. 11. xii. 18.

℣. 6. And if a Levite come from any of thy gates out of Iſrael, where he ſojourned, &c.] In any of the cities through the land, for they were diſperſed all over the country, and employed in inſtructing and teaching the people; and excepting the cities which were given them to dwell in out of the ſeveral tribes, they were but ſojourners: and come with all the deſire of his mind unto the place which the Lord ſhall chuſe; the city of Jeruſalem, where the temple would be built, and ſacrifices offered, at which the Levites were aſſiſting to the prieſts, and in various parts of the ſervice of the ſanctuary; and to which they are ſuppoſed to come with an hearty good will, with great eagerneſs of ſoul, and a vehement deſire of being employed in the work of the Lord. Though Jarchi interprets it of a prieſt, that comes and offers his free-will-offerings, or what he is obliged to, and even in a ward not his own; or, as otherwiſe expreſſed, of the prieſts that come to the feaſt, who offer in the ward, and ſerve in the offerings that come by virtue of the feaſt, as the additions of the feaſt, though it is not in their own ward; and indeed every prieſt was a Levite, though every Levite was not a prieſt; and the deſcription of him after given, as ſtanding miniſtring in the name of the Lord, beſt agrees with a prieſt.

℣. 7. And he ſhall miniſter in the name of the Lord his God, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, "he ſhall miniſter in the name of the Word of the Lord his God;" in the name of Chriſt, as a type of him, as every prieſt, and every ſacrifice were: he was to be allowed to officiate, though it was not his courſe or turn: as all his brethren the Levites do, which ſtand there before the Lord; daily offering the ſame ſacrifices, and whatſoever are brought unto them; who might be ſaid to ſtand before the Lord, becauſe they ſtood at the altar of the Lord, and offered the ſacrifices of the people to him; and a country Levite or prieſt was to be admitted to do the ſame thing at Jeruſalem, and in the temple there as they did; and this ſhews that a prieſt is meant by the Levite.

℣. 8. They ſhall have like portions to eat, &c.] Equal parts of the ſacrifices, with the prieſts that uſually miniſtered there; hence we learn, ſays Jarchi, that they divided the ſkins and fleſh of the ſin-offerings; perhaps even ſuch as did not come by virtue of the feaſt, as the daily-ſacrifices, and the additions of the ſabbath, and the vows, and the free-will-offerings: beſide that which cometh by the ſale of his patrimony; for though the prieſts and Levites had no inheritance divided to them in the land, yet they might buy houſes and fields, and leave them to their children, and this may be called their patrimony; now it was not reaſonable that they ſhould wholly live upon this, or ſpend what their fathers left them; but beſides the income of that, were to have their part and portion with their brethren in the ſacrifices of the ſanctuary. But ſome interpret theſe words in a different way, as if they had reſpect to the gifts and oblations in the ſeveral wards in which the prieſts miniſtered, as they were ordered by their fathers, Eleazar, Ithamar, Samuel, David, and Solomon; ſo the Targums of Onkelos, Jonathan, and Jarchi. In the times of Eleazar and Ithamar, there were only eight wards or courſes, which miniſtered in their turns, but in the days of David they were divided into twenty-four; ſee Luke i. 8. and the note there; now the ordering and fixing theſe in their turns, is called a vendition or ſale; and theſe country prieſts might partake of all ſacrifices at the feaſt, excepting thoſe which belonged to him whoſe courſe it was that week.

℣. 9. When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, &c.] The land of Canaan, often thus deſcribed, to expreſs the goodneſs of God in beſtowing it on them, as a mere favour of his, without any deſert of theirs; and ſo typical of the heavenly Canaan, or eternal life, which is the free gift of God through Chriſt: thou ſhalt not learn to do after the abominations of theſe nations; the ſeven nations which before inhabited it; they might learn, as Jarchi obſerves, to know how corrupt their works were, and to ſhew to their children, that they might not do ſo; but they were not to learn them ſo as to practiſe them, but to have them in the utmoſt abhorrence, as being abominable to God, and which ſhould be o to them; ſome of which are as follow.

℣. 10. There ſhall not be found among you any one that maketh his ſon or his daughter to paſs through the fire, &c.] To Moloch, which was a ſort of luſtration by fire, two fires being made, and the child led by a prieſt between them, and which was an initiation of him into the religion of that deity, and devoting him to it; ſo Jarchi ſays, this is the ſervice of Moloch, making piles of fire here and there, (on this ſide and on that) and cauſing (the children) to paſs between them both. Beſides this they uſed to burn them with fire to this deity, perhaps after the performance of this ceremony; ſee ch. xii. 31. and the note there: or that uſeth divination; according to Aben Ezra this is a general name, and ſo Ben Melech, the particulars of which are what follow, an obſerver of times, &c. Cicero ſays [z], there are two ſorts of divination, one is of art, the other of nature. What nation or what city is not moved by prediction, either by the entrails of beaſts, or of thoſe that interpret ſtrange things and lightnings, or of ſoothſayers, or aſtrologers, or of lots, (for theſe are moſtly of art; (or of dreams or prophecies, for theſe two are thought to be natural? Again he ſays [a], the Phrygians, Piſidians, and Cilicians, pay a great reſpect to the ſigns of birds—from the beginning of the world it was that certain ſigns were forerunners of certain things; ſome in the entrails of beaſts, ſome in birds, others in lightnings, others in marvellous things, others in the ſtars; ſome in viſions and dreams, and others in the words of frantic perſons. So the comedian remarks [b], that if a ſtrange black dog comes into a houſe, or a ſnake falls from the tiles through rain, or a hen crows, theſe are obſerved as ominous, by the diviner or ſooth-ſayer. Porphyry ſays [c], that ſooth-ſayers divine by the noiſe of crows and ravens; and it is ſaid [d] the Arabians from birds as from oracles, divine what ſhall come to paſs; and that they attain to, as they ſay, by eating the heart and liver of dragons. Jarchi on this place aſks, who is the diviner? one that lays hold on his ſtaff, and ſays, ſhall I go? or ſhall I not go? that is, to ſuch a place; and according as it fell, ſo judgment was made; ſee Hoſ. iv. 12. Now ſuch ſort of diviners and divinations are cautioned againſt, as not to be admitted amongſt the people of Iſrael, and regarded by them: or an obſerver of times; and ſuch things the Egyptians were very inquiſitive about, what month or day belonged to the gods; what day any one was born on, what ſhall befal him, how he will die, and what he ſhall be, as Herodotus [e] relates; and ſuch are they who are here meant, according to R. Akiba [f], that count times and hours, and ſay ſuch a time is beautiful (or ſeaſonable) to go out in and trade; but the wiſemen ſay, as Jarchi obſerves, theſe are they that hold the eyes, caſt a miſt over people's eyes, that they can't perceive their juggling tricks. Some think the word has the ſignification of clouds, and ſo deſigns ſuch that obſerved them and their motions, and made their concluſions according to them; ſee Lev. xix. 26. or an enchanter; according to Jarchi, one that remarks things as ominous; as when a morſel falls out of a man's mouth, a roe ſtops him in the way, or his ſtaff falls out of his hands: the word has the ſignification of a ſerpent in it, and ſo may ſignify one that inchants them; ſee Pſ. lviii. 4, 5. or makes obſervations by them, as portending this and that and the other, as before obſerved of the ſnake falling from the tiles; and Horace [g] ſpeaks of a ſerpent lying in the way, and frighting horſes, as taken notice of by ſoothſayers: or a witch; of whom ſee Exod. xxii. 18.

℣. 11. Or a charmer, &c.] That pretends to cure diſeaſes by charms, or a charmer of ſerpents; according to Jarchi, one that gathers together ſerpents and ſcorpions, and other animals into one place; with which agree the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, "which bind ſerpents and ſcorpions, and all kind of creeping things;" but, according to Aben Ezra, one that ſays certain words to gather dæmons together: or a conſulter with familiar ſpirits; or the enquirer of Ob, or the bottle, which the Jews interpret of Python, or one that has the ſpirit of Python; ſee Acts xvi. 16. a ventriloquiſt, one that ſpoke or ſeemed to ſpeak out of his belly, or from under his arm-pits; ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [h] of Ob, this is Python, one that ſpeaks out of his arm-holes; agreeable to which Jarchi ſays, this is that ſort of witchcraft which is called Python, and he ſpeaks from his arm holes, and and brings up the dead thither: of Baal Ob, or the maſter of the bottle, ſay ſome Jewiſh writers, one way he uſes is, he takes the ſkull of a dead man, the fleſh of which is conſumed from it, and he hides it and burns incenſe to it, and mutters words by it, and hears from it, as if from a dead man [k]: or a wizard; a knowing one, as the word ſignifies, ſuch an one as we call a cunning man; ſee the note on Lev. xix. 31. or a necromancer; that enquires of the dead, or ſeeks inſtruction from them, as the Targum of Jeruſalem. Aben Ezra deſcribes him as one that goes to burying-grounds, and takes the bone of a dead man, and becauſe of his wild imagination there appears to him the likeneſs of forms; or as Maimonides [l], better ſtill, he is one that faſts and ſleeps in grave-yards, and utters words; and according to his imagination, ſees future things in dreams.

℣. 12. For all that do theſe things are an abomination to the Lord, &c.] Not that do all theſe things, but whoever does any of them, as Jarchi notes; all ſuch perſons that uſe ſuch unlawful methods, or any of them, to gain knowledge; and likewiſe all thoſe that conſult them, and make uſe of them; and eſpecially it muſt be very abominable in the people of Iſrael, to encourage ſuch perſons and practices, who had the knowledge of the true God, and him to conſult on all occaſions; had his law and teſtimony to attend unto as the rule of their conduct, and his prophets to adviſe with in matters of difficulty; ſee Iſ. viii. 20. and becauſe of theſe abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee; as well as for other ſins mentioned in Lev. xviii. 24—28. and as before obſerved from Cicero, all nations have been addicted to the arts of divination here condemned.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt be perfect with the Lord thy God;] Sincerely ſerve and worſhip him, faithfully adhere to his word, laws, ſtatutes, and ordinances, and walk uprightly before him.

℣. 14. For thoſe nations which thou ſhalt poſſeſs hearkened unto obſervers of times, and unto diviners, &c.] Such as are before mentioned, and did as they directed them: but as for thee the Lord thy God hath not ſuffered thee ſo to do; or, but thou not ſo [m]; thou ſhouldeſt not do ſo, not hearken to ſuch perſons, but to the Lord thy God, and to his law and teſtimony; nor art thou left to the deception of ſuch perſons: the Lord thy God hath given thee; his word and ſtatutes, as a rule to go by, which he has not given to other nations: the Targum of Jonathan adds, "the prieſts ſhall aſk by urim and thummim, and a true prophet ſhall the Lord your God give unto you;" ſo that they had no need to hearken to ſuch impoſtors and deceivers: or, as for thee, not ſo are they whom the Lord thy God giveth thee [n]; that is, the prophets whom the Lord would give unto them would not be like the diviners of the heathens, who impoſed on the people and deceived them; but would be men ſent and inſpired by God, and true and faithful in the diſcharge of their office; and to hearken to theſe they are encouraged, by the promiſe of a very eminent one, like to Moſes, in the next verſe.

℣. 15. The Lord thy God will raiſe up unto thee a prophet, &c.] Not Joſhua, as Aben Ezra, nor Jeremiah, as Baal Haturim, nor David [o] as others; nor a ſucceſſion of prophets, as Jarchi; for a ſingle perſon is only ſpoken of; and there is a diſſimilitude between Moſes and any one of the prophets, and all of them in ſucceſſion, ch. xxxiv. 10, 11, 12. but the Meſſiah, with whom the whole agrees; and upon this the expectation of a prophet among the Jews was raiſed, John vi. 14. and is applied to him, and referred to as belonging to him in Acts iii. 22. and vii. 37. who was a prophet mighty in word and deed, and not only foretold future events, as his own ſufferings and death, and reſurrection from the dead, the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and other things; but taught and inſtructed men in the knowledge of divine things, ſpake as never man did, preached the goſpel fully and faithfully, ſo that as the law came by Moſes, the doctrine of grace and truth came by him; and he was raiſed up of God, called, ſent, commiſſioned and qualified by him for the office of a prophet, as well as was raiſed from the dead as a confirmation of his being that extraordinary perſon: from the midſt of thee; he was of Iſrael, according to the fleſh, of the tribe of Judah, and of the houſe of David, born of a virgin in Bethlehem, preached only in Judea, and was raiſed from the dead in the midſt of them, and of which they were witneſſes: of thy brethren; the Iſraelites, of whom as concerning the fleſh Chriſt came, and to whom he was ſent as a prophet, and among whom he only preached: like unto me; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "in the holy Spirit;" which he received without meaſure, and in reſpect of which was ſuperior to Moſes, or any of the prophets: he was like to Moſes in the faithful diſcharge of his office, in his familiar converſe with God, in the miracles which he wrought; as well as in his being a mediator, and the redeemer of his people, as Moſes was a mediator between God and the people of Iſrael, and the deliverer of them out of Egypt; and it is a ſaying of the Jews [p] themſelves, "as was the firſt redeemer, ſo is the ſecond:" unto him ye ſhall hearken; externally attend on his miniſtry, internally receive his doctrine, embrace and profeſs it; do what is heard from him, hear him and not another, always and in all things; ſee Matt. xvii. 5.

℣. 16. According to all that thou deſiredſt of the Lord thy God at Horeb, &c.] This was promiſed them, in anſwer to their requeſt at Horeb or mount Sinai, when the law was delivered to them in the terrible manner it was: in the day of the aſſembly; in which the tribes were gathered together to receive the law, when they were aſſembled at the foot of the mount for that purpoſe: ſaying, let me not hear again the voice of the Lord my God; which was ſuch a voice of words, attended with ſo much terror, that they that heard intreated the word might not be ſpoken to them any more, as the apoſtle ſays in Heb. xii. 19. neither let me ſee this great fire any more, that I die not; out of which the Lord ſpoke; the congregation of Iſrael is here repreſented ſpeaking as if a ſingle perſon.

℣. 17. And the Lord ſaid unto me, &c.] Unto Moſes, who carried the above requeſt to the Lord: they have well ſpoken that which they have ſpoken; ſee ch. v. 28.

℣. 18. I will raiſe them up a prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, &c.] So that it ſeems this promiſe or prophecy was firſt made at mount Sinai, but now renewed and repeated, and which is no where elſe recorded; ſee ℣. 15. when they were not only made eaſy for the preſent by appointing Moſes to receive from the Lord all further notices of his mind and will, but were aſſured that when

when it was his pleaſure to make a new revelation, or a further diſcovery of his mind and will, in future times, he would not do it in that terrible way he had delivered the law to them; but would raiſe up a perſon of their own fleſh and blood, by whom it ſhould be delivered, which was ſufficient to prevent their fears for the future: and will put my word in his mouth; the doctrines of the goſpel which come from God, and are the words of truth, faith, righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, life and ſalvation; and which Chriſt ſays were not his own, as man and mediator, but his father's, which he gave unto him, and put into his mouth, as what he ſhould ſay, teach, and deliver to others; ſee John, vii. 16. and viii. 28. and xvii. 6, 8. and he ſhall ſpeak unto them all that I ſhall command him; nor did he keep back, but faithfully declared the whole counſel of God; and as he gave him a commandment what he ſhould ſay, and what he ſhould ſpeak, he was entirely obedient to it; ſee John, xii. 49, 50. and xv. 15.

℣. 19. And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever will not hearken unto my words, &c.] To the doctrines of the goſpel, but ſlight and deſpiſe them: which he ſhall ſpeak in my name; in whoſe name he came, and whoſe words or doctrines he declared them to be; not as his own, but his father's, John, v. 43. and vii. 16. I will require it of him; or as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, "my Word ſhall require it of him, or take vengeance on him;" as Chriſt the Word of God did in the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, city and temple; ſee Luk. xix. 27, 44.

℣. 20. But the prophet which ſhall preſume to ſpeak in my name, &c.] Pretending a miſſion and commiſſion from God, and yet was never ſent by him, like the prophets in Jer. xxiii. 21. which I have not commanded him to ſpeak; which though true was not to be ſpoken in a public manner, by aſſuming a public office, without a divine authority or a commiſſion from God, and much leſs what was falſe, and never commanded to be ſpoken at all by any: or that ſhall ſpeak in the name of other gods; the idols of the people, as the Targum; as if any ſhould affirm, they were ſent by Jove, or inſpired by Apollo, as ſome are ſaid to propheſy by Baal, as if they had received their orders and inſtructions from him, and were inſpired by him, Jer. ii. 8. even that prophet ſhall die; the Targum of Jonathan is, be killed by the ſword, but the Jews [q] generally interpret it of ſtrangling.

℣. 21. And if thou ſay in thine heart, &c.] Such a thought ariſes in the mind, and it appears to be a difficulty, and a query is made upon it, How ſhall we know the word which the Lord hath not ſpoken? What marks, ſigns and criterions are thoſe by which it may be known that it is not a word that comes from the Lord?

℣. 22. When a prophet ſpeaketh in the name of the Lord, &c.] Says he comes from God, is ſent by him, and has a commiſſion from him to ſay ſo: if the thing follow not, nor come to paſs; as the prophecy of Hananiah, Jer. xxviii. 3. that is the thing which the Lord hath not ſpoken; or otherwiſe it would have come to paſs, unleſs when a condition is either expreſſed or implyed, as the repentance or diſobedience of a people; ſee Jer. xviii. 7—10. but the prophet hath ſpoken it preſumptuouſly; in a bold and daring manner, with great impiety and impudence, out of his own head and heart, being a mere device and imagination of his own, which, not having the fear of God, he delivered as coming from the Lord: thou ſhalt not be afraid of him; not only to reprove him for his wickedneſs, but alſo to puniſh him for it; ſhewing no regard to the high character he aſſumes, nor to the great pretenſions he makes, to ſanctity, knowledge, and familiarity with God.

CHAP. XIX.

THIS chapter contains an order to ſeparate three cities of refuge in the land of Canaan, for ſuch that killed a man unawares to flee to, of which thoſe who were guilty of murder purpoſely, were to have no benefit, ℣. 1—13. a law is given againſt removing land-marks, ℣. 14. and others concerning witneſſes, that they ſhould be more than one; be two, or three, ℣. 15. and that a falſe witneſs, on conviction, ſhould be puniſhed, ℣. 16—21.

℣. 1. When the Lord thy God hath cut off the nations whoſe land the Lord thy God giveth thee, &c.] The ſeven nations of the land of Canaan, whoſe deſtruction was of the Lord for their ſins, and whoſe land was a gift of him that had a right to diſpoſe of it to the children of Iſrael; ſee ch. xii. 29. and thou ſucceedeſt them, and dwelleſt in their cities, and in their houſes; ſhould poſſeſs their land in their ſtead, by virtue of the gift of it to them by the Lord, and inhabit their cities and houſes built by them.

℣. 2. Thou ſhalt ſeparate three cities for thee in the midſt of thy land, &c.] From the cities they took poſſeſſion of and dwelt in; and indeed from the cities of the levites, which were given to them to inhabit; three were before ordered to be ſeparated from thoſe inhabited by the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, ch. iv. 41—43. but theſe were to be in the midſt of the land of Canaan; ſee Joſh. xxx. 7, 8. which the Lord thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs it; which as it is often mentioned when this land is ſpoken of, ſo it carries in it a reaſon here why this order of the Lord's ſhould be readily complied with, the whole land and all the cities of it being the gift of his to them.

℣. 3. Thou ſhalt prepare thee a way, &c.] A road, an high way to thoſe cities: on the firſt of Adar, or February, the magiſtrates uſed to meet and proclaimed, or ordered to be proclaimed, that the ways be repaired [r], particularly thoſe leading to the cities of refuge; which was done by making them ſmooth and plain, ſo that there was not an hill or dale to be ſeen; and by building bridges over rivers and brooks, that he might eſcape who had killed any one through miſtake, and not be hindered, leſt the avenger of blood ſhould overtake him and kill him [s]; and therefore every obſtruction was removed out of the way, that there might be a clear courſe for him; and at the parting of ways, or where two or more ways met, that he might not be at a loſs one moment which way to take, refuge was written, as Jarchi and other ther writers obſerve, upon poſts or pillars erected for that purpoſe; ſee the note on Numb. xxxv. 6. and divide the coaſts of thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee to inherit, in three parts; in each of which was to be a city of refuge, and thoſe at an equal diſtance: ſo Jarchi obſerves, that this was done that there might be from the beginning of the border (of the land) unto the firſt city of the cities of refuge, according to the meaſure of a journey, that there is from that to the ſecond, and ſo from the ſecond to the third, and ſo from the third to the other border of the land of Iſrael: of the ſituation of theſe cities, ſo as to anſwer to thoſe on the other ſide Jordan, ſee the note on Numb. xxxv. 14. that every ſlayer may flee thither; to that which is neareſt and moſt convenient for him, that is, who had ſlain a man unawares, as follows.

℣. 4. And this is the caſe of the ſlayer, which ſhall flee thither, that he may live, &c.] It was not any ſlayer that might have protection in theſe cities, but ſuch who were thus and thus circumſtanced, or whoſe caſe was as follows: whoſo killeth his neighbour ignorantly; without intention, as the Targum of Jonathan, did not deſign it, but was done by him unawares: whom he hated not in time paſt; had never ſhown by words or deeds that he had any hatred of him or enmity to him three days ago; ſo that if there were no marks of hatred, or proofs of it three days before this happened, it was reckoned an accidental thing, and not done on purpoſe, as this phraſe is uſually interpreted; ſee Exod. xxi. 29.

℣. 5. As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, &c.] A wood is a place common to men, and cutting down wood a buſineſs which any man might do; whereas a private place, where a man had no right to be, and doing what he had no buſineſs with, rendered a caſe ſuſpicious, and ſuch a man was liable to be taken up when any affair happened of the kind here ſpoken of; ſo the Jewiſh writers obſerve [t], "a wood is a public place for him that hurts and him that is hurt to enter there;" both had a right to go thither, the one as well as the other, he to whom the accident came, and he by whom it came; but they ſay, a court that belongs to a maſter of a houſe (a private court) is excepted, where there is no power or liberty for him that hurts, or for him that is hurt to enter. Abba Saul ſays, What is hewing wood? It is what a man has a right to do, or is in his power; it is what is public and common, and not peculiar to any: and his hand fetcheth a ſtroke with the ax to cut down the tree; lifts up the ax and is about to ſtrike with it, in order to cut down the tree pitched upon by him or by his neighbour, or both: and the head ſlippeth from the helve; the head of the ax from the handle of it, or the iron from the wood [u]; the iron part of the ax, which is properly the head, from the wooden part, which is laid hold on by the hand: and this not being well faſtened, ſlips and falls off as the blow is fetching, or the ſtroke juſt ready to be given: and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; hits him in ſome part as he ſtands by him which proves mortal: he ſhall flee unto one of theſe cities, and live; be ſafe and ſecure from the avenger of blood; ſuch an one might have the benefit of one of theſe cities, for for ſuch they were deſigned: the rule with the Jews is, what is done by way of deſcent (i. e. which comes down and lights upon a man, and is not levelled againſt him, or thrown up at him) he is to be exiled, (or to have the benefit of a city of refuge) but what is not by way of deſcent, he is not to have it. Some think this is ſpoken of the wood which is cleaved, and not of the wood in which the iron is fixed; but the wiſe men ſay it is to be ſo underſtood [x]; in which they are right.

℣. 6. Leſt the avenger of blood purſue the ſlayer, &c.] Theſe words are to be connected with ℣. 3. where it is ordered to prepare the way to the cities of refuge, and to divide the land into three parts, for the convenience of the ſlayer to flee thither, leſt he that was next of kin, and incenſed againſt the ſlayer, and determined to avenge what was done, ſhould purſue after him: while his heart is hot; by reaſon of the loſs of his relation, upon which his paſſions being raiſed, his heart becomes inflamed with wrath and anger; which puſhes him upon an eager and haſty purſuit of the ſlayer, before he ſits down and coolly conſiders and deliberates on the affair: and overtake him, becauſe the way is long, and ſlay him; wherefore it was proper that every thing ſhould be done to make the way to theſe cities as eaſy and as ſhort as it could be: whereas he was not worthy of death; had not committed an action deſerving of it, it being done ignorantly and without notice as follows: inaſmuch as he hated him not in time paſt; ſee the note on ℣. 4.

℣. 7. Wherefore I command thee, ſaying, thou ſhalt ſeparate three cities for thee,] This was to be done immediately, as ſoon as they were ſettled in the land of Canaan, and eſtabliſhed in the poſſeſſion of it, the inhabitants being cut off, or driven out, or however ſubdued.

℣. 8. And if the Lord thy God enlarge thy coaſt, &c.] Extend it further than it was upon their firſt ſettlement, even carry it as far as the river Euphrates, as in the times of Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 21, 24. Jarchi interprets it of ſuch an enlargement as to give them the land of the Kenites, the Kenizites, and Kadmonites: (as he hath ſworn unto thy fathers) and give thee all the land which he promiſed to give unto thy fathers: Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; ſee Gen. xv. 18, 19. xxvi. 3, 4. and xxviii. 13, 14.

℣. 9. If thou ſhalt keep all theſe commandments to do them, which I command thee this day, &c.] A phraſe often met with before, and ſignifies the putting in practice the ſeveral laws, moral, ceremonial and judicial, which Moſes was now making a repetition of, and enjoining the obſervance of them by a divine authority: to love the Lord thy God; which is the ſource and ſpring of genuine obedience to the commands of God: and to walk ever in his ways; denoting conſtancy and perſeverance in them; now all this is mentioned as the condition of the enlargement of their coaſt, which would be the caſe if a due and conſtant regard was had to the laws of God: and then ſhalt thou add three cities more beſides theſe three; three more in the land of Canaan, beſides the three now ordered to be ſeparated in it, and beſides the three on the other ſide of Jordan; ſo that there would have been nine in all, if theſe had been ever added; but that time never came: the Jews expect the addition of theſe three cities in the days of the Meſſiah [y]; but the Meſſiah is already come, and all thoſe cities as they were typical of him, have had their accompliſhment in him the antitype of them, of which ſee the note on Numb. xxxv. 29.

℣. 10. That innocent blood be not ſhed, &c.] As it would be if ſuch a ſlayer as before deſcribed was killed killed by the avenger of blood, before he could get to one of these cities of refuge, or supposing that they had not been appointed, or a sufficient number of them: which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance; to be enjoyed by them and their children after them, provided they did not defile it by their sins, but observed the commands of the Lord to obey them: and so blood be upon thee; the guilt of innocent blood crying for vengeance, as would be the case if such a man's blood was shed as before described; it seems as if the guilt would rather affect the whole land for not having a proper provision of Asylums for such persons, than the avenger of blood.

℣. 11. But if any man hate his neighbour, &c.] Has conceived enmity in his heart against him, bears him a mortal hatred, and has formed a scheme in his mind to take away his life: and lie in wait for him; knowing and expecting he will come by in such a way at such a time: and rise up against him; out of the place where he lay in wait, just at the time he is passing by: and smite him mortally that he die; or smite him in soul or life [z]; in such a part where life is in danger, and the consequence of it is that he dies: and fleeth into one of these cities; for shelter from the avenger of blood.

℣. 12. Then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, "the wise men of his city," the Sanhedrim, or court of judicature, or at least the civil magistrates of that city to which such a murderer belonged, had a power to send to the city of refuge whither he was fled, and demand the delivering of him up to them, that his case might be tried before them, and it might appear whether he was a proper person to receive the benefit of the city of refuge or not, and if not, to pass sentence of death upon him, and see it executed as follows: and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood that he may die; that is, after the examination and trial of him, and when he is found guilty, and sentence is passed upon him, then he was to be delivered into the hands of the avenger of blood, to be the executioner of that sentence.

℣. 13. Thine eye shall not pity him, &c.] This is not said to the avenger of blood, who is not to be supposed to have any pity or compassion on such a person, but to the elders, judges, and civil magistrates of the city to which he belonged, who took cognizance of his case; these were to shew him no favour on account of his being a citizen, a neighbour, a relation or friend, or a rich man, or on any account whatever; but without favour or affection were to judge him and put him to death as a murderer; see Numb. xxxv. 21. but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel; by which they would be defiled, and be liable to punishment for it; see Numb. xxxv. 33, 34. "the Targum of Jonathan is, "shall put away those that shed innocent blood out of Israel;" put them away by death: that it may go well with thee; with the whole land and its inhabitants, and with the city particularly, and the magistrates, and men of it, to which the murderer adjudged to death belonged, being continued in the enjoyment of all temporal blessings and mercies.

℣. 14. Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's land-mark, &c.] By which one man's land is distinguished from another; for so to do is to injure a man's property, and alienate his lands to the use of another, which must be a very great evil, and render those that do it obnoxious to a curse, ch. xxvii. 17. which they of old have set in thine inheritance which thou shalt inherit, in the land that the Lord thy God giveth thee to possess it; the land of Canaan: this is thought to refer to the bounds and limits set in the land by Eleazar and Joshua, and those concerned with them at the division of it; when not only the tribes were bounded and distinguished by certain marks, but every man's estate, and the possession of every family in every tribe; which though not as yet done when this law was made, yet as it respects future times, might be said to be done of old, whenever there was any transgression of it, which it cannot be supposed would be very quickly done; and it is a law not only binding on the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, but all others, it being agreeable to the light and law of nature, and which was regarded among the heathens, Prov. xxii. 28. and xxiii. 10. see the note on Hos. v. 10.

℣. 15. One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth, &c.] Whether capital sins, or pecuniary debts; or whatsoever sins a man may be guilty of, whether sins against the first or second table of the law, whether greater or lesser sins, whether in moral or civil things; the Jews except only in the case of a woman suspected of adultery and of beheading the heifer: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses shall the matter be established; either for acquittance or condemnation; and the witnesses may not, as Jarchi says, write their testimony in a letter, and send it to the Sanhedrim, nor may an interpreter stand between the witnesses and the judges; see the note on ch. xvii. 6.

℣. 16. If a false witness rise up against any man, &c.] In a court of judicature: to testify against him; that which is not true of him, let it be in what case it will; Aben Ezra instances in idolatry, but it holds good of any other.

℣. 17. Then both the men between whom the controversy is, &c.] The man that bears the false witness, and the man against whom it is borne: shall stand before the Lord; as in the presence of him, the omniscient God, and as represented by judges and civil magistrates, whose vicegerents they are; so it seems to be explained in the next words, which are exegetical of these: before the priests and the judges which shall be in those days; which shall compose the Sanhedrim, or court of judicature; and this seems to confirm it, that by priest and judge, in ch. xvii. 9, 12. are meant priests and judges; Jarchi says, this scripture speaks of witnesses, that is, of the false witness that testifies wrong against a man, and another that contradicts his testimony, and teaches that there is no witness by women; and so it is elsewhere said [a], an oath of witness is made by men, and not by women; on which it is observed [b], that a woman is not fit to bear witness, as it is written, then both the men, &c. men and not women; and the above writer remarks further, that it teaches that they ought to bear testimony standing.

℣. 18. And the judges shall make diligent inquisition, &c.] Into the case before them, into the nature of the evidence and proof that each witness brings for or against; so the Targum of Jonathan, "the judges shall interrogate the witness by whom these things are said, well;" shall thoroughly examine the testimony given, and look carefully into it: and behold, if the witness be a false witness, and and hath teſtified falſly againſt his brother; it appears plainly by full evidence that he has teſtified a falſehood of him.

℣. 19. Then ſhall ye do unto him as he had thought to have done unto his brother, &c.] Inflict the ſame mulct or puniſhment on him he thought to have brought his brother under by his falſe teſtimony of him; whether any pecuniary fine, or whipping and ſcourging, or the loſs of a member or the value of it, or death itſelf; whether ſtoning, ſtrangling, burning, or killing with the ſword: though in the caſe of accuſing a prieſt's daughter of adultery, as Jarchi obſerves, ſuch were not to be burnt, as would have been her caſe if proved, but ſtrangled: ſo ſhalt thou put the evil away from among you; the evil man that bears a falſe teſtimony of his brother, or the guilt of ſin which would be incurred by conniving at him.

℣. 20. And thoſe which remain ſhall hear and fear, &c.] Thoſe which ſurvive the falſe witneſs ſhall hear of the puniſhment inflicted on him, and fear to commit the like ſin, leſt they ſhould be puniſhed in like manner.

℣. 21. And thine eye ſhall not pity, &c.] The falſe witneſs when convicted; this is directed to the judges, who ſhould not ſpare ſuch an one through favour or affection, but pronounce a righteous ſentence on him, and ſee it executed, in proportion to the crime, and that according to the law of retaliation: but life ſhall go for life; in ſuch a caſe where the life of a perſon muſt have gone, if the falſhood of the teſtimony had not been diſcovered, the falſe witneſs muſt ſuffer death; in other caſes, where a member would have been loſt, or the price of it paid for, the ſame penalty was to be inflicted: eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot; that is, the price of an eye for an eye, &c. ſee Exod. xxi. 23, 24. Lev. xxiv. 19, 20.

CHAP. XX.

IN this chapter rules are given to be obſerved in times of war. When a battle was near, a prieſt was to addreſs the ſoldiers, and encourage them to fight, ℣. 1—4. then the officers were to declare who might return home, ℣. 5—9. when an enemy's city was approached, peace was to be proclaimed on certain conditions, which, if accepted of, the inhabitants were to be tributaries and ſervants, but if not, when taken, all were to be put to the ſword, excepting women, children and cattle, ℣. 10—15. but thoſe of the ſeven nations were to be utterly deſtroyed, ℣. 16, 17, 18. and, during a ſiege, no trees bearing fruit fit for food were to be cut down, ℣. 19, 20.

℣. 1. When thou goeſt out to battle againſt thine enemies, &c.] There were two ſorts of war the Iſraelites were engaged in, one commanded and another permitted, as Maimonides [c] diſtinguiſhes; one was by the order and appointment of God, as againſt the ſeven nations of Canaan; the other was voluntary and arbitrary, which was left to their own diſcretion and will as they ſaw fit, when they were provoked or diſtreſſed, or were invaded by their enemies, or they ſaw reaſon to go out againſt them, and either act the offenſive or defenſive part, or both; and of each of theſe ſome things are ſaid in this chapter: and ſeeſt horſes and chariots, and a people more than thou; the Iſraelites had no horſes, and ſo no chariots, their armies were all infantry; but their neighbouring nations that made war with them had a large cavalry, and multitudes of chariots, which made them very formidable; thus Shiſhak king of Egypt, in the times of Rehoboam, came againſt Jeruſalem with 1200 chariots and 60,000 horſemen, and people without number; and Zerah the Ethiopian, in the times of Aſa, came againſt him with an hoſt of 100,000 men, and 300 chariots, 2 Chron. xii. 2, 3. and xiv. 9. be not afraid of them; becauſe of the ſtrength of their cavalry, the terrible approaches of their chariots, and the number of their men: for the Lord thy God is with thee; hence, as Hezekiah ſays, more would be with them than with their enemies, with whom was an arm of fleſh, but with them the Lord their God, 2 Chron. xxxii. 7, 8. and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "for all of them ſhall be reckoned as one horſe and one chariot before the Lord your God;" with whom numbers are nothing; and which adds, "for his Word ſhall be your help;" the eternal logos, or Word of God; ſo Onkelos; and if God and his Word, his only-begotten ſon, are on the ſide of his people, they have nothing to fear from enemies, though ever ſo many and mighty: which brought thee out of the land of Egypt; which is obſerved for the encouragement of their faith and confidence in him; for he that did that for them, what is it he cannot or will not do?

℣. 2. And it ſhall be when ye are come nigh unto the battle, &c.] When all things are preparing for it, and it ſeems unavoidable: that the prieſt ſhall approach, and ſpeak unto the people; not any prieſt, but one appointed for this ſervice; who is called the anointed of war, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra obſerve, and concerning whom Maimonides [d] is more particular; he ſays, "they appoint a prieſt to ſpeak to the people at the time of war, and they anoint him with the anointing oil, and he is called the anointed of war; twice the anointed of war ſpeaks unto the people, once in a book at the time they go forth, before they ſet in battle-array, he ſays to the people, what man is there, &c. and when he has cauſed his words to be heard, he returns; at another time, when they are ſet in array, he ſays, fear not, &c." this man ſeems to be an emblem of goſpel-miniſters, who are anointed with the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, and whoſe buſineſs it is to encourage the people of God to fight the Lord's battles againſt ſin, ſatan, and the world, and not to be afraid of their ſpiritual enemies; directing them to take to them the whole armour of God, and to endure hardneſs as good ſoldiers of Chriſt, to follow him the captain of their ſalvation, aſſuring them of victory through him who makes them more than conquerors, and that their warfare is or ſhortly will be accompliſhed.

℣. 3. And ſhall ſay unto them, hear O Iſrael, &c.] Exciting their attention to what he was about to ſay, ſay, and which, as Jarchi obſerves, was ſpoken in the holy tongue, or in the Hebrew language: you approach this day unto battle againſt your enemies; were marching or ready to march, preparing to engage with them, and a battle ſeemed near at hand: let not your hearts faint, fear not, and do not tremble, neither be ye terrified becauſe of them; many words are made uſe of to animate them againſt thoſe fears which the ſtrength, number, and appearance of their enemies would be apt to cauſe in them. Jarchi obſerves, that here are four exhortations, anſwerable to four things which the kings of the nations do (in order to inject terror into their enemies); they ſhake their ſhields to claſh them one againſt another, that hearing their noiſe they may be afraid of them and flee; they prance their horſes, and make them neigh, to cauſe the noiſe of the hoofs of their horſes to be heard; they ſhout with their voices, and blow with their trumpets: and accordingly theſe ſeveral clauſes are ſo interpreted in the Miſnah [c]; "and let not your hearts faint; at the neighing of the horſes, and the brightneſs of ſwords: fear not; at the claſhing of ſhields: and do not tremble; at the ſound of trumpets: neither be ye terrified; at the voice of ſhouting"; and no doubt but it takes in every thing that has a tendency to cauſe fear, faintneſs and diſmay, which they are cautioned againſt.

[c] Hilchot Melachim, c. 7. §. 1.

℣. 4. For the Lord your God is he that goeth with you, &c.] To battle, and therefore they had no reaſon to fear and be diſmayed, to be faint-hearted, terrified and tremble: fear not, I am with thee, &c. Iſ. xli. 10. this, according to the Miſnah [f], reſpects the ark, and ſo Jarchi, which was a ſymbol of the divine preſence, and went with them to battle; ſee Joſh. vi. 4. 1 Sam. iv. 3, 4, 5. to fight for you againſt your enemies, to ſave you; to annoy and deſtroy the one, and to protect and ſave the other; thus far the anointed prieſt addreſſed the people in an oration to this purpoſe: the account Maimonides gives of it is, that "when they have ſet their ranks, and are near to a battle, the anointed of war ſtands on an high place, and all the ranks before him, and ſays to them in the holy tongue, hear, O Iſrael, &c. unto to ſave you; and then another prieſt under him cauſes it to be heard by all the people with an high voice [g];" he repeated what the anointed of war had ſaid, and expreſſed it with a loud voice that all might hear.

℣. 5. And the officers ſhall ſpeak unto the people, &c.] What theſe officers were is not eaſy to ſay; they ſeem not to be officers of the army, for they are diſtinguiſhed from captains of the armies, ℣. 9. unleſs they can be thought to be general officers; but the word for them is the ſame that is uſed of ſuch that attended the judges and were miniſters to them, ch. xvi. 18. and perhaps they were a ſort of heralds that publiſhed and proclaimed what the anointed of war had ſaid; and ſo the above writer [h] affirms, that what here follows was firſt ſpoken by him, and after that (what is ſaid, ℣. 3, 4.) the anointed of war ſpeaks, ſaying, What man is there, &c. (to the end of ℣. 7.) thus far the anointed of war ſpeaks, and then an officer cauſes all the people to hear it with an high voice, ſaying, What man is there that hath built a new houſe, and hath not dedicated it? or perfected it, as the Targum of Jonathan, not quite finiſhed it, has not, as that paraphraſt ſays, fixed in it the door poſts, or rather perhaps he means the Mezuzah, or writing, which the Jews thought themſelves obliged to faſten to the door-poſts of their houſes; ſee ch. xi. 20. until this was done an houſe was not thought to be compleated; though Jarchi interprets this of inhabitation; of a man's having built a houſe, but has not yet dwelt in it; ſee ch. xxviii. 30. ſo Joſephus [i] explains it, of its not having been uſed and enjoyed by a man a full year; but there ſeems to be ſomething more than all this in dedication; for though it does not ſignify a conſecration or dedication of it to holy uſes, as the dedication of the tabernacle and temple, yet there was ſomething done, ſome ceremony uſed at entrance into a new houſe; a good man entered into it, no doubt, with prayer and praiſe, as the 30th pſalm was compoſed by David at the dedication of his houſe; ſee Neh. xii. 27. and perhaps it was uſual to have their friends together, and make a chearful entertainment on the occaſion. Ben Melech on the place aſſures us, it was a cuſtom to make a feaſt and merriment at eating the firſt meal in a new houſe: let him go and return to his houſe, leſt he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it; or perfect it, as the above Targum, or dwell in it, as well as have the pleaſure of entertaining his friends in it at the firſt opening of it; this was either a command enjoining a man, in ſuch a circumſtance to return, and ſo the reſt that follow, or a permiſſion to him, allowing him to do it if he thought fit.

℣. 6. And what man is he that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not yet eaten of it, &c.] Which he has a right to do, and it is hard for him to be deprived of it, 1 Cor. ix. 7. or hath not made it common [k]; according to the law in Lev. xix. 23, 24, 25. Three years the fruit of trees and ſo of vines might not be eaten, in the fourth they were devoted to the Lord, and might be redeemed from the prieſt, and ſo made common, and on the fifth year were eaten in courſe; ſo the Targums of Jeruſalem, Jonathan and Jarchi interpret it: let him alſo go and return unto his houſe, leſt he die in the battle, and another man eat of it; or make it common, according to the above law: Aben Ezra ſeems to have another ſenſe of this paſſage, deriving the word from another, which ſignifies piping and dancing, and obſerves that it was a cuſtom to ſing, pipe and dance in vineyards; and the Septuagint verſion is, hath not been made merry of it; though that may ſignify, not having drank of the wine of it, to be made merry with it.

℣. 7. And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? &c.] Home to his houſe and bedded with her; has only betrothed her, but is not properly married to her, the nuptials are not compleated; this the Jews underſtand of any one betrothed to him, whether a virgin or a widow, or the wife of a deceaſed brother, (yea they ſay, if his brother is dead in war he returns and comes home), but not of a former wife divorced and received again [m]: let him go and return unto his houſe, leſt he die in battle, and another man take her; or marry her.

℣. 8. And the officers ſhall ſpeak further unto the people, &c.] According to Maimonides [n] the prieſt the anointed of war ſpoke to the end of ℣. 7. and which the officers repeated after him to the people aloud, as before obſerved; and then after that an officer ſpeaks of himſelf, or in his own words, and not in thoſe of the prieſt, as follows; what man that is fearful, &c. and then another another officer cauſes all the people to hear it: and they ſhall ſay, What man is there that is fearful and faint-hearted? that has not courage to face his enemies, to whom the terrors of war, and eſpecially of death, are dreadful; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "becauſe of his ſin;" whoſe ſins ſtare him in the face, and lie heavy on his conſcience; ſo that he is afraid he ſhall die in battle and in his ſins, and ſuffer divine vengeance; both theſe ſenſes are obſerved in the Miſnah [y]. According to R. Akiba, a fearful and faint-hearted man, is one "that can't ſtand in battle-array, or behold "a drawn ſword; but R. Joſe the Galilean ſays, "he is one that is afraid of the tranſgreſſions he "has committed; and therefore the law joins to "this all thoſe things for which a man may re"turn;" as having built a new houſe, planted a vineyard, and betrothed a wife; that ſo it might be thought it was on account of one or other of theſe that he returned, and not through faintheartedneſs, either becauſe of the terrors of war, or of his own conſcience for his ſins: let him go and return to his houſe, leſt his brethren's heart faint as well as his heart; leſt by his pale looks and trembling joints, his fainting fits and ſwoons, he diſcourage the reſt in the ſame company with him, and by his example make them unfit for war alſo.

℣. 9. And it ſhall be when the officers have made an end of ſpeaking unto the people, &c.] By reciting what the anointed of war ſaid unto them, and by ſpeeches of their own framing, to encourage to the battle; and all were diſmiſſed that had leave to depart, and choſe to take it: that they ſhall make captains of armies to lead on the people; on to battle; that is, either the officers ſhould do this, which may ſeem to confirm what has been hinted, that they might be generals of the army who conſtituted captains under them, to lead the people on to battle: unleſs this is to be underſtood of the princes of Iſrael, or of the king when they had one, and his miniſters; for it does not appear in any inſtance, that the people choſe their own officers over them, to go out before them, and lead them on to battle; or to be at the head of them [z]; which the Jewiſh writers underſtand in a very different ſenſe; not to head them, or be at the head of them, to direct and command them, but to keep them from deſerting: their ſenſe is, that the officers having diſmiſſed perſons in the circumſtances before deſcribed, and ſet ſtout men before them, and others behind them, (i. e. the army of the people) with iron hatchets in their hands, and every one that ſought to return, they had power to cut off his legs; ſince flight is the beginning of falling before their enemies [a].

℣. 10. When thou comeſt nigh unto a city to fight againſt it, &c.] This is to be underſtood of an arbitrary war, as Jarchi obſerves; which they engaged in of themſelves, or were provoked to by their enemies; which was their own choice, and according to their own will and pleaſure; and their conduct towards their enemies in it was different from that in a war with the ſeven nations, commanded by the Lord, and diſtinguiſhed from it, ℣. 15, 16. then proclaim peace unto it; that is, offer them terms of peace; which were that the inhabitants of it ſhould renounce idolatry, and become their tributaries and ſervants.

℣. 11. And it ſhall be, if it make thee anſwer of peace, &c.] Comply with the terms of peace offered: and open unto thee; the gates of the city and its garriſons, and deliver all into their hands: then it ſhall be that all the people that is found therein; ſome having made their eſcape before the ſurrender of the city: ſhall be tributaries unto thee; pay a yearly tax impoſed upon them, as the Moabites ſometimes did, and which was paid in lambs and rams with the wool, 2 Kings iii. 4. and they ſhall ſerve thee; not as ſlaves, or be in continual bondage and ſervitude; but upon occaſion be called out to any public ſervice, as joining them againſt their enemies, rebuilding palaces and cities, or repairing walls of cities, and the like; and in general acknowledge their dominion over them, and their own ſubjection to them, by paying an annual tribute, or ſending gifts unto them; thus the Moabites, Syrians, and Edomites, became the ſervants of David, 2 Sam. viii. 2, 6, 14.

℣. 12. And if it will make no peace with thee, &c.] Will not accept of terms of peace offered: but will make war againſt thee; come out and fight, or prepare to defend themſelves: then thou ſhalt beſiege it; ſurround and block it up on all ſides with their forces; the Jews ſay only on three ſides, leaving one for any to flee and make their eſcape if they thought fit; ſee the note on Numb. xxxi. 7.

℣. 13. And when the Lord thy God hath delivered it into thine hands, &c.] When, what with preſſures without, and calamities within, the city is obliged to ſurrender: this is not to be imputed to the methods and arts of war uſed in beſieging, or to the courage and ſkill of the beſiegers; but to the power and providence of God ſucceeding means uſed, and ſending famine or peſtilence among the beſieged, and inclining their hearts to deliver up their city: thou ſhalt ſmite every male thereof with the edge of the ſword; the men in it, grown perſons, as diſtinguiſhed from little ones in the next verſe; becauſe it was owing to theſe it was not ſurrendered at once, when terms of peace were offered.

℣. 14. But the women, the little ones, and the cattle, &c.] Theſe were to be ſpared; women becauſe of the weakneſs of their ſex, and ſubjection to their huſbands; and little ones, which take in males as well as females, as Jarchi obſerves, becauſe of their tender age; and cattle, becauſe of their inſenſibility; all theſe having had no concern in holding out the ſiege: and all that is in the city, even all the ſpoil thereof ſhalt thou take unto thyſelf; gold, ſilver, merchandize, houſhold goods, utenſils in trade, and whatever was of any worth and value to be found in their houſes: and thou ſhalt eat the ſpoil of thine enemies, which the Lord thy God hath given thee; that is, enjoy all their wealth and riches, eſtates, and poſſeſſions; for this is not to be reſtrained to things eatable only.

℣. 15. Thus ſhalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, &c.] As all ſuch were reckoned that were without the land of Iſrael, even all in their neighbouring nations, the Moabites, Edomites, Ammonites, Syrians, &c. for the children of Iſrael never went to war with any very diſtant nations, unleſs they came unto them and invaded them; nor did they ſeek to carry their conqueſts to any great diſtance, when the moſt powerful and victorious, as in the days of David and Solomon: which are not of the cities of theſe nations; of theſe ſeven nations, as the Targum of Jonathan, the ſeven nations of the land of Canaan; all that were not of them were accounted foreign cities, and at a diſtance.

℣. 16. But of the cities of thoſe people, which the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, &c.] The cities of the ſeven nations, ſix of which are mentioned by name in the next verſe: thou ſhalt ſave alive nothing that breatheth; the reaſon of this ſeverity was becauſe of their wickedneſs, the capital crimes and groſs abominations they were guilty of, and for which they deſerved to die; and on account whereof they were reſerved to this deſtruction, when the meaſure of their iniquities was full, ſuch as idolatry, inceſt, witchcraft, ſoothſaying, necromancy, &c. ſee Lev. xviii. 3. 24, 25, 27. and xx. 2—23. Deut. xviii. 9—12.

℣. 17. But thou ſhalt utterly deſtroy them, &c.] Men, women, and children: ſome think this is to be underſtood only of ſuch cities which did not accept of terms of peace; for they are of opinion that Joſhua made proclamation of peace to all the cities of Canaan; which being not complied with, he deſtroyed them as they fell into his hands; and they ſuppoſe that the Gibeonites had not heard of ſuch a proclamation, and therefore were ſpared; and it is certain that there were many who were ſuffered to live among them, who it may be thought were allowed on their becoming proſelytes, which was one of the terms of peace, as Rahab and her houſhold did, and which is the ſenſe of ſome of the Jewiſh writers. Jarchi on the following verſe obſerves, that if they repented, and became proſelytes, they might be received: namely, the Hittites and the Amorites, the Canaanites and the Perizzites, the Hivites and the Jebuſites; one of the ſeven nations is here omitted, the Girgaſhites, as they are alſo in Exod. xxiii. 23. It is ſaid [b], that "Joſhua ſent three letters into the land of Iſrael before they went into it; in the firſt, whoever would turn (and flee) might; in the ſecond, whoever would make peace might; in the 3d, whoever would make war might: the Girgaſhites, believing God, went to Africa, according to Iſ. xxxvi. 17. the land there is Africa; the Gibeonites made peace, and dwelt in the land; thirty-one kings made war, and fell:" as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee; Deut. vii. 1, 2.

℣. 18. That they teach you not to do after all their abominations, &c.] This is another reaſon why they were to be utterly deſtroyed, not only becauſe of the abominations which they committed, but to prevent the Iſraelites being taught by them to do the ſame; wherefore, as before obſerved from Jarchi, ſuch as became proſelytes were ſuffered to live among them, becauſe there was no danger of idolatry from them, which even proſelytes of the gate renounced; and though all other abominations are included, yet this is particularly reſpected, as appears from the following clauſe: which they have done unto their gods; to the honour of whom not only many ſuperſtitious rites and ceremonies were performed, and idolatrous actions committed, but acts of lewdneſs, and even unnatural uncleanneſs: ſo ſhould ye ſin againſt the Lord your God; a ſin the moſt provoking to him, as the ſin of idolatry was; and cauſe his anger to riſe to ſuch a degree, as to ſuffer them to be carried captive from the land he gave them to inherit; and which afterwards was the caſe, and that through learning the manners and cuſtoms of theſe people; ſee Pſ. cvi. 34—42.

℣. 19. When thou ſhalt beſiege a city a long time, in making war againſt it to take it, &c.] Before it will ſurrender; it holding out the ſiege a conſiderable time: the Hebrew text ſays, many days [c]; which the Targum of Jonathan interprets of all the ſeven days, to make war againſt it in order to ſubdue it on the ſabbath-day. Jarchi obſerves, that days ſignify two, and many three; hence it is ſaid they don't beſiege cities of the Gentiles leſs than three days before the ſabbath; and he alſo ſays it teaches that peace is opened or proclaimed two or three days firſt: thou ſhalt not deſtroy the trees thereof by forcing an ax againſt them; that is, not cut them down with an ax, ſuch trees as were without the city, and in the power of the beſiegers: what ſort of trees are meant appears by what follows: for thou mayeſt eat of them; the fruit of them, which ſhews them to be fruit-trees, and gives a reaſon for not cutting them down, ſince they would be uſeful in ſupplying them with what was agreeable to eat: and thou ſhalt not cut them down to employ them in the ſiege; in building bulwarks and batteries, and making of machines to caſt out ſtones, and the like, to the annoyance of the beſieged; which might as well or better be made of other trees, as in the next verſe: for the tree of the field is man's life; by the fruit of which, among other things, his life is ſupported and maintained: but ſome give a different verſion and ſenſe of this clauſe, for the tree of the field is man [d], or is man's; it is his property; but this is not a ſufficient reaſon why it ſhould not be cut down, whether the property of the beſieger, in whoſe hand it is, or of the beſieged, to whom it belonged: or for is the tree of the field a man [e]? that has given any occaſion of being thus uſed? no; it is no cauſe of the war, nor of the holding out of the ſiege; and had it a voice, as Joſephus [f] obſerves, it would complain of injury done it, and apologize for itſelf. Some ſupply the negative, for the tree of the field is not a man; ſo the Targum of Onkelos, as well as makes it a comparative form of ſpeech; "for not as a man is the tree of the field, to come out againſt thee in a ſiege;" the Targum of Jonathan is, "for not as a man is the tree of the field, to be hid from you in a ſiege;" or, as ſome in Aben Ezra expreſs it, "it is not as a man that it ſhould flee from before thee;" it can neither annoy thee, nor get out of thy way; and therefore to lift up an ax againſt it, to cut it down, as if it was a man, and an enemy that ſtood in the way, is ridiculous and weak; tho the ſenſe of the ſaid writer himſelf is the ſame with that of our verſion; but what ſeems beſt is to read the words, for, O Man, of the trees of the field (there is enow of them) to bring before thee for a bulwark [g]; to make uſe of, without cutting down fruit-trees: though ſome underſtand it metaphorically, that as the tree of the field is, ſo is man, or ſhould be, bring forth fruit, that he may not be cut down; ſee Matt. iii. 10. Plutarch [h] relates, that it was forbidden the worſhippers of Oſiris to deſtroy garden-trees.

℣. 20. Only the trees which thou knoweſt that they be not trees for meat, &c.] Which might be known not only by their not having fruit upon them, but by other tokens, and even at a time of year when there was no fruit on any, which might be ſometimes the ſeaſon of a ſiege: thou ſhalt deſtroy and cut them down; if ſo to do was of any diſſervice to the enemy, or of any ſervice to them, as follows; follows, they had a liberty to deſtroy them if they would: and thou ſhalt build bulwarks againſt the city that maketh war, until it be ſubdued; build bulwarks of the trees cut down, and raiſe batteries with them, or make machines and engines of the wood of them, to caſt ſtones into the city to annoy the inhabitants of it, in order to make them ſurrender, and until they do it. All this may be an emblem of the ax being to be laid to fruitleſs trees in a moral and ſpiritual ſenſe; and of trees of righteouſneſs, laden with the fruits of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord, being preſerved and never to be cut down or rooted up; ſee Matt. iii. 10. Iſ. lx. 3. Matt. xv. 13.

CHAP. XXI.

THIS chapter treats of the beheading of the heifer, for the expiation of unknown murder, and the rules to be obſerved in it, ℣. 1—9. of a beautiful captive woman an Iſraelite is deſirous of having for his wife, and what methods he muſt take to accompliſh it, ℣. 10—14. of giving the double portion to the firſt-born, which he muſt not be deprived of in favour of the ſon of a beloved wife, ℣. 15, 16, 17. and of the ſtubborn and rebellious ſon, who remaining ſo muſt be put to death, ℣. 18—21. and of burying a perſon hanged on a tree the ſame day he is executed, ℣. 22, 23.

℣. 1. If one be found ſlain, &c.] After public war with an enemy, Moſes proceeds to ſpeak of a private quarrel and fight of one man with another, in which one is ſlain, as Aben Ezra obſerves: in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs it; where murders might be committed more ſecretly, and remain undiſcovered, when they came to live in ſeparate cities, towns, and villages, with fields adjacent to them, than now encamped together: lying in the field; where the quarrel begun, and where the fight was fought; or however, where the murderer met with his enemy, and ſlew him, and left him; it being common for duels to be fought, and murders committed in a field; the firſt murder in the world was committed in ſuch a place, Gen. iv. 8. The Targum of Jonathan is, "not hidden under an heap, not hanging on a tree, nor ſwimming on the face of the waters;" which ſame things are obſerved in the Miſnah [i], and gathered from ſome words in the text: in the land, and ſo not under an heap: lying, and ſo not hanging: in the field, and ſo not ſwimming on the water: and it be not known who hath ſlain him; the parties being alone, and no witneſſes of the fact, at leaſt that appear; for if it was known the heifer was not beheaded, after mentioned [k]; and one witneſs in this caſe was ſufficient, and even one that was not otherwiſe admitted.

℣. 2. Then thy elders and thy judges ſhall come forth, &c.] From the city or cities near to which the murder was committed, to make enquiry about it, and expiation for it; ſo Aben Ezra interprets it of the elders of the cities near, but others underſtand it of the elders of the great ſanhedrim at Jeruſalem; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "then ſhall go out from the great ſanhedrim two of thy wiſe-men, and three of thy judges;" and more expreſsly the Miſnah [l] "three go out from the great ſanhedrim in Jeruſalem;" R. Judah ſays five; "it is ſaid thy elders two, and thy judges two," and there is no ſanhedrim, or court of judicature equal (or even) therefore they add to them one more: and they ſhall meaſure unto the cities which are round about him that is ſlain; that is, from the place where the ſlain lies, as Jarchi rightly interprets it; on all ſides of it, from the four corners, as the Targum of Jonathan, the cities round about the ſlain. Maimonides [m] ſays, they don't behead the heifer for, nor meaſure but to a city in which there is a ſanhedrim: if it is found between two cities (that is, at an equal diſtance) both bring two heifers (Maimonides [n] ſays they bring one between them, which is moſt reaſonable); but the city of Jeruſalem does not bring an heifer to be beheaded: the reaſon is, becauſe it was not divided to the tribes [o]. This meaſuring, one would think, ſhould be only neceſſary when it was not certain which was the neareſt city; and yet Maimonides [p] ſays, even when it was found on the ſide of a city, which was certainly known to be neareſt, they meaſured; the command, he obſerves, is to meaſure.

℣. 3. And it ſhall be, that the city which is next unto the ſlain man, &c.] And ſo ſuſpected, as the Targum of Jonathan, of the murder; or the murderer is in it, or however belonged to it: even the elders of the city ſhall take an heifer; of a year old, as the ſame Targum, and ſo Jarchi; and in this the Jewiſh writers agree, that it muſt be a year old, but not two; though heifers of three years old were ſometimes uſed in ſacrifice, Gen. xv. 9. a type of Chriſt, in his ſtrength, laborioufneſs, and patience; ſee Numb. xix. 2. which hath not been wrought with; in plowing land, or treading out corn: and which hath not drawn in the yoke; which never had any yoke put upon it; or however, if attempted to be put upon it, it would not come under it, and draw with it: no mention is made, as uſual, that it ſhould be without blemiſh; becauſe though in ſome ſenſe expiatory, yet was not properly a ſacrifice, it not being ſlain and offered where ſacrifices were; hence it is ſaid in the Miſnah [q], that a blemiſh in it did not make it rejected, or unlawful for uſe: nevertheleſs, this heifer may be a type of Chriſt, whoſe ſufferings, bloodſhed, and death, atone for ſecret and unknown ſins, as well as for open and manifeſt ones, even for all ſin; and its being free from labour, and without a yoke, may ſignify the freedom of Chriſt from the yoke of ſin, and the ſervice of it, and from human traditions; that he was not obliged to any toil and labour he had been concerned in, or to bear the yoke of the law, had he not voluntarily undertaken it of himſelf; and that he expiated the ſins of ſuch who were ſons of Belial, children without a yoke; and for the ſame reaſon, this heifer not being required to be without blemiſh, might be becauſe Chriſt, though he had no ſin of his own, was made ſin for his people, and reckoned as if he had been a ſinner; though indeed had this been the deſign of the type, all the ſacrifices which typified Chriſt would not have required ſuch a qualification, to be without blemiſh, as they did.

℣. 4. The elders of that city ſhall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley, &c.] Cities being generally built on hills, and ſo had adjacent vallies, to which there was a deſcent; but here a rough valley, or the rougher part of it, was ſelected for this purpoſe. As a valley is low, and this a rough one, it may be an emblem of Chriſt's being brought into this lower world, from heaven to earth, to do the will of his Father, which was to work out the ſalvation of his people; and of his coming into the lower parts of the earth, the womb of the virgin at his incarnation, and to the grave at his death, Pſ. cxxxix. 15. Eph. iv. 9. and of the low eſtate he came into by the aſſumption of human nature; through appearing in the form of a ſervant, being in indigent circumſtances, and miniſtred to by others, and needing the aſſiſtance of angels in the wilderneſs and garden, by which it appeared he was made lower than they; by his being deſpiſed of men, and forſaken by his Father; all which are proofs of the low eſtate he was brought into, fitly ſignified by a valley, and which was a rough valley to him; in which he was roughly treated, his life being ſought after in his infancy by Herod, which obliged the flight of his parents with him into Egypt; and being not received, but rejected by his own, as the King Meſſiah, whom they would not have to reign over them, and loaded with opprobrious names by them; and who often ſought and attempted by various ways to take away his life; and when apprehended and examined before the high-prieſt, and in Pilate's hall, was uſed in the rudeſt manner, being ſpit upon, buffeted, and ſcourged; and when led out to be crucified, was treated in the moſt barbarous and ſcornful manner, and was put to death in the moſt painful and ſhameful way; and, above all, was ſeverely handled by the juſtice of God, being numbered among the tranſgreſſors, when the ſword of juſtice was awaked againſt him, and he was not in the leaſt ſpared, but wrath came upon him to the uttermoſt for the ſins of his people; ſo that this world he was brought into proved a rough valley indeed to him. This ſome take to be an emblem of the hard heart of the murderer who had commited ſuch a barbarous and cruel action as to kill a man; or of the hard heart of a ſinner, into which Chriſt is brought through the miniſtry of the word; or of the infamous place Calvary, where Chriſt was brought to ſuffer death; but the former is beſt. Some interpret it, a ſtrong ſtream [q], or rapid torrent; ſo Maimonides [r] and others; and indeed in vallies there are generally ſtreams or brooks of water, but this ſeems not ſo well to agree with what follows: which is neither eared nor ſown; that is, neither plowed nor ſown, but quite an uncultivated place; and this the Jews underſtand not of what it had been, or then was, but what it ſhould be hereafter; that from henceforward it ſhould never be manured, but lie barren and uſeleſs; ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [s], the place is forbid ſowing or tilling, but is free to dreſs flax in, or to dig ſtones out of it: ſo R. Joſeph Kimchi [t] interprets this of a fat and fruitful valley, which was not to be tilled nor ſown from thence forward for time to come: the reaſon of which he thinks was, that they might be the more careful of their countries and borders, and how they encouraged bloody-minded men to dwell among them; that no ſlain perſon might be found there, and ſo they loſe a choice part of their poſſeſſions; and to the ſame purpoſe Maimonides [u]: and this became true of the fruitful land of Judea and Jeruſalem, after the ſufferings and death of Chriſt there, Luke xxi. 24. and ſhall ſtrike off the heifer's neck there in the valley; with an ax, on the back part of it, in the midſt of the valley, as the Targum of Jonathan, and the ſame is ſaid in the Miſnah [w]: in this it was a type of Chriſt, who was put to death at the inſtigation of the elders of the Jewiſh nation, Matt. xxvii. 1, 12, 20. and without the gates of Jeruſalem at Golgotha; ſee Heb. xiii. 11, 12, 13.

℣. 5. And the prieſts the ſons of Levi ſhall come near, &c.] Who were clearly of the tribe of Levi, as Aben Ezra notes; about whom there could be no diſpute; for it ſeems there ſometimes were perſons in that office, of whom there was ſome doubt at leaſt whether they were of that tribe; theſe ſeem to be ſuch that belonged to the court of judicature at Jeruſalem; ſee ch. xvii. 9. who were to be preſent at this ſolemnity, to direct in the performance of it, and to judge and determine in any matter of difficulty that might ariſe: for them the Lord thy God hath choſen to miniſter unto him; in the ſervice of the ſanctuary, by offering ſacrifices, &c. and to bleſs in the name of the Lord; the people; ſee Numb. vi. 23—27. and by their word ſhall every controverſy and every ſtroke be tried; every controverſy between man and man reſpecting civil things, and every ſtroke or blow which one man may give another; and whatſoever came before them was tried by them, according to the reſpective laws given concerning the things in queſtion, and were not determined by them in an arbitrary way, according to their own will and pleaſure; ſee ch. xvii. 8, 9, 10, 11.

℣. 6. And all the elders of that city that are next unto the ſlain man, &c.] The whole court of judicature belonging to it, all the magiſtracy of it; even though there were an hundred of them, Maimonides [x] ſays: ſhall waſh their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley; in token of their innocence, and this they did not only for themſelves, but for the whole city, being the repreſentatives of it; ſee Pſ. xxvi. 6. Matt. xxvii. 24. Some think that this is a confirmation of the ſenſe embraced by ſome, that it was a ſtrong ſtream to which the heifer was brought; and there might be a ſtream of water here, and a valley alſo; though it would be no great difficulty to get from the city, which was near, a ſufficient quantity of water to waſh the hands of the elders with. This may denote the purification of ſin by the blood of Chriſt, when it is confeſſed over him; and ſhews that prieſts and elders, miniſters of the word, as well as others, ſtand in need of it; and that even thoſe concerned in the death of Chriſt ſhared in the benefits of it.

℣. 7. And they ſhall anſwer and ſay, &c.] The elders of the city, at the time of the waſhing of their hands: our hands have not ſhed this blood; have been no ways concerned in it, nor acceſſary to it: the Targum of Jonathan is, "it is manifeſt before the Lord, that he did not come into our hands, nor did we diſmiſs him that has ſhed this blood;" which is more fully explained in the Miſnah [y]; for had they been aware of him, or had any ſuſpicion of him or his deſign, they would have detained him, or at leaſt would not have ſuffered him to have departed alone: neither have our eyes ſeen; ſeen; it, or him; ſo the Targum of Jeruſalem, "our eyes have not ſeen him that hath ſhed this blood;" by which expreſſion is meant, that they had no manner of knowledge of the murderer, nor of any circumſtance that could lead them to ſuſpect or conclude who he was.

℣. 8, Be merciful, O Lord, to thy people Iſrael whom thou haſt redeemed, &c.] Out of Egyptian bondage, and claimed as his own; and therefore it is requeſted he would be favourable to them, and ſhew them mercy, and not puniſh them for a ſin they were entirely ignorant of, though done by ſome one among them, whom as yet they could not diſcover. The words ſeem to be the words of the elders continued, who having made a declaration of their innocence, humbly requeſt mercy of God, not only for themſelves, but for all the people of Iſrael; yet, both the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan take them to be the words of the prieſts, and ſo does Jarchi, and the ſame is affirmed in the Miſnah [z]: and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Iſrael's charge; impute not the guilt of innocent blood to a people in general, when only a ſingle perſon, and he unknown, is chargeable with it: or put it not in the midſt of thy people; let it not be placed to the whole, becauſe it cannot be found out whoſe it is, though it is certain it is one in the midſt of them: and the blood ſhall be forgiven them; that is, God will not impute it, and place it to their account, or lay it to their charge; but will graciouſly conſider the beheading of the heifer as an expiation of it: it is ſaid in the Miſnah [a], "if the murderer is found before the heifer is beheaded, it goes forth and feeds among the herd; but if after it is beheaded, it is buried in the ſame place; and again if the heifer is beheaded, and after that the murderer is found, he ſhall be ſlain;" ſo the Targums, and Jarchi on the next verſe.

℣. 9. So ſhalt thou put away the guilt of innocent blood from among you, &c.] Which otherwiſe the perſon not being found out, and brought to juſt puniſhment for it, would devolve upon the whole. Aben Ezra interprets it the puniſhment of innocent blood, which by the above method being taken would not be inflicted on them: when thou ſhalt do that which is right in the ſight of the Lord; as it was to obſerve this law concerning the beheading the heifer, with all the rites and ceremonies belonging to it here enjoined; as well as every other command, ſtatute, and ordinance of the Lord, which are all right to be done, Pſ. xix. 8.

℣. 10. When thou goeſt forth to war againſt thine enemies, &c.] This refers to an arbitrary war, as Jarchi remarks, which they entered into of themſelves, of choice, or through being provoked to it by their enemies; and not a war commanded by the Lord, as that againſt the ſeven nations of Canaan, and againſt Amalek; ſince there were to be no captives in that war, but all were to be deſtroyed: and the Lord thy God hath delivered them into thine hands; given them the victory over their enemies, ſo that they were obliged to ſurrender themſelves to them priſoners of war: and thou haſt taken them captive, or led his or their captivity [b] captive; led them captive who uſed to lead others, denoting their conqueſt of victorious nations; ſee a like phraſe in Pſ. lxviii. 18.

℣. 11. And ſeeſt among the captives a beautiful woman, &c.] Whether a virgin, wife, or widow, according to the Jewiſh writers, even though another man's wife; ſo Jarchi [c], and Maimonides [d]; the marriages of Gentiles being reckoned by the Jews no marriages: and haſt a deſire unto her; being captivated with her beauty; ſome underſtand this of the ſtrength and rage of luſt, but it rather ſignifies a paſſionate deſire of enjoying her in a lawful way, as follows: that thou wouldeſt have her to thy wife; to be married to her in a legal manner; for though it was not allowed the Iſraelites to marry any of the ſeven nations of Canaan, nor indeed with any of other nations continuing in their idolatry; yet they might marry ſuch as became their captives and ſervants, and were wholly in their own power; and eſpecially if proſelytes to their religion, and which this fair captive was to become before marriage, as is by ſome gathered from the following things to be done by her; though after all, this was only a permiſſion, becauſe of the hardneſs of their hearts, as is ſaid of divorce; and that ſuch marriages were not very grateful to God appears, as ſome have obſerved, from the ceremonies uſed before marriage, to render her contemptible; and the eaſy diſmiſſion of her afterwards, according to the ſenſe of ſome interpreters.

℣. 12. Then thou ſhalt bring her home to thine houſe, &c.] In order to make her his wife, after ſome things were done here directed to; for this is not to be underſtood of his taking her home with a view to defile her, as Maimonides [e] interprets it; who obſerves, that when a man's luſt ſo rages that he can't ſubdue it, yet he ought not publickly to ſatisfy his luſt, but to have the woman into a private and ſecret place, as it is ſaid, thou ſhalt bring her into the midſt of thine houſe; nor was he permitted to lie with her in the camp, nor was it lawful for him to defile her a ſecond time, until her mourning was at an end; though elſewhere [f] he gives a different ſenſe of this paſſage, and ſuppoſes the man to have lain with the captive woman, before the introduction of her into his houſe; for it is a notion that prevails with the Jewiſh writers, that an Iſraelitiſh ſoldier might lie once with an heathen woman taken captive, to gratify his luſt, but might not repeat it; ſo it is ſaid in the Talmud [g]; yet it muſt be obſerved, that there are ſome, tho' but few, who are of opinion that the firſt congreſs was unlawful, and that he might not touch her until certain conditions were fulfilled, and they were married, as R. Jochanan [h]; and which is embraced, ſupported, and defended by Abarbinel on the place, and in which he is undoubtedly right; and ſo it is underſtood by Joſephus [i] and Philo [k]; for this law gives no liberty nor countenance to the violation of the beautiful captive. The plain meaning is, that when a Jewiſh ſoldier was paſſionately in love with a captive, and was deſirous of making her his wife, he was to take her home to his houſe, where ſhe was to remain, to ſee whether his paſſion of love would ſubſide, or the woman become a proſelyte, or however till certain rites were obſerved, and then he was permitted to marry her: and ſhe ſhall ſhave her head; either that ſhe might be the leſs engaging, her flowing locks, or plaited hair, or modiſh head-dreſs, being removed from her, which had ſerved to excite a paſſion for her; or as a token of mourning for her preſent afflicted ſtate and condition; and in afflicted circumſtances it was uſual to ſhave the head; ſee Job i. 20. and though it was forbidden forbidden the Iſraelites, yet not Gentiles; ch. xiv. 1. and pare her nails; this and the former ſome think were ordered to make her fit to be his wife, and were a ſort of purification of her, and an emblem of her having renounced heatheniſm, and having departed from it, and laid aſide all ſuperfluity of former naughtineſs; but this phraſe is interpreted in the Targum of Onkelos, let her nails grow; and ſo the Arabic verſion: and this the Jewiſh writers ſay was ordered to be done, that ſhe might appear ugly and diſagreeable to him, and be abhorred by him; ſo Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Ben Melech; the ſame is obſerved by Maimonides [l], and is the ſenſe of R. Akiba [m]. Another of their writers [n] thinks it refers to a cuſtom in ſome nations to dye their nails. "The daughters of the heathens (he ſays) uſed to adorn the nails of their hands and feet, and dye them with various colours, according to the cuſtom of the Iſhmaelites (or Turks); that there might be a variety in their hands, and men might look at them, take them and handle them, until the fire of hell, and an evil concupiſcence burned; wherefore this is ordered that they might let them grow, without any preparation or dye." But perhaps this neglect of their nails, and ſuffering them to grow, was in token of mourning as well as ſhaving the head, as alſo ſometimes even paring the nails was done on the ſame account.

℣. 13. And ſhe ſhall put the raiment of her captivity from off her, &c.] Her beautiful garments, and gay apparel, in which ſhe was taken captive; and which tended to ſtir up the ſtronger affection for her, and greater deſire after her; and therefore as ſome think were ordered to be removed, to abate the ardour of love to her. Jarchi obſerves, that the daughters of the Gentiles uſed to adorn themſelves in war, that they might cauſe others to commit fornication with them; and another writer before referred to ſays [o], the daughters of heathens uſed to adorn themſelves in raiment of ſilk, and purple, and fine linnen, and needle-work, to allure and entice men with them; and therefore the law obliges to put off her beautiful garments, and clothe her with old worn-out ones, that ſhe might be leſs agreeable to him; though the putting off her fine clothes, and being clad with ſordid ones, might be only as a token of mourning; as it was cuſtomary at ſuch times to lay aſide richer clothing, and put on ſackcloth, Jon. iii. 6. and ſhall remain in thine houſe; ſhut up there, and never ſtir out, as the ſame writer interprets it. Maimonides [p] ſays, that ſhe was to be with him in the houſe, that going in and out he might ſee her, and ſhe become abominable to him; though perhaps it was only that he might have an opportunity of obſerving her manners, and of converſing with her, in order to make a proſelyte of her; ſo the Targum of Jonathan interprets it of dipping herſelf, and becoming a proſelyteſs in his houſe; or elſe, as the reſt, her abiding in the houſe and not going out, might be on account of mourning, as follows: and bewail her father and her mother a full month; who were either dead in the battle, or however ſhe had no hope of ſeeing them any more, being a captive, and likely to be ſettled in another man's houſe in a foreign country, and ſo take her farewell of her father's houſe in this mournful manner. The Jews are divided about the ſenſe of theſe words; ſome take them ſimply to ſignify her parents, others her idols, according to Jer. ii. 17. The Targum of Jonathan is, "and weep for the idols of the houſe of her father and her mother;" meaning not for the loſs of them, but for the idolatry of her father's houſe ſhe was now convinced of, being become a proſelyteſs, according to the paraphraſt; but the laſt ſeems only to have reſpect to the loſs of her father and mother, which ſhe was to bewail a whole month, or a moon of days [q]; as many days as the moon is going its courſe, which it finiſhes in 27 days, 7 hours, and 43 minutes, and this is called the periodical month; but is longer in paſſing from one conjunction of it with the ſun to another, called the ſynodical month, and its quantity is 29 days, 12 hours, and 44 minutes. Maimonides [r] ſays, ſhe was to ſtay in his houſe three months, one month of mourning, and two after that, and then he was to marry her. The reaſon of this the Targum of Jonathan explains, by paraphraſing the words thus, "and ſhall ſtay three months, that it may be known whether ſhe is with child;" that is, by his lying with her before when taken with her beauty, that ſo he might diſtinguiſh this child begotten on her in heatheniſm, from what he might have by her after marriage, which is ſuppoſed to be the caſe of Tamar and Abſalom; but as there is no foundation in the text for a permiſſion to lye with her before marriage, ſo neither for theſe additional months; only one month was required, which was the uſual time for mourning for deceaſed relations; ſee Numb. xx. 29. Deut. xxxiv. 8. and after that thou ſhalt go in unto her; and not before: and be her huſband, and ſhe ſhall be thy wife; he continuing to love her, and ſhe having become a proſelyteſs.

℣. 14. And it ſhall be, if thou have no delight in her, &c.] Either ſome time after marriage: then thou ſhalt let her go whither ſhe will; by a bill of divorce, as the Targum of Jonathan, who underſtands it in this ſenſe, and as the connexion of the words ſeems to require; or elſe before marriage, at the month's end, or any time before, that if his affections cooled towards her, and all the above methods tended to abate his love of her, then he was obliged to diſmiſs her, or to grant her her freedom, and let her go wherever ſhe pleaſed; ſhe was no longer his captive, nor his ſervant: but thou ſhalt not ſell her at all for money; as he might have done if he had not made ſuch a propoſal to her, and obliged her to the obſervance of ſuch rites and ceremonies as he did, in order to make her his wife: thou ſhalt not make merchandize of her; which ſeems to expreſs the ſame thing, and therefore ſomething elſe is rather intended; as that he ſhould neither make any gain of her by ſelling her to another, nor retain her in his own ſervice, nor make uſe of her as a ſlave; ſo Jarchi ſays, that in the Perſian language they call ſervice by this word, and which alſo he ſays he learnt from an eminent writer of theirs, R. Moſes Hadarſan; with which Maimonides [s] agrees, who explains it, ſhall make no uſe of her ſervice, or ſerve himſelf by her; he ſhould have no profit by her, either by ſale, or ſervitude: becauſe thou haſt humbled her; which phraſe it muſt be owned is often uſed of unlawful commerce with a woman, of defiling her, or violating her chaſtity; and ſo may ſeem to confirm the notion of thoſe who think that he lay with her before he took her to his houſe, and therefore upon a refuſal to marry her afterwards, was obliged to this loſs; though though the word signifies any kind of affliction, as this was a very great one, a great mortification to her, to be taken into his houſe, to have her head ſhaved, and her nails pared, or ſuffered to grow, and her fine clothes changed for ſordid ones; and all this with a profeſſion of a deſign to marry her, and yet after all is deceived and diſappointed by him; wherefore for ſuch a conduct toward her he was obliged to give her her freedom.

ẏ. 15. If a man have two wives, &c.] Which is ſuppoſed, but not approved of, though permitted becauſe of the hardneſs of men's hearts; for it was not ſo from the beginning, when only one man and one woman were created, and joined together in marriage; but as it was connived at, and become cuſtomary, a law is made to prevent confuſion, and preſerve order in families: one beloved, and another hated; or leſs loved, yet continued his wife, and not divorced. Aben Ezra obſerves, this follows upon the former, becauſe it is there ſaid, that though firſt he had a deſire to her (the captive beautiful woman) yet afterwards had no delight in her: and they have borne him children both, the beloved and the hated; as Rachel and Leah did to Jacob, who were, the one very much beloved by him, and the other leſs: and if the firſt-born ſon be hers that was hated; or not ſo much beloved as the other, as was the caſe in the above inſtance.

ẏ. 16. Then it ſhall be when he maketh his ſons to inherit that which he hath, &c.] By a will in writing, or by word of mouth, or by a deed of gift, actually beſtowing his goods upon them, and dividing among them what he is for the preſent poſſeſſed of; ſee Luke xv. 12. that he may not make the ſon of the beloved firſt-born, before the ſon of the hated, which is indeed the firſt-born; that is, when ſuch is the caſe, that the ſon of his wife he has the leaſt value for is really his firſt-born, he may not through favour and affection to the wife he loves better, prefer her ſon, and declare him to be the firſt-born, by deviſing to him or beſtowing on him the double portion of his goods; for ſo to do would not be right, or agreeable to the will and law of God; for though previous to this law the birth-right was given to Joſeph, the eldeſt ſon of Rachel, the moſt beloved wife of Jacob, before Reuben who was the ſon of Leah, leſs beloved by him, and was in fact his firſt-born; yet this was owing to the ſin of Reuben, and by the appointment of God; ſee Gen. xlix. 3, 4. 1 Chron. v. 2, 3.

ẏ. 17. But he ſhall acknowledge the ſon of the hated for the firſt-born, &c.] Own him and declare him to be ſo, both by his will and the diviſion of goods by him; or he ſhall ſeparate him, as Onkelos; diſtinguiſh him from all his other ſons, and make known to all, as the Targum of Jonathan, that he is his firſt-born: by giving him a double portion of all that he hath; or, that is found with him[t]; which he was in the poſſeſſion of when he made his will, or divided his goods; and ſo refers not to what might come into his hands afterwards, or ſhould be his in reverſion afterwards; in this the firſt-born had not his double portion, only in what his father was for the preſent poſſeſſed of; ſo that if a man had two ſons, his goods were divided into three parts, and the firſt-born took two parts, and the other the third; if three ſons, they were divided into four parts, of which the firſt-born had two parts, and the others each of them one; if four ſons, they were divided into five parts, and the firſt-born took two, and the other three one a piece, and ſo in proportion; the diviſion was made according to their number: for he is the beginning of his ſtrength; as Jacob ſaid of Reuben, Gen. xlix. 3. ſee the note there: the right of the firſt-born is his; before this law was given, there was a birth-right, or a privilege belonging to the firſt-born, which gave him the pre-eminence in the family to his brethren; but whether he was entitled to a double portion of goods, previous to this law, is not certain; however, by this it was his right, and might not be alienated from him; for, according to the Jewiſh canons [u], "if a man ſay, ſuch an one my ſon, the firſt-born, ſhall not take the double portion, and my ſon ſuch an one ſhall not inherit with his brethren, he ſays nothing, becauſe he diſpoſes contrary to what is written in the law." This law of the firſt-born in the myſtery of it may reſpect our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the firſt-born of God, and the firſt-born of Mary; and who had a double portion of the gifts and grace of the Spirit, or rather the Spirit without meaſure, the oil of gladneſs he was anointed with above his fellows, and is the firſt-born among many brethren, among whom in all things he has the pre-eminence; and alſo the elect of God, the church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven, who have a double portion, both temporal and ſpiritual things, the promiſe of this life and that to come, grace here and glory hereafter; and the ultimate glory is but one inheritance, they all ſhare alike in, being equally children, and all firſt-born; and it may have regard alſo to the Jewiſh and Gentile churches, the former was the beloved wife, the latter ſome time not beloved, and yet the children of the Gentile church have a larger meaſure of the Spirit, than thoſe of the Jewiſh church had; ſee Rom. ix. 25.

ẏ. 18. If a man have a ſtubborn and rebellious ſon, &c.] It is obſerved [w] that this law quickly follows, and is ſubjoined to that which relates to the marriage of a woman taken captive, becauſe often from ſuch marriages, wicked and refractory children have ſprung, and which they exemplify in the caſe of Abſalom, whoſe mother they ſay David took in war and married: the character of ſuch a ſon follows, and by which it may be known that he is ſtubborn and rebellious; ſtubborn in his nature, and rebellious in his actions; behaves contrary to the laws of God, and the inſtructions of his parents; what he ſhould do that he does not, and what he ſhould not do that he does; will not do what is commanded him, and will do what is forbidden him, notwithſtanding all counſels, admonitions and corrections given him: which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother; is diſobedient to the commands of either of them; ſee Prov. xxx. 17. and when they have chaſtened him will not hearken to them; when they have reproved him by words, and corrected him with blows; the Jews underſtand this of ſcourging or beating by the order of the Sanhedrim, after admonition given; it is ſaid [x], "they admoniſh him before three, (a court of judicature conſiſting of three judges) and they beat him; but it ſeems rather to reſpect private corrections of their own by words and ſtripes, which, having no effect, they were to proceed as follows.

℣. 19. Then ſhall his father and his mother lay hold on him, &c.] With their own hands, or cauſe him to be apprehended by others, in which they were to agree, and which the Jews gather from hence; "if, ſay they, [y] the father is willing, (to bring him to juſtice) and the mother not willing, if his father is not willing and the mother is willing, he is not reckoned a ſtubborn or rebellious ſon, until they both agree:" and bring him out unto the elders of his city; according to the Miſnah [z], the Sanhedrim, or court of judicature, conſiſting of twenty-three; for they ſay, that after he has been admoniſhed and ſcourged by order of the bench of three, if he returns to his corrupt and wicked ways again, he is judged by the court of twenty-three: and unto the gate of his place; or, city, where the court ſat; ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, to the gate of the Sanhedrim of his place.

℣. 20. And they ſhall ſay unto the elders of his city, &c.] In open court what follows, at the ſame time, according to the Targum of Jonathan, acknowledging their own ſins, for which ſuch a calamity had befallen them, ſaying, "we have tranſgreſſed the decree of the word of the Lord, becauſe is born unto us a ſon that is ſtubborn, &c." ſee John ix. 2. this our ſon is ſtubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; one of an obſtinate diſpoſition, will have his own will and way, is perverſe and refractory; honours not, but deſpiſes his parents, and is diſobedient to their commands, unruly and ungovernable: the Jews gather [a] many things from hence, for which there is little foundation, as that they muſt be neither dumb, nor blind, nor deaf; though what they further obſerve, is not much amiſs, concerning this rebellious child, that the law reſpects a ſon and not a daughter, becauſe a daughter generally is more tractable, and leſs capable of doing miſchief than a ſon; and a ſon and not a man, for if at man's eſtate, and for himſelf, he is not under the power of his parents; and yet not a child or a little one, for that is not comprehended in the commands; he muſt be according to them thirteen years of age and one day, and he muſt be a ſon and not a father [b]: he is a glutton and a drunkard; which, according to the Miſnah [c], is one that eats half a pound of fleſh, and drinks half a log of Italian wine; R. Joſe ſays, a pound of fleſh and a log of wine; but the deciſion was not according to him; the firſt rule ſtood: now half a pound of fleſh, and half a log of wine, which was about three egg-ſhells, or a quarter of a pint, would be at this day reckoned very little by our grandſons of Bacchus, as Schickard obſerves [d]; but in an age of ſeverer diſcipline, as he ſays, in the tender candidates of temperance, it was reckoned too much, and was a preſage of a future glutton: and it muſt be further obſerved to denominate him a rebellious ſon, what he eat and drank was to be what he ſtole from his parents, and did not eat and drink it at home, but abroad, and in bad company; ſo Jarchi remarks on the text, he is not guilty until he ſteals, and eats half a pound of fleſh, and drinks half a log of wine; in which he ſeems to have reſpect to the Jewiſh canon [e], "if he ſteals from his father and eats it in a place in his father's power, or from others and eats it in a place in their power, or from others and eats it in a place in his father's power; he is not reckoned a ſtubborn and rebellious ſon, unleſs he ſteals from his father, and eats it in a place in the power of others," ſee Prov. xxiii. 20. the Jews ſeem to refer to this when they charged Chriſt with being a glutton and a wine-bibber, Matt. xi. 19. being deſirous of having him thought as ſuch an one.

℣. 21. And all the men of his city ſhall ſtone him with ſtones that he die, &c.] The populace; that is, after his trial is finiſhed, and he is condemned to die; and he was not ſtoned until the three firſt judges were there (by whom he was admoniſhed, and ordered to be beaten) as it is ſaid, this is our ſon, this is he that was beaten before you [f]; and according to the Targum of Jonathan, "if he feared (God, and ſhewed any token of repentance) and received inſtruction, and they (his parents) deſired to preſerve him alive, they preſerved him; but if he refuſed and was rebellious, then they ſtoned him;" but the Jews ſay this law, and that of retaliation, were never put into execution: ſo ſhalt thou put away evil from among you; put a ſtop to, and prevent ſuch an evil for the future, and remove the guilt of it; or as the Targum of Jonathan, him that doeth that evil: and all Iſrael ſhall hear and fear; it being to be publickly notified throughout the land, that ſuch an one ſuffered death for ſuch a crime, which would be a means of deterring others from the ſame; ſo Jarchi remarks, "here, ſays he, a proclamation was neceſſary to be made by the Sanhedrim, as that ſuch an one was ſtoned becauſe he was ſtubborn and rebellious;" for the myſtical ſenſe of this ſee Eph. ii. 2. Col. iii. 6.

℣. 22. And if a man have committed a ſin worthy of death, &c.] This before mentioned, or any other that deſerves death, any kind of death, as ſtrangling, killing with the ſword, burning and ſtoning, to which the Jews reſtrain it here: and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree; is condemned to ſtoning, and after that they hang him, as the Targum of Jonathan; and according to the Jewiſh Rabbins, as Jarchi obſerves, all that were ſtoned were to be hanged, and only men, not women [g]; for it is remarked that it is ſaid him and not her [h]: about this there is a diſpute in the Miſnah [i]; "all that are ſtoned are hanged, they are the words of R. Eliezer; but the wiſe men ſay none are to be hanged but the blaſphemer and idolater; a man is to be hanged with his face to the people, a woman with her face to the tree, they are the words of R. Eliezer; but the wiſe men ſay, a man is to be hanged, but not a woman, to whom R. Eliezer replied, did not Simeon Ben Shetach hang women in Aſhkelon? thy anſwered him, he hung eighty women (at once) but they don't judge or condemn two in a day;" ſo that this was a particular caſe at a particular time, and not to be drawn into an example: in the ſame place it is aſked, "how they hang one? they fix a beam in the earth, and a piece of wood goes out of it (near the top of it, as one of the commentators [k] remarks) and join his two hands together and hang him;" that is, by his hands, not by his neck, as with us, but rather in the manner of crucifixion; only in that the hands are ſpread, and one hand is faſtened to one part of the croſs-beam, and the other to the other end.

the tree, &c.] Which is to be underſtood of any and every one that was hanged, and not of the rebellious ſon only; of whom Joſephus [l] ſays, that he was to be ſtoned by the multitude without the city, and having remained a whole day for a ſpectacle unto all, was to be buried at night; and indeed ſuch a perſon was not to remain hanging on the tree any part of the night, but to be taken down at ſun-ſetting; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "ye ſhall bury him at ſun-ſetting;" ſo ſays Maimonides [m], they hang a man near the ſetting of the ſun and looſe him immediately, and if he continues they tranſgreſs a negative precept, his body ſhall not remain, &c. yea according to him and to the Miſnah [n], and which agrees with the practice of the Jews to this day, not only thoſe that were put to death by the Sanhedrim, but whoever ſuffered his dead to remain unburied a night, tranſgreſſed a negative command, unleſs he kept him for his honour, to get for him a coffin and ſhroud: but thou ſhalt in any wiſe bury him in that day; by all means if poſſible; malefactors were not buried in the ſepulchre of their fathers, but there were two burying-places provided by the Sanhedrim, one for thoſe that were ſtoned and burnt, and another for thoſe that were killed with the ſword and ſtrangled [o]; and even the inſtruments of their death were to be buried alſo, as Maimonides [p] relates, the tree on which he is hanged is buried with him, that there may be no remembrance of the evil, and they ſay, this is the tree on which ſuch an one was hanged; and ſo the ſtone with which he is ſtoned, and the ſword with which he is killed, and the napkin with which he is ſtrangled, all are buried in the place where he is put to death, but not in the grave itſelf: for he that is hanged is accurſed of God; plainly appears to be ſo, having committed ſome foul ſin which has brought the curſe of God upon him, and which being hanged on a tree was a plain proof and declaration of; and therefore having hereby ſuffered the rigor of the law, the curſe of it, his body was ordered to be taken down; for the words are not a reaſon of his being hanged, but a reaſon why being hanged and ſo openly accurſed, he ſhould not remain hanging, but be taken down and buried: the meaning is not as Onkelos gives it, that "becauſe he ſinned before the Lord he is hanged," and particularly was guilty of blaſphemy; which is given as the reaſon of his being hanged, and as the ſenſe of this paſſage; on the mention of which 'tis ſaid [q], "it is as if he ſhould ſay, wherefore is he hanged? becauſe he curſed God, and the name of God was found prophaned:" but though this, or any other capital crime, may be allowed to be the reaſon of the man's being hanged, and ſo apparently accurſed; yet this is not the reaſon of his being looſed from thence, but his having bore the curſe and ſatisfied the law: and hence this is applied to Chriſt by the apoſtle, in Gal. iii. 13. ſhewing, that his hanging on the tree was an indication and proof of his being made ſin and a curſe for his people, or that he bore the curſe of the law for their ſins, and that the taking of him down from the tree and burying him, ſignified the removing the curſe from him and his people for whom he ſuffered; or that thereby he redeemed them from the curſe of the law, as the apoſtle expreſſes it: that thy land be not defiled, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance; which is another reaſon for taking down the body from the tree and burying it, leſt the land of Canaan, which the Lord had given them for an inheritance, and which was typical of the undefiled inheritance, 1 Pet. i. 4. ſhould be polluted, both in a natural ſenſe, through the putrefaction and corruption, and the diſagreeable ſmell of a dead body, and in a ceremonial ſenſe, as every carcaſe was defiling, if a perſon but entered where it was; and therefore a dead body was not to be left hanging openly in the air, and rotting there.

CHAP. XXII.

IN this chapter are various laws, concerning care of a neighbour's cattle gone aſtray or in diſtreſs, and of any thing loſt by him, ℣. 1—4. forbidding one ſex to wear the apparel of another, ℣. 5. and the taking away of the dam with the young found in a bird's neſt, ℣. 6, 7. ordering battlements to be made in a new houſe, ℣. 8. prohibiting mixtures in ſowing, ploughing, and in garments, ℣. 9, 10, 11. requiring fringes on the four quarters of a garment, ℣. 12. fining a man that ſlanders his wife, upon producing the tokens of her virginity, ℣. 13—19. but if theſe cannot be produced, then orders are given that ſhe be put to death, ℣. 20—21. then follow other laws, puniſhing with death the adulterer and adultereſs, and one that hath raviſhed a betrothed damſel, ℣. 22—27. amercing a perſon that lies with a virgin not betrothed and ſhe conſenting, and obliging him to marry her, and not ſuffering him to divorce her, ℣. 28—29. and another againſt a man's lying with his father's wife, ℣. 30.

not ſoon and eaſily be informed of his cattle, or they be ſent to him: or if thou know him not; the owner of them, what is his name, or where he lives: then thou ſhalt bring it into thine houſe; not into his dwelling-houſe, but ſome out-houſe, barn or ſtable: and it ſhall be with thee; remain in his cuſtody, and be taken care of by him; and, as the Targum of Jonathan ſays, "be fed and nouriſhed by him;" for, according to the Jewiſh canon [s], whatſoever could work and eat, that ſhould work and eat, and whatſoever did not work and eat, was to be ſold; for which there was a ſet time, as the commentators ſay [t], for large cattle, as oxen, 12 months; for leſſer cattle, as ſheep, goats, &c. 3 months; here it is fixed, until thy brother ſeek after it; though in the mean while the finder was to make uſe of means, whereby the owner might be informed of it; for whatſoever was loſt, in which were marks and ſigns by which enquiries might be made, were to be proclaimed [u]; (and it is aſked) how long a man was obliged to proclaim? until it was known to his neighbours; ſome ſay (he muſt proclaim it) at three feaſts, and ſeven days after the laſt feaſt, ſo that he may go home three days, and return three days, and proclaim one day; if (the owner) tells what is loſt, but does not tell the marks or ſigns, he may not give it him; and a deceiver, though he tells the ſigns, he may not give it him, as it is ſaid, until thy brother ſeek after it; until thou enquireſt of thy brother whether he is a deceiver or no: and elſewhere it is ſaid [w], formerly if a man loſt any thing, and gave the ſigns or marks of it, he took it; but after deceivers increaſed, it was ordered to be ſaid to him, bring witneſſes that thou art not a deceiver, and take it; and in the ſame place it is obſerved, that there was at Jeruſalem a ſtone, called Eben Toim, the ſtone of ſtrays, and whoever had loſt or found any thing, repaired thither, and gave the ſigns and marks of it, and took it: and thou ſhalt reſtore it to him again; he having made it fully to appear to be his, and having defrayed all expences in advertiſing and keeping it; but if no owner appeared to claim it, or not to ſatisfaction, the finder was to keep it as his own; but otherwiſe he was by all means to reſtore it, or as in ℣. 1. in reſtoring thou ſhalt reſtore them [x], that is certainly reſtore them; and continually wherever it ſo happens: the Jewiſh canon is [y], "if he reſtores it, and afterwards it ſtrays away, and he reſtores it again and it ſtrays away, even though four or five times, he is bound to reſtore it; as it is ſaid, in reſtoring thou ſhalt reſtore them;" Maimonides ſays [z], that even an hundred times he is bound to reſtore them.

℣. 3. In like manner ſhalt thou do with his aſs, &c.] As with his ox or ſheep when aſtray, and found, keep it until it is owned, and then reſtore it; this is expreſsly mentioned in Exod. xxiii. 4. and ſo ſhalt thou do with his raiment; if that is loſt and found, it muſt be reſtored to the owner, he deſcribing it; a garment is particularly mentioned, it is ſaid [a], becauſe in every garment there is a mark or ſign by which the owners can enquire about it; for it is made by the hands of men, and does not come from any thing common: and with all loſt thing of thy brother's, which he hath loſt, and thou haſt found, ſhalt thou do likewiſe; this comprehends every thing that is loſt, that is properly ſo; it is aſked [b], "What is a loſt thing? if a man finds an ox or a cow feeding in the way, this is not a loſt thing; an aſs whoſe inſtruments are inverted, and a cow running among the vineyards, this is a loſt thing:" thou mayeſt not hide thyſelf; from ſeeing it and taking care of it, in order to reſtore it to the right owner; or diſſemble a ſight of it, and pretend he never ſaw it, and ſo entirely neglect it. In ſome inſtances the Jews allow they were not obliged to take any notice or care of it, as, "if a man find a cow in a cow-houſe, (which is not ſhut) he is not obliged (to take care of it); if in a public place, he is obliged; if it is in a burying-ground he mayn't defile himſelf for it [c]."

℣. 4. Thou ſhalt not ſee thy brother's ox or his aſs fall down by the way, &c.] And lye under his burden, not being able to riſe with it of himſelf, nor with all the aſſiſtance about it, without further help: and hide thyſelf from them; cover thine eyes, or turn them another way, and make as if thou didſt not ſee them in diſtreſs: thou ſhalt ſurely help him to lift them up again; that is, help the brother and owner of it, the ox and aſs; aſſiſt him in getting them up again, and lay on their burden, and faſten them aright, which either were rolled off by the fall, or were obliged to be taken off in order to raiſe them up; and if this was to be done for an enemy, then much more for a brother, as is required, Exod. xxiii. 5. ſee the note there; or lifting up, thou ſhalt lift them up with him [d]; that is, moſt certainly do it, and lift with all his ſtrength, and as often as there is occaſion; if they fell down again after raiſed up, help is ſtill to be continued, even as Maimonides [e] ſays, though it was an hundred times.

℣. 5. The woman ſhall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, &c.] It being very unſeemly and impudent, and contrary to the modeſty of her ſex; or there ſhall not be upon her any inſtrument of a man [f], any utenſil of his which he makes uſe of in his trade and buſineſs; as if ſhe was employed in it, when her buſineſs was not to do the work of men, but to take care of her houſe and family; and ſo this law may be oppoſed to the cuſtoms of the Egyptians, as is thought, from whom the Iſraelites were lately come; whoſe women, as Herodotus [g] relates, uſed to trade and merchandize abroad, whilſt the men kept at home; and the word alſo ſignifies armour [h], as Onkelos renders it; and ſo here forbids women putting on a military habit and going with men to war, as was uſual with the eaſtern women; and ſo Maimonides [i] illuſtrates it, by putting a mitre or an helmet on her head, and cloathing herſelf with a coat of mail; and in like manner Joſephus [k] explains it, "take heed, eſpecially in war, that a woman do not make uſe of the habit of a man, or a man that of a woman"; nor is he to be found fault with ſo much as he is by a learned writer [l], ſince he does not reſtrain it wholly to war, though he thinks it may have a ſpecial regard to that; for no doubt the law reſpects the times of peace as well as war, in neither of which ſuch a practice ſhould obtain: but the Targum of Jonathan very wrongly limits it to the wearing fringed garments, and to phylacteries, which belonged to men: neither ſhall a man put on a woman's garment; which would betray effeminacy and ſoftneſs unbecoming men, and would lead the way to many impurities, by giving an opportunity of mixing with women, and ſo to commit fornication and adultery with them; to prevent which and to preſerve chaſtity this law ſeems to be made; and ſince in nature a difference of ſexes is made, it is proper and neceſſary that this ſhould be known by difference of dreſs, or otherwiſe many evils might follow; and this precept is agreeable to the law and light of nature: it is obſerved by an heathen writer [m], that there is a two-fold diſtribution of the law, the one written, the other not written; what we uſe in civil things is written, what is from nature and uſe is unwritten, as to walk naked in the market, or to put on a woman's garment: and change of the cloaths of ſexes was uſed among the heathens by way of puniſhment, as of the ſoldiers that deſerted, and of adultereſſes [n]; ſo abominable was it accounted: indeed it may be lawful in ſome caſes, where life is in danger, to eſcape that, and provided chaſtity is preſerved: for all that do ſo are an abomination to the Lord thy God; which is a reaſon ſufficient why ſuch a practice ſhould not be uſed. Some from this clauſe have been led to conclude, that reſpect is had to ſome cuſtoms of this kind uſed in idolatrous worſhip, which are always abominable to the Lord. So Maimonides [o] obſerves, that in a book of the Zabians, called Tomtom, it is commanded, that a man ſhould wear a woman's garment coloured when he ſtood before the ſtar of Venus, and likewiſe that a woman ſhould put on a coat of mail and warlike armour, when ſhe ſtood before the ſtar of Mars; which he takes to be one reaſon of this law, though beſides that he gives another, becauſe hereby concupiſcence would be excited, and an occaſion for whoredom given: that there was ſome ſuch cuſtoms among the heathens may be confirmed from Macrobius [p], and Servius [q], as has been obſerved by Grotius; the former of which relates, that Philochorus affirmed, that Venus is the moon, and that men ſacrificed to her in womens garments, and women in mens; and for this reaſon, becauſe ſhe was thought to be both male and female; and the latter ſays, there was an image of Venus in Cyprus with a woman's body and garment, and with the ſcepter and diſtinction of a man, to whom the men ſacrificed in womens garments, and women in mens garments; and, as the above learned commentator obſerves, there were many colonies of the Phœnicians in Cyprus, from whom this cuſtom might come; and to prevent it obtaining among the Iſraelites in any degree, who were now coming into their country, it is thought this law was made; for the prieſts of the Aſſyrian Venus made uſe of womens apparel [r], and in the feaſts of Bacchus men diſguiſed themſelves like women [s].

℣. 6. If a bird's neſt chance to be before thee in any tree, or on the ground, &c.] Which are the uſual places in which birds build their neſts; and this, as Jarchi obſerves, excepts ſuch neſts that are prepared, that is, that are purpoſely made for fowls kept at home; and with which agrees the Jewiſh canon, which ſays [t], "the letting go (the dam out of) the neſt is not uſed but of a fowl, and it is not uſed but of what is not prepared; what is that which is not prepared? ſuch as geeſe and hens, whoſe neſt is in an orchard; but if their neſt is in the houſe, and ſo doves kept at home, a man is free from letting (the dam) go"; that is, he is not obliged to let it go; and this is to be underſtood of clean birds only; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "the neſts of clean birds"; agreeable to the ſame canons and the explanation of them [u], "an unclean bird is free from letting go; ſo an unclean bird that ſits upon the eggs of a clean bird, alſo a clean bird that ſits upon the eggs of an unclean bird, are free from letting go," or perſons are not obliged to let ſuch go: whether they be young ones or eggs; that are in the neſt; and the Jewiſh canon is [w], "if there is but one young one, or one egg, a man is obliged to let go the dam, as it is ſaid a neſt: a neſt is a word of a large ſenſe: and the dam ſitting upon the young or upon eggs, thou ſhalt not take the dam with the young; according to the above canon; "if ſhe is flying at the time her wings reach the neſt, a man is bound to let her go; but if her wings touch not the neſt, he is free from letting her go—if the young ones are capable of flying, or the eggs rotten, he is free from letting her go, as it is ſaid, and the dam ſitting, &c. as the young are alive, ſo the eggs muſt be firm and ſound, rotten ones are excepted; and as eggs have need of their dam, ſo the young have need of their dam; thoſe (therefore) that can fly are excepted:" the dam is not to be taken with her young upon any account; yea it is ſaid [x], not even to cleanſe a leper; and whoever does take her is to be beaten: this law was made partly to preſerve the ſpecies of birds, and prevent the decreaſe of them; for a dam let go might breed again, and to this purpoſe are the verſes aſcribed to Phocylides [y], which contain the ſubſtance of this law, and this reaſon of it; and partly, as Maimonides obſerves [z], that the dam might not be afflicted at the ſight of the ſpoil of her young; for this law does not prohibit the taking of her in any other place but in her neſt, nor after her young are taken, but not together; and, as the ſame writer remarks, if the law would have ſuch care taken of beaſts and birds, that they might be freed from ſorrow and diſtreſs, how much more of man? Wherefore the intention of this law is to teach humanity, compaſſion and pity in men to one another, and to forbid cruelty, covetouſneſs, and ſuch like vices; as alſo to inſtruct in the doctrine of providence, which has a reſpect to birds; and our Lord may be thought to have this law in view, Luke xii. 6.

℣. 7. But thou ſhalt in any wiſe let the dam go, and take the young to thee, &c.] Or in letting go, let go, or in ſending, ſend away [a]; that is willingly, certainly, entirely, frequently, always; ſo the Jewiſh canons [b], "if any one lets her go, and ſhe returns, even four or five times, he is obliged to let her go, as it is ſaid, in letting go, let go;" nay, Maimonides ſays [c], even a thouſand times; the canon proceeds, "if any one ſays, Lo, I take the dam and let go the young, he is obliged to let her go; if he takes the young, and returns them again to the neſt, and after that returns the dam to them, he is free from letting her go:" that it may be well with with thee, and that thou mayeſt prolong thy days; the Targum of Jonathan is, "that it may be well with thee in this world, and thou mayeſt prolong thy days in the world to come:" the ſame bleſſing that is promiſed to obſervers of the fifth command, which is one of the weightier matters of the law, is made to this; which the Jews ſay [w] is but as the value of a farthing, or of little account in compariſon of others; wherefore, as Fagius rightly obſerves [x], God, in beſtowing ſuch rewards, has regard not to the works of men, but to his own grace and kindneſs; for what merit can there be in letting go or preſerving the life of a little bird?

℣. 8. When thou buildeſt a new houſe, &c.] Which is to be underſtood of a houſe to dwell in, not of a granary, barn, or ſtable, or ſuch like, and every houſe that is not four cubits ſquare, as Maimonides obſerves [y]: then thou ſhalt make a battlement for thy roof; in the Talmud [z] it is aſked, What is the meaning of, or why is it ſaid, thy roof? to except ſynagogues and ſchools; the gloſs upon which is, Synagogues, &c. don't belong to any ſingle perſon, and beſides are no dwelling-place. A battlement, as Jarchi deſcribes it, was a fence round the roof; or, as more fully deſcribed by Kimchi [a], it was an edifice made for a roof round about it, ten hands high, or more, that a perſon might not fall from it; ſo Ben Melech from him. The reaſon of this law was, becauſe the roofs of houſes in thoſe countries were flat, on which they uſed to walk for diverſion and recreation, or retire for devotion, meditation, prayer, and ſocial converſation; ſuch they were in the times of the Canaanites, Joſh. ii. 6. and in the times of Saul and David, 1 Sam. ix. 25. 2 Sam. xi. 2. and xvi. 21. and in the times of the new teſtament; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 27. and xxiv. 17. Mark ii. 4. Acts x. 9. and ſo in later times, and to this day. Rauwolff [b], a traveller in thoſe parts, relates, that at Tripoli in Phœnicia, "they have low houſes, ill built, and flat at the top, as they are generally in the eaſt; for they cover their houſes with a flat roof or floor, ſo that you may walk about as far as the houſes go, and the neighbours walk over the tops of their houſes to viſit one another; and ſometimes in the ſummer they ſleep on the top of them." Now to prevent falling from thence, and miſchief thereby, ſuch a battlement as before deſcribed was ordered: that thou bring not blood upon thy houſe; be not the occaſion of blood being ſhed, or contract guilt of blood through negligence of ſuch a proviſion the law directs to; the guilt of man-ſlaughter, or of ſhedding innocent blood in thy houſe, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; hence the Talmudiſts [c] extend this to other things, and by this law alſo they ſuppoſe men are bound to guard againſt all dangers in any other way; as if a man had a well or pit of water in his court-yard, he ought either to put a cover over it, or to make a fence round it as high as this battlement [d]: if any man fall from thence; that is, if a man walking on the roof of an houſe, ſhould make a ſlip or a falſe ſtep, and ſtumble and reel, and ſo be falling, and fall from thence; which might have been prevented, even his falling from thence or to the ground, if ſuch a battlement had been made.

℣. 9. Thou ſhalt not ſow thy vineyards with divers ſeeds, &c.] As wheat and barley between the rows of the vines; and this is to be underſtood only of divers ſorts of corn, and of divers ſorts of herbs, but not of trees; hence we read of a fig-tree in a vineyard, Luke xiii. 6. ſee the note there: and this only reſpects what is ſown with deſign, and not what is caſual, as the Jews interpret it [e]; "if a man paſſes through a vineyard, and ſeeds fall from him, or they are carried out along with dung, or with water; or when a man is ſowing, and a ſtorm of wind carries it behind him, (i. e. to a vineyard behind him) it is lawful"; that is, it may be let grow, and the fruit of it enjoyed; the ſame here is ſaid of the vineyard, as of the field in Lev. xix. 19. ſee the note there: leſt the fruit of thy ſeed which thou haſt ſown, and the fruit of thy vineyard be defiled; that is, leſt not only the increaſe of theſe divers ſeeds ſown, but alſo the increaſe of the vines among which they are ſown, become unlawful, and unfit for uſe, and ſo a loſs of all be ſuſtained: the Targum of Jonathan is, "leſt it be condemned to burning;" or, thou art obliged to burn it; for, according to the Jewiſh canons [f], the mixtures of a vineyard, or the divers ſeeds of it, and the increaſe thereof, were to be burnt; and the commentators of the Miſnah [g] frequently explain this phraſe by leſt it be burnt.

℣. 10. Thou ſhalt not plow with an ox and an aſs together, &c.] They might be uſed ſeparately, but not together; nor was it uncommon in ſome countries for aſſes to be employed in plowing as well as oxen. Pliny [h] makes mention of ſome fruitful land in Africa, which when it was dry weather could not be plowed by oxen, but after ſhowers of rain might be plowed by a mean little aſs; ſo Leo Africanus [i] ſays, the Africans only uſe horſes and aſſes in plowing. The reaſon why they were not to be put together, was either (as ſome think) leſt the law ſhould be broken which forbids the gendering of cattle with a divers kind, Lev. xix. 19. but Aben Ezra thinks the reaſon is, becauſe the ſtrength of an aſs is not equal to the ſtrength of an ox; and therefore he ſuppoſes this law is made from the mercy and commiſeration of God extended to all his creatures; though perhaps the better reaſon is, becauſe the one was a clean creature, and the other an unclean, and this inſtance is put for all others; and with which agree the Jewiſh canons, which run thus, "cattle with cattle, wild beaſts with wild beaſts, unclean with unclean, clean with clean, (i. e. theſe may be put together); but unclean with clean, and clean with unclean, are forbidden to plow with, to draw with, or to be led together [k]." The myſtery of this is, that godly and ungodly perſons are not to be yoked together in religious fellowſhip; ſee 2 Cor. vi. 14.

℣. 11. Thou ſhalt not wear a garment of divers ſorts, &c.] The Jews ſay nothing is forbidden under the name of ſorts, but what is ſpun and wove, as it is ſaid, thou ſhalt not wear ſhеatnez, a thing that is carded, ſpun, and wove [l]; which Ainſworth tranſlates linſie woolſie, and is explained by what follows: as of woollen and linen together; of which ſee the note on Lev. xix. 19. whereas Joſephus [m] obſerves, this was granted to the prieſts only only to wear ſuch garments, Bochart [n] affirms it to be falſe; but that great man is miſtaken; the blue, purple, and ſcarlet, in the prieſts garments, were no other than died wool; and it is a ſentiment in general received by the Jews, that the prieſts wore no other but woollen and linen in their ſervice; ſee the note on the above place; otherwiſe this law is ſo ſtrictly obſerved, as not to ſew a woollen garment with linen thread, and ſo on the contrary [o].

℣. 12. Thou ſhalt make thee fringes, &c.] Tho' a different word is here uſed from that in Numb. xv. 38. yet the ſame things are intended, and Onkelos tranſlates both by one and the ſame word, and which is no other than a corruption of the Greek word uſed in Matt. xxiii. 5. Though there have been ſome whom Aben Ezra takes notice of, who ſuppoſed that this is a law by itſelf, and to be obſerved in the night, as that in Numb. xv. 38. was in the day; but theſe he warmly oppoſes, and calls them liars: upon the four quarters of thy veſture, wherewith thou covereſt thyſelf; upon the four ſkirts of the uppermoſt veſture called Talith; ſee the note on Numb. xv. 38.

℣. 13. If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her;] That is, marries a wife, and cohabits with her as man and wife, and after ſome time diſlikes her, and is deſirous of parting with her, and therefore takes the following wicked method to obtain it: this is to be underſtood of a virgin taken to wife, as the Targum of Jonathan explains it; and what follows confirms it.

℣. 14. And give occaſions of ſpeech againſt her, &c.] Among her neighbours, who by his behaviour towards her, and by what he ſays of her, will be led in all company and converſation to traduce her character, and ſpeak of her as a very bad woman: and bring up an evil name upon her; take away her good name, and give her a bad one; defame her, and make her appear ſcandalous and reproachful to all that know her: though the Jews underſtand this not of private ſlander, but of bringing an action againſt her in a public court of judicature, the ſubſtance of which follows: and ſay, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid; the ſenſe is, that he had married her, and when he came to cohabit with her as man and wife, it appeared to him that ſhe was vitiated, and not a pure virgin. This is the charge in court againſt her, the action laid by him; ſo Jarchi obſerves, a man might not ſay this but before a magiſtrate, in a court of judicature, which is thus repreſented by Maimonides [p]; "a man comes to the ſanhedrim, and ſays, this young woman I married, and I did not find her virginities; and when I enquired into the matter, it appeared to me that ſhe had played the whore under me, after I had betrothed her; and theſe are my witneſſes, that ſhe played the whore before them."

℣. 15. Then ſhall the father and the mother of the damſel take, &c.] Power from the court, according to the Targum of Jonathan; having leave and licenſe granted them to do what follows, theſe were to, and would concern themſelves in ſuch an affair, partly for the credit and reputation of their child, and partly for their own honour, who were in danger, as Jarchi obſerves, of coming into contempt for their ill education of her: and bring forth the tokens of the damſel's virginity; the ſheet ſhe lay in when ſhe firſt bedded with her huſband, in her parents poſſeſſion, and kept by them as a witneſs of her purity, ſhould there ever be any occaſion for it: and which were to be brought unto the elders of the city in the gate; which ſat in the gate of the city to try cauſes: the Targum of Jonathan calls it the gate of the ſanhedrim, or court of judicature; and, according to Maimonides [q], this court was the court of twenty-three judges; for this was a capital crime accuſed of, a cauſe relating to life and death, which could not be heard and tried in a leſſer court.

℣. 16. And the damſel's father ſhall ſay unto the elders, &c.] Not her mother; hence we learn, ſays Jarchi, that a woman has not power, (or is not allowed) to ſpeak before men; that is, in public; ſee 1 Cor. xiv. 34. and it was moſt proper for a father to appear in court for her, and defend her; and if ſhe had no parents living, then thoſe that brought her up, her guardians, that had the education of her, and placing her out in marriage, were to undertake her cauſe; or, as Joſephus [r] ſays, thoſe that were next akin to her; or, as Aben Ezra, one appointed by the court: I gave my daughter unto this man to wife; and, by the Jewiſh canons [s], a man might give his daughter in marriage, but a woman might not: and he hateth her; has taken a diſlike to her, and wants to be rid of her, and therefore has brought this infamous action againſt her.

℣. 17. And lo, he hath given occaſion of ſpeech againſt her, &c.] In the neighbourhood where they dwell; has been the cauſe of perſons ſpeaking reproachfully of her, as one of ill fame: ſaying, I found not thy daughter a maid; ſo that it ſeems he ſaid this not only to his neighbours, and before a court of judicature, but to the parents of the damſel: and yet theſe are the tokens of my daughter's virginity; which were brought with him, and produced in open court: and they ſhall ſpread the cloth before the elders of the city; that they might have ocular proof and evidence of the truth of what he ſaid, by having ſpread before them the ſheet ſtained with the blood of her virginity upon her huſband's firſt congreſs with her. It ſeems that the mother, as well as the father, were preſent and concerned in this action; for it is ſaid, they ſhall ſpread; and though the mother might not ſpeak, ſhe was the proper perſon to bring this cloth, and ſpread it; and indeed it was particularly in her care and keeping; for we are told [t], that two perſons called שושבינים the friends of the bride and bridegroom, went firſt into their bed-chamber, and thoroughly examined the bed, whether there was any thing relating to the ſign of virginity, by which one might impoſe upon another; and they ſtood all night keeping watch with great joy and chearfulneſs, as if they had been the guards of a king and queen; (to which is thought the alluſion is in John iii. 29.) their buſineſs was, when the bridegroom and bride came out, to ruſh in immediately, and examine all things again; and knowing and owning the former linen ſheets in which they had lain, took them and delivered them to the mother. Nor need ſpreading ſuch a cloth before the court be thought unlikely becauſe of the indecency of it, when it is obſerved that perſons and things much more filthy came under the cognizance and examination of the prieſts, as leprous, menſtruous, and profluvious perſons, and their reſpective diſorders; nor is it at all improbable, that there ſhould be be ſuch evident tokens as are ſaid to be given, when it is obſerved, eſpecially of the Jewiſh women, at what a tender age they were marriageable, and were frequently married, namely, when twelve years and one day old. And the Africans, as we are told [u], have a cuſtom with them ſimilar to this at a wedding; "a feaſt is prepared, and a certain woman waits without, until the bride is ſain with; and then a linen cloth, ſtained with blood, is reached out to her, which ſhe carries in her hands, and ſhews to the gueſts, crying out with a loud voice that this was a virgin hitherto uncorrupt; then ſhe, with other women, are ſplendidly received, firſt by the parents of the bridegroom, and then of the bride; but if ſhe does not appear to be a virgin, ſhe is returned to her parents under the diſgrace of all, and the marriage made null and void." Indeed there are ſome Jewiſh writers, that interpret this cloth in a parabolical and allegorical ſenſe, and underſtand by it witneſſes that would make the caſe as clear and plain as the ſpreading out a cloth or garment. They ſuppoſe that before the damſel was lain with, ſhe was examined by ſeveral matrons, who declaring her to be a virgin, gave it under their hands in writing to her parents, which they were capable of producing in court when there was occaſion for it; ſo Jarchi ſays, this is a parable; the meaning is, they made things as clear and as plain as a new cloth; with which agrees the Talmud [w] he ſeems to have taken it from, where on theſe words, and they ſhall ſpread the cloth, this remark is made; but the literal ſenſe ſeems beſt.

℣. 18. And the elders of that city ſhall take the man, and chaſtiſe him;] Not with words, but blows. Jarchi interprets it of beating, and ſo does the Talmud [x]; and both the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render it, "ſhall beat him;" that is, with the beating or ſcourging of forty ſtripes, ſave one.

℣. 19. And they ſhall amerce him in an hundred ſhekels of ſilver, &c.] Which was about twelve pounds of our money; this was double the dowry he would have been obliged to have given her, if he had put her away; which he might have done with leſs trouble, and with a greater certainty of being rid of her; but being willing to ſave that expence, took this wicked method to accuſe her falſly; and therefore is mulcted double that ſum: and give them unto the father of the damſel; as a ſort of ſatisfaction or reparation for the ſcandal brought upon him and his family; if the damſel was fatherleſs, Maimonides [y] ſays, ſhe was to have them herſelf: becauſe he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin in Iſrael; defamed her among her neighbours and acquaintance, or brought a falſe accuſation againſt her in court; alledging ſhe was not a virgin when he married her, when ſhe was one, which was a very great injury to her character: and ſhe ſhall be his wife, he may not put her away all his days; and ſo he was diſappointed in his view of getting rid of her, and obliged to retain her as his wife, though hated, and was not ſuffered to divorce her as long as he lived; which was permitted and connived at in other men, and which he might have done before, without bringing ſuch a charge againſt her; all which muſt be very mortifying to him, as to be whipped, to pay a fine, keep his wife, and not allowed ever to divorce her.

℣. 20. But if this thing be true, &c.] Which the huſband of the damſel laid to her charge, that ſhe was no virgin when married to him, and ſhe had committed whoredom, of which there was plain proof: and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damſel; by her parents, or thoſe who had the care of her; or no ſufficient reaſon could be aſſigned for the want of them, through any family-defect, or any diſorder of her own; which, as Maimonides [z] ſays, the judges were to enquire into.

℣. 21. Then they ſhall bring out the damſel to the door of her father's houſe, &c.] For his greater diſgrace, and as a ſort of puniſhment for his neglect of her education, not taking care to inſtruct her, and bring her up in a better manner: and the men of her city ſhall ſtone her with ſtones that ſhe die; which was the death this ſort of adultereſſes were put to; others was by ſtrangling, and the daughter of a prieſt was to be burnt; ſee Lev. xx. 10. and xxi. 9. which ſhews that this ſin was committed by her after her eſpouſals, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra note; or otherwiſe it would have been only ſimple fornication, which was not puniſhable with death: becauſe ſhe hath wrought folly in Iſrael; a ſin, as all ſin is folly, and eſpecially any notorious one, as this was; and which is aggravated by its being done in Iſrael, among a people profeſſing the true religion, and whom God had choſen and ſeparated from all others to be a holy people to himſelf: to play the whore in her father's houſe; where ſhe continued after her eſpouſals, until ſhe was taken to the houſe of her huſband, to conſummate the marriage; and between the one and the other was this ſin committed, and which is another reaſon for her execution at the door of her father's houſe: ſo ſhalt thou put evil away from among you; deter others from it by ſuch an example, and remove the guilt of it from them, which otherwiſe would lie upon them, if puniſhment was not inflicted; the Targum of Jonathan interprets it of the putting away of her that did the evil.

℣. 22. If a man be found lying with a woman married to an huſband, &c.] This law reſpects adultery, and is the ſame with that in Lev. xx. 10. then they ſhall both of them die; with the ſtrangling of a napkin, as the Targum of Jonathan, which is the death ſuch perſons were put to; and is always meant when death is ſimply ſpoken of, and it is not ſpecified what death; ſee the note on the above place: both the man that lay with the woman, and the woman; they were both to die, and to die the ſame death: ſo ſhalt thou put away evil from Iſrael; ſuch that do it, as the above Targum; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

℣. 23. If a damſel that is a virgin be betrothed unto an huſband, &c.] But not married, not as yet brought home to her huſband's houſe, and the marriage conſummated; for the Jews diſtinguiſh between being betrothed or eſpouſed, and married; and generally there was ſome time between the one and the other. And a wife was obtained in this way by three things; by money, which was the moſt uſual, and by writing, which was to be done before witneſſes, and with her conſent; and by copulation, which, though valid, was not ſo much approved of [a]. There is a whole treatiſe in the Miſnah, called Kidduſhin, or Eſpouſals, which largely treats of this matter: and a man find her in the city, and lie with her; with her conſent, as might be preſumed by her not crying out, when, had had ſhe, ſhe might have been heard, being in a city; and her being there alſo makes againſt her, ſince being betrothed to a man, ſhe ought to have abode in her father's houſe till her huſband fetched her home, and not to have gadded abroad in the city, where ſhe was expoſed to temptation.

℣. 24. Then ye ſhall bring them both out unto the gate of the city, &c.] Where the fact was committed; the Targum of Jonathan is, "to the gate of the court of judicature, which is in that city:" and ye ſhall ſtone them with ſtones that they die; a man that lay with a married woman, he and ſhe were to be ſtrangled; but this ſort of adulterers and adultereſſes were to be ſtoned, and 'tis thought that of this ſort was the woman ſpoken of in John viii. 3, 4, 5 the damſel becauſe ſhe cried not being in the city, and the man becauſe he hath humbled his neighbour's wife; as ſhe was by eſpouſal, by contract, by promiſe, and ſo was guilty of adultery, which was puniſhable with death: ſo thou ſhalt put away evil from among you; ſee ℣. 21, 22.

℣. 25. But if a man find a betrothed damſel in the field, &c.] Alone, and where ſhe might cry out, and none hear, nor were any to help her: and a man force her, and lie with her; or take faſt and ſtrong hold on her [b]; ſo that ſhe is not able to get out of his hands, and make her eſcape, he being ſtronger than ſhe, and ſo commits a rape upon her: then the man only that lay with her ſhall die; he being guilty of adultery, in lying with a woman eſpouſed to another man, but not ſhe, becauſe ſhe conſented not to it.

℣. 26. But unto the damſel thou ſhalt do nothing, &c.] Neither amerce her, nor beat her, and much leſs puniſh her with death: there is in the damſel no ſin worthy of death; becauſe what was done to her was done without her will and conſent, and was what ſhe was forced to ſubmit unto; but the Targum of Jonathan adds, that the man to whom ſhe was betrothed might diſmiſs her from himſelf by a bill of divorce: for as when a man riſeth againſt his neighbour, and ſlayeth him, even ſo is this matter; as when a man comes unawares upon another, and lays hold on him, and kills him, being ſtronger than he, and none to help; ſo is the caſe of a woman laid hold on by a man in a field, and raviſhed by him, where no help could be had; and depriving a woman of her chaſtity, is like taking away a man's life; from this paſſage Maimonides [c] concludes, that impurities, inceſts, and adulteries, are equal to murder, to capital caſes relating to life and death.

℣. 27. For he found her in the field, &c.] Which is a circumſtance in her favour, from which it might be preſumed, that ſhe was forced, and did not conſent; for had the ſin been committed by agreement, they would doubtleſs have betook themſelves to another place: and the betrothed damſel cried; as it might be concluded from the above circumſtance ſhe did, and as ſhe herſelf declared, and which he could not gainſay, or however diſprove: and there was none to ſave her; to help her againſt him, and deliver her out of his hands.

℣. 28. If a man find a damſel that is a virgin, which is not betrothed, &c.] That is, meets with one in a field, which is not eſpouſed to a man; and the man is ſuppoſed to be an unmarried man, as appears by what follows: and lay hold on her, and lie with her; ſhe yielding to it, and ſo is not expreſſive of a rape, as in ℣. 25. where a different word from this is there uſed; which ſignifies taking ſtrong hold of her, and raviſhing her by force; yet this, though owing to his firſt violent ſeizure of her, and ſo different from what was obtained by enticing words, profeſſions of love, and promiſes of marriage, and the like, as in Exod. xxii. 16, 17: but not without her conſent: and they be found; in the field together, and in the fact; or however there are witneſſes of it, or they themſelves have confeſſed it, and perhaps betrayed by her pregnancy.

℣. 29. Then the man that lay with her ſhall give unto the damſel's father 50 ſhekels of ſilver, &c.] For the abuſe of his daughter; and beſides this was obliged to give her her dowry alſo, as Philo [d] ſays, which is commonly ſaid to be 50 more: and ſhe ſhall be his wife; if her father and ſhe agreed to it; and in ſuch a caſe, the man was not at his liberty to refuſe, be ſhe what ſhe would, agreeable or not, handſome or ugly; he muſt, as the Jews expreſs it, drink out of his pot, or marry her, if ſhe is lame, or blind, or full of ulcers [e]: becauſe he hath humbled her, he may not put her away all his days; to all the other parts of his puniſhment, paying a fine of fifty ſhekels to the damſel's father, a dowry of the ſame ſum to her, obligation to marry her whether he likes her or no, this is added, that he is not allowed to divorce her as long as he lives; which was permitted to other men, and this was wiſely ordered to preſerve chaſtity.

℣. 30. A man ſhall not take his father's wife, &c.] Not marry her, whether his own mother, or a ſtep-mother; or even, as Aben Ezra thinks, any one that was deflowered by his father. Jarchi interprets it of his father's brother's wife, which he was obliged to marry by virtue of the law in Deut. xxv. 5. nor diſcover his father's ſkirt; or lie with her his father had thrown his ſkirt over, or married; and which being the firſt, is mentioned here as a ſample to all the reſt forbidden Lev. xviii. 7. or, as biſhop Patrick expreſſes it, is a ſhort memorandum to make them careful to obſerve all the other laws reſpecting inceſtuous marriages and copulations there delivered.

CHAP. XXIII.

ORDERS are here given to reſtrain certain perſons from entering into the congregation of the Lord, ℣. 1—8. and to take care that there be no unclean perſon in the camp, or any indecent thing done in it, ℣. 9—14. to protect fugitive ſervants, and not deliver them up to their maſters, ℣. 15, 16. not to ſuffer a filthy perſon to be among them, or any filthy thing to be brought into the houſe of God for a vow, ℣. 17, 18. then follow ſome laws againſt uſury, and for the payment of vows, ℣. 19—23. and the chapter is concluded with ſome directions how to behave in a neighbour's vineyard, or ſtanding corn, ℣. 24, 25.

℣. 1. He that is wounded in the ſtones, &c.] In any of them, not accidentally, but purpoſely; which are cruſhed and bruiſed by the hands of men, with a deſign to make him unfit for generation, or to make an eunuch of him: or that hath his privy member cut off; by himſelf or another, and is a thorough eunuch by the hands of men; for of ſuch eunuchs that are made by men, and not born ſo, the law ſpeaks; ſo Maimonides interprets it [f]; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 12. ſhall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; which is to be underſtood not of the ſanctuary of the Lord, or of being refuſed admittance into the church of God, and to join in religious rites, and partake of ſacred ordinances, which all Iſraelites, and ſtrangers that were proſelytes, had a right unto; ſuch might bring their offerings, keep the paſſover, &c. Exod. xii. 48, 49. Lev. xxii. 18. Numb. ix. 14. and xv. 14, 15. nor of the commonwealth of Iſrael, as if unfit to be members of civil ſociety; it cannot be thought that ſuch defects ſhould abridge them of their civil rights and privileges: but by the congregation is to be underſtood the elders, judges, and repreſentatives of the people, that met together in ſome one place to execute judgment; ſee Numb. xxxv. 12, 24, 25. Pſ. lxxxii. 1. into which ſuch perſons were not to be admitted; either becauſe diſgraceful and diſhonourable, or becauſe of the influence ſuch defects have on their minds, they thereby becoming effeminate, irreſolute, and wanting courage, as well as in oppoſition to the cuſtoms and uſages of the heathens, with whom it was common to admit ſuch perſons to civil offices; hence the word eunuch is ſometimes uſed for an officer, Gen. xxxvii. 36. and elſewhere; the Jews [g] reſtrain this law to marriage, but unneceſſarily.

℣. 2. A baſtard ſhall not enter into the congregation of the Lord, &c.] That is born of whoredom, as the Targum of Jonathan; and for the ſake of avoiding whoredom and deterring from it was this law made, according to Maimonides [h], that adulterers might ſee, as he obſerves, that they affect their whole family with an irreparable ſtain, ſhould they commit ſuch an infamous action; tho' the Jews commonly interpret it of one that is born of any of thoſe inceſtuous copulations forbidden in Lev. xviii. which they gather from this following upon, and being near unto one of thoſe inceſts mentioned in the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter [i]; and it is a rule with them [k], that perſons born of ſuch copulations were reckoned baſtards; now ſuch an one, according to Jarchi, might not marry an Iſraelitiſh woman, or rather might not be admitted into the aſſembly of elders, or bear any public office. Jephthah may ſeem to be an objection to this, who was the ſon of an harlot, Judg. xi. 1. which might be owing to the badneſs of the times, the laws of God being neglected, or to the providence of God ſo ordering it, who is not bound by his own laws, though men are; nor was he the ſon of a common harlot, nor of an inceſtuous perſon, but of his father's concubine; beſides ſome think ſuch only are intended who were born of ſtrangers and not Iſraelites: even unto his tenth generation, ſhall he not enter into the congregation of the Lord; which ſeems as if he might at the eleventh; but it is generally interpreted never, as is gathered from the following verſe, and from the tenth number, being an abſolute and perfect one; yet according to the Jewiſh writers there were ways and means by which their poſterity became legitimate; ſo they ſay, baſtards may be purified (or legitimated) how? if one marries a ſervant maid, the child is a ſervant, who if he becomes free, (his) ſon is a free man [l].

℣. 3. An Ammonite or Moabite ſhall not enter into the congregation of the Lord, &c.] Or marry an Iſraelitiſh woman, as Jarchi, and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "the male Ammonites and Moabites are not fit to take a wife of the congregation of the Lord"; for the Jews reſtrain this to men, becauſe it is, as Aben Ezra obſerves, an Ammonite, not an Ammoniteſs, a Moabite, not a Moabiteſs; they allow that females of thoſe nations might be married to Iſraelites, that is, provided they were proſelyteſſes, as Ruth was [m]: even to their tenth generation ſhall they not enter into the congregation of the Lord for ever; that is, not only to the tenth generation, but for ever; and this law was underſtood as in force in Nehemiah's time, which was more than ten generations from the making of it; though now as theſe nations are no more a diſtinct people, they ſuppoſe it is no longer binding [n].

℣. 4. Becauſe they met you not with bread and with water, &c.] To ſupply them therewith, either as a gift, which was a piece of humanity to ſtrangers and travellers, or rather to ſell unto them, for on no other terms did the Iſraelites deſire their bread and their water: in the way when ye came forth out of Egypt; not as ſoon as they came forth from thence, for it was near forty years after; but it was while they were in the way from thence, as they were journeying to the land of Canaan, and ſo were travellers, and ſhould have had kindneſs ſhewn them as ſuch; for though they needed not bread and water, God providing both for them, yet this does not excuſe the inhumanity of theſe people: the words are to be underſtood by way of diſtribution; this charge here only belongs to the Ammonites, for it appears that the Moabites did give them bread and water for money, ch. ii. 28, 29. as what follows belongs peculiarly to the Moabites and not the Ammonites: and becauſe they hired againſt thee Balaam the ſon of Pethor of Meſopotamia, to curſe thee; this the Moabites did in conjunction with the Midianites, but the Ammonites had no concern in it; ſee Numb. xxii. 7. it was not therefore becauſe the Moabites and Ammonites were born in inceſt that they were forbidden entrance into the congregation of the Lord; which might have been thought to have been the reaſon of it, theſe inſtances following upon the former, had not theſe reaſons been aſſigned.

℣. 5. Neverthelеſs the Lord thy God would not hearken unto Balaam, &c.] To his ſolicitations, and the methods he took to prevail on the Lord to ſuffer him to curſe Iſrael, which he gladly would have done for the ſake of Balak's reward: but the Lord thy God turned the curſe into a bleſſing unto thee; in the very mouth of Balaam, as the Targum of Jonathan; for when he opened his mouth and Balak expected he would have curſed Iſrael, and he intended it, could he have been permitted, the Lord over-ruled his tongue, and put ſuch words into his mouth, that inſtead of curſing Iſrael, he bleſſed him; ſee Numb. xxiii. 11. becauſe the Lord thy God loved thee; and therefore would not ſuffer them to be be curſed; for whom the Lord loves they are bleſſed, and ſhall be ſo in time and to eternity.

℣. 6. Thou ſhalt not ſeek their peace nor their proſperity all thy days for ever.] Not that they were to retain malice towards them, or indulge a ſpirit of revenge, or not do them any good offices in a private way, which is contrary to the law of love; nor does this contradict any offices of kindneſs and friendſhip that might be performed in a perſonal way; ſo we find that David had a kindneſs for Hanun the Ammonite, and ſhewed it, though ill rewarded for it, yet is not blamed for doing it; 2 Sam. x. 2. for theſe words reſpect not perſons in a private capacity, but the people of Iſrael as a body politic, who, as ſuch, were not to carry on trade and commerce with thoſe people, nor intermarry with them, nor make leagues and enter into alliances with them; the reaſon of which was, becauſe being very near neighbours to them, had there not been ſuch a law, as a wall of partition between them, they might have become very familiar, and ſo have learnt their evil ways and cuſtoms, which this was deſigned to prevent: the Jews reſtrain [o] this to overtures and proclamations of peace, which they were not to make with theſe nations, as they were directed to do when they went out to war with others, ch. xx. 10.

℣. 7. Thou ſhalt not abhor an Edomite, &c.] Or an Idumean, the deſcendants of Eſau, whoſe name was Edom, Gen. xxv. 30. the Targum of Jonathan adds, "that comes to be made a proſelyte"; he was not to be rejected with abhorrence, becauſe of the old grudge between Jacob and Eſau, and which was become national in their poſterity: for he is thy brother; the Iſraelites and the Edomites were neareſt a-kin to each other of all the nations; for Jacob and Eſau were own brothers by father's and mother's ſide, yea were twin-brothers; the relation was very near: thou ſhalt not abhor an Egyptian; that comes to be made a proſelyte alſo, as the ſame Targum; though the Iſraelites were ſo ill uſed by them, their lives made bitter with hard bondage, and their male infants ſlain by them, and they for a long time refuſed their liberty to depart: becauſe thou waſt a ſtranger in his land; and at firſt received many favours and kindneſſes from them, being ſupported and ſupplied with proviſions during a long famine; and had one of the richeſt and moſt fruitful parts of the country aſſigned them to dwell in; and old favours were not to be forgotten, though they had been followed with great unkindneſs and cruelty.

℣. 8. The children that are begotten of them, &c.] Of ſuch as became proſelytes: ſhall enter into the congregation of the Lord, in their third generation; not in the third generation from the time that this law was made, but from the time that any of them ſhould embrace the true religion; their ſons were the ſecond generation, and their grandchildren the third; and ſuch might be admitted into the congregation, and be reckoned as of them, both in their civil and church-ſtate, and be capable of ſerving even offices among them, and of marriage with them, as the Targum of Jonathan; which ſome of the Jews interpret of males only, for females, according to them, might be married immediately as ſoon as made proſelytes, in which way they account for the lawfulneſs of Solomon's marriage of Pharaoh's daughter [p].

℣. 9. When the hoſt goeth forth againſt thine enemies, &c.] An army of ſoldiers march in order to meet the enemy and fight him: then keep thee from every wicked thing; the Targum of Jonathan adds by way of explanation, "from ſtrange worſhip, uncovering of nakedneſs, and from ſhedding innocent blood"; that is, from idolatry, uncleanneſs of every ſort, and murder; and all other wickedneſſes ought to be abſtained from at all times by all perſons, but eſpecially by ſoldiers in ſuch a circumſtance, juſt going to battle; ſince ſin committed weakens natural courage, as it loads the conſcience with guilt; and ſince victory and ſucceſs, which depend upon the bleſſing of God on arms, cannot be reaſonably expected, where vices of all ſorts are indulged and abound; and eſpecially ſeeing ſuch are about to expoſe their lives to the utmoſt danger, and know not but that in a few hours they muſt exchange this life for another, and appear before God the judge of all, againſt whom they ſin; and yet how little are theſe things thought of by ſuch in common! it was the wiſdom of the Jewiſh legiſlature, which was of God, to inculcate ſuch things into the minds of their ſoldiers.

℣. 10. If there be among you any man that is not clean, &c.] Any unclean perſon in the army, that was even ceremonially unclean in any of the inſtances the law makes ſo, one of which put for the reſt is mentioned: by reaſon of uncleanneſs that chanceth him by night; through pollution by a nocturnal flux, as the Septuagint verſion, or a gonorhea, an involuntary one, occaſioned by impure thoughts and imaginations in dreams; the ſame caſe as in Lev. xv. 16. then ſhall he go abroad out of the camp; out of the army, leſt others ſhould be defiled by ſuch; they not having houſes to retire to, and chambers to keep themſelves in ſeparate from others, as when at home: he ſhall not come within the camp; that is, not till he has done what is preſcribed him in the next verſe. Jarchi ſays he might not come into the camp of the Levites, and much leſs into the camp of God.

℣. 11. But it ſhall be when evening cometh on, &c.] When the day declines and it is near ſunſetting: he ſhall waſh himſelf with water; dip himſelf all over in water, not only waſh his garments but his fleſh: and when the ſun is down he ſhall come into the camp again; and take his place and rank in the army. Now if all this was neceſſary on account of ceremonial uncleanneſs, which as much as poſſible was to be avoided, how much more careful were they to be of moral uncleanneſs, as fornication, adultery, and all ſorts of debauchery and lewdneſs? and yet nothing more frequent among thoſe that are of the military order; it would be well if there was no occaſion for the reproach Maimonides [q] caſts upon the camps of the heathens, among whom, no doubt, he means chriſtians, if not principally; when he obſerves that theſe orders were given, that this might be deeply fixed in the mind of every one, that their camp ought to be holy as the ſanctuary of God, and not like the camps of the Gentiles, in which abound corruptions of all kinds, tranſgreſſions, rapines, thefts and other ſins.

℣. 12. Thou ſhalt have alſo a place without the camp, &c.] A place prepared, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, provided on purpoſe for the uſe hereafter ſuggeſted; ſo Ben Melech: whither thou ſhalt go forth abroad; to do the neceſſities of nature, which they were to do without the camp, not in any place they thought fit and moſt convenient, but what was appointed for that purpoſe.

℣. 13. And thou ſhalt have a paddle upon thy weapon, &c.] A nail or ſpike, ſome kind of inſtrument to make a hole in the ground with, which was faſtened to the ſword upon their loins; which was to be inſtead of a ſpade or mattock to dig with: and it ſhall be when thou ſhalt eaſe thyſelf abroad; without the camp, in the place appointed for that uſe, whenever nature required ſuch an action to be performed; thou ſhalt dig therewith; with the paddle, an hole in the earth: The Eſſenes uſed, according to Joſephus, to make it a foot deep with a ſpade or mattock, and to every one that was newly admitted among them, a little pickax was given for that purpoſe [r]: and ſhalt turn back; having eaſed nature: and cover that which cometh from thee; their dung, with the earth they dug out of the hole they made. This law was made to preſerve modeſty and decency becoming men, and not act like brute beaſts, as well as cleanlineſs in the camp and the health of themſelves and their fellow-ſoldiers; and that they might not be offenſive to the ſmell, as well as pernicious to the health of one another; and eſpecially for a reaſon that follows in the next verſe; ſo Maimonides [s] ſays the intention of this law is eſpecially cleanlineſs, and to avoid naſtineſs, filthineſs, and impurities of every kind, that men might not be like the brute animals.

℣. 14. For the Lord thy God walketh in the midſt of thy camp, &c.] In the tabernacle, which moved when the hoſt marched after the camps of Judah and Reuben, and before thoſe of Ephraim and Dan, in the midſt of them: this was the poſition of it whilſt in the wilderneſs, and afterwards when they came into the land of Canaan, and went to war with their enemies, the ark ſometimes went with them, the ſymbol of the divine preſence; and here it is made a reaſon why they ſhould avoid all uncleanneſs, ſince the holy God, or that token of his preſence, was in the midſt of them: to deliver thee, and give up thine enemies before thee; to ſave them from falling into the hands of their enemies, and to deliver their enemies into their hands, which depended not upon their numbers, ſtrength and ſkill, but on the preſence, providence, and power of God with them; wherefore, as the above writer [t] obſerves by theſe actions (of purity and cleanlineſs) God meant to confirm the faith of thoſe that engaged in war, that the divine majeſty dwelt among them; for which reaſon ſuch orders were ſtrictly to be obſerved by them: therefore ſhall thy camp be holy; both in a moral and ceremonial ſenſe: that he ſee no unclean thing in thee; whether natural, moral or ceremonial; the word here uſed ſignifies ſuch nakedneſs as is forbidden to be uncovered, Lev. xviii. Hence Maimonides [u] applies it to whoredom; for he ſays, "by this phraſe God meant to deter and dehort from whoredom, which is too uſual and common among ſoldiers, as long as they are abſent from their own houſes; that therefore we may be delivered and abſtain from thoſe impure works, God has commanded ſuch things to be done, which may bring to our remembrance that his glory dwels in the midſt of us": and turn away from thee; and ſo they fall into the hands of their enemies, and become an eaſy prey to them, their God having forſaken them; and that this might not be their caſe, care ſhould be taken not to offend him, and cauſe him to depart from them.

℣. 15. Thou ſhalt not deliver unto his maſter, the ſervant which is eſcaped from his maſter unto thee.] That is, one that has been uſed ill by a cruel and tyrannical maſter, and was in danger of his life with him, or of being lamed by him, and therefore obliged to make his eſcape from him on that account; ſuch an one when he fell into the hands of an Iſraelite was not to be taken and bound, and ſent back to his maſter again, but was to be retained till his maſter's anger ſubſided; or however until inquiry could be made into the cauſe of the difference between him and his maſter, and matters be made up between them to mutual ſatisfaction; or if it appeared that the flight of the ſervant was juſt, and it was not ſafe for him to return to his maſter, then he was to be uſed as hereafter directed; for it cannot be thought that this law was made to encourage and protect every idle, diſobedient and fugitive ſervant, which would be very ſinful and unjuſt: the Jewiſh writers generally underſtand it of the ſervants of idolaters fleeing for the ſake of religion; Onkelos renders it, "a ſervant of the people", of heathen people; the Targum of Jonathan is, "thou ſhalt not deliver a ſtranger (i. e. a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, as Maimonides [w] calls this ſervant) into the hands of thoſe that worſhip idols, but he ſhall be delivered by you, that he may be under the ſhadow of my Shekinah, becauſe that he fled from the worſhip of his idol." Jarchi makes mention of another ſenſe; that it may be underſtood of "a Canaanitiſh ſervant of an Iſraelite that flees (from his maſter) without the land, where he was not obliged to go with him, and ſerve him againſt his will; but I ſuppoſe a proſelyte is meant"; and much more then will this hold good of an Hebrew ſervant in ſuch circumſtances. Aben Ezra interprets this of a ſervant not an Iſraelite, who in time of war flees from his maſter not an Iſraelite alſo, unto the camp of Iſrael, and that for the glory of the divine name which is called upon Iſrael; ſuch an one, though a ſervant, might not be delivered to his maſter.

℣. 16. He ſhall dwell in thee, even among you, &c.] This ſeems to confirm the ſenſe of it, being a ſtranger, a proſelyte-ſervant that is here ſpoken of, ſince the law provides for his dwelling among the Iſraelites: in that place he ſhall chuſe, in one of thy gates where it liketh him beſt; he was not to be detained by the perſon that took him up in his own houſe, or be obliged to dwell in any certain place under a reſtraint, but he might take up his abode in any of the cities of Iſrael, which would be moſt for his good, profit and advantage: thou ſhalt not oppreſs him; by words, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, "calling him a fugitive ſervant, or by any opprobrious name."

℣. 17. There ſhall be no whore of the daughters of Iſrael, &c.] The word for whore is Kedeſhah, which properly ſignifies an holy one; and here, by an Antiphraſis, an unholy, an impure perſon, one that is defiled by man; ſee the note on Gen. xxxviii. 18. Jarchi interprets the word, one that makes herſelf common, that is ſanctified, or ſet apart; that is, one that ſeparates herſelf for ſuch ſervice, and proſtitutes herſelf to every one that paſſes by: but ſome underſtand this not of common harlots in the ſtreets, but of ſacred whores, or ſuch as were conſecrated to heathen deities, as ſuch there were to Venus. Strabo [x] tells us, that the temple of Venus at Corinth was ſo rich, that more than a thouſand of thoſe ſacred harlots were kept, whom men men and women had devoted to that goddeſs; and ſo a multitude of the ſame ſort were at Comana, which he calls little Corinth [y]; now theſe of all harlots being the moſt abominable, are forbidden to be among the daughters of Iſrael: nor a ſodomite of the ſons of Iſrael; by the ſame rule that Kedeſhah is rendered a whore in the preceding clauſe, Kadeſh ſhould be rendered an whoremonger here, as in the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions; though Aben Ezra interprets it paſſively, one that is lain with, and Jarchi one that is prepared to lye with a male, that proſtitutes his body in this unnatural way; and it looks as if there were ſuch ſort of perſons ſacred to idols, ſince we read of the houſes of the Sodomites, which were by, or rather in the houſe of the Lord, 2 Kings xxiii. 7.

℣. 18. Thou ſhalt not bring the hire of a whore, &c.] Which was given to her as a reward for the uſe of her body: or the price of a dog; not of the firſt-born of a dog, the price for the redemption of it, as ſome; nor for the loan of a hunting dog, or a ſhepherd's dog for breed, as Joſephus [z] interprets this law. Abarbinel underſtands it figuratively, of a ſodomite comparable to a dog, for his uncleanneſs and impudence; ſee Rev. xxii. 15. and the price of ſuch an one, the gain he got by the proſtitution of his body to unnatural luſts; and ſo as the hire of a whore anſwers to one in the preceding verſe, the price of a dog to a ſodomite here; and in this he is followed by ſome, nor is it a ſenſe to be deſpiſed; though the Jews [a] underſtand it literally of a dog, and of the exchange of another creature with that; ſo Onkelos renders it, "the exchange of a dog:" now neither of theſe might a man bring into the houſe of the Lord thy God for any vow; that is, when a man vowed to offer any ſacrifice to the Lord, it was not to be any thing that was given to a whore as her hire; as for inſtance, as Jarchi, if he gave her for her hire a lamb, it was not fit to be offered; which agrees with the Jewiſh [b] canons, "what is the hire of a whore? if one ſays to a whore, take this lamb for thy hire, though 100, they are all forbidden; and ſo if one ſays to his neighbour, Lo this lamb is thine, that thine handmaid may lye with my ſervant, Rabbi ſays it is not the hire of a whore, but the wiſe men ſay it is. — If he gives her money, lo this is free; wines, oils and fine flour, and the like, that are offered on the altar are forbidden; (but the commentators ſay [c], wheat, olives and grapes, out of which fine flour, oil, and wine are made, are free) if he gives her conſecrated things, lo theſe are free, birds, they are forbidden". Now this law ſeems to be made in oppoſition to the cuſtoms and practices of the Phœnicians and Canaanites, whoſe land the Iſraelites were going to inhabit; whoſe women, as we are told [d], uſed to proſtitute themſelves in the temples of their idols, and dedicate there the hire of their bodies to their gods, thinking thereby to appeaſe their deities and obtain good things for themſelves; and the like did the Babylonians and Aſſyrians; ſee the note on Mic. i. 7. ſo it is aſked [e], "What is the price of a dog? if a man ſays to his neighbour, take this lamb for that dog; ſo if two partners divide, one takes ten (lambs) and the other nine and a dog; what is in lieu of the dog is forbidden, but thoſe that are taken with him are free": a whore and a dog are fitly put together, becauſe both are libidinous, impure and impudent; perhaps the vileneſs and baſeneſs of the creature is chiefly regarded in this law, to keep up the credit and veneration of ſacrifices as ſacred things; and it may be in reference to the worſhip of this creature, as by the Egyptians, who are ſaid to worſhip a dog, their god Anubis [f], the image of which had a dog's head on it; or to it's being offered in ſacrifice to idols, as it was by others; the Colophonians ſacrificed the whelps of dogs to their goddeſs Enodius, as others did to Enyalius or Mars [g]: for even both theſe are an abomination to the Lord thy God; both the hire of the whore and the price of the dog, when brought as a ſacrifice to him; the one being a breach of the moral law, and the other tending to bring into contempt the ſacrifices of the ceremonial law, if not a favouring idolatry, than which nothing is more abominable to God, who cannot endure any thing evil, baſe and impure.

℣. 19. Thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury to thy brother, &c.] One of the ſame nation and religion, and who is in poor and neceſſitous circumſtances, and wants either food for himſelf and family, or money to carry on his huſbandry, till ſuch times as the fruits of his ground will bring him in a ſufficiency for his ſupport, and the payment of what he borrows, and which is to be lent him without any intereſt: as the Jews were chiefly employed in huſbandry, and not merchandize, they had but little occaſion to borrow, and when they did could not afford to pay intereſt, as perſons concerned in merchandize, whoſe gains are great, are able to do; and it is but reaſonable that ſuch perſons ſhould; but that the Iſraelites, when poor and in diſtreſs, might not be bowed down under their burdens, this law is made for their relief: uſury of money, uſury of victuals, uſury of any thing that is lent upon uſury; this takes in all ſorts of uſury, whether what is lent be money or food, or any thing elſe, no intereſt was to be taken for it; ſee the notes on Lev. xxv. 36, 37.

℣. 20. Unto a ſtranger thou mayeſt lend upon uſury, &c.] To any Gentile, though ſome Jewiſh writers except the Edomites and Iſhmaelites, as being brethren, and reſtrain it to the ſeven nations of Canaan; but it ſeems to deſign one that was not an Iſraelite, or a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and eſpecially to regard ſuch that traded and merchandized, as the Gentiles very much did, and eſpecially their neighbours the Phœnicians; and of ſuch it was lawful to take intereſt, as it was but reaſonable, when they gained much by the money they lent them, and as it is but reaſonable ſhould be the caſe among Chriſtians in ſuch circumſtances; this is to be regarded not as a precept, but as a permiſſion: but unto thy brother thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury; which is repeated, that it might be taken notice of, and carefully obſerved: that the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all that thou ſetteſt thine hand unto, in the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it; for, their charity, humanity, and the kind uſage of their poor brethren in diſtreſs, would not paſs unnoticed by the Lord; but he would make the land they tilled fruitful, and their vineyards and olive-yards to produce abundance, and their flocks and their herds to increaſe greatly, which which would be a ſufficient and over-recompence for all that they had freely lent unto their brethren, without taking any uſury of them.

℣. 21. When thou ſhalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, &c.] Which muſt be of things in a man's power to perform, and of what are lawful to be done, and according to the mind and will of God revealed in his word, and agreeable to the manner of worſhip preſcribed by him; as that he will offer ſuch a ſacrifice, a free will offering to him, and the like, beſides what he was bound to do, or give ſuch and ſuch things for the repair of the ſanctuary, or for the relief of the poor; ſee the note on Numb. xxx. 2. This law is thought by Aben Ezra to be repeated on the mention of the hire of a whore, &c. being forbidden to be brought for a vow, ℣. 18. thou ſhalt not ſlack to pay it; or delay the payment of it, but do it immediately; ſince zeal and affection might abate, and there might not be hereafter an ability to perform, or death might come and prevent it; the Targum of Jonathan adds, at the three feaſts, that is, of the paſſover, pentecoſt and tabernacles; and the Jewiſh writers [h] ſay, that no man tranſgreſſes this precept reſpecting the delay of paying a vow, until the three feaſts have paſſed: the Lord thy God will ſurely require it of thee; exact the payment of it, and expect it, inſiſt upon the performance of it, and puniſh for neglect: and it would be ſin in thee; guilt of ſin would be contracted and puniſhment inflicted; Aben Ezra interprets it of the latter.

℣. 22. But if thou ſhalt forbear to vow, &c.] That a man might do, though there was ability; it was expected indeed that men ſhould vow and bring freewill-offerings in proportion to their ability; whether they were of the greater ſort, of the herd and flock, or of fowls, or even of fine flour, theſe were acceptable to the Lord: but if they were not vowed and brought, it ſhall be no ſin in thee; no charge of guilt be brought or puniſhment laid; it ſhould not be reckoned a crime, nor be puniſhable in any reſpect, and eſpecially where there was a willing mind and no ability; otherwiſe negligence, niggardlineſs, and ingratitude are not well-pleaſing in the ſight of God.

℣. 23. That which is gone out of thy lips, thou ſhalt keep and perform, &c.] Which were in their power to perform and lawful to do; and this is obſerved to make them watchful and cautious, and not be raſh in making vows, ſince when once they were made, an exact and rigid performance of them was expected; ſee Eccl. v. 4, 5. even a freewill-offering, according as thou haſt vowed unto the Lord thy God, which thou haſt promiſed with thy mouth; be it what it will, as to the matter of it, it was to be paid, and in the manner as it was vowed and promiſed. Aben Ezra obſerves, that every vow is a freewill-offering, but not every freewill-offering a vow; the Targum of Jonathan enumerates the ſeveral things to be performed, ſin-offerings, treſpaſs-offerings, burnt-offerings and oblations of holy things, and drink-offerings, and gifts of the houſe of the ſanctuary, and alms to the poor.

℣. 24. When thou comeſt into thy neighbour's vineyard, &c.] To take a walk in it for recreation, and to ſee how the vines flouriſh, and what ſort of fruit and what quantity of it they bear; being invited thither by the owner, or occaſionally paſſing that way ſtept in, and even it may be on purpoſe to taſte the fruits of the vine and quench thirſt and ſatisfy appetite: then thou mayeſt eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleaſure; as many as they would, till nature was ſatisfied: but thou ſhalt not put any in thy veſſel; to carry away, to be eaten by them or theirs at another time and place; they were to put none into their pockets or into their baſkets, as the Targum of Jonathan, or whatſoever veſſel they might have with them in the vineyard. Jarchi ſays, the ſcripture ſpeaks of a workman, and only at the time of gathering the grapes, when he was putting into his maſter's veſſels, and might not put any into his own, and carry away; ſo the Jewiſh writers [i] generally interpret it of a workman only, and of his eating thoſe things in which he works, and not of ſuch as paſs by the way; ſo the Targums: and there are many traditions in the Miſnah [k] concerning this affair; as that by this law a workman might eat whilſt in his work, as the ox may whilſt it is treading out the corn, and when his work is perfect; and that he may eat of what he is employed about, only if he is at work upon figs, he may not eat of grapes; and if on grapes, he may not eat of figs, nor might he eat more than his hire came to; and that he might make a covenant for his ſon and daughter, ſervant and handmaid adult (that they ſhall take money and not eat) and for his wife, becauſe they are endowed with knowledge; but not for his ſon and daughter, ſervant and maid-ſervant minors, becauſe they are not: but Joſephus [l], their countryman, better interprets this law, who ſays, that travellers, or thoſe that paſſed by the way, were not forbidden taſting ripe fruits, and even were permitted to fill themſelves with them as if their own, whether they were of the country or ſtrangers.

℣. 25. When thou comeſt into the ſtanding-corn of thy neighbour, &c.] Paſſeſt through it to go to ſome other place, the road lying through it, as it often does through ſtanding-corn; ſo Chriſt and his diſciples are ſaid to go through the corn, Matt. xii. 1. but Jarchi ſays, this ſcripture ſpeaks of a workman alſo, and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "when thou goeſt in to take thine hire according to work in thy neighbour's ſtanding-corn;" but the other ſenſe is beſt, and is confirmed and illuſtrated by the inſtance given, as well as beſt agrees with what follows: then thou mayeſt pluck the ears with thine hand; the ears of wheat, and rub them, to ſeparate the grain from the huſk or beard, and eat it, as did the diſciples of Chriſt, Luke vi. 1. to ſatisfy hunger: but thou ſhalt not move a ſickle unto thy neighbours ſtanding-corn; to cut it down and carry any of it off, which would have been an unjuſt thing.

CHAP. XXIV.

THIS chapter contains various laws concerning divorces, ℣. 1—4. the diſcharge of a new-married man from war and buſineſs, ℣. 5. about taking pledges, ℣. 6, 10—13. man-ſtealing, ℣. 7. the plague of leproſy, ℣. 8, 9. and giving ſervants their hire in due time, ℣. 14, 15. concerning doing juſtice in capital caſes, and towards the ſtranger, fatherleſs, and widow, ℣. 16, 17, 18. and of charity to the poor, in allowing them the forgotten ſheaf, and the gleanings of their olive-yards and vineyards, ℣. 19—22.

℣. 1. When a man hath taken a wife and married her, &c.] That is, when a man has made choice of a woman for his wife, and has obtained her conſent, and the conſent of her parents; and has not only betrothed her, but taken her home, and conſummated the marriage: and it come to paſs that ſhe find no favour in his eyes; is not agreeable to him, he takes no delight in her perſon, nor pleaſure in her company and converſation; but, on the contrary, his affections are alienated from her, and he can't bear the ſight of her: becauſe he hath found ſome uncleanneſs in her; ſomething that he diſliked, and was diſagreeable to him, and which made their continuance together in the marriage-ſtate very uncomfortable; which led him on to be very ill-natured, ſevere, and cruel to her; ſo that her life was expoſed to danger, or at leaſt become very uneaſy; in which caſe a divorce was permitted, both for the hardneſs of the man's heart, and in favour of the woman, that ſhe might be freed from ſuch rigorous uſage. This word uncleanneſs does not ſignify adultery, or any of the uncleanneſſes forbidden in Lev. xviii. becauſe that was puniſhable with death, when it could be proved; and where there was only a ſuſpicion of it, the huſband might make uſe of the bitter water; though the houſe of Shammai ſeem to take it in this ſenſe; for they ſay a man might not divorce his wife unleſs he found in her ſome unclean thing, ſomething diſhoneſt and wicked, and which they ground upon theſe words; but the houſe of Hillell ſay, if ſhe burnt his food, or ſpoiled it by over-ſalting, or over-roaſting it; and Akiba ſays, even if he found another woman more beautiful than her, or more agreeable to him. But neither his ſenſe, nor that of the houſe of Shammai, are approved of by the Jews in general, but that of the houſe of Hillell [m]; and they ſuppoſe a man might divorce his wife for any ill qualities of mind in her, or for any ill or impudent behaviour of hers; as if her huſband ſaw her go abroad with her head uncovered, and ſpinning in the ſtreets, and ſo ſhewing her naked arms to men; or having her garments ſlit on both ſides; or waſhing in a bath with men, or where men uſe to waſh, and talking with every man, and joking with young men; or her voice is ſonorous and noiſy; or any diſeaſe of body, as the leproſy, and the like; or any blemiſhes, as warts, are upon her; or any diſagréeable ſmell, that might ariſe from any parts of the body, from ſweat, or a ſtinking breath [n]: then let him write her a bill of divorcement; Jarchi ſays, this is a command upon him to divorce her, becauſe ſhe finds not favour in his eyes; and ſo the Jews [o] generally underſtand it, and ſo they did in the time of Chriſt, Matt. xix. 7. whereas it was no more than a permiſſion, for reaſons before given. A man might not diſmiſs his wife by word of mouth, which might be done haſtily, in a paſſion, of which he might ſoon repent; but by writing, which was to be drawn up in form; and, as the Targum of Jonathan, before the ſanhedrim, in a court of judicature, which required time, during which he might think more of it, and either recede from his purpoſe before the caſe was finiſhed, or do it upon mature deliberation, and a firm reſolution. The Jews ſay [p] many things of the witneſſes before whom it was to be written and ſealed, and at what time, and upon what, and with what it was to be written, and who were proper perſons to write it or not, in a treatiſe of theirs called Gittin, or divorces. In the Hebrew text this bill is called a bill of cutting off [q]; becauſe the marriage was reſcinded, and man and wife were cut off and ſeparated from one another for ever; of the form of ſuch a bill, ſee the note on Matt. v. 31. and give it in her hand; which was to be done before witneſſes, and which is one of the ten things requiſite to a divorce [r]; though it made no difference whether it was delivered by himſelf, or by a meſſenger; or whether to her, or to her deputy, appointed by her before witneſſes; or whether it was put into her hand, or in her boſom, ſo be it that ſhe was but poſſeſſed of it; with which agrees the Jewiſh canon, "if he caſts a bill to his wife, and ſhe is within the houſe, or within the court, ſhe is divorced;—if he caſts it into her boſom, or into her work-baſket, ſhe is divorced [s]": and ſend her out of his houſe; which was a viſible token and public declaration of her divorce; beſides, were ſhe to be continued in his houſe afterwards, it would give ſuſpicion of cohabitation, which after a divorce was not lawful.

℣. 2. And when ſhe is departed out of his houſe, &c.] With her bill of divorce, by which departure out of his houſe it is notified to all: ſhe may go and be another man's wife; it was permitted her to marry another man, ſhe being by her divorce freed from the law of her former huſband; and who indeed in expreſs words contained in the divorce, gave her leave ſo to do; which ran thus, "thou art in thine own hand, and haſt power over thyſelf to go and marry any other man whom thou pleaſeſt; and let no man hinder thee in my name, from this day forward and for ever; and lo, thou art free to any man;" ſee the note on Matt. v. 31.

℣. 3. And if the latter huſband hate her, &c.] Or leſs loves her than another woman, and ſhe is diſliked by him as ſhe was by her former huſband: and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it into her hand, and ſendeth her out of his houſe; as he had by this law a permiſſion, in like manner as her former huſband had; ſee the note on ℣. 1. or if her latter huſband die, which took her to be his wife; and ſhe ſurvives him; as ſhe is then by death looſed from the law of an huſband, ſhe may lawfully marry another man, but not her former huſband, as follows.

℣. 4. Her former husband which sent her away may not take her again to be his wife, &c.] Though ever so desirous of it, and having heartily repented that he had put her away: this is the punishment of his fickleness and inconstancy, and was ordered to make men cautious how they put away their wives; since when they had so done, and they had been married to another, they could not enjoy them again even on the death of the second husband; yea, though she was only espoused to him, and he had never lain with her, as Ben Melech observes, it was forbidden the former husband to marry her; though if she had only played the whore, according to the same writer, and others [a], she might return to him: after that she is defiled; not by whoredom, for in that case she was not forbidden, as it is interpreted, but by her being married to another man; when she was defiled, not by him, or with respect to him, nor with regard to any other man, whom she might lawfully marry after the decease of her latter husband; but with respect to her first husband, being by her divorce from him, and by her marriage to another, entirely alienated and separated from him, and so prohibited to him; and thus R. Joseph Kimchi interprets this defilement of prohibition, things prohibited being reckoned unclean, or not lawful to be used: for that is abomination before the Lord; for a man to take his wife again, after she had been divorced by him, and married to another man; and yet, such is the grace and goodness of God to his backsliding people, that he receives them when they return unto him their first husband, and forsake other lovers, Jer. iii. 1. Hos. ii. 7, 19. and thou shalt not cause the land to sin which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance; since if this was allowed, that men might put away their wives, and take them again at pleasure, and change them as often as they thought fit; no order could be observed, and the utmost confusion in families introduced, and lewdness encouraged, and which would subject the land and the inhabitants of it to many evils and calamities, as the just punishment thereof.

℣. 5. When a man hath taken a new wife, &c.] A wife he has lately married, new to him, though a widow, as Jarchi observes; but the Targum of Jonathan says a virgin; however this is opposed to his old wife, and divorced; for this, as Jarchi and Ben Melech say, excepts the return of a divorced wife, who can't be said to be a new one: he shall not go out to war; this is to be understood of a man that had not only betrothed, but married a wife; a man that had betrothed a wife, and not married her, who went out to war, might return if he would, ch. xx. 7. but one that had married a wife was not to go out to war: neither shall be charged with any business; as betrothed ones were; they, though they had a liberty of returning, yet they were to provide food and drink for the army, and to prepare or mend the highways, as Jarchi observes; but these were not obliged to such things, nor even to keep watch on the walls of the city, or to pay taxes, as Maimonides [b] writes: but he shall be free at home one year; not only from all tributes and taxes, and every thing relative to the affairs of war, but from public offices and employments, which might occasion absence from home. Jarchi remarks, that his house or home comprehends his vineyard; and so he thinks that this respects his house and his vineyard, that if he had built a house and dedicated it, or planted a vineyard and made it common, yet was not to remove from his house because of the necessities of war: and shall chear up his wife which he hath taken; or rejoice with his wife which he hath taken, and solace themselves with love; and thereby not only endear himself to her, but settle his affections on her, and be so confirmed in conjugal love, that hereafter no jealousies may arise, or any cause of divorce, which this law seems to be made to guard against. So it is said [c], that Alexander after the battle at Granicus sent home to Macedonia his new-married soldiers, to winter with their wives, and return at spring; which his master Aristotle had taught him, and as he was taught by a Jew.

℣. 6. No man shalt take the nether or the upper Mill-stone to pledge, &c.] The first word being of the dual number takes in both stones, wherefore Vatablus renders the words, "ye shall not take for a pledge both the mill-stones, nor indeed the uppermost;" which is the least; so far should they be from taking both, that they were not allowed to take the uppermost, which was the shortest, meanest, and lightest; and indeed if any one of them was taken, the other became useless, so that neither was to be taken: for he taketh a man's life to pledge; or with which his life is supported, and the life of his family; for if he has corn to supply them with, yet if his mill or mill-stones are pawned, he can't grind his corn, and so he and his family must starve: and in those times and countries they did, as the Arabs do to this day, as Dr. Shaw [d] relates, "most families grind their wheat and barley at home, having two portable mill-stones for that purpose; the uppermost whereof is turned round by a small handle of wood or iron, that is placed in the rim;" and these mill-stones being portable, might be the more easily taken for pledges, which is here forbidden for the above reason; and this takes in any other thing whatever, on which a man's living depends, or by which he gets his bread [e].

℣. 7. If a man be found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, &c.] Whether grown up or little, male or female, an Israelite or a proselyte, or a freed servant; all, as Maimonides [f] says, are included in this general word brethren; though Aben Ezra observes, that it is added of the children of Israel, for explanation, since an Edomite is called a brother. Now, a man must be found committing this fact; that is, it must plainly appear, there must be full proof of it by witnesses, as Jarchi explains this word: and maketh merchandize of him; or rather, uses him as a servant, and employs him in any service to the least profit and advantage by him, even to the value of a farthing; yea, if he does but lean upon him, and he supports him, though he is an old man that is stolen; this is serving a man's self by him, as Maimonides [g], which is what is forbidden as distinct from selling him as follows: or selleth him; to others; and both these, according to the above writer [h], using him for service, and selling him, are necessary to make him guilty of death; not the one without the other; but reading them disjunctively, as we do, gives the better sense of the words: then that thief shall die; by strangling with a napkin, as the Targum of Jonathan; and so Maimonides [i] says, his death is by strangling: and thou shalt put evil away away from among you ; both him that does evil, as the Targum of Jonathan, and the guilt of it by inflicting due punishment for it ; and so deter from such practices, and prevent evil coming upon the body of the people, should such a sin be connived at ; see Exod. xxi. 16.

℣. 8. Take heed in the plague of leprosy, &c.] Whether in the bodies of men, or in houses, or in garments, notto hide and conceal it ; or, as Jarchi, weaken the signs of it, or cut out the bright spot ; so the Targum of Jonathan : that thou observe diligently, and do according to all the priests, the Levites, shall teach you ; according to the laws and rules given in such cases, whether they order to shut up persons, houses, or clothes, or pronounce unclean or clean ; in all things they were to do as they directed, which appeared to be agreeable to the said rules ; for the judgment, management, and ordering of these things, belonged to the priests ; of which see Lev. xiii. and xiv. as I commanded them, so shall ye observe to do ; which shews that they were not to comply with their orders, and conform to them, any farther than they agreed with the commands of God, and the instructions he had given them in the places referred to.

℣. 9. Remember what the Lord thy God did unto Miriam, &c.] Who was stricken with leprosy for speaking against Moses, and was shut up seven days ; and they are reminded of this instance, partly to warn them against entertaining evil suspicions, and surmises of persons in power and authority, and speaking evil of them ; and partly to expect that punishment would certainly be inflicted on them, should they be guilty of the same crime ; nor should they think it hard, either to be smitten with leprosy, or to be shut up for it ; since Miriam, a prophetess, and the sister of Moses, was so used ; and that when by the way, after that ye were come out of Egypt ; when upon their journey, and were retarded in it, and obliged to stay at least seven days before they could proceed on in it ; see Numb. xii. 14, 15, 16.

℣. 10. When thou dost lend thy brother any thing, &c.] Any sum of money he stands in need of, or demandest a debt of him, as Jarchi ; money he is indebted to thee, which is the sense of the septuagint version ; and he is not able to pay it, but offers something in pawn till he can pay it : thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge ; which would be an exercise of too much power and authority, to go into a neighbour's house, and take what was liked ; and besides, as no doubt he would take the best, so he might take that which the poor man could not spare : and indeed, according to the Jewish canons [k], he could not take any pledge at all, but with the knowledge, and by the leave, of the sanhedrim, or court of judicature.

℣. 11. Thou shalt stand abroad, &c.] Without doors, in the street, as the Targum of Jonathan, whilst the borrower or debtor looks out, and brings forth what he can best spare as a pledge : and the man to whom thou dost lend, shall bring out the pledge abroad unto thee ; now as, on the one hand, if the lender or creditor had been allowed to go in and take what he pleased for a pledge, he would chuse the best ; so, on the other hand, the borrower or debtor would be apt to bring the worst, what was of the least value and use ; wherefore the Jews made it a rule that it should be of a middling sort, between both, lest it should be a discouragement and hindrance to lend upon pledges [l].

℣. 12. And if the man be poor, &c.] Which may be thought to be the case of every one that gives pledges for a debt he owes, or a sum of money he borrows ; yet there might be a difference : some might be so very destitute of goods and raiment in their houses, that whatever they parted with was distressing to them, and they could not well do without it : thou shalt not sleep with his pledge ; nor keep it a night ; but deliver it to him, before he went to bed, and laid himself down to sleep.

℣. 13. In any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again, when the sun goeth down, &c.] If it was a night-covering, as Jarchi remarks ; but if it was his day-clothes, he was to return it in the morning, when the sun arose ; and this was to be done every day, which must occasion a great deal of trouble, and the pledge of little use ; so that it seems as though they might as well be without it as have it, and lend freely ; but the Jews say that there was an advantage by it ; for it is said in answer to such a question, "of what profit is the pledge ? by this means the debt is not released on the seventh year, (when all other debts were released, ch. xv. 1, 2.) nor could the borrower dispose of his goods to his children, but payment was made from the pledge after his death [m] :" now this delivery of the pledge at sun-setting was ordered, that he may sleep in his own raiment ; have his night-covering to sleep in, his pillow, and bolster, and bedding to lie on, and bed-clothes to cover him ; and indeed the clothes they wore were made in such form, as would serve for covering to sleep in at night, as well as to wear in the day ; and such is the clothing of the Arabs now, which they call hykes. "The usual size of them (Dr. Shaw says [n]) is six yards long, and five or six feet broad, serving the Arab for a compleat dress in the day ; and as they sleep in their raiment, it serves likewise for his bed and covering by night :" and bless thee ; for using him so mercifully and kindly, as to return him his pledge, which is so necessary to his comfortable repose in the night ; and not only will he praise him, and speak well of him for it, and give him thanks ; but will pray to God to bless him in soul, body, and estate, for such kindness shewn him : and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the Lord thy God ; not his justifying righteousness before God, for by the deeds of the law shall no flesh living be justified in his sight ; but it shall be owned and approved of, as a good and righteous action, and answerable to the intention of this law, which is, that mercy should be shewn to persons in distress ; in which sense the word righteousness is sometimes used, even for a merciful action, Ps. cxii. 9. Dan. iv. 27. so alms is called δικαιοσυνη righteousness, Matt. vi. 1. in some copies.

℣. 14. Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant, &c.] That is hired by the day, as appears by the following verse ; though the law may include such as are hired by the week, or month, or year ; neither of whom are to be oppressed by any means, and chiefly by detaining their wages ; so the Jerusalem Targum explains the phrase, "ye shall not detain by force force the hire of the hired ſervant;" nor by fraud, as in Jam. v. 4. that is poor and needy; and ſo can't bear the leaſt oppreſſion of this kind, nor to have his wages detained from him any time, and much leſs wholly to be defrauded of them: whether he be of thy brethren; an Iſraelite, and ſo a brother both by nation and religion: or of thy ſtrangers that are in thy land, within thy gates; Jarchi interprets this both of proſelytes of righteouſneſs, and of proſelytes of the gate; which latter are plainly deſcribed by this clauſe, and the former muſt be included; for if proſelytes of the gate are not to be oppreſſed, much leſs proſelytes of righteouſneſs, who were in all reſpects as Iſraelites, the ſame law was to them both. Jarchi ſays, the phraſe in thy land is intended to comprehend the hire of beaſts, and of veſſels; and theſe in the Miſnah [o] are ſaid to be comprehended in this precept, as well as the hire of man.

℣. 15. At his day thou ſhalt give him his hire, &c.] At the cloſe of the day, when his work is done, the hire agreed for muſt be paid him; and, by the ſame rule, all ſuch that were hired by the week, month, or year, were to have their wages paid them at the day their time was up: neither ſhall the ſun go down upon it; it was to be paid before ſun-ſetting, or at it; ſee Lev. xix. 13. for he is poor, and ſetteth his heart upon it; being poor, he can't wait any longer for the payment of it; his perſonal and family wants are ſuch as require immediate payment; and beſides, he has been eagerly expecting it, and earneſtly deſiring it, that he may ſatisfy the craving neceſſities of himſelf and family; and therefore it would be a great baulk and diſappointment to him to have his wages detained: leſt he cry againſt thee to the Lord; having none to apply unto but him, who is the patron of the poor and needy, not being able to help himſelf, nor having intereſt in any to interpoſe on his behalf; and his cry, and the cry of his hire too, enter into the ears of the Lord of hoſts, and is regarded by him, Jam. v. 4. and it be ſin unto thee; be imputed to him, the guilt charged on him, and puniſhment inflicted for it.

℣. 16. The fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, &c.] By the civil magiſtrates, for ſins committed by them of a capital nature, and which are worthy of death: neither ſhall the children be put to death for the fathers; for ſins committed by them that deſerve it: every man ſhall be put to death for his own ſin; which is but juſt and reaſonable; ſee Ezek. xviii. 4. which is no contradiction to Exod. xx. 5. that reſpects what God himſelf would do, this what Iſrael, or the civil magiſtrates in it ſhould do; this is a command on Iſrael, as Aben Ezra obſerves; that the declaration of the Sovereign Being, who is not bound by any law. Jarchi interprets theſe words differently, as that the one ſhould not be put to death by the teſtimony of the other; and it is a rule with the Jews, "that an oath of witneſs is taken of men, and not of women; of thoſe that are not akin, and not of thoſe that are nearly related [p];" on which one of the commentators obſerves [q], that ſuch that are near akin are not fit to bear teſtimony, becauſe it is written, the fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children; that is, for the teſtimony of the children. Jarchi indeed mentions the other ſenſe, for the iniquity of the children, which has been given, and is undoubtedly the true ſenſe of the text. The Targum of Jonathan gives both; "fathers ſhall not be put to death, neither by the teſtimony, nor for the ſins of the children; and children ſhall not be put to death, neither by the teſtimony, nor for the ſins of fathers; but every man ſhall be put to death for his own ſin by proper witneſſes."

℣. 17. Thou ſhalt not pervert the judgment of the ſtranger, nor of the fatherleſs, &c.] Who are unable to defend themſelves, and have but few, if any to take their part; and therefore particular care ſhould be taken by judges and civil magiſtrates to do them juſtice, or God will require it of them: nor take a widow's raiment to pledge; nor any thing elſe, as her ox or cow, Job xxiv. 3. according to the Jewiſh canons [r], of a widow, whether ſhe is poor or rich, a pledge is not taken; the reaſon given for which is, that it would raiſe an ill ſuſpicion, and cauſe an evil report of her among her neighbours [s]; and which is ſuggeſted by the Targum of Jonathan, "neither ſhall any of you take for a pledge the raiment of a widow, leſt wicked neighbours ſhould ariſe, and bring an evil report upon her, when ye return the pledge unto her." But no doubt a poor widow is meant, and the deſign of the law is mercy to her, and that ſhe might not be diſtreſſed by taking that from her ſhe needed.

℣. 18. But thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bond-man in Egypt, &c.] The remembrance of which may cauſe ſympathy with perſons in diſtreſs; particularly the ſtranger, the fatherleſs, and the widow: and the Lord thy God redeemed thee thence; the Targum of Jonathan, "the Word of the Lord thy God;" which, as it was an act of great kindneſs and mercy in God to them, taught them, and laid them under obligation to ſhew favour to their fellow creatures in diſtreſs: therefore I command thee to do this thing; not to pervert the judgment of the ſtranger and fatherleſs, nor take a widow's raiment for a pledge; and it may be carried farther into the context, and reſpect the laws about the pledge of the poor man, and giving the hired ſervant his wages in due time.

℣. 19. When thou cutteſt down thine harveſt in thy field, &c.] Whether barley-harveſt or wheat-harveſt, when either of them are ripe for cutting, mowing, or reaping, and are cutting down: and haſt forgot a ſheaf in the field; Jarchi ſays, the phraſe in the field is uſed to include ſtanding corn, ſome of which is forgotten in cutting down, and ſo is ſubject to this law as well as a ſheaf; and a ſheaf claimed by this name is one that is forgotten both by the workman and the owner; if by the one and not by the other, it could not be ſo called. The canon runs thus [t], "a ſheaf which the workmen forget, and not the owner, or the owner forgets, and not the workmen, before which the poor ſtand, or is covered with ſtraw or ſtubble, is not a forgotten ſheaf." And about this they have various other rules; "a ſheaf that is near the gate (of a field), or to an heap (of ſheaves), or to oxen, or to inſtruments, and left, the houſe of Shammai ſay it is not to be reckoned a forgotten ſheaf; but the houſe of Hillell ſay it is;—two ſheaves are reckoned forgotten, three are not; a ſheaf in which there are two ſeahs (about a peck and a half) and they leave it, it is not reckoned forgotten [u]:" thou ſhalt not go again to fetch it; which ſuppoſes a remembrance of it, or ſome intelligence about it when at home, and after the field has been cleared, and

The Targum of Jonathan is, that the word of the Lord thy God may bleſs thee, &c.

℣. 20. When thou beateſt thine olive-tree, &c.] With ſticks and ſtaves, to get off the olives when ripe: thou ſhalt not go over the boughs again; to beat off ſome few that may remain; they were not nicely to examine the boughs over again, whether there were any left or no: it ſhall be for the ſtranger, for the fatherleſs, and the widow; who might come into their olive-yards after the trees had been beaten, and gather what were left.

℣. 21. When thou gathereſt the grapes of thy vineyard, &c.] Which was done much about the ſame time that the olives were gathered, and both after wheat-harveſt, about the latter end of June, or beginning of July; for they were more forward in thoſe hot countries: thou ſhalt not glean it afterwards; go over the vines a ſecond time, to pick off every berry or bunch that eſcaped them at firſt gathering: it ſhall be for the ſtranger, for the fatherleſs, and the widow; as the forgotten ſheaf, and the olive-berries left; theſe are all ſuppoſed to be poor perſons, otherwiſe no doubt there were ſtrangers, and fatherleſs perſons, and widows, in good circumſtances; who, as they needed not, ſo neither would give themſelves the trouble, but think it beneath them to go into fields, olive-yards, and vineyards, to gather what was left by the owners. Theſe laws were made in favour of the poor, that mercy and kindneſs might be ſhewed to them, and that they might have a taſte of all the fruits of the earth.

℣. 22. And thou ſhalt remember that thou waſt a bondman in the land of Egypt, &c.] When they would have been glad to have enjoyed the like favours, as ſmall as they might ſeem to be, even to glean in their fields, vineyards, and olive-yards: therefore I command thee to do this thing; to ſuffer the poor to take the forgotten ſheaf, and to come into their olive-yards and vineyards, and gather what olives and grapes remained after the firſt beating of the one, and the in-gathering of the other.

CHAP. XXV.

SEVERAL laws are contained in this chapter, as concerning beating ſuch whoſe crimes required it, ℣. 1, 2, 3. of not muzzling the ox in treading out the corn, ℣. 4. of marrying a deceaſed brother's wife, when there was no iſſue, and of the diſgrace of ſuch that refuſed it, ℣. 5—10. of the puniſhment of an immodeſt woman, ℣. 11, 12. and againſt bad weights and meaſures, ℣. 13—16. and for the utter deſtruction of Amalek, ℣. 17, 18, 19.

℣. 1. If there be a controverſy between men, &c.] Between two or more: and they come unto judgment; into a court of judicature, bring their cauſe thither: that the judges may judge them; who were never leſs than three; the great ſanhedrim at Jeruſalem conſiſted of 71, the leſſer court was of 23, and the leaſt of all three only: then they ſhall juſtify the righteous, and condemn the wicked; acquit the one, whoſe cauſe is good, and adjudge the other to puniſhment, who is guilty of a crime, and as that deſerves; which is to do righteous judgment; the contrary to this is an abomination to the Lord, Prov. xvii. 15.

℣. 2. And it ſhall be if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, &c.] There were four kinds of death criminals were put to by the Jews, ſtoning, ſtrangling, burning, and ſlaying with the ſword; and ſuch crimes as did not ſubject to theſe, were puniſhed with beating or ſcourging; and who they were that were worthy to be beaten, is at large ſet forth in the Miſnic treatiſe called Maccoth [x], or ſtripes, which are too many to be tranſcribed. Maimonides ſays [y], that all negative precepts in the law, for the breach of which men are guilty of cutting of, but not of death by the ſanhedrim, are to be beaten. They are in all 21; and ſo all deſerving of death by the hand of heaven; and they are 18; and all negative precepts of the law broken, for which there is neither cutting off, nor death by a court of judicature, for theſe men are to be beaten, and they are 168; and all that are to be beaten are found to be 207: that the judge ſhall cauſe him to lie down; which ſeems to be on the floor of the court, ſince it was to be done immediately, and in the preſence of the judge; and the Jews gather [z] from hence, that he was to be beaten neither ſtanding, nor ſitting, but bowed; that is, ye ſhall command or order him to lie down, or to fall upon the ground with his face towards it: and to be beaten before his face; in the preſence of the judge, that the ſentence might be properly executed, neither exceeded nor diminiſhed; and indeed all the judges were to be preſent, eſpecially the bench of three; for whilſt he was beating, the chief of the judges read the paſſage in Deut. xxviii. 58. and he that was next to him counted the ſtrokes, and the third at every blow ſaid ſmite [a]: of the manner of beating or ſcourging, ſee the note on Matt. x. 17. according to his fault, by a certain number; as his crime and wickedneſs was more or leſs heinous, more or fewer ſtripes were to be laid on him; as ten or twenty, fewer or more, according to the nature of his offence, as Aben Ezra obſerves, only he might not add above forty; though he ſays there are ſome who ſay that according to his fault the ſtripes are larger or leſſer, but all of them in number forty.

℣. 3. Forty ſtripes he may give him and not exceed, &c.] And that this number might not be exceeded, it is ordered by the Jewiſh canons, that only 39 ſhould be given; for it is aſked [b], "With how many ſtripes do they beat him? with forty, ſave one, as it is ſaid in number forty; that is, in the number which which is next to forty ;" this they make out by joining the laſt word of the preceding verſe with the firſt of this ; and that this was an ancient ſenſe of the law, and cuſtom upon it, appears by the execution of it on the apoſtle Paul ; who was not indulged, but ſuffered the extremity of it as it was then underſtood, 2 Cor. xi. 24. ſee the note there ; moreover, that they might not exceed this number, they uſed to make a ſcourge of three laſhes, ſo that every ſtroke they fetched with it was reckoned for three ſtripes, and 13 of them made 39 ; wherefore if they added another ſtroke, it would have exceeded the number of ſtripes by two : leſt if he ſhould exceed, and beat him above theſe with many ſtripes ; they might diminiſh them, if a man was weak, and not able to bear them ; but they might not exceed them, if a man was as ſtrong as Samſon, as Maimonides [c] ſays : then thy brother ſhould ſeem vile unto thee ; as if he was a beaſt, and not a man, and much leſs a brother. The Targum of Jonathan is, " leſt he be in danger, and thy brother be vile ;" leſt he be in danger of his life, and become vile, as a dead carcaſe ; ſo the apoſtle calls dead bodies vile bodies, Phil. iii. 21. or in danger of being maimed, and becoming lame or deformed, and ſo be contemptible : and this puniſhment of beating with the Jews was not reckoned according to their writers reproachful, and as fixing a brand of infamy upon a perſon ; but they were ſtill reckoned brethren, and reſtored to their former dignities, whatſoever they poſſeſſed ; ſo Maimonides [d] ſays, " whoever commits a crime, and is beaten, he returns to his dignity, as it is ſaid, leſt thy brother be vile in thine eyes ; when he is beaten, lo, he is thy brother ;—an high-prieſt that commits a crime, is beaten by three, (i. e. a bench of three judges, by their order) as the reſt of all the people, and he returns to his grandeur ; but the head of the ſeſſion, (or court of judicature), that commits a crime, they beat him, but he does not return to his principality, nor even return to be as one of the reſt of the ſanhedrim ; for they aſcend in holineſs, but do not deſcend." And yet Joſephus repreſents it as a moſt infamous and ſcandalous puniſhment, as one would think indeed it ſhould be ; his words are [e], ſpeaking of the laws concerning travellers being allowed to gather grapes, and pluck ears of corn as they paſſed ; " he that does contrary to theſe laws, receives forty ſtripes ſave one with a public ſcourge ; a free man undergoes this moſt filthy (or diſgraceful) puniſhment, becauſe for the ſake of gain he reproaches his dignity."

℣. 4. Thou ſhalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn, &c.] As oxen are uſed in plowing, ſo likewiſe in treading or beating out the corn ; of the manner of which, ſee the note on 1 Cor. ix. 9. now whilſt it was thus employed, it might not be reſtrained by any means from eating the corn as it had an opportunity, either by a muzzle put over its mouth, or other ways. The Gentiles had ſeveral ways of reſtraining their cattle from eating, whilſt they thus made uſe of them, to which this law is oppoſed. Maimonides [f] has collected ſeveral of them together, as prohibited by it ; as putting a thorn into its mouth, cauſing a lion to lye down by it, or cauſing its calf to lie down without, or ſpreading a ſkin on the top of the corn that ſo it may not eat. Ælianus [g] relates a very particular way of hindering oxen from eating at ſuch times, uſed in ſome countries, which was this ; that oxen might not eat of the ears of corn, in a floor where they were trod out, they uſed to beſmear their noſtrils with cows dung, which was ſo diſagreeable to the creature, that it would not taſte any thing though preſſed with famine. This law is not to be limited to the ox only, or to this peculiar work aſſigned it ; but, as Jarchi ſays, reſpects any ſort of cattle, and whatſoever work that has food in it, none of them being to be reſtrained from eating whilſt at work : and this law was not made for the creatures only, but for men alſo ; and eſpecially for the ſake of miniſters of the word ; who for their ſtrength, labour, and induſtry, are compared to oxen, and ought to be comfortably ſupported and maintained on account of their work ; for the illuſtration and confirmation of which, this paſſage is twice produced, 1 Cor. ix. 9, 10. 1 Tim. v. 17, 18. ſee the notes there.

℣. 5. If brethren dwell together, &c.] Not only in the ſame country, province, town, or city, but in the ſame houſe ; ſuch who had been from their youth brought up together in their fathers houſe, and now one of them being married, as the caſe put ſuppoſes, they that were unmarried might live with him, and eſpecially if the father was dead ; and ſo may except ſuch as were abroad, and in foreign countries, or at ſuch a diſtance that this law could not well be obſerved by them ; though the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi, interpret it of their being united in an inheritance, all by virtue of relation having a claim to their father's inheritance ; ſo that it mattered not where they dwelt, it is the relation that is regarded, and their right of inheritance ; and the above Targum deſcribes them as brethren on the father's ſide, and ſo Jarchi ſays it excepts his brother on the mother's ſide ; for brethren by the mother's ſide, in caſe of inheritance, and the marrying of a brother's wife, were not reckoned brethren, as Maimonides [h] obſerves ; who adds, that there is no brotherhood but on the father's ſide. Some think that when there were no brethren in a ſtrict and proper ſenſe, the near kinſmen, ſometimes called brethren, were to do the office here enjoined, and which they conclude from the caſe of Boaz and Ruth ; but Aben Ezra contradicts this, and ſays that inſtance is no proof of it, it reſpecting another affair, not marriage, but redemption ; and ſays that brethren, abſolutely and ſtrictly ſpeaking, are here meant ; which is agreeable to their tradition [i] : and one of them die, and have no child ; ſon or daughter, ſon's ſon, or daughter's ſon, or daughter's daughter, as Jarchi notes ; if there were either of theſe, children or grand-children, of either ſex, there was no obligation to marry a brother's wife ; ſo in the caſe put to Chriſt, there was no iſſue, the perſon was childleſs, Matt. xxii. 24, 25. Luke xx. 28. the wife of the dead ſhall not marry without unto a ſtranger ; by whom is meant not a Gentile, or a proſelyte of the gate, or of righteouſneſs, but any Iſraelite whatever, that was not of her huſband's family ; ſhe might not marry out of the family ; that is, unleſs ſhe was refuſed by all, the deſign of the law being to ſecure inheritances, and continue them in families to which they belonged : her huſband's brother ſhall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife ; that is, ſuppoſing him to be unmarried, and this is indeed ſuppoſed in the firſt clauſe of the text, by dwelling with his brother ; for had he been married, he would have dwelt with his wife and family apart ; beſides, if this law obliged a married man to marry his brother's wife, polygamy would would be required and eſtabliſhed by a law of God, which was never otherwiſe than permitted. This is to be underſtood of the eldeſt brother, as Jarchi, who is in an unmarried ſtate; ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [i], "the command is upon the eldeſt to marry his brother's wife; if he will not, they go to all the brethren; if they will not, they return to the eldeſt, and ſay to him, upon thee is the commandment, either allow the ſhoe to be plucked off, or marry;" and ſuch a courſe we find was taken among the Jews in our Lord's time, Matt. xxii. 25, 26. and perform the duty of an huſband's brother to her; cohabit together as man and wife, in order to raiſe up ſeed to his brother, and perform all the offices and duties of an huſband to a wife; but the marriage-ſolemnity was not to take place when it was agreed to, until three months or ninety days had paſſed from the death of the brother, that it might be known whether ſhe was with child or no by her huſband, and in ſuch a caſe this law had no force; ſo runs the Jewiſh canon [k], "a brother's wife may not pluck off the ſhoe, nor be married until three months;" that is, after her huſband's death.

℣. 6. And it ſhall be that the firſt-born that ſhe beareth, &c.] To her huſband's brother, now married to her: ſhall ſucceed in the name of his brother; the meaning is, as the Targum of Jonathan, "he ſhall riſe up in the inheritance in the name of his brother;" or, as Jarchi expreſſes it, "he ſhall take the inheritance of the deceaſed in the goods of his father;" that is, he ſhall have his part and ſhare in the inheritance that the deceaſed brother would have had if he had lived, which would come to him by his father: that his name be not put out of Iſrael; that the family be not loſt in Iſrael, and the inheritance belonging to it paſs to another. This law was deſigned to keep families diſtinct, and inheritances in them, until the Meſſiah came, and that it might appear from what family he came; as he did from one in whom, as it is generally thought, this law took place: and it might have ſtill a more ſpecial reſpect to him, as Ainſworth ſuggeſts; for Chriſt in the myſtical ſenſe may be ſignified by the deceaſed brother; he ſtands in the relation of a brother to his people, and has all the love, friendſhip, compaſſion, and condeſcenſion of one; he and they are of one and the ſame Father, of the ſame family, and of the ſame nature, and have the ſame inheritance, they being coheirs with him; nor is he aſhamed to own the relation. This brother of theirs is deceaſed; his death was according to the will of God, what he himſelf agreed to, and was foretold by the prophets; for which purpoſe he came into the world, and did die as to the fleſh, and that for the ſins of his people. Now the Jewiſh church was his wife, by whom he had no children through the law; that church was eſpouſed to him, he ſtood in the relation of an huſband to her, and ſhe in the relation of a wife to him. Very few children were brought forth by her to him, ſee Iſ. liv. 1, 5. Jer. ii. 2. and iii. 1. and xxxi. 32. and none by the law, by which there is no regeneration, but by the goſpel; it is through that, and not the law, the ſpirit and his graces come; or ſouls are born again to Chriſt, renewed and ſanctified. The apoſtles that ſurvived Chriſt, and the miniſters of the goſpel, are his brethren, John xx. 17. and who are inſtruments in begetting ſouls to Chriſt; and theſe are a ſeed raiſed up unto him, and are called not after the name of the apoſtles and miniſters of the word, through whoſe miniſtry they are begotten, 1 Cor. i. 12, 13. and iii. 4, 5. and iv. 15. but after Chriſt; and have the name of Chriſtians, or anointed ones from him, and by which means his name is, and will be continued as long as the ſun endures, Acts xi. 26. Pſ. lxxii. 17.

℣. 7. And the man like not to take his brother's wife, &c.] The proviſion here made by this law, when this was the caſe, is ſuch as did not take place before it became a law; for then Onan would have taken the advantage of it, and refuſed marrying his brother's wife, which 'tis plain was not agreeable to him, Gen. xxxviii. 9. as many do now on one account or another. Leo of Modena [l] ſays, "it was anciently accounted the more laudable thing to take her, than to releaſe her; but now the corruption of the times, and the hardneſs of men's hearts, are ſuch, as that they only look after worldly ends, either of riches, or of the beauty of the woman; ſo that there are very few that in this caſe will marry a brother's widow, eſpecially among the Dutch and Italian Jews, but they always releaſe her:" then let his brother's wife go up to the gate; to the gate of the city, where the judges ſit for public affairs; to the gate of the ſanhedrim, or court of judicature, as the Targum of Jonathan; and this affair was cognizable by the bench of three judges, and might be diſpatched by them; for ſo it is ſaid [m], "the plucking off the ſhoe, and the refuſal of marriage, are by three:" i. e. three judges, which was the loweſt court of judicature with the Jews: unto the elders and ſay; which according to the above Targum were to be five wiſemen, of which three were to be judges, and two witneſſes; and ſhe was to ſay in the Hebrew language, in which according to the Miſnah [n], ſhe was to pronounce what follows: my huſband's brother refuſeth to raiſe up unto his brother a name in Iſrael, he will not perform the duty of my huſband's brother; that is, in a few words, he will not marry her.

℣. 8. Then the elders of his city ſhall call him, &c.] Require him to come before them, and declare his reſolution, and the reaſons for it; recite this law to him, and explain the nature of it, and exhort him to comply with it, or ſhew reaſon why he does not, at leaſt to have his final reſolution upon it: and ſpeak unto him; talk with him upon this ſubject, and give him their beſt advice; and what that was, Maimonides [o] more particularly informs us; if it is good and adviſeable to marry, they adviſe him to marry; but if it is better advice to pluck off the ſhoe, they give it; as when ſhe is young and he is old, or ſhe is old and he young, they adviſe him to allow the ſhoe to be plucked off: and if he ſtand to it, and ſay, I like not to take her; if after all the converſation, debate, and counſel between them, he is reſolute, and abides by his firſt determination, that he will not marry her, then the following method was to be taken.

℣. 9. Then ſhall his brother's wife come unto him in the preſence of the elders, &c.] The time and place being appointed the evening before by three rabbins, and two witneſſes, as Leo of Modena ſays [p]; of which ſhe was apprized, and ordered to come faſting:

ing: and looſe his ſhoe from off his foot; his right foot, which was thus done; "they bring him a leather ſhoe, which has a heel, but not ſewed with linen (linen thread), and he puts it on the right foot, and binds the latchet on his foot, and ſtands, he and ſhe in the court; he fixes his foot on the ground, and ſhe ſits and ſtretches out her hand in the court, and looſes the latchet of his ſhoe from off his foot, and pulls off his ſhoe, and caſts it to the ground [q]:" this he ſuffered to be done to ſhew that he gave up his right to her; and he was ſo uſed by way of reproach, to ſignify that he deſerved not to be reckoned among freemen, but among ſervants and ſlaves, that went barefooted, having no ſhoes on: and in the myſtical ſenſe of it, as Ainſworth obſerves, it ſpiritually ſignified, that ſuch as would not beget children unto Chriſt, (or preach his goſpel for that purpoſe) it ſhould be declared of them that their feet are not ſhod with the preparation of the goſpel of Chriſt, Eph. vi. 15. and ſpit in his face; in a way of contempt, as a token of ſhame and diſgrace; but the Jewiſh writers generally interpret this in a ſofter manner, as if it was not in his face, but in his preſence, upon the floor, and ſeen by the judges [r]: and ſhall anſwer and ſay, ſo ſhall it be done unto the man that will not build up his brother's houſe; that is, in this contemptuous and ſhameful manner ſhall he be uſed.

℣. 10. And his name ſhall be called in Iſrael, &c.] Not his particular and perſonal name, but his family; for it ſeems that not only a mark of infamy was ſet upon him for refuſing to marry his brother's widow, but upon his family alſo: the houſe of him that hath his ſhoe looſed; which, as Leo of Modena ſays [s], was repeated by her three times; and at every time the people with a loud voice anſwer and call him, one that had his ſhoe looſed; and then the rabbin tells the man, that he is at liberty now to marry whom he pleaſes; and if he deſires a certificate from them of this ſetting free his kinſwoman, they preſently give him one; and ſhe alſo had a writing given to her by the judges certifying the ſame, that ſhe was free alſo to marry another; of which the following is a ſhort form or copy [t]. "In ſuch or ſuch a ſeſſion (or court) ſuch an one, the daughter of ſuch an one, plucked off the ſhoe of ſuch an one, the ſon of ſuch an one, before us; ſhe brought him before us, and ſhe looſed the ſhoe of his right foot, and ſpit before him ſpittle, which was ſeen by us upon the ground; and ſaid, So ſhall it be done to the man that would not build up his brother's houſe." A larger form may be ſeen in Maimonides [u], as well as a type and copy of the matrimonial contract. From this law an high-prieſt was free, Lev. xxi. 14. and ſo a king, according to the Jewiſh canon [w].

℣. 11. When men ſtrive together one with another, &c.] Quarrel with one another, and come to blows, and ſtrive for maſtery, which ſhall beat, and be the beſt man: and the wife of the one draweth near for to deliver her huſband out of the hand of him that ſmiteth him; perceiving that his antagoniſt has more ſkill or ſtrength, or both, for fighting, and is an over-match for her huſband, who is like to be much bruiſed and hurt; wherefore to ſave him out of the hands of the ſmiter, ſhe makes up to them to part them, or take her huſband's ſide: and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the ſecrets; or privy parts; in Hebrew his ſhameful parts [x], which through ſhame are hidden, and modeſty forbids to expreſs in proper terms; and ſuch is the purity of the Hebrew language, that no obſcene words are uſed in it; for which reaſon, among others, it is called the holy tongue. This immodeſt action was done partly out of affection to her huſband, to oblige his antagoniſt to let go his hold of him; and partly out of malice and revenge to him, to ſpoil him, and make him unfit for generation, and therefore was to be ſeverely puniſhed, as follows.

℣. 12. Then thou ſhalt cut off her hand, &c.] Which was to be done not by the man that ſtrove with her huſband, or by any by ſtander, but by the civil magiſtrate or his order. This ſeverity was uſed to deter women from ſuch an immodeſt as well as injurious action, who on ſuch an occaſion are very paſſionate and inconſiderate. Our Lord is thought to refer to this law, Matt. v. 30. though the Jewiſh writers interpret this not of actual cutting off the hand, but of paying a valuable conſideration, a price put upon it; ſo Jarchi; and Aben Ezra compares it with the law of retaliation, eye for eye; which they commonly underſtand of paying a price for the eye, tooth, &c. loſt; and who adds, if ſhe don't redeem her hand, (i. e. by a price) it muſt be cut off: thine eye ſhall not pity her; on account of the tenderneſs of her ſex, or becauſe of the plauſible excuſe that might be made for her action, being done haſtily and in a paſſion, and out of affection to her huſband; but theſe conſiderations were to have no place with the magiſtrate, who was to order the puniſhment inflicted, either in the ſtrict literal ſenſe, or by paying a ſum of money.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt not have in thy bag divers weights, &c.] Or, a ſtone and a ſtone [y]; it being uſual in thoſe times and countries, to have their weights of ſtone, as it was formerly with us here; we ſtill ſay, that ſuch a commodity is worth ſo much per ſtone, a ſtone being of ſuch a weight; now theſe were not to be different: a great and a ſmall; great weights to buy with them, and ſmall weights to ſell with them, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it.

℣. 14. Thou ſhalt not have in thine houſe divers meaſures, &c.] Or, an ephah and an ephah; which was one ſort of meaſure in uſe with the Jews, and held above a buſhel; and is put for all others, which ſhould be alike, and not a great and a ſmall; one to buy with, and another to ſell by, as before obſerved; which would be to cheat both ſeller and buyer in their turns; ſee Amos viii. 5.

℣. 15. But thou ſhalt have a perfect and juſt weight, a perfect and juſt meaſure ſhalt thou have, &c.] That is, full weights, and full meaſures; and ſuch as are alike, and every where uſed, according to the ſtandard of the country; ſee the note on Lev. xix. 36. that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee; long life was always reckoned a bleſſing, and is frequently promiſed to obedience, and particularly long life in the land of Canaan; which was a moſt delightful and fruitful land, and which a man might wiſh to live long in; deceitful men are threatened with not living half their days, and ſuch may they be ſaid to be that uſe falſe weights and meaſures, Pſ. lv. 23.

℣. 17. Remember what Amalek did unto thee, &c.] The Amalekites, how they came out againſt them, and fought with them at Rephidim, Exod. xvii. 8. by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt; which was an aggravation of their cruel and inhuman action, that they not only came out againſt them unprovoked, were the aggreſſors, and fell upon them as they were travelling on the road, but when they were juſt come out of Egypt, where they had been in hard bondage, and their ſpirits broken, and they not uſed to war; and ſo took them at all theſe diſadvantages, a people that had not in the leaſt injured them.

℣. 18. How he met thee by the way, &c.] Not with neceſſary proviſions, food, and drink, which would have been but a piece of kindneſs and humanity to travellers; but met them ſword in hand, in order to ſtop their journey, and make them captives, at leaſt to harraſs and diſtreſs them: and ſmote the hindmoſt of them; came upon them in a ſly cowardly manner, and attacked their rear: even all that were feeble behind thee; women and children, and ſuch men as were weak, ſickly, labouring under ſome diſorder, and ſo lagged behind, and could not keep up with the reſt; on theſe Amalek firſt fell, and began his attack here: when thou waſt faint and weary; with travelling, and the more ſo for want of water, which was their caſe at Rephidim, when Amalek came out againſt them; which is another aggravation of their unkind uſage of them they were not to forget: and he feared not God; who was then in the pillar of cloud and fire with Iſrael, which phœnomenon Amalek might ſee, and yet did not fear; and who had done ſuch wonders for Iſrael in Egypt, and had brought them from thence, and had drowned Pharaoh and his hoſt in the Red ſea; of which doubtleſs Amalek had heard, and yet feared not the Lord, who had done ſuch great things.

℣. 19. Therefore it ſhall be, when the Lord thy God hath given thee reſt from all thine enemies round about, &c.] Not only when they had ſubdued the Canaanites, and got poſſeſſion of their land, but when they were clear, and free from all their neighbouring nations, Moabites, Midianites, Edomites, Ammonites, and Philiſtines; wherefore it may be obſerved, that this did not take place, as not immediately after the conqueſt of Canaan, ſo neither in the times of the judges, when they were harraſſed frequently by their neighbours, and not until the times of Saul, the firſt king of Iſrael: in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to poſſeſs it; the ſenſe is, when they were in the full poſſeſſion of the land given them by the Lord, as an inheritance to be enjoyed by them and theirs; and were at an entire reſt from all enemies, and ſo had their hands at liberty to employ againſt Amalek: that thou ſhalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; that is, utterly deſtroy them, ſo that there ſhould be none left of them any where, to put in mind that there ever were ſuch a people on earth; men, women, children, cattle of all ſorts, were to be deſtroyed, and nothing left that belonged unto them; that it might not be ſaid this beaſt was Amalek's, as Jarchi, and to the ſame purpoſe Aben Ezra; ſee the order for this renewed, and the accompliſhment of it, at leaſt in part, 1 Sam. xv. 2, 3, &c. thou ſhalt not forget it; neither the unkindneſs of Amalek, nor this order to deſtroy him. The Targum of Jonathan adds, "and even in the days of the king Meſſiah it ſhall not be forgotten."

CHAP. XXVI.

THIS chapter treats of the baſket of firſt-fruits to be brought and preſented to the Lord, and the confeſſion to be made along with it, ℣. 1—11. and of the declaration to be made on the third year, the year of tithing, and the prayer annexed to it, ℣. 12—15. and of the covenant made in a ſolemn manner between God and the people of Iſrael, ℣. 16—19.

℣. 1. And it ſhall be, when thou art come in unto the land, &c.] The land of Canaan, which they were now on the borders of, and juſt entering into: which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance; which is often mentioned, to obſerve that it was not through their merits, but his gift, that they ſhould enjoy the land; and the rather here to enforce the following law concerning the baſket of firſt-fruits: and poſſeſſeſt it, and dwelleſt there in; not only had entered into it, but got the poſſeſſion of it, and ſettled there. This ſhews, as Jarchi obſerves, that they were not bound to the firſt-fruits till they had ſubdued the land and divided it; not as ſoon as they were in it.

℣. 2. That thou ſhalt take of the firſt of all the fruit of the earth, &c.] This oblation of firſt-fruits was different from the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits brought at barley-harveſt in the time of the paſſover, and from the two wave-loaves of wheaten-flower, at wheat-harveſt, at pentecoſt; and from the cake of the firſt of their dough; ſee Lev. xxiii. 10, 17. Numb. xv. 20, 21. They were of one ſort only, theſe of various kinds; though, as Jarchi obſerves, not all firſt-fruits, or the firſt of all ſorts of fruits, were to be brought; for all were not bound to firſt-fruits, but the ſeven kinds only called here the fruit of the earth, and are particularly mentioned in ch. viii. 8. and their manner of obſerving, ſelecting, and gathering their firſt-fruits, as the ſame writer notes, was this; "a man goes into his field, and ſees a fig forward, he binds a ruſh about it for a ſign, and ſays, lo, this is firſt-fruits; and ſo, if he ſees a bunch of grapes, or a pomegranate, forwarder than the reſt, he does the ſame," as is obſerved in the Miſnah [z]: which thou ſhalt bring of thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee; and the land being given them, and ſuch a fruitful one as it was, they needed not to grudge bringing the firſt-fruits of it to the Lord. The quantity they were to bring is not fixed; this was left to their generoſity; but according to tradition, they were to bring the 60th part; ſo ſays Maimonides [a], "the firſt-fruits have no meaſure (no fixed meaſure) measure) from the law; but from the words of the wisemen, a man ought to separate one out of sixty:" and shalt put it in a basket; for the more convenient carriage of them, and for the more decent oblation and waving of them together. The rich brought their first-fruits in baskets of silver and of gold, the poor in wicker baskets of willows barked [b]. The first fruits of the seven several kinds were all put together in one basket, not into separate ones, or into as many as there were kinds; but then, as the last mentioned writer observes [c], "they did not bring them mixed, but the barley (was put) beneath, or lowermost, and the wheat over that; and the olives above that, and the dates over them, and the pomegranates over them, and the figs uppermost in the vessel; and there was some one thing which separated between every kind, as leaves, and the like; and they put about the figs clusters of grapes without:" and thou shalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God shall chuse to place his name there; which, as the event shewed, was the city of Jerusalem; hither from all parts of the country were the first-fruits to be brought. All which may teach us, that we are to honour God with the first-fruits of our increase; that we are to be thankful in every thing, and for every thing we have; and that our mercies should be acknowledged publickly in the place of public worship; and that all our sacrifices of praise should be offered in faith, which may be signified by the basket in which the first-fruits were brought, without which we cannot please God; and this being bore on the shoulder all the while, may denote reverence of God, and a sense of former state and condition, as this might put the Israelites in mind of their carrying loads in Egypt.

℣. 3. And thou shalt go unto the priest that shall be in those days, &c.] Whose course and turn it would be to minister before the Lord; though, according to the Targum of Jonathan, it was the high priest they were to apply to on this occasion; and so Aben Ezra observes, that this law is obligatory all the time there is an high-priest, as if it was not binding when there was none, and all depended on him; who in this case was typical of Christ our high-priest, to whom we must bring, and by him offer up, the sacrifice of praise, even the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to God for all his mercies: and say unto him; what follows, and the basket of first-fruits all the while on his shoulder [d], even if a king: I profess this day; it being done once in a year, and not twice, as Jarchi notes: unto the Lord thy God; directing his speech to the priest: that I am come into the country which the Lord sware unto our fathers for to give us; and not only come into it, but was in the possession of it, and in the enjoyment of the fruits of it; of which the basket of first-fruits he had brought on his shoulder was a token. The natural and moral use of these first-fruits to the Israelites, and the bringing of them, was hereby to own and acknowledge that God was the proprietor of the land of Canaan; that they had it by gift from him, and that they held it of him, the first-fruits being a sort of quit-rent they brought him; and that he was faithful to his oath and promise he had made to their fathers, and which they professed with great humility and thankfulness. The typical use of them was to direct to Christ himself, the first-fruits of them that sleep in him, the first begotten from the dead, the pledge and earnest of the resurrection of his people; to the Spirit of God and his grace, which are the earnest of glory; and to the first converts among Jews and Gentiles, in the first times of the gospel; to Christians in general, who are the first-fruits of God and of the lamb, and to their sacrifices of praise and thankfulness they are to offer up to God through Christ, which are acceptable to him thro' him; and whereby they glorify him as the author of all their mercies, to whom they are to bring their best, and in the first place; see 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23. Rom. viii. 23. and xi. 16. and xvi. 5. Rev. xiv. 4. Heb. xiii. 15.

℣. 4. And the priest shall take the basket out of thine hand, &c.] To wave it, as Jarchi says, putting his hand under the hand of the owner, and so waving it; and this being waved to and fro towards the several corners of the earth, was an acknowledgment of the Lord being the proprietor of it: and set it down before the altar of the Lord thy God; that it might have some appearance of a sacrifice, and be a fit emblem of the spiritual sacrifice of praise, which is accepted upon the altar Christ, which sanctifies every gift.

℣. 5. And thou shalt speak and say before the Lord thy God, &c.] Speak with a loud voice, lifting up the voice, as Jarchi interprets it; or answer [e], to the question the priest will ask, saying, What is this thou hast brought? as Aben Ezra remarks; and this being said in the tabernacle, and before the priest of the Lord, and as in the presence of the Lord, is represented as said before him, which is as follows: a Syrian ready to perish was my father; meaning Jacob, who though born in Canaan, his mother was a Syrian, and his grandfather Abraham was of Chaldea a part of Syria; and Jacob married two wives in Syria, and all his children were born there but Benjamin, and where he lived twenty years; and sometimes persons are denominated, as from the place of their birth, so from the place of their dwelling, as Christ was called a Nazarene from Nazareth, where he dwelt, though he was born at Bethlehem, Matt. ii. 23. and Jether, though an Israelite, as Aben Ezra observes, is called an Ishmaelite, perhaps because he dwelt some time among that people, 1 Chron. ii. 17. Now Jacob might be said to be ready to perish when he fled for his life from his brother Esau, and was poor and pennyless when he came to Laban; so the last-mentioned writer interprets this phrase; to which may be added, that when in his service he was exposed to cold and heat, and had his wages frequently changed, and afterwards when obliged to flee from Laban, was pursued by him with an intention to do him mischief, had not the Lord prevented him. The reason of this part of the confession was to show that it was not owing to the greatness of their ancestors from whence they sprung, whose condition was mean, but to the gift of God, and his goodness, that they enjoyed the land of Canaan. So every sensible soul, when he brings his sacrifice of praise to God for his mercies, especially spiritual ones, frankly acknowledges his lost perishing condition by nature, of which he is sensible; and that in order to magnify the riches of the grace of God in his salvation, to endear Christ as a saviour the more, and to keep humble, and make thankful: and he went down into Egypt; not directly, but some years after his former afflicted circumstances; so the Targum of Jonathan expresses it, "after these things he went down down into Egypt ;" after he had been in periſhing circumſtances in Syria, and when he was ſore preſſed with famine in Canaan : and ſojourned there with a few ; with 70 ſouls as Jarchi : and became there a great nation, mighty and populous ; inſomuch that the king of Egypt was jealous of them, leſt thro' their ſtrength and numbers they ſhould get away from them, when any favourable incident happened ; they being when they came out from thence 600,000 men able to bear arms, beſides women and children.

℣. 6. And the Egyptians evil intreated us, &c.] Ordered their male children to be killed by the midwives, and by another edict to be drowned by the people : and afflicted us ; by ſetting taſk-maſters over them, who put heavy burdens upon them : and laid upon us hard bondage ; in mortar and brick, and all manner of field-ſervice, in which they made them ſerve with rigour, and whereby their lives were made bitter ; ſee Exod. i. 9—22.

℣. 7. And when we cried unto the Lord our God, &c.] As they did by reaſon of their hard bondage, Exod. ii. 23. and the Lord heard our voice, and looked upon our affliction, and our labour, and our oppreſſion ; with a look of pity and compaſſion, heard their cries, anſwered their petitions, and ſent them a deliverer, Exod. ii 25. and iii. 7, 8.

℣. 8. And the Lord brought us forth out of Egypt, &c.] After ſome time : with a mighty hand and with an out-ſtretched arm ; by his almighty power, of which full proof was given by what he then did, Deut. v. 15. and with great terribleneſs ; to Pharaoh and his people, through the plagues that were inflicted on them, eſpecially the laſt, the ſlaying of their firſt-born ; ſee Deut. iv. 34. and with ſigns and with wonders ; wrought by the hands of Moſes and Aaron, meaning the ten plagues often ſo called.

℣. 9. And he hath brought us unto this place, &c.] After forty years travel through the wilderneſs : and hath given us this land, a land that floweth with milk and honey ; an uſual deſcription of the land of Canaan, becauſe of the great fertility of it, and the abundance of good things in it ; ſee Exod. iii. 8.

℣. 10. And now behold I have brought the firſt-fruits of the land, which thou, O Lord, haſt given me, &c.] Directing his ſpeech not to the prieſt, but to the Lord himſelf ; owning that the part of the land he had, and the fruits he enjoyed, were the gifts of God to him, and therefore, as in gratitude bound, brought him the firſt-fruits : and thou ſhalt ſet it before the Lord thy God ; theſe are the words of Moſes, or of the law, directing the man what further he had to do ; and this, as Jarchi thinks, ſhews that he took it after the prieſt waved it, and laid hold on it with his hand whilſt he was reading (his confeſſion) turning and waving : and worſhip before the Lord thy God ; bow before him in a reverend and humble manner, ſenſible of his obligations to him, and dependence on him.

℣. 11. And thou ſhalt rejoice in every good thing, &c.] In all the bleſſings of goodneſs and mercies of life, which God in his kind providence had favoured them with : which the Lord thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thine houſe ; to them and their families, by which they were comfortably provided for : thou and the Levite, and the ſtranger that is among you ; by which it ſeems, that not only a baſket of firſt fruits was brought and preſented to the Lord, which is the perquiſite of the prieſt, but there were others alſo brought, or bought with their money at Jeruſalem, and a ſort of a feaſt kept, which the Levite, and ſtranger or proſelyte, partook of along with the owner ; ſee ch. xii. 11, 12, and xvi. 10, 11. though Jarchi underſtands it of the Levite and ſtranger being obliged to bring the firſt-fruits ; the Levite, he ſays, is bound to the firſt-fruits of the plants in the midſt of his cities, though he had no part in the diviſion of the land ; and the ſame writer ſays, the ſtranger brings the firſt-fruits, but does not proclaim, becauſe he can't ſay, which he ſware to our fathers, ℣. 3. but it is ſaid [f], if his mother was an Iſraeliteſs he might proclaim ; yea, Maimonides [g] ſays, on account of what is ſaid of Abraham, Gen. xvii. 5. who is the father of the whole world ; ſee Rom. iv. 12, 13. becauſe mention is made of rejoicing ; hence it is concluded, as Jarchi ſays, that the proclamation of the firſt-fruits was only made in the time of joy, from Pentecoſt unto the feaſt that a man gathers in his increaſe, and his fruits, and his wine, and his oil ; tho' from that feaſt and onward he may bring but not proclaim ; to the ſame purpoſe ſays the Miſnah [h], from Pentecoſt to the feaſt of tabernacles a man may bring the firſt-fruits, and proclaim ; and even from the feaſt of tabernacles to the dedication of the temple, he may bring, but not proclaim ; the reaſon given in Siphri [i] is, becauſe proclamation is only to be performed in time of joy—and the joy of the year is finiſhed at the end of the feaſt of tabernacles, as in Lev. xxv. 40.

℣. 12. When thou haſt made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increaſe, &c.] Which, according to Maimonides [k], is to be underſtood of the feaſt, in which all tithes are finiſhed, which is the feaſt of the paſſover : the third year, which is the year of tithing ; that is, the third from every ſeventh, when the land lay untilled. Every year a tithe was paid to the Levites ; and beſides that a ſecond tithe, which was carried to Jeruſalem and eaten there ; and every third year it was eaten at home, in their towns and cities in the country inſtead of it, with the Levite, poor and ſtranger, and was called the poor's tithe ; and hence the Targum of Jonathan here calls this year the year of the poor's tithe, as was alſo the ſixth year, and was reckoned not compleat till the paſſover in the following year, as the Jewiſh writers [l] ſay ; and hath given it unto the Levite, the ſtranger, the fatherleſs and the widow ; that is, the poor's tithe of the third year, which theſe were to eat of with the owner, ch. xiv. 28, 29. though the Jews commonly diſtinguiſh the Levite from the reſt, and ſuppoſe that both firſt and ſecond tithes are meant, the one to be given to the former, and the other to the latter ; ſo the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi : that they may eat within thy gates, and be filled ; for this was a conſiderable entertainment, a ſort of a feaſt, a full meal however ; hence it is concluded, as Jarchi ſays, that they did not give leſs of corn to a poor man than half a kab of wheat, which was above three pints.

℣. 13. Then thou ſhalt ſay before the Lord thy God, &c.] Make the following declaration as in his his preſence; for this was not made in the tabernacle or temple at Jeruſalem, ſince the tithe was to be eaten with the poor in the gates of the owner, as in the preceding verſe; I have brought away the hallowed things out of mine houſe; which Aben Ezra and Onkelos interpret of the tithe; but it ſeems beſides that, to take in every thing devoted to all holy uſes, be they what they will, which were at this time to be ſeparated from a man's own common goods, and applied to the purpoſes for which they were deſigned and devoted, and particularly what was to be given to the poor: and alſo have given them unto the Levite, and unto the ſtranger, to the fatherleſs, and to the widow, according to all thy commandments which thou haſt commanded me; giving to each according as the law directs; which the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi interpret as before, giving the firſt tithe to the Levites, and the ſecond tithe to the reſt: I have not tranſgreſſed thy commandments, neither have I forgotten them: neither broken them wilfully, nor omitted them thro' careleſsneſs, negligence, and forgetfulneſs, but was mindful to obſerve them punctually and exactly.

℣. 14. I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, &c.] When in grief and ſorrow on account of any afflictive circumſtance, for theſe were to be eaten with joy, ℣. 11. and ch. xvi. 11. and eſpecially of the loſs of relations by death, when holy things were not to be eaten by ſuch perſons; ſee Lev. x. 19. and particularly tithes, though it is ſaid [n], "what is doubtful of tithing (whether it has been tithed or no) might be eaten by a mourner;" and a man was reckoned ſuch an one until his dead was buried. So Maimonides [o] obſerves, "a mourner may not eat holy things, as it is written Deut. xxvi. 14. he is one whoſe relation is dead, when he is obliged to mourn; for he is called by the law a mourner as long as the dead lies upon the face of the earth (above ground) or as long as he is not yet buried, he is called a mourner; and ſo likewiſe on the day of burial:" neither have I taken away ought thereof for any unclean uſe; or common uſe, or any other uſe than it was deſigned for, and devoted to; or for any unclean perſon, who by the law might not eat thereof; or, as Jarchi interprets it, that he had not removed it, or taken it away from being eaten, on account of any unclean perſon, becauſe I am unclean and he pure, or he pure and I unclean: nor given ought thereof for the dead; for the neceſſities of the dead, as Aben Ezra; more particularly Jarchi, to make for him a coffin and grave-clothes; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan interprets it of grave-clothes for the dead; though that of Jeruſalem of clothes for thoſe that are polluted by the dead. It may have reſpect alſo to the parentalia, or funeral feaſts made at the interment of the dead; though Aben Ezra ſays there are ſome that ſay it was for idolatry, and ſo the perſon here ſpeaking denies that he had made uſe of any of the holy things in honour of idols, of dead men deified; and ſome are of opinion, that all the above things may have ſome reſpect to idolatrous practices [p]: but I have hearkened to the voice of the Lord my God, and have done according to all that thou haſt commanded me; obſerved his word, and kept cloſe to it, and not ſwerved from it, but acted according to it in all things before referred to.

℣. 15. Look down from thy holy habitation from heaven, &c.] This is a prayer of the perſon that makes the above declaration annexed to it, deſiring that God would vouchſafe to look with an eye of love, complacency, and delight, upon him and upon all his people, from heaven his holy habitation, though they were on earth, and unholy perſons in themſelves, and eſpecially if compared with him; ſee Iſ. lvii. 15. and lxiii. 15. and bleſs thy people Iſrael; with bleſſings temporal and ſpiritual: and the land which thou haſt given us; with fertility and plenty of all good things, that it might be as thou ſwareſt to our fathers, a land flowing with milk and honey; ſee ℣. 9.

℣. 16. This day the Lord thy God hath commanded thee to do theſe ſtatutes and judgments, &c.] Theſe are the words of Moſes, as Aben Ezra rightly obſerves, and refer not only to the laws laſt mentioned, but to all others which he had repeated, or the Lord by him had ordered to be obſerved, recorded in this book: and though it is very probable Moſes had been ſeveral days repeating former laws, and acquainting them with new ones; yet this being the laſt day, in which the whole account was finiſhed, they are ſaid to be commanded that day, and though commanded that day were to be obſerved and done every day; for, as Jarchi ſays, every day was to be conſidered and reckoned as new, as if on that day they were commanded them: thou ſhalt therefore keep and do them with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul; cordially, readily, willingly, ſincerely, conſtantly, and to the utmoſt of their abilities.

℣. 17. Thou haſt avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, &c.] Said, affirmed, proteſted, and in the moſt ſolemn manner declared, that the Lord was their God, and him only; and that they would have no other God, nor worſhip, ſerve, or obey any other. The Lord is the God of all mankind, as he is the creator and preſerver of them, and was of the people of Iſrael in a peculiar manner, they being choſen, redeemed, and privileged by him above all others; and eſpecially is of his elect in Chriſt among all nations, whom he has loved and ſet apart for himſelf, and determined to ſave; whom he has adopted and regenerated; he provides for them, protects and preſerves them, gives them grace here and glory hereafter: he is their God in Chriſt, and by virtue of the covenant of his grace made with them in him; and is known by them to be ſo in effectual vocation by the application of covenant-bleſſings to them; and which is certified to them by the Spirit of God, upon which they claim their intereſt in him, and make profeſſion of him as their God: and to walk in his ways, and to keep his ſtatutes and his commandments, and his judgments, and to hearken unto his voice; that is, this was then their reſolution and determination, their proteſtation and declaration, to walk in all the ways of God, both in private and in public, he directed unto; and to obſerve all his laws, ceremonial, moral, and judicial, which he had given them as the rule of their walk and behaviour; and to regard whatſoever he ſhould reveal by his prophets and miniſters, as his will; and a view of covenant-intereſt in God lays all good men under the ſtrongeſt obligation in the ſtrength of divine grace to attend to his will; nor can there be a greater motive to them than covenant-love, grace, and mercy.

℣. 18. And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, &c.] Affirmed and declared them to be his ſpecial people, above all people on the face of the earth, and that they were looked looked upon and conſidered by him as his jewels, his peculiar treaſure: as he hath promiſed thee; on condition of their obedience to him, as he did in Exod. xix. 5. and that thou ſhouldeſt keep all his commandments; at the ſame time declared this as his will, that they ſhould obſerve all his precepts, to which they were laid under obligation by the ſpecial favour and peculiar privileges he beſtowed upon them, Deut. vii. 6, 7. The Targums interpret both theſe verſes of the people of Iſrael chuſing and making the Lord their king, and of his being made king over them; and ſo it reſpects their peculiar form of civil government, being a theocracy. The Lord's people in Chriſt are a peculiar people; they are diſtinct from all people, and are peculiarly regarded by him; they are the objects of his peculiar love, and receive peculiar favours from him; and whom having choſen and redeemed, he calls by his ſpecial grace, and witneſſes their ſpecial relation to him by his Spirit; which grace obliges and excites them to a chearful obedience to his commands.

℣. 19. To make thee high above all nations, &c.] None of them having the Lord to be their God and king, in ſuch ſenſe as Iſrael, nor they his people in ſuch a peculiar ſenſe as they were; nor having ſuch laws and ſtatutes as he had given to them; theſe things gave them a ſuperiority over all other nations: which he hath made, in praiſe, and in name, and in honour; that is, which nations he made praiſe-worthy, famous, and honourable, for their extent, wealth, riches, and number; and yet on the above accounts Iſrael was advanced higher than they: and that thou mayeſt be an holy people unto the Lord thy God, as he hath ſpoken; the end of the Lord in being their God, and making them his people, was not only to make them high above all others, but to make them more holy than others; to ſet them apart for himſelf, as a people ſacred to his worſhip and ſervice, as he had both determined and declared, ch. vii. 6, 7.

CHAP. XXVII.

IN this chapter the people of Iſrael are ordered to write the law on plaſtered ſtones, and ſet them on mount Ebal, ℣. 1—4. where they are bid to erect an altar, and offer ſacrifices on it, ℣. 5—8. and are charged by Moſes and the prieſts to obey the Lord, and keep his commandments, ℣. 9, 10. and a direction is given to the ſeveral tribes which ſhould ſtand and bleſs, and which curſe, and where, ℣. 11, 12, 13. and the curſes which the Levites ſhould pronounce with a loud voice, and the people ſhould ſay Amen to, are recited, ℣. 14—25. and the whole is concluded with a curſe on all who in general do not perform the whole law, ℣. 26.

℣. 1. And Moſes with the elders of Iſrael commanded the people, ſaying, &c.] The ſeventy elders, at the head of whom was Moſes, which made the great ſanhedrim, or council of the nation; Moſes having recited all the laws of God to the people, theſe joined with him in an exhortation to them to obſerve and obey them: keep all the commandments which I command you this day; not in his own name, as being the ſupreme legiſlator, but in the name of the Lord whom they had avouched to be their God and king, from whom he had received them.

℣. 2. And it ſhall be on the day when you ſhall paſs over Jordan, &c.] Not the preciſe day exactly, but about that time, a little after they paſſed that river, as ſoon as they conveniently could; for it was not till after Ai was deſtroyed, that the following order was put in execution; indeed as ſoon as they paſſed over Jordan, they were ordered to take twelve ſtones, and did; but then they were ſet up in a different place, and for a different purpoſe; ſee Joſh. iv. 3, 8, 9. and viii. 31. unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, that thou ſhalt ſet thee up great ſtones; not in Jordan, as Jarchi, but on mount Ebal, ℣. 4. nor had the ſtones ſet up in Jordan any ſuch inſcription as what is here ordered to be ſet on theſe: and plaiſter them with plaiſter; that ſo words might be written upon them, and be more conſpicuous, and more eaſily read.

℣. 3. And thou ſhalt write upon them all the words of this law, &c.] Not the whole book of Deuteronomy, as ſome think, at leaſt not the hiſtorical part of it, only what concerns the laws of God; and it may be only a ſummary or abſtract of them, and perhaps only the ten commandments. Joſephus [q] is of opinion, that the bleſſings and the curſes after recited were what were written on them: when thou art paſſed over; that is, the river Jordan: that thou mayeſt go in unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, a land flowing with milk and honey; this account of the land of Canaan is ſo frequently obſerved, to imprint upon their minds a ſenſe of the great goodneſs of God in giving them ſuch a fruitful country, and to point out to them the obligation they lay under to obſerve the laws of God ordered to be written on plaſtered ſtones, as ſoon as they came into it: as the Lord God of thy fathers hath promiſed thee; Exod. iii. 8.

℣. 4. And therefore it ſhall be, when ye be gone over Jordan, &c.] Some time after they had paſſed that river: that ye ſhall ſet up theſe ſtones which I command you this day, in mount Ebal; a mountain near Shechem in Samaria, and was, as Benjamin of Tudela ſays [r], dry as ſtones and rocks itſelf, and perhaps had its name, as ſome think [s], from the root in the Arabic language which ſignifies to ſtrip a tree of its leaves, and a derivative from it, white ſtones and a mountain in which ſuch are found. Hither the ſtones commanded to be ſet up were to be brought, and fixed here; from whence it is not certain; it may be from ſome part of the mountain. Here the Samaritan verſion has Gerizzim inſtead of Ebal, which is generally thought to be a wilful corruption of the Samaritans, in favour of their temple built at Gerizzim: and thou ſhalt plaiſter them with plaiſter; as before directed, ℣. 2.

℣. 5. And there ſhalt thou build an altar to the Lord thy God, &c.] On the ſame mountain, tho' not of the ſame ſtones. Jarchi's note is, "after that (the ſetting up of the plaſtered ſtones) thou ſhalt bring from thence (from Jordan) others, and build of them an altar on mount Ebal;" but Joſephus [t] places this altar not on mount Ebal, but between that and Gerizzim. This altar, he ſays, was ordered ordered to be built towards the riſing ſun, not far from the city Shechem, between two mountains, Gerizzim and Ebal; but the text is expreſs, that it was to be built where the ſtones were ſet up, which was on mount Ebal, and there it was built, Joſh. viii. 30. an altar of ſtones; of whole ſtones, as in the next verſe, not broken, nor hewed, but rough as they were when taken out of the quarry: thou ſhalt not lift up any iron tool upon them; to hew them, and make them ſmooth; ſee the note on Exod. xx. 25.

℣. 6. Thou ſhalt build the altar of the Lord thy God of whole ſtones, &c.] And of ſuch Joſhua did build it, Joſh. viii. 31. and thou ſhalt offer burnt-offerings thereon unto the Lord thy God; and very likely ſin-offerings too; for theſe frequently went together, the one to make atonement for ſin, and the other as a gift, and by way of thankfulneſs for the acceptance of the former; and both typical of Chriſt, the true ſacrifice, and the antitype of all the legal ſacrifices.

℣. 7. And thou ſhalt offer peace-offerings, &c.] Part of which belonged to God, which was burnt on the altar, and another part to the prieſt that offered them; and the reſt to the owner that brought them, which he eat of with his friends; ſo it follows: and ſhalt eat there, and rejoice before the Lord thy God; now this altar where theſe ſacrifices were offered, was on the very ſpot where the ſtones were on which the law was written; and may point at the gracious proviſion God has made for the redemption of his people from the curſe of it by Chriſt, who became a ſubſtitute for them in their law-place and ſtead. The altar being of rough unhewn ſtones was a type of him in his human nature, who is the ſtone in the viſion cut out of the mountain without hands; and being unpoliſhed, may denote the meanneſs of his outward appearance, on account of which he was rejected by the Jewiſh builders; and no iron tool being to be lifted up on them, may ſignify that nothing of man's is to be added to the ſacrifice and ſatisfaction of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and this being in Ebal, where the curſes were pronounced, ſhews that Chriſt by the offering up of himſelf for the ſins of his people has made atonement for them, and thereby has delivered them from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for them; all which is matter of joy and gladneſs to them.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt write upon the ſtones all the words of this law, &c.] Not upon the ſtones of the altar, but upon the firſt ſtones brought to mount Ebal, and ſet up there before, and on which the words were inſcribed before the altar was erected; though according to the Miſnah [u] the altar was built of theſe ſtones, and on that the law written; for it is ſaid, "they ſhall bring the ſtones (℣. 2, 4.) and build the altar, and plaſter it with plaſter, and write upon it all the words of the law:" with which Joſephus agrees, who ſays [w], "that when Moſes was about to die, he ordered the bleſſings and the curſes to be written on the altar, on both ſides of it:" could this be made clearly to appear, it would be eaſy to obſerve the accompliſhment of it in Chriſt, who was made under the law, became ſubject to it, had it written on his heart, obeyed the precepts and bore the penalty of it, and had all the curſes of it laid on him, and thereby redeemed his people from them. However, be it on which it may that the words of the law were written, they were written very plainly; ſo that they might be eaſily read; in 70 languages, according to the Jewiſh writers; which they ſay was done, that whoever would learn the law might learn it, and ſo the Gentiles had no excuſe [x]; for it is a prevailng notion with them, that there were ſo many nations and languages. The law being written on ſtones denotes the duration of it, which continued not only during the times of the old teſtament-diſpenſation, and to the times of John, and had its fulfilment in Chriſt, but ſtill continues; for though Chriſt has redeemed his people from the curſe and condemnation of it, yet it is in his hands as a rule of direction to them as to their walk and converſation; nor is it made void by any doctrine of the goſpel, and nothing more ſtrongly enforces obedience to it than the goſpel. The moral law is immutable, invariable, and eternal in its nature, and in the matter of it. This may alſo point at the hardneſs of men's hearts, their non-ſubjection to the law, and diſobedience of it; and theſe ſtones being covered with plaſter, may be an emblem of formaliſts and hypocrites, who are like whited walls and ſepulchres, have a form of the law in their heads, but not in their hearts; are Jews outwardly, but not inwardly; externally righteous before men, as if they were ſtrict obſervers of the law, but internally very wicked; and have hard, blind, and impenitent hearts, under the cover of the law, and a profeſſion of ſtrict regard to it; and this being done on the ſame mount where the curſes were pronounced, ſhews that they were on account of the breach of this law.

℣. 9. And Moſes and the prieſts the Levites ſpake unto all Iſrael, &c.] The prieſts who were Levites, as all the prieſts that were lawful ones were; and there were none but ſuch at this time, who were Eleazar and Ithamar, and their ſons; theſe joined with Moſes in the following exhortations to the people of Iſrael, as being particularly concerned in inſtructing them in the knowledge of the laws, and in ſeeing them put in execution: ſaying, take heed, and hearken, O Iſrael; to what was about to be ſaid unto them, as well as to what had been ſaid: this day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God; they were his people before; he had choſen them to be his ſpecial people above all others; he had redeemed them out of Egypt; he had led them through the wilderneſs, and provided for them and protected them there, and had given them laws and ſtatutes to obſerve to walk in; all which ſhewed them to be his peculiar people: but now in a very formal and ſolemn manner they were avouched and declared by him to be his people, and they had ſolemnly avouched and declared that he was their God and king; and every day, according to Jarchi, was to be conſidered as this day, as if it was the day of entering into covenant with him.

℣. 10. Thou ſhalt therefore obey the voice of the Lord thy God, &c.] In whatſoever he directs in his word, and by his prophets, and eſpecially by his Son, eminently called the Word of the Lord: and do his commandments and his ſtatutes, which I command thee this day; ſee the note on ℣. 1.

℣. 11. And Moſes charged the people the ſame day, &c.] That he gave the above orders to ſet up ſtones, and plaſter them, and write the law on them, and build an altar in the ſame place, and offer ſacrifices when come into the land of Canaan: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 12. Theſe ſhall ſtand upon mount Gerizzim to bleſs the people, when ye are come over Jordan, &c.] Which

Which was a mountain in Samaria oppoſite to mount Ebal, a valley of a furlong broad lay between them [y]; and according to Hillerus [z], had its name from being broken off from that, they being, as it ſhould ſeem, originally one mountain, and now two tops of the ſame; ſo Burchard; but others think it ſignifies the mountain of the mowers or cutters down [a]; that is, of graſs or corn, being a very fruitful one; and Benjamin of Tudela ſays [b], that in his time, on mount Gerizzim were fountains and orchards; and being ſuch a fertile mountain, it was very proper to bleſs upon. Mr. Maundrel [c], a late traveller in thoſe parts, ſays, "though neither of the mountains have much to boaſt of as to their pleaſantneſs, yet as one paſſes between them, Gerizzim ſeems to diſcover a ſomewhat more verdant fruitful aſpect than Ebal; the reaſon of which may be, becauſe fronting towards the north it is ſheltered from the heat of the ſun by its own ſhade; whereas Ebal looking ſouthward, and receiving the ſun that comes directly upon it, muſt by conſequence be rendered more ſcorched and unfruitful." Joſephus [d] ſays, that Gerizzim was on the right hand, and Ebal on the left; which may ſerve to ſtrengthen the obſervation of Ainſworth, in alluſion hereunto, that in the laſt judgment thoſe on the right hand will be pronounced bleſſed, and thoſe on the left hand curſed: Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Iſſachar, and Joſeph, and Benjamin; theſe appointed for bleſſing were children of the miſtreſs, or free-woman, as Aben Ezra and many others have obſerved; the four firſt were the ſons of Leah, and the two laſt the ſons of Rachel, and therefore employed in the moſt honourable and deſirable ſervice: and who ſo proper to pronounce or receive the bleſſing as the children of the free woman, of Jeruſalem above, which is free, the mother of us all that are born again, and are made free by the Son of God, and are free indeed, and are entitled to all the bleſſings of grace and glory?

℣. 13. And theſe ſhall ſtand upon mount Ebal to curſe, &c.] Which was dry and rocky, barren and unfruitful, and like the earth that bears briars and thorns, is rejected and nigh unto curſing, and ſo a proper place to curſe, and a fit emblem of thoſe to be curſed; ſee Heb. vi. 8. Reuben, Gad, and Aſher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphthali; four of theſe appointed for curſing were the children of the handmaids, Gad, Aſher, Dan, and Naphthali; and ſince two were wanting, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and the ſons of Leah were many, the oldeſt and the youngeſt were taken; Reuben, who had defiled his father's bed, and expoſed himſelf to the curſe of the law, and Zebulun the laſt and youngeſt of Leah's ſons; ſee Gal. iii. 10. and iv. 24, 30.

℣. 14. And the Levites ſhall ſpeak and ſay unto all the men of Iſrael, &c.] Rather, anſwer [e] and ſay; not the whole tribe of Levi, for that ſtood on mount Gerizzim to bleſs, ℣. 12. but the prieſts of that tribe who were placed in the valley, between the two mountains, and pronounced both the bleſſings and the curſes in the hearing of all the tribes of Iſrael, to which they were to anſwer Amen; and that they might plainly hear, they expreſſed their words with a loud voice, clearly and diſtinctly, as follow.

℣. 15. Curſed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, &c.] The bleſſings and the form of them are not recorded, becauſe they were not to be had from the law, and through obedience to it; and therefore there is a profound ſilence about them, to put men upon ſeeking for them elſewhere, and which are only to be had in Chriſt, eſpecially ſpiritual ones; but we may ſuppoſe, they were delivered in the ſame form, and reſpecting the ſame things as the curſes, only juſt the reverſe of them; as, bleſſed is the man that maketh not any graven image, &c. The order of both is given in the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, as in ch. xi. 29. ſee the note there. This curſe reſpects the breach of the firſt table of the law, and every thing included in it relating to the nature and being of God, the worſhip of him, and the honour of his name; to do any thing contrary to which, particularly to make an image, whether graven or molten, to worſhip, is an abomination to the Lord; and therefore ſubjects a man to the curſe of his law, it being the work of the hands of the craftſman; and therefore it muſt be a moſt ſtupid thing to aſcribe deity to it, and worſhip it as ſuch: and putteth it in a ſecret place; though it is not ſet in a place of public worſhip, or in the houſe, ſo as to be ſeen by every one; but in ſome retired place, in a ſecret chamber, and there worſhipped, or kept to look at with pleaſure; which would be a temptation, and lead on to idolatry, and therefore is forbidden, and to be guarded againſt: now one that committed idolatry, or any thing like it, in the moſt ſecret manner, was liable to this curſe; for the omniſcient God, the legiſlator, knows what is done in the moſt private manner, and will reſent and revenge every affront and injury to his honour and glory. And Aben Ezra obſerves, that all that follow reſpect things done in a ſecret way, and which were not cognizable by the civil magiſtrate, and therefore to deter perſons from them theſe curſes were pronounced: and all the people ſhall anſwer and ſay Amen; even thoſe on the one mountain as on the other, thereby approving of, and aſſenting to, the juſtice of the ſentence pronounced.

℣. 16. Curſed be he that ſetteth light by his father or his mother, &c.] That ſecretly deſpiſes them in his heart, and by looks and geſtures mocks at them in a private manner, unſeen by others, Prov. xxx. 17. for if he publickly curſed them, that was cognizable by the civil magiſtrate, and he was to be put to death, Lev. xx. 9. This follows next, as in the order of the ten commands, to that which reſpects the fear and worſhip of God; honouring parents being next to the glorifying of God, the Father of all: and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; applaud the righteous ſentence, ſaying ſo let it be.

℣. 17. Curſed be he that removeth his neighbour's land-mark, &c.] Removes it backward, and ſteals ground, as Jarchi explains it; this is commonly done ſecretly; ſee ch. xix. 14. and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; ſee the notes on the two preceding verſes.

℣. 18. Curſed be he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way, &c.] By directing him wrong knowingly, or laying a ſtumbling-block in his way, Lev. xix. 14. The Targum of Jonathan is, "that maketh a traveller wander out of the way, who is like a blind man;" who knows his way no more than a blind man does. Jarchi interprets it, "that blinds in any thing, and gives evil counſel; ſel;" which leads men to take wrong ſteps, whether in things civil, or moral, or religious; all which are uſually done privately: and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; ſee the notes on ℣. 15, 16.

℣. 19. Curſed be he that perverteth the judgment of the ſtranger, fatherleſs, and widow, &c.] Who have none to aſſiſt them, and take their part, and therefore judges may be tempted to do an unjuſt thing; but God is the patron of them, and takes notice of every injury done them, and is the avenger of all ſuch: and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; ſee as before.

℣. 20. Curſed be he that lieth with his father's wife, &c.] As Reuben did, and which is forbidden Lev. xviii. 8. becauſe he uncovereth his father's ſkirt; ſee ch. xxii. 30. and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; the tribe of Reuben ſaid this as well as the reſt.

℣. 21. Curſed be he that lieth with any manner of beaſt, &c.] See Lev. xviii. 23. and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; as being ſhocking and abhorrent to human nature.

℣. 22. Curſed be he that lieth with his ſiſter, &c.] Which is forbid, Lev. xviii. 9. the daughter of his father, or the daughter of his mother; whether his ſiſter by father or mother's ſide: and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; deteſting ſuch uncleanneſs.

℣. 23. Curſed be he that lieth with his mother-in-law, &c.] See Lev. xviii. 7, 8. All theſe inceſtuous or brutal copulations, may well be ſuppoſed to be done in ſecret: and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; as abhorring ſuch inceſt.

℣. 24. Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly, &c.] And kills him, and the murder is not known; the curſe of God follows ſuch, and overtakes them ſooner or later. Some interpret this of ſmiting with the tongue, of ſecret backbiting and ſlander; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "that ſmiteth with the third tongue;" or falſe accuſation: and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; as diſapproving of and condemning ſuch a practice, even ſlander, and eſpecially murder.

℣. 25. Curſed be he that taketh reward to ſlay an innocent perſon, &c.] As an aſſaſſin, to murder him privately; or as a judge, that takes a bribe to condemn to death an innocent perſon: ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, that according to the ſenſe of ſome a judge is meant; but, ſays he, in my opinion a falſe witneſs; one that ſwears a man's life away for the ſake of a reward given him: and all the people ſhall ſay Amen; at ſo deteſtable a crime.

℣. 26. Curſed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them, &c.] That is, who does not perfectly perform all that the law requires, and continues to do ſo; for the law requires obedience, and that perfect and conſtant, and in failure thereof curſes, in proof of which the apoſtle produces this paſſage, Gal. iii. 10. ſee the note there, for the reconciliation of theſe ſcriptures, as to what ſeeming difference there is between them.

CHAP. XXVIII.

IN this chapter Moſes enlarges on the bleſſings and the curſes which belong, the one to the doers, the other to the tranſgreſſors of the law, the bleſſings, ℣. 1—14. the curſes, ſome of which concern individual perſons, others the whole nation and body of people, and that both under the former and preſent diſpenſations, and which had their fulfilment in their former captivities, and more eſpecially in their preſent diſperſion, ℣. 15—68.

℣. 1. And it ſhall come to paſs if thou ſhalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, &c.] In his law, and by his prophets: to obſerve and to do all his commandments, which I command thee this day; for without obſerving them to do them, hearing them would be to little purpoſe, and they were all of them to be obſerved and done, the leſſer and weightier matters of the law as they were commanded by Moſes in the name of the Lord, and as they would be taught, explained, and enforced by the prophets: that the Lord thy God will ſet thee on high above all nations of the earth; as they were in the times of David and Solomon; ſee the note on ch. xxvi. 19.

℣. 2. And all theſe bleſſings ſhall come on thee and overtake thee, &c.] After mentioned, which ſhould come upon them from God from heaven, by the direction of his providence, and that freely and plentifully, and beyond their expectations and deſerts, and continue with them: if thou ſhalt hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God; obedience to the law being the condition of their coming and continuance; for only temporal bleſſings in the land of Canaan are here intended, as follow.

℣. 3. Bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the city, &c.] Not only in the city of Jeruſalem, where the temple would be built, and there be bleſſed with the ſervice, worſhip, and ordinances of God, but in all other cities of the land; where they ſhould dwell in fine, large, and ſpacious houſes, and their cities ſhould be walled and fenced, and be very populous; yet ſhould enjoy health, and have plenty of all ſorts of proviſions brought unto them, as well as proſper in all kinds of merchandize there, as Aben Ezra notes: and bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the field; in the country villages, and in all rural employments, in ſowing and planting, as the ſame writer obſerves; in all kinds of huſbandry, in the culture of the fields for corn, and of vineyards and olive-yards; all ſhould proſper and ſucceed, and bring forth fruit abundantly.

℣. 4. Bleſſed ſhall be the fruit of thy body, &c.] Their children, of which they ſhould have many, and theſe live; be healthful, thrive, and arrive to manhood, and increaſe and perpetuate their families. Grotius thinks this was eminently fulfilled in Mary, the mother of our Lord; ſee Luke i. 42. and the fruit of thy ground; of their gardens, orchards, and fields; the graſs for the cattle, and the wheat, barley, vines, figs, pomegranates, olives, and dates for the uſe of men: and the fruit of thy cattle; which being diſtinguiſhed from oxen and ſheep in the following clauſe, muſt be underſtood of camels and aſſes, which were uſed for the carriage both of perſons and burdens, and were very ſerviceable, and were a conſiderable part of their ſubſtance in thoſe countries; ſee Job i. 3. the increaſe of thy kine, and the flocks of thy ſheep; of their cows and oxen, and of their ſheep and goats, which were very increaſing creatures, and in the increaſe of which much of their outward happineſs lay; ſee Pſ. cxliv. 13, 14.

℣. 5. Bleſſed ſhall be thy baſket, &c.] Which the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem reſtrain to the baſket of firſt-fruits, and the cake of the firſt of their dough; but it intends any and every veſſel in which they put their proviſions for preſent uſe, and that that ſhould never be empty of them, and that they ſhould always have a ſufficiency: and thy ſtore; what remained, and was laid up in their barns, cellars, and ſtore-houſes, for future uſe, or in proper places for ſeed.

℣. 6. Bleſſed ſhalt thou be when thou comeſt in, and bleſſed ſhalt thou be when thou goeſt out;] In all their buſineſs and employments of life, whether within doors or without; in the adminiſtration of every office, whether more public or private; and in all their journeys going out and coming home; and particularly when they went out to war, and returned, all ſhould be attended with ſucceſs.

℣. 7. The Lord ſhall cauſe thine enemies that riſe up againſt thee to be ſmitten before thy face, &c.] As the Philiſtines, Moabites, Syrians, Edomites, and Ammonites were, eſpecially in the times of David: they ſhall come out againſt thee one way; in a body all together, in large numbers, marching in great order, to give them battle: and flee before thee ſeven ways; be entirely routed, and flee ſome one way, and ſome another, even every way they could take to make their eſcape. The phraſe is expreſſive of an entire victory, and of a compleat rout and diſperſion of an enemy.

℣. 8. The Lord ſhall command the bleſſing upon thee in thy ſtore-houſes, &c.] Barns, granaries, and cellars, where their corn, wine, and oil were laid up; by preſerving the corn from being devoured by vermin, and the caſks of wine and oil from burſting and running out: and in all thou ſetteſt thine hand unto; in all their manufactures, occupations, and trades, in which they were employed, and in the culture of their vines, olives, and other fruit-trees: and he ſhall bleſs thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee; with health and long life in it, and with an abundance of all good things, it being a land flowing with milk and honey.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſhall eſtabliſh thee an holy people unto himſelf, &c.] Having ſeparated them from all others, for his ſervice, honour, and glory, ſhould continue them as ſuch, and ſettle them in the land, and confirm all their privileges, natural, civil, and religious. The Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall eſtabliſh thee, &c." he that brought them out of Egypt, through the Red ſea and wilderneſs, to the land of Canaan: as he hath ſworn unto thee; and to their fathers; ſee Deut. vii. 12, 13. if thou ſhalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways; by which tenure they held the land of Canaan, and had their ſettlement and continuance in it, and enjoyment of all the good things thereof; ſee Iſ. i. 19, 20.

℣. 10. And all the people of the earth ſhall ſee that thou art called by the name of the Lord, &c.] Called his children, his people, his portion, and his inheritance; and that they are his, and he is theirs, by the care he takes of them, the proviſion he makes for them, and the protection they have from him: and they ſhall be afraid of thee; as not only the Canaanites were, but all other nations; ſee ch. xi. 25.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſhall make thee plenteous in goods, &c.] In all temporal good things, give them an affluence of them, even all things richly to enjoy; the Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall, &c." in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground; increaſe their children, cattle, and ſubſtance, as before, ℣. 4. in the land which the Lord ſware unto thy fathers to give thee; the land of Canaan, often thus deſcribed.

℣. 12. The Lord ſhall open unto thee his good treaſure, &c.] The Lord has his treaſures of ſnow and of hail, and of wind, Job xxxviii. 22. Pſ. cxxxv. 7. but here his good treaſure, as appears by what follows, is his treaſure of rain. In the Targum of Jonathan it is ſaid, "there are four keys in the hand of the Lord of the whole world, which he does not deliver into the hands of any prince; the keys of life, and of the grave, and of food, and of rain:" the heaven, to give the rain unto thy land in its ſeaſon; that is, he will open the heaven, where his good treaſure of rain is laid up, and bring it forth on the land of Canaan for the enriching of it; or will open the windows thereof, and pour down the bleſſing; ſee Mal. iii. 10. and that at the proper time, both in autumn and ſpring, the one is called the former, and the other the latter rain; the one was in Marcheſvan, or October, and the other in Niſan, or March, as the Targum of Jonathan; the former rain for the fitting the earth for ſeed, or for watering it when ſown, and the latter for the plumping of it before harveſt: and to bleſs all the work of thine hand; in agriculture, for without the bleſſing of rain, all the labour of the huſbandman would be to little purpoſe: and thou ſhalt lend unto many nations, and thou ſhalt not borrow; ſee the note on ch. xv. 16. The connection of theſe words with what goes before, may lead to obſerve this ſenſe of them, that they ſhould furniſh other countries with corn, and not need any of theirs; ſee Ezek. xxvii. 17.

℣. 13. And the Lord ſhall make thee the head, and not the tail, &c.] Give them dominion over others, and not make them ſubject to them; the head ſignifies rulers and governors, and the tail the common people that are ſubjects; or the one ſuch that are honourable and in high eſteem, and the other ſuch that are mean and baſe; ſee Iſ. ix. 14, 15. the Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall make thee, &c." and thou ſhalt be above only, and thou ſhalt not be beneath; which explains what is meant by head and tail, being uppermoſt and lowermoſt, as the head is the upper part, and the tail the lower part of a creature; the one is more honourable, the other vile: the ſenſe is, that they ſhould be ſuperior to other people in honour and dignity, and not below them, or vaſſals to them: and that thou hearken to the commandments of the Lord thy God, which I command thee this day to obſerve and to do them; which is the condition on which all this happineſs depended.

℣. 14. And thou ſhalt not go aſide from any of the words which I command thee this day, &c.] Depart from them as a rule to walk by, turn out from them as a path to walk in, neglect and diſobey them, and go into practices contrary to them: turning to the right hand or to the left, to go after other gods to ſerve them; which to do was to break the firſt and principal table of the law, than which nothing was more abominable and provoking to God.

℣. 15. But it ſhall come to paſs, if thou wilt not hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, &c.] As directed, exhorted, and encouraged to, ℣. 1, &c. to obſerve to do all his commandments and his ſtatutes, which I command thee this day; both moral and ceremonial: that all theſe curſes ſhall come upon thee; from the hand of God, certainly, ſuddenly, and unawares: and overtake thee; purſuing after thee will come up to thee, and ſeize upon thee, though they may ſeem to move ſlowly; ſee Zech. v. 3, 4.

namely, the curſes which follow. Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael [f] divides them into two parts, the firſt from hence to ℣. 45. which reſpects the deſtruction of the firſt temple, and the things that went before or related to that; and the ſecond from thence to the end of the chapter, which he thinks refers to the deſtruction of the ſecond temple, and their preſent caſe and circumſtances; and it muſt be owned that for the moſt part the diſtinction may ſeem to hold good; what is propheſied of that ſhould befal the Jews for their diſobedience, being more remarkably and diſtinctly fulfilled in the one than in the other; yet there are things in the whole which reſpect both, or that were fulfilled, ſome under one diſpenſation, and ſome under another, and ſome that were fulfilled in both; but chiefly and more manifeſtly, at and ſince their diſperſion by the Romans.

℣. 16. Curſed ſhalt thou be in the city, &c.] From hence to the end of ℣. 19. the curſes are delivered out in form, as the reverſe of the bleſſings in ℣. 3, 4, 5, 6. and by obſerving what the bleſſings mean, the ſenſe of the curſes may eaſily be underſtood, the one being directly oppoſite to the other.

℣. 20. The Lord ſhall ſend curſing, &c.] Which is either a general word for all that follows, or rather, ſince that had been expreſſed before in various inſtances, this may denote ſome particular judgment. Jarchi interprets it of penury, of want of all good things, extreme poverty, ſo as to be reduced to the utmoſt neceſſity, and as to ſtand in need of the common comforts and ſupports of life, and even to have their bleſſings and mercies turned into curſes; the conſequence of which muſt needs be vexation; trouble, diſtreſs, and anguiſh of ſpirit: and rebuke; this may well be conſidered as a rebuke and correction in providence for ſins committed, to awaken to a ſenſe and acknowledgment of them, and to repentance for them: in all that thou ſetteſt thine hand to do; nothing done ſhould proſper, to relieve them under their preſſing wants, a curſe attending all their efforts, and ſo ſad diſappointment follows; and all as a juſt rebuke for their many ſins: and this would be their caſe more or leſs, until thou be deſtroyed, and until thou periſh quickly; through famine, and want of the common neceſſaries of life; as at the ſieges of Samaria and Jeruſalem, by the kings of Syria, Aſſyria, and Babylon: becauſe of the wickedneſs of thy doings, becauſe thou haſt forſaken me; their ſeveral immoralities and impieties, and particularly their idolatry, which was a forſaking the worſhip of the true God, and following idols; an iniquity to be puniſhed by the judge, and of all things the moſt provoking to the Lord.

℣. 21. The Lord ſhall make the peſtilence cleave unto thee, &c.] Not only to come upon them, but to continue with them: until he have conſumed thee from off the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it; which ſhews that this reſpects not ſome particular ſeaſons, when the peſtilence came and continued a while, and then ceaſed, as in the times of David; but when it became more general, and iſſued with other judgments in the utter conſumption of them, as at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, both by the Babylonians and the Romans; at what times the peſtilence raged and remained, until by that and other ſore judgments the land was wholly depopulated.

℣. 22. The Lord ſhall ſmite thee with a conſumption, &c.] An emaciation of their bodies, either through famine or waſting diſeaſes, whereby the fluids are waſhed off, and men are reduced to ſki and bones: and with a fever; a hot burning diſeaſe, which dries up the radical moiſture, conſumes it, and ſo threatens with death; of which there are various ſorts, and ſome very peſtilential and mortal. Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it of a fire in the face, by which they ſeem to mean what is called St. Anthony's fire: and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning; either in the inward parts, as an inflammation of the lungs; or in the outward parts, as carbuncles, burning ulcers, and the like: and with the ſword; in the margin it is, with drought; ſo Aben Ezra interprets the word, which ſeems better to ſuit with what it is in company with; and deſigns either drought in human bodies, occaſioned by fevers, inflammations, and extreme burnings; or in the earth, through the force of the ſun, and want of rain, which render the earth barren and unfruitful, and ſo cauſe a famine: and with blaſting and with mildew; whereby the corn that is ſown, and ſprings up, comes to nothing, being blaſted by eaſt-winds, or turns pale and yellow by the mildew, and ſo withers away; the conſequence of which is want of food, and ſo deſtruction and ruin; ſee Amos iv. 9. and they ſhall purſue thee until thou periſh; follow hard after them, and come ſo cloſe one after another upon them, until they are utterly deſtroyed.

℣. 23. And the heaven that is over thy head ſhall be braſs, &c.] Or like braſs, not for its clearneſs, brightneſs, and ſplendor, or for its being ſpread out like a molten looking glaſs which was of braſs, Job xxxvii. 18. but for its drineſs and hardneſs, no moiſture being in it, or paſſing through it; no ſhowers of rain nor dew being let down from it: and the earth that is under thee ſhall be iron; or like iron, hard and impenetrable, into which the plow and ſpade will not enter; nor any thing ſpring out of it, for want of rain and dew to moiſten and ſoften it. The ſame is ſaid in Lev. xxvi. 19. only there is an inverſion of the figures; there the heaven is ſaid to be as iron, and the earth like braſs, but ſignify the ſame thing.

℣. 24. The Lord ſhall make the rain of thy land powder and duſt, &c.] That is, inſtead of ſhowers of rain in their ſeaſon, to water, refreſh, and enrich the earth, and make it fruitful; and for want of them, and thro' the heat of the ſun, being dried and parched, and its clods crumbled into duſt, this ſhould be raiſed up into the air by the force of winds, and let down again in ſhowers of duſt; whereby the few herbs, plants, or green trees on it, would be utterly deſtroyed: and ſo the Targum of Jonathan interprets it, of the Lord's ſending a wind that ſhould raiſe the duſt and earth upon the herbs of their fields. Such plowing winds, that caſt up the earth and ſand, and duſt into the air, whereby men and cattle are ſometimes covered, are frequent in the eaſtern countries; of which ſee the note on Jon. iv. 8. from heaven ſhall it come down upon thee until thou be deſtroyed; that is, from the air, up to which the duſt is carried by the wind, and then let fall in vaſt quantities, like ſhowers, which are very deſtructive.

℣. 25. The Lord ſhall cauſe thee to be ſmitten before thine enemies, &c.] And by them, as they ſometimes were by the Philiſtines and others, before their utter deſtruction, when they ſinned againſt the Lord; and by the Aſſyrians, Babylonians, and Romans: thou ſhalt go out one way againſt them, and flee ſeven ways before them; march out againſt them in a body, promiſing themſelves victory, but be utterly terly routed; ſo that they ſhall flee every way they can for their ſafety; ſee ℣. 7. and ſhall be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth; this ſhews that Manaſſeh's diſtinction, obſerved ℣. 15. will not ſtrictly and entirely hold good, nor is there any neceſſity to adhere cloſely to it; it is enough that the things threatened and propheſied of were at one time or another fulfilled in theſe people; for neither the ten tribes, when taken captive by Salmaneſer, were carried into all the kingdoms of the earth, only to ſome particular places mentioned in 2 Kings xvii. 6. nor the two tribes by Nebuchadnezzar, who were carried by him to Babylon, and returned from thence again at the end of ſeventy years; but this was exactly fulfilled at their laſt deſtruction by the Romans, when they were ſent by them into divers countries, and have been ever ſince ſcattered about in the ſeveral nations of the world. And yet it muſt be owned that Strabo [g], who wrote before the laſt deſtruction of them, affirms, that it was not eaſy to find any place in the world which had not received them, and was not occupied by them.

℣. 26. And thy carcaſe ſhall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beaſts of the earth, &c.] Which was always reckoned a very grievous calamity, to have no other burial, than in the bowels of beaſts and birds; and was the caſe of many of the Jews in the Antiochian perſecution, Pſ. lxxix. 2. and in a treatiſe of theirs [h], which relates their many afflictions and ſufferings in their preſent captivity, ſpeaking of a perſecution of them in Spain, in the year 5172, it is reported, how that thoſe that fled to avoid puniſhment were killed in the fields, where their carcaſes lying unburied became a prey to beaſts: and no man ſhall fray them away; the fowls and the beaſts; none of their friends being left to do it, and their enemies would not ſhew ſo much reſpect to them, and care of them.

℣. 27. The Lord will ſmite thee with the botch of Egypt, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the leproſy, of that ſort of it called Elephantiaſis, frequent among the Egyptians; ſee the note on Lev. xiii. 2. Thevenot [i] relates, that when the time of the increaſe of the Nile expires, the Egyptians are attended with ſharp prickings in their ſkin like needles. So Vanſleb ſays [k], "the waters of the Nile cauſe an itch in the ſkin, which troubles ſuch as drink of them when the river increaſes. This itch is very ſmall, and appears firſt about the arms, next upon the ſtomach, and ſpreads all about the body, which cauſes a grievous pain; and not only the river-water, but that out of the ciſterns drank of, brings it, and it laſts about ſix weeks." Though ſome take this botch to be the botch and blain which the Egyptians were plagued with for refuſing to let Iſrael go, Exod. ix. 9, 10. and with the emerods; or hœmorrhoides, the piles, a diſeaſe of the fundament, attended ſometimes with ulcers there; ſee 1 Sam. v. 9. and with the ſcab and with the itch; the one moiſt, the other dry, and both very diſtreſſing: whereof thou canſt not be healed; by any art of men; which ſhews theſe to be uncommon ones, and from the immediate hand of God.

℣. 28. The Lord ſhall ſmite thee with madneſs, &c.] At the calamities befallen them, and thro' the force of diſeaſes on them: and blindneſs; not of body, but of mind; with judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart: and aſtoniſhment of heart; at the miſerable condition they and their families ſhould be in.

℣. 29. And thou ſhalt grope at noon-days, as the blind gropeth in darkneſs, &c.] That is, being in darkneſs through the loſs of their ſight; otherwiſe the darkneſs and the light are alike to them, and they grope in the one as well as in the other. This compariſon ſhews that the darkneſs and blindneſs of the Jews threatened them, is to be underſtood not of the darkneſs of their bodily eyes, but of their minds; not being able to underſtand or form a judgment of things, that are as clear as noon-day; and being at the utmoſt loſs what methods to take and purſue, when they are plain and manifeſt before them; but being infatuated and beſotted, follow the luſts and counſels of their own hearts, which lead them wrong: and thou ſhalt not proſper in thy ways; in any ſteps they may take to extricate themſelves out of their difficulties, diſtreſſes, and calamities, or to bring themſelves into eaſy and comfortable circumſtances; to get wealth and riches, and honour and eſteem with men; but, on the contrary, become forlorn and miſerable, poor and wretched, mean and deſpicable: and thou ſhalt be only oppreſſed and ſpoiled evermore; continually, every day, all the days of their lives oppreſſed with taxes and tributes, with mulcts and fines, and ſpoiled of their goods and ſubſtance under one pretence or another; which has been generally their caſe in Popiſh countries; for this ſeems not to refer to the Babyloniſh captivity, where they built houſes, and dwelt in them, and planted gardens, and eat the fruit of them; and in the peace of cities had peace themſelves, Jer. xxix. 5, 6, 7. and no man ſhall ſave thee; from the oppreſſions, exactions, and ſpoils of their enemies, nor deliver them out of their hands; whereas in proceſs of time they had deliverance and ſalvation from the Babyloniſh captivity, by the means of Cyrus king of Perſia.

℣. 30. Thou ſhalt betroth a wife, and another man ſhall lie with her, &c.] Eſpouſe a woman in order to make her his wife, and before he can take her home, and conſummate the marriage, through ſome calamity or another coming upon them, they ſhould be ſet at a diſtance from each other, and ſhe ſhould fall into the hands of another man, who either ſhould raviſh her, or gain her conſent to lie with her, or become his wife; which when the marriage was ſo near being conſummated, muſt be a grievous diſappointment, and a great vexation: thou ſhalt build an houſe, and thou ſhalt not dwell therein; being before it is quite finiſhed, or however before he is got into it, carried captive, or obliged to flee to a diſtant place: thou ſhalt plant a vineyard, and ſhalt not gather the grapes thereof; or make it common, on the fourth year to eat the fruits of it, as Jarchi; which might not be done until ſanctified and redeemed according to the law in Lev. xix. 23, 24, 25. ſee the note on ch. xx. 6.

ſhalt have none to reſcue them; not given them by themſelves, but they ſhould be ſuffered to fall into their hands, and they ſhould never be able to get them out again, nor any for them. Theſe, ſtrictly and literally taken, ſuppoſe them to be in their own land, when thoſe things would be done, where they were poſſeſſed of farms, and fields, and cattle, being much employed in huſbandry; but they may be put for any kind of ſubſtance they would be poſſeſſed of, which they ſhould be ſtript of under one pretence or another; which has been frequently their caſe in their preſent diſperſion in ſeveral countries, and in ours; when Popiſh princes have wanted money, they have made very exorbitant demands on the Jews in their countries, and ſadly ſqueezed and oppreſſed them, and who were not able to reſiſt them, and never had any reſtoration made to them.

℣. 32. Thy ſons and thy daughters ſhall be given unto another people, &c.] This alſo was not true in the Babyloniſh captivity; for then their ſons and daughters went with them, and continued with them, and returned again; but has been oftentimes verified ſince their captivity by the Romans; frequently their ſons and daughters have been taken from them by force, to be brought up in another religion, by the edicts of kings and popes, and by the canons of councils, and particularly of the fourth council of Toledo: and thine eyes ſhall look and fail; with longing: for them all the day long; expecting every day their children would be returned to them, at leaſt wiſhing and hoping they would; their hearts yearning after them, but all in vain: and there ſhall be no might in thy hand; to recover them out of the hands of thoſe who had the poſſeſſion of them, or fetch them back from diſtant countries, whither they were carried. By an edict of the Portugueſe, the children of the Jews were ordered to be carried to the uninhabited iſlands; and when, by the king's command, they were had to the ſhips in which they were to be tranſported, it is incredible, the Jewiſh hiſtorian ſays [l], what howlings and lamentations were made by the women; and there were none pitied them and comforted them, or could help them.

℣. 33. The fruit of thy land, and all thy labour, ſhall a nation which thou knoweſt not eat up, &c.] The ſame was propheſied of by Jeremy, concerning the Babyloniſh captivity, and was fulfilled in it, Jer. v. 17. and has been alſo verified in the frequent pillage and ſpoil of this people, in their preſent ſtate; for though they have no land to till, from whence to gather fruit, yet they are employed in manufactures and merchandize, the fruit and benefit of which they have been frequently ſtript of: and thou ſhalt be only oppreſſed and cruſhed always; this ſeems beſt to agree with their preſent caſe; for in their former captivities, they were not always oppreſſed and cruſhed, but had reſpite and deliverance; ſee the note on ℣. 29.

℣. 34. So that thou ſhalt be mad for the ſight of thine eyes that thou ſhalt ſee;] On account of the ſhocking things ſeen by them, their dreadful calamities, oppreſſions, and perſecutions, ſuch as before related; not only violent diſeaſes on their bodies, which were grievous to behold, as well as their pains were intolerable, and made them mad; but to be deprived of a betrothed wife, a new-built houſe, and a new-planted vineyard; to have an ox ſlain, and an aſs taken away by their enemies, and their ſheep given to them before their eyes; to have their ſons and daughters taken from them, and brought up in another religion, and to be ſtript of their ſubſtance; theſe have made them ſtark mad, inſomuch that they have ſometimes deſtroyed themſelves and their families. In Germany, in their rage and madneſs, they burnt a city and themſelves in it; and, in the ſame country, being ſummoned by an edict to change their religion, or to be burnt, they agreed to meet together in a certain houſe, and deſtroy one another; and firſt parents killed their children, and huſbands their wives, and then killed themſelves; leaving only one perſon to be their door keeper, who finiſhed the tragedy by deſtroying himſelf, as their own hiſtorian relates [m]. Other ſtories of the like kind are reported of them; and ſome, ſuch facts as done in our own nation [n].

℣. 35. The Lord ſhall ſmite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with a ſore botch, that cannot be healed, &c.] Which, in thoſe parts as it is very painful, ſo is not eaſily cured; and this which is threatened was incurable by the art of man, as others in ℣. 27. and which ſhould not ſtop there in the lower parts of the body, but proceed and ſpread: from the ſole of thy foot unto the top of thy head; and ſo be filled with them, as Job was with his boils and ulcers.

℣. 36. And the Lord ſhall bring thee, and thy king which thou ſhalt ſet over thee, &c.] This was fulfilled both in Jehoiachin and in Zedekiah, kings of Judah, who were carried captive to Babylon, by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 15. and xxv. 6, 7. unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; the land of Babylon, which was at a diſtance from them, and is repreſented in ſcripture as afar of, Jer. v. 15. and which the Jews not being a trading people, or dealing in merchandize in foreign parts, were unacquainted with: and there ſhalt thou ſerve other gods wood and ſtone; which they were obliged to do in Babylon, of which it ſeems beſt to underſtand it; for though it may be interpreted of their compliance with the image-worſhip of the Papiſts in their preſent condition, as the former clauſe may be of their rulers and governors, included in the name of king, carried captive by the Romans; who were a nation as little, if not leſs known than the Babylonians: but the former ſenſe ſeems to ſuit beſt here, as this does with ℣. 64. where the language is ſomewhat different, and very appoſite. The Targum of Jonathan is, "ſhall pay tribute to thoſe that worſhip idols of wood and ſtone."

℣. 37. And thou ſhalt become an aſtoniſhment, &c.] To neighbouring nations, that ſhall hear of their overthrow and captivity, and that ſhall ſee the miſerable condition they are brought into: a proverb and a by-word among all nations whither the Lord ſhall lead thee; both for the wickedneſs committed by them, and for the ill uſage of them by the nations among whom they ſhould be, as they were in the Babyloniſh captivity; ſee Jer. xxiv. 9. and now are, it being common to ſay, "do you think I am a Jew?" or, "none but a Jew would have done ſuch a thing."

℣. 38. Thou ſhalt carry much ſeed into the field, &c.] And ſow it plentifully; this and what is ſaid in ſome following verſes, plainly refer to them whilſt in their own land, before carried captive, and not to their preſent caſe and circumſtances: and ſhalt shalt gather but little in at harvest; little springing up, or not coming to perfection, being blighted and blasted, and so yielded but a small crop; see Hagg. i. 9. and chiefly for the following reason: for the locust shall consume it; which is a great destroyer of the fruits of the earth; see Joel i. 4.

℣. 39. Thou shalt plant vineyards, and dress them, &c.] Plant them and prune them, in expectation of much fruit from them: but shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes; so far from drinking of the wine of them, that they should not be able to gather any grapes from them: for the worms shall eat them; a sort of worms pernicious to vines, which the Greeks call ipes, or ikes [o]; and the Latins convolvuli and volvoces, as Pliny [p].

℣. 40. Thou shalt have olive-trees throughout thy coasts, &c.] In the several parts of the land of Canaan, which is therefore called a land of oil-olive, ch. viii. 8. but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil; nor any other relations, friends, guests, as was usual at entertainments; see Ps. xxiii. 5. Luke vii. 38, 46. for the phrase thyself is not the text. The reason why they should not anoint is, because they would have no oil to anoint with: for thine olive shall cast his fruit; before it is ripe by one means or another, as by winds, or blasting and mildew; see Amos iv. 9. Hab. iii. 17.

℣. 41. Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but thou shalt not enjoy them, &c.] Or, they shall not be thine [q]; being taken from them, and given to others, see ℣. 32. and for the following reason: for they shall go into captivity; as when the ten tribes were carried captive by Salmanesser, and the two tribes by Nebuchadnezzar, and all the people of the Jews by the Romans.

℣. 42. All thy trees and fruit of thy land shall the locust consume;] Which is a creature that not only consumes grass and herbs, and the corn of the field, but all green trees; see Exod. x. 15. This sort here has its name from the shade they make, hiding the light of the sun, and darkening the face of the earth at noon-day; or from the noise they make with their wings in flying; see Joel ii. 5.

℣. 43. The stranger that is within thee shall get up above thee very high, &c.] In wealth and riches, in power and authority, in honour and dignity. This Manasseh Ben Israel [r] interprets of the Samaritans, whom the king of Assyria drove out of Samaria, and the neighbouring places; but the design of the expression is, to shew how mean and abject they should be in another country; that even one who had been a stranger or proselyte of the gate when in their own country, should now be vastly above them: and thou shalt come down very low; into a very mean condition, to be in great subjection, a vassal and a slave; see Ps. cvi. 41, 42. and much more when reduced by the Romans, and sent to the mines in Egypt.

℣. 44. He shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him, &c.] The stranger, or one of another nation, shall be in a capacity of lending to the Jew, when the Jew would not be able to lend to the Gentile, his circumstances being so low and mean; to shew which is the design of the expression, and not the kindness or unkindness of either; see ℣. 12. he shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail; he shall be ruler and governor, and thou shalt be subject to him; see ℣. 13.

℣. 45. Moreover, all these curses shall come upon thee, &c.] Before related, as well as what follow: and shall pursue thee, and overtake thee; which tho' they would endeavour to flee from and escape, should not be able, since they would follow them so closely and swiftly, and overtake them, and seize upon them; see ℣. 15. because thou hearkenedst not unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which he commanded thee; to which disobedience all the curses are to be imputed, that go before, or follow after.

℣. 46. And they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder, &c.] That is, those curses before pronounced, and what follow, should rest and remain upon them, continue with them, and be very visible on them; so as to be observed by others, as a sign of the wrath and displeasure of God, and of the fulfilment of prophecy, and of the truth of divine revelation: and so for a wonder; as it is most astonishing to observe, how exactly all the curses threatened them have fallen upon them, and have abode with them, as they did in their former captivities, and more especially do in the present one: and what is the greater wonder, that notwithstanding these dreadful calamities, and so long continued, enough to have crushed any people from being a people; yet they have continued, and still do continue, a distinct people; which is a standing miracle, and one would think sufficient to convince the most hardened and obstinate deist of the truth and authority of the sacred scriptures; in which stand so many glaring prophecies that have been fulfilled, and are continually fulfilling in this people: and upon thy seed for ever; this shews that these curses said to be upon them, not only refer to those that came upon them at, and in the Babylonish captivity; but to those that came upon them at their destruction by the Romans, and which have continued on them seventeen hundred years; and how much longer they will continue, none can say: it will be their case, until new heavens and a new earth are created, or there will be a new state of things, at least with them; when they shall be converted to the Lord, and all Israel saved; see Is. lxv. 17, 18. Rom. xi. 25, 26. and it may be observed, that the ten tribes carried captive never returned.

℣. 47. Because thou servedst not the Lord thy God, &c.] By attending his worship, and keeping his commandments: with joyfulness and gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things; which they enjoyed in the land of Canaan, a land that abounded with all good things; which laid them under great obligations to serve the Lord: and yet, as they were wanting in a ready attendance on his worship, and in a chearful obedience to his laws; so in their sacrifices of praise and thanksgivings for their manifold mercies; and because of all this, the curses written in this book came upon them.

℣. 48. Therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies, which the Lord shall send against thee, &c.] Since they would not serve the Lord their God, who was so good a master to them, and supplied them with all good things, and with plenty of them; they should serve other lords, their enemies, whom God would raise up and send against them; not only the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Babylonians, but the Romans after described, whom they should find hard masters, and from whom they should have very severe usage, and should be in hunger and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all good things; being destitute of food, and drink, and raiment, raiment, and the common neceſſaries of life, and ſo in famiſhing and ſtarving circumſtances: and he ſhall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck; bring them into a ſtate of ſubjection to their enemies, which would be intolerable to them, and from which they would not be able to free themſelves, any more than to break an iron yoke; which, as it agrees with the Babyloniſh captivity, and their ſubjection in that ſtate; ſee Jer. xxviii. 13, 14. ſo more eſpecially with their bondage under the Romans, who are the legs of iron in Nebuchadnezzar's image, and the fourth beaſt with great iron teeth in Daniel's viſion, Dan. ii. 33, 40. and vii. 7. and this yoke was to continue until he have deſtroyed thee; the Jews were under the Roman yoke, Roman governors being ſet over them, and Judea made a Roman province, many years before the deſtruction of their nation, city, and temple by them.

℣. 49. The Lord ſhall bring a nation againſt thee from far, from the end of the earth, &c.] Now tho' Babylon is repreſented as a country diſtant from Judea, and ſaid to be a nation from far, Jer. v. 15. yet not from the end of the earth, as here; and tho' the Roman nation, ſtrictly ſpeaking, was not at ſo great a diſtance from Jeruſalem, yet the Roman emperors, and great part of their armies brought againſt it, were fetched from our iſland of Great-Britain, which in former times was reckoned the end of the earth, and the uttermoſt parts of the world [s]; and ſo Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael [t] interprets this nation of Rome, and obſerves, that Veſpaſian brought for his aſſiſtance many nations (or ſoldiers) out of England, France, Spain, and other parts of the world: and not only Veſpaſian was ſent for from Britain to make war with the Jews, but when they rebelled, in the times of Adrian, Julius Severus, a very eminent general, was ſent for from thence to quell them. And it appears to be a very ancient opinion of the Jews, that this paſſage is to be underſtood of the Romans, from what is related in one of their Talmuds [u]: they ſay that "Trajan being ſent for by his wife to ſubdue the Jews, determined to come in ten days, and came in five; he came and found them, (the Jews) buſy in the law on that verſe, the Lord ſhall bring a nation againſt thee from far, &c. he ſaid unto them, What are ye buſy in? they anſwered him, ſo and ſo; he replied to them, this is the man, (meaning himſelf) who thought to come in ten days, and came in five; and he ſurrounded them with his legions, and ſlew them:" as ſwift as the eagle flieth; which may reſpect not ſo much the ſwiftneſs of this creature, the words which convey the idea being a ſupplement of the text, as the force with which it flies when in ſight of its prey, and haſtes unto it and falls upon it, which is irreſiſtible; and this is the ſenſe of the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, and is what is aſcribed to the eagle by other writers [w]. Now though this figure is uſed of the Chaldeans and Babylonians, Jer. iv. 13. Lam. iv. 19. Hab. i. 8. it agrees full as well or better with the Romans, becauſe of their ſwiftneſs in coming from diſtant parts, and becauſe of the force and impetus with which they invaded Judea, beſieged Jeruſalem, and attacked the Jews every-where; and beſides, the eagle was bore on the ſtandard in the Roman army [x]: a nation whoſe tongue thou ſhalt not underſtand; which though it is alſo ſaid of the language of the Chaldean nation, Jer. v. 15. yet as the Chaldee and Hebrew languages were only dialects of one and the ſame language, common to the eaſtern nations; the Chaldee language, though on account of termination of words, pronunciation, and other things, might be difficult, and hard to be underſtood by the Jews, yet muſt be much more eaſy to underſtand than the Roman language, ſo widely different from theirs.

℣. 50. A nation of fierce countenance, &c.] Or, ſtrong of face [y]; which aptly deſcribes the old Romans, who are always repreſented as ſuch; and whereas it is ſaid of the Chaldeans, that they were a nation dreadful and terrible, Hab. i. 7. the ſame is ſaid of the fourth beaſt, or Roman empire, Dan. vii. 7. who were a terror to all the world: which ſhall not regard the perſon of the old, nor ſhew favour to the young; cruel, unmerciful, and uncompaſſionate, to perſons of whatſoever age or ſex; which, as it was the character of the Chaldeans, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17. ſo of the Romans, who eſpecially ſhewed no mercy to the Jews, as Joſephus [z], who was an eye-witneſs, teſtifies. "The Romans (ſays he) ſhewed no mercy to any age, out of hatred to the nation (of the Jews), and in remembrance of the injuries done to Ceſtius;" one of their governors, when among them. And in another place he ſays [a], "the Romans, remembering what they ſuffered in the ſiege, ſpared none, and ſhewed no mercy."

℣. 51. And he ſhall eat the fruit of thy cattle, &c.] Larger and leſſer, oxen and ſheep, as their calves and lambs, and kids of the goat: and the fruit of thy land; their wheat, barley, figs, grapes, pomegranates, olives and dates: until thou be deſtroyed; the land of Judea, and all the increaſe of it: this being before ſaid, ℣. 31, 33. and here repeated, ſhews that the ſame ſhould be fulfilled at different times, as by the Chaldeans, ſo by the Romans; whoſe nation, or army, with their general at the head of them, may be more eſpecially here intended by he, that ſhould eat up their fruit until utter deſtruction was brought upon them: which alſo ſhall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increaſe of thy kine, or flocks of thy ſheep, until he have deſtroyed thee; all being conſumed by the Roman army. There is a promiſe and prophecy, that though this would be the caſe, as it has been, there ſhall be a time when it ſhall be ſo no more; ſee Iſ. lxii. 8, 9.

℣. 52. And he ſhall beſiege thee in all thy gates, &c.] That is, in all their cities and walled towns, which had gates and bars for ſecurity: until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou truſtedſt throughout all thy land; the Jews had ſeveral cities well fenced and ſtrongly fortified, beſides Jeruſalem, which was fortified both by art and nature, and in which they greatly put their truſt and confidence; but theſe were broken down, particularly by the battering rams of the Romans: and he ſhall beſiege thee in all thy gates, throughout all thy land, which the Lord thy God hath given thee; this is repeated for the certainty of it, and that it might be taken notice of, and abate their truſt and confidence in their outward ſtrength. Now all this was fulfilled, partly in the ſiege of Samaria by the king of Aſſyria, who went through all the land of the ten tribes, 2 Kings xvii. 5. and xviii. 9, 10. and in Sennacherib's taking the fenced cities of Judah, 2 Kings xviii. 13. and in the ſiege of Jeruſalem, ruſalem, and breaking down the walls of it by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxv. 10. and laſt of all in the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and battering down the walls of it by the Romans; at which time alſo all their ſtrong and fenced cities throughout the land, were taken and demoliſhed.

℣. 53. And thou ſhalt eat the fruit of thine own body, &c.] Than which nothing can be more ſhocking and unnatural, which is explained as follows: the fleſh of thy ſons and of thy daughters, which the Lord thy God hath given thee; which is an aggravation of the cruel and inhuman fact: in the ſiege, and in the ſtraitneſs wherewith thine enemies ſhall diſtreſs thee; this ſhews the cauſe of it, a famine by reaſon of the cloſeneſs of the ſiege, ſo that no proviſions could be brought in for their relief; and all within being eaten up, and every thing that was eatable, even the moſt nauſeous and diſagreeable, they would be led on to this ſtrange, unheard-of, and barbarous action, eating their own children. This was fulfilled in the ſiege of Samaria, 2 Kings vi. 25, 28, 29. and in the ſiege of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar, Lam. ii. 10. and iv. 10. Baruch ii. 4. and in the ſiege of the ſame city by the Romans; of which an inſtance will be hereafter given.

℣. 54. So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, &c.] Not only the ruſtic that has been brought up meanly, and uſed to hard living; but one that has been bred very tenderly, and lived in a delicate manner, like the rich man in Luke xvi. 19. that fared ſumptuouſly every day: his eye ſhall be evil towards his brother, and towards the wife of his boſom, and towards the remnant of his children which he ſhall leave; that is, he ſhall grudge his brother, who is ſo nearly related to him, the leaſt bit of food; yea, his wife he dearly loved, and is one fleſh with him, his other ſelf, and even his children, which are parts of himſelf, ſuch of them as were left not eaten by him; or his eye ſhould be evil upon them, he ſhould look with an evil eye on them, determining within himſelf to kill and eat them next. Though the particular inſtance in which his eye would be evil to them follows, yet no doubt there are other inſtances in which his eye would be evil towards them, as there were at the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and have been ſince. Joſephus [b] ſays, "that in every houſe where there was any appearance of food, (or any thing that looked like it, that had the ſhadow of it) there was a battle; and the deareſt friends fought with one another, ſnatching away from each other the miſerable ſupports of life;" as the huſband from his wife and children, and the wife from her huſband and children; ſee more in ℣. 56. and, in after-times, we are told by the Jewiſh hiſtorian [c], that wrote an account of their ſufferings and diſtreſſes ſince their diſperſion, that at Fez the Jews ſold their children for ſlaves for bread.

℣. 55. So that he will not give to any of them of the fleſh of his children whom he ſhall eat, &c.] Neither give to a brother, nor to a wife, nor to any of his remaining children, the leaſt bit of the fleſh of a child he has killed and dreſſed for his own food; which adds to the barbarity of his action: becauſe he hath nothing left him in the ſiege, and in the ſtraitneſs wherewith thine enemies ſhall diſtreſs thee in all thy gates; every creature being eaten up, dogs, cats, &c. and whatſoever elſe could be any ways made food of; as the dung of beaſts, girdles, ſhoes, the leather on ſhields, &c. as Joſephus [d] ſays they did eat; and this being the caſe, nothing eatable remaining, therefore his heart would be hardened againſt his neareſt relations, and not allow them the leaſt part with him, even of what was ſo ſhocking and unnatural.

℣. 56. And the tender and delicate woman amongſt you, &c.] Who is inſtanced in becauſe of her ſex, which is more pitiful and compaſſionate, and eſpecially one that has been brought up genteely, and has always lived deliciouſly, on the moſt delicate fare, and niceſt dainties, and uſed to all the delights of nature: which would not venture to ſet her foot upon the ground for delicateneſs and tenderneſs; for fear of taking cold, or defiling her feet: her eye ſhall be evil towards the huſband of her boſom, and towards her ſon, and towards her daughter; grudge them every bit they eat, and reſtrain food from them as much as in her lies, and even ſnatch it out of their mouths; ſo Joſephus [e] relates, that "women ſnatched the food out of the mouths of their huſbands, and ſons out of the mouths of their fathers; and what is moſt miſerable, mothers out of the mouths of their infants."

℣. 57. And towards her young one that cometh out from between her feet, &c.] Or her ſecundine, her after-birth, as in the margin of our bibles; ſo the Targum of Jonathan and Aben Ezra interpret it. The latter deſcribes it, "the place of the fœtus, whilſt it abides in the womb of its mother;" the membrane in which the child is wrapt; and it is ſuggeſted that as nauſeous as that is, the delicate woman ſhould eat it, and then the new-born child that was wrapped in it; ſo Jarchi interprets it, little children; though it ſeems to be diſtinguiſhed from the children ſhe bears or brings forth in the next clauſe: and towards her children which ſhe ſhall bear; that is, have an evil eye towards them, to eat them as follows: for ſhe ſhall eat them for want of all things, ſecretly, in the ſiege and ſtraitneſs wherewith thine enemy ſhall diſtreſs thee in thy gates; that is, eat her children, being reduced to the utmoſt extremity, being in want of all things, having nothing at all to abate her ſharp hunger; which, and nothing elſe could incline her, and prevail upon her, to do an action ſo monſtrouſly horrid: and which ſhe would do in the moſt private and ſecret manner; both leſt others ſhould partake with her, as well as being conſcious of the foulneſs and blackneſs of the crime, that would not by any means bear the light; and all this owing to the cloſeneſs of the ſiege, and the unſpeakable diſtreſs they ſhould be in through it. For the illuſtration of this, take the following ſtory as related by Joſephus [f]; "a woman, whoſe name was Mary, that lived beyond Jordan, illuſtrious for her deſcent and riches, fled with the multitude to Jeruſalem when beſieged, carrying with her her ſubſtance, and what food ſhe could get that were left her by the ſpoilers; where being preſſed with famine, ſhe took her ſucking child, killed it, boiled it, and eat half of it, and then laid up the reſt, and covered it; and when the ſeditious party entered the houſe, they ſmelt it, and demanded her food, threatening to kill her if ſhe did not deliver it; which when ſhe brought forth, declaring what ſhe had done, they were ſtruck with horror; to whom ſhe ſaid, this is my ſon, and this my own deed; eat, for I have eaten; be not more tender or ſofter than a woman, and more ſympathizing or more pitiful than than a mother." All the ideas that this prophecy of Moſes conveys are to be met with in this account; as of a woman well bred and delicate, reduced to the utmoſt diſtreſs, and wanting all the neceſſaries of life, killing her tender infant, a ſucking babe, eating it ſecretly, and laying up the reſt covered againſt another time. If Moſes had lived to have known the fact committed, as Joſephus did, he could not have expreſſed it well in ſtronger and clearer terms than he has done. This is a moſt amazing inſtance of a prophecy delivered out 2,000 years or more before the fact was done, and of the exact accompliſhment of it; and if the obſervation of a learned critic [g] can be eſtabliſhed, that the firſt word of this verſe ſhould be ובשלה, and ſo be rendered, and ſhe ſhall boil that which cometh out from between her feet, even her children which ſhe ſhall bear, the fulfilment of the prophecy will appear ſtill more exact, both at the ſiege of Samaria, 2 Kings vi. 29. and of Jeruſalem, as in the above relation of Joſephus.

ver. 58. If thou wilt not obſerve to do all the words of this law, that are written in this book, &c.] Of Deuteronomy, in which there is a repetition of the laws before delivered, and an addition of ſome new ones; all which were to be ſo obſerved as to be done, to this end, that thou mayeſt fear this glorious and fearful name of the Lord thy God; or that it might appear that the fear of God was before their eyes, and in their hearts, by their obedience to his law; that they had a proper awe and reverence of him, who is glorious in his titles and attributes, and whoſe name Jehovah is holy and reverend; and who, as the covenant-God of his people, is to be feared for his goodneſs-ſake.

ver. 59. Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful, &c.] Viſible, remarkable, diſtinguiſhable, and aſtoniſhing to all that ſee them: and the plagues of thy ſeed; for they were to continue, as they have done, with their poſterity, age after age: even great plagues and of long continuance; great as to quality and quantity, and firm, ſure, laſting, and durable; the word uſed is rendered ſure in Iſ. lv. 3. ſure by prophecy and in the event; and which when inflicted remained, as they have 1,700 years; all which might be believed as certain, or what would certainly come to paſs, and be depended on: and ſore ſickneſſes, and of long continuance; beſides thoſe diſeaſes mentioned ver. 27, 35. or however others including them.

ver. 60. Moreover, he will bring upon thee all the diſeaſes of Egypt, &c.] All that in a way of judgment were brought upon the Egyptians for refuſing to let Iſrael go; or all ſuch diſeaſes as were peculiar to them, and common among them, as the leproſy, the itch, ulcers, &c. which thou waſt afraid of; when living among them, leſt they ſhould catch them of them, or they ſhould be inflicted on them by the hand of God: and they ſhall cleave unto thee; not only ſhould come upon them, but continue with them; they ſhould not eaſily get rid of them, or be cured of them.

ver. 61. Alſo every ſickneſs and every plague which is not written in the book of this law, &c.] Which is not here mentioned or threatened; and it ſuggeſts, that whatſoever ſickneſs or diſeaſe that could be thought of or named, or were at any time in any place among men, might be expected to come upon them for their diſobedience: them will the Lord bring upon thee until thou be deſtroyed; the Jews themſelves [h] own this has been fulfilled on them.

ver. 62. And ye ſhall be left few in number, &c.] There were but very few left in the land of Judea by Nebuchadnezzar's general, when Jeruſalem was taken by him; and theſe were of the poorer ſort, and were left for vine-dreſſers and huſbandmen, Jer. xxxix. 10. and lii. 16. and how much they were reduced by the Romans, will appear by the accounts Joſephus gives of thoſe that were ſlain, and made priſoners by them: he ſays [i], "there were 1,100,000 ſlain at the ſiege of Jeruſalem and by the war, and 97,000 made priſoners; and it is computed that 1,240,490 were deſtroyed in Jeruſalem and other parts of the nation [k]; and it is alſo ſaid by their hiſtorian [l], that of thoſe that were tranſported from Jeruſalem and other parts of Paleſtine into Spain, ſcarce a thouſandth part remained,—and that an infinite number were ſlain in France and Germany; and though their number equalled thoſe that came out of Egypt, yet ſcarce 5,000 of them were left: whereas ye were as the ſtars of heaven for multitude; and as it is ſometimes ſaid, as the ſand of the ſea, as was promiſed to Abraham, Gen. xv. 5. and xxii. 18. and was fulfilled in the days of Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 20. becauſe thou wouldſt not obey the voice of the Lord thy God; in his law, and by his prophets; and eſpecially by the voice of the true Meſſiah, in his everlaſting goſpel; of whom it is ſaid to-day if ye will hear his voice, &c. Heb. iii. 7.

ver. 63. And it ſhall come to paſs that as the Lord rejoiced over you to do you good, &c.] The Word of the Lord, as the Targum of Jonathan; who with great delight and pleaſure in them brought them out of Egypt, conducted them through the wilderneſs, protecting them and providing all good things for them; and brought them into the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey, and ſettled them there; and gave them judges and kings, prieſts and prophets, for a long ſeries of time, with other innumerable bleſſings he beſtowed upon them: and to multiply you; ſo that they became as the ſtars of heaven, and the ſand of the ſea, as before obſerved: ſo the Lord will rejoice over you to deſtroy you, and to bring you to nought; take as much pleaſure in their ruin and deſtruction, whereby his juſtice would be glorified, and the honour of his laws preſerved, as before, in beſtowing good things on them, in which mercy and kindneſs were diſplayed: and ye ſhall be plucked from off the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it; in a violent manner, by their enemies, and againſt their wills, they being loth to leave it. The emperor Adrian, to prevent their inſurrections and rebellions, which had given him a great deal of trouble, ordered by an edict that no Jew ſhould come into Jeruſalem, nor into the land of Judea, or be ſeen in it, which is obſerved by ſeveral writers [m]; by which means the country was cleared of them. In after times, ſome of them did get thither again, but they were but few. Benjamin of Tudela, a Jew of the 12th century, travelled into ſeveral parts of the world in queſt of his countrymen, and particularly into Judea, and his view was to magnify his people; and yet owns he found at Jeruſalem only 200 perſons, whoſe employment was dying wool, and dwelt in a corner of the town under the tower of David; and but 12 at Bethlehem, 3 at Mareſha, at Shunem indeed 300, none at Gilead, 2 at Nob, who were dyers, dyers, 3 at Ramah, one at Joppa, none at Jafne, where had been a famous academy, none at Ashdod, and at Tiberias about 50[n]. And our countryman Sandys[o], who travelled into Judea in the laſt century, ſays, "here be ſome Jews, yet inherit they no part of the land, but in their own country do live as aliens."

ẏ. 64. And the Lord ſhall ſcatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even to the other, &c.] Which refers to their preſent diſperſion, being now, more or fewer, in all parts of the world, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth: and there thou ſhalt ſerve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and ſtone; it may be obſerved, that the phraſe which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, is fitly added here, which is not uſed of them, ẏ. 36. and well agrees with the idols of the Papiſts, their images of the virgin Mary, and ſaints departed, made of wood and ſtone, which were ſuch the fathers of the Jews never knew; juſt as it is ſaid of the hoſt, the conſecrated wafer, the breaden God honoured by Antichriſt, that it is a God whom his fathers knew not, Dan. xi. 38. the apoſtles and ancient fathers of the church. Now in Popiſh countries the Jews have often been prevailed upon to change, or at leaſt diſſemble their religion, and embrace popery; and have worſhipped images of wood and ſtone. The author of the hiſtory of their calamities and ſufferings owns this; "multitudes (he ſays[p]) in Spain and Portugal forſook the law of Moſes, and joined the Papiſts, pretending at leaſt to be of their religion." He makes mention of 16,000 at one time[q], and ſome, he ſays[r], "that were driven out of Spain, came into Italy, where the young men preſſed with famine could not bear it, and changed their religion, and began to worſhip images that they might have to ſatisfy their hunger; and the Papiſts uſed to go about with a crucifix in one hand, and a piece of bread in the other, promiſing the bread to thoſe that would worſhip the crucifix; and ſo, many famiſhing perſons forſook the law of Moſes, and mixed with them:" and to this day the convents of monks and nuns in Spain are full of them; and moſt of their canons, inquiſitors, and biſhops are Jews[s]. The Targum of Jonathan indeed, to clear them from idolatry itſelf, gives another ſenſe of theſe words, paraphraſing them, "ye ſhall pay tribute to the worſhippers of idols."

ẏ. 65. And among theſe nations ſhalt thou find no eaſe, neither ſhall the ſole of thy foot have reſt, &c.] No quiet ſettlement, nor certain dwelling, being obliged to move from place to place through cruel edicts, heavy fines and mulcts, exorbitant taxes and impoſitions, and diligent ſearch made after them by the courts of the inquiſition, eſpecially where any ſubſtance was to be got. The Jews themſelves[t] own that this paſſage is now fulfilled in them: but the Lord ſhall give thee there a trembling heart; being always in fear leſt their perſons ſhould be ſeized on, their children taken from them, and their goods confiſcated; hence the poet[u] gives them the epithet of trembling: and failing of eyes; in looking for a vainly-expected Meſſiah, to deliver them from all their fears and troubles: and ſorrow of mind; under their preſent afflictions and calamities.

ẏ. 66. And thy life ſhall hang in doubt before thee, &c.] Whether it ſhall be ſpared or not by the enemy: and thou ſhalt fear day and night; be in continual dread of being killed: and ſhalt have none aſſurance of thy life; of its being continued a moment ſcarcely, but live in conſtant fear and expectation of its being taken away.

ẏ. 67. In the morning thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were even, &c.] Wiſhing they might get thro' the day well, fearing their life would be taken away before night, or ſome ſad calamity befal them, before the day was paſt: and at even thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were morning; dreading what would happen to them in the night, that ſome meſſenger of death would be ſent to diſpatch them, or they ſhould be haled out of bed to a court of inquiſition, and caſt into a dungeon: for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou ſhalt fear, and for the ſight of thine eyes which thou ſhalt ſee; often beholding ſuch dreadful ſights, as their countrymen put upon the rack, and cruelly tortured, and then burnt alive; and ſo their hearts would fear and tremble, leſt they ſhould be the next that would be taken up and uſed in this manner; beſides other ſeverities and hard uſages, with which their brethren were treated, and they in continual fear of.

ẏ. 68. And the Lord ſhall bring thee into Egypt again with ſhips, &c.] Either into a ſtate of hard bondage and ſlavery, like that their fathers were in in Egypt; or rather, ſtrictly and literally, ſhould be brought into Egypt again, ſince it is ſaid to be with or in ſhips. This does not reſpect the going of thoſe Jews into Egypt who were left in the land of Judea, after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar; for that was againſt the expreſs command of God, Jer. xlii. 13—22. and xliii. 4, 5, 6, 7. There were ſeveral removes of them into Egypt after that time; an heathen hiſtorian[w] tells us, that not a few thouſands of Jews went into Egypt and Phœnicia, becauſe of the ſedition in Syria after the death of Alexander; and where, it ſeems, in proceſs of time they became ſlaves: for we are told by Joſephus[x], that 120,000 ſlaves were ſet free by Ptolemy Philadelphus; but what is chiefly reſpected here is their caſe in the times of the Romans, and by their means. Now when Jeruſalem was taken by Titus, thoſe above 17 years of age were ſent by him to the works, or mines in Egypt, as the ſame hiſtorian relates[y]; and after their laſt overthrow by Adrian, many thouſands were ſold, and what could not be ſold were tranſported into Egypt, and periſhed by ſhipwreck, or famine, or were ſlaughtered by the people[z]; whereby this prophecy was literally and exactly fulfilled, and which is owned by the Jews themſelves. Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael[a] obſerves, that though Veſpaſian baniſhed the Jews into divers countries, Egypt is only mentioned by way of reproach, as if it had been ſaid, ye ſhall go captives into the land from which ye went out triumphant: by the way whereof I ſpake unto thee, thou ſhalt ſee it no more again; the Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall bring thee into Egypt again in ſhips;" even the ſame divine Word, the Son of God, that brought them out of it, and went before them in a pillar of cloud and fire, now provoked by their rejection of him, would lead them back again thither; the paraphraſt adds, "through

" through the midſt of the Red-ſea, in the path in which ye paſſed;" as if they were carried over into Egypt in ſhips, juſt in that part of the ſea in which they had paſſed before; but that was an unknown and unſeen path, after the waters were cloſed up, and never to be ſeen more, and which is here meant; for not Egypt, but the way in which they paſſed, was to be ſeen no more: and there ye ſhall be ſold unto your enemies for bond-men and for bond-women, and no man ſhall buy you; that is, there in Egypt they would be offered to ſale, and ſo many would be ſold until the market was glutted with them, and there would be no buyers. The Targum of Jonathan is, " ye ſhall be ſold there at firſt to your enemies, at a dear price, as artificers, and afterwards at a mean price as ſervants and handmaids, until ye become deſpiſed, and be brought to ſerve for nothing, and there be none to take you in." Jarchi interprets it of they themſelves being deſirous, and ſeeking to be ſold, to avoid cruelties and death; which agrees with the ſenſe of the word, which may be rendered, ye ſhall offer yourſelves to ſale; but there will be no buyer, becauſe their enemies will determine upon the ſlaughter and conſumption of them; and to the ſame purpoſe Aben Ezra. There were ſuch numbers of them to be ſold both at Egypt, and at Rome, that the ſellers of them had but a poor market for them; and it ſeems not only becauſe of their number, but the ill opinion had of them as ſervants. Hegeſippus [b] ſays, " there were many to be ſold, but there were few buyers; for the Romans deſpiſed the Jews for ſervice, nor were there Jews left to redeem their own." It is ſaid [c], that thirty were ſold for a penny; a juſt retaliation to them, who had ſold their Meſſiah for thirty pieces of ſilver.

CHAP. XXIX.

THIS chapter begins with an intimation of another covenant the Lord was about to make with the people of Iſrael, ℣. 1. and to prepare their minds to an attention to it, various things which the Lord had done for them are recited, ℣. 2—9. the perſons are particularly mentioned with whom the covenant would now be made, the ſubſtance of which is, that they ſhould be his people, and he their God, ℣. 10—15. and ſince they had ſeen the idols in Egypt and other countries, with which they might have been enſnared, they are cautioned againſt idolatry and idolaters, as being moſt provoking to the Lord, ℣. 16—21. which would bring deſtruction not only on particular perſons, but upon their whole land, to the amazement of poſterity; who, enquiring the reaſon of it, will be told, it was becauſe they forſook the covenant of God, and particularly were guilty of idolatry, which whether privately or openly committed, would be always puniſhed, ℣. 22—29.

℣. 1. Theſe are the words of the covenant, &c. Not what go before, but follow after, in the next chapters, to the end of the book; in which are various promiſes of grace, and promiſes of good things, both with reſpect to Jews and Gentiles, intermixed with other things: which the Lord commanded Moſes to make with the children of Iſrael in the land of Moab; or to declare unto them, and acquaint them with, they being now in the plains of Moab, ready to enter into the land of Canaan: beſides the covenant which he made with them at Horeb; or Sinai; which Jarchi interprets, beſides the curſes in Leviticus delivered on Sinai; he ſeems to have reſpect to Lev. xxvi. This covenant was different from that at Sinai, ſpoken of Exod. xxiv. 8. being made not only at a different time, at near forty years diſtance, and at a different place, not Sinai; but when Iſrael were come nearer mount Sion, and were actually poſſeſſed of part of their inheritance, the land of promiſe, that part of the land of Moab which the two kings of the Amorites had ſeized and dwelt in, whom Iſrael had diſpoſſeſſed; and with different perſons, that generation being dead, excepting a very few, which were at Sinai: but it was different as to the ſubſtance and matter of it, it not only including that, and being a renewal of it, as is generally thought; but containing ſuch declarations of grace which had not been made before, not only reſpecting the repenting and returning Iſraelites, but the Gentiles alſo; for this covenant was made with the ſtranger, as well as with Iſrael, ℣. 11. and relates to the times of the Meſſiah, the call of the Gentiles, the converſion of the Jews, and their return to their own land in the latter day.

℣. 2. Moſes called unto all Iſrael, &c.] He had been ſpeaking before to the heads of them, and delivered at different times what is before recorded; but now he ſummoned the whole body of the people together, a ſolemn covenant being to be made between God and them; or ſuch things being to be made known unto them, as were of univerſal concernment: and ſaid unto them; what is in this chapter; which is only a preparation or introduction to what he had to declare unto them in the following: ye have ſeen all that the Lord did before your eyes in the land of Egypt; the Targum of Jonathan is, " what the Word of the Lord did;" for all the wonderful things there done in Egypt were done by the eſſential Word of God, Chriſt, the Son of God; who appeared to Moſes in the buſh, and ſent him to Egypt, and by him and Aaron wrought the miracles there; which many now preſent had ſeen, and were then old enough to take notice of, and could remember, though their fathers then in being were now dead: unto Pharaoh and unto all his ſervants, and unto all his land; the plagues he inflicted on the perſon of Pharaoh, and on all his courtiers, and on all the people in Egypt, for they reached the whole land.

℣. 3. The great temptations which thine eyes have ſeen, &c.] Or trials, the ten plagues which tried the Egyptians, whether they would let Iſrael go; and tried the Iſraelites, whether they would believe in the Lord, and truſt in his almighty power to deliver them: the ſigns and thoſe great miracles; as the ſaid plagues were ſuch as were beyond the power of nature to produce, and which only omnipotence could really effect.

℣. 4. Yet the Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive, &c.] They had ſome of them ſeen the above miracles with their bodily eyes, but had not diſcerned with the eyes of their underſtanding the power of God diſplayed in them, the goodneſs of God to them on whoſe behalf they were wrought, in order to obtain their deliverance, and the vengeance of God on the Egyptians for detaining them; them; ſo Jarchi interprets it of an heart to know the mercies of the Lord, and to cleave unto him: and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear, unto this day; to ſee and obſerve the gracious dealings of God with them, and to hearken to his voice and obey it: ſo the underſtanding heart, the ſeeing eye, and hearing ear, in things ſpiritual, are from the Lord, are ſpecial gifts of his grace, which he beſtows on ſome, and not on others; ſee Prov. xx. 12. The Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord did not give you an heart, &c."

℣. 5. And I have led you forty years in the wilderneſs, &c.] From the time of their coming out of Egypt unto that day, which though not quite compleat, is given as a round number. Eupolemus[d], an heathen writer, confirms this date of the miniſtry of Moſes among the Iſraelites; he ſays, Moſes performed the office of a prophet forty years: your clothes are not waxen old upon you; were not worn out; all thoſe forty years they had been in the wilderneſs, they had never wanted clothes fitting for them, according to their age and ſtature, and which decayed not; ſee the note on ch. viii. 4. and thy ſhoe is not waxen old upon thy foot; which were neceſſary to wear in travelling, and eſpecially in a rugged wilderneſs; and yet though they had been always in uſe during ſo long a time, were not worn out, which was really miraculous; ſee the note on the place before referred to.

℣. 6. Ye have not eaten bread, &c.] Bread made of corn, common bread, of their own preparing, made by the labour of their own hands; but manna, the food of angels, the bread of heaven: neither have you drank wine, nor ſtrong drink; only water out of the rock, at leaſt chiefly, and for conſtancy; though it may be when they were on the borders of other countries, as of the Edomites, they might obtain ſome wine for their money: that ye might know that I am the Lord your God; who was both able and willing to provide food, drink, and raiment for them, and ſupply them with all good things, and ſupport them without the uſe of the common neceſſaries of life; which were abundant proofs of his power and goodneſs.

℣. 7. And when ye came unto this place, &c.] The borders of Moab, the wilderneſs before it, to which joined the plains they were now in; ſee Numb. xxi. 13, 20. Deut. ii. 26. Sihon king of Heſhbon, and Og king of Baſhan, came out againſt us unto battle; not together, but one after the other, and that very quickly; as ſoon almoſt as they had fought with the one, and conquered him, the other came out againſt them: and they ſmote them; killed them and their armies, and the inhabitants of their countries; the hiſtory of which ſee in Numb. xxi. 23—35.

℣. 8. And we took their land, &c.] Which belonged to the two kings, the lands of Jazer, Gilead, and Baſhan, fine countries for paſturage: and gave it for an inheritance unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half tribe of Manaſſeh; who requeſted it, and to whom it was granted on certain conditions, and they were now in poſſeſſion of it; ſee Numb. ch. xxxii.

℣. 9. Keep therefore the words of this covenant and do them, &c.] To do which they were laid under great obligations, through the goodneſs of God to them, in giving them victory over the two kings, and delivering their countries into their hands, as well as by all the favours beſtowed on them in the wilderneſs, where they were ſufficiently ſupplied with food, drink, and raiment; all which is made uſe of as a motive and argument to engage them to obſerve and keep the covenant the Lord made with them: that ye may proſper in all that ye do; in all their occupations and buſineſſes of life, in their manufactures and commerce, in the culture of their fields and vineyards, and in whatſoever they were employed in a lawful way; the word uſed has ſometimes the ſignification of acting wiſely and prudently, as in Iſ. lii. 13. hence the ſeptuagint verſion is, that ye may underſtand all that ye do; and ſo the Jeruſalem Targum.

℣. 10. Ye ſtand this day all of you before the Lord your God, &c.] Being gathered together at the door of the tabernacle, at the ſummons of Moſes. Aben Ezra interprets it round about the ark, which was the ſymbol of the divine preſence: your captains of your tribes; the heads and rulers of them: your elders and your officers, with all the men of Iſrael; not the 70 elders only, but their elders in their ſeveral tribes, cities, and families, men of gravity and prudence, as well as of age, and who were in ſome place of power and authority or another; and the officers may deſign ſuch who attended the judges, and executed their orders; ſee ch. xvi. 18. and with them were the common people, the males, who were grown perſons. Aben Ezra thinks they ſtood in the order, in which they here are mentioned, which is not improbable; next to Moſes the princes, then the elders, and after them the officers, and next every man of Iſrael, the males; and then the little ones with the males; after them the women, and laſt of all the proſelytes.

℣. 11. Your little ones, your wives, &c.] Who are ſcarce ever mentioned in any ſpecial law or ſolemn tranſaction: and thy ſtranger that is in thy camp; not only the proſelyte of righteouſneſs, who embraced the Jewiſh religion entirely, but the proſelyte of the gate, who was admitted to dwell among them, having renounced idolatry. Theſe ſtanding with the Iſraelites, when this covenant was made, has reſpect to the Gentiles, who as well as the Jews have an intereſt in the covenant of grace made with Chriſt; in whom there is neither Jew nor Gentile, any difference between them: from the hewer of thy wood to the drawer of thy water; that hewed wood for firing and other uſes, and drew water for the camp; who were generally mean perſons, and perhaps ſome that came out of Egypt with them are here intended; however mean and abject perſons are meant, and ſignifies that none ſhould be excluded from a concern in this ſolemn affair on account of their meanneſs.

℣. 12. That thou ſhouldeſt enter into covenant with the Lord thy God, &c.] That is, they were all to appear and ſtand in this order before the Lord, that they might ſolemnly avouch him to be their God, and hear him declaring them to be his people, and the many promiſes and prophecies of good things he ſhould deliver to them, as well as threatenings of wrath and vengeance in caſe of diſobedience to him: or that thou ſhouldeſt paſs[e]; which ſome think is an alluſion to the manner of making covenants, by ſlaying a creature, and cutting it in pieces, and paſſing between them, as in Jer. xxxiv. 18. ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra: and into his oath; annexed to his covenant and promiſe, to ſhew the immutability and certain fulfilment of it it on his part; and may ſignify not only the oath he ſwore that they ſhould be his people, but the oath he gave them, and they took, that he ſhould be their God: which the Lord thy God maketh with thee this day; which refers both to the covenant and the oath, or the covenant confirmed by an oath, even the covenant now made in the plains of Moab, diſtinct from that at Horeb or Sinai.

℣. 13. That he may eſtabliſh thee this day for a people unto himſelf, and that he may be unto thee a God, &c.] Which contains the ſum and ſubſtance of the covenant; ſee Jer. xxxii. 38. as he hath ſaid unto thee, and as he hath ſworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob; ch. xxvi. 17, 18. and xxviii. 9.

℣. 14. Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath;] That is, Moſes; for he was ordered to make this covenant with them in the name of the Lord; what promiſes of good things, or declarations of his mind and will, God would make, Moſes was to deliver to them; and what was required of them he would inform them of. Aben Ezra interprets it, not only you, but thoſe that will come after you, your ſons and your ſons ſons.

℣. 15. But with him that ſtandeth here with us this day before the Lord our God, &c.] Who are before ſpecified according to their dignity, age, ſex, and ſtation of life; or rather, but as with him that ſtandeth, &c. and ſo with him that is not here with us this day; detained at home by illneſs and indiſpoſition of body, or by one providence or another; ſo that they could not come out of their tents, and make their appearance before the tabernacle; tho' Jarchi interprets this of the people of future generations.

℣. 16. For ye know how we have dwelt in the land of Egypt, &c.] How long they and their fathers had dwelt there, the number of years they had been in the land, as the Targum of Jonathan, which was upwards of 200 years; and being a country the inhabitants of which were much given to idolatry, they had ſeen many of their idols, and much of their idolatrous worſhip; and their hearts had been apt to be enſnared by it, and the minds of ſome tinctured with it, and the remembrance thereof might make ill impreſſions on them; to remove or prevent which this covenant was made: and how we came through the nations which ye paſſed by; as the Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, and Midianites, as Aben Ezra obſerves, through whoſe borders they came, as they paſſed by their countries in their journeys in the wilderneſs.

℣. 17. And ye have ſeen their abominations and their idols, &c.] Or, their abominations, even their idols; for the ſame are meant by both: it is common in ſcripture to call the idols of the Gentiles abominations, without any other explanation of them; ſee 1 Kings xi. 5, 7. becauſe they are abominable to God, and ought to be ſo to men: the word for idols has the ſignification of dung, and may be rendered dunghil-gods, either referring to ſuch that were bred and lived in dung, as the beetle worſhipped by the Egyptians, as biſhop Patrick obſerves; or which were as much to be lothed and abhorred as the dung of any creature: wood and ſtone, ſilver and gold; theſe are the materials of which the idols they had ſeen in the ſeveral countries they had been in, or paſſed through, were made of; ſome of wood, others of ſtone cut out of theſe and carved; others more rich and coſtly were made of maſſy gold and ſilver, and were molten ones; or the images of wood were gilded with gold and ſilver. Now theſe being ſeen by them as they paſſed along, they might run in their minds, or be called to remembrance by them, and ſo they be in danger of being drawn aſide to make the like, and worſhip them.

℣. 18. Leſt there ſhould be among you man or woman, or family, or tribe, &c.] Theſe words ſtand in connexion with ℣. 15, the 16th and 17th verſes being in a parentheſis, as may be obſerved, and ſhew the deſign of this ſolemn appearance of the people, and their entering afreſh into covenant; which was to prevent their falling into idolatry, and preſerve them from it, whether a ſingle perſon of either ſex, or a whole family, or even a tribe, which might be in danger of being infected with it, and ſo all the people: whoſe heart turneth away this day from the Lord our God, to go and ſerve the gods of thoſe nations; whoſe heart is enticed and drawn aſide at the remembrance of the idols he has ſeen worſhipped by others; and is looking off from the Lord God, his faith in him being weakened, his fear of him removed, and his affections for him leſſened; and is looking towards the idols of the nations, with a hankering mind to ſerve and worſhip them: leſt there ſhould be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood; the word Roſh, which we render gall, ſignifies according to Jarchi a bitter herb, which better ſuits with a root than gall, and is elſewhere by us rendered hemlock, Hoſ. x. 4. and is by him very rightly interpreted of a wicked man among them; for not a principle of immorality, or hereſy rooted in the mind, productive of bitter fruits, or evil actions, is meant; but a bad man, particularly an idolater, who is rooted in idolatry, and is guilty of, and commits abominable actions; the iſſue of which will be bitterneſs and death, if not recovered; which agrees with what the apoſtle ſays, Heb. xii. 15. who manifeſtly alludes to this paſſage; ſee 1 Maccab. i. 11. and is confirmed by what follows.

℣. 19. And it cometh to paſs when he heareth the words of this curſe, &c.] That is, the man before compared to a root bearing bitter herbs, when he ſhould hear the curſes pronounced by the law againſt ſuch perſons as himſelf: that he bleſs himſelf in his heart; inwardly pronounce himſelf bleſſed, thinking himſelf ſecure from the curſe of the law, and flattering himſelf it will never reach him nor come upon him: ſaying, I ſhall have peace; all happineſs and proſperity, in ſoul, body, and eſtate; inward peace of mind now, and eternal peace hereafter: though I walk in the imagination of my heart; in worſhipping idols, which he vainly and wickedly imagined to be gods; to the worſhip of which his wicked heart prompted him, and he was reſolutely and ſtubbornly bent upon, and in which he continued: to add drunkenneſs to thirſt; as a thirſty man to quench his thirſt drinks, and adds to that, or drinks yet more and more until he is drunken; ſo a man inclined to idolatry, that has a ſecret deſire after it, thirſts after ſuch ſtolen or forbidden waters, and drinks of them, adds thereunto, drinks again and again until he is drunk with the wine of fornication, or idolatry, as it is called Rev. xvii. 2. ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan underſtand the words of adding ſin to ſin, particularly of adding ſins of ignorance to pride, or to preſumptuous ones. Wicked men, deceivers and deceived, always grow worſe and worſe, increaſing to more ungodlineſs, and yet promiſe themſelves peace and impunity, 1 Theſſ. v. 3.

℣. 20. Then the Lord will not ſpare him, &c.] Have no mercy upon him, nor forgive him, being an hard-hearted, impenitent, ſtubborn, and obſtinate ſinner, as well as guilty of the groſſeſt and moſt provoking ſin, as idolatry is: but then the anger of the Lord, and his jealouſy, ſhall ſmoke againſt that man; or, the noſe of the Lord ſhall ſmoke[f]; alluding to an angry, wrathful, furious man, whoſe brain being heated, and his paſſions enflamed, his breath ſteams through his noſtrils like ſmoke; it denotes the vehement anger, the greatneſs of God's wrath and indignation againſt ſuch a perſon, and his burning zeal or jealouſy for his own honour and glory injured by the idolater: and all the curſes that are written in this book ſhall lie upon him; for as he that offends in one point is guilty of all, and eſpecially in ſuch a principal point as this, which concerns the being and worſhip of God; ſo he makes himſelf liable to all the curſes of the law, which ſhall not only come upon him, but abide on him; and there is no being clear of them but by redemption through Chriſt, who by being made a curſe for his people, has redeemed them from the curſe of the law: and the Lord ſhall blot out his name from under heaven; he ſhall have no name in Iſrael, not in the church, and among the people of God, from whom he is to be excommunicated; ſhall have no name and place in the earth, being cut off from the land of the living; and ſhall have no name or fame after his death, his memory ſhall rot and periſh; and he ſhall appear to have no name in the book of life; ſee Pſ. lxix. 28. Rev. iii. 5.

℣. 21. And the Lord ſhall ſeparate him unto evil, out of all the tribes of Iſrael, &c.] Unto the evil of puniſhment, devote and conſign him to it, and make him a viſible and diſtinguiſhed mark of his diſpleaſure and vengeance. So ſome men are righteouſly ſeparated from others, and pre-ordained unto condemnation, being wicked and ungodly men; for ſuch God has made or appointed for the day of evil; ſee Prov. xvi. 4. Jude ver. 4. according to all the curſes of the covenant that are written in this book of the law; the evil of puniſhment he ſhall be ſeparated unto ſhall be according to them, or include them all; the ſenſe is, that the wrath of God, and the whole curſe of the law due to him for his ſin, ſhall come upon him; ſee ch. xxviii. 16, 17, 18, &c.

℣. 22. So that the generation to come of your children that ſhall riſe up after you, &c.] Not the next generation, but in future times, in ages to come, at a great diſtance, even after the deſtruction of Judea by the Romans; to which the following verſe ſeems to refer: and the ſtranger that ſhall come from a far land; on trade and buſineſs, or for the ſake of travelling, his road either lying through it, or his curioſity leading him to ſee it: ſhall ſay, when they ſee the plagues of the land; cities and towns in ruins, fields lie uncultivated, and the whole land depopulated, and all become a barren wilderneſs, which was once a fruitful country, a land flowing with milk and honey: and the ſickneſſes which the Lord hath laid upon it; upon the inhabitants of it, as the peſtilence and other diſeaſes, which ſhall have ſwept the land of them; ſee ch. xxviii. 22, 27, 35 This caſe ſuppoſes a general departure from the worſhip of God to the ſervice of idols; otherwiſe ſingle individuals are puniſhed in their own perſons, as in the preceding verſes.

℣. 23. And the whole land thereof is brimſtone and ſalt, and burning, &c.] That is, is become exceeding barren, as all ſuch land is where there are ſulphureous mines, or ſalt pits, or burning mountains; not that this would be, or has been the caſe of the land of Judea in a ſtrict literal ſenſe; only theſe are expreſſions made uſe of to ſhew the barrenneſs of it, which is its caſe at this day, not through the nature of its ſoil being changed, but through the ſlothfulneſs of the inhabitants of it; to which time it better agrees than to the time of its falling into the hands of the Chaldeans, who left men in it for huſbandmen and vine-dreſſers. Aben Ezra underſtands this as a prayer to God, that the land might be burnt up; that is, for the ſins of the people: that it is not ſown, nor beareth, nor any graſs groweth therein; not being ſown, it would bear and produce no corn for men; and not being manured, no graſs would ſpring up for the cattle: and ſo would be like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, of Admah and Zeboim; which indeed are ſtrictly ſpeaking become a ſulphureous and bituminous lake, called the ſalt ſea, and the lake Aſphaltites, and where no green graſs or corn, or any kind of fruit grow: which the Lord overthrew in his anger and in his wrath; the Targum of Jonathan is, "which the Word of the Lord overthrew;" and it was Jehovah, the Word, or Son of God, who rained from Jehovah the father, out of heaven, fire and brimſtone on Sodom and Gomorrah, and the reſt of the cities; ſee Gen. xix. 24. and the note there, in which chapter is the hiſtory of this fatal overthrow.

℣. 24. Even all nations ſhall ſay, &c.] For the deſtruction of this land, and the people of it, would be, as it has been, ſo very great and awful, and ſo very remarkable and ſurprizing, that the fame of it would be heard among all the nations of the world, as it has been; who upon hearing the ſad report of it, would aſk the following queſtions: wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land? ſo diſtinguiſhed from all others for the fruitfulneſs and pleaſantneſs of it; the people, the inhabitants of which he choſe, above all others, to be a ſpecial and peculiar people; and where he had a temple built for him, and where he had his reſidence, and worſhip uſed to be given unto him: what meaneth the heat of this great anger? what is the reaſon of his ſtirring up his fierce wrath, and cauſing it to burn in ſo furious a manner? ſurely it muſt be ſomething very horrible and provoking indeed!

℣. 25. Then men ſhall ſay, &c.] The anſwer that will be returned to the above queſtions will be this: becauſe they have forſaken the covenant of the Lord God of their fathers; breakers of covenants with men are always reckoned among the worſt of men, ſee Rom. i. 31. and eſpecially breakers of covenant with God, and with ſuch a God as the God of Iſrael was, ſo good, ſo kind and gracious; and of ſuch a covenant he made with them, in which ſo many good things were promiſed unto them, on condition of their obedience; as the continuance in ſuch a land they dwelt in, with an abundance of privileges, civil and religious: and this Covenant-God of theirs was the God of their fathers alſo; and it was always reckoned an heinous ſin among the heathens, to forſake the Gods of their anceſtors; ſee Jer. ii. 11. which he made with them when he brought them out of the land of Egypt; which is another aggravation of their breach of the covenant the Lord made with them; it being made with them by that God, and at that time, when he in ſo wonderful a manner, with ſuch mighty power, and a ſtretched-out arm, and in great great kindneſs and tenderneſs to them, brought them out of hard bondage, and moſt wretched ſlavery in Egypt.

℣. 26. For they went and ſerved other gods, and worſhipped them, &c.] As did all Iſrael, in the times of Solomon, and the ten tribes under Jeroboam, and other ſucceeding kings of Iſrael; and the two tribes in the times of Ahaz, and eſpecially of Manaſſeh, when they worſhipped all the hoſt of heaven; ſee 1 Kings xi. 33. and xii. 28. 2 Kings xvi. 4. and xxi. 3. Gods whom they knew not; to whom they, as well as their fathers before them were ſtrangers, and approved not of them; and of whoſe power and goodneſs they had no experience, and of which there never were any inſtances; yet ſuch was their ſtupidity, as to leave their God, the only true God, of whom they had many proofs in both reſpects, and worſhip theſe idols, which had never been profitable and ſerviceable to them on any account: and whom he hath not given unto them; which verſion ſeems not to afford a good ſenſe; for to what people ſoever has God, the true God, given other gods to worſhip, which this ſeems to imply, though he had not given or allowed any to them? Onkelos paraphraſes it, did not do them good; which Jarchi explains, the gods they choſe them did not impart to them any inheritance, or any portion; for the word uſed ſignifies to divide, or part a portion or inheritance; now the Lord God did divide to Iſrael the land of Canaan for an inheritance, but theſe idols had never divided any thing to them, and had been in no inſtance profitable or advantageous to them; and therefore it was madneſs and folly in them to worſhip them, as well as great ingratitude to the Lord their God, who had done ſuch great and good things for them; for ſo the words may be rendered, and did not impart or divide to them [a] any thing; that is, not any one of them did; for the verb is ſingular.

℣. 27. And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt this land, &c.] For this their idolatry and baſe ingratitude: to bring upon it all the curſes that are written in this book; in this book of Deuteronomy, and particularly ch. xxviii. 16. to the end; ſee Dan. ix. 11.

℣. 28. And the Lord rooted them out of the land, &c.] Which was true both at the Babyloniſh captivity by Nebuchadnezzar, and at their preſent one by the Romans; and eſpecially the latter, by whom they have been ſo rooted out, as that they have not been able to return to it theſe 1700 years, nor to have any inheritance or poſſeſſion in it; whereas at the end of 70 years, they returned from the Babyloniſh captivity to their land again: and which was done in anger, and in wrath, and in great indignation; which were moſt abundantly ſhown in the utter deſtruction of their land, city, and temple by the Romans: and caſt them into another land, as it is this day; the ten tribes were caſt into Aſſyria, and from thence into the cities of the Medes, the two tribes into the land of Chaldea, and now into all lands; and none their own, but another, a ſtrange and foreign country. The word caſt denotes the vehemence of the divine diſpleaſure at them, expreſſed by the removal of them out of their own land into another. In the Hebrew word for caſt a middle letter in it is greater than uſual; the reaſon of which perhaps is, that this dealing of God with them might be obſerved and taken notice of as very remarkable; and Ainſworth thinks it is to obſerve the greatneſs of the puniſhment; and the Jews underſtand this of the caſting away of the ten tribes: and they gather from hence, that the ten tribes ſhall not return, though about it they are divided; for ſo they ſay in the Miſnah [b], "the ten tribes ſhall not return, as it is ſaid, and caſt them into another land, as this day; as the day goes and does not return, ſo they go and return not; theſe are the words of R. Akiba. R. Eliezer ſays, as the day brings on darkneſs and light, ſo the ten tribes who are now dark ſhall be enlightened."

℣. 29. The ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God, &c.] Reſpecting the people of Iſrael, and the providential dealings of God with them, and eſpecially the final rejection of them; with reſpect to which the apoſtle's exclamation agrees with this, Rom. xi. 33. and though the Lord had revealed many things which ſhould befal them, there were others ſtill ſecret with him, and the reaſons of others; and particularly the times and ſeaſons of their accompliſhment, which he retains in his own power, Acts i. 6. There are many ſecret things in nature, which can't be found out and accounted for by men, which the Lord only knows; and there are many things in providence, which are unſearchable, and paſt finding out by finite minds, eſpecially the true cauſes and reaſons of them; and there are many things relating to God himſelf, which remain ſecret with him, notwithſtanding the revelation he has made of himſelf; for not only ſome of his perfections, as eternity, immenſity, &c. are beyond our comprehenſion; but the mode of ſubſiſtence of the three divine perſons in the godhead, the paternity of the one, the generation of the other, and the proceſſion of the Spirit from them both; the union of the two natures, divine and human, in the perſon of Chriſt; the thoughts, purpoſes, and decrees of God within himſelf, until brought into execution; and ſo there are many things relating to his creatures, as the particular perſons predeſtinated unto eternal life, what becomes of ſuch who die in infancy, what will befal us in life, when we ſhall die, where and in what manner, and alſo the day and hour of the laſt judgment. The Jews generally interpret this and what follows of the ſins of men, and puniſhment for them, and particularly idolatry; take Aben Ezra's ſenſe inſtead of many, "he that commits idolatry ſecretly, his puniſhment is by the hand of heaven (from God immediately); he that commits it openly, it lies upon us and upon our children to do as is written in the law:" but thoſe things which are revealed belong to us and to our children for ever; the things of nature and providence, which are plain and manifeſt, are for our uſe and inſtruction; and eſpecially the word and ordinances of God, which are the revelation of his will, the doctrines and promiſes contained in the ſcriptures, the ſeveral duties of religion, and the commandments of God, ſuch as are of eternal obligation, which may be chiefly deſigned, becauſe it follows: that we may do all the words of this law; for the end of this revelation is practice; hearing and reading the word will be of no avail, unleſs what is heard and read is practiſed. Some render the words [i], "the ſecret things of the Lord our God are revealed to us and to our children;" but neither the conſtruction of the words in the original, nor the Hebrew accents, will admit of ſuch a verſion; otherwiſe it would furniſh furniſh out a very great truth: for the ſecrets of God's love, of his council and covenant, are revealed unto his people, as well as many of his providences, and the myſteries of his grace; ſee Pſ. xxv. 14. There are ſome extraordinary pricks in the Hebrew text on the words, to us and to our children; which are deſigned to point out the remarkable and wonderful condeſcenſion and goodneſs of God, in making a revelation of his mind and will, both with reſpect to doctrine and duty, to the ſons of men.

CHAP. XXX.

THIS chapter contains ſome gracious promiſes of the converſion of the Jews in the latter day, of their calling things to mind that have befallen them, of their repentance, and the circumciſion of their hearts to love the Lord, of the return of them to their own land, and of the great increaſe of them, and of their enjoyment of plenty of good things, ℣. 1—10. in it is an account of the goſpel, or word of faith, which at this time ſhould be brought near to the Jews, and be received by them, ℣. 11—14. and for the preſent Moſes deſires them to conſider what he now ſet before them, and what would be the conſequences of receiving or rejecting it, and ſo what it would be moſt proper for them to make choice of, ℣. 15—20.

℣. 1. And it ſhall come to paſs when all theſe things are come upon thee, &c.] Declared, pronounced, foretold, and propheſied of in the three preceding chapters, eſpecially in ch. xxviii. the bleſſing and the curſe which I have ſet before thee; the bleſſings promiſed to thoſe that pay a regard to the will of God, and obey his voice, and curſes threatened to the diſobedient; ſee ch. xxviii. 1—20. and thou ſhalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee; recollect the promiſes and the threatenings, and obſerve the exact accompliſhment of them in their ſeveral captivities, and eſpecially in this their laſt and preſent captivity.

℣. 2. And ſhalt return unto the Lord thy God, &c.] By repentance, acknowledging their manifold ſins and tranſgreſſions, particularly their diſbelief, and rejection of the Meſſiah, now ſeeking him and ſalvation by him; ſee Hoſ. iii. 5. and ſhalt obey his voice; in the goſpel, yielding the obedience of faith to that; embracing the goſpel, and ſubmitting to the ordinances of it: according to all that I command thee this day, thou, and thy children; which was to love the Lord, and walk in his ways, directed to in the goſpel, and which were to be regarded from a principle of love to God, and the bleſſed redeemer; ſee ver. 6, 16. with all thine heart and with all thy ſoul; that is, both their return unto the Lord, and their obedience to his voice or word, ſhould be hearty and ſincere; which being the caſe, the following things would be done for them.

℣. 3. That then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compaſſion on thee, &c.] Return them from their captivity, or bring them out of it, both in a temporal and ſpiritual ſenſe; free them from their preſent exile, and deliver them from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, and the law; and all this as the effect of his grace and mercy towards them, and compaſſion on them; ſee Jer. xxx. 18. The Targum of Jonathan is, "his Word ſhall receive with good-will your repentance;" it being cordial and unfeigned, and fruits meet for it brought forth: and will return and gather thee from all the nations whither the Lord thy God ſcattered thee; or, will again gather thee [k]; as he had gathered them out of all places where they had been ſcattered, on their return from the Babyloniſh captivity; ſo will he again gather them from all the nations of the earth, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth, where they are now diſperſed; when they ſhall turn to the Lord, and ſeek David their king, the true Meſſiah. Maimonides [l] underſtands this paſſage of their preſent captivity, and deliverance from it by the Meſſiah.

℣. 4. If any of thine be driven out unto the outmoſt parts of heaven, &c.] As many of them are in this remote iſland of our's Great Britain, reckoned formerly the uttermoſt part of the earth, as Thule, ſuppoſed to be Schetland, an iſle belonging to Scotland, is ſaid to be [m]; ſee the note on ch. xxviii. 49. and as ſome of them are thought to be in America, which Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael [n] had a firm belief of: from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee; whoſe eye is omniſcient, and reaches every part of the world; and whoſe arm is omnipotent, and none can ſtay it, or turn it back. The Targum of Jonathan is, "from thence will he bring you near by the hands of the king Meſſiah."

℣. 5. And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers poſſeſſed, and thou ſhalt poſſeſs it, &c.] That the Jews upon their converſion in the latter day will return to the land of Judea again, and poſſeſs it, is the ſenſe of many paſſages of ſcripture; among others, ſee Jer. xxx. 18. Ezek. xxviii. 25, 26. and xxxvii. 21, 22, 25. Zech. x. 10. the above Targum is, "the Word of the Lord will bring thee, &c." and he will do thee good; both in things temporal and ſpiritual; ſee Ezek. xxxiv. 24—31. and multiply thee above thy fathers; increaſe their number more than ever they were in any age; for they ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be numbered, Hoſ. i. 10, 11.

℣. 6. And the Lord thy God will circumciſe thine heart, and the heart of thy ſeed, &c.] No mention is made of circumciſion of the fleſh, which will now be out of uſe with the Jews; they being fully convinced of the abrogation of the ceremonial law by the Meſſiah, whom they will now receive. It is ſpiritual circumciſion only that is here ſpoken of, with which the Jews will be circumciſed, when they ſhall be pricked and cut to the heart, and be thoroughly convinced of ſin; when the iniquity of their hearts will be laid open to them, and they put to pain, and filled with ſhame and lothing for it; when the hardneſs of their hearts will be removed, and the fooliſhneſs of them will be expoſed and taken away, and they will be made willing to part with their ſins, and with their own righteouſneſs; when the graces graces of the ſpirit will be implanted in them, and the blood of Chriſt applied to them for pardon and cleanſing. This is the circumciſion made without hands, which is not of men, but of God; what he calls for, and exhorts unto, as being neceſſary, ch. x. 16. he here promiſes to do; and indeed none but himſelf can do it; for he only can come at the hearts of men, to take any thing out of them, or put any thing into them; it is he that opens the heart, ſoftens, quickens, enlightens, and purifies it: Baal Hatturim ſays this reſpects the times of the Meſſiah: to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul; which though the duty of every man, is performed by none, but thoſe that have the grace of God; there is no love to God in the heart, before this inward and ſpiritual circumciſion of it: it is a fruit of the ſpirit in converſion; when the affections are taken off of other things, and ſet on Chriſt; when a man ſees his ſin and his ſaviour, and the one is odious, and the other precious; when the bleſſings of grace are applied, and the love of God is ſhed abroad in the heart, which cauſe love to God, and Chriſt again: that thou mayeſt live; ſpiritually and eternally; for there is no ſpiritual life in the ſoul, till the heart is circumciſed, or in other words regenerated and renewed; then it is quickened; then a man lives a life of faith on Chriſt, of holineſs from him, of communion with him, and has both an open right unto, and meetneſs for eternal life.

℣. 7. And the Lord thy God will put all theſe curſes upon thine enemies, &c.] Recorded in ch. xxviii. that is, the Word of the Lord, as the Targum of Jonathan; for he being now ſought unto, and embraced, will be their king and their ſaviour, and revenge their enemies: and on them that hate thee, which perſecuted thee; the Turks and Papiſts, the former having taken poſſeſſion of their land, and the latter being violent perſecutors of them in all their countries. This will be fulfilled when the vials of God's wrath will be poured on the Antichriſtian ſtates, Rev. xvi.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt return, and obey the voice of the Lord, &c.] In the goſpel; obey the form of doctrine delivered to them, embrace the truth of the goſpel cordially, and yield a chearful ſubjection to the ordinances of it; or receive the Word of the Lord, as the Targum of Jonathan, Chriſt, the eſſential Word, by faith, as the ſaviour and redeemer, mediator, prophet, prieſt, and king: and do all his commandments which I command thee this day; the commandment nigh unto them, in their mouths and hearts, even the word of faith, the miniſters of Chriſt preach, ℣. 11. beſides, all the moral precepts and commands of the law, which will then be in force, being eternal and invariable; which faith in Chriſt, and love to him, will influence and conſtrain them to obſerve.

℣. 9. And the Lord thy God will make thee plenteous in every work of thine hand, &c.] In every manufacture, trade, or buſineſs of life in which they ſhould be employed; the meaning is, that the Lord will greatly bleſs them in all that they ſhall ſet their hands to in a lawful way; ſo that they ſhall abound in good things, and have enough and to ſpare, a redundancy of the good things of life, great plenty of them: in the fruit of thy body; abundance of children: and in the fruit of thy cattle; a large increaſe of oxen and ſheep: and in the fruit of thy land for good; it being by the bleſſing of God on their labours reſtored to its former fertility, though now barren through want of inhabitants, and the ſlothfulneſs of thoſe that are poſſeſſed of it; for travellers obſerve [o], the ſoil is ſtill good, was it properly manured and cultivated: for the Lord will again rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers; particularly in the days of Solomon and David, when the people of Iſrael enjoyed plenty of all good things, and ſo they will hereafter; ſee Hoſ. ii. 15, 21, 22. The Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord will return to rejoice, &c." See Jer. xxxii. 41.

℣. 10. If thou ſhalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, &c.] Or rather, for thou ſhalt hearken [p]; ſeeing it is before promiſed, that the Lord would circumciſe their hearts to love him, and they ſhould obey his voice, ℣. 6, 8. The Targum is, "receive the Word of the Lord:" to keep his commandments and his ſtatutes, which are written in this book of the law; particularly in this chapter, and all that are of a moral nature: and if thou return unto the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul; or, for thou ſhalt return, &c. as it is promiſed they ſhould, ℣. 8.

℣. 11. For this commandment which I command thee this day, &c.] Which the Jews underſtand of the law, but the apoſtle Paul has taught us to interpret it of the word of faith, the goſpel preached by him and other miniſters, Rom. x. 6, 7, 8. which better ſuits with the context, and the prophecies before delivered concerning the converſion of the Jews, their reception of the Meſſiah, and his goſpel: it is not hidden from thee; being clearly revealed, plainly and fully preached: if hidden from any, it is from them that are loſt; from the wiſe and prudent, while it is revealed to babes, and given to them to know the myſteries of it: or too wonderful [q]; hard, difficult, and impoſſible; its doctrines are not beyond the underſtanding of an enlightened perſon; they are all plain to them that underſtand and find the knowledge of them; and the ordinances of it are not too hard and difficult to be kept; the commandments of Chriſt are not grievous: neither is it far off; for though it is good news from a far country, from heaven, it is come down from thence; it is brought nigh in the miniſtry of the word to the ears and hearts of men.

℣. 12. It is not in heaven, &c.] The ſcheme of it was formed in heaven, it was hid in the heart of God there, before revealed; it was ordained before the world was for our glory; it was brought down from thence by Chriſt, and committed to his apoſtles and miniſters of the word to preach it to men; and has been ever ſince continued on earth, and will be at the time of the converſion of the Jews: that thou ſhouldeſt ſay; that there ſhould be any occaſion of ſaying; it forbids any ſuch kind of ſpeech as follows: who ſhall go up for us to heaven, and bring it to us, that we may hear it, and do it? there is no need of that, for it is brought from thence already, and may be heard, and ſhould be obeyed: for to put ſuch a queſtion would be the ſame as to aſk to bring Chriſt down from above, who is come down already by the aſſumption of human nature, to preach the goſpel, give the ſenſe of the law, and fulfil it, to do the will of his Father, bring in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and ſave his people; ſo that there is no need of his coming again on the ſame errand, ſince he has obtained eternal redemption, tion, and is the author of everlasting salvation, which is the sum and substance of the gospel.

℣. 13. Neither is it beyond the sea, &c.] There is no need to travel into foreign parts, into transmarine countries for it, as the heathen philosophers did to get knowledge; for the gospel is ordered to be preached to all the world, and sent into all nations; and at the time of the conversion of the Jews the earth will be filled with the knowledge of it, as the waters cover the sea; so that there will be no need to go into distant countries for it; nor any occasion that thou shouldst say, who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? which would be all one as to desire to bring up Christ again from the dead; when he is already risen, and is gone to heaven, where he ever lives to make intercession for us; is thereby declared to be the Son of God with power, and is discharged as the surety of his people, having done compleatly what he engaged to do; and is risen for their justification, and become the first-fruits of the resurrection of the dead; wherefore whoever confesses with his mouth, and believes with his heart, that God has raised him from the dead, that is enough, he shall be saved: what a sublime sense of the words is this the apostle gives, and how jejune is that of the Chaldee paraphrast in comparison of it! see the note on Rom. x. 6, 7.

℣. 14. But the word is very nigh unto thee, &c.] In the ministration of it by those who clearly, plainly, and faithfully preach it, and in the application of it by the Spirit of God to the heart; and in the gracious experience converted persons have of the power and efficacy of it in them, and of the comfort they receive from it: in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it; in the mouth by confession, being not ashamed to own it, and profess it before men; and in the heart, where it is come with power, has a place, and works effectually, and is cordially believed, and comfortably experienced; and when this is the case, its ordinances will be faithfully kept as delivered, and chearfully submitted to.

℣. 15. See, I have set before thee this day, &c.] Moses here returns to press the Israelites to the present observance of the laws, statutes, and judgments of one sort and another, he had been delivering to them; as being of great moment and importance to them, no other than life and good, and death and evil; which are the effects and consequences of obedience and disobedience to them; a happy temporal life, and a continuance of it in the good land of Canaan, and an enjoyment of the blessings and good things thereof to them that are obedient; for not spiritual and eternal life, or spiritual blessings and everlasting happiness, are to be had by man's obedience to the law of works, only through Christ, through his obedience, righteousness, sufferings, and death; see Gal. iii. 21. so temporal death, or a cutting short of natural life in the promised land, and evil things, calamities, and distresses, or a deprivation of all the good things of it to the disobedient; see Is. i. 19, 20.

℣. 16. In that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, &c.] Which is the sum and substance of the first table of the law, and includes the whole worship of God, the contrary to which are idolatry, superstition, and will-worship, from which Moses had been dissuading and deterring them: to walk in his ways; which he has prescribed, as his will to walk in, and his law directs to: and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments; his laws moral, ceremonial, and judicial, Moses had been repeating and reciting: that thou mayest live and multiply; live in the land of Canaan, and have a numerous offspring and posterity to succeed and continue in it, which is confirmed by what follows: and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it; with health and happiness, with an affluence of all good things, in the land of Canaan they were just entering into to take possession of.

℣. 17. But if thine heart turn away, &c.] From the true God, and the right worship of him, and from his commands, statutes, and judgments: so that thou wilt not hear; the voice of the Lord and obey it, or hearken to his laws, and do them: but shalt be drawn away; by an evil heart, and by the ill examples of others: and worship other gods and serve them; the gods of the Gentiles, the idols of the people, besides the one living and true God, the God of Israel.

℣. 18. I denounce unto you this day that ye shall surely perish, &c.] By one judgment or another; this he most solemnly averred, and it might be depended upon that it would certainly be their case; see ch. iv. 26. and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over Jordan to go to possess it; but be cut short by death, of one kind or another, by sword, or famine, or pestilence, or be carried into captivity; one or other of which were frequently their case.

℣. 19. I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, &c.] Either literally understood the heavens above him, and the earth on which he stood, those inanimate bodies, which are frequently called upon as witnesses to matters of moment and importance; see ch. iv. 26. and xxxii. 1. Is. i. 2. or figuratively, the inhabitants of both, angels and men: that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; had plainly told them in express words what would be the consequence of obedience and disobedience to the law of God; long life, and the blessings of it in the land of Canaan, to those that obey it; death, by various means, and dreadful curses, to those that disobey it; of which see at large ch. xxviii. therefore chuse life, that thou and thy seed may live; that is, prefer obedience to the law, and chuse to perform that, the consequence of which is life; that they and their posterity might live comfortably and happily, quietly and safely, and constantly even to the latest ages in the land of Canaan.

℣. 20. That thou mayest love the Lord thy God, &c.] And shew it by keeping his commands: and that thou mayest obey his voice; in his word, and by his prophets: and that thou mayest cleave unto him; and to his worship, and not follow after, and serve other gods: for he is thy life, and the length of thy days; the God of their lives, and the father of their mercies; the giver of long life, and all the blessings of it; and which he had promised to those that were obedient to him, and which they might expect: that thou mayest dwell in the land which the Lord sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them; the land of Canaan, often thus described; this was the grand promise made to obedience to the law, and was typical of eternal life and happiness; which is had, not thro' man's obedience to the law, but thro' the obedience and righteousness of Christ.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXI.

MOSES being old, and knowing he ſhould quickly dye, and muſt not go over Jordan with the people of Iſrael, acquaints them with it, and encourages them and Joſhua to go over notwithſtanding, and not be afraid of their enemies, ſince the Lord would go with them, and deliver them into their hands, ℣. 1—8. and having written the law, he delivered it to the prieſts, and ordered that it ſhould be read at the end of every ſeven years before all the people, that they and theirs might learn it, and fear the Lord, ℣. 9—13. and whereas the death of Moſes was very near, and the Lord foreſeeing the people would quickly fall into idolatry, which would bring great calamities upon them, he directed Moſes to write a ſong, which ſhould be a witneſs for him, and againſt them, in ages to come; which Moſes accordingly did, ℣. 14—22. and Moſes having given a charge to Joſhua, and finiſhed the writing of the law in a book, gave it to the Levites to put it in the ſide of the ark, ℣. 23—27. and then ordered the chief of the tribes to be gathered together, that he might deliver the ſong, which by the direction and under the inſpiration of God he had written, ℣. 28, 29, 30. which ſong is recorded in the following chapter.

℣. 1. And Moſes went and ſpake theſe words unto all Iſrael;] The following words, even to the whole body of the people ſummoned together on this occaſion. It ſeems that after Moſes had made the covenant with them he was directed to, he diſmiſſed the people to their tents, and went to his own, and now returned, having ordered them to meet him again, very probably at the tabernacle; with which agrees the Targum of Jonathan, he "went to the tabernacle of the houſe of doctrine;" though, according to Aben Ezra, he went to the ſeveral tribes ſeparately, as they lay encamped; his words are theſe, "he went to every tribe and tribe, to acquaint them that he was about to dye, and that they might not be afraid, and to ſtrengthen their hearts;"—he adds, "in my opinion he then bleſſed them, though their bleſſings are afterwards written;" which is not improbable.

℣. 2. And he ſaid unto them, I am an hundred and twenty years old this day, &c.] Whether the meaning is, that that day preciſely was his birth-day, is a queſtion; it may be the ſenſe is only this, that he was now arrived to ſuch an age; though Jarchi takes it in the firſt ſenſe, to which are objected his words in ℣. 14. yet it ſeems by ch. xxxii. 48. that having delivered to the children of Iſrael the ſong he was ordered this day to write, on the ſelf-ſame day he was bid to go up to mount Nebo and dye: and it is a commonly received tradition with the Jews, that Moſes died on the ſame day of the month he was born; ſee the notes on ch. xxxiv. 7. I can no more go out and come in; not that he could no longer go out of his tent and return without great trouble and difficulty, being ſo decrepit; but that he could not perform his office as their ruler and governor, or go out to battle and return as their general; and this not through any incapacity of body or mind, both being vigorous, ſound, and well, as is clear from ch. xxxiv. 7. but becauſe it was the will of God that he ſhould live no longer to exerciſe ſuch an office, power, and authority: alſo the Lord hath ſaid unto me, or for the Lord has ſaid[r], and ſo is a reaſon of the foregoing; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord ſaid:" thou ſhalt not go over this Jordan; to which he and the people of Iſrael were nigh, and lay between them and the land of Canaan, over which it was neceſſary to paſs in order to go into it; but Moſes muſt not lead them there, this work was reſerved for Joſhua, a type of Chriſt; not Moſes and his law, or obedience to it, is what introduces any into the heavenly Canaan; only Jeſus and his righteouſneſs; ſee ch. iii 27.

℣. 3. The Lord thy God he will go over before thee, &c.] This he ſaid to encourage the people of Iſrael; that though he ſhould die, and not go over with them, their ever-living and true God, the great Jehovah, the Lord of hoſts, he would go before them, and fight their battles for them; ſo that they had nothing to fear from their enemies: and he will deſtroy thoſe nations from before thee; the ſeven nations which then inhabited the land: and thou ſhalt poſſeſs them; their countries, cities, and houſes, fields, and vineyards: and Joſhua he ſhall go over before thee; as their general to fight for them, ſubdue their enemies, and put them into the poſſeſſion of the land, and divide it to them: as the Lord hath ſaid; ch. iii. 28.

℣. 4. And he ſhall do unto them as he did unto Sihon, and to Og, kings of the Amorites, &c.] Deliver them up into their hands; ſee the hiſtory of this in Numb. xxi. and unto the land of them whom he deſtroyed; put them into the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, as they were now in poſſeſſion of the land of thoſe two kings he deſtroyed by them. This inſtance is given to encourage their faith, aſſuring them that what had been done to them, would be done to the Canaanitiſh kings, and their ſubjects, and their lands.

℣. 5. And the Lord ſhall give them up before your face, &c.] To ruin and deſtruction; the Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall deliver them up:" that ye may do unto them according to all the commandments which I have commanded you; that is, utterly deſtroy them, make no covenant with them, enter into no alliances, nor contract any marriages with them; but demoliſh their altars, cut down their groves, and break their images in pieces; of which laſt Aben Ezra interprets the words; but they are not to be reſtrained to that ſingle inſtance; ſee ch. vii. 1—5.

℣. 6. Be ſtrong and of a good courage, &c.] The ſeptuagint verſion is, "play the men, and be ſtrong;" be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, truſting and relying on him that goes before you; and ſo take heart, and be of good courage, and act the manly part; the apoſtle ſeems to refer to this paſſage, 1 Cor. xvi. 13. fear not, nor be afraid of them; their enemies, though ſo numerous, ſo mighty, and ſome of them of a gigantic ſtature, and their cities ſtrong and well fenced: for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; in compariſon of whom numbers of men, their ſtrength of body, and fortified places, ſignify nothing: he will not fail thee, nor forſake thee; not fail to fulfil his promiſes to them, not leave them till he had given them compleat victory over their enemies, enemies, put them into the poſſeſſion of their land, and ſettled them in it. This promiſe, tho' made to literal Iſrael, belongs to the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, and is made good to every true believer in the Lord; ſee Heb. xiii. 5.

℣. 7. And Moſes called unto Joſhua, &c.] Who might be at ſome diſtance from him, with the tribe to which he belonged. The Targum of Jonathan adds, "out of the midſt of the people:" and ſaid unto him in the ſight of all Iſrael; now aſſembled together, and what follows was ſaid in their hearing, to make him the more reſpectable to them: be ſtrong and of a good courage; the ſame that is ſaid to the people in the preceding verſe, and which was ſtill more neceſſary in him, who was to be their general, and to go at the head of them, and lead them on to battle; and though Joſhua was a man of courage and valour, as well as had military ſkill, as appears by his fight with Amalek, Exod. xvii. 9—13. yet ſuch an exhortation was not needleſs, ſeeing he had ſo much work to do, and ſo many enemies to contend with: for thou muſt go with this people unto the land which the Lord hath ſworn unto their fathers to give them; the Targum of Jonathan is, "which the Word of the Lord hath ſworn to give;" the land of Canaan, thither he muſt go with them; this was the will and determination of God, and he muſt go alone without him, Moſes, which would be a trial of his courage.

℣. 8. And the Lord, he it is that doth go before thee, &c.] The Word of the Lord, his ſhekinah, according to the above Targum, and ſo in the next chapter; the ſame that brought Iſrael out of Egypt, had gone before them in the wilderneſs, and now would go before Joſhua and them into the land of Canaan: he will be with thee; to guide and direct, to aſſiſt and ſtrengthen, to protect and defend, to give ſucceſs to his arms, and victory over his enemies: he will not fail thee, neither forſake thee; not fail to give him counſel and direction, to afford him ſtrength, and to fill him with courage, and to deliver his enemies into his hands; nor forſake him till he had finiſhed the work he was to do, had made a compleat conqueſt of the Canaanites, and ſettled the people of Iſrael in their land: fear not, neither be diſmayed; at the number and ſtrength of the enemy, nor at any difficulties that might lie in the way of finiſhing ſo great an undertaking, ſince the Lord would be with him; ſee Rom. viii. 31.

℣. 9. And Moſes wrote this law, &c.] The book of Deuteronomy, or the Pentateuch, the five books of Moſes, which he had now finiſhed, and which all of them together are ſometimes called the law, Gal. iv. 21. and delivered it unto the prieſts, the ſons of Levi; who were the teachers of the law, as Aben Ezra obſerves; ſee Mal. ii. 7. and therefore it was proper to put it into their hands, to inſtruct the people in it, and that the people might apply to them in any matter of difficulty, or when they wanted to have any particular law explained to them: which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord; for though they were the Levites, and particularly the Kohathites, who in journeying carried the ark; ſee Numb. iv. 5—15. and x. 21. yet ſometimes it was bore by the prieſts; ſee Joſh. iii. 13—17. and vi. 6. 1 Sam. iv. 4. and unto all the elders of Iſrael; the judges and civil magiſtrates in the reſpective tribes; for as there were in the book of the law ſeveral things which belonged to the prieſts to perform, and all of them they were to inſtruct in, ſo there were others which were to be the rule of judgment to judges, and all civil magiſtrates, and which they were to take care were put in execution; and therefore it was proper that they ſhould have a copy of this law, and which muſt be here underſtood; for it can't be thought that one and the ſame copy ſhould be given both to the prieſts and to all the elders. The Jews ſay Moſes wrote 13 copies of the law, 12 for the 12 tribes, and one to be put into the ark, to convict of fraud or corruption, ſhould any be made [s].

℣. 10. And Moſes commanded them, &c.] The prieſts and the elders, to whom the law was delivered: ſaying; as follows: at the end of every ſeven years; every ſeventh year was a year of reſt to the land, and of remiſſion of debts to poor debtors: at the cloſe of this year, or going out of it, according to the Miſnah [t], even on the eighth year coming in, the following was to be done, namely, the reading of the law; and ſo Jarchi interprets it of the firſt year of releaſe, the eighth, that is, the firſt year after the year of releaſe; but Aben Ezra better interprets it of the beginning of the ſeventh year; for as he elſewhere obſerves on ch. xv. 1. the word ſignifies the extremity of the year; and there are two extremities of it, the beginning and the end, and the firſt extremity is meant; which is more likely than that the reading of the law ſhould be put off to the end of the year, and which ſeems to be confirmed by what follows: in the ſolemnity of the year of releaſe, in the feaſt of tabernacles, or in the appointed time [u]; of the year of releaſe, of the releaſe of debtors from their debts, ch. xv. 1, 2. when the time or ſeaſon appointed and fixed was come: moreover, what is here directed to being to be done at the feaſt of tabernacles, ſhews it to be at the beginning of the year, ſince that feaſt was in the month Tiſri, which was originally the beginning of the year, before the coming of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and ſtill continued ſo for many things, and particularly for the years of releaſe [w]; and this was a very proper time for the reading of the law, when all the increaſe of the earth and fruits thereof were gathered in; and ſo their hearts filled, or at leaſt ſhould be, with gladneſs and gratitude; and when there was no tillage of the land, being the ſeventh year, and ſo were at leiſure for ſuch ſervice; and when all poor debtors were releaſed from their debts, and ſo were freed from all cares and troubles, and could better attend unto it.

℣. 11. When all Iſrael is come to appear before the Lord thy God, &c.] As all the males were obliged to do three times in the year, and one of thoſe times was the feaſt of tabernacles, and ſo a proper ſeaſon for the reading of the law; ſee Exod. xxiii. 14—17. in the place which the Lord ſhall chuſe; the city of Jeruſalem, and the temple there: thou ſhalt read this law before all Iſrael in their hearing; the book of Deuteronomy, as Jarchi, or it may be the whole Pentateuch: who were to read it is not expreſly ſaid; the ſpeech ſeems to be directed to the prieſts and elders, to whom the law written by Moſes was delivered, ℣. 9. and who were either to read it themſelves, or take care that it ſhould be read. Joſephus [x] aſcribes this ſervice to the high-prieſt; he ſays, "ſtanding in an high pulpit (or on an high bench) from whence he may be be heard, he must read the laws to all;" but the Jewish writers commonly allot this work to the king, or supreme governor, who at least was to read some parts of it; so Jarchi says, "the king at first read Deuteronomy, as it is said in the Misnah [y]; "he read from the beginning of Deuteronomy to ch. vi. 4. hear, O Israel, &c. and then added, ch. xi. 13. then ch. xiv. 22. after that ch. xxvi. 12. then the section of the king, ch. xvii. 14. next the blessings and the curses, ch. xxvii. and ch. xxviii. with which he finished the whole section;" and so we find that Joshua, the governor of the people after Moses, read all his laws, Josh. viii. 35. and so did king Josiah at the finding of the book of the law, 2 Kings xxiii. 2. and Ezra, Neh. viii. 3. The king received the book from the high-priest standing, and read it sitting; but king Agrippa stood and read, for which he was praised.

℣. 12. Gather the people together, men, and women, and children, &c.] At the three grand festivals in other years, only males were obliged to appear; women might if they would, but they were not bound to it; but at this time all of every age and sex were to be summoned and assembled together; and it is said [z], when the king read in the book of the law, all the people were obliged to come and bring their families, as it is said Deut. xxxi. 12. gather the people, &c. and as it could not be done when it happened on the sabbath-day, the reading of the section was put off to the day following: and thy stranger that is within thy gates; not only the proselyte of righteousness, but the proselyte of the gate that renounced idolatry, for his further conviction and thorough conversion to the religion of the true God; or, as the Targum of Jonathan expresses it, that they might see the honour and glory of the law. The end is more fully expressed as follows, that they may hear; all the laws which God had given: and that they may learn; and attain unto the true knowledge and right understanding of them: and fear the Lord your God; serve and worship him internally and externally, according to these laws: and observe to do all the words of this law; so take notice of them, as to put them in practice; and reading them in such a solemn pompous manner, made them the more observable, and raised the greater attention to them, and to the importance of them; otherwise they were read in their families, and on sabbath-days in their synagogues; see ch. vi. 7. Acts xiii. 15. and xv. 21.

℣. 13. And that their children which have not known any thing, &c.] Of God and of his law, and of their duty to God, to their parents, and the rest of their fellow-creatures: may hear and learn to fear the Lord your God; hear the law of God, learn the meaning of it, and so be brought up in the fear, nurture, and admonition of the Lord, and serve him their creator in the days of their youth: as long as ye live in the land whither ye go over Jordan to possess it; this being a means to continue the fear, service, and worship of God in their posterity, and so of their long continuance in the land of Canaan.

℣. 14. And the Lord said unto Moses, &c.] Either at the same time, or quickly after; rather perhaps, the same day: behold, thy days approach that thou must die; which does not necessarily imply that he had some days to live, though but few; but that the time of his death drew nigh, his last moments were approaching; the time of his death being, as every man's is, fixed by the Lord, with whom is the number of his years, months, days, and moments, beyond which he cannot pass, Job xiv. 5. call Joshua, and present yourselves in the tabernacle of the congregation, that I may give him a charge; this looks as if the people had been dismissed after the above exhortations given; and now Joshua was called, and Moses with him, to have a charge given him: and Moses and Joshua went and presented themselves in the tabernacle of the congregation; before the Lord. Aben Ezra says, Moses went from the camp of Israel where he was, to the camp of the shekinah; the Jews pretend to know in what form they walked thither. Moses, they say [a], went on the left hand of Joshua; and they went to the tabernacle, and the pillar of cloud descended and separated between them.

℣. 15. And the Lord appeared in the tabernacle in a pillar of cloud, &c.] As he was wont to do, see Exod. xxxiii. 9. in which cloud there was a lustre, a brightness, a glory visible, which shewed that he was there: and the pillar of the cloud stood over the door of the tabernacle; it seems to have appeared first in the tabernacle, and then it came out of it, and stood over the door of it, near to which Moses and Joshua were: the Targum of Jonathan adds, "Moses and Joshua stood without;" though the former clause, according to Noldius [b], should be over the tabernacle, or above it, where the cloud was wont to be.

℣. 16. And the Lord said unto Moses, &c.] Out of the pillar of cloud: behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers; a phrase expressive of death, frequently used both of good and bad men, which serves to render death easy and familiar, and less formidable; and to assure and lead into an expectation of an awaking out of it, or a resurrection from it: and this people will rise up; in their posterity; for not till after Joshua's death, and the death of the elders of Israel, did they revolt to idolatry, Josh. xxiv. 31. and go a whoring after the gods of the strangers of the land, whither they go to be amongst them; that is, after the gods of the Canaanites, who though at this time the inhabitants of the land, yet when the children of Israel became possessors of it, they were the strangers of it; and being suffered to continue contrary to the directions God had given to destroy them, would be a means of drawing them into the worship of their idols, expressed here by going a whoring after them, or committing whoredom with them. Idolatry in scripture is frequently signified by fornication and adultery; and as foretold this was the case; see Ps. cvi. 35—39. and will forsake me; their husband, departing from his worship and service: and break my covenant which I have made with them at Sinai; and now again in the plains of Moab, and which had the nature of a matrimonial contract; see Jer. xxxi. 32.

℣. 17. Then my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, &c.] As the anger of a man is against his wife who has treacherously departed from him; and jealousy, which is the rage of such a man, is very cruel; and much more the wrath and anger of a jealous God, who is a consuming fire: and I will forsake them; withdraw his favours from them, and his protection of them: and I will hide my face from them; take no notice of them in a providential way for good, nor hear their cries, to deliver them from evil: and they shall be devoured; by their enemies, or by the sore judgments of God,

God, by famine, ſword, peſtilence, and evil beaſts, they and their ſubſtance: and many evils and troubles ſhall befal them; both in their own land, and in other countries, where they would be, and have been carried captive: ſo that they will ſay in that day, are not theſe evils come upon us, becauſe our God is not amongſt us? of which they would be ſenſible by their being expoſed to their enemies for want of his protection, and by the evils upon them through his diſpleaſure, and by their being deprived of the good things that came from him; but no intimation is given of their being ſenſible of their ſins as the cauſe of all this.

℣. 18. I will ſurely hide my face in that day, &c.] Which is repeated for the certainty of it, and that it might be taken notice of; that he was the ſpring and ſource of all their good things, their ſun and their ſhield, who being withdrawn from them, they would be deprived of every thing that was good, and be liable to all evil; and this he would do, for all the evils which they ſhall have wrought; for all the immoralities they ſhould be guilty of, every tranſgreſſion of his law, whether of the firſt or ſecond table, and eſpecially idolatry: in that they are turned unto other gods; to the worſhip and ſervice of them, which of all evils would be the moſt provoking to God; and the way of ſpeaking ſuggeſts, as if all evils were included in idolatry, and ſprang from it, or were committed with it.

℣. 19. Now therefore write ye this ſong for you, &c.] Which was now dictated by the Lord, and given to Moſes and Joſhua to write, which is recorded in the following chapter: and teach it the children of Iſrael; teach them by it, inſtructing them in the meaning of it: thus it was uſual in antient times to write things in verſe, that they might be the more pleaſingly attended to and regarded, and be longer retained in memory; and eſpecially this practice was uſed with children, and ſtill is: put it in their mouths; oblige them to get it by heart, or lay it up in their memories, and repeat it frequently, that it may be familiar to them, and not be forgotten by them: that this ſong may be a witneſs for me againſt the children of Iſrael; when in times to come they ſhall call to mind how in this ſong they were cautioned againſt ſuch and ſuch ſins, and what they were threatened with ſhould befal them on account of them, and how all things have come to paſs exactly as foretold in it; which would be a teſtimony for God of his goodneſs to them, of his tender care of them, and concern for them, in the previous cautions he gave them; and of his foreknowledge of future events; and a teſtimony againſt them for their ingratitude and other ſins.

℣. 20. For when I ſhall have brought them into the land which I ſware unto their fathers, &c.] To give it to them, and put them into the poſſeſſion of it, even the land of Canaan, often thus deſcribed, and as it is by the following character: that floweth with milk and honey; aboundeth with all good things; ſee Exod. iii. 8. and they ſhall have eaten and filled themſelves, and waxen fat; that is, after they have for a conſiderable time enjoyed the good things of the land, and they abound with them, and increaſe in them, and have great fulneſs of them: then will they turn unto other gods; turn from the Lord who has brought them into all this plenty, from the fear, worſhip, and ſervice of him, and turn to the worſhip of idols: and ſerve them; the works of men's hands, and at moſt but creatures, and not the creator; than which nothing can be more abſurd and ſtupid, as well as wicked and ungrateful: and provoke me; nothing being more provoking to the Lord than idolatry, it ſtriking at his very nature, being, and glory: and break my covenant; now made with them; this being foretold by the Lord, which exactly came to paſs in numerous inſtances, proves his preciſe foreknowledge of future events, even ſuch as depend on the inclinations, diſpoſitions, and wills of men.

℣. 21. And it ſhall come to paſs when many evils and troubles are befallen them, &c.] As did in the times of the judges, in the Babyloniſh captivity, and do now in their preſent exile: that this ſong ſhall teſtify againſt them as a witneſs; which ſo clearly points at their ſins, with all their aggravated circumſtances, and deſcribes ſo fully their calamities, diſtreſſes, and puniſhment for them: for it ſhall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their ſeed; which ſhews that it reſpects time to come, their later poſterity, whoſe memory of this ſong would be rubbed up by the evils that ſhould come upon them for their ſins; nor is it forgotten by them to this day, who acknowledge there are ſome things in it now fulfilled or fulfilling in them: for I know their imagination which they go about even now; or are making [c]; forming and framing within themſelves, there being a ſecret inclination in their minds to idolatry, which were working and contriving ſchemes to bring it about, and ſet it up; and this, God, the ſearcher of hearts, knew full well, and that in proceſs of time this evil imagination would break forth into act, in an open and flagrant manner: before I have brought thee into the land which I ſware; to their fathers, to give it to them for an inheritance, as is ſuggeſted in a preceding verſe.

℣. 22. Moſes therefore wrote this ſong the ſame day, &c.] The ſame day it was dictated to him by divine inſpiration; he wrote it, as Joſephus ſays [d], "in Hexameter verſe, which he left in the holy bible or book (the pentateuch), containing, as he adds, a prophecy of things future, according to which all things have been done, and are done; and in nothing of it has he erred from the truth;" which is a very juſt account of it, and worthy of obſervation: and taught it the children of Iſrael; inſtructed them in the meaning of it, directed them to repeat it frequently, to lay it up in their memories, and often meditate upon it; as being a divine compoſition, and of great importance, as the conſideration of it will make appear.

℣. 23. And he gave Joſhua the ſon of Nun a charge, &c.] It may be a queſtion who gave this charge, the Lord or Moſes; according to the connexion of the words with the preceding, it ſeems to be the latter; for the immediate antecedent to the relative he is Moſes, and ſo the ſeptuagint interpreters underſtand it; but then they are obliged to read ſome following clauſes different from the original, as inſtead of I ſwear they read the Lord ſware; and the laſt clauſe they read, and he ſhall be with thee; but Aben Ezra gives the ſame ſenſe without departing from the common and genuine reading, ſuppoſing that Moſes gave the charge in the name, and by the authority of the Lord; his words are, "he gave charge by the commandment of the Lord, therefore he ſaith, which I ſware unto them;" but it ſeems beſt to underſtand this of the Lord himſelf, himself, since he ordered Moses and Joshua to present themselves before him, that he might give the latter a charge, ℣. 14. and the language of the following clauses best agrees with him: and said, be strong and of a good courage; see the notes on ℣. 6, 7. for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I sware unto them; see the note on ℣. 7. and I will be with thee; see the note on ℣. 8. the Targum of Jonathan is, "my Word shall be thy help."

℣. 24. And it came to pass when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, &c.] In this book of Deuteronomy, and which concluded the Pentateuch: until, they were finished; all the words of the law, and the whole five books of Moses, excepting some few verses at the end of chapter xxxiv. which were added by another hand, Joshua or Ezra.

℣. 25. That Moses commanded the Levites, &c.] These were not the common Levites, but the priests who were also Levites, to whom the law was given, ℣. 9. and none but they might touch the ark, or go so near it as they are bid to do, to put the law on the side of it; so Aben Ezra; it follows, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord; as the priests are said to do, ℣. 9. see the note there; for though in journeying the Kohathites carried it, yet not until it was covered by the priests, for they must not touch it; as these must do when they put the law on the side of it, as they are ordered in the next verse: saying; as follows.

℣. 26. Take this book of the law, &c.] Not Deuteronomy only, but the whole pentateuch: and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God; not in the ark, for there were nothing there but the two tables of stone with the ten commands on them, 1 Kings viii. 9. but on one side of it: the Targum of Jonathan says, it was "put in a chest (or box) on the right side of the ark of the covenant;" which is very probable. Jarchi observes, that the wisemen of Israel are divided about it in the Talmud[c]; some of them say there was a table (or ledge) that stood out from the ark without, and there it was put; others say it was put on the side of the tables of the law within the ark; the former are in the right: that it may be there for a witness against thee; when they fall into idolatry, or any other sin, a transgression of any of the laws therein contained.

℣. 27. For I know thy rebellion and thy stiff neck, &c.] How rebellious they were against the Lord and his laws, and how unwilling they were to admit the yoke of his commandments to be put upon them, and submit to it; this he had an experience of for forty years past: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious against the Lord; murmuring at his providences, speaking against his ministers, breaking his laws, particularly being guilty of idolatry, in making and worshipping the golden calf; and even now, as in ℣. 21. were imagining, forming, and framing in their minds something of the same kind, from the time of their coming out of Egypt unto this time they were now on the borders of Canaan; this had all along been their character; see ch. ix. 7, 24. and how much more after my death? When he would be no more with them to instruct and advise them, to caution and reprove them, and to keep them in awe by his authority.

℣. 28. Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, &c.] The heads of the tribes, the princes, and all other inferior magistrates: that I may speak these words in their ears; not the words of the law, but of the song which he was ordered to write, and is recorded in the following chapter: and call heaven and earth to record against them; to bear witness of what he delivered to them, and to bear witness against them should they transgress the laws he gave them; and to bear witness that they had been faithfully cautioned against transgressing, and had been severely threatened, and the punishment plainly pointed out that should be inflicted on them in case of disobedience, so that they were left entirely without excuse.

℣. 29. For I know that after my death, &c.] Which was just at hand, some time after that, not immediately; this he knew by a spirit of prophecy, namely, what follows: ye will utterly corrupt yourselves; their ways, works, and manners, and so themselves; corrupt the worship of God by making idols, and serving them, which is the corruption chiefly intended: and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you; from the way of the commandments of God, which Moses had given them in his name, and in which they were directed to walk; but, as here foretold, would wander and swerve from them as they did: and evil will befal you in the latter days; not only in the times of the judges, and in the time of the Babylonish captivity, but in their present captivity, as they call it; which shews that the following song has things in it which respect times at a great distance, and even the present ones, and yet to come: because ye will do evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger thro' the work of your hands; their idols, idolatry being the evil chiefly designed, which is of all things the most provoking to the Lord.

℣. 30. And Moses spake in the ears of all the congregation of Israel, &c.] Not in the hearing of the whole body of the people, and every individual thereof; no man could be able to speak to such a numerous congregation, as that they should hear him; but in the hearing of their heads and representatives, the elders of their tribes and officers, ordered to be gathered together for this purpose, ℣. 28. the words of this song until they were ended; which song is recorded in the following chapter, and reaches from ℣. 1. to the end of ℣. 43.

CHAP. XXXII.

THIS chapter contains the song mentioned and referred to in the former, the preface to it, ℣. 1, 2, 3. the character of the divine and illustrious person it chiefly respects, ℣. 4. the ingratitude of the people of the Jews to him, who were a crooked and perverse generation, aggravated by his having bought, made, and established them, ℣. 5, 6. and which is further aggravated by various instances of divine goodness to them, first in providing and reserving a suitable country for them, at the time of the division of the earth to the sons of men, with the reason of it, ℣. 7, 8, 9. then by what what the Lord did for them in the wilderneſs, ℣. 10, 11, 12. after that in the land of Canaan, where they enjoyed plenty of all good things, and in the poſſeſſion of which they were, when the illuſtrious perſon deſcribed appeared among them, ℣. 13, 14. and then the ſin of ingratitude to him, before hinted at, is fully expreſſed, namely, lightly eſteeming the rock of ſalvation, the Meſſiah, ℣. 15. nor could they ſtop here, but proceed to more ungodlineſs, ſetting up other meſſiahs and ſaviours, which were an abomination to the Lord, ℣. 16. continuing ſacrifices when they ſhould not, which were therefore reckoned no other than ſacrifices to dæmons, and eſpecially the ſetting up of their new idol, their own righteouſneſs, was highly provoking; and by all this, they clearly ſhewed they had forgot the rock the Saviour, ℣. 17, 18. wherefore, for the rejection of the Meſſiah and the perſecution of his followers, they would be abhorred of God, ℣. 19. who would ſhew his reſentment by the rejection of them, by the calling of the Gentiles, and by bringing the nation of the Romans upon them, ℣. 20, 21. whereby utter ruin and deſtruction in all its ſhapes would be brought upon them, ℣. 22—25. and were it not for the inſolence of their adverſaries, would be entirely deſtroyed, being ſuch a fooliſh and unwiſe people, which appears by not obſerving what the enemies of the Meſſiah themſelves allow, that there is no rock like him, whom they deſpiſed, ℣. 26—31. which enemies are deſcribed, and the vengeance reſerved for them pointed out, ℣. 32—35. and the ſong cloſed with promiſes of grace and mercy to the Lord's people, and wrath and ruin to his and their enemies, on which account all are called upon to rejoice in the latter day, ℣. 36—43. and this ſong being delivered by Moſes, the people of Iſrael are exhorted ſeriouſly to attend to it, it being of the utmoſt importance to them, ℣. 44—47. and the chapter is concluded with a relation of Moſes being ordered to go up to mount Nebo and die, with the reaſon of it, ℣. 48—52.

℣. 1. Give ear, O ye heavens, and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth.] This ſong is prefaced and introduced in a very grand and pompous manner, calling on the heavens and earth to give attention; by which they themſelves may be meant, by a proſopopeia, a figure frequently uſed in ſcripture, when things of great moment and importance are ſpoken of; and theſe are called upon to hearken, either to rebuke the ſtupidity and inattention of men, or to ſhew that theſe would ſhed or withhold their influences, their good things, according to the obedience or diſobedience of Iſrael; or becauſe theſe are durable and laſting, and ſo would ever be witneſſes for God and againſt his people: Gaon, as Aben Ezra obſerves, by the heavens, underſtands the angels, and by the earth, the men of the earth, the inhabitants of both worlds, which is not amiſs: and by theſe words of Moſes are meant the words of the ſong, referred to in the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter; here called his words, not becauſe they were of him, but becauſe they were put into his mouth, and about to be expreſſed by him, not in his own name, but in the name of the Lord; and not as the words of the law, which came by him, but as the words and doctrines of the goſpel concerning Chriſt, of whom Moſes here writes; whoſe character he gives, and whoſe perſon and office he vindicates againſt the Jews, whom he accuſes and brings a charge of ingratitude againſt for rejecting him, to which our Lord ſeems to refer, John v. 45, 46. and propheſies of their rejection, the calling of the Gentiles, the deſtruction of the Jews by the Romans, and the miſeries they ſhould undergo, and yet ſhould not be wholly extirpated out of the world, but continue a people, who in the latter days would be converted, return to their own land, and their enemies be deſtroyed; which are ſome of the principal things in this ſong, and which make it worthy of attention and obſervation.

℣. 2. My doctrine ſhall drop as the rain, my ſpeech ſhall diſtil as the dew, &c.] Which ſome, as Aben Ezra, take to be a prayer or wiſh, that the doctrine ſpoken by him, might fall upon men like rain, and dew on the earth, penetrate into their hearts, and influence them, and produce good effects there; but the words rather ſeem to be a prophecy of what would be: and by his doctrine and ſpeech, which ſignifie the ſame thing, is meant, not his law, which was fiery, this cooling like rain and dew; that was like a ſtorm, this as a gentle rain; that was terrible, this deſireable; that was diſtreſſing, this refreſhing; this no other than the goſpel, the ſpeech of God, the doctrine of Chriſt, the doctrine of grace, and mercy through him, and of life and ſalvation by him: it has its name from a word, which ſignifies to receive [f]; for it was received from God by Moſes, and by the prophets after him, by Chriſt himſelf, as mediator, and by the apoſtles from him, and is worthy of the acceptation of all: this is comparable to rain, becauſe, like that, it comes from heaven, is the gift of God, tarries not for man, but comes without any deſert of man, and often without his deſire; falls by divine direction in places and on perſons, as the Lord's will and pleaſure is, and that in great plenty, with a fulneſs of ſpiritual bleſſings, and precious promiſes; and for its effects, it cools the conſcience, filled with fiery wrath and indignation, moiſtens and ſoftens the hard heart, like the dry and parched earth, refreſhes and revives the drooping ſpirit, and makes barren ſouls fruitful in grace and good works: and it is like dew, which alſo is from heaven, and of God, fell in the night of the world; and as that falls in a temperate air ſo this, when the ſtormy diſpenſation of the law was over; and though but a ſmall thing in the eyes of the world, is of great influence, the power of God unto ſalvation, very grateful and delightful, and of great moment and importance; hereby the love and favour of God is diffuſed, the bleſſings of grace diſpenſed, the heavenly manna communicated, and the ſpirit and his graces received: and this, like rain and dew, drops and diſtils ſilently, not in a noiſy manner as the law; inſenſibly, falling on perſons at an unawares, in great abundance, like the drops of rain and dew; and effectually, working in all that believe: dew was a ſymbol of doctrine with the Egyptians [g]: this is further illuſtrated: as the ſmall rain upon the tender herb, and as the ſhowers upon the graſs; the firſt of thoſe words for rain, according to Jarchi, has the ſignification of a ſtormy wind, but that ſeems to contradict the gentle dropping and diſtilling of it; rather it ſignifies hairs [h], and denotes, as our verſion, ſion, the ſmalneſs of the rain, being as ſmall, thin, and light as hairs; and the latter word[1] has the ſignification of millions and thouſands, there being ſuch vaſt numbers as thoſe in a ſhower of rain: the tender herb and graſs may denote the multitude of perſons, to whom the goſpel would come, and be made uſeful; and may deſcribe ſenſible ſinners, tende rconſciences, ſuch as are weak in themſelves, with whom it is, the day of ſmall things, are new born babes, little children; who are juſt ſpringing up in grace, as among the graſs, and as willows by the watercourſes: now all this is ſaid by Moſes, to recommend his doctrine, as well as what follows.

℣. 3. Becauſe I will publiſh the name of the Lord, &c.] Not call on his name, as ſome, nor call to the heaven and earth in his name, as others, but proclaim his name, even the ſame that was proclaimed before Moſes, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. and this is to be underſtood, not of Jehovah the Father, nor of Jehovah the Spirit, but of Jehovah the Son, the rock whoſe work is perfect, and the rock of ſalvation, ℣. 4, 15. and not of any particular name of his, unleſs any of thoſe mentioned can be thought to be intended; rather his perfections and attributes, or his goſpel, called his name, Acts ix. 15. though his name may ſignify no other than himſelf, who is the ſum and ſubſtance of the goſpel, and who in his perſon, office, grace, and ſalvation, is to be publiſhed and proclaimed, openly and publickly, conſtantly and faithfully, and his name only; for there is no other under heaven whereby man can be ſaved: aſcribe ye greatneſs unto our God; to Chriſt, the rock of ſalvation, who is truly God, our God, God in our nature, God manifeſt in the fleſh, and who is the great God, and our Saviour, and therefore greatneſs is to be aſcribed to him: he is great in his perſon and perfections; his works are great, thoſe of creation and providence, and particularly of redemption and ſalvation; he is great in his offices, a great ſaviour, a great high-prieſt, a great prophet, a great king, and the great ſhepherd of the ſheep: thoſe that are called upon to give greatneſs to him which is his due, are the heavens and the earth, ℣. 1. and both have, literally and figuratively conſidered, bore a teſtimony to his greatneſs; the heavens, at his birth, a wonderful ſtar appeared, directing the wiſemen to him; at his death the ſun was darkened; at his aſcenſion the heavens were opened and received him, and ſtill retain him; even God in heaven, by a voice from thence, bore witneſs of him as his beloved ſon, in whom he was well pleaſed; alſo by raiſing him from the dead, declaring him to be the ſon of God with power, and by exalting him at his right hand as a ſaviour, and by the effuſion of the Spirit on his apoſtles, to preach and ſpread his goſpel: the angels in heaven aſcribed greatneſs to him, by their worſhip of him when he came into the world, by the declaration they made of him at his incarnation, and by the teſtimony they bore to his reſurrection, and by their ſubjection to him in all things: the church below, ſometimes called heaven, in the book of the Revelation aſcribe all honour, glory, and greatneſs to him: the earth, the whole terraqueous globe, in it have been diſplayed the greatneſs of Chriſt, the power and glory of his divinity; in the ſea by becoming a calm at his word of command, in the rocks by being rent at his death, and will be in both by delivering up the dead in them, at the laſt day: the inhabitants of the earth, eſpecially the redeemed from among men, aſcribe greatneſs to him, by attributing daily to him all the perfections of the Godhead, and the glory of their ſalvation: Aben Ezra ſays, Moſes refers to the heavens and the earth, or reſpects them, and compares with this Pſ. xix. 1.

℣. 4. He is the rock, &c.] That is, Jehovah is the rock, whoſe name Moſes propoſed to publiſh; and our God, to whom the heavens and the earth are called upon to aſcribe greatneſs, even Chriſt the rock of ſalvation: here begins the ſong; the firſt word in it is very emphatical, it has a letter in it larger than uſual, to denote the greatneſs of this perſon, and to make it obſervable; he is this or that rock[k], by way of eminence, that rock and ſtone of Iſrael, Jacob propheſied of, which was typified by the rock Moſes had ſmitten in the wilderneſs, and which, no doubt, he knew, as the apoſtle Paul did, that it was a type of Chriſt, and had taught the Iſraelites ſo to underſtand it; and therefore this epithet of a divine perſon would not ſeem ſtrange to them, and yet is that rock the unbelieving Jews would and did ſtumble at, and the rock of ſalvation they lightly eſteemed and rejected; the rock of refuge for ſenſible ſinners to flee unto for ſhelter and ſafety, from the wrath and juſtice of God, and from every enemy; the rock the church of God and every believer are built upon, and in which they dwell; and who is the rock of ages that will endure for ever, as the Saviour of his people, and the foundation of their faith and hope: his work is perfect; not ſo much the work of creation or of providence, which are both the works of Chriſt, but that of redemption and ſalvation, in which there is not only a diſplay of all the divine perfections, but is compleat in all its parts; the law is perfectly fulfilled, juſtice is fully ſatisfied, a perfect righteouſneſs is wrought out, a compleat pardon is procured, perfect peace is made, full atonement of ſins obtained, and the whole work is finiſhed; and is ſo perfect that nothing is wanting in it, or can be added to it, nor can it be unravelled or undone again: likewiſe the work of building the church on this rock is carrying on, and will be perfected when all the elect of God, all given to Chriſt and redeemed by his blood, ſhall be called by grace and gathered in; when the laſt of the choſen ones, and redeemed of the lamb is brought in and laid in the building; when Chriſt ſhall deliver up the kingdom to the father compleat, and God ſhall be all in all, and his church and people will be in a perfect ſtate to all eternity: for all his ways are judgment; his ways, which he himſelf has taken and walked in; his ways of providence are according to the beſt judgment and higheſt wiſdom, and according to the ſtricteſt juſtice and equity; his ways of grace towards the ſalvation of his people, and the building up his church on himſelf, the rock; all the methods he took in eternity and time, were all formed according to the counſel of God, and planned with the greateſt wiſdom, founded in his righteous nature, and according to covenant-compact with his father, and entered into in the moſt honourable manner; and in which he brought about the ſalvation of his people, in perfect conſiſtence with the juſtice and holineſs of God, and to the honour of them and his holy law: and he has executed all his offices of prophet, prieſt, and king, in the moſt juſt and righteous manner: the ways which he has preſcribed his his people to walk in, and in which he leads them, are ways of truth, righteouſneſs, and holineſs; ſuch are all his ordinances and commandments: a God of truth; ſo Chriſt is called, Iſ. lxv. 16. ſee the note there; or the true God, which alſo is his name, 1 John v. 20. and is ſo called in oppoſition to fictitious deities, and ſuch who are only ſo by name or office, but not by nature; whereas he is truly and properly God, as appears from his names and nature, from his perfections, works, and worſhip, aſcribed to him: or God the truth [l], for he is the truth, John xiv. 6. the truth of all types, promiſes, and prophecies, which all have their accompliſhment in him; the ſum and ſubſtance of all truths and doctrines, from whom they all come, and in whom they all center: or the God of faith, or faithfulneſs [m]; the object of faith, and the author and finiſher of it; and who is faithful, as the God-man, and mediator to him that appointed him, being entruſted with all the elect of God, with all promiſes and bleſſings of grace for them, with a fulneſs of grace to communicate unto them, with the glory of God in their ſalvation, and with their future and final happineſs; and is faithful in the diſcharge of his offices of prophet, prieſt, and king: without iniquity; in his nature, in his heart, in his lips, and in his life; nor was ever any committed by him: juſt and right is he; juſt, both as a divine perſon, and as man and mediator; a lover and doer of righteouſneſs, a worker out of righteouſneſs for his people, and the juſtifier of them by it; juſt and righteous, as the ſervant of God, as king of ſaints, and judge of the whole world; right or upright, which is the character of a divine perſon, agrees with Chriſt, and may denote his ſincerity, uprightneſs, and faithfulneſs.

℣. 5. They have corrupted themſelves, &c.] This and what follows may ſeem to be the characters of the enemies of Chriſt, who lightly eſteemed and rejected him, ſet in a contraſt with him; who were not only corrupt by nature, as all men are, but were men of corrupt minds in their tenets and principles; who corrupted the word of God by their traditions, in the times of Chriſt; and were men of corrupt practices themſelves, and corrupters of others: their ſpot is not the ſpot of his children; of the children of the divine perſon before deſcribed; Chriſt the rock has children, given him by his father, in whoſe adoption he has a concern, and by whoſe Spirit they are regenerated: theſe have their ſpots; by which are meant ſins, and by thoſe men are ſtained and polluted; ſo called in alluſion to the ſpots of animals, as leopards; or to ſpots in faces and garments, through dirt and the like: by nature they are as others, and whilſt in an unregenerate eſtate, and indeed after converſion; though they are waſhed from their ſins by the blood of Chriſt, and are juſtified by his righteouſneſs, and ſo without ſpot, yet in themſelves they are not without ſpots or ſins, as their confeſſions and complaints, and all experience teſtify: but the ſpots or ſins of wicked men are not like theirs; the children of Chriſt ſin through infirmity of the fleſh, and the force of temptation, but wicked men through the malignity of their hearts, willingly and purpoſely; what good men do of this kind, they hate, but what chriſtleſs and graceleſs ſinners do, they love; ſaints do not continue in ſin, but ungodly men do, and proceed to more ungodlineſs, and wax worſe and worſe; gracious ſouls, when they ſin, are ſorry for it, repent of it, are melted for it, and take ſhame to themſelves on account of it; but unconverted men repent not of their wickedneſs, are hardened in it, and glory of it; ſee the character of the Jews in Chriſt's time, to which this ſong refers, John viii. 44. though theſe clauſes may be rendered to another ſenſe, more agreeable to the context, and to the Hebrew accents, as they are by ſome; is there any corruption in him? no [n], that is, is there any corruption in the illuſtrious perſon before deſcribed, as without iniquity, juſt, and right? no, none at all in his nature divine or human; not in his divine nature, being the incorruptible God; nor in his human nature, which is entirely free from that corruption by ſin, common to all that deſcend from Adam by natural generation, he being conceived under the power of the Holy Ghoſt; nor any in his life and converſation, being perfectly agreeable to the pure and holy law of God; nor any in his doctrines, however they may be charged by ignorant and malicious men, a proof of which follows: or his children are their ſpot [o]; ſo the clauſe may be rendered; the ſpots of the Jewiſh nation, the moſt wicked and vileſt among them became his children; not only the loweſt and meaneſt of them, as to civil and worldly things, but the more ignorant and the more wicked, even publicans and harlots; theſe, and not the righteous, he came to call and ſave, and did receive; theſe were regenerated by his grace, and they believed in him; and to them gave he power to become his children: but then did they remain the wicked perſons they had been? no, they were made new creatures, they were internally ſanctified, and lived holy lives and converſations; a clear proof this, that there was no corruption in Chriſt, nor in his doctrine, and that he neither by his tenets nor example encouraged ſin, but all the reverſe; wiſdom is juſtified of her children, Matt. xi. 19. but then the reſt, and the far greater part of the Jewiſh nation, in his time, have their character truly drawn, as follows: they are a perverſe and crooked generation; men of perverſe and crooked natures, tempers, diſpoſitions, ways, and works; who walked contrary to the will and law of God, and were indeed contrary to all men, 1 Theſ. ii. 15, 16. this is the very character that is given of them, Matt. xvii. 17. Acts ii. 40.

℣. 6. Do you thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people and unwiſe? &c.] This is alſo a proper character of the Jews in the times of Chriſt, who are often by him called fools, Matt. xxiii. 17, 19. being very ignorant of the ſcriptures, and of the propheſies in them reſpecting him, ſetting up their own traditions on a level with the word of God, or above it; they were ignorant of the law of God, and the meaning of it; of the righteouſneſs of God, of the righteouſneſs of his nature, and of what the law required, as well as of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and of him as a ſpiritual redeemer, and of ſalvation by him: and a moſt egregious inſtance of their folly, and of want of wiſdom was their ingratitude to him, in diſeſteeming and rejecting him; which is what is here referred to and meant, by ill-requiting him, though not expreſſed till ℣. 15. and a moſt ſad requital of him it was indeed, indeed, that he ſhould come to them, his own, in ſo kind and gracious a manner, and yet be rejected by them; that he ſhould become man, and yet for that reaſon be charged with blaſphemy for making himſelf God; horrid ingratitude to infer the one from the other; and becauſe he appeared as a ſervant, diſowned him as the Son of God; and becauſe he came in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh to take away ſin, they traduced him as a ſinner: is not he thy father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee? Moſes in order to aggravate this their ingratitude, rehearſes the various inſtances of divine goodneſs to them, from the beginning of them as a nation; it was the Lord that was the founder of them as a nation, whoſe ſon, when ſent unto them, was rejected by them; it was he that bought them, or redeemed them from Egyptian bondage; that made or formed them into a body politic, or civil commonwealth, that eſtabliſhed and ſettled them in the land of Canaan: this is expreſſed in general terms; particular inſtances of the goodneſs of God to them are after enumerated: or if this is to be underſtood of Chriſt himſelf, who was rejected by them, it is true of ſome among them, in a ſpiritual and evangelic ſenſe, and ſo by a figure, the whole is put for a part, as ſometimes the part is for the whole: Chriſt the everlaſting Father of the world to come, had many children in the Jewiſh nation, for whoſe ſake he became incarnate, and whom he came to ſeek and to ſave; and whom he bought with his precious blood, and whom, by his Spirit and Grace, he made new creatures, the children of God, kings, and prieſts unto God; and eſtabliſhed them in the faith of him and upon him, the ſure foundation; or whom he faſhioned, beautified, and adorned with his righteouſneſs, and with the graces of his Spirit.

ỳ. 7. Remember the days of old, conſider the years of many generations, &c.] That went before the times of Chriſt, and the Jews rejection of him, and obſerve the inſtances of divine goodneſs to them; as in the time of the Maccabees, whom God raiſed up as deliverers of them, when oppreſſed by the Syrians and others; and in the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, how they were delivered out of it; in the times of David and Solomon, when they enjoyed great proſperity; and in the times of the Judges, by whom they were often ſaved out of the hands of their enemies; and in the times of Moſes and Joſhua, how they were led, by the one out of Egypt and through the wilderneſs, and by the other into the land of Canaan; and thus might they be led on higher, to the proviſion and reſervation of the good land for them in the times of Noah and his ſons, which they are referred to in the next verſe: and in all theſe times, days, years, and generations, they might conſider what notices were given of the Meſſiah, the rock of ſalvation, rejected by them; not only by the prophets ſince the captivity of Babylon and in it; but before it by Iſaiah and others, and before them by David, and Solomon his ſon, by Moſes and by all the prophets, from the beginning of the world; all which would ſerve to aggravate their ſin in refuſing him: Jarchi's note on the paſſage is, "remember—conſider— "to know what is to come; for it is in his hand "(or power) to do you good, and cauſe you to "inherit the days of the Meſſiah, and the world "to come:" aſk thy father, and he will ſhew thee; either their immediate parents, father for fathers, or ſuch as were their ſeniors, or rather Abraham, their father, is meant; whom they might enquire of, not by perſonal application to him, but by conſulting the writings of Moſes, and obſerve what is there related of him; how he was called out of Chaldea to go into the land of Canaan, his ſeed was after to inherit; and how he had an expreſs grant of that land to his poſterity, and where they might be ſhewn and ſee the prophecy delivered to him of their being in Egypt, and coming out from thence; and what he knew of the Meſſiah, whoſe day he ſaw, and rejoiced at, now rejected by them his offſpring: thy elders, and they will tell thee; not their preſent elders who rejected the Meſſiah, but thoſe in ages paſt; the elders of Iſrael, who ſaw the glory of the God of Iſrael, and were preſent at the covenant made at Horeb, Exod. xxiv. 9, 10. or rather the ſons of Noah, by whom the earth was divided, to which the following verſe refers; or the ancient writers, the writers of the ſcriptures: Jarchi, by father, underſtands the prophets, and by elders, the wiſemen: the Targum of Jonathan is, "read in the books of the law and "they will teach you, and in the books of the pro- "phets and they will tell you."

ỳ. 8. When the moſt high divided to the nations their inheritance, &c.] In the times of Noah and his ſons, in the days of Peleg, who had his name from thence, Gen. x. 25. the moſt high, is a well-known and proper epithet of God; the dividing of the earth to the ſeveral nations of it, and giving to every one their part and portion to poſſeſs and inherit, was the work of God; for though it was done by the ſons of Noah, yet by the order, appointment, and direction of the moſt high, who rules in heaven and in earth, Gen. x. 32. men might not and did not take what they pleaſed, or ſeize on as much as they could, but each had their parcel allotted and portioned out to them, by the Lord himſelf; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "when "by lot the moſt high divided the world to the "people that ſprung from the ſons of Noah:" when he ſeparated the ſons of Adam; one from another; diſtinguiſhed by the perſons from whom they deſcended, by the tribes and nations to which they belonged, and by the countries they inhabited; for though they deſcended from Noah and his ſons, they were the ſons of Adam, the firſt man: or rather, the children of men, as the wicked of that generation were called, in diſtinction from the ſons of God, or his people and worſhippers; and may have reſpect to the ſeparation of them at Babel, where their languages were confounded, and they were ſcattered about, and ſome went into one part of the world, and ſome into another, according to the appointment and direction of divine providence; ſo the builders of Babel are called, and this was what befel them, Gen. xi. 5, 8, 9. which ſenſe the above Targum confirms, "when he ſepa- "rated the writings, the languages of the chil- "dren of men in the generation of the diviſion:" he ſet the bounds of the people; or nations, the ſeven nations of the land of Canaan; he pitched upon, and fixed the land they ſhould inherit, and ſettled the bounds of it, how far it ſhould reach, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth: according to the number of the children of Iſrael; the ſenſe is, that ſuch a country was meaſured out and bounded, as would be ſufficient to hold the twelve tribes of Iſrael, when numerous, and their time was come to inhabit it; and which, in the mean while, was put into the hands of Canaan and his eleven ſons to poſſeſs; not as their proper inheritance, but as tenants at will, until the proper heirs exiſted, and were at an age, and of a ſufficient number to inherit; herit; in which may be obſerved the wiſe diſpoſition of divine providence, to put it into the hands of a people curſed of God, ſo that to take it from them at any time, could not have any appearance of any injuſtice in it; and their enjoying it ſo long as they did was a mercy to them, for ſo long they had a reprieve: now here was an early inſtance of the goodneſs of God to Iſrael, that he ſhould make ſuch an early proviſion of the land flowing with milk and honey for them, even before they were in being, yea, before their anceſtors, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob exiſted; as early as the days of Noah; and yet, ungrateful as they were, deſpiſed and ſet at nought, his Son, the rock of ſalvation, when ſent unto them: thus the heavenly inheritance, typified by the land of Canaan, was not only promiſed, but prepared, provided, ſecured, and reſerved for the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, before the foundation of the world, from all eternity, and which is appointed according to their number; there is room enough in it for them all, though they are many; in it are many manſions for the many ſons to be brought to glory.

℣. 9. For the Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.] This is the reaſon why the Lord ſo early provided a portion or inheritance for the children of Iſrael in the land of Canaan; becauſe they were his part, his portion, his inheritance, which he choſe by lot for himſelf, or allotted to himſelf; whom he choſe to be his ſpecial and peculiar people; for though all the world is his, he only reſerved a part for himſelf, which he ſeparated from all the reſt, and conſiders as his portion and inheritance, ſee Pſ. xxxiii. 12. thus the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, as they are his people, whom he has choſen, taken into covenant, given to Chriſt, and are redeemed and ſaved by him; they are his part or portion, ſeparated by diſtinguiſhing grace from the reſt of the world; and are the inheritance of Chriſt, who is appointed heir of all things, and is an unalienable inheritance; and is obtained by lot, or rather is meaſured out by a rod or line; by the line of electing grace, by which the church and people of God are circumſcribed, marked out, and diſtinguiſhed from others; and by the line, and rule of the ſacred ſcriptures, which are the meaſure and ſtandard of faith and practice, of worſhip and diſcipline to them.

℣. 10. He found him in a deſert land, and in the waſte howling wilderneſs, &c.] In this and the two following verſes, inſtances are given of the goodneſs of God to the people of Iſrael, when in the wilderneſs; by which is meant, either the wilderneſs of the land of Egypt, as it is called, Ezek. xx. 36. where they were in a moſt miſerable and forlorn condition, in which the Lord found them, and out of which he brought them; or rather the deſert of Arabia, a waſte place, where no proviſions could be had; a howling wilderneſs, through the blowing of the winds, the cries of wild creatures, as dragons, owls, oſtriches, and the like, as the Targum of Jonathan, Jarchi, and Aben Ezra, and the howling of paſſengers loſt, or for want of proviſions; here the Lord found them, and they were as acceptable to him as grapes to a traveller in a wilderneſs, Hoſ. ix. 10. ſee the note there: this is an emblem of the world, in which the ſpiritual Iſrael are, when called by grace out of it, of an unregenerate ſtate, in which they are found, and out of which they are brought: the phraſe ſometimes ſignifies ſufficing, or finding with every thing ſufficient; ſee Numb. xi. 22. ſo Onkelos renders it here; which is true of the Lord's dealing with this people; he ſupplied them with manna, the corn of heaven; angels food, and with water out of the rock, and fleſh to eat in fulneſs, yea, with raiment as well as food; with every thing convenient for them: ſo the Lord does for his ſpiritual Iſrael, feeding them with his word and ordinances, cloathing them with the righteouſneſs of his ſon, giving them freſh ſupplies of grace, and withholding no good thing from them; ſo that they have enough, having all things richly to enjoy: he led him about; when he brought the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, he did not lead them the neareſt way to the land of Canaan, thro' the way of the land of the Philiſtines, but he led them about through the way of the wilderneſs of the Red-ſea; and when they were come to the borders of the land, becauſe of their murmurings and diſobedience, they were ordered back into the wilderneſs again; nor were they ſuffered to go thro' the land of Edom when on the confines of it, which would have been a ſhorter way; but they were obliged to go round that land, which was very diſcouraging to them, ſee Exod. xiii. 17, 18. Numb. xiv. 25. and xxi. 4. and thus the Lord, though he could if he would, bring his people at once to heaven; he could ſanctify them at once, as well as juſtify them; he could take them the moment he regenerates them into his kingdom, as the thief on the croſs; yet this is not his uſual way: though he calls them out from among the men of the world, he continues them in it, having ſomething for them to do or ſuffer for his name's ſake; he indeed leads them ſoon into the right and plain way of ſalvation, and not in a round-about way of duties; yet he leads them in many round-about ways in providence, which are all right, though ſometimes rough; they ſeem at times to be near to heaven, and then they are turned into the world again; nay, the apoſtle Paul was in heaven, and yet ſent into the wilderneſs of the Gentiles again, for the good of ſouls and the intereſt of a redeemer; however they all at laſt come ſafe to heaven and happineſs: the words may be rendered he ſurrounded or compaſſed him about [p], and the rather, ſince leading them about ſeems to be by way of reſentment or puniſhment, whereas Moſes is enumerating inſtances of goodneſs and kindneſs, as this was one; he covered them with the clouds of glory, ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, Jarchi and Aben Ezra: he protected them with his power and providence, and preſerved them from ſerpents and ſcorpions, and the wild beaſts of the wilderneſs, as well as from all their enemies: and the Lord ſurrounds his ſpiritual Iſrael with angels, who encamp about them; with himſelf, who is a wall of fire round about them; with his power, in which they are kept as in a garriſon; and with his love, which encompaſſes them as a ſhield: he inſtructed him; he taught him the law, as the Targum of Jonathan; ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra; or the decalogue, as the Jeruſalem Targum; he inſtructed him in the knowledge of the true God and his worſhip; in the knowledge of the Meſſiah, and of his righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; for he inſtructed him by his good Spirit, Neh. ix. 20. ſo the Lord inſtructs his ſpiritual Iſrael, by his Spirit, his miniſters, his word and ordinances, in the know-knowledge of themſelves, and of himſelf in Chriſt, and of Chriſt and the way of life by him; and this being joined with the Lord's leading about his people, may ſuggeſt that he inſtructs them by adverſe diſpenſations of providence: the word [q] ſignifies, cauſing to underſtand; and God only can teach and inſtruct in ſuch ſenſe, as to give men an underſtanding of the things they are taught and inſtructed in: he kept him as the apple of his eye; in the moſt careful and tender manner: the apple of the eye is an aperture in it, which lets in rays of light into the retina or chamber where the images of things are formed; this is wonderfully guarded in nature, for beſides the orbit of the eye, which is ſtrong and bony, and the eye-lids, which in ſleep are cloſed, to prevent any thing falling into the eye to diſturb it; and the eye-brows, which are fringed with hair to break off the rays of light which ſometimes would be too ſtrong for it; beſides all theſe, there are no leſs than ſix tunicks or coats to keep and preſerve it: and in like manner did the Lord keep and guard Iſrael, whilſt paſſing through the wilderneſs, from fiery ſerpents, ſcorpions, and the nations, that none might hurt, as Jarchi; and eſpecially thus he keeps his ſpiritual Iſrael, who are parts of himſelf, one with him, near and dear to him; and about whom he ſets guard upon guard, employs all his perfections to ſecure them, and conſtantly watches over them night and day, and keeps them from all evil and every enemy, and preſerves them ſafe to his kingdom and glory.

℣. 11. As an eagle ſtirreth up her neſt, &c.] Her young ones in it, to get them out of it: Jarchi ſays, the eagle is merciful to its young, and does not go into its neſt ſuddenly, but firſt makes a noiſe, and diſturbs them with her wings, ſtriking them againſt a tree or its branches, that ſo they being awakened may be fitter to receive her: with reſpect to literal Iſrael, Egypt was their neſt, where they were, who were then in their infant-ſtate, lay like young birds in a neſt; and though it was a filthy one, and where they were confined, yet they ſeemed ſometimes as if they did not care to come out of it; until the Lord made uſe of means to get them out, by the miniſtry of Moſes and Aaron, by ſuffering their taſk-maſters to make their bondage heavier, and by judgments inflicted on the Egyptians, which made them urgent upon them to depart: with reſpect to ſpiritual Iſrael, their neſt is a ſtate of unregeneracy, in which they are at eaſe, and do not care to be awakened and ſtirred out of it; but the Lord, in love to them, awakens them, ſtirs them up, and gets them out; by ſending his miniſters to arouſe them, by letting in the law into their conſciences, which works a ſenſe of wrath, by convincing them by his Spirit of their ſin and danger, opening their eyes to ſee their wretched and miſerable eſtate and condition, and by exerting his almighty power, plucking them as brands out of the burning: fluttereth over her young; by that means to get them out of the neſt, and teach them to fly, as well as to preſerve them from the attempts of any to take them away; for though ſome writers repreſent the eagle as hard-hearted to its young, caſting them out of the neſt, when they are taken care of by the oſſifrage; yet this is to be underſtood of it, when tired with nurſing, and when its young are capable of taking care of themſelves; or of ſome ſort of eagles; for Ælianus [r] teſtifies, that of all animals the eagle is moſt affectionate to its young, and moſt ſtudiouſly careful of them; when it ſees any one coming to them, it will not ſuffer them to go away unpuniſhed, but will beat them with its wings and tear them with its nails: Jarchi thinks this phraſe is expreſſive of the manner of its incubation on its young; it does not, he ſays, lie heavy upon them, but lifts up herſelf, and touches them as if ſhe did not touch them; but it rather ſignifies the motion ſhe makes with her wings to get her young, when fledged, out of the neſt, and to teach them to make uſe of their wings, as ſhe does; and we are told that young eagles, when their wings are weak, will fly about their dams and learn of them to fly [s]; and hence it is that young eagles whilſt they are eating flutter their wings, that motion being ſo natural to them, and ſeeing their dams do ſo likewiſe [t]: this paſſage ſeems to contradict a notion that has obtained with ſome, that an eagle only breeds one at a time; the philoſopher ſays [u], the eagle lays three eggs and caſts out two of them; according to the verſe of Muſæus, it lays three, caſts out two, and brings up one; and ſo he ſays, it commonly is the caſe: but ſometimes three young ones are ſeen together; and the black eagles are more kind to their young, and careful in the nouriſhment of them; and the ſame ſays Pliny [w]; yea, we are told, that ſometimes ſeven are ſeen in a neſt [x]: ſpreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings; that is, ſpreads forth her wings when ſhe flutters over her young to inſtruct them; or ſhe does this in order to take up her young and carry them on them: it is ſaid that eagles fly round their neſt, and vary their flights for the inſtruction of their young; and afterwards taking them on their backs, they ſoar with them aloft, in order to try their ſtrength, ſhaking them off into the air; and if they perceive them too weak to ſuſtain themſelves, they with ſurprizing dexterity fly under them again, and receive them on their wings to prevent their fall [y]; ſee the note on Exod. xix. 4. thus the Lord, comparable to this creature, for his affection to the people of Iſrael, his care of them, and his ſtrength to bear and carry them, did bear them as on eagles wings, and carried and ſaved them all the days of old; even Chriſt the angel of Jehovah's preſence, the rock of ſalvation they rejected, ſee Exod. xix. 4. Iſ. lxiii. 9. and all this in a ſpiritual and evangelic ſenſe may be expreſſive of the gracious dealings of God with his ſpiritual Iſrael; teaching and enabling them to mount up with wings as eagles, to ſoar aloft in the exerciſe of faith, hope, and love, entering thereby within the vail into the holieſt of all, and living in the conſtant and comfortable expectation of heaven and happineſs; and of the Lord's taking his people up from the low eſtate in which they are, and raiſing them up to near communion with himſelf, bearing them on his heart, in his hands, and on his arm, ſupporting them under all their afflictions, and carrying them through all their troubles and difficulties ſafe to eternal glory and happineſs.

Canaan, going before them in a pillar of fire and cloud; though this is not to be underſtood to the excluſion of the miniſtry of Moſes and Aaron, by whom he led them, Pſ. lxxvii. 20. it may be interpreted of the people being alone in the wilderneſs when led: and there was no ſtrange god with him; with Iſrael; ſo Aben Ezra, no idolatry among them then; to which ſenſe are the Targums of Jeruſalem and Jonathan; but it may rather ſignify that the Lord alone was the leader of his people, and he had no aſſiſtant in that work, and therefore all the glory ſhould be given to him: he is the leader of his people, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, out of a ſtate of unregeneracy, which is a ſtate of darkneſs and bondage; out of the ways of ſin and from the paſtures of their own righteouſneſs, into an open ſtate of grace, which is a ſtate of light and liberty; in Chriſt the way, and in the paths of faith, truth, holineſs, and righteouſneſs, unto the heavenly glory, typified by the land of Canaan, the bleſſings of which are next deſcribed: the Jews ſay [z], this will be in the days of the king Meſſiah; when there will be no abominable thing in Iſrael, the Lord alone ſhall lead him.

℣. 13. He made him to ride on the high places of the earth, &c.] Or land, the land of Canaan; by which are meant the towers, caſtles, and fortified places in it, ſome of which might be built on hills and mountains; and being made to ride on them, may denote the delivery of them into their hands, their conqueſts and poſſeſſion of them, and triumph in them; ſee Iſ. lviii. 14. ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "made him to dwell "in the towers of the land of Iſrael," thoſe high walled and ſtrongly fenced cities which they dreaded: this may be an emblem of the conqueſt believers have of their ſpiritual enemies, ſin, ſatan, and the world, in and through Chriſt; of their ſafety and triumph in him; of their high and elevated frames of ſoul, when they have got above the world and the things of it; this will be the caſe of ſpiritual Iſrael in every ſenſe in the latter day, when the mountain of the Lord's houſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains: that he might eat the increaſe of the fields; the produce of them, particularly corn for bread, and which the Iſraelites eat of as ſoon as they came into the land of Canaan, Joſh. v. 11, 12. an emblem of the goſpel, and the truths of it, which are ſalutary, nouriſhing, ſtrengthening, reviving, and chearing, and of Chriſt the bread of life, which believers by faith eat of, and feed upon and live: and he made him to ſuck honey out of the rock; not water out of the rock, as ſweet to them as honey, that they had in the wilderneſs; but either the honey of bees that made their neſts in rocks, as a ſwarm of them did in the carcaſe of a lion; and ſo in like manner as honey came out of the lion, it may be ſaid to be ſucked out of the rock: ſo Homer [a] ſpeaks of ſwarms of bees out of a hollow rock: or this was the honey of palm-trees, as Aben Ezra obſerves, ſome ſay, which might grow on rocks, ſee the note on ch. viii. 8. and this is favoured by the Targum of Jonathan, which paraphraſes the words, "honey from thoſe fruits which grow on the "rocks," unleſs it means honey gathered by bees from ſuch fruits: the rock may typify Chriſt, and the honey out of it the goſpel, which is from him and concerning him; comparable to honey for the manner of its production and gathering, by the laborious miniſters of the word; for its nouriſhment, and eſpecially for its ſweetneſs, its precious promiſes, and pleaſant doctrines: and oil out of the flinty rock; that is, oil out of the olives, which grow on rocks, and theſe delight to grow on hills and mountains; hence we read of the mount of olives, ſee Job xxix. 6. and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "and oil out of the olives and ſuckers "which grow on the ſtrong rocks;" this may ſignify the Spirit and his graces, the unction which comes from Chriſt the holy one, and the bleſſings of grace had from him, and the goſpel and its truths; which are chearing and refreſhing, mollifying and healing, feeding and fattening, pure and unmixed, and uſeful for light, as oil is.

℣. 14. Butter of kine, &c.] Made of milk, which kine or cows give; Jarchi ſays, this is the fat that is gathered on the top of milk; he means cream, and which indeed was the butter of the antients and is here meant: milk of ſheep; which they give, though not in ſuch plenty as the kine, yet what is very wholeſome and nouriſhing: the philoſopher [b] obſerves, that ſheep give more milk in proportion to the bigneſs of their bodies than cows: and Pliny [c] ſays, their milk is ſweeter and more nouriſhing, and the butter made of it is the fatteſt: with fat of lambs; or fat lambs, rich and delicious food: and rams of the breed of Baſhan, and goats; a fruitful country abounding with paſturage, where rams and goats of the beſt ſort were fed, and the breed of them was coveted and had in the land of Canaan; the kine of Baſhan are mentioned elſewhere, Pſ. xxii. 12. Amos iv. 1. with the fat of kidneys of wheat; that is, the beſt wheat, the grains are plump and full; and Aben Ezra obſerves, that a grain of wheat has ſome likeneſs to a kidney; ſee Pſ. lxxxi. 16. and cxlvii. 14. and thou didſt drink the pure blood of the grape; wine which comes from the grape, red wine, pure and unmixed, ſee Gen. xl. 12. the land of Canaan was a land of vines, and abounded with good wine, ch. viii. 8. which the Iſraelites when they came into it, drank of in common, who had only drank water in the wilderneſs, and had but little fleſh, and lived on manna, and now abounded with plenty of all good things; all which are obſerved as inſtances of divine goodneſs, and to aggravate their ingratitude in rejecting the Meſſiah, they then enjoying all theſe good things, the land being alike fertile and affluent then, as appears from Iſ. vii. 14, 15, 21, 22. Jarchi applies this fruitfulneſs to the times of Solomon, as the butter of kine, and the kidneys of wheat, 1 Kings iv. 22, 23. and fat of lambs, and the blood of the grape, to the times of the ten tribes, Amos vi. 4—6. but this was the conſtant fertility of the land, and laſted to the times of the Meſſiah: now all theſe may be expreſſive of the bleſſings of grace, and the ſpiritual food of the goſpel: Ainſworth very prettily remarks, that here is both food for babes and for grown perſons, butter and milk for the one, and meat for the other, and drink for them both: the plain truths of the goſpel are like butter, ſoft and eaſy to be taken in, and like milk, eaſy of digeſtion, cooling, nouriſhing, ſweet, and pleaſant; the more ſublime truths of the goſpel are meat for ſtrong men, ſignified by the fleſh of fat lambs, rams, and goats; which all being uſed in ſacrifices were typical of Chriſt; as alſo the fineſt of wheat is an emblem of him the bread of life, on whom the weakeſt believer liever lives by faith; and the drink for both, the wine the blood of the grape, may ſignify the love of Chriſt, the goſpel and the truths of it, and the bleſſings of grace, which come through the everlaſting covenant.

℣. 15. But Jeſurun waxed fat and kicked, &c.] This is undoubtedly a name of the people of Iſrael; it is to be met with only in three places more, in ch. xxxiii. 5, 26. Iſ. xliv. 2. it is generally thought to come from a word [d], which ſignifies upright and righteous, ſuch theſe people ought to have been, and ſome among them were; and they generally profeſſed themſelves, and outwardly appeared to be upright, juſt and righteous perſons, and were deſirous of being reckoned ſo; which was their character in the times of Chriſt, when they rejected him: others derive it from a word [c], which ſignifies to behold, to ſee, and ſo deſcribes them as ſeeing ones; and ſuch they had been in the times of Moſes, ſaw extraordinary ſights and wonders in Egypt, the great ſalvation at the Red Sea, the Lord going before them in a pillar of cloud and fire; the manna every day falling about their tents; twice rocks ſmitten, and waters flowing from them, and had often very uncommon ſights of the glory of God: and in the times of Chriſt, to which this ſong refers, they ſaw him in the fleſh, preaching in their ſynagogues, doing miracles, riding on an aſs to Jeruſalem, according to one of their prophecies, and expiring on the croſs, and yet rejected him. They are ſaid to wax fat, enjoy great outward proſperity, to abound in temporal good things, as they alſo did in ſpiritual privileges; enjoying, or they might have enjoyed, ſuch a miniſtry of the word, as never was before or ſince, the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt, of Chriſt himſelf, and of his apoſtles, yet they kicked; which may denote their diſobedience to the laws of God, moral and ceremonial, ſee 1 Sam. ii. 29. Neh. ix. 25, 26. and particularly the introduction of idolatry among them, which was kicking againſt God, and his worſhip; firſt among the ten tribes, in the times of Jeroboam, and among the two tribes, more eſpecially in the times of Manaſſeh: and this kicking was particularly verified in Judas's lifting up his heel againſt Chriſt, and betraying him; which was not merely the ſin of him only, but what the whole body of the people were involved in, ſee Pſ. xli. 9. Acts vii. 52: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs; which is repeated and expreſſed by different words, both for the certainty of it, and to denote their great affluence of good things, and ſo the more to aggravate their impiety and ingratitude, next obſerved: then he forſook God which made him; the worſhip of God, as the Targum of Jonathan, giving into idolatry in times paſt; and the written word of God, by giving heed to the traditions of the elders, to the making void and of none effect the word of God; or Chriſt, the eſſential Word of God; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "and left the Word of God, who "created them;" that Word of God which was in the beginning of all things, and by whom all things were made, and they alſo; who in the fulneſs of time was made fleſh, and dwelt among men, John i. 1, 2, 3, 14: and lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation; the ſame divine perſon, deſcribed ℣. 4. and there called the rock, ſee the note there; here the rock of ſalvation, becauſe ſalvation flows from him: he is the author of it, and it is to be had of him, and no other; and this epithet ſhows not only his ability and ſtrength to effect it, but the ſecurity of it in him, which being wrought out is an everlaſting one. He is ſaid to be the rock of his ſalvation, Jeſhurun or Iſrael, he being of the Jews, raiſed up among them, and ſent unto them, and was the ſaviour of ſome of them actually, even of the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, and on account of his ſalvation deſerving of univerſal eſteem. But the Jews lightly eſteemed him, had no value for him, ſet this rock and ſtone at nought; he was refuſed and rejected by the builders, who is now the head of the corner; they deſpiſed him, mocked at him, and treated him with the utmoſt contempt and diſdain, yea with abhorrence; all which, and more, is ſignified by the word here uſed: they traduced him as a vile and wicked perſon, and charged and treated him as ſuch, ſo ſome render the word [f]; and, as others [g], they made a dead carcaſs of him, they crucified and ſlew him; this is the crime of ingratitude hinted at in ℣. 6. and all between is an enumeration of inſtances of divine goodneſs to this people, mentioned with a view to aggravate this unheard-of ſin.

℣. 16. They provoked him to jealouſy with ſtrange gods, &c.] Or with others [h]; the word gods is not in the text, nor were the Jews guilty of worſhipping ſtrange gods or idols in the times of Chriſt, nor had they been from the time of their coming out of the Babyloniſh captivity; but the word, as Cocceius obſerves, is uſed for another, as in Job xix. 27. and ſignifies other ſaviours, other meſſiahs, whom the Jews ſet up when they rejected Chriſt, the rock of ſalvation; and it is obſervable, that before the coming of Chriſt, they never attempted to ſet up any; but after they had rejected him, were ready to embrace every one that offered, of which one called Bar Cochab, the ſon of a ſtar, in alluſion to Numb. xxiv. 17. is a flagrant inſtance; and whom, when they found themſelves deceived, they called Bar Cozba, the ſon of a lye, or a lying fellow; to whom our Lord may be thought to have reſpect, John v. 43. and where he expreſsly calls him another. Now, not only to reject Jeſus, the true Meſſiah, but to ſet up others in his room, falſe chriſts, was highly provoking to God, who is a jealous God, and will not give his glory to another: with abominations provoked they him to anger; by advancing the traditions of the elders to an equality with, and above the word of God; and by continuing ſacrifices, after the great ſacrifice was offered up, when they ought to have ceaſed; for by continuing them, it was ſaying Chriſt was not come in the fleſh, nor his ſacrifice offered up; it was trampling under foot the Son of God, and treating his blood and ſacrifice with contempt; which muſt be an abomination to God, and highly provoking of his anger, when that ſacrifice was of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him; and eſpecially what was abominable to him, and grievouſly provoked him to anger and wrath, was their ſetting up the idol of their own righteouſneſs, refuſing to ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, Rom. x. 3. and indeed, whenever any thing is ſet up in competition with him, or in oppoſition to him, be it what it will, it muſt be an abomination to God; becauſe it oppoſes his purpoſes and reſolutions of ſaving men by Chriſt alone, reflects on his wiſdom in the ſcheme of ſalvation, flies in the face of his love, grace and mercy, makes the death of Chriſt of none effect, advances pride in the creature, gives God the lye, who ſays there is no other Saviour, and is a total ſlight and neglect of his goſpel; all which muſt be abominable, and dreadfully provoking to him; ſee Iſ. lxv. 5. Luke xvi. 15. and xviii. 14.

℣. 17. They ſacrificed to devils, not to God, &c.] Their ſacrifices being continued, when it was the will of God they ſhould ceaſe, were reckoned by him not as offered to him, but to dæmons, and to ſuch that were not God; they being therein under the inſtigation of ſatan, and doing his luſts, John viii. 44. juſt as Pagans and Papiſts, worſhipping idols under the influence and direction of ſatan, are ſaid to worſhip devils, and ſacrifice to them, 1 Cor. x. 20. Rev. ix. 20. and indeed ſetting up their own righteouſneſs was ſacrificing to their own net, and burning incenſe to their own drag, to an idol, and not to God: to which may be added, that whereas they trampled under foot the Son of God, and did deſpight to the Spirit of grace, by which Chriſt caſt out devils, and offered himſelf without ſpot, they excluded two of the divine perſons in the deity, and ſo worſhipped not the true God, Father, Son and Spirit: to gods whom they knew not, to gods that came newly up; ſuch as angels, into the worſhip of which they fell, as their writings teſtify [i], and to which the apoſtle ſeems to have reſpect, Col. ii. 18. whom your fathers feared not; paid no regard unto, put no truſt or confidence in; or, as the Targum of Jonathan, "with whom your fathers had nothing to "do;" as they had not, with the idol of man's righteouſneſs, but wholly looked unto and truſted in the grace and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and expected ſalvation alone by him: the goſpel of righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Chriſt was preached to our firſt parents in Eden's garden, which they embraced and believed in; Noah was an heir, and preacher of the righteouſneſs of faith, that is, of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, received by faith; that righteouſneſs which was what Abraham believed in, was imputed to him for his juſtifying righteouſneſs; and Jacob waited for the Meſſiah the ſalvation of God; in ſhort all the old-teſtament ſaints were ſaved by the grace of Chriſt, as we are; the idols, the works of men's own righteouſneſs are new deities they paid no deference to, placed no confidence in.

℣. 18. Of the rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, &c.] The ſame with the rock of ſalvation, ℣. 15. repeated and expreſſed in different words, that their wretched ingratitude might be taken notice of and obſerved: begetting is aſcribed to this rock, as regeneration is to Chriſt, 1 John ii. 29. and was true of ſome among the Jews: ſome chuſe to render the words, the rock of thy kindred [k]; being a near kinſman, a brother through his incarnation, which aggravated their unmindfulneſs of him: and haſt forgotten God that formed thee; for the rock they were unmindful of and forgot is the true God and eternal life, the eſſential word of God, as both the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem interpret it; him the Jewiſh nation forgot; they forgot the characters given of him in the promiſes and prophecies of the old teſtament; and therefore knew him not when he came and fulfilled the voices of the prophets they were ignorant of in condemning him: hence they were unmindful of his perſon, his offices, his works, his benefits, and the great ſalvation by him; as indeed too many are that call themſelves chriſtians: ſome obſerve that the word here uſed ſignifies bringing forth children with pain, and ſo may reſpect the bitter ſorrows and ſufferings of Chriſt, ſometimes expreſſed by a word [l], which ſignifies the pains of women in childbirth, Acts ii. 24. and called the travail of his ſoul, Iſ. liii. 11. and ſo a further aggravation of their ingratitude, that they ſhould forget him that ſuffered ſo much, at leaſt, on account of ſome of them; for, thoſe he endured to bring forth children unto God, or to gather together the children of God, ſcattered abroad both in Judea and in the whole world, John xi. 51, 52.

℣. 19. And when the Lord ſaw it, &c.] The diſregard of the Jews to Chriſt, their forgetfulneſs of him, their diſeſteem and rejection of him; their continuance of ſacrifices, when the great ſacrifice was offered up; their ſetting up other meſſiahs and ſaviours, and the idol of their own righteouſneſs in oppoſition to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; all which not only as the omniſcient God he ſaw, but took notice of, and conſidered, and did not at once paſs judgment on them, at leaſt did not immediately execute it, but waited ſome time to ſee how they would afterwards behave; for it was thirty years or more after the crucifixion of Chriſt that the utter deſtruction of the Jews came upon them: he abhorred them; in his heart, deſpiſed them, and at laſt rejected them with contempt and abhorrence, very righteouſly and in juſt retaliation, ſee Zech. xi. 8. as for what before obſerved, ſo for what follows: becauſe of the provoking of his ſons, and of his daughters; which is not to be underſtood of the Lord, being provoked to wrath, by the ſins of thoſe who called themſelves or were called his ſons and daughters; for theſe are ſuch who were truly his ſons and daughters, and different from thoſe in the following verſe, ſaid to be children in whom is no faith; theſe are no other than the diſciples and followers of Chriſt, that believed in him, both men and women, and ſo the children of God, his ſons and his daughters by ſpecial grace; and the provoking of them is the wrath of the enemy againſt them, as the ſame word is uſed and rendered in ℣. 27. and ſhould be here, becauſe of wrath, or indignation againſt his ſons and his daughters [m]; meaning the affliction, diſtreſs, and perſecution of them, through the wrath of the unbelieving Jews; for after the death of Chriſt they perſecuted his apoſtles, they beat them and caſt them into priſon, and put ſome to death; a perſecution was raiſed againſt the church at Jeruſalem, in which Saul was concerned, who breathed out threatenings and ſlaughters againſt the diſciples of the Lord, and haled men and women, the ſons and daughters of God, and committed them to priſon, and perſecuted them to ſtrange cities, and gave his voice to put them to death; and in the Gentile world when the goſpel was carried there, the Jews ſtirred up the Gentiles every where againſt the followers of Chriſt, to harraſs and diſtreſs them; and this the Lord ſaw, and he abhorred them for it, and rejected them.

℣. 20. And he said, I will hide my face from them, &c.] Now the Lord proceeds to pass sentence on the Jews for their ill treatment of his Son, and of his followers; which respects judgments that should come upon them, both spiritual and temporal, or corporal; the former lies in this and the following verse, and the latter in ℣. 22, 23, 24, 25. and this the Lord said in his own heart and mind, decreed and determined it within himself, and declared it in his word by his prophets, as here and in other places: and this first part of the sentence denotes the withdrawment of the gracious presence of God, and the manifestation of his favour from the people of the Jews, his dislike and contempt of them, having taken out from among them the remnant according to the election of grace, the disciples and followers of Christ; and the removal of the gospel, and the ordinances of it from them, the means of light and knowledge, joy and comfort, and the giving of them up to blindness and hardness of heart, which continues to this day; they having a vail of darkness and ignorance upon their hearts whilst reading the books of the old testament, which will be done away when they turn to the Lord, and not before; likewise this was fulfilled when all the symbols of the divine presence were removed, when the temple was destroyed, and all things in it, or carried away; and this house, which was formerly the house of God, and where he dwelt, was left desolate by him; and it is remarkable, that a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, a voice was heard in the temple, let us go hence, as Josephus relates [z]: I will see what their end shall be; their destruction, called in the new testament the end of the world; the end of the Jewish church-state and common-wealth: this the Lord said, not as ignorant what it should be, or when it would be; but the sense is, either that he would cause them and others to see it, when he should bring wrath upon them to the uttermost; or that he would look upon it with pleasure and delight, which would be an aggravation of their punishment, Prov. i. 26. for they are a very froward generation; men of perverse spirits, of a contrary and contradictory temper and disposition, who pleased not God, and were contrary to all men; as well as contradicted and blasphemed the gospel of Christ, were men of distorted principles in religion, implicated and inconsistent, they wresting the scriptures to their own destruction; and were obstinate, stubborn, and inflexible in their notions and practices, and that to the last, which was their ruin: children in whom is no faith; for though they had faith in one God, in the scriptures of the old testament as the word of God, in the law of Moses, and in a future state, the resurrection of the dead, and judgment to come; especially the Pharisees, the greater part of the Jews; yet though they were the children of Abraham, and would be thought to be the children of God, they had no faith in Jesus, the true Messiah; him they disbelieved and rejected; and as their fathers could not enter into the land of Canaan, whose carcases fell in the wilderness, because of unbelief; so these were cast out of the land, and from the Lord, because of their unbelief in the rejection of the Messiah. Aben Ezra observes, that it may be interpreted there is no men of faithfulness, or no faithful men among them, as in Ps. xii. 1. they were a faithless generation, covenant-breakers, broke their covenant with God, and therefore he rejected them.

℣. 21. They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God, &c.] With a false messiah; for after the death of Jesus, the true Messiah, God as well as man, many false christs arose, as he predicted, and were received for a time, who were mere men, and deceivers; and their now vainly expected messiah, or whom they look for, according to their own sense of him, is no other than a mere creature, and not God: or with the idol of their own righteousness; which, as an idol is nothing in the world, that is nothing in the business of justification, and put in the room of Christ highly provokes the Lord to jealousy: they have provoked me to anger with their vanities; such were their false christs they in vain trusted in, and such the idol of their own righteousness they set up, but could not make to stand; and such were the traditions of their elders, they put upon an equality with, or above the word of God; all which stirred up the wrath and anger of God against them: and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people: this is not to be understood of any particular nation, but of the Gentiles in general, and of God's elect among them, and of the calling of them; which would be provoking to the Jews, as the apostle Paul has taught us to understand it, Rom. x. 19. These were not the people of God, or not my people, as he says Rom. ix. 25, 26. 1 Pet. ii. 10. In some sense indeed they were his people, being chosen by him, and taken into covenant with him; for he is God not of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles also; and those were given to Christ as his people, and are his other sheep which were not of the Jewish fold; and who were redeemed by him to be a peculiar people out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation, all which was before their calling: yet, in another sense they were not his people; they were without any spiritual privileges, the word and ordinances, without the knowledge of God and Christ, without communion with them; they were not a people near unto the Lord, he had not laid hold on and formed them for himself in regeneration and conversion; they were not reckoned the people of God, nor called so, and especially by the Jews, who accounted themselves to be the only people of God; see Eph. ii. 11, 12. I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation; either the Romans in particular are meant, so called because of their gross idolatry, to which they were addicted, who otherwise in their political affairs were a wise and understanding people; to these Judea became a province, and were subject to tribute; and by the exactions of the Romans, and their ill usage of them, they were provoked to rise against them, which issued in their ruin: or rather, the Gentiles in general, who might be called foolish because of their superstition and idolatry, ignorance, and blindness in religious matters, and especially were so in the account of the Jews; and the elect of God among them in particular, who in their state of unregeneracy were foolish, as all unregenerate men are; both their principles and practices were foolish, and they were the foolish things of the Gentile world that God chose and called: and the calling of them was exceedingly provoking to the Jews; which was as if a man moved to jealousy by the behaviour of his wife, should strip her of her ornaments and jewels, and reject her as his wife; and take another before her eyes of mean estate, and marry her, and put her ornaments on her, to which the allusion is; for the Lord being moved to jealousy by the conduct of the Jewish nation towards him, rejected them from being his people, people, and ſtripped them of all their privileges, civil and religious, and took the Gentiles in the room of them, and ſo in juſt retaliation moved them to jealouſy and wrath. It was diſpleaſing to the carnal Jews to hear of the prophecies of the calling of the Gentiles, Rom. x. 20. and the firſt diſplay of grace to them was reſented even by believing Jews themſelves at firſt, Acts xi. 2, 3, 18. The anger of the ſcribes and Phariſees on this account is thought by ſome to be hinted at in the parable of the two ſons, Luke xv. 2. 27, 28. The Jews were offended with Chriſt for eating with publicans, the Roman tax-gatherers, and were greatly diſpleaſed when he told them the kingdom of God would be taken from them, and given to another nation, Matt. ix. 10, 11. and xxi. 43, 46. Their rage and envy were very great when the goſpel was firſt preached to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 41, 44, 45. and there is ſuch an extraordinary inſtance of their ſpite and malice to the Gentiles, and of their jealouſy and anger they were moved unto, as is not to be parallelled, 1 Theſſ. ii. 15, 16.

ẏ. 22. For a fire is kindled in mine anger, &c.] Here begins the account of temporal and corporal judgments inflicted on the Jews for their diſbelief and rejection of the Meſſiah, their contempt of his goſpel, and ill treatment of his followers; and this here reſpects the deſtruction of the land of Judea in general, and the burning of the city and temple of Jeruſalem in particular, as the effect of the wrath and anger of God like fire kindled againſt them: and ſhall burn unto the loweſt hell; which denotes an entire deſtruction, like that of the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah with fire and brimſtone from heaven; which iſſued in a ſulphurous lake, and which ſulphurous matter ſunk to the bottom of the dead ſea; and to that deſtruction is this of the land of Judea compared, ch. xxix. 23. and ſhall conſume the earth with her increaſe; the land of Judea, with the cities and towns in it, and buildings on it, and the fruits of the earth; which were either gathered into their barns and ſtorehouſes, or were growing in their fields, and vineyards, and olive-yards; all were deſtroyed and conſumed at or before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, or quickly after it: and ſet on fire the foundations of the mountains; the city of Jeruſalem, as Jarchi himſelf interprets it, whoſe foundations were by the mountains, according to Pſ. cxxv. 2. and the temple of Jeruſalem particularly was built on mount Moriah, and that as well as the city was utterly conſumed by fire: and it is remarkable that when Julian the apoſtate attempted to rebuild it, as is related even by an heathen hiſtorian [a], that flames of fire burſt out from the foundations, and burnt the workmen; ſo that he was obliged to deſiſt from his raſh undertaking.

ẏ. 23. I will heap miſchief upon them, &c.] One calamity upon another, which are after particularly mentioned: I will ſpend mine arrows upon them; God is here repreſented as an enemy to the Jews, as having bent his bow againſt them like an enemy, Lam. ii. 4. and as having a quiver and that full of arrows, and as determined to draw out and ſpend every one of them, in taking vengeance upon them; which arrows are his four ſore judgments mentioned Ezek. xiv. 21. and expreſſed in the following verſes.

ẏ. 24. They ſhall be burnt with hunger, &c.] This is the arrow of famine, Ezek. v. 16, 17. the force of which is ſuch that it makes the ſkin black as if burnt, Lam. v. 10. Onkelos paraphraſes it, "inflated or ſwelled with famine, which is a phraſe Joſephus [b] makes uſe of in deſcribing the famine at the ſiege of Jeruſalem. Jarchi obſerves, that one of their writers [c] interprets the words hairs of hunger, becauſe he ſays that a man that is famiſhing and pining, his hair grows, and he becomes hairy: this judgment was notorious among the Jews, at the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and was very ſore and dreadful; ſee ch. xxviii. 53, &c. and the notes there: and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter deſtruction; with burning fevers, peſtilential ones, with the plague, the arrow of the Lord that flies by day, the peſtilence that walks in darkneſs, and the deſtruction that waſtes at noon-day, Pſ. xci. 5, 6. and which alſo raged at the ſiege of Jeruſalem, ariſing from the ſtench of dead bodies which lay in all parts of the city, and is one of the ſigns of the deſtruction of it given by our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 7, 9. I will alſo ſend the teeth of beaſts upon them, with the poiſon of ſerpents of the duſt; another of the arrows in the quiver of the Lord of hoſts, or of his four judgments, and which he uſed to threaten the people of the Jews with in caſe of diſobedience, Lev. xxvi. 22. And ſuch of the Jews who fled to deſerts, and caves and dens of the earth for ſhelter, could not eſcape falling into the hands of wild beaſts, and of meeting with poiſonous ſerpents that go upon their bellies, and feed on the duſt of the earth; and beſides, when Titus had taken Jeruſalem, he diſpoſed of his captives ſome one way and ſome another; and among the reſt, many were caſt to the wild beaſts in the theatre, as Joſephus relates [d]; add to this, that both Rome pagan, and Rome papal, are called beaſts, Rev. xiii. 1, 11. into both whoſe hands the Jews fell, and from whom they have ſuffered much; with which in part agrees the Targum of Jeruſalem, "the teeth of the four monarchies, which are like to wild beaſts, I will ſend upon them;" and particularly the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "and the Greeks, who bite with their teeth like wild beaſts, I will ſend upon them;" but it would have been much better to have interpreted it of the Romans.

ẏ. 25. The ſword without, &c.] Either without the city, the ſword of the Roman army beſieging it, which deſtroyed all that came out or attempted to go in; or in the ſtreets of the city, the ſword of the ſeditious, which deſtroyed multitudes among themſelves: and terror within; within the city, on account of the ſword of the Romans, and the cloſe ſiege they made of it; and on account of the famine and peſtilence which raged in it, and the cruelty of the ſeditious perſons among themſelves; all theſe filled the people with horror and terror in their houſes, and even in their bed-chambers, as the word ſignifies, they were not free from terror; yea, from the temple, and inward parts, and chambers of that, which may be referred to, terror came, that being in the hands of the ſeditious; they ſallied out from thence, and ravaged the city, and filled all places with the dread of them; and many, no doubt, through fear died, as well as by the ſword and other judgments; which it is threatened, ſhall deſtroy both the young man and the virgin, the ſuckling alſo, with the man of gray hairs; none of any age or ſex were ſpared, even thoſe unarmed; not the young man, for his ſtrength and promiſing uſefulneſs; nor the virgin for her beauty and comelineſs; nor the ſuckling for its innocence and and tenderneſs; nor the aged man through any reverence of his gray hairs, or on account of the infirmities of old age, but all would be deſtroyed; and never was ſuch a carnage made at the ſiege of any one city in the world before or ſince; no leſs than 1,100,000 perſons periſhed in it, as Joſephus relates [e].

ẏ. 26. I ſaid, &c.] Or could have ſaid, or might have ſaid; that is, determined and reſolved, as it was in his power, and in right and juſtice might have done what follows: I would ſcatter them into corners; which does not fitly expreſs the ſenſe of the word uſed, and beſides this was what was done; it is notorious that the Jews were and are ſcattered into the ſeveral corners of the world, and there is no corner where they are not; whereas the phraſe is expreſſive of ſomething that could and might have been done, but was not: moreover, to diſperſe them into the ſeveral parts of the world, does not agree with what follows; for that inſtead of making their remembrance to ceaſe, would make them the more known, and the more to be remembered. But the word literally taken may be rendered, I will corner them [f]; drive them up into a corner, and cut them off together, or ſearch for them in, and ferret them out of every corner in which they ſhould get, and deſtroy them all: agreeable to which is the Targum of Onkelos, "mine anger ſhall reſt upon them, and I will deſtroy them;" and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it of the deſtruction of them, and obſerves, that otherwiſe it would not agree with what follows. There may be an alluſion in it to the corner of the field, which was ordered to be left to the poor, and not reaped, Lev. xix. 9. and ſo the ſenſe is, I could and might have determined when the harveſt of this land and people was come, or the time of wrath upon them, to cut down every corner, and leave none, no not one ſtanding ſtalk of corn, but make clean riddance of them: I would make the remembrance of them ceaſe from among men; as of the Amalekites, Moabites, Midianites, Edomites, Chaldeans, and others, whoſe names as well as nations are no more. This is what the enemies of the Jews plotted and conſpired to do, Pſ. lxxxiii. 4. and what God could and might have done, but has not; the Jews continue to this day a diſtinct people, though it is now near 1700 years ſince the deſtruction of their city and temple, and their diſperſion in the ſeveral parts of the world; which is what was never known of any other people in the like circumſtances, and which is a moſt amazing and ſurprizing event; the reaſons of it follow.

ẏ. 27. Were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, &c.] Satan, the enemy of mankind in general, of the people of God in particular, and eſpecially of the Meſſiah, the ſeed of the woman, and of God himſelf, whom he would dethrone, or at leaſt place himſelf on an equality with him; this enemy is full of wrath, enmity, and blaſphemy againſt God, and ſtirs up all of this kind in the hearts of men, and inſtigates them to perſecute the people of God; and does all he can to obſcure the glory of God, and leſſens his own grief, as the word ſignifies, occaſioned by it: and now though God has nothing to fear, either from the power and policy of the devil, being infinitely mightier and wiſer than he; yet as Moſes expreſſed his concern, if God ſhould cut off the people of Iſrael as one man, that the Egyptians would ſay he brought them out of Egypt for miſchief, or that he was not able to bring them into the land of Canaan, Exod. xxxii. 12. Numb. xiv. 15, 16. ſo the Lord ſpeaking after the manner of men, as Aben Ezra obſerves, expreſſes his fears of the wrath of the enemy; not properly, but it denotes his precaution, proviſion, and preparation he made to put a check upon it, and a ſtop to it, that he might not have the opportunity of inſtilling it into the minds of men, that God was cruel to his people, or had not ability to ſave them from their enemies, or was unfaithful to his promiſes; and therefore he did not entirely cut them off, as he could and might have done, but made a reſerve of them, as a ſtanding proof to the contrary: leſt their adverſaries, the Romans, who fought againſt them, took them, and carried them captive: ſhould behave themſelves ſtrangely; alienate the glory of God from him, and give it to their ſtrange gods; which the Romans were wont to do when they obtained victories, and did do ſomething of this kind to Jupiter Capitolinus, when they carried the Jews captive, and their trophies in triumph to Rome: yet there was ſuch an apparent hand of God in this affair, that the heathens were obliged to own it. Titus the conqueror himſelf confeſſed, that it was God that favoured him, and that it was he that brought the Jews out of the fortreſſes and faſtneſſes in which they were; and that no hands of men, or machines, were any thing againſt ſuch towers as they had [g]: and when ſome neighbouring nations would have crowned him becauſe of his victories over the Jews, he refuſed it, ſaying, he was unworthy of it, he had not done this of himſelf, but had only lent an hand to God that was angry with them [h]. Cicero alſo obſerves [i] the hand of God in the conqueſt, captivity, and ſervitude of the Jewiſh nation; moreover, a remnant was preſerved to be to the Romans, as the Canaanites were to the Iſraelites, thorns in their ſides, and pricks in their eyes; to be a burden to them, a dead weight upon them, and to check their ovations and triumphs over them; for, that people conquered gave them great trouble, raiſed commotions and inſurrections in many places, which obliged the emperors in ſucceeding reigns to come from diſtant parts, and quell them, and were the occaſion of vaſt quantities of blood being ſhed; inſomuch that one of their poets [k] wiſhes Judea had never been ſubdued by them: likewiſe a number of them was preſerved to prevent the growth and ſpread of idolatry, and that they might be a ſtanding example and caution to Chriſtians among the Gentiles not to give into it, when they ſhould obſerve what they ſuffered on the account of it, as their prophecies, extant in their ſacred books preſerved, abundantly teſtified and declared: and leſt they ſhould ſay, our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this; leſt any one ſhould ſay among the Gentiles, as particularly deiſts, leſt they ſhould lift up their horn on high, and ſpeak with a ſtiff neck, and deny that ever any ſuch things were done for this people the ſcriptures ſpeak of, as the miracles in the land of Egypt, at the Red ſea, and in the wilderneſs; and confidently affirm there never was any ſuch people, and defy Chriſtians to ſhew them a Jew if they could: now here was a reſerve made of them, to be a ſtanding proof of the truth of divine revelation againſt ſuch infidels; as alſo that they they might be a check unto all falſe teachers, and leave them inexcuſable who embrace the ſame errors that have been condemned in them, and God has ſhewn his diſpleaſure at, and which they ſtill retain; ſuch as the doctrines of free-will, of juſtification by a man's own righteouſneſs, of ſalvation not being wholly by the Meſſiah, and of his being non-Jehovah, or only a mere creature; for the words may be rendered, Non-Jehovah hath done all this [h]; or he that is not Jehovah hath done all that is done for the people of the Jews; and ſay, all that the Meſſiah hath done with reſpect to ſalvation, is done by him that is not Jehovah, or God, but a creature. Theſe were the doctrines of the Jews in Chriſt's time; the Phariſees, the prevailing ſect among them, were free-willers, as Joſephus relates [i]; and the whole nation were ſelf-juſticiaries, as the apoſtle Paul aſſures us, and ſought for righteouſneſs not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law, Rom. ix. 31, 32. and x. 3. and ſuch they are to this day, as well as Unitarians to a man; now Arians, Socinians, Pelagians, and Arminians, may look upon theſe people, who are continued, as having imbibed the ſame errors; and may read theirs in them, and God's diſpleaſure at them.

℣. 28. For they are a nation void of counſel, &c.] This is ſaid not of the Jews, whoſe character is given, ℣. 6. and inſtances of their ingratitude, folly, and want of counſel and underſtanding, have been already mentioned, and puniſhment for the ſame inflicted on them, according to this prophetic ſong; ſo that the prophecy reſpecting them is iſſued, and another people are taken notice of, even their enemies, of whom the Jewiſh writers in general interpret theſe words, and what follows; and was true of the Gentiles, both of the Pagan ſort of them, who took too much to themſelves, and aſcribed the deſtruction of the Jews, and their conqueſt of them, to themſelves, and their idols; and of falſe Chriſtians among them, when the Roman empire became Chriſtian, ſuch as expreſſed themſelves in the language of the latter part of the preceding verſe, our hand is high, &c. which plainly ſhewed them to be a people devoid of the true knowledge of the ſcriptures, they ſhould have made the men of their counſel, and have conſulted; and of the goſpel of Chriſt, which is the counſel of God, as the Arians, Pelagians, &c. muſt be, or they would never imbibe and advance tenets ſo diametrically oppoſite thereunto: neither is there any underſtanding in them; of divine and ſpiritual things, of the ſcriptures, and the doctrines of them; of the perſon of Chriſt, and his divine perfections, or they would never deny his deity; of the righteouſneſs of God, of that which is required in the law, and revealed in the goſpel, or they would never ſet up a righteouſneſs of their own for juſtification; and of themſelves, their unrighteouſneſs, impurity, and impotence to that which is good; or they would never ſo ſtrongly aſſert the purity of human nature, and the power of man's free-will: God foreſeeing all the folly, and want of counſel and underſtanding in the Gentile world, under different characters, preſerved a remnant of the Jews as a ſtanding admonition to them.

℣. 29. O that they were wiſe, &c.] Theſe are not the words of God, and ſo no inſtances of mere velleities, and unſucceſsful wiſhes in him, and as arguing a power in man to make himſelf wiſe if he would; but of Moſes, under a ſpirit of prophecy, foreſeeing the ignorance and ſtupidity of the above perſons; or as perſonating a true believer in Chriſt, in the times in which ſuch men ſhould live; for the perſon ſpeaking is one that had faith in Chriſt, the rock of ſalvation, and built upon him alone for it; and who had enemies on that account, as appears from the following verſes: and theſe words are ſpoken not of the Jews, with whom this ſong has no more concern, unleſs it be in what reſpects their converſion in the latter day; but of falſe Chriſtians, Pelagians, Arians, &c. whoſe language and character are expreſſed in the preceding verſes; and contain a pathetic wiſh that they might have wiſdom to ſee their follies, errors, and miſtakes, and renounce them: or, if they were wiſe [k]; as they are not, and their tenets ſhew it: they would underſtand this; namely, what follows: they would conſider their latter end; either the latter end of the Jews; had they wiſdom, they would underſtand and obſerve that the diſpleaſure of God againſt them, and his deſtruction of them, was for their lightly eſteeming the rock of ſalvation, as Arians do; and for ſetting up their own righteouſneſs, in oppoſition to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as do Pelagians and Arminians; and were they wiſe, they would be hereby cautioned againſt ſuch notions; and though imbibed by them, would relinquiſh them; as they may juſtly fear ſome ſuch like end will be theirs: for if God does not give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, their end muſt be miſerable; ſince the errors they embrace and profeſs are what the apoſtle calls damnable hereſies; who, denying the Lord that bought them, bring on themſelves ſwift deſtruction; and whoſe judgment, he ſays, lingers not, and their damnation ſlumbers not, 2 Pet. ii. 1, 3.

℣. 30. How ſhould one chaſe a thouſand, and two put ten thouſand to flight, &c.] This is ſaid for the conviction of the Pagan Romans of their folly in behaving ſtrangely, alienating to their gods what belonged to the true God; for ſince the Jews were more numerous than they, both in Judea, in the times of Titus Veſpaſian, when the country was ſubdued by him; and in other parts of the world, in the times of Adrian, when the Jews roſe up in vaſt numbers, greatly ſuperior to the Romans, and yet were conquered; which, allowing the phraſe to be hyperbolical, was like one to a thouſand, and two to ten thouſand: now ſince this was what was promiſed to the Jews in caſe of obedience, that they ſhould in this manner chaſe their enemies, Lev. xxvi. 8. it can't be accounted for that they ſhould in like manner be chaſed by their enemies, as threatened Iſ. xxx. 17. except their rock had ſold them, and the Lord had ſhut them up; that is, unleſs the Lord, who was their rock and fortreſs, and in whom they ſhould have truſted as ſuch, had forſaken them, and given them up into their enemies hands, ſhut up as they were in the city of Jeruſalem in the times of Titus, and afterwards in Bither in the times of Adrian; it is a plain caſe that this was of God, and not owing to the idols of the Gentiles; ſee Pſ. xliv. 9, 10, 11, 12. Cocceius and Van Till interpret this of Conſtantine overcoming Maxentius, Licinius, and Maximinius, whereby the whole Roman empire on a ſudden became Chriſtian nominally, when but a little before Diocletian had erected erected a trophy with this inscription on it, "the Christian name blotted out;" so that the odds between the Christians and Pagans were as one to a thousand, and two to ten thousand, and the victory therefore must be ascribed to God; this could never have been unless Satan, the great red dragon, had given his kingdom to the beast, which was done by the permission and sovereign will of God; see Rev. vi. 14. and xii. 7, 8. and xiii. 2. and xvii. 17. so those interpreters, but the former sense seems best.

℣. 31. For their rock is not as our rock, &c.] That is, the gods of the heathens, the rock in which they trusted, are not like the God of Israel, the rock of salvation, in which all true believers, whether Jews or Gentiles, place their confidence; and indeed let that be what it will that is short of Christ the rock, men lay the stress of their salvation on, it is no rock but sand, and will stand them in no stead; see Matt. vii. 24—27. even our enemies themselves being judges; as has been confessed of the God of Israel by the heathens; see Exod. xiv. 25. Numb. xxiii. 8. 1 Sam. iv. 8. and was by Titus with respect to the destruction of Jerusalem; see the note on ℣. 27. and by the Roman emperors when conquered by the Christians, who asked pardon of the God of the Christians, and owned that the God of Constantine was the true God; see the note on Rev. vi. 16.

℣. 32. For their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah, &c.] This respects the false Christians in the Roman empire, who should have taken warning by the Jews, and not have embraced such sentiments of theirs, which had been resented by the Lord, and condemned in them; such as the doctrines of man's free-will, of justification and salvation not alone by Christ, but by their own works of righteousness, saying, our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this, ℣. 27. Now out of the errors and heresies which arose in the primitive Christian church sprung the man of sin, the son of perdition, Antichrist, or the antichristian and apostate church of Rome, the degenerate plant of a strange vine; and is here described as of the vine of Sodom, a slip from that, transplanted from Judea, and from the worse part of it Sodom; bearing a resemblance to the old Jewish church in its more degenerate state, reviving many of its antiquated rites and ceremonies, and embracing its unsound doctrines; especially which relate to justification, and salvation by the works of men; and having such a likeness to Sodom in its abominable practices, that it is even called Sodom itself, Rev. xi. 3. particularly for pride, luxury, idleness, idolatry, prophaneness, contempt of serious religion, and for bodily uncleanness; even for that sin which has its name from Sodom, which has not only been frequently committed by the popes and other great personages among them, and connived at; but praised and commended in printed books, published and sheltered under public authority; see the note on Rev. xi. 8. and with this compare Ezek. xvi. 49. and of the fields of Gomorrah; another city of the plain, destroyed for the same sins that Sodom was; the phrase signifies the same as before; who has not heard of the apples and fruits of Gomorrah, which are said to look very fair and beautiful without, but when touched fall into ashes? a fit emblem of the fair shew of religion and devotion, and the many outward works of piety in the Romish church they pretend to perform, but when examined are lies in hypocrisy, 1 Tim. iv. 2. their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter; which may denote the large number of the members of this church clustered together; and the many religious orders in it; which make a fair shew in the flesh, but are in the gall of bitterness, and bond of iniquity; and the variety of ordinances and institutions of man's devising: so as the ordinances of the true church of Christ are compared to clusters of grapes, Cant. vii. 7. the ordinances of the false church are like clusters of bitter grapes, both for their quantity and quality; and may mean also their many evil works and actions, especially their oppression and cruelty in persecuting the saints, and shedding their blood; just as the wild grapes of the vine of Judah are interpreted of oppression and a cry, Isa. v. 4, 7.

℣. 33. Their wine is the poison of dragons, &c.] Of these creatures, both land and sea dragons, see the notes on Mic. i. 8. Mal. i. 3. Pliny says [l] the dragon has no poison in it; yet, as Dalechamp in his notes on that writer observes, he in many places prescribes remedies against the bite of the dragon; but Heliodorus [m] expressly speaks of some archers whose arrows were infected with the poison of dragons; and Leo Africanus [n] says, the Atlantic dragons are exceeding poisonous: and yet other writers [o] besides Pliny have asserted, that they are free from poison. It seems the dragons of Greece are without, but not those of Africa and Arabia; and to these Moses has respect, as being well known to him. The Targum of Jerusalem is, "the poison of this people is like the poison of dragons as they drink wine;" and the Targum of Jonathan, "as the poison of dragons, when they are at or from their wine;" that is, after and as soon as they have drank it; for according to natural historians, serpents, though they need and use but little drink, yet are very fond of wine: and it seems that thereby their poison becomes more sharp and intense, as Bochart [p] observes; wherefore the allusion is very proper and pertinent, and denotes the wine of fornication of the apostate church of Rome, frequently spoken of Rev. xiv. 8. and xvii. 2. and xviii. 3. which is no other than her corrupt doctrines, intoxicating, enticing, and leading to idolatry and superstition; and as the true gospel of Christ is sometimes compared to wine, so the false doctrines of this church; but then 'tis such that is not only loathsome and abominable, but poisonous and pernicious to the souls of men, damnable and ruinous, and brings upon them swift destruction, 2 Pet. ii. 1, 2, 3. Rev. xiv. 9, 10, 11. and may well be compared to the poison of dragons for such reasons; as also because they are doctrines of devils, and come from the great dragon, that old serpent called the devil and satan, 2 Tim. iv. 1. Rev. xii. 3, 9. and the cruel venom of asps; which of all kind of serpents Pliny [q] says is the least curable; nay, according to the Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin versions of this clause it is incurable; and so Aristotle says [r] there is no remedy for it; and so says Ælianus [s], who also observes [t], that the mark it makes is so small, that it is scarcely discerned by the sharpest eye. Pliny [u] represents it as a most revengeful creature; when its mate is killed by any, it will pursue the slayer flee where he will, and as far far and as fast as he can: it breaks through all difficulties, and is not to be stopped by rivers, or any obstacles, and will attack the person, whom it presently knows, let him be in ever such a crowd: and therefore it and its poison may well be called cruel; and as the poison of this creature lies under its tongue, this is a fit simile to express the poisonous and pernicious doctrines of the apostate church.

℣. 34. Is not this laid up in store with me, &c.] The fruit of the degenerate vine, its bitter clusters of grapes, and poisonous wine; meaning the evil principles and practices of the apostate church, well known to God, taken notice of by him, and laid up in his mind and memory; for both she and her sins will come in remembrance before God, and will be brought to open view, and appear to have been laid up by him, in order to be exposed at a proper time; see Rev. xvi. 19. and xviii. 5. and so the Targums interpret it of evil works: or this may be understood of the punishment of the evil doctrines and practices of the antichristian church, the sentence of which God had secretly passed in his eternal mind, and which he had in reserve, and in due time would execute; it was drawn and signed by him, and as he says, sealed up among my treasures; his treasures of wrath, denoting the secrecy of it, and the sure and certain performance of it, and the authority of Christ to execute it; to whom this sealed diploma is given, and all judgment committed; and particularly this to judge the whore of Rome; and who is able to open the sealed book of God's purposes and decrees, and to accomplish them; and among the rest those which relate to the utter ruin of Antichrist, and the antichristian states: so the Targum of Jerusalem interprets it of the vengeance of the Lord, laid up for the wicked; "is not the cup of the judgment of vengeance mixed and prepared for the ungodly sealed up among my treasures, to the day of the great judgment?" it is true of the cup of the wine of the fierceness of the wrath of God, or of the wine of the wrath of God poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation, which he will make great Babylon, and all the worshippers of the beast, drink of, Rev. xiv. 9, 10. and xvi. 19.

℣. 35. To me belongeth vengeance and recompence, &c.] Or, I will repay, or recompense, as it is quoted in Rom. xii. 19. Heb. x. 30. and so all the three Targums, the Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin versions here, and so Jarchi interprets it. Vengeance belongs only to a divine person, not to an heathen deity called Dice, or vengeance, Acts xxviii. 4. nor to Satan and his spiteful angels, nor to any of the sons of men in a private capacity; though magistrates, being in public office, and representing God, are revengers to execute wrath on them that do evil, Rom. xiii. 4. otherwise it is peculiar to God; and there is a great deal of reason to believe he will recompense it, as it may be concluded from his hatred of sin, his strict justice, and his faithfulness to his threatenings as well as his promises; from the instances of his vengeance on the old world, on Sodom and Gomorrah, and others; and from his taking vengeance on the inventions even of good men, whose sins he pardons and especially from his not sparing his own Son, when standing in the law-place and stead of sinners: and this is applicable to Christ, who not only in the days of his flesh took vengeance on Satan, and his principalities and powers; and when he came in his kingdom and power, took vengeance on the Jews his enemies, who would not have him to rule over them; but also at his spiritual coming, he will take vengeance on Antichrist, whom he will destroy with the breath of his mouth, and send that son of perdition into the perdition appointed for him; and pour out the vials of his wrath on all the antichristian states, the time of which is next pointed at: their foot shall slide in due time; there is a time fixed for the reign of Antichrist, when it will end, 42 months, or 1260 days; that is, so many years; see Rev. xi. 2. and xiii. 5. and a little before the expiration of them, his foot will begin to slide, as the slipping-of the foot is just before a fall; and then will the foot of Antichrist slip and slide, when the witnesses slain by him shall revive and stand upon their feet, and cause fear to fall on them that are on the earth; and when they shall ascend up into heaven, or rise to superior power and authority, greatness and splendor, than they formerly had, and this in the sight of their enemies; and when there will be earthquakes and revolutions in the several antichristian states; and the tenth part of the great city shall fall, and many persons of renown be slain, and others frighted, and will give glory to the God of heaven; when an angel, or a set of gospel ministers, shall fly in the midst of heaven, with the everlasting gospel, to preach to all nations; which will be immediately followed by another, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen; when the kings of the earth will dislike and resent various things done by the pope of Rome, and shall hate him, and meditate his ruin, and then may his foot be said to slide; see Rev. xi. 11, 13. and xiv. 6, 7, 8. and xvii. 16. for the day of their calamity is at hand; a cloudy day, as the word signifies, when the kingdom of the beast will be full of darkness and confusion, Rev. xvi. 10. and when all those calamities shall come upon Babylon, expressed in Rev. xiii. 8—19. and the things that shall come upon them make haste; even all those evil things God has determined in his counsels and purposes, and which are foretold in prophecy, these shall come upon Antichrist in haste; for though his judgment and damnation may seem to linger and slumber, it shall not; God will hasten it in his due time, and all his judgments will come on Babylon in one day, Rev. xviii. 8.

℣. 36. For the Lord shall judge his people, &c.] The true church and members of it, in opposition to the false and apostate church; his chosen and covenant-people, whom he gave to Christ, and who are redeemed by his blood, and effectually called by his grace; the people he shall call out of Babylon, or preserve from the corruptions of it before its fall; and who are the objects of his love and delight; a distinct, peculiar, and special people, near unto him, and all righteous: these he will judge at this time, distinguish between them and the followers of Antichrist; he will take their cause in hand, and plead it, and do justice to them; he will right their wrongs and injuries, and take vengeance on their enemies; he will protect and defend them, reign and rule over them. Now will be the time when the witnesses slain are raised, that he will take to himself his great power and reign, and the time of the dead when they will be judged, and a reward given to his servants and prophets, to his saints, and all that fear his name; and when he will destroy them that have destroyed the earth, Rev. xv. 17, 18. so the Targum of Jonathan interprets this of the Word of the Lord that shall judge his people in mercy: and repent himself for his servants; by whom are meant not only the ministers of the gospel, his witnesses that prophesy in sackcloth, and who will be slain when they

they have finiſhed their teſtimony; but all that are effectually called by grace, who though they have been the ſervants of ſin, and the vaſſals of Satan, yet by the grace of God become the ſervants of God and of righteouſneſs; diſlike and caſt off their old maſters; readily, willingly, and chearfully, take upon them the yoke of Chriſt, and freely obey him, conſtrained by his love, and influenced by views of intereſt in him; and ſo ſerve him without any ſelfiſh views, owning, that when they have done all they can, they are but unprofitable ſervants: now for or on account of theſe he will repent himſelf, becauſe of the evils he has ſuffered to come upon them, being moved with pity and compaſſion to them in their miſerable circumſtances, as they will be in when the witneſſes his ſervants will be ſlain; not that, properly ſpeaking, repentance is in God; he never changes his mind, counſel, and purpoſes; he never alters his love, his choice, nor his covenant; or repents of his gifts, and calling of ſpecial grace; though he is ſometimes ſaid to repent of outward good things he has beſtowed, or promiſed to beſtow conditionally; and of evils he has threatened or inflicted; yet this is only to be underſtood of a change of his outward dealings and diſpenſations with men, according to his unchangeable will; and this will be the caſe now with reſpect to his ſervants, whom he will have ſuffered to be ſlain, and lie unburied; but repenting or changing his manner of conduct to them, will revive them, and cauſe them to aſcend to heaven; ſee Rev. xi. 11, 12. when he ſeeth that their power is gone; not the hand and power of the enemy, going and prevailing over them, and ſtrong upon them, as the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi; but rather the hand and power of the righteous, as the Targum of Jeruſalem; and reſpects not their internal power and ſtrength, which they have not in themſelves, but in Chriſt; though the exertion of that power, and the exerciſe of their graces, as faith, and hope, and love, will be greatly declined; but their external power, and protection which they had from proteſtant princes; they being removed, and others not like them ſucceeding, or apoſtatizing to the church of Rome: the outward court, or national eſtabliſhments, are a fence and protection to the inward court-worſhippers, or ſervants of God; when that ſhall be given to the Gentiles, the Papiſts, as it will, Rev. xi. 2. the power or hand, the protecting ſheltering hand of the ſaints will be gone, and they will become a prey to their adverſaries: and there is none ſhut up or left; a phraſe uſed to expreſs the miſerable ſtate and condition of a people, when none are left, but all are carried off, or cut off, and deſtroyed, and there is none to help them; ſee 1 Kings xiv. 10. and xxi. 21. 2 Kings ix. 8. and xiv. 26. when there are none ſhut up in garriſons, and left there to defend a people; or there are none ſhut up in priſon, or any left to till the ground; which is ſometimes the caſe when a nation is conquered, and the greater part are carried captives; but it denotes ſuch a general deſtruction, that there are none remaining any where, and thus it will be at the ſlaying of the witneſſes. This paſſage has reſpect to their dead bodies, which will not be ſhut up in graves, nor any left to bury them, Rev. xi. 9: There will ſcarcely be a profeſſor of religion, or any that will appear to favour the witneſſes ſlain in any reſpect; there will be "none to ſupport and uphold," as the Targum of Jeruſalem; not to ſupport and uphold the true religion, or to help the people of God in theſe their diſtreſſes: and when the Lord ſhall ſee all this, he'll look upon them with an eye of pity and compaſſion; he will repent for his ſervants, according to the multitude of his tender mercies; and will plead their cauſe, and judge them, and will put on the garments of vengeance, and repay fury and recompence to his and their enemies, Iſ. lix. 16, 17, 18: who will inſultingly ſay as follows.

℣. 37. And he ſhall ſay, where are their gods? &c.] Not the Lord ſhall ſay to Iſrael, upbraiding them with their idols and their idolatries; but, as the Targum of Jonathan, "the enemy ſhall ſay, where is the God of Iſrael?" and to the ſame purpoſe is the Jeruſalem Targum, and which is the ſenſe of other Jewiſh writers [*]; and the words may be rendered imperſonally, and in the ſingular number, and it ſhall be ſaid, where is their God? as it follows, their rock in whom they truſted? that is, it ſhall be ſaid to the people of God, when in the low eſtate before deſcribed, and which will make it ſtill more diſtreſſing; it ſhall be ſaid to them by their enemies in a ſneering way, where is the Lord their God they boaſted of, and the rock of ſalvation in whom they truſted? which agrees with other paſſages of ſcripture, Pſ. xlii. 3, 10. and lxxix. 10. Mic. vii. 9. The perſons inſulted and upbraided are the Proteſtant witneſſes at the time of their being ſlain; when they that dwell upon the earth, the Papiſts, ſhall rejoice over them, Rev. xi. 10. they are ſuch who are true believers in the God and father of Chriſt, as their God and father in Chriſt, who of his own free grace has bleſſed them with all ſpiritual bleſſings in him; and who truſt in Chriſt the rock alone for juſtification before God, for acceptance with him, and for their whole ſalvation; rejecting the Popiſh notion of juſtification by works, the doctrines of merit, and of works of ſupererogation, and the like; who now will be taunted at, and triumphed over, ſaying, where is the God of the Proteſtants they gloried in, as being on their ſide? and where is their rock on which they ſay the church is built, and not on Peter?

℣. 38. Which did eat the fat of their ſacrifices, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings, &c.] Alluding to the fat of the ſacrifices under the law, which was claimed by the Lord as his, and repreſented as his food, Lev. iii. 11, 16. and to the drink-offerings of wine, which were of a ſweet ſavour to God, and with reſpect to which wine is ſaid to chear him, Numb. xv. 7. Judg. ix. 13. Now new-teſtament worſhip and ſervices are here expreſſed in old-teſtament language, which is not unuſual; ſee Iſ. lvi. 7. and lxvi. 20——23. and ſignify the beſt of the ſacrifices and ſervices of true believers in Chriſt, preſenting their ſouls and bodies unto him as a holy, living, acceptable ſacrifice, which is but their reaſonable ſervice; offering their ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe unto him through Chriſt; doing all good works in his name and ſtrength, and all acts of beneficence in love to him and his people, with which ſacrifices he is well pleaſed; yea, chearfully laying down their lives as victims in his cauſe, when called unto it. Now theſe words are a taunt at the Proteſtant doctrine of the acceptance of the ſervice and ſacrifices of believers in Chriſt, through him, and for his ſake, and not for any merit or worthineſs in them: let them riſe up and help you; their God and their rock, Jehovah the father, their covenant-God, and his Son the rock of their ſalvation, in whom they truſt; truſt; and ſo they will ariſe and help them in this time of extreme diſtreſs; though they may ſeem as aſleep, and to take no notice of the ſad eſtate of ſaints, they will ariſe in wrath and indignation at their enemies, and deliver them out of their hands; the Spirit of life from God ſhall be ſent to bring to life the ſlain witneſſes, and Chriſt will riſe up in the exertion of his kingly power; he will take to himſelf his great power, and reign, and deſtroy them that deſtroyed the earth, Rev. xi. 11, 17, 18. and be your protection; or let him be your hiding place[z]; that is, the rock in whom they truſted, and ſo he is, and will be an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the ſtorm, If. xxxii. 2. not only from the wrath and juſtice of God, but from the rage and fury of men; Chriſt will protect and defend his people againſt all their enemies, and in his own time will deliver them from them; who in anſwer to theſe taunts and deriſions, riſes up, and thus he ſays, as follows.

℣. 39. See now that I, even I am he, &c.] Which words are directed to the people of God in their low eſtate, to look to Chriſt, and expect deliverance and ſalvation from him; or to their enemies that inſult them, to the deſpiſers to look, and wonder, and periſh, as they will, when the witneſſes ſlain by them ſhall ariſe, and go up to heaven in their ſight, Rev. xi. 11, 12, 13. they are ſpoken by the Word and Son of God, to whom the Father has committed all judgment, and who will now riſe up and execute it; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "when the Word of the Lord ſhall re-"veal himſelf to redeem his people, he will ſay to "all people, ſee now, &c." and who will declare himſelf to be the great Jehovah, the ſelf-exiſtent Being, the eternal and immutable I am; for this phraſe is expreſſive of his exiſtence, eternity, immutability, and ſovereignty; and which the above Targum paraphraſes thus, "ſee now that I am he "that have been, and am, and I am he that ſhall "be," which as it is a decyphering the word Jehovah, is what is applied to Chriſt, Rev. i. 8. The repeating the word I, as it may denote the vehement affection of the ſpeaker, and the certainty of what he would do, ſo it may have reſpect to both ſorts of perſons, the words are directed to, and to the ſeveral ſorts of things to be done hereafter related; ſignifying that it is the ſame I that does the one, does alſo the other, kills and makes alive, &c. and there is no god with me; this the redeemer and ſaviour ſays elſewhere, If. xliv. 6. and xlv. 21. ſee ℣. 12. there is but one God, and Chriſt the Word, with the Father and the Spirit are that one God, 1 John v. 7. and there is no other with him; he is the true God, in oppoſition to all factitious and fictitious gods; he is not a made god, nor a god by office, nor by name and title only, but by nature the one, true, only and living God; and ſo it may be moſt truly believed of him, that he is able to do, and will do, what he next ſays: I kill and I make alive, I wound and I heal; Chriſt is the ſovereign diſpoſer of life and death, of ſickneſs and health, in a temporal ſenſe; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe he wounds and kills, by the law in the hand of his Spirit; and he heals and makes alive by his goſpel, as it is accompanied by his Spirit and grace alſo: this is by ſome referred to the reſurrection from the dead, which will be by Chriſt the reſurrection and the life, the earneſt, exemplar, and efficient cauſe of it; ſo the Targum of Jeruſalem, "I am he that kills the liv-"ing in this world, and quickens the dead in the "world to come:" but it refers to another reſurrection previous to that, namely, the reviving of the witneſſes after they have been ſlain three days; who as they will be killed in a civil ſenſe, in the ſame ſenſe they will be quickened by the ſpirit of life from Chriſt; that is, they will be raiſed from that very low eſtate into which they will be brought, into a glorious one, ſignified by their aſcending up into heaven; which will be done by Chriſt when he takes to himſelf his great power, and reigns; then as he ſuffered his witneſſes and people to be wounded and killed, he will make them alive, and heal them, and reſtore comforts and happineſs to them, ſee Rev. xi. 11, 12: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand; for at the ſame time that he ſaves his people, he will take their enemies into his hands, out of which there will be no eſcape; at this time ſeven thouſand names of men, or men of name, will be ſlain, Rev. xi. 13. ſee the note there.

℣. 40. For I lift up my hand to heaven, &c.] Which is a geſture uſed in ſwearing, Gen. xiv. 22. and is aſcribed to a divine perſon, Ezek. xx. 5. and particularly to Chriſt the angel, that is ſo wonderfully deſcribed, Rev. x. 1—5. though ſometimes it is uſed, as Aben Ezra obſerves, to excite the attention of hearers, but here it ſignifies ſwearing; and ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe it, "I have lift up my hands with an oath "to heaven;" and to the ſame ſenſe is the Septuagint verſion: and ſay, I live for ever; which is the form of an oath; when men ſwear, they are to ſwear the Lord liveth, or to ſwear by the living God, and him only, Jer. iv. 2. and when the Lord ſwears in this manner, he ſwears by his life, by himſelf, becauſe he can ſwear by no greater; and his form of ſwearing is, as truly as I live, ſaith the Lord, Numb. xiv. 21, 28. ſo the above angel is ſaid to ſwear by him that liveth for ever and ever, Rev. x. 6. and ſince Chriſt is the living God, without beginning of days, and end of life, and lives for evermore, he may be thought to ſwear by himſelf, by his own life, which is for ever; and as the oath of the Lord is uſed in condeſcenſion by him, to confirm the faith of his people in the immutability of his counſel and promiſes, and to aſcertain unto them the ſure performance of them; ſo it is alſo uſed to aſſure wicked men of the certain performance of his threatenings; and it is as if Chriſt here ſaid, as ſure as I am the living God, and do, and ſhall live for ever, I will moſt certainly do the things which next follow.

℣. 41. If I whet my glittering ſword, &c.] That is, I will do it as ſure as I live, if I do not, be it ſo and ſo; what that is, is not ſaid, but left to be concluded. A glittering ſword, is a ſword drawn, the blade of it drawn out of the ſcabbard, cleaned and poliſhed, whetted and made ſharp, that it may more eaſily penetrate and pierce; and this being brandiſhed, glitters like lightening, as the word uſed ſignifies. Whetting the ſword is a preparation for doing execution with it; and is a warning, a giving notice of it, as girding the ſword on the thigh alſo is aſcribed to Chriſt, Pſ. xlv. 3. This ſword intends a ſword of juſtice, the ſharp ſword ſaid to proceed out of the mouth of Chriſt, the judiciary ſentence which he will pronounce nounce and execute on Antichriſt, and all his followers, Rev. xix. 15, 21. and my hand take hold on judgment; in order to execute it; the alluſion is to the laying hold on the inſtruments of juſtice and death, as the glittering ſword before mentioned, and arrows afterwards; and may have reſpect to the four ſore judgments, or at leaſt to ſome of them, which the Lord will execute on myſtical Babylon, Ezek. xiv. 21. Rev. xviii. 8. and particularly to the ſeven vials of God's wrath, which will be poured out on the antichriſtian ſtates, Rev. xvi. I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and I will reward them that hate me; his enemies that hate him, and will not have him to rule over them, are the followers of Antichriſt, who has his name from his oppoſition to Chriſt, his hatred of him, and enmity againſt him; oppoſing him in his kingly office, taking upon him to exerciſe dominion and tyranny over the conſciences of men, making new laws, and impoſing them on them, and diſpenſing with the laws of Chriſt; and ſetting aſide his prieſtly office by the ſacrifice of the maſs, granting pardons and indulgences, and advancing the works and merits of men, in oppoſition to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and pretending even to works of ſupererogation; making of none effect, as much as in him lies, his prophetic office, by ſetting up unwritten traditions before the word of God, and making them the rule of faith and practice, and aſſuming to himſelf an infallible interpretation of the ſenſe of ſcripture. The vengeance Chriſt will render as a righteous reward to thoſe his enemies, is expreſſed by deſtroying Antichriſt with the breath of his mouth; by the beaſt going into perdition; by leading them captive, who have led others; by killing them with the ſword, who have killed others with it; by pouring out the vials of his wrath on them; by giving them the cup of the wine of the fierceneſs of his wrath; by ſmiting them with the ſword that comes out of his mouth, and by bringing upon them death, mourning, and famine, and burning them with fire; all which he will moſt ſurely render unto them, 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. Rev. xiii. 10. and xv. 1. and xvii. 8. and xviii. 8. and xix. 15, 20, 21.

℣. 42. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, &c.] Signifying, that by various judgments he would bring upon them, which, like arrows, would come ſuddenly, fly ſwiftly, and pierce deeply, there would be a prodigious effuſion of blood like that in Rev. xiv. 20. ſo that theſe arrows, which cauſe it, being plunged, and ſoaked, and covered in it, may be ſaid to be inebriated with it, juſt as the ſword is ſaid to be bathed and filled with blood, Iſ. xxxiv. 5. which prophecy reſpects the ſame vengeance of Chriſt on the ſelf-ſame enemies of his as here; and as the whore of Rome is ſaid to be drunken with the blood of the ſaints and martyrs of Jeſus, the arrows of her deſtruction are repreſented in juſt retaliation as drunk with her blood, Rev. xvii. 6. (and my ſword ſhall devour fleſh;) the fleſh of kings, of captains, of mighty men, of horſes, and of them that ſit on them, the fleſh of all men, bond and free, ſmall and great, Rev. xix. 18. that is, ſhall deſtroy great multitudes of men: and that with the blood of the ſlain, and of the captives; that is, his arrows ſhould be drunk not only with the blood of thoſe that were wounded and killed, but of the captives; who commonly are ſpared, but in this caſe ſhould not, their blood ſhould be ſhed: it may be rendered, becauſe of the blood of the ſlain, &c. [y] becauſe of the blood of the ſaints whom they have killed, and carried captive, and who have died in priſons: from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy; or of the enemy; that is, from the time the enemy began to oppreſs the ſaints, and take revenge on them, and ſhed their blood; all that blood ſhall be found in them, that has been from the beginning ſhed, and charged to their account, and revenged on them; juſt as the blood of all the righteous, from the beginning of the world, was brought upon the Jews, Matt. xxiii. 35. Rev. xviii. 24. The Targum of Jeruſalem is, "from "the heads of their mighty men, the generals of "their armies;" to which agrees the Septuagint verſion, "from the head of the princes of the "enemies;" and ſo may refer to the head or heads of the antichriſtian people, the pope of Rome, and his princes, the cardinals, and all the antichriſtian kings and ſtates, the captains and generals of their armies, which will be brought to Armageddon, and there deſtroyed, ſee Pſ. lxviii. 21. Rev. xvi. 14, 16. and xvii. 14. and xix. 18, 19, 21.

℣. 43. Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people, &c.] Or rejoice ye nations, who are his people; ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; the Gentiles, who are the Lord's choſen and covenant-people, redeemed and called, and the fulneſs of them now brought in, and ſo matter of great rejoicing; or rather, as the Septuagint, which is approved and confirmed by the apoſtle Paul, rejoice ye Gentiles with his people, Rom. xv. 10. and as it is there applied to the then ſtate of the chriſtian church, when Jews and Gentiles were incorporated and united together; ſo here it reſpects future time, when as the fulneſs of the Gentiles will be brought in, ſo the Jews will be converted, and the lo-ammi will be taken off from them, and they will be reckoned among the people of God; and Jews and Gentiles will be joined together in the ſame goſpel-church-ſtate, and ſo are called upon to rejoice in their common ſalvation, and in their common bleſſings and privileges, and particularly for what follows: for he will avenge the blood of his ſervants, and will render vengeance to his adverſaries; by his ſervants are meant the martyrs of Jeſus, whoſe blood has been ſhed by Antichriſt, and the antichriſtian powers, his adverſaries; as the blood of the Waldenſes in the valleys of Piedmont, the Albigenſes in Spain, and the Petrobruſſians in France, the Bohemians in Germany, the Wickliffites, Lollards, and the martyrs in queen Mary's days in England, with many others; and when inquiſition is made for blood, the blood of thoſe will be found out, and vengeance rendered for it: and will be merciful unto his land, and to his people; or will atone for [z], expiate, cleanſe and purge both land and people; clear the whole earth, which is the Lord's, from Mahometaniſm, Paganiſm and Popery, and cover it with the knowledge of the Lord by the everlaſting goſpel, which will be preached to all nations; and particularly the land of Canaan, laid under an anathema or curſe, as threatened, Mal. iv. 6. under which it has lain ever ſince the deſtruction of it by the Romans, and has ever ſince been inhabited by Pagans, Mahometans and Papiſts; and though once a land flowing with milk and honey, has been turned into a barren wilderneſs, and will thus remain, and Jeruſalem, its metropolis, trodden down by the Gentiles, until their times are fulfilled; which now will will be, and then it will be reſtored to its former fruitfulneſs and fertility, Luke xxi. 24. Ezek. xxxiv. 24, 26, 27. and will be inhabited by the converted Jews, to whom the Lord will be pacified, upon the foot of Chriſt's atonement, which now will be made known and applied unto them, with the full and free pardon of all their ſins, Rom. xi. 25, 26, 27. and thus ends this moſt excellent and wonderful ſong, which is of ſuch a large extent and compaſs, as to reach from the beginning of the Jewiſh nation, and before it, to the converſion of the Jews in the latter day; an hiſtory of more than four thouſand years already; and how long more is yet to come before all in it is fulfilled, no man can ſay.

℣. 44. And Moſes came, &c.] To the people, as the Greek verſion, the heads of the people being gathered together according to his order, ch. xxxi. 28. The Targum of Jonathan ſays, he came from the tabernacle, the houſe of inſtruction: and ſpake all the words of this ſong in the ears of the people; which is obſerved both before and after the reading of it, to ſhew the certainty of it, and how punctually and faithfully he had delivered it: he, and Hoſhea the ſon of Nun; the ſame with Joſhua, whoſe name at firſt was Hoſhea, Numb. xiii. 16. probably Joſhua read the ſong to one part of the people, whilſt Moſes read it to the other.

℣. 45. And Moſes made an end of ſpeaking all theſe words to all Iſrael.] Finiſhed all he had to ſay to them from the Lord, whether by way of precept, moral, civil and ceremonial, or in the form of a ſong.

℣. 46. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] By way of exhortation: ſet your hearts to all the words which I teſtify among you this day; it was not enough to hear them, but they were to lay them up in their hearts, and retain them in their memories; and not only ſo, but revolve them in their minds, and cloſely apply to the conſideration of them, and get the true knowledge and ſenſe of them, and put it in practice: which ye ſhall command your children to obſerve to do, all the words of this law; which ſhows, that the exhortation does not reſpect the ſong only, but the whole law delivered in this book; which they were not only to attend to themſelves, but to tranſmit to their children, and enjoin them the obſervance of, that ſo religion might be perpetuated in their poſterity.

℣. 47. For it is not a vain thing for you, &c.] That is, the law is not, and the obſervance of it in them and their children; it was no light and trifling matter, but of great importance and conſequence, obedience to it being attended with rewards, and diſobedience with puniſhment: becauſe it is your life; if obeyed, the means of a comfortable and happy life, in the enjoyment of all good things, of the preſervation and continuance of it to a length of time; and long life was always reckoned a great temporal mercy: and through this thing ye ſhall prolong your days in the land whither you go over Jordan to poſſeſs it; that is, through their obedience to the law they ſhould live long in the land of Canaan, which they were juſt going to poſſeſs; which explains what is meant by its being their life; their comfortable living, and continuance in the land depended on their obedience to the law; ſee Iſ. i. 19, 20.

℣. 48. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes the ſelf-ſame day, &c.] On which he finiſhed the reading of the law, and the above ſong, which was the ſeventh of Adar or February; according to the Targum of Jonathan, the day he died on; according to the Egyptian calender [a], it was the 16th of that month, ſee ch. xxxiv. 5: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 49. Get thee up into this mountain Abarim, &c.] Which was near in ſight, and pointed at; it was a range of mountains, of which ſee Numb. xxi. 11. and xxvii. 12. and xxxiii. 47. unto mount Nebo; which was one of the mountains of Abarim, and had its name either from its height, or a city of this name, to which it was near, ſee Numb. xxxii. 38. Jerom ſays [b], in his days it was ſhewn ſix miles from Heſhbon to the eaſt; it ſhould be read to the weſt: which is in the land of Moab; it formerly belonged to it, but was taken from the Moabites by Sihon, and now poſſeſſed by Iſrael: that is over-againſt Jericho; which lay on the other ſide of Jordan, in the land of Canaan: and behold the land of Canaan which I give unto the children of Iſrael for a poſſeſſion; which he might take a view of from the high mountain of Nebo, eſpecially his ſight being ſtrengthened by the Lord, as no doubt it was; and this would give him a pleaſure to behold, though he might not go into it, and confirm his faith, that Iſrael would poſſeſs it, as well as be an emblem to him of the heavenly Canaan, he was going to inherit.

℣. 50. And die in the mount whither thou goeſt up, &c.] Immediately after having taken a view of the land, expect to die, prepare for it, and willingly and chearfully ſubmit to it: and be gathered unto thy people; to the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect in heaven, his more immediate and more remote anceſtors, the ſouls of good men; for otherwiſe there were none that died, and were buried here before him, and therefore can have no reſpect to the burying-place of his people: as Aaron thy brother died in mount Hor, and was gathered unto his people; of which Moſes was an eye-witneſs; and which is obſerved, becauſe there was a great likeneſs between the death of him, and what Moſes was now called to, both as to the place and manner of it; and likewiſe the cauſe of it, after mentioned; as alſo to make death more eaſy and familiar, and leſs terrible to him, when he called to mind how calmly, chearfully and comfortably his brother Aaron died; ſee Numb. xxvi. 25—29.

℣. 51. Becauſe ye treſpaſſed againſt me among the children of Iſrael, &c.] By their unbelief, doubting whether God would give water or no to ſuch a rebellious people, and by giving way to paſſion and wrathful expreſſions: and this was done at the waters of Meribah-kadeſh; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from another Meribah, where alſo there was a contention on account of water: in the wilderneſs of Zin; where Kadeſh was, and further deſcribes and diſtinguiſhes the place; of the one we read in Exod. xvii. 7. and of the other, which is here referred to, in Numb. xx. 1, 13. becauſe ye ſanctified me not in the midſt of the children of Iſrael; thro' their unbelief and diſagreeable behaviour, they ſanctified him not themſelves, and gave no honour to him, nor were the cauſe of his being ſanctified by the Iſraelites; and this was the reaſon why Moſes and Aaron might not enter into the land of Canaan, Numb. xx. 12. and xxvii. 12, 13, 14.

℣. 52. Yet thou ſhalt ſee the land before thee, &c.] Which Jarchi interprets afar off; and ſo does Noldius [c]; he ſaw it at a diſtance, as the Old Teſta-

Teſtament-ſaints ſaw the things promiſed afar off, and were perſuaded of them, though they did not enjoy them, Heb. xi. 13: but thou ſhalt not go thither unto the land which I give the children of Iſrael; the land of Canaan was a gift of God to Iſrael, into which they were not to be introduced by Moſes, but by Joſhua; ſignifying that eternal life, or the heavenly Canaan, is the gift of God through Chriſt, the antitype of Joſhua, and not to be obtained by the works of the law.

CHAP. XXXIII.

THIS chapter relates the bleſſings Moſes pronounced upon the people of Iſrael a little before his death; firſt in general, on account of their having a law given them in ſo glorious a manner, ℣. 1—5. then in particular, the ſeveral tribes diſtinctly are bleſſed, Reuben, ℣. 6. Judah, ℣. 7. Levi, ℣. 8—11. Benjamin, ℣. 12. Joſeph, ℣. 13—17. Zebulun and Iſſachar, ℣. 18, 19, Gad, ℣. 20, 21. Dan, ℣. 22. Naphtali, ℣. 23. Aſher, ℣. 24, 25. and the chapter is concluded with ſome ſtrong intimations of what God was unto the people of Iſrael in general, and of what he had done and would do for them; all which are expreſſive of their great happineſs, ℣. 26—29.

℣. 1. And this is the bleſſing wherewith Moſes the the man of God bleſſed the children of Iſrael before his death.] Namely, what is related in the following verſes, this being the general title to the chapter: Moſes is called the man of God, being raiſed up of God, and eminently qualified by him with gifts for the work he was called unto, and by whom he was inſpired to ſay what is after expreſſed: it is a title given to prophets, 1 Sam. ix. 6, 7, 8. and ſo Onkelos here paraphraſes it, "Moſes "the prophet of the Lord," and Aben Ezra obſerves, that this is ſaid to ſhew that he bleſſed Iſrael by a ſpirit of prophecy, and which he did a little before his death, when very near it; and as the ſame writer ſays, on the very day of his death.

℣. 2. And he ſaid, &c.] What follows, of which, in ſome things, he was an eye and ear-witneſs, and in others was inſpired by the Spirit of God, to deliver his mind and will concerning the future caſe and ſtate of the ſeveral tribes, after he had obſerved the common benefit and bleſſing they all enjoyed, by having ſuch a law given them in the manner it was: the Lord came from Sinai; there he firſt appeared to Moſes, and ſent him to Egypt, and wrought miracles by him, and delivered his people Iſrael from thence, and when they were come to this mount he came down on it, as Aben Ezra, from Gaon, or he came to it; ſo to Zion, Iſ. lix. 20. is out of or from Zion, Rom. xi. 26. here he appeared and gave the law, and from thence went with Iſrael through the wilderneſs, and conducted them to the land of Canaan: and roſe up from Seir unto them; not to the Edomites which inhabited Seir, as ſay Jarchi, and the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, but to the Iſraelites when they compaſſed the land of Edom; and the Lord was with them, and gave them ſome ſignal proofs of his power and providence, kindneſs and goodneſs to them; particularly, as ſome obſerve, by appointing a brazen ſerpent to be erected for the cure of thoſe bitten by fiery ones, which was a type of the glorious redeemer and Saviour, and this was done on the borders of Edom, ſee Numb. xxi. 4, 8. for the words here denote ſome illuſtrious appearance of the Lord, like that of the riſing ſun; ſo the Targum of Onkelos, "the brightneſs of his glory from "Seir was ſhewn unto us;" and that of Jonathan, "and the brightneſs of the glory of his Shekinah "went from Gebal:" he ſhined forth from mount Paran; in which the metaphor of the ſun riſing is continued, and as expreſſive of its increaſing light and ſplendor: near to this mount was a wilderneſs of the ſame name, through which the children of Iſrael travelled, and where the Lord appeared to them: here the cloud reſted when they removed from Sinai; here or near it, the Spirit of the Lord was given to the ſeventy elders, and from hence the ſpies were ſent into the land of Canaan, Numb. x. 12, and xi. 24. and xii. 16. and xiii. 3. in this wilderneſs Iſhmael and his poſterity dwelt, Gen. xxi. 21. but it was not to them the Lord ſhone forth here, as ſay the above Jewiſh writers, and others[d]; but to the Iſraelites, for here Moſes repeated the law, or delivered to them what is contained in the book of Deuteronomy, ſee ch. i. 1. beſide, in a literal ſenſe, as theſe mountains were very near one another, as Saadiah Gaon obſerves, the great light which ſhone on mount Sinai when the Lord deſcended on it, might extend to the other mountains and illuminate them, ſee Hab. iii. 3. and he came with ten thouſands of ſaints; or holy angels, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi; which ſenſe is confirmed by the authorities of Stephen the protomartyr, and the apoſtle Paul, who ſpeak of the law as given by the diſpoſition of angels, they being preſent, attending and aſſiſting on that ſolemn occaſion, Acts vii. 57. Gal. iii. 19, Heb. ii. 2. ſee Pſ. lxviii. 17. the appearance of thoſe holy ſpirits in ſuch great numbers added to the grandeur and ſolemnity of the giving of the holy law to the people of Iſrael, as the attendance of the ſame on Chriſt at his ſecond coming will add to the luſtre and glory of it, Luke ix. 26. 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8. from his right hand went a fiery law for them; the Iſraelites; Aben Ezra thinks, the phraſe his right hand, is in connexion with the preceding clauſe; and the ſenſe is, that fire came from the law, thouſands of ſaints were at the right hand of God to ſurround Iſrael, as the horſes of fire and chariots of fire ſurrounded Eliſha; and the meaning of the laſt words, a law for them, a law which ſtands or abides continually; and ſo the Septuagint verſion is, "at his right hand angels with "him:" no doubt, that law is meant which came from God on mount Sinai, by the miniſtration of angels into the hand of Moſes; called a fiery law, becauſe it was given out of the midſt of the fire, ch. v. 26. ſo the Targum of Onkelos, "the writing "of his right hand out of the midſt of fire, the "law he gave unto us;" and becauſe of its effects on the conſciences of men, where it pierces and penetrates like fire, and works a ſenſe of wrath and fiery indignation in them, by reaſon of the tranſgreſſions of it, it being the miniſtration of condemnation and death on that account; and becauſe of its uſe, it ſerves as a lanthern to the feet, and a light to the path of good men: this law may include the judicial and ceremonial laws given at this time; but it chiefly reſpects the moral law, and and which may be ſaid to come from God, who, as creator, has a right to be governor of his creature, and to enact what laws he pleaſes, and from his right hand in alluſion to men's writing with their right hand, this being written by the finger of God; and becauſe a peculiar gift of his to the Iſraelites, gifts being given by the right hand of men; and may denote the authority and power with which this law came inforced, and Chriſt ſeems to be the perſon from whoſe right hand it came; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 17, 18. Acts vii. 38.

℣. 3. Yea, he loved the people, &c.] The people of Iſrael, of which his giving the law to them in ſuch a glorious manner was an inſtance, and was a diſtinguiſhing bleſſing which other nations were not favoured with, ſee ch. iv. 6, 8. Pſ. cxlvii. 19, 20. Rom. ix. 4. how much more is the love of God ſhewn to his ſpiritual Iſrael and ſpecial people, by giving them his goſpel, the precious truths, promiſes, and ordinances of it, and above all, in giving them his ſon to be the redeemer and Saviour of them, as revealed therein! theſe he embraces in his arms and in his boſom, as the word here ſignifies; admitting them to great nearneſs and familiarity with him, to commune with Father, Son, and Spirit, to a participation of all the bleſſings of grace here, and to the enjoyment of glory hereafter: all his ſaints are in thy hand; not the ſons of Levi, who were round about the ark, as Aben Ezra interprets it; rather all the people of Iſrael, who were choſen to be an holy people to the Lord above all people, and who were the care of his providence, protected by his power, and guided with his right hand; and were in a wonderful manner kept and preſerved by him, both at the time of the giving of the law, and in their paſſage through the wilderneſs: it is eminently true of the choſen people of God, who are given to Chriſt, and made his care and charge, as all ſuch who are ſanctified and ſet apart by God the Father are, they are preſerved in Chriſt, Jud. ℣. i. and theſe are ſanctified in and by Chriſt, and by the Spirit of Chriſt, and ſo may be truly called his ſaints; and they are in the hands of Chriſt, as dear to him as his right hand, highly valued by him, held in his right hand; they are in his poſſeſſion, are his peculiar people, portion, and inheritance, they are at his diſpoſe, under his guidance and direction; and are in his cuſtody and under his protection, and where they are ſafe from every enemy, and can never be ſnatched, taken, or removed from thence; ſee John x. 28, 29. here they are put by the father, as an inſtance of his love to them, and care of them, tho' not without the conſent and deſire of the ſon, and this was done in eternity when they were choſen in him: and they ſat down at thy feet; which may reſpect the poſition of the Iſraelites at the bottom of mount Sinai, while the law was giving, which may be ſaid to be the feet of the Lord, he being on the top of the mount, ſee Exod. xix. 17, 18. and xxiv. 10. all the Targums interpret it, of the feet of the cloud of glory, they pitching their tents where that reſted, Numb. ix. 17, 18. ſome think it an alluſion to ſcholars ſitting at the feet of their maſters to receive inſtructions from them, ſee Acts xxii. 3. ſo the diſciples and followers of Chriſt ſit at his feet, attending on his word and ordinances with calmneſs and ſerenity of mind, with much ſpiritual pleaſure and delight, and where they continue and abide; and which may denote their modeſty and humility, their ſubjection to his ordinances, and readineſs to receive his doctrines, and their perſeverance in them, ſee Mark v. 15. Luke x. 39. Cant. ii. 3. the word ſignifies in the Arabic language, to ſit down at a table [e], and ſo the word is uſed in the Arabic verſion of Matthew, viii. 11. Luke xi. 37. and the antient manner being reclining, the gueſts might be ſaid to ſit at the feet of each, eſpecially at the feet of the maſter; ſo Chriſt ſits at his table and his people with him at his feet, Cant. i. 12. every one ſhall receive of thy words; of the words of the law, as the Iſraelites, who heard them and promiſed obedience to them, Exod. xxiv. 7. and would hear and receive them again, Joſh. viii. 34, 35. and ſo Chriſt's diſciples every one of them, that hath heard and learned of the father, and comes to him, and believes in him, receives the words or doctrines given him by the father, John xvii. 8. ſo as to underſtand them, approve of them, love them, believe them, and act according to them; theſe they receive into their hearts as well as into their heads, with all readineſs, gladneſs, and meekneſs; even every one of the perſons before deſcribed or loved by the Lord, are in the hands of Chriſt and ſitting at his feet.

℣. 4. Moſes commanded us a law, &c.] The law was of God, it came forth from his right hand, ℣. 2. it is of his enacting, a declaration of his will, and has his authority enſtamped upon it, who is the lawgiver, and which lays under obligation to regard it; but it was delivered to Moſes and by him to the children of Iſrael, on whom he urged obedience to it; and ſo it is ſaid to come by him, and ſometimes is called the law of Moſes, ſee John i. 17. and vii. 19, 23. and viii. 5. even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob; which either deſcribes the perſons who were commanded to keep the law, the tribes of Jacob or congregation of Iſrael, who were the Lord's people, portion, and inheritance, ch. xxxii. 9. or the law commanded, which was to be valued, not only as a peculiar treaſure, but to be conſidered as a poſſeſſion, an eſtate, an inheritance, to be continued among them, and to be tranſmitted to their poſterity, ſee Pſ. cxix. 111. theſe are the words of the people of Iſrael, and therefore are thus prefaced in the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, "the children "of Iſrael ſaid, Moſes commanded, &c." they were perſonated by Moſes.

℣. 5. And he was king in Jeſhurun, &c.] That is, in Iſrael, or over the people of Iſrael, of which name of theirs, ſee the note on ch. xxxii. 15. either God, as Jarchi; for the government of the Iſraelites was a theocracy, and their laws were immediately from God, and by him they were guided and directed in all things; wherefore when they were ſo importunate for a change in their government, and to have a king over them, they are ſaid to reject the Lord, that he ſhould not reign over them, 1 Sam. viii. 7. or Moſes, as Aben Ezra on the place, Maimonides [f] and others [g]; who, under God, had the civil government of the Hebrews; both may be received, God was the ſupreme governor, and Moſes the chief magiſtrate under him: when the heads of Iſrael and the tribes of the people were gathered together; at mount Sinai, to hear the law law there and then given, or to hear it repeated by Moſes, as in this book of Deuteronomy, who were at different times convened together for that purpoſe, ſee ch. i. 1. and v. 1. next follow the particular bleſſings of the ſeveral tribes, beginning with Reuben the firſt-born.

℣. 6. Let Reuben live and not die, &c.] As a tribe, continue and not be extinct, though they ſhould not excel becauſe of the ſin of their progenitor; and it may have a ſpecial regard to the preſervation of them, of their families on the other ſide Jordan, whilſt they paſſed over it with their brethren into Canaan, and of them in that expedition to help the other tribes in the conqueſt of the country and the ſettlement of them in it; which Jacob by a ſpirit of prophecy foreſaw, and in a prayer of faith petitioned for their ſafety: all the three Targums refer the words to a future ſtate, as a wiſh for them, that they might live and enjoy an eternal life, and not die the death of the wicked in the world to come; and which they call the ſecond death, and from whom the apoſtle John ſeems to have borrowed the phraſe, Rev. ii. 11. and xx. 6. and xxi. 8. Reuben ſignifies, ſee the ſon; and all that ſee the ſon of God in a ſpiritual manner, and believe in him with a true faith, as they live ſpiritually now, ſhall live eternally hereafter, and never die the ſecond or eternal death; on them that ſhall have no power, ſee John vi. 40. and let not his men be few; or, though his men be few, as biſhop Patrick chuſes to render the words, and as they will bear, ו vau being ſometimes ſo uſed, of which Noldius [h] gives inſtances; and the number of men in this tribe were but few in compariſon of ſome others; and ſo thoſe that ſee the ſon of God and believe in him are but a ſmall number; for all men have not faith.

℣. 7. And this is the bleſſing of Judah, &c.] Which follows; the ſame ſupplement of the words is made in the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; but Aben Ezra thinks, it refers to what goes before, that this, the ſame thing prayed for or propheſied of Reuben, belongs alſo to Judah, that he ſhould live and not die; it may be in the wars in which that tribe would be and was engaged: and he ſaid, hear Lord, the voice of Judah; in prayer, as all the Targums paraphraſe it, which was eminently fulfilled in David, Aſa, Jehoſhaphat, Hezekiah, and other kings, which were of this tribe; who, when in diſtreſs, lifted up their voice in prayer to God, and were heard and delivered, as the Lord's people in all ages are: Judah ſignifies profeſſing, confeſſing, praiſing, &c. this tribe was both a praying and praiſing people, as all good men be; they profeſs the name of the Lord, and their faith in him; they confeſs their ſins and unworthineſs; they praiſe the Lord for his mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, and pray to him for what they want; and their voice is heard with pleaſure and anſwered: particularly Judah was a type of Chriſt, who was of this tribe, and whoſe voice in prayer for his people, has been always heard: and bring him unto his people; in peace, often engaged in war, ſo all the Targums: and as it may refer to Chriſt his antitype, it may reſpect his incarnation, when he came to his own and was not received by them; and to his reſurrection from the dead, when he appeared to his diſciples, to their great joy; and to the miniſtry of the goſpel among the Gentiles, when to him was the gathering of the people; and will be further accompliſhed at the laſt day, when he ſhall return and appear to them that look for him, a ſecond time, without ſin unto ſalvation: let his hands be ſufficient for him; both to work with, and provide for themſelves all the neceſſaries of life, and to fight with their enemies, and defend themſelves againſt them; ſo Chriſt's hands have been ſufficient, or he has had a ſufficiency of power and ſtrength in his hands, to combat with and overcome all his and our enemies, to work out the ſalvation of his people, and to ſupply all their wants: and be thou an help to him from his enemies; which this tribe often experienced in their wars with their enemies, being very warlike and courageous, ſucceſsful and victorious, both before they had kings and in the ſeveral kings of their tribe, as David, Jehoſhaphat, and others; and was remarkably fulfilled in Chriſt, whoſe helper the Lord was as man and mediator, ſee Iſ. l. 7, 8, 9. and xlix. 8. no mention is made of Simeon, becauſe of the affair of Baal Peor, in which that tribe had a great concern, Numb. xxv. as Aben Ezra obſerves; or becauſe, according to Jacob's prophecy, it was to be ſcattered in Iſrael; though the ſame is alſo ſaid of Levi, who yet is here bleſſed; rather therefore the reaſon is, becauſe Simeon had his inheritance in the midſt of the tribe of Judah, and ſo was bleſſed in it, ſee Joſh. xix. 1. thus the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it here, "and he joined in his portion and in his bleſſing, "Simeon his brother;" ſome copies of the Septuagint verſion, as that in the king of Spain's bible, make mention of him at the end of Reuben's bleſſing, "and let Simeon be much in number."

℣. 8. And of Levi he ſaid, &c.] That is, Moſes ſaid of the tribe of Levi, as both the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one; with Aaron, as the ſame Targums interpret it, who was of the tribe of Levi, and was a holy good man, a ſaint of the Lord, as he is called, Pſ. cvi. 16. of the Urim and Thummim, which were with him and with every high-prieſt, ſee the note on Exod. xxviii. 30. and though they were not in uſe under the ſecond temple, yet had their fulfilment in Chriſt the antitype of Aaron, who may be chiefly here intended; who is after called the Lord's holy one, as he is, both as God and man, holy in both his natures, divine and human, and in his life and actions; and with him are the true Urim and Thummim, lights and perfections, the light of nature, grace, and glory, and all perfections both divine and human; ſee the note on the above place [i]: whom thou didſt prove at Maſſah, and with whom thou didſt ſtrive at the waters of Meribah; which, as it may reſpect Aaron, may be underſtood either of the Lord's proving him and contending with him, by ſuffering the children of Iſrael to murmur againſt him and Moſes, at the ſaid places; when, according to the three Targums, he ſtood in the temptation, and was perfect and found faithful; or of Levi, who with the reſt of the tribes, tried him, and ſtrove with him at the ſame places; though Jarchi ſays, they did not murmur with the reſt that murmured: as it may refer to Chriſt the antitype of Levi, the ſenſe is, that the Urim and Thummim ſhould be with the holy one, the Meſſiah, whom thou O Levi, with the reſt of the tribes, tempted and ſtrove with at the places mentioned; for it is expreſsly ſaid, they tempted the Lord, Exod. xvii. 7. and which is interpreted of Chriſt, 1 Cor. x. 9.

[h] Concord. part. Ebr. p. 292.

[i] See a Sermon of mine on this text, called Levi's Urim and Thummim found with Chriſt.

℣. 9. Who ſaid unto his father and to his mother, I have not ſeen him, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the high-prieſts who were of this tribe, and according to the law were not to defile themſelves, or mourn for a father or mother, Lev. xxi. 11. or rather as others, of their having no reſpect to them in judgment, but determining all cauſes that came before them, according to the law of God, and the rules of juſtice and equity, in the moſt impartial manner, without having any regard to the neareſt relations to them: with this compare what Chriſt the antitype of Levi ſays, in Matt. xii. 49, 50. neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his own children; had no reſpect to perſons in judgment, though ever ſo nearly related: many reſtrain this to the affair of the golden calf, when the tribe of Levi gathered together, girded their ſwords on their thighs, and ſlew every man his brother, companion, and neighbour, guilty of that idolatry, Exod. xxxii. 26, 27. for they have obſerved thy word, and kept thy covenant; the law of God, ſpoken by him, and had the nature of a covenant with the people of Iſrael: this the tribe of Levi obſerved, not only what reſpects the worſhip of God, and the contrary to it, idolatry, but all other moral and religious duties; Chriſt fulfilled the whole law, and did always and all things what pleaſed the Lord, John viii. 29.

℣. 10. They ſhall teach Jacob thy ſtatutes, and Iſrael thy law, &c.] The prieſts and Levites, being diſperſed among the ſeveral tribes, having cities in them allotted to them, taught the people the laws, ſtatutes, and ordinances of the Lord, moral, civil, and ceremonial, ſee Mal. ii. 6, 7. they ſhall put incenſe before thee; upon the altar of incenſe, which none but a prieſt might do, as the caſe of Uzziah ſhews; and which the Jews ſay [k], he might do but once: the ſame prieſt might not offer incenſe twice; a new prieſt was always employed: in this they were typical of Chriſt, the only interceſſor, who is always at the golden altar to offer up the prayers of all ſaints with his much incenſe, Rev. viii. 3, 4. and whole burnt-offerings upon thine altar; the altar of burnt-offering, typical of Chriſt, who is both altar, ſacrifice, and prieſt.

℣. 11. Bleſs, Lord, his ſubſtance, &c.] Which lay in tithes, firſt-fruits, &c. for the prieſts and Levites had no ſhare in the diviſion of the land; unleſs this can be underſtood of the cities and ſuburbs which were given them, or of houſes and fields devoted, which fell unto them, or rather of their cattle, for the uſe of which they had ſuburbs appointed them; for otherwiſe in huſbandry and merchandize they were not employed: ſome render it an hoſt or army [l], their ſervice being a militia or warfare, Numb. iv. 3. Jarchi refers this to the Haſmonæans or Maccabees, which were of this tribe: and accept the work of his hands; in offering incenſe and ſacrifices, and all other adminiſtrations of the office of prieſts and Levites; thus the righteouſneſs and ſacrifice of Chriſt are of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, and very acceptable to God; and all the ſpiritual ſacrifices of the ſaints who are prieſts unto God, as of prayer and praiſe, are acceptable to him through Jeſus Chriſt: ſmite through the loins of them that riſe againſt him; ſuch as were the companies of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; and in all ages faithful miniſters of the word meet with many enemies, whom they would not be able to withſtand were not the Lord to appear for them, and protect them from them, and ſmite them thoroughly: and of them that hate them that they riſe not again; deſtroying them with an utter deſtruction, ſo that they are not able to make any other efforts upon them; for ſuch who are enemies to the prieſts of the Lord, are enemies to him, and to true religion, enemies to God and Chriſt, to the law and to the goſpel, to the word of God and to the ordinances of it, and therefore to be ſeverely handled and thoroughly puniſhed: Chriſt's enemies ſhall all be ſubdued under him; ſee Pſ. cx. 1, 5, 6.

℣. 12. And of Benjamin he ſaid, &c.] The tribe of Benjamin, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; which is taken notice of next to Levi, becauſe, as the prieſthood was in the tribe of Levi, the temple in which the prieſts officiated was in the tribe of Benjamin, or near it; and is obſerved next but one to Judah, and before his elder brother Joſeph, becauſe his tribe lay between Judah and Joſeph, Joſh. xviii. 11. and Levi having no inheritance in the land: the beloved of the Lord ſhall dwell in ſafety by him; this is commonly underſtood of the tribe of Benjamin, beloved by the Lord, as the head of the tribe was by his father Jacob; the firſt king of Iſrael, being of that tribe, and the temple built in it, or on the edge of it, and its land the moſt fat and fertile of the land of Canaan, as Joſephus [m] obſerves; and may be ſaid to dwell by him, the Lord, becauſe the tabernacle of the Lord was ſo near that tribe, and ſo to dwell in ſafety under his protection, and which was the means of preſerving it from apoſtacy, when ten tribes revolted: though the Meſſiah may be intended, the ſon of God, and man of God's right hand, the antitype of Benjamin, the beloved of the Lord, and dear ſon of his love; his Benjamin, who is now in human nature exalted at his right hand: and this may denote his inhabitation in the fleſh, and dwelling by or near Benjamin, being born at Bethlehem in the tribe of Judah, bordering on Benjamin, and frequently had his abode in Jeruſalem, which was in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 28. and where he was in ſafety amidſt his enemies, they not having power to lay hold on him until his hour was come: and the Lord ſhall cover him all the day long; for ever, as Jarchi notes, becauſe that after Jeruſalem was choſen, the divine majeſty dwelt in no other place: this may be underſtood either of the Meſſiah covering Benjamin and protecting him, as he is the covert of all his Benjamites and beloved ones, from all their enemies, from all evils and dangers, from all ſtorms and tempeſts, and every thing troubleſome and diſtreſſing, ſee Iſ. xxxii. 2. or the Lord's covering his beloved one the Meſſiah; as he did in his infancy, from the deſigns of Herod upon his life, and from the attempts of others before his time was come; he hid him in the ſhadow of his hand, Iſ. xlix. 2. and he ſhall dwell between his ſhoulders; either the Lord ſhall dwell between the ſhoulders of Benjamin; the temple in which the Lord dwelt was built on mount Moriah, in the tribe of Benjamin, in the higheſt part of his land, as Jarchi notes; the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe the words, "in his border the Shekinah (or the "glory of the Shekinah of the Lord) ſhall dwell," for if the temple was not within the tribe of Benjamin, yet it was certainly on the borders of it: or Benjamin ſhall dwell between the ſhoulders of the Lord, being bore up and ſupported by him: Chriſt dwells in the hearts of his people, and over them them as an head, and they dwell upon his ſhoulders, on which the care and government of them lies, Iſ ix. 6. in the Talmud [n] this paſſage is applied to the days of the Meſſiah.

✡. 13. And of Joſeph he ſaid, &c.] The tribe of Joſeph, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: bleſſed of the Lord be his land; as the lands inherited by his ſons were extremely fruitful, the countries of Gilead and Baſhan by Manaſſeh, and the fields of Samaria by Ephraim: Jarchi ſays, "there was not in the inheritance of the tribes, a "land ſo full of all good things as the land of "Joſeph;" typical of the church of Chriſt, the antitypical Joſeph, which abounds with all good things through him, or of the better country in heaven: for the precious things of heaven; that is, the pleaſant, precious, and excellent fruits, produced by the influence of the heavens, particularly by ſhowers of rain which deſcend from thence; emblems of the grace of God, and goſpel of Chriſt, which bring ſpiritual bleſſings to the ſons of men on earth, and make them fruitful in every good word and work: for the dew; which deſcends alſo from heaven, and is of unſpeakable uſe to the fruits of the earth, and is ſometimes uſed as an emblem of the favour and goodneſs of God to his people, Hoſ. xiv. 5. and for the deep that coucheth beneath; that is, beneath the earth, and breaks out upon it, and waters it, and makes it fruitful, which happineſs the land of Joſeph had, as well as the rain and dew of heaven: this is to be underſtood of ſprings and fountains that flow out of the earth to the enriching of it; and ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphtaſe the words, and may be applied to Chriſt and to his goſpel, Cant. iv. 15. Iſ. xii. 3. Joel, iii. 18.

✡. 14. And for the precious fruits brought forth by the ſun, &c.] Which has a wonderful influence upon many, and moſt of the fruits of the earth, to produce them out of their ſeeds in it, to bring them forward, to ripen and perfect them, and to make them rich and excellent. Jarchi ſays, "the land of Joſeph lay open to the ſun, and it ſweetened the fruits of it;" it meliorated them, and made them more valuable; and this is ſpiritually true of Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs, to whoſe influence are owing the bleſſings of grace, redemption, peace, pardon and juſtification, and the graces of the Spirit, faith, hope and love, and by what believers are filled with, the fruits of righteouſneſs, ſee Mal. iv. 2. Phil. i. 11: and for the precious things put forth by the moon; the fruits which the moon helps forward by its coolneſs and moiſture; and thoſe the above Jewiſh writer ſays are cucumbers and gourds; and as various creatures are affected by the moon, it is obſerved by a naturaliſt [o], that onions, when the moon waxes old, increaſe, and flag when it is young; and Pliny ſays [p], that at the increaſe of the moon all ſort of corn grows bigger and larger; but a late learned writer [q] remarks, that though upon the preſſure of the moon on the globe many things depend, as the ebbing and flowing of the ſea, epileptic and convulſive paroxyſms, yet it does not appear that this preſſure exerts its power on plants, ſo as to thruſt them forth, and therefore thinks this reſpects the ejection or protruſion of monthly fruits; for the word here uſed is in the plural number, and ſignifies months; and ſo Onkelos paraphraſes the words, "it produces precious "fruits at the beginning of every month;" or ripe fruit at the beginning of every month, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; for the ſpiritual meaning, ſee Rev xxii. 2.

✡. 15. And for the chief things of the ancient mountains, &c.] Which were from the beginning of the world, and for which the land, poſſeſſed by the children of Joſeph, Manaſſeh and Ephraim, were famous; as the mountains of Gilead and Baſhan, inherited by the former, and mount Ephraim, and the mountains of Samaria by the latter; which produced, beſides great quantities of graſs and corn, alſo vines, figs, olives, &c. and for the precious things of the laſting hills; which will endure as long as the world, the ſame as before in other words; and which precious things may be emblems of the ſpiritual bleſſings of grace, provided in an everlaſting covenant, and given to Chriſt for his people before the world began, or any mountains and hills were formed, and which are as laſting and as immoveable as they are; ſee Prov. viii. 22, &c. Iſ. liv. 10. 2 Tim. i. 9. Eph. i. 3.

✡. 16. And for the precious things of the earth, and fulneſs thereof, &c.] Corn of all ſorts produced out of the earth, and graſs that grows out of it, and cattle that feed upon it; for all which ſome part of the land of Joſeph, particularly Baſhan, was famous; as for the oaks that grew on it, ſo for the paſturage of it, and the cattle it bred, ch. xxxii. 14. ſee Pſ. xxii. 12. and for the good-will of him that dwelt in the buſh; the angel of the Lord, the Word and Son of God, who appeared to Moſes in the buſh, and made himſelf known as the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; and expreſſed his good-will to Iſrael, by ſending Moſes to deliver them out of their bondage: and the favour and good-will of the ſame divine perſon is here wiſhed for, and which has appeared in his aſſumption of human nature, obedience, ſufferings and death, Luke ii. 14. The buſh was an emblem of Iſrael, and the ſtate they were then in, and of the church of Chriſt; of which ſee the note on Exod. iii. 2. and where Chriſt may be ſaid to dwell, as he did among men, when he was made fleſh, and does dwell in the midſt of his churches, and in the hearts of his people by faith: let the bleſſing come upon the head of Joſeph; that is, in all things, as Onkelos; or all theſe bleſſings, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; all before mentioned, let them come openly and viſibly, and in great plenty upon the poſterity of Joſeph, who was a type of Chriſt, the head of the righteous, on whom all the bleſſings of grace are, and from whom they deſcend to all his ſpiritual offspring, Prov. x. 6. Eph. i. 3. and upon the top of the head of him that was ſeparated from his brethren; when he was ſold by them into Egypt; the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem are, "and was ſhining in the glory of "his brethren;" that is, when he was a ruler in Egypt, and had honour from his brethren there, and was beautiful and glorious among them, as a Nazarite, as the word here uſed ſignifies, ſee Lev. iv. 7. and may be applied to Chriſt, who was choſen from among the people, and ſeparated from ſinners, and called a Nazarene, Pſ. lxxxix. 19. Heb. vii. 26. Matt. i. 23.

✡. 17. His glory is like the firſtling of his bullock, &c.] Such as were in Baſhan, a country poſſeſſed by the poſterity of Joſeph, ſee Pſ. xxii. 12. Amos iv. 1. and ſo might be called his. A bullock, or a young bull, was reckoned both comely and majeſtic; jeſtic; ſo Menis or Mnevis, king of Egypt, preferred a bull above all animals to be worſhipped, becauſe the moſt beautiful of all, as Ælianus [w] relates; and Aſtarte, according to Sanchoniatho [x], put a bull's head upon her own, as a ſign of royalty or kingly power. The Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem refer this to the birth-right which belonged to Reuben, and was taken from him, and given to Joſeph, ſee 1 Chron. v. 2. Some will have Joſhua intended by the firſtling of his bullock, ſo Jarchi; who was of the tribe of Ephraim, and ſo famous for his ſtrength and courage, his warlike exploits and victories, and the glory, honour and renown he obtained; and who was a type of Chriſt, the firſt and only-begotten Son of God, the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; this is applied to the Meſſiah in ſome ancient Jewiſh writings [y]: and his horns are like the horns of unicorns; of the Monoceros or Rhinoceros; and as the ſtrength of theſe creatures, as of others, lies in their horns, theſe are figures of the power and ſtrength of the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, the ſons of Joſeph; ſee Numb. xxiii. 22. with them he ſhall puſh the people together to the ends of the earth; not to the ends of the world, as if the poſterity of Joſeph ſhould carry their conqueſts, and ſpread their dominion over all people to the ends of the world, as the Targum of Jonathan ſuggeſts; but to the ends of the land of Canaan, which was done by Joſhua, when he ſmote one and thirty kings of that country. The word puſh is uſed in alluſion to the horns of creatures, with which they puſh, drive away from them, or hurt and deſtroy thoſe that annoy them: and they are the ten thouſands of Ephraim, and they are the thouſands of Manaſſeh; tho' Manaſſeh was the eldeſt ſon of Joſeph, fewer are aſcribed to him than to Ephraim the younger, according to Jacob's prediction, Gen. xlviii. 19. This has been in a ſpiritual ſenſe verified in Chriſt, the antitype of Joſeph, the horn of ſalvation, who by his great ſtrength has vanquiſhed all his, and the enemies of his people, and even ſpoiled principalities and powers.

℣. 18. And of Zebulun he ſaid, &c.] The tribe of Zebulun, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, with whom Iſſachar is joined, they being brethren, and of the ſame mother as well as father; though Zebulun the youngeſt, is ſet before Iſſachar the elder, as in Jacob's bleſſing, Gen. xlix 13, 14. rejoice Zebulun in thy going out; in their going out to ſea, to merchandiſe, to traffick in foreign parts, it being a maritime tribe, ſee Gen. xlix. 19. and ſo are called upon to rejoice and be thankful for their ſafe preſervation on the ſeas, and ſucceſs in trade; and to this ſenſe are the paraphraſes of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: though Onkelos interprets it of their going out to war againſt their enemies, and certain it is that they were alſo a warlike as well as a ſeafaring tribe; ſee Judg. v. 18. and Iſſachar in thy tents; being a tribe that ſtayed at home, and attended to huſbandry, and dwelt in tents, to take care of and feed their cattle; in doing which they ſhould be proſperous, and have occaſion to rejoice, and be thankful to the Lord: though the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem carry it to a different ſenſe, to their ſchools, in which they dwelt; this tribe being, as ſuppoſed, a learned tribe, ſtudious in the law; which is gathered from 1 Chron. xii. 32.

℣. 19. They ſhall call the people unto the mountain, &c.] To the mountain of the houſe of the ſanctuary, as all the three Targums; to the temple built on a mountain, which Moſes by a ſpirit of prophecy foreſaw would be, to which the tribes of Zebulun and Iſſachar would not only come up themſelves, though at the more diſtant parts of the land; but call and urge others, both Iſraelites and Gentiles, to do the ſame, partly by their example, and partly by perſuaſions and arguments; not the tribes of Iſrael that lay neareſt them only, but the heathens, the Tyrians and Sidonians, on whom they bordered, and the Gentiles in Galilee of the Gentiles, which were neighbours to them; a like inſtance ſee in Iſ. ii. 2, 3. and perhaps this may have reſpect to the times of Chriſt and his apoſtles, and to their being in thoſe parts where the goſpel was preached, and many people were called, Matt. iv. 13—16. there they ſhall offer ſacrifices of righteouſneſs; or true ſacrifices, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, in oppoſition to illegitimate ones, which were not according to the law, that had blemiſhes and defects in them, and to ſuch as were gotten by robbery, or in an unlawful way; and may ſignify all righteous actions and good works done in faith, and from right principles, though not to be depended upon for a juſtifying righteouſneſs before God; and all ſpiritual ſacrifices, eſpecially the ſacrifices of praiſe for all bleſſings, and particularly for the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and theſe are to be offered in the church of God, and upon the altar, which ſanctifies every gift, and from whence they come up with acceptance to God: for they ſhall ſuck of the abundance of the ſea; get a great deal of riches by trading at ſea, and therefore under great obligations to offer ſacrifices to the Lord, by whom they were proſpered: and of the treaſure hid in the ſand; as gold and ſilver, pearls and corals, and the like, extracted from thence; or riches buried there through ſhipwrecks; or it may deſign the great wealth and riches they got by glaſs made of ſand, taken out of the river Belus, which waſhed the coaſt of the tribe of Zebulun, as many hiſtorians relate [z].

℣. 20. And of Gad he ſaid, &c.] The tribe of Gad, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: bleſſed be he that enlargeth Gad; that is, the Lord, to whom the praiſe and glory were to be given, who had appointed to Gad a large inheritance on the other ſide Jordan, and had ſettled him in it, and which became larger by the conqueſt of the Hagarites, and others, 1 Chron. v. 18—22. he dwelleth as a lion; bold and courageous, ſecure, and without fear of any of his enemies, though near him, on his borders, as the Moabites and Ammonites were; of the ſame ſpirit and temper were the men of the tribe of Gad in the times of David, 1 Chron. xii. 8. and teareth the arm with the crown of the head; at once, juſt as a lion tears its prey; which figurative phraſes are expreſſive of this tribe conquering and deſtroying ſtrong and mighty men, ſignified by the arm, in which the ſtrength of a man lies, and of kings and governors, pointed at by the crown of the head, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; which was done in the times of Joſhua, when with and under him they ſubdued and deſtroyed, ſtroyed the kings and princes of the land of Canaan.

℣. 21. And he provided a firſt part for himſelf, &c.] That is, the portion of the land of Sihon and Og, as Jarchi rightly interprets it; which was the beginning or firſt-fruits of the ſubduing of the land that was promiſed; this he looked at, choſe, and deſired it as his inheritance, Numb. xxxii. 1, 2. becauſe there in a portion of the law-giver was he ſeated; or in the portion and part of the inheritance of Iſrael, was he placed by Moſes the law-giver, according to the will of God; or becauſe there were in it palaces and towers of great perſonages, law-givers, kings, and princes, well covered and ſtrongly fortified; or here he was hid, or protected, i. e. their families, wives, and children, whilſt they aſſiſted their brethren in ſubduing Canaan: and he came with the heads of the people; either to them, to Moſes, Eleazar, and the ſeventy elders, and the heads of the tribes of Iſrael, to aſk leave to have his part and portion on the other ſide Jordan, or with them, as we ſupply it; came with them over Jordan armed, to aſſiſt in the conqueſt and ſubduing of the land of Canaan: he executed the juſtice of the Lord, and his judgments with Iſrael; that is, either he juſtly and truly fulfilled all his promiſes and engagements, on condition of which he was placed on the other ſide; or he, together with the reſt of the Iſraelites, executed the righteous judgment of God upon the Canaanites, in the expulſion and deſtruction of them.

℣. 22. And of Dan he ſaid, &c.] Of the tribe of Dan, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: Dan is a lion's whelp; or like one for boldneſs, ſtrength, and courage; and was verified in Samſon, who was of this tribe; who when a young lion roared againſt him, the ſpirit of the Lord came on him, and he tore it to pieces, Judg. xiv. 5, 6. he ſhall leap from Baſhan; not Dan, for he was ſeated far from that country; but the ſenſe is, he was like to a young lion for its ſtrength, when it leaps from Baſhan, as Aben Ezra rightly explains it. Baſhan was a mountain in which lions haunted, and from whence they might be ſaid to leap, as they do when they ſeize on their prey: it may have ſome reſpect to the leap of the Danites from the north-weſt part of the land of Iſrael, where they were ſettled, but was not ſufficient for them, to the north-eaſt of it, when they went againſt Leſhem, and took it, and called it Dan; ſee Joſh. xix. 47.

℣. 23. And of Naphtali he ſaid, &c.] The tribe of Naphtali, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: O Naphtali ſatisfied with favour; with the favour of men, which to have is a great bleſſing; and as he gave goodly words to others, he had the good word of others, Gen. xlix. 21. and with the favour of God, as the next clauſe ſhews; which is the greateſt bleſſing of all, and is ſpecial and peculiar, free and ſovereign, and the ſource of all bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual; and to be full of this, and ſatisfied of an intereſt in it, is the higheſt of enjoyments; and nothing is of a more ſatisfying nature, it is a feaſt of itſelf; ſee Pſ. lxiii. 3, 5. and full with the bleſſing of the Lord; as ſuch muſt needs be who are full of, and ſatisfied with the favour, good-will, and love of God; for they are filled with all ſpiritual bleſſings, with all the bleſſings of grace, which ſpring from his free favour, as pardon of ſin, a juſtifying righteouſneſs, adoption, ſanctifying grace, a right and title to eternal life. This may have reſpect to the temporal happineſs of this tribe, which had a remarkable ſhare in the favour and good-will of God, and in the bleſſings of his goodneſs. Strabo [a], an heathen writer, ſpeaking of this part of the land of Judea, ſays it was a happy and fruitful country, bearing all manner of fruit; in this tribe was the fruitful country of Geneſaret, full of delightful gardens and fields, which lay along by a lake of that name, frequently mentioned in the new teſtament; which country Joſephus ſays [b] one may call the ambition of nature; and the Targum of Jonathan has it, "ye ſhall be full of the fruits of the valley of Geneſaret;" and particularly this country was favoured with the preſence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; ſee Matt. iv. 13, 14. and ix. 1. and xi. 23. poſſeſs thou the weſt and the ſouth; not the weſt and ſouth of the land of Iſrael; for according to Joſephus [c] this tribe lay to the eaſt and north of it, juſt the reverſe; and it is plain from Joſh. xix. 34. that it had Aſher on the weſt, and Zebulun on the ſouth; wherefore ſome underſtand this of the commodities this tribe was ſupplied with, as through the tribe of Aſher on the weſt, on which thoſe trading cities Tyre and Sidon bordered; and through Zebulun on the ſouth, which was near the ſea, and was given to navigation and trade: though it ſhould be obſerved that the word for weſt ſignifies the ſea [d]; and intends not the Mediterranean ſea, which this tribe did not reach; but the ſea of Tiberias and Geneſaret, as all the Targums explain it; and Bochart [e] obſerves, that the portion of Naphtali reached from the ſouth of the city of Dan to the ſea of Tiberias; ſo that the ſouth is obſerved with reſpect to Dan laſt mentioned, and the weſt or ſea to the ſea of Tiberias.

℣. 24. And of Aſher he ſaid, &c.] The tribe of Aſher, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: let Aſher be bleſſed with children; with large numbers, as it appears this tribe was, having in it 53,400 men of war, Numb. xxvi. 47. It was eſteemed a great bleſſing to have many children, Pſ. cxxviii. 3, 4. or above the children; above or more than the reſt of the children of Jacob; ſee Luke ii. 36, 38. Jarchi obſerves, that he had ſeen in a book called Siphri, that there was none in all the tribes bleſſed with children as Aſher, but not known how: let him be acceptable to his brethren; either for his excellent bread, and royal dainties, Gen. xlix. 20. or for the goodneſs of his olives and oil, and for the braſs and iron found in this tribe as follows; or, as ſome ſay, becauſe of his children, his daughters being very beautiful: and let him dip his foot in oil; have ſuch plenty of it, that if he would he might dip or waſh his feet in it; and it was uſual not only to anoint the head, but the feet [f] alſo with oil, Luke vii. 46.

℣. 25. Thy ſhoes ſhall be iron and braſs, &c.] Either they ſhould have ſuch an abundance of theſe metals, that they could if they would have made their ſhoes of them; but that is not uſual; though it is ſaid of Empedocles [g] the philoſopher, that he wore ſhoes of braſs, which was very ſingular; and ſome think that this tribe, becauſe of the abundance of theſe metals, uſed to ſtick their ſhoes with iron and braſs nails at the bottom of them, as country people, ſoldiers, and travellers in various nations nations do; but the true ſenſe ſeems to be, that the land that fell to this tribe, and on which they trod, ſhould yield much iron and braſs; as in Carmel, a mountain on the borders of it, braſs was taken, as ſays Heſychius; and Zidon is by Homer[i] ſaid to abound with braſs, which belonged to this tribe; and Sarepta, another city in it, had its name from צרף, which ſignifies to melt, from the melting of theſe metals in it; ſee Deut. viii. 9. though ſome Jewiſh writers take the ſenſe to be, that the land of Aſher was ſo ſtrongly fortified as if it had been encloſed with walls of braſs and iron, or the gates of its cities were ſhut up with bolts and bars of iron and braſs, as Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech obſerve; ſo the Arabic: and as thy day ſo ſhall thy ſtrength be; the ſame in old age, as in youth; which is the ſenſe of the Latin Vulgate verſion, and all the Targums; ſuch were the vigour and ſtrength of Moſes himſelf, ch. xxxiv. 7. and ſo may denote a renewal of youth, like that of eagles; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, a revival of the graces of the Spirit of God, as to the exerciſe of them, and an increaſe of ſpiritual ſtrength, ſo that the inward man is renewed day by day; and may alſo denote ſuch a meaſure of ſtrength given, as is proportioned to the events that daily befal, or to the ſervices and ſufferings men are called unto; ſee 1 Cor. x. 13. 2 Cor. iv. 16. and xii. 9, 10.

℣. 26. There is none like unto the God of Jeſurun, &c.] Or Iſrael, as all the three Targums; for this is one of the names of the people of Iſrael; ſee the note on ch. xxxii. 15. and the Lord was their God in a ſpecial ſenſe, having choſen, redeemed them, and made a covenant with them; and there is no God like him for the perfections of his nature, his purity and holineſs, his goodneſs, wiſdom, power, faithfulneſs, &c. and for the wonderful works of nature, providence, and grace, done by him; and for the bleſſings of goodneſs, temporal and ſpiritual, he beſtows on men. The tribes being particularly bleſſed, the whole body of the people are pronounced happy, and whoſe happineſs is enlarged on in this and the following verſes: who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the ſky; which he has the ſovereign rule and diſpoſal of, and can and does diſpoſe of all the artillery therein, as illuſtrious proofs of his glory and excellency, and for the help of his people, and the deſtruction of their enemies; as when he ſent forth hail, thunderings, and lightenings, upon the Egyptians, and frightened them; and caſt down hail-ſtones upon the Canaanites, and ſlew many of them; and when the ſtars in their courſe fought againſt Siſera; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 4, 33, 34.

℣. 27. The eternal God is thy refuge, &c.] God is eternal, from everlaſting to everlaſting; the antient of days, before all things, and all time; which is, and was, and is to come: the ſame is true of Chriſt, who is the everlaſting Father, or Father of eternity, the true God, and eternal life; as appears from his nature, having the whole fulneſs, all the perfections of deity in him; from his office, as mediator, in which he was ſet up from everlaſting; from his concern in eternal election, in the everlaſting covenant, and in the creation of all things out of nothing: and he is the refuge of his people, the antitype of the cities of refuge, to whom ſinners, under a ſenſe of ſin, flee for refuge; and where they are ſafe from avenging juſtice, the wrath of God, the condemnation of the law, everlaſting ruin and deſtruction, or the ſecond death; or their manſion, or dwelling place[k]; which he has been in all generations, as Moſes alſo ſays, Pſ. xc. 1, 2. Such is Chriſt to his people, who dwelt ſecretly in him from everlaſting, being choſen in him, and given to him; and openly in converſion, where they dwell as in a ſtrong hold, ſafely, quietly, comfortably, and pleaſantly: and underneath are the everlaſting arms; that is, of God, which are the ſupport of his people, and their protection, ſafety, and ſecurity; ſuch as the arms of his everlaſting love, which encircle them, and compaſs them about as a ſhield; his everlaſting covenant, which is immoveable, and in which they ever remain; eternal redemption and ſalvation; wrought out by Chriſt, which ſecures them from deſtruction; and everlaſting power, by which they are kept and preſerved as in a garriſon; and everlaſting conſolation, which flows from all this: and ſo the arms of Chriſt, or his almighty power, are under the world, to uphold it in being; and under his church, to ſupport it, on whoſe ſhoulders the government of it is; and under particular believers, whom he carries in his arms, embraces in his boſom, bears them up under all their afflictions and temptations, trials and exerciſes; nor will he ever ſuffer them to drop out of his arms, or to be plucked from thence: and he ſhall thruſt out the enemy from before thee; the Canaanites out of the land of Canaan, to make room for Iſrael, which he was juſt about to do, and quickly did. In like manner, Chriſt thruſts out Satan and the ſpiritual enemies of his people, whom to diſpoſſeſs is a work of mighty power; and not only ſo, but gives orders to deſtroy them, and does deſtroy them, and makes his people more than conquerors over them: and ſhall ſay, deſtroy them; the Canaanites; to do which the people of Iſrael had an order from the Lord, Deut. vii. 1, 2.

℣. 28. Iſrael then ſhall dwell in ſafety alone, &c.] The Canaanites being thruſt out of their land, and Iſrael put into the poſſeſſion of it, ſhould dwell in ſafety, or confidently[l]; without fear of enemies, though ſurrounded with them on all hands; and though alone, a ſeparate people, diſtinct from all others their neighbours round about them; ſee Numb. xxiii. 9. So the ſpiritual Iſrael dwell in the eternal God, their manſion, or dwelling-place; in Chriſt, their rock; and in a ſtrong city, the church, where they are in the utmoſt ſafety. God is all around them; Chriſt is their refuge, ſtrong-hold, and tower; the holy Spirit in the midſt of them is mighty; angels are their guardians, and the church their ſtrong city, whoſe walls and bulwarks are ſalvation: here they dwell confidently and ſecurely; though they have ſometimes their fears, they have no juſt reaſon for them; and when faith is in exerciſe, are free from them, caſting all their care on the Lord, and having confidence in him; where they are alone, not ſolitary; all the three divine perſons dwell with them, and alſo angels and ſaints their fellow-citizens; but independent of others, having large proviſions in Chriſt, in the covenant, and in the houſe of God; and are a ſeparate and diſtinct people now, and will be to all eternity; ſee the note on Numb. xxiii. 9. the fountain of Jacob ſhall be upon a land of corn and wine; that is, the Iſraelites that ſpring from Jacob, as ſtreams of water ter from a fountain; ſee Iſ. xlviii. 1. theſe ſhall be or dwell upon the land of Canaan, a land abounding with corn and wine, and all good things, ch. viii. 7, 8, 9. or in or by the fountain of Jacob [m]; in a well-watered land, there they ſhould dwell. So the ſpiritual Iſrael of God dwell in and by Chriſt, the fountain of gardens, the well of living waters, of life and ſalvation, in whom all fulneſs of grace dwells for their ſupply: or the eye of Jacob [n] is or ſhall be on a land, &c. that is, the Iſraelites had their eye on the good land of Canaan, and would quickly not only be in ſight, but in poſſeſſion of it. Every true Iſraelite has a ſpiritual eye, which is the eye of faith, the evidence of things not ſeen, which looks to and upon that better country, the land afar off, heaven and eternal happineſs, and expects and waits for the full enjoyment of it: alſo his heavens ſhall drop down dew; the heavens over the land of Canaan ſhould drop down dew upon it, and make it fruitful to bring forth corn and wine, which was Jacob's bleſſing, Gen. xxvii. 28. Thus the Lord in the heavens drops down the dew of grace, and the bleſſings of it, upon his people, which make them revive as the corn, and grow as the vine; and Chriſt's heavenly miniſters drop the dew of goſpel-doctrine upon them, to the great refreſhment of them, ch. xxxii. 3. Hoſ. xiv. 5, 6, 7.

℣. 29. Happy art thou, O Iſrael, &c.] This is the concluſion of the bleſſing on Iſrael ſummed up in a few words; they having God to be their God, and having ſo many good things promiſed them, and in ſight of them; being now got through the wilderneſs, and on the borders of the land of Canaan; as all ſuch muſt be happy, whoſe covenant-God is the Lord; ſince they muſt be beloved of him, choſen by him, and bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings; and in the faith, hope, and view of eternal happineſs: who is like unto thee? for an intereſt in the favour of God, for a ſhare in the bleſſings of goodneſs, for a good God, a good land, and good laws; for wiſdom and knowledge, for riches and honour, for holineſs and happineſs: a people ſaved by the Lord; redeemed by him out of Egypt, preſerved in the wilderneſs, ſaved from many dangers and enemies, and now brought near to the land of Canaan. The Targum of Jonathan is, "ſaved or redeemed in the name of the Word of the Lord;" by whom the ſpiritual Iſrael of God are redeemed from all their ſins, from the curſes of the law, and out of the hand of all their enemies; and are and will be compleatly ſaved in ſoul and body, with an everlaſting ſalvation: the ſhield of thy help; that is, the Lord, by whom they are ſaved; he is the ſhield that protects them; the ſhield of faith and of ſalvation, which faith lays hold on and makes uſe of for its defence, and who is the help of his people in all times of trouble: and who is the ſword of thy excellency; to deſtroy their enemies, and whereby they would be raiſed to that excellency and glory they were in the land of Canaan: and thine enemies ſhall be found liars unto thee; who threatened what they would do unto them, but were not able; or ſhall lie unto thee [o], be in ſuch dread and fear as to tell lies to ſave themſelves, and pretend to be what they were not, as the Gibeonites did, of whom Jarchi interprets this paſſage: and thou ſhalt tread upon their high places; be poſſeſſed of their cities and fortreſſes, built on an eminence; ſee ch. xxxii. 13. all the three Targums, and ſo Jarchi, interpret it, of treading on the necks of their kings, which was fulfilled, Joſh. x. 24.

CHAP. XXXIV.

THIS chapter informs us of Moſes going up to the top of Piſgah, where he was ſhewn the whole land of Canaan, ℣. 1—4. of his death, burial, and age, ℣. 5, 6, 7. of Iſrael's mourning for him, and the time of it, ℣. 8. of his ſucceſſor Joſhua, ℣. 9. and of the character of Moſes, to whom no prophet was to be compared, ℣. 10—12.

℣. 1. And Moſes went up from the plains of Moab, &c.] Where the Iſraelites had lain encamped for ſome time, and where Moſes had repeated to them the law, and all that is contained in this book of Deuteronomy; and after he had read to them the ſong in ch. 32. and had bleſſed the ſeveral tribes, as in the preceding chapter: at the command of God he went up from hence, unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Piſgah, that is over-againſt Jericho; Nebo was one of the mountains of Abarim, which formed a ridge of them, and Piſgah was the higheſt point of Nebo, and this was over-againſt Jericho on the other ſide Jordan, ſee ch. xxxiii. 49. hither Moſes went, to the top of this high mountain, for aught appears, without any ſupport or help, his natural force not being abated, though 120 years old; and hither he ſeems to have gone alone, though Joſephus [p] and the Samaritan chronicle [q] ſay, Eleazar, Joſhua, and the elders of Iſrael accompanied him: and the Lord ſhewed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan; the Word of the Lord, as the Targum of Jonathan, who appeared to him in the buſh, ſent him to Egypt, wrought miracles by him there, led him and the people of Iſrael through the Red-ſea and wilderneſs, and brought them to the place where they now were: and though the eye of Moſes was not become dim, as was uſual at ſuch an age he was of, yet it can hardly be thought it ſhould be ſo ſtrong as to take a diſtinct view of the whole land of Canaan, to the utmoſt borders of it: no doubt but his natural ſight was wonderfully ſtrengthened and increaſed by the Lord, by whom he was directed firſt to behold the land of Gilead on that ſide of Jordan where he was, and which was the poſſeſſion of the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; and then he was directed to look forward to the land of Canaan beyond Jordan, to the northern part of it; for Dan is not the tribe of Dan, but a city of that name, formerly Leſhem, which the Danites took, and lay the fartheſt north of the land, hence the phraſe from Dan to Beerſheba, ſee Joſh. xix. 47. this city is ſo called by anticipation: Aben Ezra thinks Joſhua wrote this verſe by a ſpirit of prophecy; and it is very likely the whole chapter was written by him, and not the eight laſt verſes only, as ſay the Jewiſh writers: this view Moſes had of the

the good land a little before his death, may be an emblem of that ſight believers have by faith, of the heavenly glory, and which ſometimes is the cleareſt when near to death; this ſight they have not in the plains of Moab, in the low eſtate of nature, but in an exalted ſtate of grace, upon and from off the rock of Chriſt, in the mountain of the church of God, the word and ordinances being often the means of it; it is a ſight by faith, and is of the Lord, which he gives, ſtrengthens, and increaſes, and ſometimes grants more fully a little before death.

℣. 2. And all Naphtali, &c.] Which lay in the northern part of the land, and where was Galilee of the Gentiles, and ſo he had a ſight of all that country moſt frequented by the Meſſiah when come, ſee Matt. iv. 13, 14, 15. and the land of Ephraim and Manaſſeh; which lay in the midland part of the country: and all the land of Judah; which lay to the ſouth: unto the utmoſt ſea; the Mediterranean ſea, which was the weſtern boundary of the land, called the hinder ſea, Zech. xiv. 8. and might as well be ſo rendered here, for the ſame word is uſed: Jarchi would have it read, not the hinder ſea, but the latter day; for, he ſays, the Lord ſhewed to Moſes all that ſhould happen to Iſrael until the reſurrection of the dead; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes the above paſſages, and obſerves that the Lord ſhewed Moſes the mighty deeds of Jephtha of Gilead, and the victories of Samſon, who was of the tribe of Dan; the idolatries of that tribe, and Samſon the ſaviour that ſhould ſpring from them; Deborah and Barak and the princes of the houſe of Naphtali; Joſhua the ſon of Nun, of the tribe of Ephraim, that ſhould fight with and ſlay the kings of Canaan; and Gideon the ſon of Joaſh, of the tribe of Manaſſeh, that ſhould fight with Midian and Amalek, and all the kings of Iſrael, and the kingdom of the houſe of Judah; the king of the ſouth, that ſhould join the king of the north to deſtroy the inhabitants of the earth; and even the deſtruction of Armillus or antichriſt, and the war of Gog and Magog, and the great affliction Michael ſhall ſave from.

℣. 3. And the ſouth, &c.] The ſouthern part of the land, even all of it; and having ſhewn him that, he is directed eaſtward to take a view of the plain of the valley of Jericho; which lay before him, a delightful plain; ſee Joſh. v. 10. the city of palm-trees; ſo Jericho was called, becauſe of the multitude of palm-trees which grew there, and which Joſephus not only teſtifies [r], who ſpeaks of it as a plain planted with palm-trees, and from whence balſam comes; but ſeveral heathen writers: Pliny ſays [s], Jericho was ſet with palm-trees; Diodorus Siculus [t] ſpeaks of the country about Jericho as abounding with palm-trees, and in a certain valley, meaning the vale or plains of Jericho, is produced that which is called balſam; ſo Strabo ſays [u], Jericho is a plain ſurrounded with mountains abounding with palm-trees, where there is a plantation of palm-trees, with other fruit-trees the ſpace of a hundred furlongs: unto Zoar; near the ſalt ſea; ſee Gen. xix. 22.

℣. 4. And the Lord ſaid unto him, &c.] The Word of the Lord, as the Jeruſalem Targum, having ſhewn him all the land of Canaan: this is the land which I ſware unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob, ſaying, I will give it unto thy ſeed; to Abraham, Gen. xv. 18. to Iſaac, Gen. xxvi. 3. to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 13. I have cauſed thee to ſee it with thine eyes; not only had indulged him with a general view of it, but had ſtrengthened his eyeſight, that he had a full, clear, and diſtinct ſight of it: but thou ſhalt not go over thither; which he had ſaid more than once before, and abides by it, and this becauſe of the behaviour of Moſes at the waters of Meribah, Numb. xx. 12. ſee Deut. iii. 25, 26, 27.

℣. 5. So Moſes the ſervant of the Lord died there, in the land of Moab, &c.] Which formerly belonged to Moab, and was taken from them by Sihon king of the Amorites, and now in the poſſeſſion of Iſrael: here on a mountain in this land Moſes died; and yet contrary to the expreſs words of this text, ſome Jewiſh writers affirm [w], that he died not, but was tranſlated to heaven, where he miniſters; yea, that he was an angel and could not die: but it is clear he did die, even though a ſervant of the Lord, as he was, and a faithful one; but ſuch die as well as others, Zech. i. 5. there is a ſaying of ſome [x] Jews, "Moſes died, and who ſhall not die?" no man can promiſe himſelf immortality here, when ſuch great and good men die: the Targum of Jonathan ſays, he died on the ſeventh of Adar or February, on which day he was born; and it is the general opinion of the Jewiſh writers [y], that he died on the ſeventh of that month, in the middle of the day, and that it was a ſabbath-day: though, as Aben Ezra obſerves [z], ſome ſay he died on the firſt of Adar; and Joſephus [a] is expreſs for it, that it was at the new moon, or firſt day of the month; and with this agrees the calculation of biſhop Uſher [b]: according to the word of the Lord; according to the prophecy of the Lord, and according to a command of his, that he ſhould go up to the aboveſaid mountain and die, Numb. xxvii. 12, 13. Deut. xxxii. 49, 50. or, as the Targum of Jeruſalem, according to the decree of the Lord; as the death of every man is, both with reſpect to time and place, and manner of it: it is appointed for men once to die, Heb. ix. 27. becauſe it is in the original text, according to the mouth of the Lord [c]; hence ſome Jewiſh writers, as Jarchi particularly, interpret it, of his dying by a kiſs of his mouth, with ſtrong expreſſions and intimations of his love to him, Cant. i. 2. and no doubt but he did die ſatisfied of the love of God to him, enjoying his preſence, and having faith and hope of everlaſting life and ſalvation; but the true ſenſe is, he died according to the will of God, not of any diſeaſe, or thro' the infirmities of age, but by the immediate order and call of God out of this life.

℣. 6. And he buried him, &c.] Aben Ezra ſays, he buried himſelf, going into a cave on the top of the mount, where he expired, and ſo where he died his grave was; but though he died on the mount, he was buried in a valley: Jarchi and ſo other Jewiſh writers [d] ſay, the Lord buried him; it may be by the miniſtry of angels: an Arabic writer ter says [d], he was buried by angels: it is very probable he was buried by Michael, and who is no other than the archangel or head of principalities and powers, our Lord Jesus Christ, for a reason that will be hereafter suggested, see Jud. ℣. 9. in a valley in the land of Moab over-against Baal-Peor; where stood a temple dedicated to the idol Peor, see ch. iii. 29. but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day; to the time when Joshua wrote this, or as others think Samuel: if Moses is the same with the Osiris of the Egyptians, as some think [e], it may be observed, that his grave is said to be unknown to the Egyptians, as Diodorus Siculus [f] and Strabo [g] both affirm; and the grave of Moses is unknown, even unto this our day; for though no longer ago than in the year 1655. in the month of October, it was pretended to be found by some Maronite shepherds on mount Nebo, with this inscription on it in Hebrew letters, Moses the servant of the lord; but this story was confuted by Jecomas a learned Jew, who proved it to be the grave of another Moses [h], whom Wagenseil conjectures, was Moses Maimonides [i]; but some think the whole story is an imposition: the reason why the grave of Moses was kept a secret, was, as Ben Gersom suggests, lest because of his miracles, succeeding generations should make a god of him and worship him, as it seems a sort of hereticks called Melchisedecians did [k]: the death and burial of Moses were an emblem of the weakness and insufficiency of the law of Moses, and the works of it, to bring any into the heavenly Canaan; and of the law being dead, and believers dead to that through the body of Christ, and of the entire abrogation and abolition of it by Christ, according to the will of God, as a covenant of works, as to the curse and condemnation of it, and justification by it; who is Michael the archangel, and is the end of the law for righteousness; he abolished it in his flesh, nailed it to his cross, carried it to his grave and left it there; the rites and ceremonies of it are to be no more received, nor is it to be sought after for righteousness and life, being dead and buried, Rom. vii. 6.

℣. 7. And Moses was 120 years old when he died, &c.] Which age of his may be divided into three equal periods, forty years in Pharaoh's court, forty years in Midian, and forty in the care and government of Israel, in Egypt and in the wilderness; so long he lived, though the common age of man in his time, was but threescore years and ten, Ps. xc. 10. and what is most extraordinary is, his eyes were not dim; as Isaac's were, and men at such an age and under, generally be: nor his natural force abated; neither the vigour of his mind nor the strength of his body; his intellectuals were not decayed, his memory and judgment; nor was his body feeble, and his countenance wan; his moisture, was not fled [l], as it may be rendered, his radical moisture; he did not look withered and wrinkled, but plump and sleek, as if he was a young man in the prime of his days: this may denote the continued use of the ceremonial law then to direct to Christ, and the force of the moral law as in the hands of Christ, requiring obedience and conformity to it, as a rule of walk and conversation, 1 Cor. ix. 21.

℣. 8. And the children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab 30 days, &c.] According both to Josephus [m] and the Samaritan chronicle [n], they cried and wept in a very vehement manner, when he signified to them his approaching death, and took his leave of them; and when he was dead they mourned for him in a public manner, the space of time here mentioned, the time of mourning for his brother Aaron, Numb. xx. 29. so the days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended; on the eighth of Nisan or March, as says the Targum of Jonathan, and on the ninth they prepared their vessels and their cattle for a march, and on the tenth passed over Jordan, and on the sixteenth the manna ceased, according to the said paraphrase.

℣. 9. And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom, &c.] The successor of Moses, and who by the spirit of wisdom on him, was abundantly qualified for the government of the people of Israel; in which he was a type of Christ, on whom the Spirit of wisdom and understanding is said to rest, Is. xi. 2. for Moses had laid his hands upon him; which was a symbol of the government being committed to him, and devolving upon him after his death, and expressive of prayer for him, that he might be fitted for it, of which action see Numb. xxvii. 23. and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the Lord commanded Moses; or by the hand of Moses; they received him and owned him as their supreme governor under God, and yielded a chearful obedience to his commands, as the Lord by Moses commanded them to do, and as they promised; see Josh. i. 16, 17, 18.

℣. 10. And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, &c.] Not in the times of Joshua, who wrote this chapter, at least the last eight verses, as say the Jews [o]; nor to the times of Samuel, whom others take to be the writer of them; nor to the times of Ezra, as others; nor even throughout the whole old testament-dispensation to the times of Christ, the great prophet, like to Moses, that was to arise; and the Messiah is by the Jews, owned, as by Maimonides [p], to be equal to him, and by others, to be above him: it is a well-known saying of theirs [q], that "the Messiah "shall be exalted above Abraham, and extolled "above Moses, and made higher than the mini-"string angels;" but as to all other prophets he excels them, and therefore they call him the prince, master, and father of the prophets, and say, that all prophesied from the fountain of his prophecy [r]: the difference between him and them is observed by Maimonides [s], to lie in many things; as that they prophesied by a dream or vision, but he awake and seeing; they prophesied by the means of an angel, and saw what they did in parables and dark sayings; but Moses not by means of an angel, but the Lord spake to him face to face; they trembled and astonished, but not so Moses; they could not prophesy when they would, but he at any time, nor did he need to dispose and prepare his mind for it; some of which will not hold good, especially the last; the instances in which he really exceeded them follow: whom the Lord knew face to face; owned, took notice of, and familiarly conversed with face to face, as a man with his friend;

℣. 11. In all the ſigns and the wonders which the Lord ſent him to do, &c.] The ſame Targums alſo paraphraſe here, "which the Word of the Lord "ſent him to do;" for he it was that appeared to him in the buſh, and ſent him to Egypt to work miracles, which he did by him: in the land of Egypt, to Pharaoh, and to all his ſervants, and to all his land; to whom they were viſible, and who were all affected by them more or leſs: this reſpects chiefly the ten plagues inflicted on the Egyptians: the Jews obſerve that the ſuperexcellency of Moſes to the reſt of the prophets, lay chiefly in his ſuperior degree of prophecy rather than in miracles, and not ſo much in the nature or the quality of the miracles; the ſtopping of the ſun by Joſhua, and the raiſing of the dead to life by Elijah and Eliſha being greater than his; but either in the duration of them, as the manna which continued near forty years; or eſpecially in the quantity of them, he working more than all the reſt put together: Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael [t]. has collected all that the prophets wrought, or were wrought for their ſakes, and they came to 74; but thoſe that were wrought by Moſes or on his account make 76; but whether this is a juſt account I will not ſay.

℣. 12. And in all that mighty hand, &c.] In all done by his hand, which he ſtretched out over the ſea and divided, to make a paſſage through it for the Iſraelites, and with his rod in it ſmote the rocks, and waters guſhed out for them: and in all that great terror which Moſes ſhewed in the ſight of all Iſrael; meaning either the terror the Egyptians were ſtruck with by him, in the ſight of all Iſrael, when he publickly and before them wrought the wonders he did in the land of Ham which often threw them into a panic, eſpecially the thunders and lightning, the three days darkneſs, and the ſlaying of their firſt-born; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 12, 49, 50, 51. and cv. 38. or the terror the Iſraelites were in at the giving and receiving of the law, Exod. xix. 16. and xx. 18, 19, 20.

The

The Book of JOSHUA.

THE Jews diſtinguiſh the prophets into former and latter; the firſt of the former prophets is Joſhua, or Sepher Joſhua, the book of Joſhua, as it is commonly called in the Hebrew copies; the Syriac inſcription is, "the book of "Joſhua, the ſon of Nun, the "diſciple of Moſes:" in the Arabic verſion it is reckoned a book of the Judges, which adds, "the "firſt among the judges of the children of Iſrael "was Joſhua, the ſon of Nun, the 28th from Adam, "who reigned over Iſrael after the prophet Moſes." This book bears the name of Joſhua, either becauſe it is concerning him, his actions and exploits in the land of Canaan, or becauſe it was written by him, or both; tho' ſome aſcribe it to Ezra, and others to Iſaiah; but it muſt have been written before the times of Ahab, as appears from 1 Kings xvi. 34. and even before the times of David, as is clear from ch. xv. 69. compared with 2 Sam. v. 6. for though mention is made in it of the mountains of Judah and of Iſrael, from whence ſome have concluded, that the writer muſt have lived after the times of Reboboam, in whoſe days the kingdom was divided; yet we find the diſtinction of Iſrael and Judah took place before, even in the times of David and Aſaph, Pſ. lxxvi. 1. It is moſt likely, that this book was written by Joſhua himſelf, as the Jews in their Talmud[a] aſſert; and indeed, who more fit for it than himſelf? and if written or put together by another, it is moſt probable that it was taken out of his diary, annals or memoirs; and though there are ſome things recorded in it, which were done after his death, theſe might be inſerted under a divine direction and influence by Eleazar, or Phinehas, or Samuel, to each of whom ſome aſcribe the writing of this book, juſt as Joſhua is ſuppoſed to add ſome verſes concerning Moſes at the end of the Pentateuch: however, be it wrote by whom it may, there is no doubt to be made of the divine inſpiration and authenticity of it by us chriſtians, ſince ſome hiſtories recorded in it are taken from it, or referred to in Heb. xi. 30, 31. and the promiſe made to Joſhua is quoted, and applied to every believer, ch. xiii. 6. and the apoſtle James refers to the caſe of Rahab, her character and conduct in it, Jam. ii. 25. The ſubject-matter of this book is Joſhua's taking upon him the government of the children of Iſrael, after the death of Moſes, by a divine commiſſion, exhortation and encouragement given him to engage in war with the Canaanites; his conqueſts of them, the diviſion of the land of Canaan to the children of Iſrael, and their ſettlement in it. It is of great uſe not only to give us the geography of the land of Canaan, and the hiſtory of the church of God, from the death of Moſes to the times of the Judges; but ſhews the exact fulfilment of prophecy, and the faithfulneſs of God to his promiſes in giving the land of Canaan to Iſrael, according to thoſe made to their fathers, and the juſtice of God in puniſhing the Canaanites for their abominable ſins, as had been foretold; and the wonderful care of God, and his love to the people of Iſrael in preſerving and protecting them, and in ſettling them in ſuch a good land, notwithſtanding all their murmurings, ingratitude and unbelief in the wilderneſs; and may ſerve to lead us to Chriſt, whoſe type Joſhua was in the whole affair here related: his name has the ſignification of the ſalvation of the Lord in it; and he is by the Greek writers, and ſo in the New Teſtament, called Jeſus, a ſaviour, Acts vii. 45. Heb. iv. 8. and as they agree in their name, ſo they do in their ſtate, condition and character; Joſhua was a ſervant of Moſes, Chriſt was made under the law, and became ſubject to it, both moral and ceremonial; and alſo in their office, Joſhua was the governor of Iſrael, and the commander of their forces, for which he was well qualified with wiſdom, courage and integrity; Chriſt is king of ſaints, the leader and commander of the people, who has fought their battles for them, being abundantly qualified, having the ſpirit of wiſdom, counſel, might, and of the fear of the Lord reſting on him. Joſhua was a type of Chriſt in various actions of his; in leading the people through the river Jordan, an emblem either of baptiſm, or of afflictions, or of death itſelf, in which Chriſt is with his people, and carries them through; in ſaving Rahab and her family, ſo Chriſt ſaves the worſt and chief of ſinners; in receiving the Gibeonites, who ſubmitted to him, as Chriſt does all that come to him; in his conqueſt of the ſeveral kings of the Canaanites, ſo Chriſt has conquered all the ſpiritual enemies of his people, ſin, ſatan and the world; in bringing and ſettling the people of Iſrael in the land of Canaan, their reſt, and dividing it to them by lot, which Moſes might not do; do; ſo Chriſt only brings ſouls into the true reſt, into ſpiritual reſt here, and eternal reſt hereafter; in whom they obtain the inheritance of the heavenly glory by lot, and by whom only they enjoy ſalvation and eternal life, and not by the works of the law. This book contains an hiſtory of Joſhua, of his government, his acts and deeds, from the death of Moſes to his own; how long that was is not certain; the Jewiſh chronologers [b] obſerve, that the time of his principality we find not in the text; though they [c] ſay he ſucceeded Moſes when he was 82 years of age, and governed Iſrael 28 years; Eupolemus [d], an heathen writer, ſays 30 years. Chriſtian writers commonly make his reign to be 27 years [e]; but an Arabic writer [f] ſtretches it further to 31 years; he ſays, he took the government of the people in the 79th year of his age, and reigned 31: but it ſeems more probable, that he was 93 years of age when Moſes died, who lived to be an 110, ſo that only 17 years intervened between the death of the one and of the other; ſeven years Joſhua was in ſubduing the land, and 10 years more were taken up in dividing it to the people, and ſettling them in it, and in the government of them; after which Eleazar might rule ten years more, whoſe death is mentioned in it; ſo indeed the book may be reckoned an hiſtory of 27 years, though Joſhua lived only 17 of them. The Chronicle, to which the Samaritans give the name of the book of Joſhua, is a ſpurious work; an epitome of which Hottinger [g] has compiled, and tranſlated out of the Arabic exemplar into Latin.

CHAP. I.

MOSES being dead, the Lord directs and encourages Joſhua to take the command of the children of Iſrael, and go over Jordan with them, and take poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, and divide it to them; giving him gracious promiſes and ſtrong aſſurances of his preſence, and ſome good advice with reſpect to his conduct, ℣. 1—9. upon which Joſhua orders the people to be ready in three days to go along with him, ℣. 10, 11. and particularly addreſſes the Reubenites and Gadites, and half tribe of Manaſſeh, and puts them in mind of what Moſes had ordered, and they had promiſed, to go along with their brethren, and aſſiſt them in conquering the land, ℣. 12—15. which they readily agreed to do, and promiſed obedience to him in all things, ℣. 16—18.

℣. 1. Now after the death of Moſes, &c.] Or and after [h]; the book begins as if ſomething went before, it is connected with; and indeed it ſeems to be the laſt chapter of the book of Deuteronomy, which treats of the death of Moſes; and Joſhua being the penman of the laſt eight verſes of that chapter, as ſay the Talmudiſts [i], and of this book, as has been ſeen, having wrote them, he goes on with the hiſtory of his own affairs in ſtrict connexion with that account, beginning where that ended; namely, at the death of Moſes, whoſe character here given is the ſervant of the Lord; and a faithful one he was in all things belonging to it, and in whatſoever was enjoined him by the Lord, ſee Deut. xxxiv. 5. and it came to paſs that the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua the ſon of Nun, Moſes's miniſter; either in a dream, or viſion, or by an articulate voice out of the ſanctuary: of Joſhua's deſcent and relation, ſee Exod. xxxiii. 11. and of his office under Moſes, not as a menial ſervant, but a miniſter of ſtate, ſee Exod. xxiv. 13. ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Moſes my ſervant is dead, &c.] Which was ſaid not for the information of Joſhua, but to lead on to, and ſhew the cauſe and reaſon of what he was about to ſay to him: now therefore ariſe, go over this Jordan; near to which the whole body of the people of Iſrael were, and very probably were in ſight of it: thou, and all this people; which were very numerous, 600,000 men or more, beſides a great number of women and children, and no boats to carry them over, or pontoons to put acroſs the river: unto the land which I give unto them, even to the children of Iſrael; and therefore it could be no caſe of conſcience with Joſhua, to go and take it out of the hands of the preſent inhabitants, ſince the Lord, who had a right to diſpoſe of it, gave it to them. As this land was a type of heaven, and eternal life, which is the free gift of God thro' Chriſt, paſſing over the river of Jordan to it, may be an emblem of the paſſage through death to the heavenly ſtate; both of the death of Chriſt, the antitypical Joſhua, who paſſed through it, as a ſurety to make ſatisfaction for ſin, and as a forerunner to ſet an example, to ſanctify death, to open a way into the holieſt of holies, and prepare a place for his people; and of the death of the ſaints, which is neceſſary to their enjoyment of perfect reſt and happineſs.

℣. 3. Every place that the ſole of your feet ſhall tread upon, &c.] That is, in the land of Canaan: that have I given unto you, as I ſaid unto Moſes; in Deut. xi. 24. ſee the note there; though the Jews extend this to all without the land ſubdued by them, and even to all the countries they now tread on, and are exiles in; but the limits of what the Lord gave them are fixed in the next verſe.

℣. 4. From the wilderneſs, &c.] The wilderneſs of Kadeſh and Sin, on the border of Edom; in the ſouth-eaſt corner, as Jarchi ſays, ſee Numb. xxxiv. 3. and this Lebanon; which though on the other ſide Jordan, and at a conſiderable diſtance, being the northern border of the land towards Syria, might be ſeen afar off; or it is expreſſed, becauſe it was a well-known place, as Kimchi remarks: even unto the great river, the river Euphrates; which was the eaſtern border of the land, and to which it reached in the times of Solomon, whoſe dominion extended thither, 1 Kings iv. 21. according to Jarchi, this was its breadth from ſouth to north: all the land of the Hittites; who though only one of the ſeven nations of Canaan, are put for the reſt, and the rather mentioned, becauſe as their name ſignifies, they were very formidable and terrible; among them dwelt the Anakim, and they themſelves were very warlike and populous; or they are taken notice of particularly here, becauſe they dwelt in the weſtern part of the land de-described by them, so Kimchi thinks; according to Jarchi, this was its length from east to west: and unto the great sea; the Mediterranean sea, which was the western border of the land of Canaan, called great, in comparison of the sea of Tiberias, and the salt sea, which were in it: toward the going down of the sun, shall be your coast; the western coast, see the note on Deut. xi. 24. this will be more fully verified in Christ, when his kingdom is from sea to sea, Ps. lxxii. 8.

℣. 5. There shall not any man be able to stand before thee, &c.] What is promised to the people in common, Deut. xi. 25. is here particularly promised to Joshua their general; and which was fulfilled in him, and still more in Christ his antitype, who made an end of sin, destroyed the devil, spoiled principalities and powers, abolished death, and overcame the world: as I was with Moses, so will I be with thee; to counsel and advise, guide and direct, protect and defend, prosper and succeed; the Targum of Jonathan is, "as my Word was "for the help of Moses, so will I be with thee:" I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee; but grant him his presence, communicate strength unto him, make good his promises, and leave him not till he had made an entire conquest of the land of Canaan, and even not till the end of his days; and was true of Christ in his state of humiliation, in his sufferings and death, and even in the grave, where he was not left so long as to see corruption; this is applied to particular believers in Heb. xiii. 5. see the note there.

℣. 6. Be strong, and of good courage, &c.] The same exhortation Moses gave him, Deut. xxxi. 7. and is afterwards repeated in this chapter, as being of great moment and importance, as it is in the general of an army to shew greatness and strength of mind, valour and courage, and not be dismayed at the number and strength of the enemy. As Joshua's work in fighting with the Canaanites, and conquering their land, so Christ's work in the redemption of his people, and subduing their enemies, required strength and courage, and both were very eminent in him: for unto this people shalt thou divide for an inheritance, the land which I sware unto their fathers to give them; and this promise included and ensured the conquest of it, and the putting the people into the possession of it; for if he was to divide it to them, he must first take it out of the hands of the present inhabitants, and deliver it into the hands of the children of Israel, to be possessed by them, dividing to each tribe and family their part and portion.

℣. 7. Only be thou strong, and very courageous, &c.] For though Joshua was a man of valour and courage, as appears by his war with Amalek, yet there was need of this exhortation, and of repeating it, since he was to engage with a people more and mightier than those with him, and who dwelt in strong and fortified places, and had been preparing for some time, having had notice, and were in expectation of the Israelites attempt upon them: that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee; not only as a private man obliged to observe the whole law, and act according to it in all things; though no mere man is capable of it, only Joshua's antitype, who is the end of it for righteousness to all that believe, having fulfilled it in all respects; but as the supreme magistrate under God, who was to see that the law was obeyed by the people in all things, and particularly as the general of the army, who was to observe to do what had been ordered, with respect to the Canaanites, see Deut. vii. 1—5. turn not from it to the right-hand or to the left; from the law, by adding to it, or taking from it; so Ben Gersom explains it, "turning to the right-"hand is, when any adds to its words, and turn-"ing to the left-hand, when he diminishes from "them;" or from him[k], that is, from Moses; from his good way, as Kimchi; though he adds, or else from the book of the law; for though he does not mention the book, he does the law; so Ben Melech: that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest; succeed in every battle he engaged in; it would be well if generals of armies would observe this; the way to obtain victory over enemies being to be observant of the laws of God themselves, and to take care that they be observed by the soldiers under their command: or that thou mayest act wisely[l]; the word of God furnishing out instruction to men in every station of life, see Luke iii. 10—14.

℣. 8. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, &c.] He was often to read it, frequently repeat it, and speak of it, to refresh his own memory with it, and the memory of those about him. Jarchi restrains it to the book of Deuteronomy now before him: but thou shalt meditate therein day and night; whenever he had any leisure from the important business of his office, whether by day or night, see Ps. i. 2. that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; which frequent speaking of it, and constant meditation on it, would lead unto: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success; in his wars with the Canaanites.

℣. 9. Have not I commanded thee? &c.] The above things, to go over Jordan with the people into the land of Canaan, and to observe the law of Moses in all things, and to be of good courage, which is again repeated; consider who it is that has given these orders and instructions, the great Jehovah, the everlasting I am, who is faithful to his promises, and able to perform. The consideration of which would serve to animate him to the work he was called unto, to encourage his faith in God, to engage in his service chearfully and readily: be strong, and of a good courage; see the note on ℣. 6, 7. be not afraid, nor be thou dismayed; at his enemies, numerous and powerful, nor discouraged at any thing in himself, any unfitness for such service, as he might think, or at any difficulties he might fear from the people he had the government of, and was to lead on; it was enough that the divine presence was promised him, and which is repeated: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest; or as the Targum of Jonathan, "for thy help is the Word of the Lord "thy God;" see the note on ℣. 5.

℣. 10. Then Joshua commanded the officers of the people, &c.] The same word is used in Deut. xvi. 18. where it seems to design such officers that attended on the judges, and executed their orders; but one would think it should here rather signify officers in the army, as captains, and the like; unless it should design a sort of heralds, who were to make proclamation throughout the camp, of the several orders issued out by Joshua, immediately upon his having the above directions and and inſtructions from the Lord: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 11. Paſs through the hoſt, &c.] The whole camp of Iſrael conſiſting of 600,000 fighting men: and command the people; even all the people of Iſrael; this includes women as well as men, for the one, as well as the other, were to do what follows, and eſpecially it may ſeem the buſineſs of the former: ſaying, prepare ye victuals; this muſt be underſtood, as Kimchi obſerves, of other ſorts of food beſides bread; for they had manna, the bread of heaven, which fell about their tents every morning, ſo that they were ſufficiently provided with that always, and which did not ceaſe until they had entered the land, even until the ſixteenth of Niſan, ch. v. 12. though indeed, as Abendana obſerves, that might be ſaid to be prepared, it being ground in mills, and beat in mortars, and made cakes of, Numb. xi. 8. but rather this deſigns meat and other proviſions, which being upon the borders of Moab and Midian, they could furniſh themſelves with for their money; and beſides, they were in the poſſeſſion of a fine country, of Baſhan and Gilead they had taken from Sihon and Og. Jarchi interprets it of every thing fit for journeying, and arms for war, with which they were ſupplied from the ſpoils of their enemies, the Egyptians at the Red Sea, Amalek at Rephidim, and the Amorites and Midianites lately ſmitten by them; and to this ſenſe Joſephus [m] ſeems to agree: for within three days ye ſhall paſs over this Jordan; or at the end of three days, as the Targum of Jonathan; and ſo Jarchi, while there are yet three days. after that ye ſhall paſs over: but here ariſes a difficulty to be reconciled, how this could be done three days after, when the ſpies which Joſhua is afterward ſaid to ſend into the land, ſtayed three days in the mountains, beſides the time of their going, and returning, and ſtay at Rahab's houſe; and it was not till after their return, that the camp began to move; to which it may be obſerved, that though the affair of the ſpies is afterward related, they might have been ſent by Joſhua before this order was given to prepare for the journey, and of this opinion are ſeveral of the Jewiſh writers [n]: this being the caſe, they might return before the expiration of theſe three days, at the end of which Joſhua, with the whole hoſt, removed agreeable to theſe orders: to go in to poſſeſs the land which the Lord your God giveth you to poſſeſs it; which muſt be a great inducement and encouragement to them to obſerve his inſtructions, and go over with him.

℣. 12. And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to half the tribe of Manaſſeh, &c.] Who were ſettled on that ſide Jordan where Iſrael now were: ſpake Joſhua, ſaying; as follows.

℣. 13. Remember the word which Moſes the ſervant of the Lord commanded you, &c.] In Numb. xxxii. 29, 30. and to which they had ſolemnly agreed; and now the time was come to put it into execution, Joſhua reminds them of it: ſaying, the Lord your God hath given you reſt; from their travels, and a ſettlement in a country agreeable to their own deſire: and hath given you this land; where they now were, and which they had taken from Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, and joined to Moab, on the borders of which Iſrael lay encamped; and by this it appears, that the ſettlement of theſe tribes, on the other ſide Jordan, was according to the will of God; he gave it to them.

℣. 14. Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, ſhall remain in the land which Moſes gave you on this ſide Jordan, &c.] This was what they themſelves propoſed, agreed unto, and confirmed, Numb. xxxii. 16, 17, 26, 27. but ye ſhall paſs over before your brethren armed; bearing arms, to fight for them; for none but ſuch that were fit to bear arms were obliged to go; and theſe were to go harneſſed [o], as ſome render the word, or in a military order, in rank and file, by fives, five in a row; not at the front of the army, for the ſtandard of Judah went firſt, but along with them; for before them ſignifies no other than in the preſence of them, and in company with them: all the mighty men of valour, and help them; to obtain a conqueſt over the Canaanites; all according to the order of Moſes, and by their agreement were to go, all that were able to bear arms; but Joſhua did not take them all, only a ſelect company of ſtrong and valiant men; for out of 130,000, but 40,000 went with him, ch. iv. 13.

℣. 15. Until the Lord hath given your brethren reſt, as he hath given you, &c.] Reſt from their travels, as they had: and they alſo have poſſeſſed the land which the Lord your God giveth them; are ſettled in the land of Canaan, as they were on that ſide Jordan: then ye ſhall return unto the land of your poſſeſſion, and enjoy it; the countries of Sihon and Og, they were put into the poſſeſſion of: which Moſes the Lord's ſervant gave you on this ſide Jordan, toward the ſun-riſing; the land given to them lay to the eaſt of Jordan.

℣. 16. And they anſwered Joſhua, &c.] The two tribes of Gad and Reuben, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, the heads of them, ſuch as were deputed for that purpoſe, and were their mouths to him: ſaying, all that thou commandeſt we will do; with reſpect to this affair of going over Jordan with their brethren, to aſſiſt them in the conqueſt of the land of Canaan: and whitherſoever thou ſendeſt us we will go; in what poſition he would have them be in the army, and to whatſoever part of the country he ſhould ſend them to ſubdue, and to whatſoever city he ſhould order them to beſiege.

℣. 17. According as we have hearkened unto Moſes in all things, ſo will we hearken unto thee, &c.] Not right or wrong, but in all things that were according to the laws and will of God made known to them; and particularly it may refer to the above affair, which was ſettled between Moſes and them, to whom they then hearkened, and now promiſe to confirm the ſame, and hearken to whatſoever orders and inſtructions Joſhua ſhould give them relative to it, according to the plan agreed upon: only the Lord thy God be with thee, as he was with Moſes; which is not mentioned as a condition of their obedience to him, but rather as a reaſon of it, and as an encouraging motive to it; for, according to Kimchi, the true ſenſe and meaning is, "for the Lord thy God will be with thee, as he "was with Moſes;" ſo Noldius renders it, "ſeeing "the Lord thy God is with thee."

℣. 18. Whoſoever he be that doth rebel againſt thy commandment, &c.] Refuſes to go over Jordan with his brethren the children of Iſrael, when commanded by Joſhua ſo to do: and will not hearken to thy words in all that thou commandeſt him; or if he

he does go over, yet will not obey orders to take ſuch a poſt, or go againſt ſuch a city, or march into ſuch a part of the country: he ſhall be put to death; this part of military diſcipline they agree to, and hereby declare their entire ſubmiſſion to him as their general; ſome underſtand this as ſpoken by all Iſrael, and of their promiſe of obedience to Joſhua, as their governor, in all things: only be ſtrong, and of a good courage; which alſo is not to be underſtood as a condition of their ſubmiſſion and obedience, but as a hearty wiſh and prayer for him, that he might have ſtrength and courage neceſſary to the great work he was engaging in, and which to ſee would be no ſmall encouragement to follow and obey him.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter gives an account of the ſpies ſent by Joſhua to Jericho, and of their entrance into the houſe of Rahab, who hid them from the king's meſſengers, ℣. 1—7. of the relation ſhe gave them of the fear and dread of Iſrael, which were fallen upon the Canaanites, ℣. 8—11. and of the requeſt ſhe made to them, to ſave her and her father's houſe, when the city ſhould be taken, and to have a ſure ſign of it given her, ℣. 12, 13. which the ſpies ſolemnly promiſed, and gave her a ſign of it, with a charge not to diſcover the matter to any, ℣. 14—20. and being let down by a cord through the window of her houſe, they made their eſcape to a mountain, where they lay three days, and then returned to Joſhua, and made their report, ℣. 21—24.

℣. 1. And Joſhua the ſon of Nun ſent out of Shittim two men, &c.] Or had ſent [p]; for this was done before the above order to depart: it is a tradition of the Jews [q], that they were Caleb and Phinehas; but they were not young men, as in ch vi. 23. eſpecially the former; nor is it probable that men of ſuch rank and figure ſhould be ſent, but rather meaner perſons; yet ſuch as were men of good ſenſe and abilities, and capable of conducting ſuch an affair they were ſent about, as well as men of probity and faithfulneſs; two good men, Kimchi ſays they were, and not as they that went on the miſſion of Moſes; theſe were ſent from Shittim, the ſame with Abel-ſhittim, in the plains of Moab, where Iſrael now lay encamped, Numb. xxxiii. 49. which Joſephus [r] calls Abila, and ſays it was 60 furlongs, or ſeven miles and better from Jordan: and ſpy ſecretly; or ſilently [s]; not ſo much with reſpect to the inhabitants of the land, for it is ſuppoſed in all ſpies, that they do their buſineſs in the moſt private and ſecret manner, ſo as not to be diſcovered by the inhabitants, whoſe land they are ſent to ſpy; but with reſpect to the children of Iſrael, that they might know nothing of it, leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged, thinking that Joſhua was in ſome fear of the Canaanites, and under ſome diſtruſt of the promiſe of God to give the land to them: the word for ſmiths, and alſo for perſons deaf and dumb, coming from the ſame root, have furniſhed the Jewiſh writers with various conceits, as that theſe ſpies went in the habit of ſmiths, with the inſtruments of their buſineſs in their hands; or acted as deaf and dumb perſons, and ſo as uncapable of giving an account of themſelves, or of anſwering to any queſtions put to them, ſhould they be taken up and examined; their commentators in general take notice of this: ſaying, go view the land, even Jericho; eſpecially Jericho, ſo Noldius [t]; the land in general, and Jericho in particular, becauſe it was a great city, as Kimchi notes; of this city, ſee the note on Luke xix. 4. Whether it had its name from the ſweet-ſmelling balſam which grew in plenty about it, or from the form of it, being that of an half-moon, is not certain. Strabo [u] ſays of it, that here was a paradiſe of balſam, an aromatic, and that it was ſurrounded with hills in a plain, which bent to it like an amphitheatre. They were not ſent to ſpy the land, as the ſpies in the times of Moſes, to ſee what ſort of land it was, and what ſort of people dwelt in it; but to reconnoitre it, to know where it was beſt to lead the people at firſt, and encamp; and particularly to obſerve the paſſes and avenues leading to Jericho, the firſt city in it, neareſt to them, of importance. Ben Gerſom thinks it was to ſpy or pick out the thoughts of the inhabitants of the land, what apprehenſions they had of the people of Iſrael, whether diſheartened and diſpirited at their near approach, and what were their intentions, reſolutions and preparations to act againſt them offenſively or defenſively; and which ſeems not amiſs, ſince this was the chief information they got, and which they reported to Joſhua upon their return; though Abarbinel objects to it as a thing impoſſible: and they went, and came into a harlot's houſe, named Rahab; they went from Shittim, and croſſed the river Jordan, by ſwimming or fording, and came to Jericho; which, as Joſephus [w] ſays, was 60 furlongs, or ſeven miles and a half from Jordan; and they went into an harlot's houſe, not purpoſely for that reaſon, becauſe it was ſuch an one, but ſo it proved eventually; though the Targum of Jonathan ſays it was the houſe of a woman, an innkeeper or victualler; for Jarchi, Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret the word it uſes of a ſeller of food [x]; and if ſo, it furniſhes out a reaſon why they turned in thither, where they might expect to have food and lodging; though the Jews commonly take her to be a harlot; and generally ſpeaking in thoſe times and countries, ſuch as kept public houſes were proſtitutes; and there are ſome circumſtances which ſeem to confirm this in the context; and ſo the Greek verſion calls her, and is the character given of her in the New Teſtament: her name was Rahab, of whom the Jews have this tradition [y], that ſhe was ten years of age when Iſrael came out of Egypt; that ſhe played the harlot the forty years they were in the wilderneſs, became the wife of Joſhua, who had daughters by her, from whom came eight prophets, Jeremiah, Hilkiah, Maaſia, Hanameel, Shallum, Baruch, the ſon of Neriah, Ezekiel, the ſon of Buzi, and ſome ſay Huldah the propheteſs; but the truth is, ſhe married Salmon, a prince of the tribe of Judah, Matt. i. 5. ſee the note there: and and lodged there; that is, they went thither in order to lodge.

℣. 2. And it was told the king of Jericho, saying, &c.] Who being alarmed at the near approach of the Israelites, and knowing their claim to the land of Canaan, and their design upon it, employed men to watch and observe what passed in the city, and parts adjacent, and inform him of it; or some persons of themselves, and for their own safety, and the good of their fellow-citizens, gave notice to the king of it: behold, there came men hither to-night of the children of Israel; who were known by their habit and language; or at least being strangers, were suspected to be of that people, the terror of whom had fallen on all the inhabitants, so that every strange man they took for an Israelite; from hence it appears, that the spies came to Jericho at night, that they might not be observed: but with all their precaution they were taken notice of, and their design suspected, namely, to search out the country; which were the proper places to attack first, and where there was the greatest probability of succeeding, as well as to find out the disposition of the inhabitants, whether fearful or fearless of them.

℣. 3. And the king of Jericho sent unto Rahab, &c.] Not merely because she kept a public house, or being a prostitute had often strangers in it, and so conjectured, that the men he had notice of might be there; but he sent upon certain information, that they were seen to go in there, as it follows: saying, bring forth the men that are come to thee; not to commit leudness with her, though this is the sense some Jewish commentators give; but this neither agrees with the character of the men Joshua had chosen for this purpose, nor answers any end of the king to suggest; nor can it be thought that Rahab would so openly and freely own this, as in the next verse: but what is meant by the phrase, is explained in the following clause, which are entered into thine house; in order to lodge there that night: for they be come to search out all the country; so it was suspected, nor was the suspicion groundless.

℣. 4. And the woman took the two men, &c.] Or she had taken them [z] before the messengers came, upon a rumour she understood was gone abroad, that she had got Israelitish spies in her house, and so might expect to be visited and searched by the king's officers, and therefore took this precaution: and hid them; the Hebrew word is singular, him [a]: hence the Jews, who take these two spies to be Caleb and Phinehas, say, that only Caleb was hid, and Phinehas, though he was before them, was not seen, being an angel, Mal. ii. 7. but the sense is, that she hid each of them, and very probably singly and apart, that if one was found, the other might escape, as Ben Gersom observes; and Abarbinel is of opinion, that she hid them twice, now in the middle of her house, one in one place, and the other in another, for the reason before given, and after this hid them in the roof of her house, as afterwards related: and said thus, there came men unto me; that is, into her house, this she owned: but I wist not whence they were; of what country they were, whether Israelites or not; which whether she knew or not, is not certain; it is probable she did, and told an untruth, as she also did in the next verse.

℣. 5. And it came to pass about the time of the shutting of the gate, &c.] Of the city, which was done every night, and at a certain time: when it was dark; the sun set, and night come on: the men went out; out of her house, and out of the city too, as she said, though it was a downright lie, as well as what follows: whither the men went, I wot not; though she knew they were not gone, but were now in her house; she might not scruple telling a lie, being brought up a heathen, and being done with a design to save the lives of persons that belonged to a people, she was persuaded were the people of God, and to whom he had given the land; though her lies are not to be justified; evil is not to be done, that good may come; nor are men to tell lies one to another upon any account; but these sins, with others, the Lord forgave her: pursue after them quickly, and ye shall overtake them; this she encouraged them to do, to get rid of them the sooner, and to remove all suspicion of her having any respect for them, and of being concerned in concealing them.

℣. 6. But she had brought them up to the roof of the house, &c.] Before the messengers came; though Abarbinel thinks it was after they were gone, when she took them from the place of their concealment, and had them to the roof of the house, where she thought they would be safe and secure, should the messengers return, or others come in search of them, who would not, as she imagined, look for them there: and hid them with the stalks of flax; that is, under them, or in flax of wood, or a tree [b]; which may with as much propriety, or more, be called a tree than hyssop, 1 Kings iv. 33. as it is in the Misnah [c]. Moreover, there was a sort of flax which grew in the upper part of Egypt towards Arabia, as Pliny says [d], which they called Xylon, or wood, of which were made lina xylina; though the words may be rightly transposed, as by us, stalks of flax, which are large and strong before the flax is stripped or beaten off of them; the Targum renders it bundles of flax, or handfuls and sheaves of them, as they were when cut down and gathered: which she had laid in order upon the roof; to be dried, as Kimchi observes; and Pliny [e] speaks of flax being bound up in bundles, and hung up and dried in the sun; which was done that it might be the more easily stripped and beaten off; and the roofs of houses in those countries being flat, were very fit for such a purpose; see the note on Deut. xxii. 8. and these being now laid there, were very suitable and convenient to conceal the men under them. This seems to be in favour of Rahab, as being a virtuous and industrious woman; see Prov. xxxi. 13, 19, 24.

℣. 7. And the men pursued after them, &c.] As they thought: the way to Jordan; on the other side of which the people of Israel lay encamped, to which they supposed, according to Rahab's account, these two men directed their course: unto the fords; the fords of Jordan, the passages through it; for in some places, and at some times, it was fordable; which accounts for the way in which these spies could get over Jordan, see Gen. xxxii. 10. it was most reasonable to conclude they would return the same way; and so far the king's messengers went, but farther they did not chuse to go, because it would be to no purpose, and they might expose themselves themſelves to the camp of Iſrael, which lay on the other ſide: and as ſoon as they which purſued after them were gone out, they ſhut the gate; that is, either as ſoon as the king's meſſengers were gone out of Rahab's houſe, either the ſpies, or rather the men of the houſe, Rahab's ſervants, ſhut the door of it to prevent their return, or others coming in; or rather, when they were got out of the city, the watchmen of the city, the porters of the city-gates ſhut them, that if they were not got out of the city, to prevent their eſcape, or however to keep out others from entering that might be on ſome ſuch deſign or worſe.

℣. 8. And before they were laid down, &c.] Under the ſtalks of the flax; or rather, ſince they are ſaid to be hid in them, before they were fallen aſleep, ſo Kimchi and Abarbinel: ſhe came up unto them upon the roof; to acquaint them how things were, and to converſe with them on the following ſubjects.

℣. 9. And ſhe ſaid unto the men, &c.] The two ſpies: I know that the Lord hath given you the land; the land of Canaan, of which ſhe was an inhabitant, and in which they now were; this ſhe knew either by ſome tradition that was among them; or by divine revelation, a ſupernatural impulſe upon her mind; or by obſerving what the Lord had done already, in putting the land of the Amorites into their hands, which were one of the ſeven nations of Canaan; and by this it alſo appears, and more clearly by what follows, that ſhe had knowledge of the Lord God, the God of Iſrael: and that your terror is fallen upon us; which was another token or ſign by which ſhe knew the land would be delivered to them; that they who were a formidable people, and ſtruck terror into others, now were terrified themſelves, at the rumour of Iſrael being come to invade them; this was what the Lord ſaid ſhould be the caſe, ch. xi. 25. and that all the inhabitants of the land faint becauſe of you; or melt [f], like wax before the fire, as Moſes had predicted, Exod. xv. 15.

℣. 10. For we have heard how the Lord dried up the waters of the Red-ſea for you, when ye came out of Egypt, &c.] To make a paſſage for them through it, to walk in as on dry land; this they had heard of and remembered, though it was forty years ago: and what you did unto the kings of the Amorites that were on the other ſide Jordan; which were things more recent, done but a few months ago: Sihon and Og whom ye deſtroyed; the hiſtory of which ſee in Numb. xxi. 21—35. who were deſtroyed by them under Moſes and Joſhua their commanders; and Hercules who is thought to be the ſame with Joſhua is by Lucian [g] called Ogmius, from ſlaying Og as is ſuppoſed [h].

℣. 11. And as ſoon as we had heard theſe things our hearts did melt, &c.] Particularly what were done to the two kings of the Amorites, who, and their people were utterly deſtroyed, their goods made a prey of, and their countries ſeized upon and poſſeſſed: neither did there remain any more courage in any man, becauſe of you; they looked dejected in their countenances, had no heart to go about any buſineſs, trembled at the ſhaking of a leaf, or at the leaſt rumour and report made that the Iſraelites were coming on and were at hand; they had no ſpirit to prepare to go out and meet them, or to defend themſelves: for the Lord your God, he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath; the maker and poſſeſſor of both; is the governor of the whole univerſe, and does what he pleaſes in it; and diſpoſes of all countries, perſons, and things, as he thinks fit: this is a proof of her knowledge of the true God, and faith in him, and ſhews her to be a believer, and hence ſhe is reckoned in the catalogue of believers, Heb. xi. 31. and her faith is proved to be of the right kind by the works ſhe did, Jam. ii. 25.

℣. 12. Now therefore, I pray you, ſwear unto me by the Lord, &c.] Which being a religious action, and done by men that feared the Lord, ſhe knew it would be binding upon them: the Targum is, "ſwear to me by the Word of the Lord:" ſince I have ſhewed you kindneſs; by receiving them with peace into her houſe, and hiding them when enquired for and demanded of her; in doing which ſhe riſqued her own life, had this treachery to her country, as it would have been deemed, been diſcovered: that you will alſo ſhew kindneſs unto my father's houſe; ſhe mentions not herſelf and houſhold, for if this was granted that would be implied and included; and this ſhe preſſes for by the law of retaliation and friendſhip, for ſince ſhe had ſhewn kindneſs to them, it was but reaſonable it ſhould be returned: and give me a true token; that ſhe and her father's houſe would be ſaved by them when the city ſhould be taken and the inhabitants deſtroyed; a token that would not deceive her, on which ſhe might depend, and would be firm and ſure.

℣. 13. And that ye will ſave alive my father, and my mother, and my brethren, and my ſiſters, &c.] She makes no mention of any huſband or children ſhe had, as harlots ſeldom have, and which ſeems to confirm her character as ſuch; and ſo Abarbinel obſerves, that her father's houſe is only mentioned to tell us that ſhe had no huſband, for ſhe was an harlot and had no children, and puts her father and mother in the room of an huſband, and her brethren and ſiſters in the room of children: and all that they have; not their ſubſtance only, but their children more eſpecially, the children of her brethren and ſiſters: and deliver our lives from death; here ſhe manifeſtly includes herſelf, and requeſts the ſaving of her life, and the lives of all her relations, when ſhe knew the inhabitants of the city would be all put to death upon the taking of it: thus ſhe provided for the ſafety of her family, as Noah in another caſe and manner did, Heb. xi. 7. and indeed ſeemed more concerned for them than for herſelf; and thus ſouls ſenſible of their own eſtate and condition, by nature and grace, are very ſolicitous for the ſalvation of their relations and friends, Rom. ix. 2.

℣. 14. And the men anſwered her, &c.] The two ſpies: our life for yours; or our ſouls in your ſtead to die [i]; that is, we engage for the ſecurity of your lives, ſhould they be in danger; we promiſe to die in your room and ſtead rather than you ſhould: this they ſaid not as though their lives would be required of them for them, but to aſſure her of the ſafety of her and her father's houſe, on the following condition: if ye utter not this our buſineſs; not their buſineſs in ſearching the land, for the diſcovery of that would be of little avail after they were gone; for it was known already that there were perſons come to ſearch the land; but this our word [k], what they were going to ſay to her and bid her do, as a ſign of ſafety to her and hers; which, if ſhe diſcovered, others would give out out the ſame ſign, and then they could not promiſe her ſafety; or if ſhe did not take care to bring in her father, mother, brethren and ſiſters, and theirs into her houſe, they could not engage to protect them: and it ſhall be when the Lord hath given us the land; not the whole land, but Jericho and the land about it, that when that part of it ſhould be delivered into their hands: we will deal kindly and truly with thee; kindly, by ſparing her and her father's houſe; truly, by faithfully performing the promiſe and oath they made to her.

℣. 15. Then ſhe let them down by a cord through the window, &c.] Which muſt be large, and the cord ſtrong, as well as ſhe herſelf a maſculine woman, to let down two men by it, unleſs ſhe employed any of her ſervants in the affair; though this being ſo great a ſecrecy, it is probable ſhe truſted none of her domeſtics with it as little as poſſible: in like manner the apoſtle Paul was let down by the wall of Damaſcus in a baſket, Acts ix. 25. Jarchi ſuppoſes it was the ſame cord and window, by means of and in at which her gallants uſed to come and go: for her houſe was upon the town-wall; in a ſuitable and convenient place to receive her gueſts, and gallants: and it is obſerved, that harlots have had their houſes on or under walls: Martial ſpeaks of harlots whom he calls [l] Summænianæ, whores that plied under the walls and in the ſuburbs of cities: and ſhe dwelt upon the wall; that part of the houſe in which ſhe particularly dwelt was built on or over the wall, and the reſt towards the city was for the entertainment of perſons that reſorted to her houſe.

℣. 16. And ſhe ſaid unto them, get ye unto the mountain, &c.] Which was near to the city, and is ſuppoſed to be the ſame which is now called Quarantania: Dr. Shaw, a late traveller in thoſe parts, ſays [m], from the mountain Quarantania, the very ſame perhaps where the two ſpies concealed themſelves, Joſh. ii. 16. we have a diſtinct view of the land of the Amorites, of Gilead, and of Baſhan, the inheritance of the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and of the half tribe of Manaſſeh—to it joins the mountain of Adummim, and through it the road is cut that leads from Jeruſalem to Jericho, where probably it was from the very nature of the ſituation that the man fell among thieves, Luke x. 30. which very probably is the ſame mountain which Joſephus [n] ſays, hung over the city, and was a very barren one; though the ſingular may be put for the plural, ſince, as Strabo ſays [o], it was ſurrounded with mountains: leſt the purſuers meet you; on their return from the fords of Jordan, being diſappointed: and hide yourſelves there three days; ſome of the Jewiſh Rabbins, as Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve, that ſhe had this by the revelation of the holy Ghoſt, that the purſuers would return at the end of three days; but the latter more truly remarks, that this was ſaid by conjecture; that Jericho being, as he ſays, one day from Jordan, and a little more, by going, returning, and ſearching for the ſpies, they would be three days in doing it: until the purſuers be returned; into the city; for until they were they could not be in ſafety, but muſt be in danger of being met by them and taken up; and afterward may ye go your way; to Jordan, and ſo to the camp of Iſrael, and that without fear.

℣. 17. And the men ſaid unto her, &c.] Some think that this diſcourſe which paſſed between the ſpies and her, was whilſt in the houſe before ſhe let them down, or otherwiſe they would have been in danger of being over-heard, and ſo the whole affair diſcovered; but as it was on the other ſide of the houſe, and under the wall of the city, and without it, they might with the greater ſafety converſe together: we will be blameleſs of this thine oath which thou haſt made us ſwear; that is, they would moſt faithfully and punctually keep it, it ſhould be ſacred to them, and ſhe ſhould have no occaſion to lay any blame upon them in the leaſt.

℣. 18. Behold, when we come into the land, &c.] The land of Canaan, and into this city, into that part of it, as the Septuagint, where her houſe was, meaning not themſelves only, but the people of Iſrael they belonged to: thou ſhalt bind this line of ſcarlet thread in the window which thou didſt let us down by; the word by refers either to the ſcarlet thread they were let down by, ſaid to be a cord, ℣. 15. and therefore muſt be a line twiſted with various ſcarlet threads, as Kimchi, who obſerves, that according to the Targum, it was the border of a red garment; or to the window through which they were let down, as the Septuagint verſion; it may refer to both, and the ſenſe be, that the ſame twiſted cord of ſcarlet thread they were let down by, ſhould be bound to the ſame window they were let down through; only this objection there is to the ſame window, that it was not towards the city, and ſo not to be ſeen when they came into it, but looked over the wall without the city: now as Rahab was an inſtance of the ſalvation of ſinners by the grace of God, for ſhe was a ſinner by birth, by practice, and a notorious one; ſhe was an inſtance of diſtinguiſhing grace, of free and efficacious grace, a ſingular inſtance of it; and became a true penitent, a real believer, was a juſtified perſon, and ſaved: ſo the ſcarlet thread was an emblem of the blood of Chriſt, by which ſalvation is; redemption and all the bleſſings of grace are through it; juſtification, remiſſion of ſin, reconciliation and atonement, and ſafety and protection from avenging juſtice and wrath to come, are only by it: likewiſe the ſpies who are alſo called meſſengers, Jam. ii. 25. may repreſent the miniſters of the goſpel, who are the meſſengers of Chriſt, and the churches, are ſent out by him the antitypical Joſhua, men of wiſdom, courage, and valour, and are ſent as ſpies to bring to light men and things, who direct to the way of ſalvation and give the ſame token of it, Mar. xvi. 16. and thou ſhalt bring thy father, and thy mother, and thy brethren, and all thy father's houſhold home unto thee; into her houſe, where the ſcarlet thread was bound, and where only they would be ſafe, as the Iſraelites were in the houſes where the blood of the paſchal lamb was ſprinkled, Exod. xii. 23. and ſo they are ſafe, and they only who are under the blood of ſprinkling, and partake of the virtue of it.

℣. 19. And it ſhall be, that whoſoever ſhall go out of the door of thy houſe into the ſtreet, &c.] After they have been taken in, and when the Iſraelites were come into the city: his blood ſhall be upon his head, and we will be guiltleſs; if he is killed by any perſon, his death will be owing to himſelf and no blame to be laid on us; nor ſhall we reckon ourſelves guilty of the breach of the oath taken: and whoſoever ſhall be with thee in the houſe, his blood ſhall be on our head, if any hand be upon him; if any one within doors is killed by an an Iſraelite entering in, the guilt of the blood ſhall lie upon us, and we will be anſwerable, according to the tenor of the oath, our life for yours, ℣. 14.

℣. 20. And if thou utter this our buſineſs, &c.] So that others would either hang out ſcarlet threads or get into her houſe for ſhelter, ſee the note on ℣. 14. then we will be quit of thine oath which thou haſt made us to ſwear; be under no obligation to make it good, by ſaving her and her father's houſe.

℣. 21. And ſhe ſaid, according to your words, ſo be it, &c.] She agreed, that if the condition required were not performed, they would be quit of their oath, but if they were, ſhe expected it would be fulfilled: and ſhe ſent them away; and they departed; took their leave of each other: and ſhe bound the ſcarlet line in the window; immediately, as Abarbinel thinks, and in the ſight of the ſpies, that they might ſee that ſhe conformed to their direction, and that they might take notice where ſhe faſtened it; and that ſhe herſelf might, at the ſight of it, be put in mind of the deſign of it, and be an encouragement to her faith as to the ſafety of her and her father's houſe; and it being a thing ſo trifling and inſignificant in itſelf, would not be taken notice of by the inhabitants, or be thought to be done with any deſign; though, according to the inſtruction of the ſpies, it ſeems as if it was to be done when they came into the land, and into the city, and which ſeems moſt likely that it was then done.

℣. 22. And they went, and came unto the mountain, &c.] Rahab had directed them to, the mountain Quarantania, ſee the note on ℣. 16. and abode there three days; being, no doubt, ſupplied with food by Rahab; and it might not be three wholly, but one whole day and part of the other two: until the purſuers were returned; to the city of Jericho, as might reaſonably be ſuppoſed: and the purſuers ſought them throughout all the way; from Jericho to the fords of Jordan, ſearching every hedge, field, and village as they went and returned: but found them not; Rahab having hid them in her houſe, and then ſent them to the mountain, there to remain till the return of the purſuers.

℣. 23. So the two men returned, and deſcended from the mountain, &c.] Or came down from it again, by which, it ſeems, they went to the top of it, and hid themſelves in ſome cave there: this deſcent, Kimchi ſays, was, "on the third day of "their being ſent, which was the ſecond day of "the three days Joſhua made mention of when he "ſaid, within three days;" ſee the note on ch. i. 11. and paſſed over; that is, the river Jordan, at the fords of it: and came to Joſhua the ſon of Nun; at Shittim, where he ſtill continued, and from whence he ſent them, ℣. 1. and told him all things that befel them; what houſe they went into when come to Jericho, what reception they met with, the report of them to the king of Jericho, how meſſengers were ſent by him to demand them, and by what means they were preſerved and made their eſcape.

℣. 24. And they ſaid unto Joſhua, &c.] Made a report of what they had got knowledge of, which anſwered the end of their miſſion: truly the Lord hath delivered into our hands all the land; which they concluded by the terror the inhabitants of it were in, and ſo in no condition to make reſiſtance and defend themſelves; and they not only judged of the whole land by the caſe of the inhabitants of Jericho, but were aſſured by Rahab that all the inhabitants of the land were in the ſame plight and condition, ℣. 9. for even the inhabitants of the country do faint becauſe of us; this was the temper and diſpoſition they appeared in, and ſeems to be what Joſhua was chiefly deſirous of knowing; ſince nothing elſe is told by the ſpies nor enquired of by him, but immediately upon this report began his march towards Canaan, as in the next chapter is related.

CHAP. III.

JOSHUA removed from Shittim to Jordan, where he ſtaid three days, ℣. 1, 2. the people are directed to move when they ſaw the ark bore by the prieſts, and what diſtance they ſhould keep from it, ℣. 3, 4. are bid to ſanctify themſelves againſt the morrow, when wonders would be wrought, ℣. 5. and the prieſts are ordered to take up the ark, ℣. 6. Joſhua is encouraged by the Lord, and inſtructed to command the prieſts when they come to Jordan to ſtand ſtill in it, ℣. 7, 8. and he declares to all the people, as a token that God would drive the Canaanites from before them, that as ſoon as the feet of the prieſts bearing the ark, ſhould reſt in the waters of Jordan, they ſhould be parted, and make way for them to paſs through, ℣. 9—13. which accordingly came to paſs, ſo that all the Iſraelites paſſed over on dry ground, ℣. 14—17.

℣. 1. And Joſhua roſe early in the morning, &c.] The morning after the ſpies had returned and made their report; which, as Kimchi rightly obſerves, was the 9th of Niſan; for on the morrow, which was the 10th, the people paſſed over Jordan, ſee ℣. 5. and iv. 19. Moſes, according to the Jewiſh writers, died on the 7th of Adar or February; the 30 days of his mourning ended the 7th of Niſan or March; two days before they were ended the ſpies were ſent, who returned on the eighth day of the month; and the morning following Joſhua roſe betimes, which ſhews his readineſs and alacrity to proceed in the expedition he was directed and encouraged to: and they removed from Shittim and came to Jordan; from Shittim in the plains of Moab, to the river Jordan: and he and all the children of Iſrael; he as their general, and they an army of 600,000 fighting men under him, beſides women and children, and others that came along with them: and lodged there before they paſſed over; lay there encamped a night before they paſſed over the river Jordan.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs after three days, &c.] At the end of the three days they were bid to prepare food for their expedition, and to go over Jordan, ch. i. 11. that the officers went through the hoſt; the camp of Iſrael; very probably the ſame as in ch. i. 10. this was, no doubt, by the order of Joſhua, and who was directed to it by the Lord.

℣. 3. And they commanded the people, &c.] In the name of Joſhua, by whom they were ſent: ſaying, when ye ſee the ark of the covenant of the Lord

Lord your God, and the prieſts the Levites bearing it; the Targum reads, the prieſts and Levites; ſo the Septuagint: it was the buſineſs of the Levites, particularly the Kohathites, to bear the ark in journeying, but here the prieſts, who alſo were Levites, were to carry it: it is remarked in the Talmud [p], that there are three places in which the prieſts are ſaid to bear the ark; here, and when they ſurrounded Jericho, ch. vi. 6. and when it was returned to its place in the times of David, 2 Sam. xv. 29. and Kimchi and Abarbinel obſerve a fourth, when it was brought into Solomon's temple, 1 Kings viii. 6. then ye ſhall remove from your place and go after it; their uſual ſignal for marching was the cloud, when that was taken up, Numb. ix. 17, &c. but now the ark, the clouds of glory having removed at the death of Moſes, and were ſeen no more, as Abarbinel and other Jewiſh writers obſerve; and therefore it was proper the Iſraelites ſhould be made acquainted with this ſignal; for, as Jarchi ſays, this journey was different from all the journeys, (though that of the three days journey from Sinai muſt be excepted, Numb. x. 33.) for all the time Moſes was in being, the pillar of cloud marched firſt and ſhewed them the way, and the ark moved after two of the ſtandards (Judah and Reuben) and now the ark went firſt: the cloud was a figure of the dark and cloudy diſpenſation of the law, particularly the ceremonial law, the ſhadow of good things to come, and which continued only during the former ſtate, and diſcontinued to be of any uſe when the Moſaic diſpenſation ceaſed, and when Joſhua or Jeſus was come: the ark was a type of Chriſt, the forerunner for us entered, and whom we are to follow whitherſoever he goes or directs to, in the exerciſe of grace and performance of duty; and the ark being carried now by different perſons, may denote that Chriſt was held forth in a weaker manner under the legal diſpenſation, and by his apoſtles and miniſters under the goſpel-diſpenſation in a clearer and ſtronger manner, and who are to be followed no further or longer than as they bear the ark or direct to Chriſt.

℣. 4. Yet there ſhall be a ſpace between you and it, &c.] The ark; the Keri or marginal reading is, between you and them; the prieſts that bear it: hence ſprung a fiction among the Jews, that there were two arks, the ark of the Shekinah or divine majeſty, and the ark of Joſeph, in which his bones were put, which went together [q]; which Jarchi, Kimchi, and Abarbinel take notice of, but has no foundation in the text: about 2,000 cubits by meaſure; by a certain well-known meaſure, that of a common cubit; for the Caph we render about is a note of truth, reality, and certainty, and deſigns the exact preciſe meaſure here given: this difference was to be obſerved, partly in reverence to the ark, the ſymbol of the divine preſence; Chriſt is to be reverenced by his people, and ſo his word and ordinances; and there is a reverence and reſpect due to his miniſters and prieſts that bear the ark; as alſo that they might the better ſee the ark and go after it, as Ben Gerſom; or the way in which they ſhould go, as is ſuggeſted in the following clauſe; and likewiſe have the better view of the greatneſs of the miracle, as Abarbinel; the dividing of the waters of Jordan as ſoon as the ark came to it, and while it was in it: the Jews conclude from hence, that this was the meaſure of ground they may go on a ſabbath-day and no farther, called a ſabbath-day's journey, Acts i. 12. come not near unto it, that ye may know the way by which ye muſt go; over Jordan into Canaan's land; for being at ſome diſtance from them they could better diſcern that and the way he directed them to walk in: Chriſt the antitype of the ark is the way to the heavenly Canaan, and his miniſters point out the right way of ſalvation by him, in the miniſtration of the word, by attending to which the way is ſeen and known, in which men muſt go: for ye have not paſſed this way heretofore; a path indeed untrodden by any; neither they nor any other ever went into Canaan the way they were now going, through the river Jordan as on dry land: the way to heaven by Chriſt is only revealed in the goſpel, and only trodden by believers in him, and eſpecially the way to glory through Jordan's river; or death is an untrodden path, which, though the way of all fleſh is a trackleſs path, and gone through but once, and thoſe who paſs it have never before gone that way.

℣. 5. And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, &c.] On the 3d day; and the 30th day of the mourning for Moſes, Jarchi ſays, was the firſt of the three days, and that being the 7th day of the month, this muſt be the 9th, as it is moſt clear the morrow was the 10th: ſanctify yourſelves; in a ceremonial ſenſe, by waſhing their bodies and their clothes, and abſtaining from their wives; and in a moral ſenſe, by acts of religion and devotion, by prayer and meditation, and the exerciſe of repentance and good works: it may denote that ſanctification is neceſſary to our paſſage over Jordan, or through death to the heavenly Canaan, for without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord: for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you; in their ſight and preſence, and for them, by dividing the waters of Jordan, that they might paſs through it as on dry land; this, as Kimchi ſays, was the tenth of Niſan, as is plain from ch. iv. 19.

℣. 6. And Joſhua ſpoke unto the prieſts, &c.] On the morrow, that is, on the tenth day of the month, the day on which they went over Jordan: take up the ark of the covenant; in which the law was put, which was the covenant between God and the people, from whence the ark had this name; and in which it was typical of Chriſt in whom both the law the covenant of works was fulfilled, and with whom the covenant of grace was made; who is the mediator, ſurety and meſſenger of it, and in whom all the bleſſings and promiſes of it are, and with whom it is, and will be kept for evermore: the ark, the prieſts were ordered to take up and bear on their ſhoulders; for no other way might they carry it; theſe typified the miniſters of Chriſt who bear his name, his goſpel in the world, ſee Acts ix. 15. and paſs over before the people; over the river Jordan, to direct them in the way through it, and encourage them to follow them: and they took up the ark of the covenant and went before the people; from the place where they had lodged the night before to the brink of the river.

℣. 7. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, &c.] Out of the tabernacle: this day will I begin to magnify thee in the ſight of all Iſrael; by working the miracle afterwards related; dividing the waters, which was done on this day, and was but the beginning of wonders; for other great and marvellous things were done for him and by him, by which it appeared he was high in the favour of God, greatly greatly eſteemed and honoured by him, and ſo would be great and honourable in the account of the people: that they may know that as I was with Moſes, ſo I will be with thee; by dividing the waters of Jordan for him, as he had divided the waters of the Red-ſea for Moſes; which, as it was a token of his powerful preſence with him, this would be a like token of it with Joſhua. The Targum is, "as my Word was for the help of Moſes, ſo ſhall my Word be for thy help."

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt command the prieſts that bear the ark of the Lord, &c.] Who were ſubject to Joſhua, the chief governor of the nation, and general of the army, as well as the common people; and whoſe commands they were to obey, and eſpecially when they appeared to be from the Lord: ſaying, when ye come to the brink of the water of Jordan; not of the bank of it, but of the water, which had now overflowed its bank; that is, the brink or extremity of it, which was neareſt to them, and to which they firſt came; though it is a notion of ſome Jewiſh commentators[t], and which ſome Chriſtian interpreters [u] have given into, and both of conſiderable note, that this was the further extremity, or the brink on the other ſide of the river; but according to this notion, they muſt paſs the river to the other ſide before the waters were divided, which is not credible; and muſt return again into the midſt of the river, which is not probable; and beſides, it is expreſsly ſaid, that as ſoon as their feet dipped in the brim, or extremity of the water, the waters parted, which muſt be the firſt brim or extremity they came at, ℣. 15. ye ſhall ſtand ſtill in Jordan; after the waters were parted; upon their coming to and touching the brink of them, they proceeded, and went into the middle of the river, where they were ordered to ſtop and ſtand ſtill.

℣. 9. And Joſhua ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, come hither, &c.] Very probably to the door of the tabernacle: and hear the words of the Lord your God; which he was about to deliver to them as from him, and in his name.

℣. 10. And Joſhua ſaid, &c.] To the people as follows: hereby ye ſhall know that the living God is among you; who has life in and of himſelf, and is the author of life to all his creatures; and is ſo called in oppoſition to the lifeleſs idols of the Gentiles: and it may be, as Abarbinel obſerves, to ſuggeſt to them, that though Moſes was dead, the Lord lived, and lives for evermore; and by the following miracle of dividing the waters of Jordan, it would be a plain caſe that the Lord was yet among them, to protect and defend them, deliver and ſave them: and that he will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites and the Hittites, and the Hivites and the Perizzites, and the Girgaſhites, and the Amorites, and the Jebuſites; all the ſeven nations are mentioned, even the Girgaſhites, who are ſometimes omitted, to aſſure them of the expulſion of them all, to make way for their entire poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, as had been promiſed them.

℣. 11. Behold the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth, &c.] Some both Jewiſh and Chriſtian interpreters, becauſe there is a diſtinguiſhing accent on the word covenant, read the words the ark of the covenant, even the Lord of all the earth; ſo in ſome copies of our Engliſh bible, as if the ark was called the Lord of all the earth, becauſe of his preſence and dwelling there; but, as Kimchi obſerves, either the word ark is wanting, or the word covenant, and may be ſupplied either thus, "the ark of the covenant, the ark (I ſay) of the Lord of all the earth;" or thus, "the ark of the covenant, which is the covenant of the Lord of all the earth:" the true meaning is what Abarbinel gives, "the ark of the covenant of the Lord, who is the Lord of the whole earth;" the maker and poſſeſſor of the whole earth, the whole terraqueous globe; and can do what he pleaſes in the earth, or in the water; and can controul the powers of nature, and do what is beyond them, things miraculous and aſtoniſhing: paſſeth before you into Jordan; not only unto it, but into it, into the river itſelf; and by the power of him whoſe preſence was with it, the waters of Jordan were to be divided, to give them a paſſage through it as on dry land, and ſo it came to paſs.

℣. 12. Now therefore take ye twelve men, &c.] For what end and purpoſe is not mentioned. Abarbinel is of opinion, that they were choſen and appointed, that every man might pitch upon and take a place for his tribe to encamp in, when they came on the other ſide Jordan: whether this was Joſhua's view or no is not certain; however, the uſe he made of theſe, thus provided by divine direction, is related ch. iv. 2, 3, 4. and theſe were to be taken out of the tribes of Iſrael, out of every tribe a man; Levi not reckoned, having no part in the land; and ſo we find that tribe left out in other accounts, when there was a choice of twelve men out of the ſeveral tribes, Numb. xiii. 4. and xxxiv. 19.

℣. 13. And it ſhall come to paſs, as ſoon as the ſoles of the feet of the prieſts that bear the ark of the Lord, &c.] Which they were bid to take up and carry, ℣. 6. the Lord of all the earth; this ſhews that not the ark, but the Lord, is called the Lord of all the earth, ℣. 11. ſee the note there: ſhall reſt in the waters of Jordan; the meaning is, as ſoon as their feet ſhould touch them, or they ſhould ſet their feet in them, when they came to the brink of them: that the waters of Jordan ſhall be cut off from the waters that come down from above; from above the place where the prieſts came, and the children of Iſrael after paſſed over: and they ſhall ſtand upon an heap; or one heap; ſtop and riſe up high, as if piled up one upon another, and ſtand unmoved. This had been made known to Joſhua by divine revelation, and is what he hints at, ℣. 5. and now plainly ſpeaks out, and foretels before it came to paſs; and which muſt ſerve to magnify Joſhua, as in ℣. 7. and give him great credit and honour among the people.

℣. 14. And it came to paſs when the people removed from their tents to paſs over Jordan, &c.] Which they had pitched very near it, upon their removal from Shittim, and in which they had lodged the night paſt: and the prieſts bearing the ark of the covenant before the people; at the diſtance of two thouſand cubits.

℣. 15. And as they that bare the ark were come unto Jordan, &c.] Not to the bank, which was overflowed, but to the extremity of the water overflowing: and the feet of the prieſts that bare the ark were dipped in the brim of the water; which was doubtleſs the firſt they came to, and not the brim or extremity of it on the other ſide: for Jordan overfloweth all its banks all the time of harveſt; that is, of barley-harveſt, as appears from the time of year; for it was in the firſt month, the month Niſan, ſan, or Abib, which anſwers to part of March and April, it uſed to overflow, 1 Chron. xii. 15. and it was now the tenth day of that month, ch. iv. 19. on the ſixteenth of which, at the time of the paſſover, the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits of barley-harveſt was offered up, Lev. xxiii. 10, 11. the inundation continued all the time of harveſt; and ſo Ariſteas [w] teſtifies, that "the river being filled, it overflows as the Nile in the time of harveſt, and waters much of the country;" it overflows its banks both on the one ſide and on the other, the eaſtern and weſtern ſhores. This overflow is ſuppoſed to be occaſioned either by the latter rains, which fell about this time; or rather by the ſnow on mount Lebanon melting at this time of the year, when the ſun has great ſtrength in thoſe parts, and which poured down in great quantities into this river, that took its riſe from thence. Joſephus [x] ſpeaks of mount Lebanon, and of the fountains of Jordan together; and ſays they have their riſe from the mountain; and of the ſnow of Lebanon ſee Jer. xviii. 14. This river continued to overflow at this ſeaſon in the times of David, 1 Chron. xii. 15. and in the times of Ariſteas, who lived in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, as before obſerved; and ſome late travellers [y] obſerve, "it generally happens in the month Niſan; that is, from the middle of March to the middle of April, the time of the firſt harveſt;" but Mr. Maundrell [z], who was upon the ſpot in 1697, and at the proper time of its overflowing, perceived nothing of it. He ſays, "there is a ſmall deſcent, which you may fitly call the firſt and outermoſt bank of Jordan, as far as which it may be ſuppoſed the river does, or at leaſt did anciently overflow; but at preſent (whether it be becauſe the river has by its rapidity of current worn its channel deeper than it was formerly, or whether becauſe its waters are diverted ſome other way) it ſeems to have forgot its ancient greatneſs; for we could diſcern no ſign or probability of ſuch overflowings when we were there, which was the 30th of March, being the proper time for theſe inundations; nay, ſo far was the river from overflowing, that it ran at leaſt two yards below the brink of the channel." However, at this time of the paſſage of the children of Iſrael through it, it was overflowing; which made the miracle the greater.

℣. 16. That the waters which came down from above, &c.] Above where the prieſts feet reſted, and which came down from mount Lebanon, and the fountains of Jordan northward: ſtood and roſe up upon an heap; they ſtopped their current, and as the water came down they roſe up on high, and made one vaſt heap of waters: very far from the city of Adam, that is, beſide Zaretan; the cetib, or textual reading is, in Adam the city; we follow the marginal reading, from Adam: both readings, as is uſually, if not always the caſe, are to be received; and the meaning is, that this heap of waters, tho' the river was at a conſiderable diſtance from Adam; yet through the overflow of it, it reached to, and was in Adam; this city was in Perea, on the other ſide Jordan, that ſide on which the Iſraelites were before their paſſage; and Zaretan, which is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Zartanah, and Zarthan, 1 Kings iv. 12. and vii. 46. was on this ſide, in the tribe of Manaſſeh; and the ſenſe is, not that Adam was on the ſide of Zaretan, or near it, for it was on the other ſide of the river; and according to the Talmudiſts [a] was twelve miles from it; but the conſtruction is with the word heap, which heap was on the ſide of Zaretan; it was there where the waters were heaped up; it ſeems as if they reached on the one ſide to Adam, and on the other ſide to Zaretan: and thoſe that came down towards the ſea of the plain, even the ſalt ſea, failed, and were cut off; thoſe waters which were below where the prieſts feet reſted, ran down into the lake Aſphaltites, where Sodom and Gomorrah formerly ſtood, the ſea of the plain, or vale of Siddim, Gen. xiv. 3. ſometimes called the dead ſea, and here the ſalt ſea, its water being exceeding ſalt; ſo the above-mentioned traveller [b] teſtifies on his own knowledge; "the water of the lake (the lake Aſphaltites, or dead ſea, ſays he) was very limpid, and ſalt to the higheſt degree; and not only ſalt, but alſo extreme bitter and nauſeous;" ſo that theſe waters running down thither, and thoſe above ſtopped, made a dry channel for 16 or 18 miles: and the people paſſed over right againſt Jericho; which was the city Joſhua had in view to attack firſt, and had ſent ſpies thither to get intelligence of it, and the diſpoſition of the people in it; ſee the note on ch. ii. 1.

℣. 17. And the prieſts that bare the ark of the Lord ſtood firm on dry ground in the midſt of Jordan, &c.] Which for its breadth the above-mentioned traveller ſays [c] might be about 20 yards over, and its depth exceeded his height; but Dr. Shaw [d], a later traveller ſtill, ſays, "the river Jordan is by far the moſt conſiderable river, excepting the Nile, either of the coaſt of Syria, or of Barbary. I computed it to be about thirty yards broad, but the depth I could not meaſure, except at the brink, where I found it to be three yards." Now in the midſt of this river the prieſts bearing the ark ſtood firm on dry ground, the waters above being ſtopt, and thoſe below cut off. This perhaps might give riſe to the fables among the Heathens of the river Scamander being ſwelled for the deſtruction of Achilles, and dried up by Vulcan, of which Homer [e] makes mention; and of the river Inachus, dried up by Neptune, as the Grecians fable; however, if Heathens can credit theſe accounts, ſurely we Chriſtians ought to believe this, atteſted by divine revelation. And this may denote the preſence of Chriſt with his people in afflictions, who will not ſuffer thoſe waters to overflow them; and in death itſelf, when the ſwellings of Jordan ſhall not come near them to diſtreſs them; and when the covenant of grace will appear firm and ſure, and be their great ſupport; and when alſo the feet of the miniſters of Chriſt ſtand firm, and their faith fails not; which is of great uſe, and very encouraging to the ſpiritual Iſrael of God: and all the Iſraelites paſſed over on dry ground; the waters being divided to a ſpace large enough for ſuch a body of people to paſs over, and which continued until all the people were clean paſſed over Jordan; perfectly and compleatly, not one being left behind, or loſt in the paſſage through it; in the midſt of which the prieſts ſtood until all were paſſed over. So the ſpiritual Iſrael of God muſt all go over Jordan's river, or muſt all go through the valley of the ſhadow of death; and they'll all go over ſafe to Canaan's land, to the heavenly glory; their ſouls go immediately to heaven at death, and their bodies will be raiſed at the laſt day, and be re-united to them, and partake of happineſs happineſs with them; nor will any one of them be loſt; they all clean paſs over, and arrive ſafe; for they are the choſen of God, the care and charge of Chriſt, the purchaſe of his blood, partake of his grace, and have the earneſt of his Spirit.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter relates an order, that 12 men ſhould take 12 ſtones out of the midſt of Jordan, and carry them to the firſt place they lodged at as a memorial of their paſſage over it, ℣. 1—8. and how Joſhua ſet up twelve other ſtones in the river itſelf, ℣. 9. and how many of the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manaſſeh, went before the Iſraelites when they paſſed over, ℣. 10—14. which being done, the prieſts were ordered to come out of Jordan, when the waters returned to their place, ℣. 15—18. The time when this miracle was wrought is obſerved ℣. 19. and an account is given of Joſhua's pitching the twelve ſtones taken out of Jordan in Gilgal, and the uſe they were to be of in future time, ℣. 20—24.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when all the people were clean paſſed over Jordan, &c.] As related, ch. iii. 17. that the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Take you twelve men out of the people, &c.] Joſhua had before this ordered twelve men to be taken from among them, which ſeems to have been done of himſelf; and now he has a direction from God for it, and what to employ them in: out of every tribe a man; ſo that what they did was in the name of the ſeveral tribes, and as repreſenting them.

℣. 3. And command you them, ſaying, &c.] As follows: take you hence out of the midſt of Jordan; ſo that they were obliged to go back into the midſt of Jordan, having already paſſed over it, as appears from ℣. 1. out of the place where the prieſts feet ſtood firm; where being ſtones they choſe to ſtand upon them, and which were a firm ſtanding for them; and which ſecured them from the ſlime and mud at the bottom of the river the waters left behind; though it is not abſolutely neceſſary to underſtand it that they were to take, and did take, the ſtones from under their feet, but thoſe that lay about the place where they ſtood: twelve ſtones; each man a ſtone; and according to the Samaritan chronicle [f], every man inſcribed his name on the ſtone: and ye ſhall carry them over with you; from the place they took them up, to the place they ſhould next ſtop at: and leave them in the lodging place where you ſhall lodge this night; which was in the place afterwards called Gilgal, ℣. 19, 20.

℣. 4. Then Joſhua called the twelve men whom he had prepared of the children of Iſrael, &c.] It may be for ſome other purpoſe, ch. iii. 12. but this was the deſtination of them eventually, and as by divine direction: out of every tribe a man; as he had before ordered, and was now directed to.

℣. 5. And Joſhua ſaid unto them, &c.] The twelve men: paſs ye over before the ark of the Lord your God into the midſt of Jordan; that is, they were to go back to Jordan again, which they had paſſed over, and go into the midſt of it, where were the prieſts bearing the ark; for it is not to be imagined, that the ark went along with them, or followed them, they going before it; but they went where that was, juſt before it, from whence they were to take the ſtones, as next directed: and take you up every man of you a ſtone upon his ſhoulder; by which it appears they were large ſtones they were to take, not what they could carry in their hands, but what they were obliged to take upon their ſhoulders: according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Iſrael; who had that day paſſed over Jordan, of which theſe ſtones were to be a memorial.

℣. 6. That this may be a ſign among you, &c.] A commemorative one: that when your children aſk their fathers in time to come; or to-morrow [g]; and ſo in all time, or any time hereafter: ſaying, what mean you by theſe ſtones? what is the reaſon of ſetting them up, and in this place, and being juſt of ſuch a number?

℣. 7. Then ye ſhall anſwer them, &c.] By informing them of the deſign and uſe of them: That the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the Lord when it paſſed over Jordan; the waters below from thoſe that were above, which ſtood up on an heap; ſo that they were divided and ſeparated from each other, and made dry land for a paſſage of the children of Iſrael; and this was done before, and in the preſence of the ark of the covenant, to ſhew that it was owing to the power of God, of whoſe preſence the ark was a ſymbol: the waters of Jordan were cut off; which is repeated for the confirmation of it, and that it might be taken notice of as a very marvellous event, and to be aſcribed to the divine omnipotence and goodneſs: and theſe ſtones ſhall be for a memorial unto the children of Iſrael for ever; which whenever ſeen and obſerved by them, would put them in mind of this wonderful appearance of God for them; and Jerom [h] ſpeaks of them as if ſeen by Paula in his time, whoſe life and travels in thoſe parts are written by him.

℣. 8. And the children of Iſrael did ſo as Joſhua commanded, &c.] That is, the twelve men taken out of the twelve tribes of Iſrael, and who were the repreſentatives of them in this action: and took up twelve ſtones out of the midſt of Jordan, as the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Iſrael; they took the exact number, and out of the very place Joſhua was ordered to direct them to do: and carried them over with them unto the place where they lodged; which, as Joſephus ſays [i], was 50 furlongs from Jordan, which was above ſix miles; ſo far they carried theſe ſtones on their ſhoulders: and laid them down there; which afterwards were put in proper order by Joſhua, or at leaſt by his direction.

℣. 9. And Joſhua ſet up twelve ſtones in the midſt of Jordan, &c.] Twelve other ſtones, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, and ſo Jarchi; which he ſet one upon another, ſo that they might be ſeen above the water; or however the water of Jordan being clear, they might eaſily be diſcerned by thoſe who either paſſed over the river, or walked by the ſide of it, where they were; and perhaps may be the very ſtones John the baptiſt pointed at in in Matt. iii. 9. ſince it was at Bethabara he was baptizing, ſuppoſed to be the very place of the paſſage of the children of Iſrael over Jordan, and had its name from thence, Joh i. 28. in the place where the feet of the prieſts which bare the ark of the covenant ſtood; and which was done in commemoration of it; the words will bear to be read under the ſtation of the feet of the prieſts: hence Jarchi fancies theſe were ſet, that their feet might not ſink in the mud at the bottom of the river; but this though here recorded, might be done by Joſhua immediately after the prieſts were come out of Jordan, or as they were coming up: hence ſome think Joſhua was the laſt that came up from it; but Abarbinel obſerves, that the word ſignifies in the room or ſtead of, as in Exod. xxi. 24. ſo that theſe ſtones were placed in the room and ſtead of the ſtation of the prieſts, in the midſt of the river, and in memory of it: and they are there unto this day; to the time of the writing of this book, which is no objection to Joſhua being the writer of it, though it is by ſome made one; ſince it might be wrote by him, as doubtleſs it was, when ſuch an obſervation could not be impertinent; and if what has been before obſerved is true, theſe ſtones were in the ſame place in the times of John the Baptiſt; and that they were in the order in which they were firſt ſet; for that they were in the waters of Jordan, there could ſcarce be any queſtion of it. This was done to perpetuate the memory of this remarkable event: ſo Alexander the great ſet up twelve altars on the borders of India, by the river Oraxes, in commemoration of his exploits [k].

℣. 10. For the prieſts which bare the ark ſtood in the midſt of Jordan, &c.] Though on dry ground, the waters being divided: until every thing was finiſhed that the Lord commanded Joſhua to ſpeak unto the people, according to all that Moſes commanded Joſhua; that is, until all the people had paſſed over Jordan, as the Lord had ordered Joſhua, to encourage them unto, and go over with them, ch. i. 2. and which Moſes, by divine direction, had given Joſhua in charge to do, Deut. xxxi. 7. Kimchi interprets this of the ſetting up of the ſtones in Jordan, and the removal of the other to Gilgal, of which Moſes ſaid nothing to Joſhua; and though it may be true of the former, that the prieſts ſtood in Jordan till that was done, which is not certain, yet not of the latter; for it is plain, and it is moſt reaſonable to conclude, that the prieſts were come up from the midſt of Jordan before Iſrael marched to Gilgal, or even began their march, ſee ℣. 18, 20. and much leſs is this to be underſtood of the ſtones at Ebal, as others, and ſo referred to Deut. xxvii. 2. which was not done until after Ai was taken, ch. viii. 42. And it is not reaſonable to imagine, that the prieſts ſhould continue in Jordan to that time; Abarbinel thinks, it refers to the words in ch. i. 3. which had been ſpoken by the Lord to Joſhua, and had been expreſſed by Moſes, Deut. xi. 24, 25. and which he ſuppoſes were now repeated by Joſhua, and the prieſts continued in their ſtation until he had made an end of rehearſing them; the laſt clauſe relating to Moſes is left out in the Septuagint verſion: and the people haſted and paſſed over; not ſtood in fear of the waters of the river returning upon them; rather through an eager deſire of ſetting their feet on the land of Canaan, and it may be to relieve the prieſts from their ſtation as ſoon as might be.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs when the people were clean paſſed over, &c.] Every one of them, as in ch. iii. 17. and iv. 1. that the ark of the Lord paſſed over, and the prieſts in the preſence of the people; that is, the prieſts bearing the ark came out of the midſt of Jordan in the ſight of all the people, who were on the banks of it, on the other ſide, where they had been ſtationed during the paſſage of the people; though this motion of them was not until they received an order for it, of which there is an after-mention. The Septuagint verſion reads, and the ſtones before them; ſee ℣. 8.

℣. 12. And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh, &c.] Who were ſettled on the other ſide Jordan, in the countries taken from Sihon and Og: paſſed over armed before the children of Iſrael; the reſt of the tribes: as Moſes ſpake unto them; or ordered them, and as they promiſed they would, Numb. xxxii. 17, 20, 21, 27, 29, 32.

℣. 13. About 40,000 prepared for war, &c.] Accoutred with proper armour to defend themſelves, and their brethren, and annoy their enemies: this is to be underſtood of ſuch a number of the above mentioned tribes; otherwiſe the number of all Iſrael that went over Jordan, even armed or fighting men, beſides women and children, were 500,000 or more. Now though the number of men fit for war, of theſe tribes, were 130,000, who were all, according to the original agreement, under obligation to go with their brethren over Jordan into Canaan's land, and continue with them until it was ſubdued, and they had reſt in it; yet Joſhua took no more than about 40,000 of them, who we may ſuppoſe were ſelect men, and fit for his purpoſe; the reſt were left to look after their flocks, their families, and their lands: theſe paſſed over before the Lord unto battle; over Jordan, before the ark of the Lord, as that ſtood in Jordan, bore by the prieſts there, being ready to engage in battle whenever it was neceſſary: and they went on with their brethren to the plains of Jericho; to a place afterwards called Gilgal; ſee ℣. 19. The Septuagint verſion is, to the city Jericho.

℣. 14. On that day the Lord magnified Joſhua in the ſight of Iſrael, &c.] Made him great and honourable in their eſteem, by doing what he foretold would be done, dividing the waters of Jordan, drying up the river to make a paſſage for them thro' it, as on dry land: and they feared him, as they feared Moſes, all the days of his life; had a reverend eſteem of him, and affection for him, and yielded obedience to him all his days; ſee Exod. xiv. 31.

℣. 15. And the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua, &c.] When all the people had paſſed over Jordan: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 16. Command the ptrieſts that bear the ark of the teſtimony, &c.] In all places before in this hiſtory, the ark is called the ark of the covenant, here the ark of the teſtimony, which ſignifies the ſame thing, the law; which was both the covenant between God and the people, and a teſtimony of his will unto them; the Septuagint verſion has both words: that they come up out of Jordan; where they ſtayed until all the people paſſed over, for the encouragement ragement of them, and until they received this order.

℣. 17. Joſhua therefore commanded the prieſts, &c.] In obedience to the Lord, and ſent them an order: ſaying; as follows: come ye up out of Jordan; from the midſt of the river to the bank of it, which was properly an aſcent.

℣. 18. And it came to paſs, when the prieſts that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, were come up out of the midſt of Jordan, &c.] According to the command of Joſhua in the name of the Lord: and the ſoles of the prieſts feet were lift up upon the dry land; and ſet upon it, on the bank of Jordan, and ſhores of the land of Canaan: that the waters of Jordan returned unto their place; thoſe that came from above, and had ſtood on an heap, gradually came down into the channel, and thoſe below that were cut off returned: and flowed over all his banks, as they did before; and uſually did at this time of the year, ſee ch. iii. 15. ſo that there was no decreaſe or loſs of the waters by their failing, and being cut off.

℣. 19. And the people came up out of Jordan, &c.] The channel of it to the ſhore: on the tenth day of the firſt month; the month Niſan or Abib, which from the time of Iſrael's coming out of Egypt was appointed the firſt month of the year, Exod. xii. 2. on the 15th of which month they came out of Egypt, having kept the paſſover on the 14th at even; ſo that their coming out of Egypt, to their entrance into Canaan, was juſt 40 years, wanting five days. This tenth day was the day in which the paſſover was taken from the flock, and kept till the fourteenth, on which day the children of Iſrael kept their firſt paſſover in Canaan, in the plains of Jericho, ch. v. 10. and encamped in Gilgal, in the eaſt border of Jericho; it has its name here by anticipation, for it was ſo named after this for a reaſon given, ch. v. 9. It was, according to Joſephus [l], ten furlongs, or a mile and a quarter from Jericho. Jerom ſays [m], there was ſhewn in his time a deſart place two miles from Jericho, had in wonderful eſteem by men of that country, which he ſuggeſts was this place; as it was had in great veneration, both by the worſhippers of the true God, and by idolaters, for many ages.

℣. 20. And thoſe twelve ſtones which they took out of Jordan, &c.] The twelve men who were ſent there for that purpoſe, and took them from thence, and brought them hither, ℣. 3, 5, 8. did Joſhua pitch in Gilgal; ſet them in rows, or one upon another, and made a pillar of them, commemorative of their paſſage over Jordan into the land of Canaan: according to Joſephus [n], he made an altar of theſe ſtones; and Ben Gerſom is of opinion, that they were placed in the ſanctuary by the ark, though not in it; which yet was the ſentiment of Tertullian [o], but very improbable; ſince that ark was not capable of ſuch a number of large ſtones, and it muſt be a very large ark, or cheſt, if one could be ſuppoſed to be made on purpoſe for them; but it is moſt likely they were erected in form of a pillar or ſtatue, in memory of this wonderful event, the paſſage of Iſrael over Jordan, ſee ℣. 7. they may be conſidered as emblems of the twelve apoſtles of Chriſt, and their miniſtrations and writings; their number agrees, and ſo does the time of their appointment to go into all the world, and preach the goſpel, which was after the reſurrection of Chriſt, typified by the paſſage of Joſhua over Jordan, and out of it; the name of one of them, and he a principal one, was Peter or Cephas, which ſignifies a ſtone; and all of them in a ſpiritual ſenſe were lively ſtones, choſen and ſelected from others, and called by grace, and were very probably moſt, if not all of them, baptized in this very place, Bethabara, from whence theſe ſtones were taken; and were like them unpoliſhed, as to external qualifications, not having an education, and being illiterate, but wonderfully fitted by Chriſt for his ſervice; and were not only pillars, as James, Cephas, and John, but in ſome ſenſe foundation-ſtones; as they were the inſtruments of laying Chriſt miniſterially, as the foundation of ſalvation, and of preaching the fundamental truths of the goſpel, in which they were conſtant and immoveable; and their miniſtry and writings, their goſpels and epiſtles, are ſo many memorials of what Chriſt, our antitypical Joſhua, has done for us in paſſing over Jordan's river, or through death; finiſhing thereby tranſgreſſion and ſin, obtaining peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation, opening the way to the heavenly Canaan, aboliſhing death, and bringing life and immortality to light.

℣. 21. And he ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, &c.] At the ſame time he ſet up the ſtones: when your children ſhall aſk their fathers, &c. as in ℣. 6. ſee the note there.

℣. 22. Then ye ſhall let your children know, &c.] The meaning of the erection of theſe ſtones, acquaint them with the whole hiſtory, the meaning of which they are deſigned to perpetuate: ſaying, Iſrael came over this Jordan on dry land; and if they ſhould aſk, how that could poſſibly be done, or if they did not, they were to inform them by what means it was brought about, as follows.

℣. 23. For the Lord your God dried up the waters of Jordan from before you, until ye were paſſed over, &c.] As this is ſuppoſed to be ſaid in future time, and to perſons who were not upon the ſpot when this was done, and ſo entirely ignorant of the affair; it is not to be underſtood of them perſonally, but of the ſame people they were of, the people of Iſrael in former times, of their anceſtors, and of them in them; the benefits of which they enjoyed by poſſeſſing the land of Canaan their fathers were at this time introduced into: as the Lord your God did to the Red Sea, which he dried up from before us, until we were gone over; for tho' the generation of men, for the moſt part, was dead that paſſed thro' the Red Sea; yet as Joſhua himſelf, and Caleb and Eleazar, and it may be ſome others that were not among the murmurers, were ſtill living, for whom that miracle was wrought, this way of ſpeaking is very properly made uſe of; and eſpecially when it is obſerved, that there were many of the preſent generation then young, which paſſed over, and even thoſe unborn were in and repreſented by their anceſtors, and who enjoyed the advantages of that wonderful mercy; ſo theſe two ſtrange events are joined together, as inſtances of divine power and goodneſs in Pſ. cxiv. 3, 5.

℣. 24. That all the people of the earth might know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty, &c.] Even almighty, and can do that which is marvellous and ſurpriſing, and above the power of nature to effect; things unſearchable and paſt finding out, which can't be expreſſed, or conceived how and by what means they are brought about; this the very hea-heathens would own and acknowledge when they should see these stones, and be told the meaning of them, or should hear of this amazing event: that ye might fear the Lord your God for ever; as the above-mentioned end was to be answered among the people of the earth by these stones, this among the people of Israel; who upon sight of them would call to mind the power and goodness of God, which would serve to keep an awe of his majesty on their mind, a due reverence of him and his greatness, and engage them to fear, serve and worship him; who by such acts as these had abundantly shewed himself to be the only true and living God, and the covenant-God of them his people Israel; the Septuagint version is, "that ye may worship the "Lord your God in every work."

CHAP. V.

THE Canaanites being dispirited on the passage of the children of Israel through Jordan, ℣. 1. Joshua is ordered to circumcise such of the people of Israel that were uncircumcised, ℣. 2—9. in order to their eating of the passover, which was now to be kept, ℣. 11. and they being now provided with corn sufficient, the manna ceased, ℣. 11, 12. and there appeared to Joshua a divine person, in an human form, to encourage and direct him what to do in the conquest of the land, and particularly Jericho, ℣. 13—15.

℣. 1. And it came to pass when all the kings of the Amorites, which were on the side of Jordan westward, &c.] On the side the Israelites were now on; and this is observed, to distinguish them from the other kings of the Amorites beyond Jordan, on the eastern side, who were already conquered by the Israelites, Sihon and Og, who seem to be a colony that went over from the Amorites in Canaan, and possessed themselves of that part of the land of Moab. These seem to be put for several others of the nations of the land not mentioned, who doubtless were as much dispirited as they; and they are the rather mentioned, because they were a principal nation, and a very powerful and warlike one, see Amos ii. 9. and all the kings of the Canaanites which were by the sea; the Mediterranean sea; the Septuagint version calls them the kings of Phœnicia; and that which was strictly and properly so, lay on that coast, in which were the cities of Tyre and Sidon, though the whole land of Canaan was sometimes so called; unless this is to be understood, either of the dead sea, or of the sea of Galilee; of which Canaanites, see Numb. xiii. 29. however, be they the one or the other, or both, as most likely, when they heard that the Lord had dried up the waters of Jordan from before the children of Israel, until we were passed over, that their heart melted, neither was there spirit in them any more, because of the children of Israel; they lost all their courage, and never recovered it any more; concluding it was all over with them, since such wonderful things were done for them by the Lord: the word we shews, that the writer of this history was one that passed over Jordan, and who can be supposed but Joshua himself? this circumstance, I think, strongly corroborates that opinion.

℣. 2. At that time the Lord said unto Joshua, &c.] When the people had passed over Jordan, and had pitched in Gilgal, and Joshua had set up the stones there; and particularly when the dread of them had seized the inhabitants of Canaan, and deprived them of all their courage; and so was a fit time for the execution of what is next ordered, and seems designed in the providence of God among other things particularly for that: make them sharp knives; not that Joshua was to make them himself, but to order them to be made; for a considerable number would be wanted for the use to be made of them: the Targum calls them sharp razors; and Ben Gersom says, they were made of brass, more likely of iron or steel, which perhaps he means; but the Hebrew text is, knives of rocks, flints or stones; and so Maimonides [p] interprets the words, and as they are rendered in various versions [q]; with such an instrument Zipporah circumcised her son; and like them were the samia testa [r] with which the priests of the mother of the gods were castrated; and the saxum acutum of Ovid [s]; and such the Americans used in slaying beasts, and the Egyptians [t] in the dissecting of their dead bodies; and which the Talmudists allow of as lawful; and in the east, the Jews to this day use knives of stone in circumcision [u]; see the note on Exod. iv. 25. and circumcise again the children of Israel the second time; not that circumcision was to be repeated on them that had been circumcised already, who had found out ways and means to draw over the foreskin again, as some in after times did; or who had been imperfectly circumcised according to the rite enjoined by Abraham, which some Jewish writers say was not perfect; neither of which was the case. Kimchi, and so Ben Melech, interpret the word, oftentimes, frequently, one time after another; as if the sense was, Joshua was to circumcise them, or take care they were circumcised, some at one time, and some at another, until the whole was finished; but this is not what is meant, it refers to a former general circumcision; not to the circumcision, as first administred in Abraham's time, for there had been a multitude of instances of it since that time; but to the circumcision of the Israelites at, about, or quickly after their coming out of Egypt; either before their eating of their first passover, the night they went out of Egypt, as Jarchi [w]; or rather some time in the three days darkness of the Egyptians, as Dr. Lightfoot [x] thinks; or else when they were about Sinai, just before the celebration of the passover there, Numb. ix. 1, 2. from which time it had been neglected; not because unnecessary, whilst they were in the wilderness, to distinguish them from others, which was not the principal, at least not the only use of it; nor because forbidden the Israelites for their disobedience, murmurings and rebellion, it not being probable that God should prohibit the observance of a command of his on that account; nor so much through criminal neglect, at least contempt of it, as because of their frequent journeying, and the inconvenience of performing it, being always uncertain when they had pitched pitched their tents, how long they ſhould ſtay, and when they ſhould remove, ſince this depended upon the taking up of the cloud; wherefore, unleſs they could have been ſure of a continuance for a proper time, it was not ſafe to adminiſter it; and now it was enjoined, partly becauſe they were about to celebrate the paſſover, which required circumciſion in all that partook of it, Exod. xii. 43, 44. and partly becauſe they had now entered into the land of Canaan, which was given them in the covenant of circumciſion, Gen. xvii. 8, 9, 10. wherefore it became them now to obſerve it, and as typical of ſpiritual circumciſion, neceſſary to the heavenly Canaan, as well as to diſtinguiſh them from the uncircumciſed Canaanites they were coming among; and they did not think themſelves under obligation to obſerve it till they came to ſettle in that land, as ſome think, who hereby account for their long neglect of it.

℣. 3. And Joſhua made him ſharp knives, and circumciſed the children of Iſrael, &c.] Not that Joſhua circumciſed them himſelf, any more than he made the knives himſelf, but he ordered both to be done, and took care that they were done. And as any that had ſkill might make the knives, ſo might any circumciſe; circumciſion was not reſtrained to any order of men, not to the prieſts and Levites, but any might perform it; ſo that though the number to be circumciſed was great, it might ſoon be finiſhed: and this was done at the hill of the foreſkins; as the place was afterward called from hence; theſe being heaped up one upon another, made a hill of them, as the Jews ſay [y], being covered with duſt. This circumciſion performed by Joſhua, or his orders, was typical of the ſpiritual circumciſion without hands, which thoſe that believe in Jeſus, the antitype of Joſhua, partake of.

℣. 4. And this is the cauſe why Joſhua did circumciſe, &c.] Or the reaſon of the command given him to circumciſe the children of Iſrael at this time, namely, what follows: all the people that came out of Egypt that were males, even all the men of war; meaning ſuch that were twenty years old, and upwards: died in the wilderneſs, by the way, after they came out of Egypt; not directly, but in a courſe of forty years, as they journeyed through the wilderneſs; this is to be underſtood with an exception of Joſhua, Caleb, Eleazar, &c. but then there was a large number who were under twenty years of age, that came out of Egypt, and were now living.

℣. 5. Now all the people that came out were circumciſed, &c.] All that came out of Egypt, and males were circumciſed, whether under or above twenty years of age; for though it is poſſible all were circumciſed before they came out of Egypt, which favours the opinion of Dr. Lightfoot, that they might be circumciſed during the three nights darkneſs of the Egyptians, when they could take no advantage of it, as Levi and Simeon did of the Shechemites; and which ſeems more probable than that it ſhould be on the night they came out of Egypt, when many muſt have been unfit for travelling, and ſeems preferable to that of their being circumciſed at mount Sinai, which was a year after their coming out of Egypt: but all the people that were born in the wilderneſs by the way, as they came forth out of Egypt, them they had not circumciſed; the reaſons of which neglect ſee in the note on ℣. 2. The phraſe, by the way, ſeems to point at the true reaſon of it, at leaſt to countenance the reaſon there given, which was on account of their journey; that is, their ſtay at any place being uncertain and precarious; ſo the Jews ſay [z], becauſe of the affliction or trouble of journeying, the Iſraelites did not circumciſe their children. This is to be underſtood of all males only born in the wilderneſs, they only being the ſubjects of circumciſion.

℣. 6. For the children of Iſrael walked forty years in the wilderneſs, &c.] Wanting a few days, the round number is given; not forty-two, as the Septuagint verſion: till all the people that were men of war, which came out of Egypt, were conſumed; all that were above twenty years of age, excepting Joſhua and Caleb: becauſe they obeyed not the voice of the Lord; but murmured againſt him, and againſt his ſervants, and particularly againſt Aaron, being the high-prieſt; and chiefly becauſe of the report of the ſpies, and their murmurs then, which ſo incenſed the Lord againſt them, that he threatened them with an entire conſumption of their carcaſes, and which accordingly was fulfilled, to which the following clauſe refers: unto whom the Lord ſware, that he would not ſhew them the land, which the Lord ſware unto their fathers, that he would give us, a land that floweth with milk and honey; ſee Numb. xiv. 23, 24.

℣. 7. And the children, whom he raiſed up in their ſtead, them Joſhua circumciſed, &c.] Who were born to them in the wilderneſs, and ſucceeded them, ſome of which might be near forty years of age; as for thoſe that were born before, of which there might be many now living, they had been circumciſed already, but others were not: for they were circumciſed, becauſe they had not circumciſed them by the way; or whilſt journeying the forty years in the wilderneſs; which, as before obſerved, ſeems to be the true reaſon of the omiſſion of circumciſion.

℣. 8. And it came to paſs, when they had done circumciſing all the people, &c.] Which ſeems as if it was done in one day, even on the ſame day they paſſed over Jordan, and came to Gilgal; tho' biſhop Uſher [a] thinks it was the day following; and ſo the Jews [x] ſay it was on the eleventh of Niſan: that they abode in their places in the camp, till they were whole; till the wound made by circumciſion was healed; now as it was on the 10th day they paſſed over Jordan, and came to Gilgal, where they were circumciſed, there were three entire days between that and the 14th, when they kept the paſſover; during which time they kept within their tents in the camp, being unfit to move from thence, for on the third day of circumciſion they were uſually ſore, Gen. xxxiv. 25. but being well on the fourth, were able to attend the paſſover. As the providence of God greatly appeared in favour of Iſrael, by cauſing a dread to fall on their enemies, that they durſt not ſally out of the city and attack them; ſo it ſhowed great faith in Joſhua, and the Iſraelites, to adminiſter circumciſion at this time, juſt as they were landed in an enemies country; and when the waters of Jordan were returned, and there was no going back, and if they could, as they were not in a condition to fight, ſo not to flee.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, &c.] Out of the tabernacle: this day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you; either the reproach of being reckoned of the ſame religion with the Egyp-

Egyptians, they now having obſerved the command of the Lord, and thereby declared themſelves to be his ſervants and worſhippers, which ſenſe Ben Gerſom mentions; or elſe the reproach with which the Egyptians reproached them, that they were brought out from them into the wilderneſs for evil, to be deſtroyed there; they now being ſafe arrived in the land of Canaan; which ſenſe he ſeems to approve of, and ſo Abarbinel: or rather by it is meant the reproach of being bondmen, and ſlaves, as they were in Egypt, having now entered upon their inheritance, they as free men, the ſons of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, were heirs unto; and perhaps it was this ſenſe of the phraſe led Joſephus [c] to give a wrong interpretation of the word Gilgal, which he ſays ſignifies liberty; and adds, "for having paſſed the river, they knew they were free from the Egyptians, and from troubles in the wilderneſs;" though the more commonly received ſenſe is, that this reproach is to be underſtood of uncircumciſion, which was the reproach of the Egyptians, they at this time not uſing circumciſion they afterwards did, when ſome of the nations thereabout uſed it, who deſcended from Abraham, as the Midianites, Iſhmaelites, Arabians and Edomites: wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal unto this day; which ſignifies rolling [d]; ſo that when it is met with before, it is ſo called by anticipation.

ver. 10. And the children of Iſrael encamped in Gilgal, &c.] Not after their circumciſion, but before, and where they continued encamped during that, and until the paſſover had been kept by them; this was little more than a mile from Jericho, ſee the note on ch. iv. 19. and kept the paſſover on the fourteenth day of the month at even; exactly as it was ordered to be obſerved, and was obſerved when firſt kept, Exod. xii. 6. in the plains of Jericho; a proper place both for their encampment, and the celebration of the paſſover, and where very likely they met with lambs enough for their purpoſe, which belonged to the inhabitants of Jericho; or however being now got into the good land, they needed not, and were under no temptation of ſparing their own: hiſtorians agree, as Strabo [e], Joſephus [f], and others, that Jericho was ſeated in a plain.

ver. 11. And they did eat the old corn of the land, &c.] That of the laſt year, as ſome verſions [g], which agree with ours; in which they ſeem to follow the Jewiſh writers, who, as particularly Kimchi, Gerſom, and Ben Melech, interpret it of the old corn, for this reaſon, becauſe they might not eat of the new until the wave-ſheaf was offered up, Lev. xxiii. 10, 11, 14. of which old corn they ſuppoſe the unleavened cakes were made, and was alſo parched corn, though that word the Septuagint verſion tranſlates new; and indeed were it not for the above law, there does not ſeem to be any reaſon for rendering it old corn, only corn of the land, as the Septuagint does; and there is ſome difficulty how they ſhould get at the old corn, which it may be ſuppoſed was laid up in the granaries, when Jericho was cloſe ſhut up, and none went in or out; unleſs they met with it in ſome of the villages near at hand, or it was brought them by the traders in corn, of whom they bought it, or found it in ſome out-houſes and barns without the city: on the morrow after the paſſover; which Kimchi and Ben Gerſom ſay was on the 15th of Niſan, the paſſover being on the 14th; but if the morrow after the paſſover is the ſame with the morrow after the ſabbath, Lev xxiii 11. that was the 16th of Niſan; and ſo Jarchi here ſays, this is the day of waving the ſheaf, which was always done on the 16th: it is difficult to ſay which day is meant; if it was the 16th, then it may refer to what they eat on that day, after the ſheaf was offered [h]; if it was the 15th, it ſeems neceſſary to underſtand it of the old corn; and ſuch they muſt have to make their unleavened cakes of, both for the paſſover on the 14th, and the chagigah, or feaſt of unleavened bread, which began the 15th, as it follows: unleavened bread, and parched corn in the ſelf-ſame day; unleavened bread, for the uſes before mentioned, they were obliged to, and parched corn for their pleaſure; but new corn, as the Septuagint render it, was expreſsly forbidden before the waving of the ſheaf, Lev. xxiii. 14. and therefore old corn ſeems to be meant; this was juſt forty years to a day from their coming out of Egypt.

ver. 12. And the manna ceaſed on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land, &c.] There being now no further need of it; miracles are not wrought or continued when unneceſſary; for the ceaſing of the manna ſhews, that it was not a common but an extraordinary proviſion. The ceaſing of the manna, which was a type of Chriſt, may ſignify the ceſſation of goſpel-ordinances, in which Chriſt is held forth as food for his people. Theſe are to continue till all the ſpiritual Iſrael of God have paſſed over the river Jordan, or death, even until the end of the world, and then to ceaſe, Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. 1 Cor. xi. 26. Rev. xxi. 22, 23. the eating of the old corn may ſignify the glories of the future ſtate, the joys and happineſs of the heavenly Canaan, prepared for thoſe that love the Lord from the foundation of the world; it may denote thoſe ancient things the ſaints will feed and live upon to all eternity; the eternal love of the three divine perſons, electing grace, the antient ſettlements of grace, the everlaſting covenant of grace, and the bleſſings of it; the glorious mediator of it, that was ſet up from everlaſting, and the grace given to them in him before the world began: neither had the children of Iſrael manna any more; having no more need of it, as the ſaints in heaven will ſtand in no more need of goſpel-ordinances: but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year; the increaſe of the land, not only of the fields, but of the vineyards and olive yards, which they had neither ſown nor planted, ſee Deut. vi. 10, 11. which may denote the plenty and variety of the joys of heaven, and glories of the future ſtate; the various fruits which grow on Chriſt, the tree of life, brought forth every month, or continually; all which will be enjoyed through the free grace of God, without the works or merits of men.

ver. 13. And it came to paſs when Joſhua was by Jericho, &c.] Or in Jericho [i]; not in the city itſelf, but in the border of it, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; or on the ſide of it, as Jarchi; on one ſide of which he was reconnoitring by himſelf, very probably, ſeeking for a proper place where to make his his first attack; or if he could find out some avenue to the city, whereby he could enter more easily; or it may be he was meditating a scheme how to subdue the city; and it is very likely praying to God that he would direct him, and succeed him. Ben Gerson interprets it, his thoughts were in Jericho; and both he, and Abarbinel, suppose, that what follows was in a vision of prophecy, that it seemed to him that he was in Jericho, and saw a person, as after described, and was only a dream, or night-vision; but no doubt, whether this was in the day or in the night, which is not certain, it was a real sight that Joshua had, or one really appeared to him as a man, as after related: that he lifted up his eyes, and looked; his eyes before looked downwards, as the eyes of a person in deep study and meditation usually do: and behold, there stood a man over-against him; not a mere man, nor a created angel in an human form, but a divine person in such a form, even the Son of God, who frequently appeared in this manner to the patriarchs; as is clear from the worship paid unto him by Joshua, by his calling him Lord, and owning himself to be his servant; and by the ground on which he stood, being holy through his presence, as well as by his title, the captain of the Lord's host. Jarchi says this is Michael, which if understood of Michael the increated angel, the head of all principality and power, is right, who is always meant by Michael, whenever he is spoken of in scripture; and so this is interpreted by the ancient Jews [k] of the angel the redeemer: with his sword drawn in his hand; who sometimes is said to have a two-edged one come out of his mouth, and sometimes one girt on his thigh, and here with one drawn out of the scabbard, to justify the war with the Canaanites, and to encourage Joshua to proceed in it. His sword has been drawn against his enemies, and those of his people from the beginning, ever since the fall of man, when enmity commenced between him and the seed of the serpent; it appeared drawn when here on earth combating with all our spiritual enemies, and will never be put up until all enemies are put under his feet: and Joshua went with him; which shewed great courage, presence of mind and magnanimity: and said unto him, art thou for us, or for our adversaries? by his appearing in this warlike posture, he concluded it was to take on one side or the other, either on the side of Israel, or of the Canaanites; and he seemed to suspect that it was on the side of the latter, and that he was one that was come to defy the armies of Israel, as Goliah afterwards did, and to engage in a single combat with Joshua their general, and so decide the war; in which, had this been the case, Joshua was ready to join issue with him.

ver. 14. And he said, nay, &c.] Not for or on the side of their adversaries was he come, as Joshua suspected at the first sight of him; the Septuagint version is, he said unto him, taking לא for לו, as it sometimes is: but as captain of the host of the Lord am I now come; of the host of the Lord both in heaven and in earth, angels and men, and particularly of the people of Israel, called the armies and host of the Lord, Exod. vii. 4. and xii. 41. so that tho' Joshua was general, Christ was generalissimo; and so Joshua understood him, and therefore shewed a readiness to do whatsoever he should command him; the spiritual Israel of God, the church, is in a militant state, and has many enemies to combat with, sin, satan, the world, and false teachers; Christ is their leader and commander, the captain of their salvation, and has all necessary qualifications of wisdom, courage and might for such an office; see Is. lv. 4. and xi. 2, 3. Heb. ii. 10. Rev. xix. 11, 14: and Joshua fell on his face to the earth; in reverence of this divine and illustrious person, whom he perceived to be what he was: and did worship; gave him religious worship and adoration, which had he been a created angel he would not have given to him, nor would such an one have received it, Rev. xix. 10. and xxii. 8, 9: and said unto him, what saith my Lord unto his servant? that is, what commands had he to lay upon him, and he was ready to execute them? he was heartily willing to be subject to him as the chief general of the Israelitish forces, and to consider himself, and behave as an officer under him, and to obey all orders that should be given him.

ver. 15. And the captain of the Lord's host said unto Joshua, &c.] As a trial and proof of his obedience to him: loose thy shoe from off thy foot; which is to be understood literally, as when the like was commanded Moses at Horeb, Exod. iii. 5. though some interpret it figuratively, as Abarbinel, "remove from thee such thoughts that thou shalt "take this city by strength:" for the place whereon thou standest is holy; because of the presence of this person, and as long as he was there, though afterwards was as another place; the Jewish commentator, last mentioned, thinks, this intimates that the city, and all in it (and all round about it) should be cherem, devoted, and so be holy to the Lord: and Joshua did so; loosed his shoe from his foot, in obedience to the captain of the Lord's host, thereby giving proof of his readiness, willingness and alacrity to serve under him.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter Joshua is assured, though Jericho was closely shut up, it should be delivered into his hands, ver. 1, 2. and he is directed, with the army, to go round the city six days together, seven priests bearing the ark of the Lord, with seven trumpets sounding; and on the seventh day to go round it seven times in like manner, when its walls should fall, ver. 3, 4, 5. which order Joshua communicated to the priests, and to the people, and which was put into execution by them, with some other instructions he gave them, ver. 6—16. particularly that the city, and all in it, should be devoted to the Lord, and none spared, but Rahab and her family, ver. 17—19. the success was according to the assurance given by the Lord, ver. 20. when all in the city were destroyed, and that was burnt with fire, and the gold, silver, brass and iron brought into the house of the Lord, and Rahab and her father's household were saved alive, ver. 21—25. and the chapter is closed with an adjuration of Joshua, cursing the man that should rebuild the city; and with this observation, that the fame of Joshua upon this was spread abroad throughout the country, ver. 26, 27.

[k] Bereshit Rabba, §. 97. fol. 84. 2. Nachmanides in loc.

℣. 1. Now Jericho was ſtraitly ſhut up becauſe of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Or it ſhut up, or was ſhutting, and was ſhut up [a]; that is, the king and the inhabitants ſhut it up within; the Targum ſays with iron doors, and bars of braſs, and it was blocked up without by the children of Iſrael: none went out and none came in; none of their forces went out to make a ſally on the Iſraelites, or to ſeek to make peace with them; nor any of their neighbours went in to them, to carry them any proviſion, or to aſſiſt them, or to be ſheltered by them, not being able to do it becauſe of the camp of Iſrael.

℣. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, &c.] The ſame divine perſon called in the preceding chapter the captain of the Lord's hoſt, now with him, and who gave him the following orders, inſtructions, and aſſurances: ſee, I have given into thy hand Jericho, and the king thereof; which might be concluded from the fear that was fallen upon the inhabitants of the city and their king, and from their ſhutting themſelves up ſo cloſely, not daring to come out againſt Iſrael; and eſpecially from this declaration and promiſe of the Lord; and which ſhould be done in ſuch a manner, as that it would clearly appear to be of the Lord, and not men: and the mighty men of valour; the military men, the ſoldiers, or army that were under the command of the king of Jericho; or, as Kimchi reads it, though mighty men, yet they ſhould not be able to defend the city, or hinder its falling into their hands; for what were they to the mighty God of Iſrael?

℣. 3. And ye ſhall compaſs the city all ye men of war, &c.] Joſhua their chief commander under the Lord, and all that were able to make war, even all above twenty years of age; theſe were to compaſs the city, not in the form of a ſiege, but by a proceſſion around it: and go round about the city once; or one time, for the firſt once in a day, and no more: thus ſhalt thou do ſix days; one after another; that is, go round it, once every day for ſuch a time. This order was given according to the Jews [w] the twenty-ſecond of Niſan, after the feaſt of unleavened bread was over.

℣. 4. And ſeven prieſts ſhall bear before the ark ſeven trumpets of rams horns, &c.] The ark was to be taken up and carried by prieſts round the city. Ben Gerſom obſerves, that this was to direct the Iſraelites to keep and do according to all that was written in it; that is, in the law, which was contained in it; but no doubt the deſign of it was to ſhew, that the ſubduing of Jericho, and the miracle that would be wrought, were owing to the power and preſence of God, of which the ark was a ſymbol: and before it were to go ſeven other prieſts, with trumpets in their hands; which, according to our verſion, were made of ram's horns: in the original it is Jobelim or Jubilee trumpets. Some think it means only ſuch as they were to uſe in the year of jubilee; ſo Abarbinel and others, as Maſius and Noldius [x]; that they had their name from Jubal, the firſt inventor of muſical inſtruments, Gen. iv. 21. for rams horns are objected to becauſe they are ſolid, and not hollow; as if they could not be bored and made hollow, and fit for ſuch a purpoſe. The Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi, interpret the word by rams horns, as we do [y]; and obſerve what R. Akiba ſaid, "when (ſays he) I went into Arabia, I heard them call a ram Jobel; and the trumpet itſelf is called Jobel, becauſe made of a ram's horn [z]: and the ſeventh day ye ſhall compaſs the city ſeven times; in the ſame manner as on the other days: and the prieſts ſhall blow with the trumpets; which they were to do, and did every day.

℣. 5. And it ſhall come to paſs, that when they make a long blaſt with the ram's horn, &c.] Continue blowing, and protracting, and drawing out the ſound a long time; which they did only on the ſeventh day; on the other days it was but a ſhort blaſt they made at a time; ſo that this being different, it would be a good ſign and token to the people to do what they are next directed to: and when ye hear the ſound of the trumpet; drawn out to a great length: all the people ſhall ſhout with a great ſhout; at once, as when an onſet is made in battle, or a victory is obtained: and the wall of the city ſhall fall down flat; or under itſelf [a]; which Jarchi interprets in its place; that is, where it ſtood, and be ſwallowed up in it; ſo the Targum, "and it ſhall be ſwallowed up under it;" yet ſo that ſomewhat of it ſhould be ſeen, as an atteſtation and proof of the miracle, as Kimchi; who ſays, "it means that it ſhould be ſwallowed up in its place under the earth, and a little of it appear above ground for a memorial of the miracle:" and the people ſhall aſcend up every man ſtraight before him; juſt as they were in the order of proceſſion; for the wall being fallen every-where, they would have no occaſion to make up to one certain place, as when a breach is only made in one place, and the beſiegers are obliged to go ſo many a breaſt to enter at it; but in this caſe they might go ſtraight up from whence they were, and enter the city without any obſtruction and difficulty.

℣. 6. And Joſhua the ſon of Nun called the prieſts, &c.] Not the Levites and Kohathites, whoſe buſineſs it was in common to bear the ark, but upon this occaſion the prieſts; not all of them, but as many as were ſufficient for the purpoſe: and ſaid unto them, take up the ark of the covenant; by putting the ſtaves into the rings of it, and ſo carry it, Exod. xxv. 14. ſee Numb. vii. 9. and let ſeven prieſts bear ſeven trumpets of rams horns before the ark of the Lord; ſee the note on ℣. 4.

℣. 7. And he ſaid unto the people, paſs on, and compaſs the city, &c.] The women and children, the young men under twenty years of age, the unarmed part of the camp, as diſtinguiſhed from the armed men: and let him that is armed paſs on before the ark of the Lord; to guard the ark, protect the prieſts, and defend the people, ſhould any ſally be made by the enemy upon them. Theſe ſeem to deſign all the males that were above twenty years of age able to bear arms, and fit for war; though ſome reſtrain it to the 40,000 of the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manaſſeh, ch. i. 14. and iv. 13.

℣. 8. And it came to paſs when Joſhua had ſpoken to the people, &c.] Both armed and unarmed; had finiſhed the orders and directions he gave them before mentioned: that the ſeven prieſts bearing the ſeven trumpets of ram's horns paſſed on before the Lord; in his ſight, and by his direction, and at his command given by Joſhua, and before the ark, the ſymbol of his preſence: and blew with the trumpets; a ſhort blaſt as they went along; this they did on every of the ſix days: and the ark of the covenant venant of the Lord followed them; being borne by priests, ℣. 6.

℣. 9. And the armed men went before the priests that blew with the trumpets, &c.] Whom Jarchi, Kimchi, and Abarbinel, interpret of Reuben and Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh; that is, as many of them as Joshua took with him over Jordan; tho' rather all the armed men in the camp are meant; at least along with those mentioned went the standards of Judah and Ephraim: and the rereward came after the ark; because the tribe of Dan was the rereward in journeying, Numb. ii. 31. hence the Targum paraphrases the words, "and the tribe of the house of Dan went after the ark;" and so both Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it: but rather the body of the people unarmed are designed; at least these were brought up by the standard of Dan; or otherwise no place in this procession is appointed for them whose business it was to make the great shout on the seventh day with the rest: the priests going on and blowing with the trumpets; the word priests is not in the text, but is rightly supplied; for as Kimchi and Abarbinel observe, this is not said of the rereward, but of the priests, for they only bore and blew the trumpets; and so the Targum reads, "the priests going on, &c."

℣. 10. And Joshua had commanded the people, &c.] When he gave them their orders to pass on, and compass the city, ℣. 7. saying, ye shall not shout; that is, on any of the six days as they went round the city, only on the seventh; for this being a sign of victory, it was not to be made until the day when it should be obtained; otherwise, had they shouted, and nothing followed on it, it would have exposed them to the contempt of the inhabitants of Jericho, and would have put them in spirit, and hardened them: nor make any noise with your voice; as laughing, singing, &c. This profound silence was to be observed, to add to the gravity and solemnity of the procession; and on account of the surprizing miracle that was to be wrought, and particularly because of the ark, the symbol of the divine presence borne before them; and when God in his providence was about to speak in so awful a manner, and to do such a surprizing work, it was very fit and decent that they should be silent before him; see Hab. ii. 20. Zech. ii. 13. neither shall any word proceed out of your mouth; no conversation or discourse were to be had with each other as they passed along; for this is only to be restrained to the procession; when they returned, and in their camp they might talk and discourse as at other times: until the day I bid you shout, then shall ye shout; for as yet it seems Joshua had not told them how many days they should surround the city in this manner, and on what day the shout should be made by them.

℣. 11. So the ark of the Lord compassed the city, &c.] Being bore by the priests, who carried it round the city; it may as well be rendered and interpreted as it is by Kimchi, "he, i. e. Joshua, caused the ark of the Lord to compass the city;" that is, he gave orders to the priests to take it up, and go round with it on the first day: going about it once; on that day, and no more; keeping at such a distance, as to be out of the reach of stones or arrows cast from the walls of the city: and they came into the camp, and lodged in the camp; the night following; not only the priests that bare the ark, but those that blew with the trumpets, and all the armed men, and the people.

℣. 12. And Joshua rose early in the morning, &c.] Of the second day; to take care of, direct, and prepare every thing for another procession on that day; so active and diligent was he to do the will and work of God, exactly and punctually: and the priests took up the ark of the Lord; and carried it about as they had done the day before.

℣. 13. And seven priests bearing seven trumpets of rams horns before the ark of the Lord, &c.] See the note on ℣. 4. went on continually; or, going they went [b]; kept on going, making no stop at all, until they had compassed the city: and blew with the trumpets; as they went along: and the armed men went before them, but the rereward came after the ark of the Lord; which the Targum paraphrases as on ℣. 9. the priests going on, and blowing with the trumpets; see the note on ℣. 9.

℣. 14. And the second day they compassed the city once, &c.] Went round it one time only, as on the first: and returned into the camp; which was at Gilgal, ch. v. 10. so they did six days; four more after these two successively, and proceeded in the same order and manner as on those two days.

℣. 15. And it came to pass on the seventh day, &c.] Which Jarchi says was the sabbath-day, and which is a common notion of the Jews [c]; but whether it was or not, it is certain that one of these seven days must be a sabbath, in which the several things ordered were done, and the procession made. Kimchi observes, that their Rabbins say this was the sabbath-day; and he adds, what is pretty remarkable, "though they slew and burnt on the sabbath day, he that commanded the sabbath, commanded to prophane the sabbath in the subduing of Jericho;" with which compare what our Lord says Matt. xii. 3—8. that they rose early about the dawning of the day; having seven times the work to do they did on the other six days: and compassed the city after the same manner seven times; after the same manner as they had done the six preceding days: only on that day they compassed the city seven times; whereas on the other days they only went round it once, which distinguished this day from the rest.

℣. 16. And it came to pass at the seventh time, &c.] Of their going round the city on the seventh day: and at the seventh time, when the priests blew with the trumpets; as they did every time they compassed the city: Joshua said unto the people, shout; both those that were armed, and those that were not; they were to make one grand and general shout at once, as when victory is obtained, or is sure, and so it follows: for the Lord hath given you the city; intimating that it would be presently delivered into their hands, and in such manner, that it would plainly shew it was of the Lord, and no other.

℣. 17. And the city shall be accursed, &c.] Or, be a Cherem, devoted to the Lord, as it follows: even it and all that are therein to the Lord; the city and the inhabitants of it should be devoted to destruction, and the riches and spoil of it dedicated to sacred uses, and not become the property of the Israelites; for as this was the first city in the land of Canaan that was conquered, it was fit the firstfruits of the conquest should be the Lord's, as an acknowledgment of his gift of the land unto them, and that the conquest of it was owing to him; though it might be some mortification to the Israelites, and a trial of their faith and obedience, that the first and so fine a city should not become their habitation, but be utterly destroyed, and not to

to be built more; and all the riches of it either consumed, or converted to other uſes, and not their own. This Joſhua thought fit to declare to the Iſraelites, before the taking of the city, that they might know what they had to do. The Jewiſh doctors generally ſuppoſe that Joſhua ordered this of himſelf, of his own accord and will; but Kimchi is of opinion, that the Lord gave him this order, which is moſt probable, yea, certain from ch. vii. 11. only Rahab the harlot ſhall live, ſhe and all that are with her in the houſe; ſhe and her father's family, as ſhe requeſted, and the ſpies promiſed; here the Targum calls her as elſewhere, Rahab the innkeeper or victualler; and ſo in ℣. 22, 25. becauſe ſhe hid the meſſengers that we ſent; and ſo preſerved them from being taken by the meſſengers of the king of Jericho, who were ſent in purſuit of them. Theſe though ſent only by Joſhua, without the knowledge of the people, yet it being on their account, and for their good, and by him as their head and governor, is aſcribed to them alſo. This fact of Rahab's is obſerved by him as a reaſon for ſparing her, and thoſe that were with her, when all the reſt would be put to the ſword; and is mentioned as an inſtance of her faith, and of the evidence of it, Heb. xi. 30. James ii. 25.

℣. 18. And you in any wiſe keep yourſelves from the accurſed thing, &c.] From laying hold on, ſecreting and enjoying as their own, what was devoted to another uſe: leſt ye make yourſelves accurſed; or a Cherem, alſo devoted to deſtruction: when ye take of the accurſed thing; any part of it, be it what it will, gold or any other metal, or raiment, and the like: and make the camp of Iſrael a curſe, and trouble it; for being done ſecretly, and not known who did it, the whole body of the people would be chargeable with it, and ſuffer on account of it, unleſs diſcovered and puniſhed, and as more fully appears by an after inſtance.

℣. 19. But all the ſilver and gold, and veſſels of braſs and iron, are conſecrated to the Lord, &c.] Or rather, for all the ſilver, &c. as the particle here uſed ſometimes ſignifies, and is ſo rendered [d]: theſe ſeveral metals, and whatſoever were made of them, were ſet apart for the Lord, and dedicated to ſacred uſes, and might not be converted to any other, unleſs what were upon their idols, which were to be burnt with fire, Deut. vii. 25. they ſhall come into the treaſury of the Lord; be brought into the tabernacle, as Kimchi and Abarbinel interpret it, into ſome apartment there deſtined for ſuch ſervice, and which is clear from ℣. 24. the ſame where the offering of the officers was brought after the battle with Midian, Numb. xxxi. 54.

℣. 20. So the people ſhouted when the prieſts blew with the trumpets, &c.] As Joſhua had charged them, ℣. 16. and it came to paſs when the people heard the ſound of the trumpet, and the people ſhouted with a great ſhout; that is, gave a loud ſhout, on hearing the long blaſt of the trumpets blown by the prieſts the ſeventh time, as they were no doubt directed by Joſhua, agreeable to the order given to him; ſee ℣. 5, 16. that the wall fell down flat; the wall of the city of Jericho, as the Lord ſaid it ſhould, ℣. 5. ſee the note there: ſo that the people went up into the city, every man ſtraight before him, and they took the city; they went up to it from the plain, where they were, and entered it without any difficulty, the wall being fallen, and that every where; ſo that they went directly from the place where they were, and went in right over-againſt them, into every quarter and part of the city, and ſeized on it, and poſſeſſed it at once. Various things may be obſerved concerning this ſurprizing event; as that it was ſupernatural, and cannot be aſcribed to ſecond cauſes, there being nothing in the proceſſion round the city, the blowing of the trumpets, or ſhout of the people, that could occaſion the wall to fall; and that no defences or fortifications are any thing againſt God, when it is his will a city ſhould be taken, with whom nothing is impoſſible; and that ſometimes unlikely means are appointed and uſed by him for doing great things, that the power may appear to be his by which they are done; and that faith ſticks at nothing, when it has the word and promiſe of God to encourage and ſupport it; and that God does every thing in his own time and way. The falling of the walls of Jericho may be conſidered as an emblem of the fall of Babylon; theſe two cities agree, as in their greatneſs, ſo in their wickedneſs, Rev. xvii. 4. and xviii. 2. and as Jericho ſtood in the way of Iſrael's inheriting the land, being a frontier and barrier town; ſo myſtical Babylon ſtands in the way of the kingdom of Chriſt, and its ſpread in the world, and particularly of the converſion of the Jews, Rev. xi. 14, 15. and xix. 1—8. The fall of Jericho was very ſudden, and when not expected by the inhabitants of it; and ſo will be the fall of Babylon, Rev. xviii. 7, 8, 9. and as Jericho fell at the ſound of ram's horns, the deſtruction of Antichriſt, or myſtical Babylon, will be through the preaching of the goſpel, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 9. and as the one was by the ſounding of ſeven prieſts, at the ſeventh time of ſounding, on the ſeventh day; ſo the ruin of Antichriſt will be at the ſeventh angel's ſounding the ſeventh trumpet, and pouring out the ſeventh vial, Rev. x. 7. and xi. 15. and xvi. 17, 19. and as at the deſtruction of the one, ſo of the other, but few ſaved from the common calamity, Rev. xviii. 4, 5. and both never to be raiſed up and built again, Rev. xviii. 21. And it may be conſidered alſo as an emblem of the ſubjection of the Gentile world to Chriſt; which, like Jericho, or the moon, as ſome obſerve the name ſignifies, is very changeable; and as that city, and the inhabitants of it, an enemy to God, and his people, and yet made ſubject by the miniſtry of his word; as particularly it will be, when the kingdoms of this world ſhall become his: or rather it may be an emblem of the ſubjection of particular ſouls to Chriſt, and the means thereof; who are like the walled city of Jericho in their unregenerate ſtate, their hearts hard, ſtubborn, and inflexible, and enmity to God; are ſelf-confident, vainly puft up in their fleſhly minds, and ſhut up in unbelief, and kept and guarded by Satan, the ſtrong man armed; but all theſe ſtrong-holds of ſin and Satan are brought down and demoliſhed in converſion; and that by means of the ſound of the goſpel, which is as deſpicable with men, as the ſound of the rams horns were to the inhabitants of Jericho; but is a jubilee and joyful ſound, a ſound of love, grace, mercy, and ſalvation; and being accompanied with the Spirit and grace of God, is the power of God unto ſalvation; and mighty through him for the removing the hardneſs of men's hearts, and bringing them into ſubjection and obedience to Chriſt.

℣. 21. And they utterly deſtroyed all that was in the city, &c.] All the inhabitants of it, by the direction of Joſhua, and according to the order of the the Lord, Deut. vii. 1, 2. being guilty of capital crimes, which deſerved death, as idolatry, inceſt, &c. both men and women, young and old; neither ſex, nor age were ſpared: and ox, and ſheep, and aſs, with the edge of the ſword; in which creatures chiefly lay the ſubſtance of the eaſtern people; ſee Job i. 3.

℣. 22. But Joſhua had ſaid unto the two men that had ſpied out the country, &c.] Whom he had ſent on that errand, ch. ii. 1. and what follows he had ſaid unto them before the people entered into the city, and perhaps before the walls of it fell; and indeed from ℣. 16, 17, it appears to have been ſaid at the time he gave the people orders to ſhout: go into the harlot's houſe; he does not mention her name, but they full well knew who he meant: and bring out thence the woman, and all that ſhe hath; not ſo much her ſubſtance, as her father's houſhold, ſhe had got together there, that they might be ſaved, as had been promiſed her: as ye ſware unto her; ſo that this order was partly on account of her kindneſs to them, ℣. 17. and partly on account of the oath which they had taken, and which Joſhua would have inviolably kept.

℣. 23. And the young men that were ſpies went in, and brought out Rahab, &c.] Not only went into the city, but into Rahab's houſe, which they knew again by the ſcarlet thread hung out at the window of it. But here a difficulty occurs, how they could be ſaid to go into her houſe, when it was built on the town-wall, ch. ii. 15. and that was now fallen down flat. Abarbinel thinks that when the ſpies went round the city, they ſaw the ſcarlet thread in the window of her houſe, and ſet their eyes on the houſe, or wiſtly obſerved it; and marked it in ſuch manner, that after the fall of the wall they went to the place of her houſe, and brought her out, though her houſe was broken down, and no wall ſtanding: but then they could not be ſaid properly to go into her houſe, and bring her out. Kimchi is of opinion, that not all the wall of the city fell, but what was over-againſt the camp of Iſrael; and that the houſe of Rahab was on the wall on the other ſide: but it ſeems by the account of it as if the whole wall fell; and the apoſtle ſays, the walls of Jericho fell down, Heb. xi. 30. all of them; and ſo the ſeptuagint verſion of ℣. 20. "and the whole wall, or all the wall fell round about:" And I ſee not why it may not be thought that the whole wall fell, excepting that ſmall part of it on which Rahab's houſe ſtood; and that ſtanding alone would make the miracle the greater, and ſhow the divine approbation of ſaving Rahab and her family: beſides, if the wall ſunk down in its place all around into the earth, as the Jews underſtand the phraſe; ſee the note on ℣. 5. the houſe might continue on it firm and unmoved, going down with it to the ſurface of the earth, where it may be ſuppoſed the top of the wall was; and ſo they might go in and take her out, and preſerve her from being deſtroyed with the reſt of the inhabitants; and not only her, but her father and her mother, and her brethren, and all that ſhe had; all other relations that were with her, particularly her ſiſters, which are in her requeſt, ch. ii. 13. with all that appertained to her brethren and ſiſters, which is there expreſſed alſo: and they brought out all her kindred; before mentioned, or if there were any other of her relations ſhe had taken into her houſe for ſafety; or all her families [e], for her father's houſhold might be branched out into divers families, and become numerous, and ſo be an emblem of the number of Gentile ſinners ſaved by Chriſt the antitype of Joſhua: and left them without the camp of Iſrael; until they became proſelytes, and embraced the religion of Iſrael, as Kimchi remarks. However, being Gentiles, ſome external rites and ceremonies were to be performed upon them, as well as a declaration at leaſt of their renouncing idolatry, was required of them, before they could be admitted into the camp of Iſrael; and which was required even of a proſelyte of the gate, or of one that was only a ſojourner among them.

℣. 24. And they burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein, &c.] As Babylon the great, of which this city was an emblem, as has been obſerved on ℣. 20. will be burnt with fire alſo, Rev. xviii. 8. only the ſilver and the gold, and the veſſels of braſs and iron, they put into the treaſury of the houſe of the Lord; ſee the note on ℣. 19.

℣. 25. And Joſhua ſaved Rahab the harlot alive, &c.] From periſhing by the ſword, as the reſt of the inhabitants did. Kimchi ſays, ſome interpret it of his giving her food, and an inheritance by which ſhe might live; and Joſephus [f] intimates the ſame: he ſays, he gave her fields, and had her in great honour and eſteem; and it is the notion of ſome Jewiſh writers, that he took her to wife, and that this is meant by ſaving her alive; which ſenſe Kimchi diſapproves of, as being foreign; beſides, it was not Joſhua, but Salmon, a prince in Iſrael, that married her, Matt. i. 5. and her father's houſehold, and all ſhe had; that is, he ſaved alive all her relations, and it may be her cattle, if ſhe had any; and thoſe of her kindred alſo, as their ſheep, oxen, and aſſes, when thoſe of others were killed, ℣. 21. Some alſo underſtand this of intermarriages of principal perſons in Iſrael with ſome of her father's family; but it only ſignifies that their lives were ſpared, when the whole city was deſtroyed with the edge of the ſword: and ſhe dwelleth in Iſrael even unto this day; which may be meant either perſonally of Rahab, who was living and dwelt in the land of Canaan, when this hiſtory was written; and ſerves to ſtrengthen the opinion, that Joſhua was the writer of it, and to explain the meaning of the phraſe unto this day, elſewhere uſed in this book; and to remove any objection from it againſt his being the author of it; or elſe of her dwelling there in her poſterity, and ſo ſhe might dwell in it unto the times of the Meſſiah, who ſprang from her, Matt. i. 5. becauſe ſhe hid the meſſengers which Joſhua ſent to ſpy out Jericho; this was the reaſon of her and her father's family being ſaved alive; ſee the note on ℣. 17.

℣. 26. And Joſhua adjured them at that time, &c.] When the city was burnt and ſpoiled; not that he adjured the people individually, or one by one, which was not very practicable, but in a general way: ſaying, curſed be the man before the Lord; let him be curſed by him with the curſes written in the book of the law; and let him be driven from him, from his preſence, as Cain was: that riſeth up, and buildeth this city Jericho; that riſes up in future time, and rebuilds it; for it can't be thought that after ſuch an adjuration, any one would ſtart up quickly, and rebuild it: he ſhall lay the foundation thereof in his firſt-born, and in his youngeſt ſon ſhall he ſet up the gates of it; that is, whilſt he is laying, or as ſoon as he has laid the foundation of the city, his eldeſt ſon ſhould die; and as he went on with the building, other ſons of his, if he had more more than two ſhould be taken away by death likewiſe, and by the time he has finiſhed it, ſignified by ſetting up the gates of it, both for ornament and ſecurity, his youngeſt and laſt ſon ſhould die alſo; ſo that his whole poſterity ſhould be taken away, as a curſe of God upon him for rebuilding the city; which was fulfilled in Hiel the Bethelite, the rebuilder of this city in the times of Ahab, 5 or 600 years after this adjuration was made, when either it was forgotten or however little regarded: Maimonides obſerves [g], that this was made that the miracle might remain in perpetual memory, for whoever ſhould ſee the wall ſunk in the earth, it would be plain and clear to him that this was not the form of a building demoliſhed, but that it fell by a miracle; and yet this city became a very flouriſhing one in after-times, we ſoon hear of the ſchool of the prophets in it, 2 Kings ii. 5. here, Strabo [h] ſays, was a royal palace, where, as Joſephus [i] relates, Herod died, and who ſpeaks of an Amphitheatre and Hippodrome in it; in this city ſometimes the Sanhedrim ſat, and a great number of the ſtationary prieſts dwelt, even half a ſtation, twelve thouſand of them, all which is obſerved by doctor Lightfoot [k]; our Lord himſelf honoured it with his preſence, Luke xix. 1.

℣. 27. So the Lord was with Joſhua, &c.] Counſelling and directing him what to do, proſpering and ſucceeding him in all that he engaged; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was for the "help of Joſhua;" the eſſential Word, Chriſt the ſon of God, called the captain of the Lord's hoſt, ch. v. 14, 15. and who continued with him ſpeaking to him and giving him orders, ch. vi. 2. and his fame was noiſed throughout all the country; for his wiſdom and courage, for the wonderful things done for him and by him, and the great ſucceſs that attended him, through the power and preſence of God with him; which ſtruck terror into the inhabitants of the land, and made his conqueſt of it the more eaſy.

CHAP. VII.

FOR the treſpaſs of Achan the children of Iſrael were ſmitten and put to flight by the men of Ai, ℣. 1—5. which gave him and the elders of the people great concern, both for Iſrael and for the name of the Lord, which was expreſſed by Joſhua in prayer to God, ℣. 6—9. when the Lord informed him of the reaſon of it, and gave him directions for finding out the guilty perſon, and for the puniſhment of him, ℣. 10—15. which directions Joſhua followed, and the perſon was found out, who being urged to a confeſſion made one, ℣. 16—21. upon which he and all he had, with the things he had taken were burnt with fire, ℣. 22—26.

℣. 1. But the children of Iſrael committed a treſpaſs in the accurſed thing, &c.] Or concerning it, with reſpect to it, by taking part of what was devoted to another uſe and forbidden theirs: this was done, not by the whole body of the people, only by one of them; but it not being diſcovered who it was, it was imputed to the whole, on whom it lay to find out the guilty perſon and puniſh him, or elſe the whole muſt ſuffer for it: this chapter begins with a but, and draws a vail over the fame and glory of Joſhua, obſerved in the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter: for Achan the ſon of Carmi, the ſon of Zabdi, the ſon of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, took of the accurſed thing; of what was devoted to the Lord and to ſacred uſes; this he had taken to himſelf out of the ſpoil of the city of Jericho, for his own uſe, contrary to the command of God: his deſcent is particularly deſcribed, that it might be known of what family and tribe he was; and it is traced up to Zerah who was a ſon of Judah, Gen. xxxviii. 30. and the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt the children of Iſrael; becauſe of the ſin of Achan.

℣. 2. And Joſhua ſent men from Jericho to Ai, &c.] Which was the next city of importance, though not ſo large as Jericho, and was, as the Jews ſay [l], three miles diſtant from it; Abarbinel ſays [m], four miles, and ſo Bunting [n]; Jerom [o] ſays, that in his times very few ruins of it appeared, only the place was ſhewn where it ſtood: which is beſide Bethaven; a name by which Bethel in after-times was called, Hoſ. iv. 15. but here it is manifeſtly a diſtinct place from it; juſt hard by or near to this place, as Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it, was the city of Ai: Bethaven ſeems to have been the ſuburbs of it, or however was very near unto it: on the eaſt ſide of Bethel; near to which Abraham built an altar, as did Jacob alſo, and which in former times was called Luz, Gen. xii. 8. and xxxv. 1, 3, 6, 7. and was well known in later ages by the name of Bethel; it was reckoned about a mile from Ai: the ſituation of this city is ſo particularly deſcribed to diſtinguiſh it from another city of this name, Ai of the Amorites, Jer. xlix. 3. and is here called that Ai, that well known Ai, as Kimchi obſerves: and ſpake unto them; at the time he ſent them, when he gave them their orders to go thither: ſaying, go up and view the country; the mountainous part of it; for they were now in a plain, where Jericho was ſeated; and obſerve what place was moſt proper to attack next, and which the beſt way of coming at it: and the men went up and viewed Ai; what a ſort of a city it was, how large, and what its fortifications, and what avenues were to it: by this it appears that Ai was built upon an hill, or at leaſt was higher than Jericho and its plains; and with this agrees what a traveller ſays [p] of it, it is a village full of large ruins, (in this he differs from Jerom) and from hence are ſeen the valley of Jericho, the dead ſea, Gilgal, and mount Quarantania, and many other places towards the eaſt.

℣. 3. And they returned unto Joſhua, and ſaid unto him, let not all the people go up, &c.] After they had reconnoitred the place, they came back to their general, and gave it as their opinion, that there was no need for the whole army to go up againſt the city: but let about two or three thouſand men go up and ſmite Ai; ſuch a number they judged were ſufficient to take it: and make not all the people to labour thither; carrying their tents, bearing their their armour, and going up hill: for they are but few; the inhabitants of Ai, men and women making but 12,000; ch. viii 25.

℣. 4. So there went up thither of the people about 3,000 men, &c.] Joshua detached from the army the largest number proposed, that there might be strength enough to take the place; and those he sent under proper officers to Ai, who went up to the very gate of the city, as appears from the following verse: and they fled before the men of Ai; for upon their appearing at the gate of their city, they came out with all their forces against them, and as soon as they did, the children of Israel durst not face them, but without engaging with them fled at once: God having forsaken them, their courage failed, the dread of their enemies falling on them.

℣. 5. And the men of Ai smote of them about 36 men, &c.] In the pursuit of them, which were but few, but a sufficient rebuke of providence; their loss was but small, but their shame and disgrace great: for they chased them from before the gate; the gate of the city of Ai: even unto Shebarim; not that there was a place of this name before, but it was so called from hence, because there they were broken, as Kimchi observes; and the Targum and Jarchi render it, "until they were bro-"ken," their lines broken, not being able to retreat in order, but were scattered, and fled to their camp as they could: Gussetius [q] thinks it was the name of a place, but not so called for the above reason, but because there lay broken pieces of the rock scattered about: and smote them in the going down; the hill from Ai; Morad rendered going down, may be taken for the proper name of a place, and which Kimchi says, was a place before Ai, in which there was a declivity and descent, and in that place they smote them when they fled: wherefore the hearts of the people melted and became as water; that is, the whole body of the people, when this little army returned defeated, their spirits failed them, their courage was lost, their nerves were loosed, and they became languid, faint, and feeble; not that their loss was so great, but that they perceived God had forsaken them, and what the issue of this would be, they dreaded.

℣. 6. And Joshua rent his clothes, &c.] As was usual in those antient times, on hearing bad news, and as expressive of grief and trouble [r]; see Gen. xxxvii. 29, 34. Job i. 20. and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the Lord, until the even-tide; in a posture of adoration and prayer, in which he continued till even; how long that was cannot be said, since the time is not mentioned when the army returned from Ai; very probably it was some time in the afternoon: this was done before the ark of the Lord, the symbol of the divine presence, not in the most holy place, where that usually was, and into which Joshua might not enter, but in the tabernacle of the great court, over against where the ark was: he and the elders of Israel; either the elders of the people in the several tribes, or rather, the seventy elders, which were the Sanhedrim or council, and which attended Joshua and assisted him as such: and put dust upon their heads; another rite or ceremony used in times of mourning and distress, and that very antiently, before Joshua's time and after, see Job ii. 12. 1 Sam. iv. 12. 2 Sam. i. 2. and among various nations; so when Achilles bewailed the death of Patroclus, he is represented by Homer [s] taking with both his hands the black earth, and pouring it on his head; so Aristippus among the Athenians is said [t] to sprinkle dust on his head in token of mourning on a certain account.

℣. 7. And Joshua said, alas, O Lord God, &c.] What a miserable and distressed condition are we in? have pity and compassion on us; who could have thought it, that this would have been our case? wherefore hast thou at all brought this people over Jordan, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us; who are mentioned either for the whole people of the land of Canaan; or rather, because the people of Israel were now in that part of the country which they inhabited: these words discover much weakness, diffidence, and distrust, and bear some likeness to the murmurs of the children of Israel in the wilderness; but not proceeding from that malignity of spirit theirs did, but from a concern for the good of the people and the glory of God, they are not resented by him: would to God we had been content, and dwelt on the other side Jordan; in which he seems to cast the blame, not upon the Lord but upon himself and the people, who were not content to dwell on the other side, but were desirous of a larger and better country; and now ruin seemed to be the consequent of that covetous disposition and discontented mind.

℣. 8. O Lord, what shall I say, &c.] For the comfort and encouragement of the people of Israel, in vindication of thy power, and faithfulness, and against the charge of weakness in thyself, unfaithfulness to thy promises, and unkindness to thy people, brought by our enemies: when Israel hath turned their backs before their enemies? or after they have done it; what is to be said now, this being the case? he speaks as a man confounded, and at the utmost loss how to account for the power, the providence, and promises of God.

℣. 9. For the Canaanites, &c.] Those that dwell on the east and on the west of the land, see ch. xi. 3. who were one of the seven nations: and all the inhabitants of the land shall hear of it; of this defeat; not only the Amorites, among whom they now were, and the Canaanites before mentioned, but the Hittites, the Hivites, the Perizzites, and the Jebusites: and shall environ us round; come with all their forces from all parts of the land, and surround us, so that there will be no escaping for us: and cut off our name from the earth; utterly destroy us, that we shall be no more a nation and people, and the name of an Israelite no more be heard of, see Ps. lxxxiii. 4. and what wilt thou do unto thy great name? this, though mentioned last, was uppermost in the heart of Joshua, and was reserved by him as his strongest argument with God, to appear for them and save them; since his own glory, the glory of his perfections, his wisdom, goodness, power, truth, and faithfulness, was so much concerned in their salvation.

℣. 10. And the Lord said unto Joshua, get thee up, &c.] From the ground where he lay prostrate, with his face to it: this he said, not as refusing his supplication to him, but rather as encouraging and strengthening him; though chiefly he said this in order to instruct him, and that he might prepare for what he was to do: wherefore lieſt thou thus upon thy face? in this manner, ſo diſtreſſed and dejected; or for this thing, as the Targum, for this defeat of the army; ſome thing elſe is to be done beſides prayer and ſupplication.

✡. 11. Iſrael hath ſinned, &c.] For though one only had committed the ſin, others might have known of it and connived at it; however, there was ſin committed among them, and it muſt be diſcovered, the guilt charged, and puniſhment inflicted: and they have alſo tranſgreſſed my covenant which I commanded them; not the law given on mount Sinai, called the covenant, though in general that was now broken, inaſmuch as they then promiſed to hear and obey all that the Lord ſhould ſay unto them, Exod. xxiv. 7. but it particularly means the command given, ch. v. 18. that they ſhould take nothing of that which was devoted to the Lord, and thereby make the camp of Iſrael a curſe, and trouble it; and which ſhews that that was not a command given by Joſhua of himſelf, but what (he had from the Lord: for they have even taken of the accurſed thing; ſomewhat of that which was devoted to ſacred uſes: and have alſo ſtolen; taken it away, not openly but by ſtealth, as being conſcious they ought not to have done what they did, and ſo ſinned both againſt God and their own conſciences: and diſſembled alſo; or lied [u]; pretended they had not taken any of the accurſed thing, when they had; and it is probable that the people in general, the ſeveral tribes, families, and houſes were examined by proper officers, whether they had taken any of the ſpoil or no, to themſelves, and they all denied they had, and he that had taken it among the reſt; and perhaps was particularly aſked the queſtion, which he anſwered in the negative: and they have put it even amongſt their own ſtuff; their houſhold ſtuff, mixed them with their own goods that they might not be known; or put them in their own veſſels [w], for their own uſe and ſervice.

✡. 12. Therefore the children of Iſrael could not ſtand before their enemies, &c.] Being forſaken of God for the ſin committed among them: but turned their backs before their enemies; had not courage to face them, but fled as ſoon as they appeared: becauſe they were accurſed; of God for the accurſed thing that had been taken, as was threatened would be their caſe, ſhould they take any of it, ch. v. 18. neither will I be with you any more, until ye take away the accurſed thing from among you; that is, until they had put to death the perſon who had taken of the accurſed thing, and made himſelf thereby accurſed; and even all the camp of Iſrael; 'till this was done, the Lord would not be with them to protect and defend them, and give them ſucceſs againſt their enemies.

✡. 13. Up, ſanctify the people, &c.] The word up not only ſignifies getting up from the ground on which he lay, but to beſtir himſelf, and to be active in what he would now be enjoined and directed to do, and in the firſt place to ſanctify the people, that is, by giving them orders to do it themſelves: and ſay, ſanctify yourſelves againſt tomorrow; either by ſome ceremonial ablutions, or by the performance of moral duties, as prayer, repentance, and good works; or rather, they were to prepare themſelves, as the Targum and Kimchi interpret it, to get ready againſt the morrow, and expect to be thoroughly ſearched, in order to find out the perſon who had taken the accurſed thing: for thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, there is an accurſed thing in the midſt of thee, O Iſrael; an accurſed perſon, who had taken of what was devoted to the Lord for his own uſe, and ſo accurſed: thou canſt not ſtand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accurſed thing from among you; by putting him to death.

✡. 14. In the morning therefore ye ſhall be brought according to your tribes, &c.] One or more of every tribe, according to the number of them, were to be brought the next morning before Joſhua and the elders of Iſrael, the Sanhedrim and council of the nation, and very probably the tabernacle, where they aſſembled for this purpoſe: and it ſhall be that the tribe which the Lord taketh; how a tribe and ſo a family or houſhold were taken is differently underſtood; what ſome of the Jewiſh writers ſay deſerves no regard, as the detention of perſons by the ark, or of the dulneſs of the ſtones in the Urim and Thummim: it ſeems beſt to underſtand the whole affair as done by caſting lots [x]; ſo Joſephus [y] and Ben Gerſom; and they might in this way be ſaid to be taken by the Lord, becauſe the diſpoſition of the lot is by him, Prov. xvi. 33. now it is ſaid, that the tribe that ſhould be taken, as Judah was from what follows, ſhall come according to the families; that is, the families in that tribe, meaning the heads of them, as Kimchi well obſerves; theſe were to come to the place where the lots were caſt: and the family which the Lord ſhall take ſhall come by houſholds; on whatſoever family in the tribe the lot ſhould fall, the heads of houſholds in that family ſhould appear and have lots caſt on them: and the houſhold which the Lord ſhall take, ſhall come man by man; that houſhold that ſhould be taken by lot, the men thereof, the heads of the houſe, ſhould come each of them and have lots caſt on them, that the particular man that ſinned might be diſcovered.

✡. 15. And it ſhall be, that he that is taken with the accurſed thing, ſhall be burnt with fire, &c.] He that is taken by lot, and the accurſed thing found with him, this ſhould be the death, burning, one of the four capital puniſhments with the Jews: this was ordered in this caſe, becauſe the city of Jericho, accurſed or devoted, was burnt with fire, ch. v. 24. he and all that he hath; the particulars of which are enumerated, ✡. 24. becauſe he hath tranſgreſſed the covenant of the Lord; ſee the note on ✡. 11. and becauſe he hath wrought folly in Iſrael; as all ſin and every tranſgreſſion of the law is, and was the cauſe of Iſrael's turning their backs on their enemies; which, as Abarbinel ſays, was folly, and made the people of Iſrael look fooliſh, mean, and contemptible: the word has alſo the ſignification of a dead carcaſe, and may poſſibly have reſpect to the 36 men whoſe death he was the occaſion of, and therefore juſtly ought to die himſelf.

✡. 16. So Joſhua roſe up early in the morning, &c.] Which ſhewed his readineſs and diligence to obey the command of God; and as there was much work to do, it required that he ſhould riſe early: and brought Iſrael by their tribes; before the Lord, at the tabernacle, where he and the high-prieſt and elders attended; each tribe was thither brought brought by their repreſentatives: and the tribe of Judah was taken; either his ſtone in the breaſt-plate of the high-prieſt looked dull, as ſome ſay, or rather the lot being caſt fell on that tribe.

℣. 17. And he brought the family of Judah, &c.] That is, the tribe of Judah, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it [z]; or rather, the ſeveral families in that tribe, even the heads of them; and he took the family of the Zarhites; which deſcended from Zerah the ſon of Judah; that was taken by lot: and he brought the family of the Zarhites man by man; and caſt lots on them: and Zabdi was taken; that part of the family of the Zarhites which ſprung from Zabdi a ſon of Zerah.

℣. 18. And he brought his houſhold man by man, &c.] The houſhold of Zabdi, the heads of each houſe therein: and Achan the ſon of Carmi, the ſon of Zabdi, the ſon of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, was taken; the lot fell upon him and he was laid hold on, and detained.

℣. 19. And Joſhua ſaid unto Achan, my ſon, &c.] Treating him in a very humane, affectionate, and reſpectable manner, though ſo great a criminal, being a ſubject of his, and of the ſame religion and nation: give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Iſrael; by acknowledging his omniſcience, juſtice, power, truth, and faithfulneſs, as in his promiſes ſo in his threatenings: and make confeſſion unto him; of the ſin he had been guilty of; this Joſhua might urge, partly for his own good, who might more reaſonably expect the forgiveneſs of his ſin: ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [a], whoever confeſſes has a part in the world to come, for ſo we find concerning Achan, Joſh. vii. 19. and partly for the glory of God, this being the inſtance in which he is directed to give it to him; and partly on account of others, particularly the tribe, family, and houſhold to whom he belonged, who after all might not be ſatisfied thoroughly that he was guilty, unleſs he had confeſſed it: according to Maimonides [b], this was but a temporary law on which Achan was put to death; for, he ſays, our law condemns no man to death on his own confeſſion, nor on the prophecy of a prophet, who ſays that he committed ſuch a fact; and it was not on his confeſſion, but by the order of God, determining the affair by lot, that he was put to death: the confeſſion Joſhua directs to was not what was made to man but to God, that is, of the evil of it, and as committed againſt God, though the fact itſelf was to be owned before man as follows: and tell me now what thou haſt done, hide it not from me; what were the particular things he had taken; the lot ſhewed he had taken ſomething, but what that was, as yet was unknown, and where it was; and this Joſhua deſires him, he would inform him of and ſatisfy him about, and without any reſerve openly declare the truth.

℣. 20. And Achan anſwered Joſhua, and ſaid, &c.] He made a free and open confeſſion of his ſin: indeed I have ſinned againſt the Lord God of Iſrael; againſt him who had been ſo good to Iſrael in many inſtances, and particularly in delivering Jericho into their hands in ſo extraordinary a manner; againſt a law of his, reſpecting the ſpoil of that city, which ſin was the more aggravated thereby; and that he had committed the ſin he was taken for and charged with, he owns was a true and real fact: and thus and thus have I done; ſuch and ſuch things have I taken, and in the manner as follows.

℣. 21. When I ſaw among the ſpoils a goodly Babyloniſh garment, &c.] One, as the Targum adds, for no more was taken; a garment made of Babyloniſh wool, as Jarchi; or a valuable garment made in Babylon, called Shinar, for that is the word in the text, ſo Kimchi and Abarbinel; and Babylonian garments were in great eſteem in other nations: Pliny ſays [c], Babylon was famous for garments interwoven with pictures of divers colours, and which gave name to them; and Plutarch [d] relates, that Cato in his great modeſty, and being an enemy to luxury, having a Babyloniſh garment that came to him by inheritance, ordered it immediately to be ſold: the Vulgate Latin verſion calls it a ſcarlet robe; and in ſome Jewiſh writings [e], it is interpreted, a garment of Babylonian purple; as if it only reſpected the colour; and purple and ſcarlet are ſometimes promiſcuouſly uſed and put for the ſame, ſee Matt. xxvii. 28. Mar. xv. 17. and were the colour worn by kings: and Joſephus here calls it a royal garment, wholly interwoven with gold [f]; and ſome have thought it to be the garment of the king of Jericho, which is not unlikely; however, it is much more probable, than that Jericho was ſubject to the king of Babylon, and that he had palaces in Jericho, and when he came thither was clothed with this robe, ſo Jarchi; as is elſewhere ſaid [g] by others, that he had a deputy who reſided in Jericho, who ſent dates to the king of Babylon, and the king ſent him gifts, among which was a garment of Shinar or Babylon: and 200 ſhekels of ſilver; which, if coined money was near 25 pounds: and a wedge of gold of 50 ſhekels weight; or a tongue of gold [h]; a plate of gold in the ſhape of a tongue, as Kimchi and Abarbinel; a piece of unwrought gold which weighed 50 ſhekels, and worth of our money about 75 pounds, according to Brerewood [i]: where he ſaw theſe, and from whence he took them is not ſaid; according to ſome Jewiſh writers, theſe belonged to one of their idols; it is ſaid [k], he ſaw the Teraphim and the ſilver they offered before it, and the garment which was ſpread before it, and the tongue or wedge of gold in its mouth; and he deſired them in his heart, and went and took them, and hid them in the midſt of his tent: and the Samaritan chronicle [l] makes him confeſs that he went into a temple in Jericho and found the above things there: and Maſius conjectures that the wedge of gold was a little golden ſword, with which the men of Jericho had armed their god, ſince an antient poet [m] calls a little ſword a little tongue: then I coveted them, and took them; he is very particular in the account, and gradually proceeds in relating the temptation he was under, and the prevalence of it; it began with his eyes, which were catched with the goodlineſs of the garments, and the riches he ſaw; theſe affected his heart and ſtirred up covetous deſires, which influenced and directed his hands to take them: and behold they are hid in the earth in the midſt of my tent; Joſephus [n] ſays, he dug a deep hole or ditch in his tent, and put them there, that is, the Babyloniſh garment and the wedge of gold; which, as Ben

Ben Gerſom gathers from ℣. 25. was wrapt up and hid within the garment; which is not improbable, ſince otherwiſe no account is given of that: and the ſilver under it; the 200 ſhekels of ſilver lay under the garment in which was the wedge of gold, and ſo it lay under them both.

℣. 22. So Joſhua ſent meſſengers, &c.] Directly to Achan's tent, to ſee if it was as he had ſaid, and to bring the things with them: and they ran unto the tent; either for joy that the iniquity was diſcovered, as Kimchi; or that none of the tribe of Judah or of Achan's family or relations ſhould get there before them, and take them from thence and belie the lot; ſo Jarchi, Ben Gerſom, and Abarbinel; but, no doubt, it is remarked, to ſhew the readineſs and diligence of the meſſengers to obey the order of Joſhua: and behold, it was hid in his tent, and the ſilver under it; as Achan had ſaid.

℣. 23. And they took them out of the midſt of the tent, &c.] Out of the place, hole, or pit in which they were hid: and brought them to Joſhua and to the children of Iſrael; to Joſhua as the chief ruler, and to the elders and heads of the tribes aſſembled together: and laid them out before the Lord; or poured them out [o]; the golden wedge, out of the garment in which it was wrapped, and the 200 ſhekels of ſilver found under it: it ſeems as if theſe were poured or laid out ſeparately upon the ground before the tabernacle, where the ark of the Lord was, they belonging to the ſpoils which were devoted to him; as well as hereby they were plainly ſeen by the Iſraelites, that theſe were the very things which Achan had confeſſed.

℣. 24. And Joſhua, and all Iſrael with him, took Achan the ſon of Zerah, &c.] Joſhua and all Iſrael are mentioned, to ſhew the perfect agreement between Joſhua and the heads of the people in this affair of Achan, and in the nature and manner of his puniſhment: and the ſilver, and the garment, and the wedge of gold; which, though devoted to ſacred uſes, yet having been converted to another's uſe, and made his property, was not to be employed in the ſervice of the ſanctuary, but to be burnt with him: and his ſons and his daughters; who, according to Ben Gerſom, Abarbinel, and Abendana, were not brought forth to be put to death, only to be ſpectators of the ſentence of judgment and the execution of it, that they might keep themſelves from ſuch evil things; though, as Achan may be ſuppoſed to be a man in years, being but the fourth generation from Judah; his ſons and daughters were grown up in all probability, and might be acceſſaries in this affair; and ſo, as ſome Jewiſh writers remark, were worthy of death, becauſe they ſaw and knew what was done, and were ſilent and did not declare it [p]; and it ſeems by what is ſaid, ch. xxii. 20. that they died as well as Achan, ſince it is there ſaid, that man periſhed not alone in his iniquity; though it may be interpreted, of his ſubſtance, his cattle periſhing with him; and indeed from ℣. 25. it ſeems as if none were ſtoned but himſelf, that is, of his family; no mention is made of his wife, who, if he had any, as Kimchi obſerves, knew nothing of the matter, it being hid from her: and his oxen, and his aſſes, and his ſheep; in which lay his ſubſtance, as that of the eaſtern people generally did: and his tent and all that he had; the tent, he and his family dwelt in, with all the houſhold goods in it: and they brought them unto the valley of Achor; ſo called by anticipation here; for it had its name from the trouble Achan gave to Iſrael, and with which he was troubled himſelf: ſome render it, they brought them up [q]; and as it is more proper to deſcend into a valley, then to go up to it, it is thought there was a mountain between the camp of Iſrael and this valley, ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech; ſee Hoſ. ii. 15.

℣. 25. And Joſhua ſaid, why haſt thou troubled us, &c.] Been the occaſion of ſo much trouble to us, by committing this ſin: the Lord ſhall trouble thee this day; by the deſtruction of him and all that belonged to him: this is ſaid to ſhew that his puniſhment was of God, and according to his will: in the Miſnah [r] an emphaſis is laid on the phraſe this day, and it is obſerved; "this day thou ſhalt "be troubled, but thou ſhalt not be troubled in "the world to come;" ſuggeſting that though temporal puniſhment was inflicted on him, yet his iniquity was forgiven, and he would be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation; and as it may be hoped from the ingenuous confeſſion that he made, that he had true repentance for it, and forgiveneſs of it: and all Iſrael ſtoned him with ſtones; hence ſome gather, that only Achan himſelf ſuffered death, and not his ſons and daughters: and burnt them with fire after they had ſtoned them with ſtones; which the Jewiſh commentators underſtand of his oxen, aſſes, and ſheep; ſo Jarchi, Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel; likewiſe his tent, and houſhold goods, the Babyloniſh garment, gold and ſilver were burnt; and he himſelf alſo, for that is the expreſs order, ℣. 15. the Jews ſay, as particularly Jarchi obſerves, that he was ſtoned becauſe he prophaned the ſabbath, it being on the ſabbath-day that Jericho was taken, and ſtoning was the puniſhment of the ſabbath-breaker, and he was burnt on the account of the accurſed thing; ſo Abendana.

℣. 26. And they raiſed over him a great heap of ſtones unto this day, &c.] That is, at the place where he ſuffered, or where they laid his aſhes, they heaped up a pile of ſtones over him, as a monumunt whereby it might be known hereafter, where he was executed and was buried; and which pile continued to the writing of this hiſtory: ſuch ſort of funeral monuments were uſual with the heathens [s] alſo as well as with the Jews, ſee ch. viii. 29. 2 Sam. xviii. 17. ſo the Lord turned from the the fierceneſs of his anger; or the effects of it ceaſed; the outward face of things was altered, the dealings of God in his providence with Iſrael were changed; though, properly ſpeaking, there is no change in God, nor ſuch affections and paſſions in him as in man: wherefore the name of the place was called the valley of Acher unto this day; from the trouble Achan met with, and the people of Iſrael on his account, ſee ℣. 24. and ſo it was called in the days of Iſaiah and Hoſea, Iſ. lxv. 10. Hoſ. ii. 15. and where it is propheſied of as what ſhould be in time to come: according to Bunting [t], it was 12 miles from Jeruſalem; Jerom [u] ſays, it was at the north of Jericho, but Lamy [w], following Bonfrerius, places it to the ſouth; ſee ch. xv. 7.

CHAP. VIII.

JOSHUA is encouraged to go up and take Ai, and is directed what method to make uſe of, ℣. 1, 2. accordingly he ſet an ambuſh on the weſt ſide of it, and he and the reſt of the army went up before it, ℣. 3—13. which, when the king of Ai ſaw, he and all his forces came out againſt them, and the Iſraelites making a feint as if they were beaten, drew on the men of Ai to purſue them, upon which the ambuſh aroſe and entered the city and ſet fire to it, ℣. 14—19. the ſmoke of which being obſerved by Joſhua and Iſrael they turned back upon the purſuers, and the ambuſh ſallying out of the city behind them, made an entire deſtruction of them, then ſlew all the inhabitants, took the ſpoil, burnt the city, and hanged the king of it, ℣. 20—29. after this Joſhua built an altar at Ebal, wrote the law on ſtones, and read the bleſſings and curſes in it before all Iſrael, ℣. 30—35.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, &c.] Immediately after the execution of Achan, the fierceneſs of his anger being turned away: fear not, neither be thou diſmayed; on account of the defeat of his troops he had ſent to take Ai: take all the people of war with thee; all above 20 years of age, which with the 40,000 of the tribes on the other ſide Jordan he brought over with him, muſt make an army of 500,000 men; theſe Joſhua was to take with him, not ſo much to animate and encourage him, or to terrify the enemy, nor becauſe ſuch a number was neceſſary for the reduction of Ai, which was but a ſmall city; but that all might have a part in the ſpoil and plunder of it, which they were denied at Jericho, and chiefly to draw all the men out of the city, ſeeing ſuch a numerous hoſt approaching: and ariſe, go up to Ai; which lay high, and Joſhua being now in the plains of Jericho, ſee the note on ch. vii. 2. ſee, I have given into thy hand the king of Ai, and his people, and his city, and his land; this city, though a ſmall one, had a king over it, as moſt cities in the land of Canaan had; the number of his people in it were 12,000, and his land were the fields about it; all which were given to Joſhua by the Lord, and were as ſure as if he had them already in his hand.

℣. 2. And thou ſhalt do to Ai and her king, as thou didſt to Jericho and her king, &c.] Burn the one and ſlay the other: only the ſpoil thereof, and the cattle thereof ſhall ye take for a prey unto yourſelves; which they were not allowed to do at Jericho: lay thee an ambuſh for the city behind it; at the weſt ſide of it: ſome have called in queſtion the lawfulneſs of the ambuſh, but as this was appointed by the Lord, there is no room for it.

℣. 3. So Joſhua aroſe, and all the people of war, to go up againſt Ai, &c.] As the Lord had commanded him: and Joſhua choſe out 30,000 mighty men of valour; out of all the men of war; theſe were a ſelect company, picked men, not the whole army, as ſome have thought, for he was ordered to take all the people of war, as he did: and ſent them away by night; from the main army, that they might paſs the city and get behind it undiſcovered, for they were ſent for an ambuſh; and of theſe ſome were to take the city and be left in it to burn it, and ſome to ſmite the men of Ai, as Abarbinel notes.

℣. 4. And he commanded them, ſaying, &c.] At the time he ſent them away; behold, ye ſhall lie in wait againſt the city, even behind the city; that is, on the weſt ſide of it, ℣. 9. go not very far from the city, but be ye all ready; to enter into it, as ſoon as the forces are drawn out eaſtward to meet the army of Iſrael.

℣. 5. And I and all the people that are with me will approach unto the city, &c.] That is, Joſhua with the main body of the army would march up to the city the next morning, in order to draw out the inhabitants of it to fight them: and it ſhall come to paſs, when they come out againſt us, as at the firſt; as they had done before, when the 3,000 were ſent againſt them, ch. vii. 4, 5. that we will flee before them; as the 3,000 did, which would animate them to purſue them with the greater eagerneſs, and to a diſtance from their city.

℣. 6. For they will come out after us, &c.] Of which there could be no doubt, when they ſhould ſee them run from them: till we have drawn them from the city; ſome diſtance from it, that they could not return ſoon enough to ſave it from the ambuſh, or prevent their entrance into it and firing it: for they will ſay, they will flee before us, as at the firſt; they run away as they did before, and let us purſue them and ſmite them as we did then: therefore we will flee before them; to draw them out of the city and make your way eaſy to get into it.

℣. 7. Then ye ſhall riſe up from the ambuſh, &c.] When they ſhould ſee a ſignal made, that in ℣. 18, 19. and when their watch, they might ſet in a proper place, ſhould ſee Iſrael flee, and the men of Ai at a diſtance from their city, purſuing, and give notice of it to the ambuſh: and ſeize upon the city; enter into it, and take poſſeſſion of it, its fortreſſes, and ſecure its paſſes: for the Lord your God will deliver it into your hand; Joſhua expreſſes himſelf with great confidence, having the promiſe of God and relying on it.

℣. 8. And it ſhall be when ye have taken the city, &c.] Entered it and become maſters of it: that ye ſhall ſet the city on fire; not the whole city, only ſome out houſes of it, to make a ſmoke which might be ſeen both by Iſrael and the men of Ai, for different purpoſes; for the ſpoil of the city was firſt to be taken before it was utterly burnt with fire: according to the commandment of the Lord ſhall ye do; plunder the city, deſtroy the inhabitants of it, and then burn it: ſee I have commanded you; delivered the command of the Lord unto them, and therefore were left without excuſe, and could not plead ignorance; beſides, he was their general, and he expected his orders to be obeyed, as they ought to have been.

℣. 9. Joſhua therefore ſent them forth, &c.] The 30,000 choſen men: and they went to lie in ambuſh; as they were ordered: and abode between Bethel and Ai, on the weſt ſide of Ai; for as Ai was on the eaſt of Bethel, ch. vii. 2. Bethel muſt be on the weſt of Ai, as Jarchi notes: but Joſhua lodged that night among the people; the main body of the army, to direct them in the affair of war, how they ſhould behave the next day, when they came to fight; and to inſpire them with courage and confidence, that they might not be afraid, becauſe of their having been ſmitten before by this people, ſo Ben Gerſom; or rather that he and they might be ready in the morning to march towards Ai, as Jarchi and Kimchi.

℣. 10. And Joſhua roſe up early in the morning and numbered the people, &c.] To ſee if there were any wanting, and to put them in proper order for their march: and went up, he and the elders of Iſrael, before the people to Ai; theſe elders were either the ſeventy elders who went with Joſhua as council to him; or it may be rather, they were inferior officers who went at the head of their reſpective corps under them.

℣. 11. And all the people, even the people of war that were with him, and went up and drew nigh, &c.] To the city of Ai: and came before the city; as if they intended to beſiege it, ſtorm it, or force an entrance into it: and pitched on the north ſide of Ai; which was judged fitteſt for the purpoſe: now there was a valley between them and Ai; which the Rabbins call the valley of Halacah, as Jarchi ſays; ſo that they were upon an hill, at leaſt on riſing ground, and might the more eaſily be ſeen by the inhabitants of Ai, whom they wanted to draw out of their city.

℣. 12. And he took about 5000 men, and ſet them to lie in ambuſh, &c.] This was another ambuſh, as both Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve; and the latter adds, perhaps he ſet them nearer the city than the former; though ſome are of opinion that theſe are the ſame ambuſh ſpoken of, whoſe number is here given, being ſet on the ſame ſide of the city; and they ſuppoſe that Joſhua had with him but 30,000 men in all, 5,000 of which he ſent to lie in ambuſh, and the other 25,000 remained with him; but it ſeems clear, that all the men of war were to be taken and were taken by them, and that out of them 30,000 were ſent by him to lie in wait at firſt, and now 5,000 more: between Bethel and Ai, on the weſt ſide of the city; and though they were on the ſame ſide of the city with the firſt and larger ambuſh, yet, as Abarbinel obſerves, they might be ſet nearer the city and to the army; and he ſuppoſes the firſt ambuſh was to take the city; and the ſecond little ambuſh, as he calls it, was placed, that when the men of the city came out, they might make a noiſe and a ſtir, and ſkirmiſh with them, that ſo they might not come upon the camp ſuddenly.

℣. 13. And when they had ſet the people, &c.] In battle array, as in 1 Kings xx. 12. that is, Joſhua and the officers of the army: even all the hoſt that was on the north of the city; where Joſhua and the main army were: and the liers in wait on the weſt of the city; both the firſt and ſecond ambuſh; when all were prepared and got ready by their ſeveral officers, to act the part they were to do: Joſhua went that night into the midſt of the valley; according to Ben Gerſom, to ſee whether the guards or centinels which were placed there were awake or aſleep, leſt the men of Ai ſhould come ſuddenly upon them and ſmite them; but perhaps it might be to pray and meditate.

℣. 14. And it came to paſs when the king of Ai ſaw it, &c.] Not the ambuſh on the weſt ſide, but the hoſt or army on the north ſide, or however, ſome of his people gave him notice of it: that they haſted and roſe up early; or made haſte to riſe out of their beds, on the alarm given of Iſrael's near approach: and the men of the city went out againſt Iſrael to battle; being raiſed out of their beds and accoutred with armour, and put into a military order, they marched out with their king at the head of them, to give Iſrael battle: he and all his people at a time appointed, before the plain; which was before the city, the ſame with the valley mentioned, ℣. 11, 13. the city was built on an eminence, and this plain or valley lay at the bottom of it; and on an eminence on the other ſide of the valley, the army of Iſrael was pitched; wherefore the king of Ai and all his men of war went out hither to attack Iſrael, and this is ſaid to be at an appointed time: it is difficult to ſay what is meant by it, when they ſeem to have hurried out as faſt as they could, as ſoon as they perceived the Iſraelites were near them: Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel think, it was the ſame time of the day they went out at firſt, which the king might chuſe as lucky, being before ſucceſsful, and to encourage the men, that as they conquered then they ſhould now; which ſeems not amiſs, though perhaps, it rather deſigns an appointed place, as their rendezvous, and where to attack Iſrael, and where they had been before victorious: but he wiſt not that there were liers in ambuſh againſt him behind the city; that he knew nothing of, and therefore took no precaution againſt them to prevent their deſign.

℣. 15. And Joſhua and all Iſrael made as if they were beaten before them, &c.] Or ſmitten, as ſome of them might be in the purſuit: and fled by the way of the wilderneſs; not a barren deſert, but, according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, a place for the paſture of cattle; though perhaps it is the ſame with the wilderneſs of Bethaven, ch. xviii. 12. Epiphanius [w] makes mention of the wilderneſs of Bethel and Ephraim as near Jericho.

℣. 16. And all the people that were in Ai, were called together to purſue after them, &c.] Becauſe the hoſt of Iſrael was very numerous, it was judged proper that all the people in Ai ſhould aſſiſt in purſuing them, not only to kill the more in the purſuit, but to carry off the ſpoil and priſoners they ſhould take; or rather, the ſenſe is, that all the people in Ai, which were come out with the king to battle, when they ſaw Iſrael flee, cried [x], or ſhouted, as ſoldiers do when victorious, in or while purſuing [y] after them: and they purſued after Joſhua, and were drawn away from the city; at ſome conſiderable diſtance from it; which was the deſign, to be anſwered by feigning a flight.

℣. 17. And there was not a man left in Ai or Bethel that went not out after Iſrael, &c.] For as theſe two places were very near to each other, but a mile aſunder; they were in confederacy, and acted together, and could eaſily be called to the help of each other when required: though there is a difficulty how the men of Bethel could join thoſe of Ai, when the ambuſh lay between them both, ℣. 12. they either went another way, or the ambuſh purpoſely let them paſs, for fear of a diſcovery by a ſkirmiſh with them, and that Bethel as well as Ai might be cleared of its armed inhabitants, and ſo fall an eaſy prey to them as well as Ai: this muſt be underſtood only of men of war; for otherwiſe there were inhabitants left, as old men, and ſuch as were unfit for war, afterwards ſlain, ℣. 24, 25. and they left the city open; they did not ſtay to ſhut the gates, nor left porters or any guards about, to take care of, protect, and defend the city: and purſued after Iſrael; with great eagerneſs gerneſs and vehemence, not having the leaſt apprehenſion of their city being in any danger.

℣. 18. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, ſtretch out the ſpear that is in thy hand towards Ai, &c.] On which was a flag, as Abarbinel and Ben Melech think; and which is not improbable, and ſerved for a ſignal for the ambuſh to come out and ſeize the city, as both they and Jarchi obſerve, as well as a ſignal alſo to the army of Iſrael to prepare, to turn and face about, and engage with the enemy; though they did not actually do this until they ſaw the ſmoke of the city, ℣. 21. for I will give it into thine hand; of which the ſtretching out of his ſpear ſeems alſo to be a confirming ſign to him, and which he kept ſtretched out until all the inhabitants of Ai were deſtroyed, ℣. 26. and Joſhua ſtretched out the ſpear that he had in his hand toward the city; and therefore muſt turn himſelf towards it; and it is highly probable, that at the ſame time there was a full ſtop of the army, and that they immediately turned or prepared to turn about.

℣. 19. And the ambuſh aroſe quickly out of their place, &c.] As ſoon as the centinels ſet in proper places obſerved the ſignal, and gave them notice of it, which was the ſtretching out of the ſpear, as appears by what follows: and they ran as ſoon as he had ſtretched out his hand; and the ſpear in his hand; from whence it is plain, that though the Lord is ſaid to bid Joſhua do this now, he had orders from him for it before, and the ambuſh muſt have been made acquainted with it before they were ſent away; and this was only a renewal of the order from the Lord, and which pointed out the proper time, the very criſis when it ſhould be ſtretched out: and they entered into the city; without any difficulty, the gates being open: and took it; took poſſeſſion of it, and the ſtrong holds in it; and haſted and ſet the city on fire; that is, they made haſte to ſet ſome houſes on fire as the ſignal to the army of Iſrael to return.

℣. 20. And when the men of Ai looked behind them, &c.] On ſome account or another, perhaps obſerving that the army of Iſrael made a full ſtop and was gazing at the city: they ſaw, and behold, the ſmoke of the city aſcended up to heaven; from whence they concluded an enemy was there, and had ſet fire to it: and they had no power to flee this way or that way; for if they turned back to their city there was an enemy, how powerful they knew not, poſſeſſed of it, and whom they might expect would meet them; and if they puſhed forward, there was the whole army of Iſrael againſt them, which now turned and faced them, ſhewing no fear of them: and the people that fled to the wilderneſs turned back upon the purſuers; the people of Iſrael that fled by the way of the wilderneſs, ℣. 15. turned about, and fell upon the men of Ai that purſued them.

℣. 21. And when Joſhua, &c.] Or for Joſhua[z]: and all Iſrael ſaw that the ambuſh had taken the city; which they knew by the ſmoke, as follows: and that the ſmoke of the city aſcended; in large columns, which ſufficiently indicated that the whole city was taken and fired by the ambuſh: then, or and they turned again and ſlew the men of Ai; great numbers of them.

℣. 22. And the other iſſued out off the city againſt them, &c.] That is, the ambuſh, or at leaſt a part of them: ſo that they were in the midſt of Iſrael, ſome on this ſide, and ſome on that ſide; or, as we commonly ſay, they were between two fires, the ambuſh on one ſide, the army of Iſrael on the other: and they ſmote them, ſo that they let none of them remain or eſcape; not one was ſaved alive, excepting their king, as in the next verſe; no quarter was given them, nor any ſuffered to make their eſcape.

℣. 23. And the king of Ai they took alive, &c.] They ſpared him, and reſerved him for a more ſhameful death: and brought him to Joſhua; their general; delivering him into his hands as his priſoner, to do with him as ſeemed good in his ſight.

℣. 24. And it came to paſs when Iſrael had made an end of ſlaying all the inhabitants of Ai, &c.] That came out againſt them: in the field, in the wilderneſs wherein they chaſed them; both in the arable lands that were ſown with corn, and now clothed with it, the wheat eſpecially, not being gathered in as not yet ripe, and in the paſture-ground deſigned by the wilderneſs, ſee ℣. 15. ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it: and when they were all fallen on the edge of the ſword; and were ſlain by it: until they were conſumed; and not one left: that all the Iſraelites returned unto Ai; both the ambuſh that came out of it, and the army that came againſt it: and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword; that is, the inhabitants that were left in it unfit for war, as old men, infirm perſons, women and children, as follows.

℣. 25. And ſo it was, that all that fell that .. &c.] Partly in the city, and partly in the f.. both by the ambuſh and the army: both of ... and women, were 12,000, even all the men of ... ſo that the city was not a very large one, and the numbers of inhabitants were comparatively but few, as in ch. vii. 3.

℣. 26. For Joſhua drew not his hand back wherewith he ſtretched out his ſpear, &c.] But continued it, and that ſtretched out: until he had utterly deſtroyed all the inhabitants of Ai; juſt as the hand of Moſes was held up, and kept held up until Amalek was diſcomfited by Joſhua, Exod. xvii. 12, 13.

℣. 27. Only the cattle and the ſpoil of the city Iſrael took for a prey unto themſelves, &c.] Even all their ſubſtance, as beſides their cattle, alſo their gold, ſilver, houſhold-goods, merchandize, &c. according unto the word of the Lord which he commanded Joſhua, ℣. 2.

℣. 28. And Joſhua burnt Ai, &c.] The whole city, fire being only ſet before to a few houſes, to make a ſmoke as a ſignal; he did with it as he had done with Jericho, for ſo he was ordered, ℣. 2. and made it an heap for ever; that is, for a long time, for it appears to have been rebuilt, and to have been inhabited by the Jews, after their return from the Babyloniſh captivity, Neh. xi. 31. even a deſolation unto this day; to the time of the writing of this book; and by what has been juſt obſerved, it appears that Ezra could not be the writer of it, ſince this city was inhabited in his time.

℣. 29. And the king of Ai he hanged on a tree until even-tide, &c.] By way of terror to other kings in the land of Canaan, that ſhould refuſe to ſubmit unto him: and as ſoon as the ſun was down, Joſhua commanded that they ſhould take his carcaſe down from the tree; according to the law in Deut. xxi. 23. and that the land might not be defiled: and caſt it at the entering of the gate of the city; this was done, according to Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel, that it might be publickly known to the reſt of of the kings of the nations, that they might be afraid to fight with Iſrael: and raiſe thereon a great heap of ſtones that remaineth unto this day; as a ſepulchral monument, ſhewing that there was a perſon lay interred there; whether there was any inſcription on the ſtone, ſhewing who he was, does not appear; it looks as if it was only a rude heap of ſtones; and ſuch kind of ſepulchral monuments were common in former times in other countries.

℣. 30. Then Joſhua built an altar unto the Lord God of Iſrael in mount Ebal, &c.] As was commanded, Deut. xxvii. 5. The Samaritan chronicle ſays, 'twas built in mount Gerizzim; but there is a difficulty ariſes, when this was done by Joſhua; it ſhould ſeem by inſerting the account here, that it was done immediately after the deſtruction of Ai; and Mercator endeavours to prove, that Ebal was near to Ai, but what he has ſaid does not give ſatisfaction; for certain it is, that Ebal and Gerizzim were near Shechem in Samaria, at a great diſtance from Ai, ſee Judg. ix. 6, 7. The Jews [a] generally are of opinion, that this was done as ſoon as Iſrael, even the very day, they paſſed over Jordan, which they think the letter of the command required, Deut. xi. 29. and xxvii. 4, 5. though it does not, only that it ſhould be done after they were paſſed over it; Ebal being at too great a diſtance from Jordan for them to accompliſh it on that day, being, as they themſelves ſay [b], 60 miles from Jordan; ſo that they are obliged to make Iſrael travel that day 120 miles, and as they aſſert they did [c]; and which they muſt do, if what they ſay was true, it being 60 miles to Ebal, and 60 more to return again to Gilgal that night, where they encamped; but this is incredible: and as this account of Joſhua's building the altar is too ſoon after he had paſſed Jordan; what R. Iſhmael [d] has pitched upon is too late, who ſays this was not done till after 14 years, when the land was conquered, which was ſeven years doing, and when it was divided, which were ſeven years more; what Joſephus ſays [e] is more probable than either, which is, that Joſhua, five years after he had entered Canaan, when he had placed the tabernacle at Shiloh, went from thence and built an altar at Ebal; for as for what R. Eliezer ſuggeſts [f], that Ebal and Gerizzim, here mentioned, are not the Ebal and Gerizzim of the Samaritans; only two hills were made, and they were called by theſe names, cannot merit any belief or regard.

℣. 31. As Moſes the ſervant of the Lord commanded the children of Iſrael, as it is written in the book of the law of Moſes, &c.] Deut. xxvii. 5: an altar of whole ſtones, on which no man hath lift up any iron; ſee Exod. xx. 25. Deut. xxvii. 5, 6. and the notes there: and they offered thereon burnt-offerings unto the Lord, and ſacrificed peace-offerings; by way of thankſgiving for the good land they were introduced into, and this was what they were ordered to do by Moſes, Deut. xxvii. 6, 7.

℣. 32. And he wrote there upon the ſtones a copy of the law of Moſes, &c.] Not upon the ſtones of which the altar was made, though ſome have ſo thought; but upon other ſtones erected in the form of a pillar, and plaſtered over, Deut. xxvii. 4. which copy of the law was not the whole book of Deuteronomy, as ſome, at leaſt only an abſtract of the laws in it; but rather the decalogue, as Abarbinel; or the bleſſings and curſes after read, as Ben Gerſom: which he wrote in the preſence of the children of Iſrael; they being witneſſes of it, that he did what was enjoined.

℣. 33. And all Iſrael, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, ſtood on this ſide the ark, and on that ſide, &c.] Some on Ebal, and ſome on Gerizzim: before the prieſts and the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord; it being brought out of the tabernacle on this occaſion, and borne by the prieſts and Levites: as well the ſtranger, as he that was born among them; that is, as well the proſelytes as the native Iſraelites, both appeared and were in the ſame ſituation: half of them over-againſt mount Gerizzim; that is, half of the tribes, and theſe were Simeon, Levi, Judah, Iſſachar, Joſeph and Benjamin: and half of them over-againſt mount Ebal; which were the tribes of Reuben, Gad, Aſher, Zebulun, Dan and Naphtali; ſee the notes on Deut. xxvii. 12, 13. as Moſes the ſervant of the Lord had commanded before, that they ſhould bleſs the people of Iſrael, as in Deut. xxvii. 12.

℣. 34. And afterwards he read all the words of the law, &c.] Not the whole pentateuch, nor the whole book of Deuteronomy, but either ſome parts of it, the decalogue, or whatſoever he had written on the ſtones, and as follows: the bleſſings and curſings, according to all that was written in the book of the law; Deut. xxvii. 14—26. and xxviii. 1—6. ſee the note on Deut. xxvii. 11.

℣. 35. There was not a word of all that Moſes commanded, which Joſhua read not, &c.] So punctually, preciſely, and exactly did he obſerve the inſtructions and commands that were given him by Moſes; and this he did in the moſt public manner: before all the congregation of Iſrael; who were on this occaſion called together, and not before the men only, but with the women, and little ones; who all had a concern in the things that were read to them: yea even and the ſtrangers that were converſant among them; not the proſelytes of righteouſneſs only, but the proſelytes of the gate, that dwelt, walked and converſed with them.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter gives an account of the combination of the ſeveral kings of Canaan againſt Iſrael, ℣. 1, 2. and of the craftineſs of the Gibeonites, pretending they were embaſſadors from a far country, and deſired to enter into a league with Iſrael, which they obtained, ℣. 3—15. but when it was diſcovered who they were, it occaſioned a murmuring among the people, ℣. 16—18. which the princes quelled by propoſing to make them hewers of wood, and drawers of water, ℣. 19, 20, 21. in order to which Joſhua ſummoned them before him, and chid them for beguiling them; and after they had made their excuſe, he ordered them to the ſervice the princes propoſed, and ſo peace in the congregation of Iſrael was preſerved, ℣. 21—27.

℣. 1. And it came to pass, when all the kings which were on this side Jordan, &c.] On the side Israel now were, and was that in which the land of Canaan lay, and was now governed by many kings, and all that were now remaining, even all but the kings of Jericho and Ai, who were slain: both those in the hills, and in the vallies; that dwelt in the mountainous part of the country, and in the plains of it: and in all the coasts of the great sea, over-against Lebanon; who inhabited and governed in that part of the country which lay on the coast of the Mediterranean sea, the country of Phœnicia, in which were Tyre, Sidon, and other cities, and were over-against mount Lebanon, which was on the northern part of the country; according to the Latin version, they dwelt near Lebanon; and according to the Septuagint, near Antilibanus. It seems best, with Noldius[g], to render the words, even unto Lebanon; for it designs all the sea coasts reaching to it; for all the maritime coasts did not lie over-against it: the Hittite, and the Amorite, the Canaanite, the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite heard thereof; what they heard is not said, but to be understood; particularly they heard what had been done by Joshua, and the people of Israel, to Jericho and Ai, and their kings, ℣. 3. Some think, as Abarbinel, that they had heard of the altar Joshua had made, and of the stones he had set up, and of his reading the law to the people, by which they were to be governed; all which they understood, as taking possession of the country, and looking upon it as conquered, and obliging his people to swear fealty to him. All the nations of Canaan are mentioned, but the Gergasites; which, according to the Jewish writers, are omitted, because they were but few; the Septuagint version has them in some copies.

℣. 2. That they gathered themselves together to fight with Joshua, and with Israel, &c.] Not at this time, but they met together to consult what was proper to be done in order to secure themselves, and their people, and put a stop to the successes of the arms of Israel; and for this purpose entered into alliances with each other to assist one another, or at a convenient time and place to join their forces together, and attack Israel, as afterwards they did, ch. xi. 1—5. and this they did with one accord; were unanimous in their councils and resolutions; they all confederated together, and agreed as one man to make a common cause of it, and oppose Israel with their united forces.

℣. 3. And when the inhabitants of Gibeon, &c.] A large and royal city, a metropolitan one, which had three others belonging to it, and under it, mentioned ℣. 17. see ch. x. 2. no mention is made of any king over them, perhaps they were governed by elders, ℣. 11. Though an Arabic writer[h] says, the king of Gibeon wrote to Joshua, and desired security, and sent him large gifts, whom having preserved in safety, Joshua placed on his throne: when these heard what Joshua had done to Jericho and Ai; had taken the one in a miraculous way, and the other by a stratagem, and had burnt them both, destroyed the inhabitants, plundered their substance, and slew both their kings, all which struck them with terror.

℣. 4. And they did work wilily, &c.] Acted craftily, dealt in much cunning and subtlety; our version leaves out a very emphatic word, also; they also, as well as other nations, acted a cunning part, but in a different way; they did not enter into consultations and alliances with others, how to defend themselves, but made use of a stratagem to make peace, and enter into a league with Israel; or also as the Israelites had done, either as Simeon and Levi had dealt craftily with the Shechemites, who were Hivites, Gen. xxxiv. 2, 13. so now the Gibeonites, who also were Hivites, ℣. 7. wrought in a wily and crafty manner with them, so Jarchi; or as the Israelites had lately done in the affair of Ai: and went and made as if they had been embassadors; from some states in a foreign country, sent on an embassy to the people of Israel, to compliment them on their successes, and to enter into alliance with them, which they thought would be pleasing and acceptable to them; the Targum is, "they prepared food," which they took with them for their journey; and so the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic versions: and took old sacks upon their asses; in which they put their provisions: and wine-bottles, old, and rent, and bound up; not made of glass, as ours usually are, but of the skins of beasts, as the bottles in the eastern countries commonly were; which in time grew old, and were rent and burst, and they were obliged to mend them, and bind them up, that they might hold together, and retain the liquor put into them, see Matt. ix. 17.

℣. 5. And old shoes, and clouted, upon their feet, &c.] Which being worn out, were patched with various pieces of leather: and old garments upon them; full of holes and rents, ragged and patched: and the bread of their provision was dry and mouldy; having been kept a long time, and unfit for use; or like cakes over baked and burnt, as the Targum and Jarchi: the word for mouldy signifies pricked, pointed, spotted, as mouldy bread has in it spots of different colours, as white, red, green and black, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; or it signifies bread so dry, as Ben Gersom notes, that it crumbles into pieces easily, with which the Vulgate Latin version agrees; or rather through being long kept, it was become dry and hard like crusts, so Noldius[i]; or very hard, like bread twice baked, as Castell[k].

℣. 6. And they went to Joshua, unto the camp at Gilgal, &c.] From whence it appears, that after Jericho and Ai were destroyed, the army of Israel returned to their encampment at Gilgal, ch v. 10. and here they were when the Gibeonites applied to them: and said unto him, and to the men of Israel; not to the whole body of the people, but either to the seventy elders, the great council, who were with Joshua, or the princes of the congregation, after mentioned, who are said to swear to them; and so some render the words, to the chief men of Israel[l]; the word Ish, here used, sometimes denotes an eminent person or persons, see Is. ii. 9. we be come from a far country; this lie they told, that they might not be thought to be inhabitants of Canaan, and be destroyed as those of Jericho and Ai were; and as the rest of the inhabitants would be, of which they had intelligence, as the design of the Israelites, and what their orders were; according to Jerom[m], Gibeon was but four miles from Bethel, unless he means Giobah; however it could not be at a much greater distance; and as Gilgal was a mile and a quarter from Jericho, where the Gibeonites onites now were, and Ai but three miles from Jericho, and Bethel a mile from thence, and Gibeon four miles from Bethel, they were come but little more than nine miles. Bunting [n] makes it 12 miles from Gilgal to Gibeon: now therefore make ye a league with us; offenſive and defenſive, to help and aſſiſt each other againſt a common enemy.

℣. 7. And the men of Iſrael ſaid unto the Hivites, &c.] Though they did not know them to be ſuch, but as they afterwards appeared to be the Hivites, as the Gibeonites were, they are here ſo called, ſee ch. xi. 19. The name ſignifies ſerpents; according to a Deraſh, or myſtical Expoſition, mentioned by Kimchi, the Gibeonites are ſo called, becauſe they did the work of the ſerpent; that is to ſay, they deceived the Iſraelites, as the ſerpent deceived Eve: peradventure ye dwell among us; of which they had ſome ſuſpicion: and how ſhall we make a league with you? which they were forbid to do with any of the ſeven nations, Deut. vii. 2.

℣. 8. And they ſaid unto Joſhua, we are thy ſervants, &c.] Not that they meant to be ſubjects of his, and tributaries to him; but this they ſaid in great humility and lowlineſs of mind, being willing to be or do any thing he ſhould enjoin them. Abarbinel obſerves, that this they propoſed to Joſhua ſingly, not to be ſervants to all the people, but to him only, and to have him for their head and governor: and Joſhua ſaid, who are ye? and from whence come ye? by what name are ye called? and from what country do ye come? ſuſpecting, as it ſhould ſeem, that they were the inhabitants of Canaan; or however he was cautious and upon his guard, leſt they ſhould be ſuch, and yet was not enough upon his guard to prevent impoſition.

℣. 9. And they ſaid unto him, from a very far country thy ſervants are come, &c.] Which they magnified and expreſſed in ſtronger terms than before, but were careful not to mention any country, leſt ſuch queſtions ſhould be aſked about it, their anſwers to which would betray them, but put it off by ſaying they were come, becauſe of the name of the Lord thy God; becauſe of what they had heard of his name, his power and goodneſs; or unto the name of the Lord thy God [o]; that is, they were come to profeſs it, and to embrace the religion of the Iſraelites, and be proſelytes to it; which they knew would be very agreeable to them, and engage them to ſhew them favour; and ſo the Samaritan chronicle [p] repreſents them, as promiſing to do this, ſaying, "we will believe in thy Lord, nor will we contradict him in what ye ſhall mark out for us, be it ſmall or great;" which ſeems to be confirmed by what follows, unleſs it be conſidered as an explanation of the preceding clauſe: for we have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt; the miracles wrought there, the plagues he inflicted on the Egyptians, and the wonderful deliverance of the children of Iſrael from their ſlavery.

℣. 10. And all that he did to the two kings of the Amorites, that were beyond Jordan, &c.] On the other ſide of Jordan from Gilgal: to Sihon king of Heſhbon, and to Og king of Baſhan in Aſhtaroth; the hiſtory of which ſee in Numb. xxi. 21—35. they wiſely took no notice of the miracle of dividing the waters of Jordan, to make a paſſage for the Iſraelites; nor of the deſtruction of Jericho and Ai, which were recent things, and could not be thought as yet to have reached a far country they pretended to come from; and which, if they mentioned, might have created a ſtronger ſuſpicion ſtill of their being Canaanites.

℣. 11. Wherefore our elders, and all the inhabitants of our country, ſpake unto us, &c.] They ſuggeſt, that their ſenate, or the ſtates of their country, their principal men were convened, and that it was the unanimous voice of them, and of the people, that they ſhould go on this embaſſy: ſaying, take victuals with you for the journey; ſufficient for ſo long a journey; for in thoſe times and countries, inns on the road were not frequent as now: and go to meet them; to prevent their coming in an hoſtile manner unto them, and make peace, and enter into an alliance with them: and ſay unto them, we are your ſervants; ready to come into any terms with them, juſt and reaſonable: therefore now make ye a league with us; that we may live in friendſhip, and mutually aſſiſt each other, as occaſion ſhould require.

℣. 12. This our bread we took hot for our proviſion out of our houſes, &c.] Theſe are not the words of the elders to the meſſengers they ſent, continued, but of the embaſſadors to the Iſraelites, pointing to the bread they brought with them, which they pretended was newly baked, and took hot out of the oven: on the day we came forth to go unto you, but now behold, it is dry, and it is mouldy; as in ℣. 5. ſee the note there; which they gave as a demonſtration and proof that they were come from a far country, as they had aſſerted.

℣. 13. And theſe bottles of wine which we filled, were new, &c.] That is, on the day they came out on their journey: and behold, they be rent; which were owing to the long uſe that had been made of them, as they pretended: and theſe our garments, and our ſhoes, are become old by reaſon of the very long journey; quite worn out through length of time, and tedious travels. Iſidore of Peluſium [q] thinks, theſe Gibeonites were Cappadocians, of whom he gives a ſhocking character, and particularly that they were prone to lying and deceit; but his reaſon for it, that they were of the Philiſtines, will not hold good.

℣. 14. And the men took of their victuals, &c.] That is, the princes of Iſrael took thereof, not to eat of them; for it can't be thought that ſuch perſonages would eat of ſuch dry and mouldy bread, and eſpecially as they were now in a plentiful country, and poſſeſſed of the fruits of it; but to ſee whether it was in ſuch a plight and condition as they ſaid, whereby they might judge of the truth of what they ſaid; and they learned and knew, as R. Jonah obſerves, from the drineſs of their food, that it was truth they ſaid; and ſo the Targum, the men hearkened to their words; and ſo Jarchi, they believed what they ſaid on ſight of their proviſions; but, according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, they eat of them, to confirm the covenant they made with them; but had this been the caſe, as it ſometimes was a cuſtom to eat together at making covenants, ſee Gen. xxvi. 30. the princes would doubtleſs have provided a better entertainment for ſuch a purpoſe: the margin of our bibles leads to the other ſenſe, "they received the

the men by reaſon of their victuals :" and aſked not counſel at the mouth of the Lord; as they might and ſhould have done, by deſiring the high-prieſt to enquire of the Lord by Urim and Thummim; but this they neglected, which had they attended to, the fraud would have been diſcovered; or however, they would have had the mind of God about making peace with the Gibeonites, which in all likelihood he would not have diſapproved of, they becoming proſelytes, and giving up their poſſeſſions to Iſrael; but this did not excuſe their neglect.

℣. 15. And Joſhua made peace with them, &c.] Upon the report the princes made of having examined what they had ſaid, and which they found to be true, particularly concerning their victuals: and made a league with them, to let them live; and not deſtroy them as he did the Canaanites, and was ordered to do; they being ſuppoſed not to belong to them by the repreſentation of things they had made: and the princes of the congregation ſware unto them; that they would keep the league and covenant they had made with them inviolable; they ratified it by an oath, which was a ſacred, ſolemn thing.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs at the end of three days, after they had made a league with them, &c.] The league ſeems to have been made the ſame day they came; the Gibeonites were no doubt in haſte to have it concluded, leſt they ſhould be diſcovered; and Joſhua, and the princes of Iſrael, took no pains, and gave themſelves no great trouble to enquire about them, but made peace with them at once; and it was but three days after, or within three days of its being made, that they heard that they were their neighbours, and that they dwelt among them; that is, in their neighbourhood, as the Arabic verſion; and ſo Noldius [r] renders the words, and that they dwelt near them; for the Gibeonites did not dwell among the Iſraelites, or in the midſt of them, but near the place where they were; and this they underſtood either by ſome deſerters that came to the camp of Iſrael, or by ſome of the Iſraelites who were ſent to reconnoitre ſeveral parts of the country, eſpecially ſuch as lay neareſt, or for the ſake of getting proviſions for their camp.

℣. 17. And the children of Iſrael journeyed, &c.] Not the whole camp, for that ſtill remained at Gilgal, and continued there until the Gibeonites in diſtreſs ſent to them for aſſiſtance in virtue of the league, as appears from the following chapter; but a party of them, who were ſent along with ſome of the princes, to know the truth whether the Gibeonites were their neighbours or no, as had been reported to them: and came unto their cities on the third day; not on the third day from their ſetting out on their journey, for it was but one night's march from Gilgal to them, ch. x. 9. but on the third day from the making of the league; it is very probable it was early on the third day they heard of their being their neighbours, upon which a party was ſent out at once to know the truth of it, who arrived thither the ſame day: now their cities were Gibeon and Chephirah, and Beeroth and Kirjath-jearim; Gibeon was the metropolis, and the other three were ſubject to it; the three firſt fell to the lot of Benjamin, and the laſt to the tribe of Judah; we ſhall meet with them again in the lots of the ſeveral tribes, in ch. xv. 60. and xviii. 25, 26.

℣. 18. And the children of Iſrael ſmote them not, &c.] The inhabitants of the four cities, when they came to them, though they found it to be a true report that was brought them of their being neighbours, and that they were impoſed upon by them: becauſe the princes had ſworn unto them by the Lord God of Iſrael; by the Word of the Lord God of Iſrael, as the Targum, and therefore they reſtrained the people from ſmiting and plundering them; for it was not the oath of the princes the people ſo much regarded, or had ſuch an influence on them as to abſtain from ſeizing on them, but the princes, by reaſon of their oath, would not ſuffer them to touch them: and all the congregation murmured againſt the princes; not only for taking ſuch an oath, but chiefly becauſe they reſtrained them from ſmiting the Gibeonites, and taking their ſubſtance for a prey; their eager deſire of revenge, and of ſeizing their goods, and inhabiting their cities, raiſed a murmur in them againſt the princes. This is to be underſtood not of the whole body of the people at Gilgal, but of all that party that was ſent to Gibeon, and of the princes that went with them.

℣. 19. But all the princes ſaid to all the congregation, &c.] That is, all the princes that went to Gibeon, addreſſed all the Iſraelites that were there: we have ſworn unto them by the Lord God of Iſrael; by the Word of the Lord God, as the Targum; an oath is a ſolemn, ſacred thing, and not to be broken, and a good man will make conſcience of it, and keep it, though he has ſworn to his own hurt: and now therefore we may not touch them; neither take away their lives nor their ſubſtance.

℣. 20. This we will do to them, &c.] Either this favour we will ſhew them, preſerving their lives, next mentioned, or this puniſhment we will inflict on them, making them hewers of wood, and drawers of water; which though not mentioned directly, was what was upon their minds, and in their deſign to propoſe, only they were extremely deſirous of ſparing their lives, which they repeat: we will even let them live; this by all means muſt be done, their lives muſt not be taken away as the reſt of the Canaanites: leſt wrath come upon us, becauſe of the oath which we ſware unto them; that is, leſt the wrath of God come upon us princes, and upon the whole community, for perjury, a breach of the third command, a ſin highly diſpleaſing to God; ſince an oath is made not only in his preſence, and before him as a witneſs, who is appealed unto, but in his name, and is often ſeverely threatened, and ſorely puniſhed; and as even the breach of this oath was ſeveral hundreds of years after, in the times of David, 2 Sam. xxi. 1, 2. The Vulgate Latin verſon therefore reads the words, leſt the wrath of the Lord come upon us; but Abarbinel obſerves, that it may be underſtood of the wrath of Iſrael; for the words may be rendered, and there ſhall not be wrath upon us, becauſe of the oath; there need be none, there is no occaſion for it, ſince this was agreed upon on all hands, that the Gibeonites ſhould be let to live; and ſince it was an act of kindneſs and goodneſs, and eſpecially they would have no reaſon to be angry and wrathful with them, when they heard them out, what they had further to propoſe to them, to make them their ſervants, though they ſpared their lives.

℣. 21. And the princes ſaid to them, let them live, &c.] They were very preſſing upon them, and importunate with them, to ſave their lives, becauſe becauſe of the oath they had taken: (but let them be hewers of wood, and drawers of water, unto all the congregation); which was a very low and mean employment, Deut. xxix. 11. as well as weariſome; and this being a yoke of ſervitude on the Gibeonites, and a puniſhment of them for their fraud, and of ſervice, profit and advantage to the people of Iſrael, the princes propoſed it in hopes of pacifying them, and that they would yield to ſpare the lives of the Gibeonites; what they propoſed was, not that they ſhould hew wood and draw water for all the Iſraelites for their private uſe, but what was neceſſary for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, which the congregation was obliged to furniſh them with; and now theſe men ſhould do that work for them, which before was incumbent on them; for Joſhua afterwards impoſed this upon them to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the houſe of God, ℣. 23. tho' Kimchi thinks that while the people of Iſrael were in camp, and before the land was divided, they were hewers of wood and drawers of water to the congregation; but after the land was divided, and they were ſettled in their cities and inheritances, then they only hewed wood and drew water for the ſanctuary at Gilgal, Shiloh, Nob, Gibeon, and the temple; the Jewiſh writers ſay [s], the Nethinim and the Gibeonites were the ſame, who became proſelytes in the times of Joſhua, ſee 1 Chron. ix. 2. as the princes promiſed them; which is to be connected, not with their being hewers of wood and drawers of water, this the princes had ſaid nothing of before, and which is rightly included in a parentheſis, but with their being let to live; this they had promiſed and ſworn to, even all the princes, not only all that were now at Gibeon, and were perſuading the people to let the Gibeonites live, but all the princes, even thoſe that were not preſent, but in the camp at Gilgal.

℣. 22. And Joſhua called for them, &c.] The Gibeonites, who came as embaſſadors for their people, and who were detained at Gilgal until the children of Iſrael returned from Gibeon; and upon their return, and having made their report to Joſhua that they found it to be true that they were near neighbours, Joſhua ordered them to be brought before him: and he ſpake unto them, ſaying, wherefore have ye beguiled us? what is your reaſon and motive for ſo doing? what has induced you to act ſuch a deceitful part, to tell ſuch lies and falſhoods, and impoſe upon us after this manner? ſaying, we are very far from you, when ye dwell among us; pretending to come from a very far country, when they were inhabitants of the land Iſrael were come to poſſeſs.

℣. 23. Now therefore ye are curſed, &c.] Appear to be the poſterity of curſed Canaan, and notwithſtanding the artifice uſed, ſhould not be exempted from the curſe denounced on Canaan: a ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be unto his brethren; as theſe Gibeonites were; they became the ſervants of the Levites, who were ſervants to the prieſts; and they ſeemed to be ſpared in providence, that that part of the curſe on Canaan might be fulfilled: and Canaan ſhall be his ſervant; the ſervant of Shem, from whom the Iſraelites ſprang, Gen. ix. 25, 26. though the curſe was turned into a bleſſing to the Gibeonites, ſince though their poſt and office was mean, yet they had a place in the ſanctuary of the Lord, and opportunity of learning the law of God, and underſtanding the true religion, worſhip and knowledge of God, and were an emblem and pledge of the reception of the Gentiles into the church of God: and there ſhall none of you be freed from being bondmen; which the oath taken did not oblige Joſhua, and the princes, to exempt them from, only to let them live, ℣. 15: and hewers of wood, and drawers of water for the houſe of my God; which explains what is meant by the congregation, and who might purpoſely chuſe that phraſe, to make the people more eaſy; but their work, as aſſigned them by Joſhua, was not to hew wood and draw water for every one's private uſe, only for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, which in ſome ſenſe was the ſervice of the congregation; and a great deal of work there was to be done of this kind, much wood to hew for keeping the fire of the altar continually burning, and for boiling the fleſh of the peace-offerings, and the like, and much water to draw for divers uſes, for the waſhing of the prieſts and the ſacrifices, and divers other things.

℣. 24. And they anſwered Joſhua and ſaid, becauſe it was certainly told thy ſervants, &c.] Or it was told, told [t]; not only certainly told, but frequently told them, they had often heard of it by one means or another: how that the Lord thy God commanded his ſervant Moſes to give you all the land; all the land of Canaan, no part excepted; they had heard much of the Lord God of Iſrael, and of Moſes, what character he bore, and of the commands of the Lord to him; they ſeem to have knowledge of God, and faith in him as to his promiſes and threatenings, believing they would be fulfilled: and to deſtroy all the inhabitants of the land from before you; as the gift of the land of Canaan to Iſrael was often ſpoken of by the Lord to Moſes, and frequently mentioned by him; ſo there were inſtructions given him from the Lord, and which he delivered to Iſrael utterly to deſtroy the inhabitants of Canaan, ſo that theſe people had right intelligence and information of this matter; ſee Deut. vii. 1, 2: therefore we were ſore afraid of our lives, becauſe of you, and have done this thing; they anſwer to Joſhua's queſtion, wherefore have ye beguiled us? that it was fear of loſing their lives, than which nothing is dearer to a man, and the principle of ſelf-preſervation that put them upon framing and uſing this device.

℣. 25. And now behold, we are in thine hand, &c.] In thy power, and at thy diſpoſal, and are ready to ſubmit to whatſoever may be injoined us: as it ſeemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us; do what is conſiſtent with the laws of kindneſs, and with the rules of juſtice, and particularly with the league made, and oath taken; all which they left with him to conſider of, and to do as in his wiſdom and goodneſs he ſhould ſee fit.

℣. 26. And ſo did he unto them, &c.] What was good and right, he ſhewed them favour, and did them juſtice: and delivered them out of the hand of the children of Iſrael, that they ſlew them not; who were ſo incenſed againſt them for impoſing on them in the manner they did, that they were ready many of them to draw their ſwords and ſlay them; and would have done it, had it not been for the interpoſition of Joſhua, and the orders he gave to the contrary.

℣. 27. And Joſhua made them that day, &c.] Conſtituted and appointed them, ordered and ſettled them in the poſt and office after mentioned; or gave them [u], hence ſome think they had the name Nethinim, perſons given to the Levites for the

the ſervice of the ſanctuary: namely, to be hewers of wood, and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar of the Lord; ſome think they were employed both for the ſervice of the congregation, when they wanted wood and water, and for the altar, and what belonged to it, that needed both. Abarbinel ſuppoſes, that they ſerved the congregation whilſt they were engaged in war, and ſubduing the land, but after the diviſion of the land they only ſerved the ſanctuary; ſee the note on ℣. 21: even unto this day in the place which he ſhould chuſe; to have the tabernacle pitched, and the altar ſet up therein, as it was in divers places, before the temple built by Solomon at Jeruſalem, which was the place the Lord choſe; and this ſhows, that the writer of this book lived before the building of the temple, or otherwiſe it is highly probable he would have expreſsly mentioned it; whereas he uſes only the phraſe that Moſes frequently expreſſed it by in his time; ſee Deut. xii. 5, 11, 14, 18, 21. and xvi. 2, 6, 7, 11, 15, 16.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter treats of the combination of five kings againſt the Gibeonites, ℣. 1—5. and of the application of the Gibeonites to Joſhua, for aſſiſtance, in virtue of the league between them, which was granted, ℣. 6—9. of the ſlaughter of the army by the kings of Iſrael, and chiefly by hail-ſtones from heaven, ℣. 10, 11. and of the ſtanding ſtill of the ſun, and of the moon, whilſt vengeance was taken on them, ℣. 12—14. and of the five kings being hid in a cave, and of the uſage of them when taken, ℣. 15—27. and of the taking of Makkadah, Libnah, Lachiſh, Eglon, Hebron and Debir, ℣. 28—39. which finiſhed the conqueſt of the ſouthern part of the land, ℣. 40, 41, 42, 43.

℣. 1. Now it came to paſs, when Adoni zedek king of Jeruſalem, &c.] So called perhaps by anticipation Jeruſalem, ſince it ſeems to have had this name given it by the Iſraelites, when they had got poſſeſſion of it: and Jeruſalem ſignifies the poſſeſſion of Salem [w], and in memory of this its ancient name, the Jews ſay [x], they don't put jod in Jeruſalem between lamed and mem; tho' ſome make the ſignification of it, they ſhall ſee peace [y]; and others, nearer to its old name, and with reſpect to it, fear Salem, O ye enemies. Now the king of this place had heard how Joſhua had taken Ai, and had utterly deſtroyed it; which being nearer to him than Jericho, the more alarmed him: as he had done to Jericho and her king, ſo he had done to Ai and her king; burnt the one, and ſlew the other; and this terrified him, leſt he and his city ſhould undergo the ſame fate: and how the inhabitants of Gibeon had made peace with Iſrael; which as it weakened the intereſt of the kings of Canaan, might ſet an example to other places to do the like. Abarbinel ſuggeſts, that the Gibeonites making peace with Iſrael ſecretly, without the knowledge of their king, as he ſuppoſes, made Adonizedek fearful, leſt his ſubjects ſhould do the like; the Jewiſh chronologers ſay [z], that theſe three articles reſpecting Jericho, Ai and Gibeon, were all finiſhed within three months.

℣. 2. That they feared greatly, &c.] The king of Jeruſalem and his people, leſt they ſhould fall into the hands of the Iſraelites, and be uſed as Jericho and Ai, and the kings and inhabitants of them were, and that they would be the next that ſhould fall a ſacrifice to them; for Gibeon was fifty furlongs from Jeruſalem, as Joſephus ſays [a]; and in another place he ſays [b] but forty, which were but five miles; and if fifty, but little more than ſix miles; according to Bunting [c], it was but four miles: and what added to their terror was, becauſe Gibeon was a great city; being a metropolitan city, and having others ſubject to it; wherefore the ſurrender of that to the Iſraelites might intimidate other cities, and lead them by example to do the like, and ſo of bad conſequence: as one of the royal cities; the Vulgate Latin verſion omits the note of ſimilitude, and reads, and one of the royal cities; and ſometimes caph or as is not a note of likeneſs, but of reality; yet as we no where read of a king of Gibeon, the ſenſe may be, that though it was not a royal ſeat, it was equal to thoſe that were, and like one, being a metropolitan city: and becauſe it was greater than Ai; had more inhabitants in it, and perhaps better fortified: and all the men thereof were mighty; men of ſtrength, courage and valour, warlike men, and therefore for ſuch a city to yield ſo eaſily, and in ſuch a baſe, mean and cowardly way, was ſetting a very bad example.

℣. 3. Wherefore Adoni-zedek king of Jeruſalem, ſent to Hoham king of Hebron, &c.] Which, according to Jerom [d], was 22 miles from Jeruſalem; it was an ancient city built ſeven years before Zoan in Egypt; ſee Gen. xiii. 18. Numb. xiii. 22. and the notes there: and unto Piram king of Jarmuth; a city which fell to the lot of Judah, as did Hebron, ch. xv. 35, 54. according to Jerom [e], it was four miles diſtant from Eleutheropolis; according to Procopius [f] 14, about the village Eſhtaol, near to which Samſon was buried, Judg. xvi. 31. but Jerom [g] ſpeaks of a city called Jermus, in the tribe of Judah, which ſeems to be the ſame with this; and which he ſays in his day was a village, that went by the name of Jermucha, 10 miles from Eleutheropolis, as you go to Ælia or Jeruſalem; and as Eleutheropolis lay 20 miles from Jeruſalem, this place muſt be 10 miles from it, lying between them both: and unto Japhia king of Lachiſh; which the above writer ſays [h] was a city in the tribe of Judah, and in his time a village, ſeven miles from Eleutheropolis, as you go to Daroma, or the ſouth; and, according to Bunting [i], it lay between Eleutheropolis and Hebron, and was 20 miles from Jeruſalem towards the ſouth-weſt: and unto Debir king of Eglon; which the Septuagint verſion calls Odollam or Adullam; and Jerom, following this verſion, makes Eglon the ſame with Adullam, when it is certain they were different places, and had diſtinct kings over them, ch. xii. 12, 15. and which he ſays [k] in his time was a very large village, 12 miles from Eleutheropolis to the eaſt; and, according to Bunt-

Bunting [l], it was 12 miles from Jeruſalem ſouthward. To theſe four kings the king of Jeruſalem ſent: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 4. Come up unto me, and help me; that we may ſmite Gibeon, &c.] For which he thought himſelf not a match, not only becauſe it was a great city, and full of mighty men, and had other cities ſubject to it, but becauſe he might reaſonably judge that Joſhua would come to their aſſiſtance if poſſible, being in league with him; he ſends to theſe kings in an authoritative manner, as if they were in ſome reſpects ſubject to him; and he propoſes Jeruſalem as the place of their rendezvous, and which it ſeems lay higher than their cities, though they were in the mountainous part of the country: for it hath made peace with Joſhua, and with the children of Iſrael; their avowed enemies, and ſo had ſeparated themſelves from their countrymen, and from their common intereſt; and therefore it was thought proper to make an example of them, that others might fear to do the ſame.

℣. 5. Therefore the five kings of the Amorites, &c.] For though they were chiefly Hittites that dwelt in Hebron, and Jebuſites who inhabited Jeruſalem; yet as the Amorites were the moſt powerful people in the land, and had diſperſed themſelves in the ſeveral parts of it, and ſeem to have the greateſt authority in it, they were all called Amorites, and perhaps the kings of thoſe cities were of them, and ſet over them by them; ſo we find that the Gibeonites, who were Hivites, are ſaid to be of the remnant of the Amorites, 2 Sam. xxi. 2: the king of Jeruſalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachiſh, the king of Eglon gathered themſelves together, and went up, they, and all their hoſts; that is, to Jeruſalem, the place of their rendezvous, and from thence they marched: and encamped before Gibeon, and made war againſt it; by beſieging it, and attacking it in ſome of its forts.

℣. 6. And the men of Gibeon ſent unto Joſhua to the camp to Gilgal, &c.] Which ſome think they did when beſieged, and not before, which ſhewed their faith in the power of God, whom they now profeſſed; but it is not likely that they ſhould defer for ſending help ſo long, ſince it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe they might have heard of the deſign of the five kings againſt them; or that they ſhould be able to ſend out meſſengers when ſurrounded on all ſides; it may be better therefore to render the words, had ſent [m], which they did as ſoon as they heard of the preparations made by the five kings to war with them, and of their rendezvous at Jeruſalem, and eſpecially as ſoon as they had information of their march towards them: ſaying, ſlack not thine hands from thy ſervants; they intreat he would not neglect them, be indifferent to them, and delay to aſſiſt them, ſince they were his ſubjects, and were entitled to his protection: come up to us quickly, and ſave us, and help us; they did not doubt if he made haſte and helped them, but they ſhould be ſaved by him: for all the kings of the Amorites that dwell in the mountains are gathered together againſt us. Jeruſalem lay among mountains, and Hebron was in the hill-country in Judea, ſee Pſ. cxxv. 2. Joſh. xxi. 11. Luke i. 39. and the other cities were doubtleſs in a like ſituation.

℣. 7. So Joſhua aſcended from Gilgal, &c.] Which lay low in the plains of Jericho: he and all the men of war with him; which muſt not be underſtood of the whole camp of Iſrael, which conſiſted of 500,000 fighting men at leaſt; ſince ſuch a number was unneceſſary for this expedition, and could not have proceeded with that haſte the caſe required; nor would it have been prudent and adviſeable to have left the unarmed people, ancient men, women and children defenceleſs; but theſe were a ſelect company of able men, fit for travel as well as war: and all the mighty men of valour; or even all, as many as were picked out for the purpoſe, being men of ſtrength, activity and courage.

℣. 8. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, &c.] Either when upon the march, and while he was proceeding on in his journey to the aſſiſtance of the Gibeonites, or rather before he ſet out; and it is highly probable he conſulted the Lord on this occaſion, having, it may be, ſome doubt on his mind, whether he ſhould go to their aſſiſtance, ſince the league between them was obtained by fraud; and the words may be rendered, and the Lord had ſaid [n]; before he ſet forward with his men of war: fear them not; the five kings, and their combined army: for I have delivered them into thine hand; had determined to do it, and which was as certain as if it had been actually done: there ſhall not a man of them ſtand before thee; but be either cut off, or obliged to flee.

℣. 9. Joſhua therefore came unto them ſuddenly, &c.] Which no doubt threw them into conſternation and confuſion: and went up from Gilgal all night; he choſe the night for ſecreſy and ſurprize, and that he might be the ſooner with the enemy, and to the aſſiſtance and relief of Gibeon; and as it was about nine or ten miles from Gilgal to Gibeon, it was eaſily performed in a night's march; ſee the note on ch. ix. 6.

℣. 10. And the Lord diſcomfited them before Iſrael, &c.] Diſturbed, troubled and affrighted them, at the appearance and preſence of the people of Iſrael; they were thrown into terror and confuſion upon their approach, being ſo ſudden and unexpected: and ſlew them with a great ſlaughter at Gibeon; by the Iſraelites, who came upon them ſuddenly: and chaſed them along the way that goeth up to Bethoron; there were two places of this name, the upper and the nether, both built by Sherah, the daughter or grand-daughter of Ephraim, 1 Chron. vii. 24. therefore here ſo called by anticipation. It was about 100 furlongs, or 12 miles and a half, according to Joſephus [o], from Jeruſalem, which agrees with Euſebius and Jerom; and from Gibeon thither, it was 50 furlongs, or ſix miles and a quarter; ſo far the kings were purſued by Joſhua and his army, at leaſt unto the aſcent of it; for being built on an hill, it had an aſcent on one ſide, and a deſcent on the other, after mentioned, and both were very ſtrait paſſages; of the former it is ſaid in the Talmud [p], that if two camels go up the aſcent to Bethoron, they both fall; upon which the Gloſs ſays, it is a ſtrait place, and there is no way to turn to the right-hand, or the left: and ſmote them to Azekah, and unto Makkedah; the former of which is placed by Jerom [q] between Eleutheropolis and Jeruſalem, and was a village in his days, and the other eight miles miles from Eleutheropolis, and both in the tribe of Judah, see ch. xv. 35, 41. according to Bunting [r], they were both eight miles from Jerusalem towards the west.

℣. 11. And it came to pass as they fled before Israel, and were in the going down to Bethoron, &c.] The descent of it on that side towards Azekah, and which was also a very strait passage, of which Josephus [s] makes mention. The Jews say [t], that the going down of Bethoron was the place where the army of Sennacherib fell: that the Lord cast down great stones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died; the Septuagint version calls them hail-stones; and so they are called in the next clause; and that such sometimes have fallen as to kill men and cattle, is certain from the plague of hail in Egypt, Exod. ix. 19, 25. and some in very late times [u] have been known to fall, which was from 8, 9, and 12 inches about, some bigger than the eggs of turkeys, and some half a pound weight, see Rev. xvi. 21. and the note there; but these seem to be proper stones, such as did not melt away as hail-stones do; though so called, because they fell from heaven, as they do, but remained, and still remain, according to the notion the Jews have of them; for they say [w], whoever sees these great stones in the going down to Bethoron, is bound to bless; and frequent mention is made by historians of showers of stones being rained. Livy [x] speaks of such a shower when king Tullus conquered the Sabines; and of another [y], when Scipio succeeded at Carthage; and Pomponius Mela [z] relates, that when Hercules fought with the sons of Neptune, and darts failed him, he obtained of Jupiter to rain a shower of stones, which lay spread in great abundance; and some [a] think, it refers to this fact in Joshua's time, who is supposed to be the same with the Tyrian Hercules [b], from hence also called Saxanus [c]; and in memory of this there are stoney camps in various places, called by his name [d]: there were more which died with hail-stones, than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword; but what was the number of each of them, is not said; it was doubtless very great, since there was an utter destruction and consumption of them, ℣. 20.

℣. 12. Then spake Joshua to the Lord, &c.] In prayer, and intreated as follows, that the sun and moon might stand still, until the victory was compleat; though the Jewish writers interpret it of a song; so the Targum, then Joshua praised, or sung praise, as in the Targum on Cant. i. 1. and which is approved of by Jarchi and Kimchi: in the day when the Lord delivered up the Amorites before the children of Israel; the five kings of the Amorites, and their armies, ℣. 5. and he said in the sight of Israel; in their presence, and in the hearing of great numbers, being under a divine impulse, and and having strong faith in the working of the miracle, after related, and that it would be according to his word; he was bold to say what he did, being fully persuaded he should not be disappointed, and made ashamed: sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou moon in the valley of Ajalon; where they now appeared, and were seen by all Israel, the one as if over Gibeon, and the other as in the valley of Ajalon, which Masius thinks is the same with the valley of Gibeon, Isa. xxviii, 21. and so must be near Gibeon, and the sun and the moon not far from one another, as they might be if it was now new moon, as Kimchi and R. Isaiah; or on the decrease; some say seven days before her change: but Abarbinel is of opinion, that it was near the full of the moon, which was just rising in the valley of Ajalon, and the sun near setting as it seemed over Gibeon, and were just opposite one to another; and Joshua fearing he should not have time to pursue his enemies, and make the victory entire, should the sun set, prays that both sun and moon might continue in the position they were; the sun that he might have the benefit of day-light, which was the chief thing desired; the moon being only mentioned, that the heavenly motions might not be confounded, and the order of the orbs disturbed; and he observes, with Jarchi and Kimchi, that Gibeon was in the tribe of Benjamin, and Ajalon in the tribe of Dan, Josh. xv. 42. and it may be observed, that there was also another in the tribe of Zebulun, Judg. xii. 12. but that seems to be at too great a distance; and still less probable, is what some late travellers have observed [e], that the plain of Sharon near Joppa, is thought by many to be the place where Joshua defeated the five kings, when the sun stood still, &c. the opinion of Masius, first mentioned, seems most likely.

℣. 13. And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, &c.] The sun that came out of his chamber like a bridegroom, and rejoiced as a strong man to run his course, stopped his course at once; and the moon that walks in her brightness proceeded not on, but both stood still, motionless, and continued in this position: until the people had avenged themselves on their enemies; until the nation and people of Israel had taken vengeance on, and destroyed the five kings and their forces: how this is to be reconciled to the Copernican system, or that with this, I shall not enquire. It was a most wonderful and surprizing phænomenon, to see both luminaries standing still in the midst of heaven; it is pretended by some historians [f], that a like miracle was wrought at the battle of Mulberg, won by the emperor Charles the fifth, on April 24, 1547. In the Chinese history [g] it is reported, that in the time of their seventh emperor Yao, the sun did not set for ten days, and that men were afraid the world would be burnt, and there were great fires at that time; and though the time of the sun's standing still is enlarged beyond the bounds of truth, yet it seems to refer to this fact, and was manifestly about the same time; for this miracle was wrought in the year of the world 2554, which fell in the 75th, or, as some say, the 67th year of that emperor's reign, who reigned 90 years: is not this written in the book of Jasher? about which the Jews are divided; some say it is the book of Genesis, others the book of Deuteronomy, others the book of Judges [h]; the Targum interprets it of the book of the law, and so Jarchi, and Kimchi; and Ben Melech interprets it of the book of the law of Moses, where they suppose this miracle was predicted. The former thinks, in the words of Jacob to Joseph, his seed shall fill the nations, Gen. xlviii. 19. which he supposes was fulfilled in Joshua of the tribe of Ephraim, when the whole world was was filled with the fame of him on account of this miracle; and the latter in the words, before all thy people I will do miracles, Exod. xxxiv. 10. one was in making the face of Moſes to ſhine, the other the ſtanding ſtill of the ſun for Joſhua, as he interprets it. Bolducius, a commentator on the book of Job [h], fancies, that that book is deſigned, and that this miracle is foretold in it, particularly in ch. ix. 7. which commandeth the ſun, and it riſeth not; it is moſt likely that this book of Jaſher, in which this miracle was recorded, was a public regiſter, or annals, in which memorable events were written, as they happened in different ages by different perſons; and Maſius thinks, Joſephus [i] means this by the archives laid up in the temple, to which he appeals for the truth of this miracle: ſo the ſun ſtood ſtill in the midſt of heaven; ſomewhere above the horizon, very probably this was about noon, when the ſun was in its meridian. Guſſetius [k] thinks about ten or eleven a-clock; it may be ſuppoſed that early in the morning Joſhua came up with his troops, and engaged the kings, and it might be noon before the battle was over, and the victory obtained, at leaſt before Joſhua had proceeded in his purſuit of them, ſo far as he had done, when the miracle was wrought; and the rather, as it would be the more conſpicuous in the ſeveral parts of the world; for had it been near ſun-ſetting, it could not have been ſeen in ſome places, and particularly by the Chineſe, as it ſeems to have been, by what has been obſerved: and haſted not to go down about a whole day; which was either artificial or natural; if an artificial day, then it ſtood ſtill but 12 hours, if a natural day, 24 hours; and accordingly the length of the day muſt be judged of; if it was at noon when it ſtood ſtill, and continued ſo a natural day, or 24 hours, then as it had gone ſix hours to noon, and after it returned to its motion, had ſix more to go to its ſetting, this day muſt be 36 hours long; and ſo the Jews commonly ſay [l]; but if an artificial day, or 12 hours, then it was but a day of 24 hours; but if this was, as the Jews ſay [m], on the third of Tammuz, which anſwers to part of June, and was in the ſummer-ſolſtice, on the longeſt day in the year, when their days conſiſted of 14 hours, this will make this long day four hours longer. According to the author of Eccleſiaſticus, ch. xlvi. 5. it was a double day, or, as he expreſſes it, one day became two, or was as long as two.

℣. 14. And there was no day like that, before it, or after it, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood as referring not to natural days, or ſuch as are according to the natural courſe of things, as thoſe in the northern and ſouthern poles, which are much longer, but to miraculous and extraordinary ones: never was there ſuch a day as this, occaſioned by the ſun ſtanding ſtill; and as for Hezekiah's day, which is objected, when the ſun went ten degrees backward on the dial of Ahaz, it is not certain whether thoſe degrees were hours, or half hours, or quarters of an hour; and if they were hours, as the going backwards was at once, in a moment, it could only make an addition of ten hours in the return of them, and ſo it muſt make but a day of 22 hours: beſides, the writer of this book only ſpeaks of days that had been in his time, and not of what might be hereafter; add to which, that this reſpects not ſo much the length of the day, as the manner in which it became ſo long; and eſpecially it regards the following circumſtance, being at the intreaty of a man, and that delivered in a very authoritative manner: that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man; expreſſed in prayer, and which prayer was a prayer of faith: for the Lord fought for Iſrael; by caſting hail-ſtones upon their enemies, and preſerving them from them by the ſtopping the courſe of the ſun, until they had taken full vengeance on them. The day on which this miracle was wrought, is conjectured to be Wedneſday the 11th of April, in the year before Chriſt 1454 [n].

℣. 15. And Joſhua returned, and all Iſrael with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.] That is, he thought to have returned, had determined upon it, and prepared for it, but was prevented by hearing that the five kings had hid themſelves in a cave at Makkedah; which he ordered to be ſtopped up till the people had finiſhed the purſuit of their enemies, when he deſtroyed Makkedah, and which led him on to the conqueſt of other places before he returned; or elſe this verſe ſtands not in its proper place, or is ſuperfluous, ſince the ſame is expreſſed ℣. 43. after all the above mentioned was done; the Septuagint verſion leaves it out.

℣. 16. But theſe five kings fled, &c.] They were not killed by the hail-ſtones, nor ſlain by the ſword of the Iſraelites, but made their eſcape, being reſerved by the providence of God for a more ſhameful end: and hid themſelves in a cave at Makkedah; not in the city of Makkedah, which as yet was not in the hands of Iſrael, whereas this cave was, as appears by what follows; but it was in ſome hill, or mountain, near it; in the border of it, as Kimchi expreſſes it, and where a hill is ſhewn to this day in which it was, as Druſius ſays.

℣. 17. And it was told Joſhua, &c.] Either by ſome of his own people, or by ſome of the inhabitants of the land in his intereſt, who had obſerved it: ſaying, the five kings are found hid in a cave at Makkedah; this ſeems to make it appear that they were others, and not Joſhua's ſoldiers, that found them; for had they, no doubt they would have ſeized them, and brought them before him, or ſlain them, unleſs they choſe firſt to know his will concerning them, next expreſſed.

℣. 18. And Joſhua ſaid, roll great ſtones upon the mouth of the cave, &c.] To keep the kings in, that they might not make their eſcape, until he had convenient time to have them brought before him, and be treated by him as they deſerved; and no doubt there were plenty of ſtones about the hill or mountain, in which this cave was, fit for this purpoſe: and ſet men by it for to keep them; as a guard upon them, to prevent their eſcape.

℣. 19. And ſtay you not, but purſue after your enemies, &c.] That is, don't ſtay at the cave, but having placed a ſufficient guard there, go in purſuit of the enemy, with as much celerity as poſſible: and ſmite the hindmoſt of them; their rear; or tail them [o], as the word is, cut off the tail of them: ſuffer them not to enter their cities; where they would not only be ſafe themſelves for a while, but would be able to hold out againſt a ſiege for ſome time, and give much trouble to conquer them: for the Lord your God hath delivered them into your hands; this he ſaid to encourage them, and quicken them to the purſuit of them with all eager-eagerneſs and vehemence. According to the Samaritan chronicle [p], the ſignal or watch-word was, "God is ſtrong in battel, God is his name."

℣. 20. And it came to paſs when Joſhua and the children of Iſrael, &c.] Joſhua ſeems to have pitched his camp at Makkedah, whilſt the reſt of his army purſued the flying Canaanites, and when he and they were at different places: had made an end of ſlaying them with a very great ſlaughter, till they were conſumed; and not to be ſeen in any large bodies, but ſcattered here and there: that the reſt which remained of them entered into fenced cities; to which they belonged, and which were afterwards taken, as related in the latter part of this chapter.

℣. 21. And all the people returned to the camp to Joſhua at Makkedah in peace, &c.] Sound and well, as not one killed or miſſing, ſo not one wounded, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, "ſound and in full number:" none moved his tongue againſt any of the children of Iſrael; as to curſe them, reproach them, and ſpeak ill of them, for invading them, and uſing them in the manner they did, ſuch was the terror that was upon them. It may be ſupplied not a dog moved his tongue, as in Exod. xi. 7. as it was with them when they came out of Egypt, ſo it was when they entered the land of Canaan. It ſeems to be a proverbial expreſſion, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, ſignifying that no hurt was done to them by word or deed.

℣. 22. Then ſaid Joſhua, open the mouth of the cave, &c.] That is, roll away the great ſtones that were laid at the mouth of it: and bring out thoſe five kings unto me out of the cave; to receive their ſentence in a public manner for the encouragement of his troops, and the terror of the Canaanites, particularly Makkedah, now beſieged by him.

℣. 23. And they did ſo, &c.] Opened the mouth of the cave, by rolling away the ſtones: and brought forth thoſe five kings unto him out of the cave; who are next mentioned by name, one by one, according to their dignity, and in the order they were brought unto him: the king of Jeruſalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachiſh, and the king of Eglon; who are particularly named for the greater glory of the conqueſt, and the triumph over them.

℣. 24. And it came to paſs, when they brought out theſe kings unto Joſhua, &c.] And ſet them before him and he had paſſed ſentence on them: that he called for all the men of Iſrael; that is, for the chief men, the principal officers of the army: and ſaid unto the captains of the men of war which went with him; the chiliarchs and centurions, the captains of thouſands and hundreds, of the ſeveral regiments in the army who went out to battle with him, and under him: come near, put your feet on the necks of theſe kings; not in a contemptuous and inſulting manner, not through vanity and haughtineſs, but for the mortification of the kings; and as a token of their extreme ſubjection, and as a proper puniſhment for their crimes of idolatry, tyranny, and cruelty; and by way of terror to others of the kings of Canaan that ſhould fight againſt them, and as a pledge and confirmation of the ſubjection of the reſt, as well as to fulfil the promiſes and predictions of God, Deut. xxxiii. 29. and which was done not of himſelf, but by the order, and according to the will of God: and they came near, and put their feet upon the necks of them; as Joſhua ordered them, and in obedience to him their general.

℣. 25. And Joſhua ſaid, fear not, nor be diſmayed, &c.] Not meaning at the kings, who perhaps lay bound upon the ground, or however were not in a condition to make any reſiſtance, ſo that they had nothing to fear from them; but this reſpects future time, and what other enemies they ſhould meet with; who would be brought into ſubjection to them as theſe were, and therefore from hence ſhould take heart: be ſtrong, and of good courage; and go on valiantly in ſubduing the reſt of their enemies, and not be afraid of them: for thus ſhall the Lord do to all your enemies againſt whom ye fight; put them into their hands, and give them power to tread on their necks; this ſhews that what Joſhua did or ordered to be done, was of the Lord.

℣. 26. And afterwards Joſhua ſmote them and ſlew them, &c.] With the ſword; either by his own hands, or by others whom he ordered to ſlay them: and hanged them on five trees; to their ſhame and diſgrace, and the terror of others: and they were hanging upon the trees until the evening: by way of contempt of them, and as a ſpectacle of terror to others, eſpecially to the inhabitants of Makkedah, and their king they were now beſieging.

℣. 27. And it came to paſs at the time of the going down of the ſun, &c.] Which was the time fixed by the law of God for taking down bodies that were hanged, Deut. xxi. 23. that Joſhua commanded, and they took them down off the trees; not from any reſpect to them, but that they might not defile the land, as dead bodies in a ceremonial ſenſe did, Deut. xxi. 23. and this Joſhua was the more careful of, as they were juſt entered into it, and were taking poſſeſſion of it: and they caſt them into the cave wherein they had been hid; ſo that what had been their hiding place now became their grave; and according to the Samaritan chronicle [q], the trees alſo on which they were hanged, were caſt in with them: and laid great ſtones in the cave's mouth; not as a monumental pile, as in the inſtances of Achan and the king of Ai, ch. vii. 26. and viii. 29. but to prevent their carcaſes being dragged out, and eaten by wild beaſts, as ſome think; or that they might not be taken out, and buried in a more honourable manner: which remain until this very day; when Joſhua was grown old, the writer of this book.

℣. 28. And that day Joſhua took Makkedah, &c.] Some ſay it was the day on which the ſun ſtood ſtill, but it ſeems to mean the day in which the five kings were hanged: and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and the king thereof; ſlew the inhabitants of it and their king, after having entered and taken it: he utterly deſtroyed them and all the ſouls that were therein, he let none remain; that is, all human ſouls or perſons; for the cattle were taken for a prey: and he did to the king of Makkedah, as he did unto the king of Jericho; ſlew him with the ſword, along with the inhabitants, but did not hang him up, as he did the king of Ai and the five kings.

℣. 29. And Joſhua paſſed from Makkedah, &c.] After he had taken it, and deſtroyed its inhabitants, and its king: and all Iſrael with him; that is, all the men of war he took with him from the camp at Gilgal, from whence he went to the relief of Gibeon: unto Libnah, and fought againſt Libnah; a city that fell to the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 42. Jerom [r] ſays, in his time it was a village, in the region

gion of Eleutheropolis, and was called Lobnah; according to Bunting [c] it was but two miles from Makkedah.

℣. 30. And the Lord delivered it also, and the king thereof, into the hand of Israel, &c.] At once, no opposition being made, that we read of: and he smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein, he let none remain in it; that is, Israel smote it, or Joshua, and indeed both; and this was according to the orders given them to be observed with respect to all the cities and nations of Canaan; and that because of their abominable sins and wickedness, and to make way and room for the people of Israel, Deut. vii. 1, 2. but did unto the king thereof, as he did unto the king of Jericho; slew him with the inhabitants.

℣. 31. And Joshua passed from Libnah, and all Israel with him unto Lachish, &c.] Which according to Bunting [d] was eight miles from Libnah, and 20 miles from Jerusalem to the south-west of this city; see ℣. 5. and encamped against it, and fought against it; for it seems this city stood out, and would not surrender at once, which obliged Joshua to encamp about it, and besiege it.

℣. 32. And the Lord delivered Lachish into the hand of Israel, which he took on the second day, &c.] Either the second day from the slaughter of the kings, or rather the second day of the encampment or siege; so Kimchi: and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein, according to all that he had done to Libnah; no mention is made of its king, because he was one of the five kings that had been hanged up; so that at the taking of this city there was no king.

℣. 33. Then Horam king of Gezer came up to help Lachish, &c.] Perhaps the rather induced to it, because it had no king to defend it. In Jerom's [e] time it was a village called Gazera, four miles from Nicopolis, or Emmaus, to the north: if this king came before the city was taken, he was not able to raise the siege; and if he came after, and so too late, he fell into the hands of Joshua: and Joshua smote him, and his people, until he had left him none remaining; destroyed him and all his army, so that there were none left to return and relate their unhappy case.

℣. 34. And from Lachish Joshua passed unto Eglon, &c.] Which according to Bunting [f] was eight miles from Lachish, and twelve from Jerusalem southward, of which see ℣. 5. and all Israel with him, and they encamped against it, and fought against it; it not surrendering at once, but attempted to hold out a siege.

℣. 35. And they took it on that day, &c.] The same day they encamped about it and besieged it; the besieged finding they were not able to keep it: and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein he utterly destroyed that day; made an utter devastation of all its inhabitants: according to all that he had done to Lachish; the last city he took; this having no king as that had not, its king being one of the five that had been hanged.

℣. 36. And Joshua went up from Eglon, and all Israel with him unto Hebron, &c.] Which lay in the hill-country, and therefore they are said to go up to it from Eglon, which lay lower; and according to Bunting [g] it was sixteen miles from it: and they fought against it; it making some resistance at first, and did not surrender at once as demanded.

℣. 37. And they took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof, &c.] For though the king of Hebron was one of the kings that were taken in the cave of Makkedah, and hanged; yet before Joshua came up to it, they had set up another king over them: and all the cities thereof; for Hebron was a metropolitan city, and had other cities dependent on it, and subject to it: and all the souls that were therein; both in Hebron, and in the cities subject to it: he left none remaining; in any of them: according to all that he had done to Eglon; the last place he came from: but destroyed it utterly, and all the souls that were therein; but it seems that afterwards some that made their escape before the taking of the city, and other Canaanites driven out of their habitations, re-peopled it; so that after Joshua's death it was recovered again by the tribe of Judah, Judg. i. 10. unless there is given in that place a more particular account of the taking of this city, with others at this time; but the former seems most likely.

℣. 38. And Joshua returned and all Israel with him to Debir, &c.] A city, according to Kimchi, which he passed by when he went to Hebron, and did not fight against it; but when he had taken Hebron, returned and took it; and which Bunting [h] says was but a mile from it, and 22 miles from Jerusalem, towards the south; it is the same with Kirjath-sepher and Kirjath-sannah, ch. xv. 15, 49. the city of a book or books; and the Rabbins say [i], that with the Persians Debir signifies the same, and had its name from a library which was here kept, or from the archives in which the most memorable things since the flood were recorded, or from the making of paper or parchment, or whatsoever was made use of for writing, and of which volumes of books were made: and fought against it; it refusing to submit to him upon his summons.

℣. 39. And he took it, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, &c.] For this also was a royal city, and had others dependent on it; and therefore must lie farther from Hebron than before suggested; and indeed Burchard [k] says it was five or six miles from it, and another writer [l] says ten miles: and they smote them with the edge of the sword; the inhabitants of Debir, and the other cities adjacent to it: and utterly destroyed all the souls that were therein, he left none remaining; and yet it seems this city recovered again, and was re-inhabited, and after the death of Joshua was taken by Othniel, Josh. i. 11, 12, 13. unless as before observed with respect to Hebron, there is there a more particular account of the taking of it at this time: as he had done to Hebron, so did he to Debir, and to the king thereof, as he had done also to Libnah and her king; that is, slew them.

℣. 40. So Joshua smote all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings, &c.] That part of the land of Canaan which lay southward, and consisted of hills and vales; which abounded with springs, and was a well watered country, and agrees with the description Moses gives of it, though he never saw it, Deut. viii. 7. he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed; that is, all human creatures;

tures; for as for the cattle, they were ſpared as a prey: as the Lord God of Iſrael commanded; this law is extant, Deut. xx. 16. and which is here obſerved to clear the Iſraelites from the charge of cruelty and inhumanity; ſince what they did was not of themſelves, nor from a private ſpirit of revenge, nor a greedy deſire after the ſubſtance of the inhabitants; but in obedience to the command of God, and who ordered this as a righteous puniſhment of thoſe people for their groſs abominations of idolatry, inceſt, &c. ſee Lev. xviii.

℣. 41. And Joſhua ſmote them from Kadeſh-barnea, &c.] Which lay to the ſouth of the land of Canaan, Numb. xiii. 17, 26. and xxxii. 8. and xxxiv. 4. even unto Gaza, which lay to the ſouth-weſt, and was one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines; of which city ſee the notes on Amos i. 7. and Acts viii. 26. and all the country of Goſhen, even unto Gibeon; to which he returned back in his way to his camp at Gilgal, having conquered all the ſouthern part of the country. This country of Goſhen is not that in the land of Egypt, as Kimchi rightly remarks. Biſhop Cumberland [m] is of opinion, that the Phœnician or Canaaniti/h paſtors, who were driven out of Egypt before their expulſion, inhabited that part of Egypt called Goſhen, which the Iſraelites ſome years after dwelt in; and when thoſe ſhepherds were driven out, they came into this part of the land of Canaan, and called it after the name of the country they left in Egypt; and might perhaps the rather chuſe to give it this name, becauſe of the goodneſs and fruitfulneſs of it, in which it reſembled the country they had formerly dwelt in.

℣. 42. And all theſe kings, and their land, did Joſhua take at one time, &c.] Not in one day, but in a very ſhort time, in a few days, as the hiſtory clearly ſhews: becauſe the Lord God of Iſrael fought for Iſrael; which is the true reaſon of ſuch quick diſpatch being made, otherwiſe in all probability much longer time muſt have been conſumed in ſubduing them. The Targum is, "becauſe the Lord God of Iſrael fought by his Word for Iſrael."

℣. 43. And Joſhua returned, &c.] After all theſe kings and their cities had been taken by him, and not before; though the ſame is ſaid ℣. 15. before the hiſtory of thoſe facts; ſee the note there: and all Iſrael with him to the camp in Gilgal; where the body of the people were left, and where was the tabernacle of the Lord; and no doubt he and Iſrael with him gave publick praiſe and thankſgiving there for the ſignal victories they had obtained over the Canaanites.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter relates how that the kings of the northern parts of Canaan combine together againſt Joſhua, ℣. 1—5. and that the Lord encouraged him to fight with them, and did deliver them into his hands, who with all their people were ſmitten by him, ℣. 6—11. and how that he took their cities, and deſtroyed the inhabitants of them, and took the ſpoil of them for a prey, ℣. 12—15. and ſo became maſter of the whole country, both ſouthern and northern, which is deſcribed ℣. 16—20. and the chapter is concluded with an account of his cutting off the Anakim from divers parts, which finiſhed the conqueſt of the whole land, ℣. 21, 22, 23.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs, when Jabin king of Hazor had heard theſe things, &c.] The taking of Jericho and Ai, the defeat of the five kings, and the conqueſt of the ſouthern part of the land of Canaan; he was alarmed by them, and ſent to all the northern kings to join with him againſt Iſrael; and he the rather took this upon him, becauſe as Adonizedek king of Jeruſalem was the principal king in the ſouthern part of the land, ſo was he in the northern part; ſee ℣. 10. Hazor fell to the tribe of Napthali, ch. xix. 36. It was ſituated, as Joſephus ſays [n], on the lake Samachonitis, the ſame with the waters of Merom, ℣. 5. According to Adrichomius [o], it was four miles from the caſtle Theron to the north, ſix miles from Ceſarea Philippi to the ſouth-weſt, and nine miles from the great ſea to the eaſt; and was in the times of Chriſt one of the ten principal cities of the region of Decapolis, in which he preached, Matt. iv. 25. and is now called Antiopia; and in the Arabic verſion here it is called Ceſarea, and according to Bunting [p] it lay 80 miles from Jeruſalem to the north: that he ſent to Jobab king of Madon; of which place we no where elſe read but in ch. xii. 19. though Brocard [q] finds a place near Dan, called Madan by the Turks at this day: and to the king of Shimron; not Samaria, as many think, for that was built by Omri, king of Iſrael, and had its name from Shemer, the owner of the hill on which it was built ſome hundreds of years after this; beſides Samaria was in the tribe of Ephraim, this in the tribe of Zebulun, ch. xix. 15. and is called Shimron Meron, ch. xii. 20. and in the Jeruſalem Talmud [r] Simoniah, and here in the Septuagint verſion Symoſon: and to the king of Achſhaph; a city which fell to the lot of the tribe of Aſher, ch. xix. 25. The Septuagint calls it Aziph, as if it was the ſame with Achzib, or Ecdippa, now called Zib; but Achſhaph and Achzib are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed, ch. xix. 25, 29. Jerom ſays [s], in his time it was a little village, and went by the name of Chaſalus, 8 miles from Diocæſaræa, at the foot of mount Tabor. The Arabic verſion adds a fourth king that Jabin ſent to, called the king of Mauſel; but we read not of any ſuch place in the land of Canaan.

℣. 2. And to the kings that were on the north of the mountains, &c.] Of Libanus and Antilibanus, with others near them; ſo Joſephus [t] ſays, the kings about Lebanon being Canaanites, fought againſt them, i. e. the Iſraelites; for Lebanon lay to the north of the land: and of the plains ſouth of Cinneroth; or Geneſareth, of the land and lake of which we read in the new teſtament, Matt. x. 34. Mar. vi. 53. Luk. v. 1. and ſeems to have reſpect chiefly to the famous plain of Jezreel, or Eſdraelon, of which ſee the note on Hoſ. i. 5. and in the valley; which may more eſpecially deſign the valley of Jezreel, as it is called in the above place, and diſtinguiſh it from other plains; it was two miles broad, broad, and ten long: and in the borders of Dor, on the west; which fell to the lot of the tribe of Manasseh, ch. xvii. 11. which Pliny [u] calls Dorum, and mentions it along with the promontory of Carmel; so Josephus says [w] in Phœnicia, near mount Carmel, is a city called Dora, four days journey distant from Judea; that is, that part of the land of Israel particularly so called; some copies read Idumea. According to Jerom [x], it was 9 miles from Cesarea of Palestine, as you go to Tyre; and in his time a desart. It was a haven in the Mediterranean sea, and lies three leagues from the castle of the pilgrims, near mount Carmel; and, as a traveller says, is now so decayed, that there is nothing more extant than a large and high tower, which the inhabitants still call Dorteite [y].

℣. 3. And to the Canaanite on the East and on the West, &c.] That is, that particular nation of the seven so called, part of which dwelt in the eastern part of the land, by the dead sea, and by the coast of Jordan, Numb. xiii. 29. and others dwelt on the coast of the Mediterranean sea, which was to the west of the land: and to the Amorite, and to the Hittite, and to the Perizzite; which were scattered about in several parts of the country: and the Jebusite in the mountains; in the mountainous part of Judea, in the mountains about Jerusalem, and which they still inhabited, and did to the times of David: and to the Hivite under Hermon, in the land of Mizpeh; so described to distinguish them from the Gibeonites, who were also Hivites. Mizpeh is the place, as Kimchi thinks, where the people of Israel are often said to meet together; which he supposes they did, on account of the great salvation wrought here in Joshua's time. Hermon was a mountain that adjoined to Lebanon, where it is certain some of the Hivites dwelt, Judg. iii. 3.

℣. 4. And they went out, &c.] The several kings and people sent to; these went out from the places they inhabited: they and all their hosts with them; the kings of those several places, with their armies: much people, even as the sand that is upon the sea-shore in multitude; a proverbial expression, to denote an exceeding great number: with horses and chariots very many; being supplied with horses from Egypt, and their chariots were chariots of iron; see Judg. iv. 3. Josephus [z] gives us the number of this great army, and says it consisted of 300,000 foot, 10,000 horse, and 30,000 chariots; some copies read only 20,000; and these chariots were armed with iron hooks or scythes, to cut down men as they drave along, and so were very terrible.

℣. 5. And when all those kings were met together, &c.] At some certain place, which Jabin had appointed: they came and pitched together at the waters of Merom; Josephus [a] says it was at Berotha; perhaps it should be Merotha, a city of upper Galilee, not far from Cedesa, the same he elsewhere calls [b] Meroth. These waters are the same with the lake Samachonitis, on which Hazor was situated; so that it was near Jabin where the rendezvous was. This lake is thought [c] to have its name from the Arabic word Samacha, which signifies high, as Merom does in Hebrew. It was, as Josephus says [d], 30 furlongs broad, and 60 long, and its waters clayey. Jerom says [e], in his time there was here a village called Merrus, 12 miles from the city Sebaste by Dothaim: here the kings and their armies met to fight against Israel; so that they were the aggressors, which made the war still more lawful.

℣. 6. And the Lord said unto Joshua, be not afraid because of them, &c.] Of their number, of their horsemen, and of their scythed chariots; which might at first hearing occasion some fear and dread. And according to Josephus [f], the multitude of them terrified both Joshua and the Israelites; and therefore the Lord appeared and spoke to him for his encouragement: though what was said was for the sake of the Israelites, and to animate them who might be disheartened, rather than for the sake of Joshua, who was of a bold and courageous spirit. Whether this was said to him at Gilgal, and out of the tabernacle there, quickly after the tidings of the combination of the kings were brought to him, or whether when upon his march towards them, is uncertain: for to-morrow about this time will I deliver them up slain before Israel; as many were, and others wounded and put to flight, as the word signifies, so as to be as good as dead. If Gilgal was 22 miles from the waters of Merom, as Bunting says [g], and supposing this to be said to him before he set out, he must travel all night to reach thither the next day; and if it was 60 miles, as some say, this must be said to him when on his march, and within a day's march of the enemy; for Josephus says [h] it was on the fifth day that he came up with them, and fell upon them: thou shalt hough their horses; cut their nerves under their hams, or hamstring them, so that they might be useless hereafter; for the kings of Israel were not to multiply horses; and Joshua, as their chief ruler, was to have no advantage of them by their falling into his hands: and burn their chariots with fire; that so they might not be used by the Israelites afterwards, who might be tempted to put their trust and confidence in them, as many did.

℣. 7. So Joshua came, and all the people of war with him against them, &c.] Being encouraged by the Lord they set out with Joshua at the head of them, to fight the kings and their forces. It is highly probable, that these were not the whole body of armed men in the camp of Israel, but a select company Joshua took of them, and who would be able to make quicker marches on this expedition: by the waters of Merom suddenly; the Targum is, "they lay by the waters of Merom;" and as they were thoughtless and careless, and not on their guard, Joshua and his forces came to them suddenly, unawares, and they not provided for them: and they fell upon them; at once, which threw them into disorder and confusion.

℣. 8. And the Lord delivered them into the hand of Israel, &c.] The whole host, who either were killed or wounded, or put to flight: it was of the Lord that Israel was directed to make so quick a march, and come upon them so suddenly, and that they were off their guard, and unprovided for them, and so fell into their hands: who smote them; with the edge of the sword killed and wounded great numbers; and the rest fleeing, they chased them unto great Zidon; not that there was another Zidon called the less, as Kimchi and Ben Melech thought there seemed to be, and which also Jerom [i] suggests; but this was so called because of its greatness, the the large extent of it, and the abundance of wealth and riches in it: Curtius says [k], it was renowned for its antiquity and the fame of its buildings; and Mela says [l], that before it was conquered by the Persians, it was the greatest of the maritime cities, though now greatly reduced: Mr. Maundrel [m] says of it, "Sidon is stocked well enough with inhabitants, but is very much shrunk from its antient extent, and more from its splendor, as appears from a great many beautiful pillars that lie scattered up and down the gardens without the present walls:" it lay, according to Strabo, not more than 200 furlongs from Tyre [n], or 25 miles: it was more antient than that, which is called the daughter of it: Homer speaks much of Sidon, as the same writer observes, but not a word of Tyre: Josephus [o] thinks, it had its name from Sidon, the first-born of Canaan, and that he built it, Gen. x. 15. but Justin says [p], it had its name from the plenty of fishes there: and Tzaid in the Chaldee and Syriac languages signifies fishing and a fisher-man: hence Bethsaida, a city mentioned in the New Testament had its name; and Sidon is at this day called Said, and is now in the hands of the Turks: and though it was a part of the land of Canaan, and belonged to the tribe of Asher, never was conquered and possessed by them, but remained an heathen city to the time of Christ: and unto Misrephoth Maim, or boilings of water; it seems as if it was a place of hot baths, but the Targum renders it pits of water, which Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech say, were pits into which the salt waters of the sea were drawn, and where they were heated by the sun and made salt of; and so it is thought this was a place of salt pits, where salt was boiled, either by the heat of the sun or by fire [q]: Junius and Tremellius render the word by glass furnaces, furnaces in which glass was made; and it is certain, that at Sidon, and near it, within the borders of which this place was, ch. xiii. 6. glass was made: Pliny [r] calls Sidon the artificer of glass, or a city where glass was made: and Strabo says [s], that between Ace and Tyre is a shore which bears glassy sand, but they say it is not melted there, but carried to Sidon to be melted; and some say the Sidonians have a glassy sand fit for melting: Calmet [t] thinks this place is the same with Sarepta, Luke iv. 26. which had its name from melting: of what construction the furnaces were in this place, cannot be said, no doubt great improvement has been since made [u]: and unto the valley of Mizpeh eastward; the same with the valley of Lebanon; now as Sidon lay north-west and this was eastward, it seems that the armies of the Canaanites in their consternation and confusion, fled some to the west and some to the east, who were pursued by different bodies of the army of Israel separated for that purpose.

℣. 9. And Joshua did unto them as the Lord bade him, &c.] Namely, in the following instances: he houghed their horses, and burnt their chariots; not consulting his own worldly interest or that of the people of Israel, but the command of God which he carefully obeyed, and reserved none for himself or them, as David in another case afterwards did; see 2 Sam. viii. 4.

℣. 10. And Joshua at that time turned back and took Hazor, &c.] After he had chased the Canaanites to the places mentioned, he returned to Hazor, near to which Joshua first fell upon them, but through the pursuit he was led on many miles beyond it: Bunting says [w], it was 32 miles from Sidon: and smote the king thereof with the sword; who, very probably upon the surprize at the waters of Meroni, fled to his capital for safety; but that being taken by Joshua, he was slain by him with the sword: for Hazor before-time was the head of all those kingdoms; before mentioned ℣. 1. but not of all the land of Canaan: Jerom [x] says, it was the metropolis of all the kingdoms of the Philistines; and though they were not now subject to it, and had kings of their own, yet it appears that the king of this place was in great authority, and regard was paid unto him; and this seems to be the reason why Joshua hasted to take this city, slay the king of it, and burn it with fire, because it had been the principal in this war, and might, if not prevented, raise new troubles; wherefore as a precaution to that, and to deter the rest, he hastened the conquest and destruction of it.

℣. 11. And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them, &c.] Men, women, and children: there was not any left to breathe; any human creature; for as for the cattle they were taken for a prey: and he burnt Hazor with fire; as he did Jericho and Ai, though no other cities he had taken; but it seems that this city, though burnt, was built again and inhabited by Canaanites, who had a king over them of the same name with this in the times of Deborah, Judg. iv. 2.

℣. 12. And all the cities of those kings, and all the kings of them did Joshua take, &c.] As particularly Madon, Shimron, and Achshaph, with others which he marched unto, after he had burnt Hazor; in which he took their kings, whither they had fled, or else he had taken them before in the pursuit: and smote them with the edge of the sword; both the kings and the inhabitants of those cities: and he utterly destroyed them, as Moses the servant of the Lord commanded; so that in doing what he did, he did not indulge a spirit of revenge, cruelty, and avarice, but had regard purely to the command of Moses, which was of God, Deut. vii. 1, 2.

℣. 13. But as for the cities that stood still in their strength, &c.] Whose walls were not demolished when taken, as Kimchi and Jarchi interpret it, or that stood upon their heaps [y]; upon an eminence, being built on hills and mountains: Israel burned none of them; but reserved them for their own habitations, being well fortified, and having no need of new walls being built to them, or being in a very agreeable situation: save Hazor only, that did Joshua burn; because it was the chief city where the scheme was formed, and the combination against Israel was made, and was the rendezvous of the confederate forces against them: the Jews have a tradition [z], that God said to Moses and Moses said to Joshua, that he should burn it, and that only.

℣. 14. And all the spoil of these cities, and the cattle, the children of Israel took for a prey unto themselves, &c.] The gold, silver, household-goods, corn, wine, oil, or any mercantile goods, together with with cattle of every ſort, all were taken by them for a prey, for their own uſe and benefit, which was allowed them: but every man they ſmote with the edge of the ſword, until they had deſtroyed them, neither left they any to breathe; for which they had warrant ſo to do from the Lord, as follows.

℣. 15. As the Lord commanded Moſes his ſervant, ſo did Moſes command Joſhua, &c.] Which was to deſtroy the people of the land, Deut. vii. 1, 2. ſo did Joſhua, he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moſes; both with reſpect to the deſtruction of the people, and of all their images, pictures, altars, groves, and high places; ſee Exod xxxiv. 11, 12, 13. Numb. xxvii. 19. and xxxiii. 52. Deut. vii. 1—5. and xxxi. 7.

℣. 16. So Joſhua took all that land, &c.] The whole land of Canaan, deſcribed as follows, both as to the ſouthern and northern parts of it: the hill; the hill-country of Judea, of which ſee Luke i. 39, 65. and all the ſouth country; where lived the five kings; and thoſe of other places, the account of the taking of which we have in the preceding chapter, ℣. 40. and all the land of Goſhen; ſee ch. x. 41. and the valley, and the plain; the low places and champaign fields which lay between the hills and mountains; particularly all the plain and champaign country near Eleutheropolis, towards the north and weſt, Jerom ſays, in his day was called Sephela or the vale [a]: and the mountain of Iſrael, and the valley of the ſame; by which may be meant Jeruſalem, ſituated on a mountain and is ſo called, Ezek. xvii. 23. and xx. 40. and its valley may be the valley of Hinnom or of Jehoſhaphat, as they were after called, which were near it: ſome think the hill of Samaria or the mountains about that are meant.

℣. 17. Even from the mount Halak, that goeth up unto Seir, &c.] Or the ſmooth and bald mountain, which had no trees on it, as ſome interpret it, obſerved by Kimchi; it was a mount on the borders of Edom, to which the land of Canaan reached on that ſide: unto Baal-gad, in the valley of Lebanon, under mount Hermon; and ſo deſcribes the northern part of the land conquered by Joſhua: and all their kings he took, and ſmote them, and ſlew them; both in the ſouthern and northern parts of the land.

℣. 18. Joſhua made war a long time with all thoſe kings.] For, though the account of the conqueſt of them is put together, and lies in a ſmall compaſs, yet thoſe victories were not obtained at once, or in a few days, as were thoſe of the five kings, and others, related in the preceding chapter, but were the work of ſome years; Joſephus [b] ſays, five years, but the common notion of the Jews is, that Joſhua was ſeven years in ſubduing the land of Canaan [c]; our biſhop Uſher [d] thinks, it was done in ſix years; and it may be concluded that it was about ſix or ſeven years ere this work was compleatly finiſhed.

℣. 19. There was not a city that made peace with the children of Iſrael, &c.] Though, according to the Jews, Joſhua, upon his firſt landing in Canaan, ſent letters and meſſages to all the inhabitants of the land, offering them peace on certain terms; particularly that he ſent three meſſages, or propoſed three things to them; that thoſe who had a mind to flee, might flee; that thoſe who were deſirous of making peace might make it; and they that were for war, let them fight; all were for the laſt and ſo periſhed [e]: ſave the Hivites and the inhabitants of Gibeon; theſe, ſome have thought, did not hear of the offers of peace, but others think they did, and at firſt rejected them, but repenting were obliged to take the crafty methods they did to obtain it, of which ſee ch. ix. all other they took in battle; refuſing to ſubmit to them and make peace with them.

℣. 20. For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts, &c.] As he hardened the hearts of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, that his power might be diſplayed in their deſtruction: that they ſhould come againſt Iſrael in battle; and ſo fall in it: that he might deſtroy them utterly; for their abominable wickedneſs, idolatry, inceſt, &c. they had been guilty of: and that they might have no favour; which they would have had, had they made peace as the Gibeonites did; or that they might not pray and make ſupplication, the Lord not giving them a ſpirit of ſupplication but an hard heart, as Guſſetius [f] obſerves, the words may be interpreted, tho' he ſeems to prefer the former ſenſe: but that he might deſtroy them, as the Lord commanded Moſes; Deut. vii. 1, 2.

℣. 21. And at that time came Joſhua, &c.] After he had made a conqueſt of the land, or at the time he made it, as before related: and cut off the Anakim from the mountains; whither upon the the conqueſt of the land, they had betaken themſelves, and lived in dens and caves: theſe were giants, ſo called from Anak the father of them; though theſe are not to be reſtrained to his poſterity, but include all other giants in the land; and the Targum renders the word by mighty men; and as ſome of them dwelt in mountains, others in cities, as follows: from Hebron; where the children of Anak dwelt when the ſpies were ſent into the land between 40 and 50 years before this; and though the inhabitants of Hebron had been before deſtroyed by Joſhua, theſe Anakim, who very likely then made their eſcape, returned and took poſſeſſion of it after Joſhua's departure, and whilſt he was engaged in making other conqueſts; as we find that after this others of the ſame race again poſſeſſed it, and were in the poſſeſſion of it after the death of Joſhua, when they were ſlain by the tribe of Judah, Judg. i. 10. from Debir; where others of them alſo had got after the conqueſt of it; unleſs we ſuppoſe, as I ſee no great reaſon to object to it, that theſe were cut off both at Hebron and Debir, at the time of the taking of them, of which ſee ch. x. 36—39. from Anab; a city which fell to the lot of the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 50. Jerom [g] ſays, in his time it was a village, near Dioſpolis or Lydda, about four miles from it to the eaſt, and called Bethoannaba; but he ſays, that moſt affirm it to be eight miles from it, and called Bethannaba: Maſius conjectures, that it is the ſame with the city of Nob; for, he ſays, that travellers in thoſe parts affirm, that the city Nob is called Bethanoba and Bethanopolis: and from all the mountains of Judah; the hill-country of Judea, and the mountains round about Jeruſalem; and from all the mountains of Iſrael; as thoſe about Samaria, and elſewhere: Joſhua deſtroyed them utterly with their cities;

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter gives a ſhort account of the conqueſts made by the Iſraelites, both in the times of Moſes and of Joſhua, and firſt of the kingdom of Sihon and Og on the other ſide Jordan, in the times of Moſes, and which he gave to the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, and which are particularly deſcribed, ℣. 1—6. and then of the kings and the countries on this ſide Jordan whom Joſhua conquered, ℣. 7, 8. and the names of the 31 kingdoms are recited, that ſo it might be exactly known and obſerved, what were afterwards divided among the tribes and poſſeſſed by them, ℣. 9—24.

℣. 1. Now theſe are the kings of the land which the children of Iſrael ſmote, &c.] In the days of Moſes, as Jarchi remarks, and as it clearly appears from what follows: and poſſeſſed their land on the other ſide Jordan toward the riſing of the ſun; on the eaſt of the land of Canaan: from the river Arnon, unto the mount Hermon, and all the plain on the eaſt; Arnon was the border of Moab between them and the Amorites, Numb. xxi. 13. and from hence to Hermon, a mountain adjoining to Lebanon, lay the country of the two kings of the Amorites after mentioned, Deut. iii. 8, 9. and the plain on the eaſt were the plains of Moab which lay to the eaſt of Jordan.

℣. 2. Sihon king of the Amorites who dwelt in Heſhbon, &c.] Which he took from the Moabites, and made his capital city, Numb. xxi. 26. and ruled from Aroer, which is upon the bank of the river of Arnon; a city of Moab, which never fell into the hands of Sihon, and therefore he is ſaid to rule from it but not over it: and from the middle of the river; that is, the river Arnon, which being the boundary of the Moabites and Amorites, the king of the Amorites might be ſaid to rule from the middle of it: and from half Gilead even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon; ſo it is ſaid to be, Deut. iii. 16. it ſhould be rendered, not from half Gilead, but and half Gilead, as it is in the Hebrew text, and ſo in the Targum; for half Gilead belonged to the kingdom of Sihon, as the other half did to the kingdom of Og, as in ℣. 5. and ſo Jarchi remarks.

℣. 3. And from the plain, &c.] Or rather, and the plain, the plains of Moab, which, before poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites, belonged to the kingdom of Sihon; and the plains of Jordan, which reached to the ſea of Cinneroth on the eaſt; the ſame with the lake of Geneſaret, and ſea of Tiberias, mentioned in the New Teſtament: and unto the ſea of the plain; where ſtood the cities of the plain, Sodom, Gomorrah, &c. even the ſalt ſea on the eaſt; the ſame with the dead ſea, into which the plain the above cities ſtood on was converted: the way to Beth-jeſhimoth; which was a place in the plains of Moab, Numb. xxxiii. 49. and from the ſouth under Aſhdoth-piſgah; or the ſprings of Piſgah, which flowed from the mount of that name, Deut. iii. 17. and 49.

℣. 4. And the coaſt of Og king of Baſhan, &c.] The country that he reigned over, who was another king of the Amorites, ſmitten by Iſrael in the times of Moſes: which was of the remnant of the giants; ſee Deut. iii. 11. and the note there: that dwelt at Aſhtaroth and at Edrei; of which two places ſee Deut. i. 4. it ſeems as if Og had a palace in each of thoſe cities, and ſometimes was at one and ſometimes at another, as is uſual with kings.

℣. 5. And reigned in mount Hermon, &c.] That is, over all the people, that inhabited that mount or dwelt under it, and adjacent to it, ch. xi. 17. of which mountain, ſee the notes on Deut. iii. 8, 9. and in Salcah; which was a city belonging to the kingdom of Og, Deut. iii. 10. and in all Baſhan; or Batanea, a country famous for paſturage, and for fat cattle, and for oaks, frequently mentioned in ſcripture: unto the border of the Geſhurites, and the Maachathites; which were two nations the Iſraelites never expelled, ch. xiii. 13. of which ſee Deut. iii. 14. and half Gilead; which belonged to Og, as the other half did to Sihon, before obſerved, which was as follows: the border of Sihon king of Heſhbon; here the two kingdoms joined, even in the midſt of Gilead, which was divided between them, but now wholly fell into the hands of Iſrael.

℣. 6. Them did Moſes the ſervant of the Lord, and the children of Iſrael ſmite, &c.] That is, the inhabitants inhabitants of thoſe kingdoms, they ſmote with the edge of the ſword, and took poſſeſſion of them, the hiſtory of which ſee in Numb. xxi. and Moſes the ſervant of the Lord gave it; the whole dominion of the two kings before mentioned: for a poſſeſſion unto the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; of which grant and the conditions of it, ſee Numb. xxxii.

℣. 7. And theſe are the kings of the country, &c.] After particularly named: which Joſhua and the children of Iſrael ſmote on this ſide Jordan on the weſt; that is, on the weſt of Jordan: from Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon, even unto the mount Halak, that goeth up to Seir; of which ſee ch. xi. 17. which Joſhua gave unto the tribes of Iſrael for a poſſeſſion, according to their diviſions; as after related in this book.

℣. 8. In the mountains, and in the valleys, and in the plains, and in the ſprings, and in the wilderneſs, and in the ſouth country, &c.] Which is a deſcription of the whole land of Canaan; ſome parts of which were hills and mountains, others vales and champaign fields; others were dry and barren, and others well watered; ſome part of it lay to the north, as towards Lebanon, and others to the ſouth towards Seir: the Hittites, the Amorites, and the Canaanites, the Perrizzites the Hivites, and the Jebuſites; which were the nations that inhabited the land of Canaan before it was taken and poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites.

℣. 9. The king of Jericho one, &c.] Who was firſt taken, and ſo named firſt, ch. vi. the king of Ai, which is beſide Bethel, one; who was next taken; and though Bethel was ſo near Ai, it had a king of its own, after mentioned, ſee ch. vii. and viii.

℣. 10. The king of Jeruſalem, one, &c.] Whoſe name was Adonizedek, and was one of the five kings taken and hanged, ch. x. 1, 26. the king of Hebron, one; another of the five kings, whoſe name was Hoham, ch. x. 3.

℣. 11. The king of Jarmuth, one, &c.] Whoſe name was Piram, a third of the five kings before obſerved: the king of Lachiſh, one; another of them, whoſe name was Japhia, ch. x. 3.

℣. 12. The king of Eglon, one, &c.] The laſt of the five kings, and his name was Debir, ch. x. 3. the king of Gezer, one; who came up to help Lachiſh, and his name was Horam, ch. x. 33.

℣. 13. The king of Debir, one, &c.] The ſame with Kirjath Sepher, of which place ſee ch. x. 38. the king of Geder, one; Jerom [h] ſeems to confound this with the tower of Eder, beyond which Jacob pitched his tent, Gen. xxxv. 21. and he ſpeaks of a Gaddera in the tribe of Judah, in his time a village belonging to the country about Ælia or Jeruſalem, and of Gahedur in the tribe of Judah, a large village, 10 miles from Dioſpolis or Lydda, as you go to Eleutheropolis: it ſeems to be the ſame with Gederah, ch. xv. 36. or Gedor, ℣. 58.

℣. 14. The king of Hormah, one, &c.] Which was formerly called Zephath, Judg. i. 17. ſee ch. xv. 3. the king of Arad, one; perhaps the ſame with Arath, which Jerom [i] ſays, is the border of the land of Judah, and is 20 miles diſtant from Hebron to the ſouth; ſee Numb. xxi. 1. and Judg. i. 16.

℣. 15. The king of Libnah, one, &c.] Taken at the ſame time as the kings of Makkedah, Debir, and of other places were, ch. x. 29, 30. the king of Adullam, one; a city in the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 35. Jerom ſays [k], there was a village in his time, not a ſmall one, called by this name, ten miles to the eaſt of Eleutheropolis: near to this place was a cave where David hid himſelf when he fled from Saul, 1 Sam. xxii. 1. ſee the note on Mic. i. 15.

℣. 16. The king of Makkedah, one, &c.] In a cave near to which five kings hid themſelves, and were taken out and hanged, and the city afterwards was taken by Joſhua, ch. x. 16. which fell to the lot of the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 41. the king of Bethel, one; a city near to Ai, about a mile from it, and yet had a king over it: it was taken at the ſame time that Ai was, ch. vii. 2. and viii. 17. and fell to the lot of Benjamin, ch. xviii. 22.

℣. 17. The king of Tappuah one, &c.] Which Jerom calls [l] Thaffu; it ſignifies an apple, and perhaps had its name from plenty of that fruit that grew there: a city of this name fell to the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 34. where alſo was another place called Beth-tappuah, ℣. 53. and both different from another Tappuah on the border of Manaſſeh, which belonged to the tribe of Ephraim, ch. xvii. 8. by ſome thought to be meant here: the king of Hepher, one; mention is made of Gittah-Hepher as on the border of Zebulun, ch. xix. 13. the ſame with Gath-Hepher, of which place was the prophet Jonah, 2 Kings xiv. 25. and of the land of Hepher in 1 Kings iv. 10. which is ſaid by Jerom, to be in the ſame tribe, and not far from Diocæſarea or Zippore; and we read of a Chepher or Hepher in the Jewiſh writings [m], which, according to the account of it there given, could not be far from the ſame place, at leaſt it muſt be leſs than 12 miles from it.

℣. 18. The king of Aphek, one, &c.] There was a place called Aphekah in the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 53. and an Aphek that was on the border of the Amorites, ch. xiii. 4. and another in the tribe of Aſher, ch. xix. 30. but Adrichomius [n] places this Aphek in the tribe of Iſſachar, whoſe king Joſhua ſmote, and takes it to be the ſame place where the Philiſtines in the times of Samuel and David brought their armies againſt Iſrael, 1 Sam. iv. 1. and xxix. 1. and where the king of Syria fought againſt Iſrael, 1 Kings xx. 26. and ſays, that its ruins were now ſhewn in the great plain not far from Gilboa to the eaſt of mount Carmel, and five miles from Tabor: the king of Laſharon, one; which, according to the Vulgate Latin verſion, is the ſame with Saron, which in Acts ix. 35. in ſome copies is called Aſſaron; ſo Adrichomius [o], who places it in the tribe of Ephraim, and takes it to be the ſame Sharon, Iſaiah ſpeaks of, ch. xxxiii. 9. and xxxv. 2. and of which Jerom ſays [p], to this day there is a country between Tabor and the lake of Tiberias called Saronas, and alſo that from Cæſarea of Paleſtine to the town of Joppa, all the land that is ſeen bears that name.

℣. 19. The king of Madon, one, &c.] Whoſe name was Jobab, ch. xi. 1. the king of Hazor, one; whoſe name was Jabin, and of him and his city ſee the note on ch. xi. 1.

℣. 20. The king of Shimron-meron one, &c.] See ch. xi. 1. this place fell to the tribe of Zebulun, ch. xix. 15. the king of Achſhaph, one, ſee ch. xi. 1. this city fell to the lot of Aſher, ch. xix. 25.

℣. 21. The king of Taanach, one, &c.] It was in the tribe of Manasseh, ch. xvii. 11. Jerom says [q], in his time it was a large village, distant from Legion on the plain of Esdraelon three miles: the king of Megiddo, one; which belonged to the same tribe, ch. xvii. 11. near this place were some waters where the Canaanites fought with the Israelites, Judg. v. 19. and a valley where Josiah was slain, 2 Chron. xxxv. 22.

℣. 22. The king of Kedesh, one, &c.] Which afterwards fell to the tribe of Naphtali, and was one of the cities of refuge, ch. xix. 37. and xx. 7. it was situated in upper Galilee on mount Naphtali, four miles from the city of Sephet, and as many from Capernaum, and 20 miles from Tyre [r]: the king of Jokneam of Carmel, one; a city that that came to the lot of the tribe of Zebulun, ch. xix. 11. and was given to the Levites, ch. xxi. 34. it was not far from mount Carmel, from whence it is described.

℣. 23. The king of Dor, in the coast of Dor, one, &c.] Of which see ch. xi. 2. it fell to the lot of Manasseh, but never was possessed by them, as were not Taanach and Megiddo, before mentioned, ch. xvii. 11. Judg. i. 27. the king of the nations of Gilgal, one; not the place where Joshua encamped after he had passed Jordan, for that was then no city: the Septuagint version renders it the land of Galilee; and doctor Lightfoot [s] is of opinion, that Galilee is meant, and in 1 Maccab. ix. 2. Galgala is spoken of as near to Arbel a city in Galilee: Jerom [t] takes this to be the same with Galgulis, which in his time was a village six miles from Antipatris to the north.

℣. 24. The king of Tirzah, one, &c.] To what tribe this place fell is no where said: Adrichomius [u] places it in the tribe of Manasseh; and so does Bunting [w], who says of it, that it was a fair and beautiful city, situated on a high and pleasant mountain, in the tribe of Manasseh, 24 miles from Jerusalem to the north: here Jeroboam had his royal seat, and so his successors unto Omri, 1 Kings xiv. 17. and xv. 33. and xvi. 6, 8, 9, 15, 17, 23. and doctor Lightfoot [x] seems to suspect as if Shechem in mount Ephraim and Tirzah were the same; for, he says, if Shechem and Tirzah were not one and the same town, it appears that Jeroboam had removed his court when his son died, from where it was when he first erected his idols; compare 1 Kings xii. 25. with ch. xiv. 17. and so it may argue that there was some space between: it was, no doubt, a very pleasant and beautiful city, as not only appears from its name, but from the allusion to it in Cant. vi. 4. all the kings thirty and one; it may seem strange that in so small a country as Canaan was, there should be so many kings in it, since the length of it from Dan to Beersheba was scarce 160 miles, as Jerom [y] says; who further observes, that he was ashamed to give the breadth of it, lest it should give occasion to heathens to blaspheme; for, adds he, from Joppa to our little village Bethlehem (where they then were) were 46 miles, to which succeeded only a vast desert: but it may be observed, that in antient times, in other countries there were a great many kings, as here in Britain, and in France, Spain, and Germany, as bishop Patrick has observed from several writers; and Strabo [z] testifies the same of the cities of Phœnicia or Canaan, that they had each of them separate kings, as Joshua here describes them.

CHAP. XIII.

IN this chapter Joshua is informed by the Lord, or put in mind, that part of the land of Canaan remained unconquered, and which it was; and is directed to divide the whole land among the nine tribes, and the half tribe of Manasseh, ℣. 1—9. and since the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the other half tribe of Manasseh had received their inheritance on the other side Jordan, ℣. 8. that is described in general, ℣. 9—14. and then the particular portion of Reuben, ℣. 15—23. and of Gad, ℣. 24—28. and of the half tribe of Manasseh, ℣. 29—33.

℣. 1. Now Joshua was old and stricken in years, &c.] How old he was cannot be said precisely, but it is very probable, he was now about 100 years of age, for he lived to be 110; and the land of Canaan was seven years in dividing, as the Jews generally say, and it seems as if he did not live long after that: and the Lord said unto him; either spoke to him out of the tabernacle, or appeared to him in a dream or vision: thou art old and stricken in years, and there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed; that is, very much of the land of Canaan, which God had promised to Abraham, yet remained unconquered by Joshua, and unpossessed by the children of Israel; and the old age of Joshua is observed, to intimate to him that through it and the infirmities of it, he was unable to go out to war, and to finish this work, which must be left to be done by others hereafter; and that he should with all expedition, set about another work he was capable of doing, before he died, which was the division of the land among the tribes of Israel.

℣. 2. This is the land that yet remaineth, &c.] Unconquered and unenjoyed, namely, what is after described; and this account is given for Joshua's information, that he might know what to divide, and for the people of Israel's sake, that they might know what they had a right to a claim upon; what they should endeavour to possess themselves of, and what the Lord would deliver into their hands, provided they were obedient to his will, for because they were not, hence many of these places never came into their possession, though divided to them by lot: all the borders of the Philistines; whose country bordered and lay upon the shores of the Mediterranean sea, in the south-west of the land of Canaan: and all Geshuri; the principal city belonging to it is said to be in Syria, 2 Sam. xv. 8. and had a king over it in the times of David, 2 Sam. iii. 3. and seems never to have come into the hands of the Israelites.

℣. 3. From Sihor, which is before Egypt, &c.] Which Jarchi and Kimchi interpret of the river Nile, Nile, and ſo that river is called, Jer. ii. 18. it ſeems to have this name from the waters of it being black and turbid; and hence it was called by the Greeks, Melas; and by the Latins, Melo; tho' it is thought, that not properly the river itſelf is here meant, which did not reach to the borders of Paleſtine, but a branch of it, a rivulet from it, for ſo a traveller [a] writes, "in a journey of about five "days from Gaza towards Egypt, the hithermoſt "arm of the Nile, is received by the ſea and is "commonly called Carabus:" even unto the borders of Ekron northward; that is, from the ſouth-weſt of Paleſtine, near to which was the river Nile, to the northern part of it, where ſtood the principality of Ekron, one of the five which belonged to the Philiſtines: which is counted to the Canaanite; which was reckoned as belonging to the poſterity of Canaan, though the Philiſtines got poſſeſſion of it, who deſcended from Mizraim; and indeed it was only accounted as belonging to Canaan and his ſons; of right and according to the grant of God, it belonged to the ſeed of Abraham: five lords of the Philiſtines; who had not kings as other countries and cities in the land of Canaan had, and their cities were called lordſhips, principalities, and not kingdoms, and are as follow: the Gazathites, and the Aſhdothites, the Eſhkalonites, the Gittites, and the Ekronites; ſo called from Gaza, Aſhdod, Aſcalon, Gath, and Ekron, the cities they were in poſſeſſion of: alſo the Avites; it is not certain whether theſe were a diſtinct principality from the other five, or a people diſperſed amongſt them; which ſeems moſt likely, ſince thoſe were the original inhabitants, but were driven out or deſtroyed by the Philiſtines, though it ſeems ſome remained and dwelt among them; ſee Deut. ii. 23.

℣. 4. From the ſouth, all the land of the Canaanites, &c.] That is, of thoſe Canaanites who were particularly ſo called, in diſtinction from thoſe of the other nations or tribes, and who dwelt in ſeveral parts of the land, ſome in the eaſt and others in the weſt, ſee ch. xi. 3. and as it ſeems here, ſome in the ſouth: now on the ſide of the ſouth, as Kimchi interprets it, all the land of the Canaanites was left, that is, remained unconquered and not poſſeſſed: and Mearah that is beſide the Sidonians; the inhabitants of Sidon, and parts adjacent: what this place was which belonged to the Sidonians, for ſo it may better be rendered, is not certain; ſome take it to be a cave belonging to them: Sandys [b] ſpeaks of a number of caves cut out of the rock in thoſe parts, called the caves of the Sidonians, and afterwards the caves of Tyre; ſo it is interpreted by the Targum, and in the Syriac and Arabic verſions; others take it to be the river Magoras, Pliny [c] makes mention of as on the borders of Lebanon near Zidon and Berytus: mention is made of the waters of Mearah along with the waters of Tiberias in Jewiſh writings [d]; but rather ſomething of more importance than a cave or a river is meant; moſt likely a tract of land near Sidon, and which belonged to it, and reached unto Aphek, to the borders of the Amorites; of this place ſee the note on ch. xii. 18.

℣. 5. And the land of the Giblites, &c.] This was another country that remained unconquered; the Greeks call it Byblus, and near to which Pliny [e] ſpeaks of a place called Gabale, and is now called Gibyle; it is [f] ſaid to be "pleaſantly ſituated by the "ſea-ſide, and at preſent it contains but a little "extent of ground, but yet more than enough "for the ſmall number of its inhabitants:" it was in greater ſplendor, and its inhabitants of more fame in the times of Ezekiel, Ezek. xxvii. 9. and all Lebanon toward the ſun-riſing; or eaſt of the land; all that inhabited that mountain remained unconquered, though the conqueſt was carried as far as the borders thereof: from Baal-gad under mount Hermon; of which ſee ch. xi. 17. unto the entering into Hamath; which was the north border of the land; ſee Numb. xxxiv. 8.

℣. 6. All the inhabitants of the hill-country, &c.] Not in Judea, but in and about Lebanon, as follows: from Lebanon unto Miſrephoth-maim; of which, ſee ch. xi. 8. and all the Sidonians; the inhabitants of the ancient city of Sidon, and the villages and lands belonging to it: theſe remained unconquered, and never were poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites: them will I drive out from before the children of Iſrael; which, though it may have a ſpecial reſpect unto the Sidonians, with whom the clauſe is cloſely connected, yet may include all the above lands unconquered, out of which, as well as Sidon, the Lord promiſes to drive the inhabitants, to make way for the children of Iſrael; that is, on condition of their obedience, for it appears that not only the Sidonians but many others, even the chief, and moſt of thoſe mentioned were never poſſeſſed by them: only divide thou it by lot unto the Iſraelites for an inheritance; that is, the whole land, as Abarbinel rightly remarks, both what was ſubdued and what was not; that was the buſineſs and all the buſineſs Joſhua had now to do; he was not to be employed in making any further conqueſts, but leave them to others, and apply himſelf to the diviſion of the land by lot, to the tribes that as yet had no portion aſſigned them: as I have commanded thee; now, at this time.

℣. 7. Now therefore divide this land for an inheritance, &c.] Having the command and authority of God for it, he was to ſet about it at once, with all diligence and application: unto the nine tribes; of Judah, Simeon, Benjamin, Dan, Ephraim, Zebulun, Iſſachar, Aſher, and Naphtali, in which order they are placed, when the Lord gave to Moſes the names of the men that ſhould divide the land under Eleazar and Joſhua, Numb. xxxiv. 16—28. and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh; that half which had no inheritance on the other ſide Jordan, and for which a prince of the children of Joſeph was appointed to divide, Numb. xxxiv. 23.

℣. 8. With whom the Reubenites and the Gadites have received their inheritance, &c.] That is, along with the half tribe of Manaſſeh, but not with that half of it before mentioned, who was to have a diviſion of a part with the nine tribes, but with the other half of the tribe ſettled beyond Jordan; with them the tribes of Reuben and Gad had received their portion at their own requeſt, and ſo were to have no ſhare in the preſent diſtribution: which Moſes gave them beyond Jordan eaſtward; at their deſire, and upon certain conditions, to be performed by them, ſee Numb. xxxii. even as Moſes the ſervant of the Lord gave them; this character of Moſes as the ſervant of the Lord, ſeems to to be obſerved to ſhew that he gave the ſaid tribes their inheritance, according to the will of God and in obedience to it: here end the words of the Lord to Joſhua, and next follows an account of the land given to the two tribes and a half deſcribed by the writer of this book.

℣. 9. From Aroer that is on the bank of the river Arnon, &c.] A city belonging to Moab, from whence the deſcription begins, the river Arnon, on which it was ſituated, being the border between Moab and the Amorites, Numb. xxi. 13: and the city that is in the midſt of the river; or even the city; meaning the ſame city of Aroer, it lying both on the bank of it, and in the middle of it, or it was a double city, as may ſeem from Iſ. xvii. 2. and ſo differently ſituated at that river: and all the plains of Medeba unto Dibon; of theſe two places, ſee Numb. xxi. 30. between them lay a plain, which ſome take to be the plain of Moab; but it rather ſeems to be a plain that was between theſe two places, and according to ℣. 17. Dibon itſelf was in a plain.

℣. 10. And all the cities of Sihon king of the Amorites, which reigned in Heſhbon, &c.] A city he took from the Moabites, and made it his royal ſeat, Numb. xxi. 26: unto the border of the children of Ammon; which was the river Jabbok, Deut. iii. 16.

℣. 11. And Gilead, &c.] The land of Gilead, which was part of the kingdom of Og, half of which was given to Reuben, and the other half to Gad: and the border of the Geſhurites and Maachathites; of which ſee Deut. iii. 14: and all mount Hermon; called alſo Sirion, Shenir and Sion, Deut. iii. 9. and iv. 48: and all Baſhan unto Salcah; another part of the dominions of Og, Deut. iii. 10.

℣. 12. All the kingdom of Og in Baſhan, who reigned in Aſhtaroth and in Edrei, &c.] See the note on ch. xii. 4: who remained of the remnant of the giants; was deſcended from thoſe that remained in Aſhtaroth, after the reſt were cut off by Cedorlaomer, Gen. xiv. 5. called there the Rephaim, as here: for theſe did Moſes ſmite, and caſt them out; that is, not only the giants, but the inhabitants of the above kingdom, the greateſt part of them; for the Geſhurites and the Maachathites are excepted in the following verſe.

℣. 13. Nevertheleſs the children of Iſrael expelled not the Geſhurites, nor the Maachathites, &c.] Neither in the times of Moſes, nor in the times of Joſhua: but the Geſhurites and the Maachathites dwell among the Iſraelites until this day; in full poſſeſſion of their cities unmoleſted; yea, in after-times they became ſeparate and diſtinct kingdoms; for we read both of the king of Geſhur, and of the king of Maachah, 2 Sam. iii. 3. and x. 6.

℣. 14. Only unto the tribe of Levi he gave none inheritance, &c.] Neither the Lord, nor Moſes by his order, nor did he appoint any inheritance for them, either beyond Jordan, or on this ſide it, for the Lord was to be their inheritance, Numb. xviii. 20: the ſacrifices of the Lord God of Iſrael made by fire are their inheritance, as he ſaid unto them, Deut. xviii. 1. and which are put for the whole of what was granted to them for their ſubſiſtence, as tithes, firſt-fruits, &c.

℣. 15. And Moſes gave unto the tribe of the children of Reuben inheritance according to their families.] According to the number of them, and ſufficient for them.

℣. 16. And their coaſt was from Aroer that is on the bank of the river Arnon, &c.] As the country of Sihon is deſcribed, ℣. 9. from whence it appears that it was his country which was given to Reuben, though not all of it: and the city that is in the midſt of the river; ſee the note on ℣. 9: and all the plain by Medeba; which reached unto Dibon, ℣. 9.

℣. 17. Heſhbon, and all her cities that are in the plain, &c.] Which was by Medeba, and reached to Dibon: Dibon, and Bamoth-baal, and Beth-baal-meon; Dibon was rebuilt by Gad, though it belonged to Reuben, and perhaps was inhabited by both, being on the borders of each; and Bamoth-baal ſignifies the high places of Baal; ſee Numb. xxii. 41. perhaps this is the ſame with Bamoth in the valley, Numb. xxi. 20. and Beth-baal-meon is the ſame with Baal-meon in Numb. xxxii. 38. where it is highly probable was a temple of Baal, ſince both Beth ſignifies an houſe, and meon an habitation.

℣. 18. And Jahaza, &c.] Called Jahaz, Numb. xxii. 23. where the battle was fought between Sihon and Iſrael: and Kedemoth; near to which was a wilderneſs, which took its name from it, from whence Moſes ſent meſſengers with words of peace to Sihon, Deut. ii. 26: and Mephaath; thought to be the Maipha of Ptolemy[f]; here Jerom ſays [g], in his time was a garriſon of Roman ſoldiers, becauſe of the deſart that was near. It was a city, with its ſuburbs, given to the Levites, as were the two preceding, ch. xxi. 36, 37. Adrichomius [h] takes it to be the ſame with Malle, which Joſephus ſays [i] was called the city of the ſtrangers.

℣. 19. And Kirjathaim, and Sibmah, &c.] Of which ſee the note on Numb. xxxii. 3, 37, 38: and Zareth-ſhahar, in the mount of the valley; which was built on one of the mountains that looked over the valley of Moab, as did Nebo, Piſgah, Abarim; perhaps it is the ſame place Joſephus [k] calls Zara, to which he joins the valley of the Cilicians, and mentions it along with Heſhbon, Medeba, and other cities of Moab; according to Adrichomius [l], it was in the mount of the valley of Beth-peor, which next follows.

℣. 20. And Beth-peor, &c.] So called from Peor the idol of the Moabites, and where very likely there had been a temple built to the honour of it; over-againſt this place was a valley, where Iſrael abode ſome time, Deut. iii. 29: and Aſhdod-piſgah; of which ſee Deut. iii. 17: and Beth-jeſhimoth; of which ſee Numb. xxxiii. 49.

℣. 21. And all the cities of the plain, &c.] In the champain country, as well as thoſe in the mountainous part: and all the kingdom of Sihon; or, as Maſius renders the words, which all had been the kingdom of Sihon; for the whole kingdom of Sihon was not given to Reuben, only a part of it, and the reſt to Gad, as in ℣. 27: king of the Amorites, which reigned in Heſhbon; as in ℣. 10: whom Moſes ſmote with the princes of Midian, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba; not at the ſame time that Sihon was ſmitten by him, but afterwards in a war with Midian, Numb. xxxi. 8. where their names are given as here; and there they are called kings of Midian, petty kings, and, as it ſeems by what follows, were ſubject to Sihon, and therefore are here mentioned: which were dukes of Sihon dwelling in the country; for Midian, as Kimchi ſuppoſes, and not without reaſon, was under the government of Sihon, and theſe were his nobles, though they dwelt in the land of Midian.

℣. 22. Balaam alſo the ſon of Beor the ſoothſayer did the children of Iſrael ſlay with the ſword, &c.] At the ſame time that the princes of Midian were ſlain, and which is alſo obſerved in Numb. xxxi. 8. ſee the note. Kimchi ſuppoſes, that he returned to Midian on hearing that the counſel he gave to them, to enſnare Iſrael with their daughters, had taken effect, in order to receive his wages, and ſo received his righteous doom and juſt reward; it is commonly ſaid by the Jews [m], that he was ſlain by Phinehas: among them that were ſlain by them; among the above princes, and the common ſoldiers, of which there was a great ſlaughter; even all the males of Midian were ſlain, Numb. xxxi. 7.

℣. 23. And the border of the children of Reuben was Jordan, and the border thereof, &c.] As their border eaſtward was Aroer on the river Arnon, ſo their border weſtward was the river Jordan: this was the inheritance of the children of Reuben after their families, the cities, and the villages thereof; which Moſes gave them on the other ſide Jordan; and next follows an account of the inheritance of the tribe of Gad in thoſe parts.

℣. 24. And Moſes gave inheritance unto the tribe of Gad, &c.] On the other ſide Jordan, as he did to Reuben: even unto the children of Gad, according to their families; according to the number and largeneſs of them, dividing to each their part and portion.

℣. 25. And their coaſt was Jazer, &c.] Their ſouthern coaſt; of Jazer, ſee Numb. xxi. 32. where it is called Jaazer, and is mentioned in Iſ. xvi. 8. and in Jer. xlviii. 32. where it is ſpoken of as a city of Moab, as it was in the days of thoſe prophets: and all the cities of Gilead; which lay in thoſe parts, for the whole was not given to this tribe, half of Gilead was given to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, ℣. 31: and half the land of the children of Ammon; not what then belonged to them, but what had been taken from them by the Amorites; and which Iſrael taking from them, had a right to retain, though they were forbid meddling with any of their land in preſent poſſeſſion; ſee Deut. ii. 19. Judg. xi. 13—24: unto Aroer that is before Rabbath; Aroer was a city of Moab, ſituated on the river Arnon, ℣. 9. and ſtood over-againſt Rabbath, a city of the Amorites, ſince called Philadelphia, the ſame that Joab took, 2 Sam. xii. 26. though Reland thinks [n], that according to the ſituation of theſe cities another Aroer muſt be here meant, and which belonged to the Amorites.

℣. 26. And from Heſhbon unto Ramath-mizpeh, and Betonim, &c.] This was their coaſt from the ſouth to the north, and ſo deſcribes their eaſtern border, which reached from Heſhbon, given to the tribe of Reuben, ℣. 7. to theſe places mentioned; Ramath-mizpeh, the ſame with Ramoth-gilead, which Jerom [o] ſays was a village in his time, and lay 15 miles from Philadelphia or Rabbath before mentioned, to the eaſt; it ſhould be to the weſt; of Betonim we no where elſe read, it ſeems to have been near to Ramath: and from Mahanaim unto the border of Debir; the former of theſe was the place where the angels met Jacob, and who gave it the name from thence; and in after-times a city of this name was built there, and was near the river Jabbok, Gen. xxxii. 2. Debir is different from that in the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 15. in the Septuagint verſion here, it is called Daibon, perhaps the ſame with Dibon, the tribe of Gad rebuilt, and is called Dibon-gad, Numb. xxxii. 34. and xxxiii. 45. unleſs Lidbar here ſhould be the ſame with Lodebar in Gilead, 2 Sam. xvii. 27.

℣. 27. And in the valley, Beth-aram, &c.] The ſame with Beth-haran, Numb. xxxii. 36. ſee the note there: and Beth-nimrah; ſometimes called Nimrah, Numb. xxxii. 3, 36. near to which were ſome waters, called the waters of Nimrim, Iſ. xv. 6. It was in Jerom's [p] time a large village; it ſeems to have its name from leopards, which perhaps had their haunts hereabout: and Succoth; the place where Jacob pitched his tent after he had paſſed over Jabbok: it is called in the Jeruſalem Talmud [q] Thuarabah: and Zephon; which in the ſame Talmud is Amatho or Amathus, which Jerom ſays [r] is a village beyond Jordan, 21 miles from Pella to the ſouth, though he places it in the tribe of Reuben: the reſt of the kingdom of Sihon king of Heſhbon; which was not given to the tribe of Reuben, ℣. 21. Jordan and his border; that is, the cities which were near it, as Kimchi; or that were upon the bank of it, as Jarchi: even unto the edge of the ſea of Cinneroth; the ſame with the lake of Geneſareth, Luke v. 1. on the other ſide Jordan eaſtward; the other from that in which the inheritance of Gad lay, which was beyond Jordan, from the land of Canaan.

℣. 28. This is the inheritance of the children of Gad after their families, &c.] As deſcribed in the preceding verſes: the cities and their villages; the cities given them, ſome of which are mentioned by name, and the villages adjacent and belonging to them were included in them.

℣. 29. And Moſes gave inheritance unto the half tribe of Manaſſeh, &c.] Whether at their requeſt or of himſelf, there being land enough for them, and the two tribes of Gad and Reuben, is not certain: and this is the poſſeſſion of the half tribe of Manaſſeh by their families; which is after related and deſcribed.

℣. 30. And their coaſt was from Mahanaim, &c.] A place in the tribe of Gad, ℣. 26. which was the boundary of the half tribe that way: all Baſhan; ſo famous for its oxen, and for paſturage for them, and for its oaks, called by Joſephus Batanea: all the kingdom of Og king of Baſhan; which beſides Baſhan, took in the kingdom of Argob or Trachonitis, half the land of Gilead, all which was poſſeſſed by the half tribe of Manaſſeh; ſee Deut. iii. 13: and all the towns of Jair, which are in Baſhan, threeſcore cities; of Jair, and his relation to Manaſſeh, and of his taking theſe cities, and the number of them, ſee Numb. xxxiii. 41. Deut. iii. 4, 14.

℣. 31. And half Gilead, &c.] The other half not given to the Gadites, who had that half of it which Sihon poſſeſſed, and the tribe of Manaſſeh that half of it which Og poſſeſſed, ſee Deut. iii. 12, 13. and Aſhtaroth, and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Baſhan; which are particularly mentioned, becauſe royal cities, ℣. 12. ſee Deut. i. 4. were pertaining unto the children of Machir the ſon of Manaſſeh; and who was his only ſon; however to his poſterity only was this inheritance given, though not to them all: even to one half of the children of Machir, by their families; which ſeems to confirm it, that Manaſſeh had no other ſon, ſince his whole poſterity, both the half tribe on ℣. 33. But unto the tribe of Levi Moſes gave not any inheritance, &c.] Neither on the other ſide Jordan, nor did he order them any in Canaan; but expreſsly declared they were to have no part in the diviſion of it, though they were his own tribe; which ſhows him to be a diſintereſted man, that he faithfully obſerved the orders and inſtructions the Lord gave him: the Lord God of Iſrael was their inheritance, as he ſaid unto them; what was given to the Lord out of the ſacrifices, and the tithes, and firſt-fruits, that were theirs; ſee Numb. xviii. 20, &c. Deut. xviii. 1, &c.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter proceeds to give an account of the countries divided to the children of Iſrael in the land of Canaan, ℣. 1—5. but previous to that diviſion relates the claim of Caleb to Hebron, through a promiſe made unto him by Moſes forty-five years ago, upon his report of the good land, whither he was ſent a ſpy by him, ℣. 6—12. and the grant which Joſhua made of it to him, with his bleſſing, ℣. 13—15.

℣. 1. And theſe are the countries which the children of Iſrael inherited in the land of Canaan, &c.] Of which an exact account is given in the following chapters, particularly in the xv^th^, xvi^th^, xvii^th^, xviii^th^ and xix^th^ chapters: which Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael diſtributed for an inheritance unto them; namely, 10 princes, one of each tribe, who with Eleazar and Joſhua, were appointed of the Lord by name to do this buſineſs, even ſeven years ago, before their entrance into the land of Canaan, Numb. xxxiv. 17—29.

℣. 2. By lot was their inheritance, &c.] Every tribe had its part and portion aſſigned to it, by the caſting of lots; which was done to prevent any future quarrels, animoſities and ſtrifes among the tribes, the diſpoſition being of the Lord; and to ſhew the exact agreement between the lot and the divine predictions by Jacob and Moſes; and to make it appear that the diviſion of the land was not owing to the private combination of the above men, and their private ſettlement of it; but to the providence of God, the director of the lot; their chief buſineſs was to ſee that the lot was executed in a faithful manner, and that every tribe had its allotment according to it. In this, Canaan was a type of the heavenly inheritance, which the ſaints obtain by lot, in and through Chriſt, the antitypical Joſhua, Eph. i. 11. as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes, Numb. xxvi. 55, 56. for the nine tribes, and for the half tribe; ſee ch. xiii. 7. the reaſon why this number of them is particularly mentioned, follows.

℣. 3. And Moſes had given the inheritance of two tribes, and an half tribe, on the other ſide Jordan, &c.] The two tribes of Gad and Reuben, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, whoſe inheritance is deſcribed in the preceding chapter: but unto the Levites, he gave none inheritance among them; this is frequently obſerved, that it might be taken notice of, to ſhew the diſintereſtedneſs of Moſes in this affair, Levi being his own tribe; and to recommend the care of the Levites to the other tribes, according to the proviſion God had made for them.

℣. 4. For the children of Joſeph were two tribes, Manaſſeh and Ephraim, &c.] For the birth-right being forfeited by Reuben, was given to Joſeph, who had the double portion, the privilege of the firſt-born; by which means the number of the twelve tribes was kept up in the diviſion of the land, though that of Levi had no ſhare in it; and which is alſo a reaſon why they had none, that Joſeph's two ſons might be reckoned two tribes: therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land; to make way for the ſons of Joſeph to have the double portion: ſave cities to dwell in; and that only, for they might not ſell them, as other Iſraelites could theirs: with their ſuburbs, for their cattle, and for their ſubſtance; the Targum is, "for all their beaſts, and for their cattle;" that is, for convenient places to put them into, and for paſturage for them; which Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret of their larger and leſſer cattle, their herds and their flocks, their oxen and ſheep.

℣. 5. As the Lord commanded Moſes, ſo the children of Iſrael did, &c.] Particularly with reſpect to the diviſion of the land, and making proviſion for the Levites; this they did by their heads and repreſentatives, the high-prieſt and chief ruler, and the princes of the ſeveral tribes: and they divided the land; met about it, and began to take meaſures in order to do it; they prepared for it, tho' as yet it was not actually done, and previous to it was the following incident.

℣. 6. Then the children of Judah came unto Joſhua in Gilgal, &c.] Whither he was returned after the conqueſt of the kings and their kingdoms; theſe were not the whole tribe of Judah, but ſome of the chief men of it who accompanied Caleb, for the honour of him, as Ben Gerſom obſerves; he being their prince; and to ſecond his petition, and to ſhew their conſent unto, and an approbation of ſuch an aſſignment to him as he deſired: and Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite, ſaid unto him; whether Caleb or Jephunneh is called the Kenizite, and what the reaſon of the name, are not very material; and of which ſee the note on Numb. xxxii. 12. and as Caleb was perſonally and ſingly concerned in the following affair, he alone addreſſed Joſhua, attended with ſome principal men of his tribe: thou knoweſt the thing the Lord ſaid unto Moſes the man of God, concerning thee and me, in Kadeſh-barnea; the place from whence the ſpies were ſent, and whither they returned to Moſes there, of whom Caleb ſpeaks with great reſpect and veneration, which he knew would be very pleaſing and endearing to Joſhua, who could not but remember what had been ſaid by him concerning himſelf, and Caleb, though it was now forty-five years ago; it being ſo very ſtriking and memorable, that only two of that generation then preſent, ſent, ſhould enter into the land of Canaan; the fulfilment of which, in all its circumſtances, they had lived to ſee.

℣. 7. Forty years old was I, when Moſes the ſervant of the Lord ſent me from Kadeſh barnea, to ſpy out the land, &c.] Not he alone, but eleven more with him, one out of every tribe; his age he mentions, and of which, or near it, it is highly probable the reſt of the ſpies were; to ſhew that he and they were in the prime of their days, both as to bodily ſtrength and intellectual capacity, which were requiſite for ſuch ſervice as to ſpy out the land, of what quality that and its inhabitants were; and Moſes he calls the ſervant of the Lord, becauſe it was by the order and appointment of God, ſignified to Moſes, that this was done; and the place from whence they were ſent forth is named, which aſcertains what that Kadeſh was, where Iſrael was encamped when the ſpies were ſent, Numb. xiii. 26. and I brought him word again, as it was in mine heart; that is, he gave to Moſes upon his return a ſincere, honeſt and faithful repreſentation of the land, and its inhabitants, as it appeared to him.

℣. 8. Nevertheleſs, my brethren that went up with me, &c.] Meaning the reſt of the ſpies, excepting Joſhua, that went up with him into the land of Canaan to ſpy it, which they might be properly ſaid to do, ſince they went up a hill or mountain, in order to go into it, Numb. xiii. 17. made the heart of the people melt; diſcouraged them, filled them with fears, ſunk their ſpirits, that their hearts flowed, and became as weak as water, having no ſtrength left in them, or hope of poſſeſſing the land; being told what ſtout and gigantic men the inhabitants of it were, and how ſtrongly fortified were their cities: but I wholly followed the Lord my God; and did not join with them in an ill report of the good land; but having the fear of God before his eyes, walked after that, and delivered in his report faithfully, according to the dictates of his conſcience, and the real ſentiments of his mind; of this phraſe, ſee the note on Numb. xiv. 24.

℣. 9. And Moſes ſware on that day, ſaying, &c.] Or declared the oath of the Lord, for it was the Lord that ſware to what follows; ſee Deut. i. 34, 35, 36. ſurely the land whereon thy feet have trodden, ſhall be thine inheritance, and thy children for ever; not the whole land of Canaan, nor all the parts of it Caleb travelled through, but particularly Hebron; which though not expreſsly mentioned in the aforeſaid oath, yet was underſtood and known to be the meaning of it, and which Joſhua by the following grant owned, and it is elſewhere expreſsly affirmed, Judg. i. 20. and it is remarked, that it is not ſaid they, but he came to Hebron, Numb. xiii. 22. that is Caleb, ſo that it was literally true that his feet had trodden there: now the reaſon of this oath, and the inheritance aſſured by it to Caleb, was, becauſe thou haſt wholly followed the Lord thy God; in all his ways, and with full purpoſe of heart, and particularly had acted the upright and faithful part in the report he made of the good land; ſee the note on Numb. xiv. 24.

℣. 10. And now behold, the Lord hath kept me alive, as he ſaid, &c.] Had upheld him in life, and preſerved him from many dangers in the wilderneſs; and had continued him not only in life, but in health to that day, according to his promiſe to him, that he would bring him into the land of Canaan, and that he ſhould ſee and poſſeſs it, Numb. xiv. 24. Deut. i. 36. theſe forty and five years, even ſince the Lord ſpake this word unto Moſes, and while the children of Iſrael wandered in the wilderneſs; not that the children of Iſrael were wandering in the wilderneſs 45 years, but it was while they were in the wilderneſs this word or promiſe, concerning Caleb, was ſpoken by the Lord to Moſes; and it was in the ſecond year of their coming out of Egypt, after which they wandered in the wilderneſs 38 years, ſo that they had now been in the land of Canaan ſeven years; and from hence the Jewiſh chronologers [s] gather, that the land was ſeven years in ſubduing, and which their commentators in general take notice of. Maimonides [t] ſeems to be diſpleaſed with the Arabs for calling the wilderneſs, thro' which the Iſraelites travelled, the deſart of wandering; but it appears from hence to be a very proper epithet of it, and Kadeſh the place where they were firſt threatened, that they ſhould be wanderers in the wilderneſs for ſuch a time, had the additional name of Barnea, which ſignifies the ſon of a wanderer: and now, lo, I am this day 85 years old; being 40 years of age when ſent a ſpy into the land, ℣. 7. 38 years he was with Iſrael in the wilderneſs, and ſeven years more ſince they entered into the land, in all 85: there is no neceſſity of underſtanding it, that this was his preciſe birthday, but that about this time, or that he was now compleatly of ſuch an age, which was more by 15 years than the age of man in common at that time, ſee Pſ. xc. 10.

℣. 11. As yet I am as ſtrong this day, as I was in the day that Moſes ſent me, &c.] To ſpy the land, 45 years ago; ſuggeſting that he was as ſound in his mind, underſtanding, judgment and memory, and as hale, ſtrong and robuſt in his body now, as he had been ſo long ago; which was a wonderful inſtance of the care of divine providence over him in upholding him in life, and continuing him in vigour and health at ſuch an age, when the carcaſſes of ſo many thouſands had pined away and fell in the wilderneſs: as my ſtrength was then, even ſo is my ſtrength now for war; he had the ſame ſtrength of body, and courage of mind to engage in warlike enterpriſes, as he had ſo many years ago; and this he the rather mentions, to prevent any objection Joſhua might make to the giving of Hebron to him, ſince being inhabited by giants, it required a large ſhare of ſtrength and courage to attempt the conqueſt of it: but Caleb had ſtrength both to go out, and to come in; to do any civil buſineſs, to preſide over his tribe, or to govern any city, and its appendages, that ſhould be put into his hands.

℣. 12. Now therefore give me this mountain, whereof the Lord ſpake in that day, &c.] The mountainous part of the country, the hill-country of Judea, in which Hebron, Debir, and other cities were; for it was not one particular city only, that Caleb requeſted, but a large tract of ground: for thou heardeſt in that day, how the Anakim were there, and that the cities were great and fenced; that the giants, called Anakim, dwelt in the mountainous country, and their cities, Hebron, Debir and Anab were very large, and well fortified; this Joſhua heard at the time the ſpies were ſent into the land, he being one of them; and this he heard, not not from the report of the ſpies, but from the people of the country, and therefore muſt know that to conquer theſe men, and ſubdue their cities, was an arduous undertaking; but ſince he had ſtrength and courage, he hoped his requeſt would be granted: if ſo be the Lord will be with me; which he ſpake not as doubting of his preſence and power to be with him, and aſſiſt him, but as placing his confidence therein, and diſtruſting his own power and ability, having no dependence on that, but believing that the Lord, or, as the Targum, the Word of the Lord, would be with him for his help: then, ſays he, I ſhall be able to drive them out, as the Lord ſaid; that is, to drive the Anakim out of their cities, or out of the mountains, the caves and dens there, to which they betook themſelves, ſince the taking of Hebron, Debir and Anab by Joſhua, ch. xi. 22. and he relied upon the promiſe of God to enable him to do this, and not upon his natural ſtrength and courage, or the number and proweſs of the warlike tribe of Judah, of which he was prince.

℣. 13. And Joſhua bleſſed him, &c.] By granting him his requeſt, congratulating him upon it, and praying for and wiſhing him ſucceſs in his attempt to drive out the giants, and poſſeſs their country: and gave unto Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, Hebron for an inheritance; being ſatisfied of the juſtneſs of his ſuit, of its being the will of God, and the order of Moſes, that he ſhould have this for an inheritance, which he had heard himſelf, had knowledge of, and well remembered: this is to be underſtood not of the city of Hebron itſelf, for that was given to the Levites, and was a city of refuge, but the country round about in the fields and villages annexed to it, as appears from ch. xxi. 12.

℣. 14. Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite unto this day, &c.] The time of the writing of this book: becauſe he wholly followed the Lord God of Iſrael; as in ℣. 8, 9. Hebron ſignifies fellowſhip or communion; and this in a ſpiritual ſenſe is very deſirable by all the people of God, as Hebron was by Caleb, even communion with God, Father, Son and Spirit, with angels and ſaints, both now and hereafter; and they are willing to engage with their ſpiritual enemies in the name and ſtrength of Chriſt, though ever ſo potent, may they but enjoy this bleſſing, and which is more or leſs granted to all the hearty, ſincere and faithful followers of Chriſt; ſee John xiv. 21—23. 1 John i. 3, 7.

℣. 15. And the name of Hebron before, was Kirjath-arba, &c.] According to Jerom [u], it had its name of Hebron from a ſon or grandſon of Caleb of that name, 1 Chron. ii. 42. and if ſo, then it is here, and in ſome other places, ſo called by anticipation: Kirjath-arba, may be rendered the city of the four; and had its name, as ſome think, from the four couple buried there, or near it, Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Leah; or from four eminent perſons, who formerly dwelt there, Aner, Eſhcol, Mamre and Abraham; or rather from four perſons that more lately dwelt there, Anak and his three ſons, Sheſhai, Ahiman and Talmai; or Arba is the name of ſome great man, to whom this city belonged, and ſo was called the city of Arba, which is the ſenſe of our verſion, as appears by the following ſupplement: which Arba was a great man among the Anakim; both in ſtature, and in dignity, and in authority, which ſome take to be Anak himſelf, the father of the Anakim; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi: and the land had reſt from war; as is obſerved in ch. xi. 23. after Joſhua had finiſhed his conqueſt; and here again it is remarked juſt before the diviſion of the land, as being now a proper time for it.

CHAP. XV.

IN this chapter are related the boundaries of the lot of the tribe of Judah, ℣. 1—12. and the aſſignment of Hebron to Caleb, from whence he drove out the giants, and of Debir, which was taken by Othniel his brother, to whom, on that account, he gave his daughter in marriage, who made a further requeſt to her father, which was granted, ℣. 13—19. and then follows an account of the ſeveral cities by name, which fell to the tribe of Judah, ℣. 20—63.

℣. 1. This then was the lot of the tribe of the children of Judah by their families, &c.] The land of Canaan was divided by lot to the ſeveral tribes, and the tribe of Judah had its lot firſt; of the manner of caſting lots, ſee the notes on Numb. xxvi. 55. It ſeems as if the lot was firſt caſt for the tribes of Judah and Joſeph, when the former had the ſouthern, and the latter the northern part of the land for their portion, which was done in Gilgal; after this lots were caſt in Shiloh for the other ſeven tribes, who had the land divided among them, which lay between Judah and Joſeph, or between the ſouthern and northern parts of the land, ſee ch. xviii. 1, &c. and it ſeems that not only the land was divided to the tribes by lot, but that the portion of land which belonged to each tribe was divided in the ſame way to the ſeveral families and houſholds belonging thereunto; as is here ſuggeſted, with reſpect to the tribe of Judah, whoſe lot reached even to the border of Edom; or Idumea, which lay to the ſouth of the land of Canaan: the wilderneſs of Zion ſouthward, was the uttermoſt part of the ſouth coaſt; the ſame with Kadeſh, and lay upon the borders of Edom; ſee Numb. xxxiii. 36. and xxxiv. 3.

℣. 2. And their ſouth border was from the ſhore of the ſalt ſea, &c.] Sometimes called the dead ſea, the ſea of Sodom, and the lake Aſphaltites, which, as Jarchi obſerves, was ſouth-eaſt of the land of Iſrael: from the bay that looketh ſouthward; or the tongue, as the Hebrew, which the Targum and Kimchi interpret of a rock or promontory, the point that ran out into the ſea, looking to the ſouth-eaſt.

℣. 3. And it went out to the ſouth-ſide of Maalehacrabbim, &c.] Or the aſcent of Akrabbim, as it is called, Numb. xxxiv. 4. ſee the note there: and paſſed along to Zin, and aſcended upon the ſouth-ſide unto Kadeſh-barnea; which perfectly agrees with the ſouthern border of the land, as deſcribed in Numb. xxxiv. 4. and paſſed along to Hezron, and went up to Adar; which two places being near to one another, as is very likely, are put together, as if one place, and called Hazar-addar, Numb. xxxiv. 4. and mention is made of Hezron, which is Hazar, [u] De loc. Heb. fol. 87. F.

zar, ℣. 25. but not of Adar: and fetched a compass to Karkaa; which Jerom [w] calls Acchara, a village in the wilderness; and if the same with Carcaria, it was according to him a day's journey from Petra in Idumea; but that is not likely; see Judg. viii. 10.

℣. 4. From thence it passed towards Azmon, and went out unto the river of Egypt, &c.] In like manner is this coast described, Numb. xxxiv. 5. it is called by Jerom [x] Asemona, and said to be a city in the desart, to the south of Judah, dividing Egypt, and the lot of the tribe of Judah, leading to the sea: and the out-goings of that coast were at the sea; the Mediterranean sea; or to the west, as the Targum; this was the utmost border of the tribe of Judah this way: this shall be your south coast; of the lot that fell to the tribe of Judah.

℣. 5. And the east border was the salt sea, even unto the end of Jordan, &c.] To the place where Jordan fell into it; so that this border was the whole length of the salt sea, which Josephus says [y] was 580 furlongs; and, according to Pliny [z], 100 miles: and their border in the north quarter was from the bay of the sea, at the uttermost part of Jordan; this northern border began where the eastern ended, at the bay or creek of the sea, where Jordan fell into it.

℣. 6. And the border went up to Beth-hoglah, &c.] A place in the tribe of Benjamin, mentioned along with Jericho, and probably near it, ch. xviii. 21. Jerom [a] speaks of a place called Betagla, in his time, which was three miles from Jericho, and two from Jordan, and perhaps is this same place: and passed along by the north of Beth-arabah; another city which belonged to Benjamin, ch. xviii. 22. and lay in a desart, as its name shews; or in a plain, as the Targum: and the border went up to the stone of Bohan the son of Reuben; by whom, or on whose account it was placed, either as a sepulchral stone, he being buried there, or in memory of some famous exploit done by him there, he being one of those of the tribe of Reuben, that came with Joshua to assist in the war against the Canaanites; or it was set for a sign of the border, as Kimchi thinks, it being the boundary between Judah and Benjamin, ch. xviii. 17. Bunting says [b], it is near Baburim, in the valley just in the king's way, and is of an extraordinary greatness, shining like marble.

℣. 7. And the border went up towards Debir, &c.] This was neither the Debir in the tribe of Gad, on the other side Jordan, ch. xiii. 26. nor that in the tribe of Judah near Hebron, ℣. 15. but a third city of that name, and was not far from Jericho: from the valley of Achor; where Achan was put to death, and had its name from thence; which, according to Jarchi, lay between the stone of Bohan and Debir: and so northward, looking towards Gilgal; not the place where Israel were encamped when this lot was made, but it seems to be the same that is called Geliloth, ch. xviii. 17: that is, the going up to Adummim; which Jerom says [c], was formerly a little village, now in ruins, in the lot of the tribe of Judah, which place is called to this day Maledomim; and by the Greeks, the ascent of the red ones, because of the blood which was there frequently shed by thieves: it lies on the borders of Judah and Benjamin, as you go from Jerusalem to Jericho, where there is a garrison of soldiers for the help of travellers, and is supposed to be the place where the man fell among thieves in his way from the one to the other, Luke x. 30. It was four miles distant from Jericho to the west, according to Adrichomius [d], and was a mountain, and part of the mountains of Engaddi: which is on the south side of the river; which some take to be the brook Cedron; but that is not very likely, being too near Jerusalem for this place: it may be rendered the valley, so Jarchi, either the valley of Achor, before mentioned, or however a valley that ran along by the mount or ascent of Adummim, which lay to the south of it: and the border passed to the waters of En-shemesh: or the fountain of the sun; but of it we have no account, what and where it was. It might be so called, because dedicated to the sun by the idolatrous Canaanites, or because of the sun's influence on the waters of it. Our city, Bath is, by Antoninus [e], called aquæ solis, the waters of the sun; though there is a fountain in Cyrene, so called, for a reason just the reverse, it being as Mela [f] and Pliny [g] affirm, hottest in the middle of the night, and then grows cooler by little and little; and when it is light, is cold, and when the sun is risen is colder still, and at noon exceeding cold; and, according to Vossius [h], it is the same with the fountain of Jupiter Ammon; and so it appears to be from Herodotus [i], by whom it is also called the fountain of the sun, and which he places in Thebes, though Pliny distinguishes them: and the goings out thereof were at En-rogel; which signifies the fountain of the fuller; so the Targum renders it, and probably was a fountain where fullers cleansed their cloths; and was called Rogel, as Jarchi and Kimchi say, because they used to tread them with their feet when they washed them. This was a place near Jerusalem, as appears from 1 Kings i. 9. near to which perhaps was the fuller's monument, at the corner tower of Jerusalem, Josephus [k] speaks of, as there was also a place not far from it called the fuller's field, Is. vii. 3. according to Bunting [l], it had its name from travellers washing their feet here.

℣. 8. And the border went up by the valley of the son of Hinnom, &c.] Which belonged to a man of that name formerly, and was near Jerusalem, placed by Jerom [m] to the east of it; but Reland [n] rather thinks it is to the south. It was infamous for the sacrifices of children to Moloch in it, by burning them, or causing them to pass through fire: hence, in allusion to it, hell-fire is often in the New Testament called Geenna; this border from the salt sea, and from Jordan, is all along said to go up, because from hence to Jerusalem was an ascent, that lying on higher ground: unto the south-side of the Jebusite; of the place the Jebusite inhabited; the same is Jerusalem; which was formerly called Jebus, from the inhabitants of it; yea, Jebusi, as here, and so may intend not the inhabitants, but the place, see ch. xviii. 28. Judg. xix. 10. and here the Jebusites lived, at least in some part of it, until the time of David, 2 Sam. v. 6, 7, 8. and the border went up to the top of the mountain that lieth before the valley of Hinnom west- westward; which is generally supposed to be the mount Moriah: which is at the end of the valley of the giants, northward; the valley of Rephaim, as it is called 2 Sam. v. 18 and here. Mount Moriah, as it was to the west of the valley of Hinnom, it was to the north of the valley of Rephaim; which valley, as Josephus [n] says, was not far from Jerusalem, 20 furlongs from it. Some late travellers [o] tell us it lies in the way from Jerusalem to Bethlehem, and is not above two hours ride from the former. From this account it appears, as Jarchi remarks, that Jerusalem was not within the line, and was not in the border of Judah, but of Benjamin, which tribe lay to the north of Judah: it seems indeed to have been one part of it in the tribe of Judah, and the other in the tribe of Benjamin; though the Jews frequently say it did not belong to either tribe.

✝. 9. And the border was drawn from the top of the hill, &c.] Mount Moriah, and went round in a circuit, so Jarchi and Kimchi: unto the fountain of the water of Nephtoah; which lay at the bottom of it; which, according to the Jewish writers, is the same with the fountain of Etam, from whence a stream flowed to the dipping-room in the water-gate of the temple, where the high-priest for the first time dipped himself on the day of atonement [p]: and went out to the cities of mount Ephron; Jerom [q] speaks of an Ephron in the tribe of Judah, which was a very large village in his time, and went by the name of Ephræa, and was 20 miles from Ælia or Jerusalem to the north; and which Eusebius better places eight miles from it; and Jarchi observes, that the line went to the north-side, and the border enlarged to this place; near to this mountain were cities, and it is not improbable that one of them might have its name from it; but whether this, or what mountain is here meant, is uncertain: some have thought of Ephraim, with its towns mentioned in 2 Chron. xiii. 19. which seems to have been in the tribe of Ephraim; though Reland [r] places it in the tribe of Benjamin: and the border was drawn to Baalah, which is Kirjath-jearim; called Kirjath-baal, or the city of Baal, ✝. 60. where it is probable there was a temple of Baal; and when it came into the hands of the Israelites, they changed its name to Kirjath-jearim, or the city of the woods, because of the great number of trees which grew about it; for which reason it might have been pitched upon by the heathens for their idolatrous service; it was one of the cities of the Gibeonites, ch. ix. 17. and according to Eusebius and Jerom [s], it was nine or ten miles from Jerusalem, as you go to Lydda; it is also called Baalah in 1 Chron. xiii. 6. and Baale of Judah, 2 Sam. vi. 2.

✝. 10. And the border compassed from Baalah westward unto mount Seir, &c.] Not that in Idumea, so famous for its being the seat of Esau, which lay remote from hence, but a third of that name near Kirjath-jearim; and which Adrichomius [t] places on the borders of Azotus and Ascalon; this compass is fetched from the north to the west: and passed along unto the side of the mount Jearim, which is Chesalon, on the north-side; that is, on the north-side of the mount, which went by both those names; and which Jerom [u] places on the borders of Ælia or Jerusalem; but it seems to be at a distance from thence, and near to Kirjath-jearim, and had its name as that, from the multitude of trees that grew on it: and went down to Bethshemesh; there were several cities of this name, but this, according to Jerom [w], was a Levite's city in the tribe of Benjamin, and in his day was shewn as you go from Eleutheropolis to Nicopolis or Emmaus, 10 miles to the east; according to Bochard [x], it was five miles from Kirjath-jearim to the south; and Bunting [y] places it four miles from Jerusalem westward, taking it for a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xxi. 16. see 1 Sam. vi. 12. and passed on to Timnah; which, in Jerom's time, was a large village on the borders of Lydda, as you go to Jerusalem, in the tribe of Judah or Dan [z]; it is placed in the tribe of Judah, ✝. 57. tho' thought to be afterwards given to Dan; here Judah sheared his sheep, Gen. xxxviii, 12. see the note there.

✝. 11. And the border went out unto the side of Ekron northward, &c.] Which was one of the principalities of the Philistines; and which, though it fell to the lot of Judah, ✝. 45. was not possessed by them: and the border was drawn to Shicron, and passed along to mount Baalah; of which places we have no account elsewhere: and went unto Jabneel; which Masius makes no doubt was one of the Jamnia's, and particularly that which was a sea-port; which Strabo says [a], was distant from Azotus and Ascalon, about 200 furlongs, or 25 miles: and the goings out of the border were at the sea; the Mediterranean sea; here the northern border ended.

✝. 12. And the west border was to the great sea, and the coast thereof, &c.] The western border of the tribe of Judah went along by the Mediterranean sea, which lay west to the land of Canaan; and this border reached from Jabneel to the river of Egypt, where the southern border ended, ✝. 4. this is the coast of the children of Judah round about according to their families; but being too large, some part of it was afterwards given to Simeon, and some particular cities of it were given to Dan and Benjamin: it was bounded on the west by the tribes of Simeon and Dan towards the Mediterranean sea, and by the tribe of Benjamin on the north, and by the wilderness of Paran on the south, and by the dead sea and Jordan on the east.

✝. 13. And unto Caleb the son of Jephunneh he gave a part among the children of Judah, &c.] That is, Joshua gave it to him. This account is inserted before the cities in the lot of the tribe of Judah were enumerated, to shew what was to be excepted from them, and which had been given to Caleb previous to the lot: according to the commandment of the Lord to Joshua; for as he had declared this to Moses, Deut. i. 36. so it seems he also gave the same order to Joshua, who, it is not improbable, might consult the Lord about it when Caleb made his request, ch. xiv. 12. even the city of Arba the father of Anak, which city is Hebron; see the note on ch. xiv. 15.

✝. 14. And Caleb drove thence the three sons of Anak, &c.] Some think this was after the death of Joshua, and is here inserted by some other person divinely inspired, and thoroughly acquainted with this fact, that the gift and the possession of this place might appear in one view; but it rather seems to be done before: Sheshai, and Ahiman, and Talmai, the children of Anak; the very same giants Caleb saw at Hebron, when he was sent a spy into the

the land, Numb. xiii. 22. for theſe may as well be ſuppoſed to have lived to this time as himſelf, unleſs it can be thought that they were the ſons of thoſe men called by their fathers names; and tho' they were driven out when Joſhua took Hebron, yet while he was engaged in making other conqueſts, or however before he died, they regained the poſſeſſion of that city, and of the parts adjacent to it, from whence Caleb, with the help of his tribe, expelled them, conquered and ſlew them, Judg. i. 10.

℣. 15. And he went up from thence to the inhabitants of Debir, &c.] Having conquered Hebron, and got poſſeſſion of that, Caleb marched to Debir, a city not many miles from Hebron, and ſeems to have been in the country, and part of the land, which was given him; of which ſee the note on ch. x. 38. and the name of Debir before was Kirjath-ſepher; or the city of books; either a place of literature, a ſort of an academy, or where was a public library; the Targum calls it Kirjath-arche, or the city of the archives, in which were laid up the public records of the Canaanites; the ſame is called Kirjath-ſannah for the like reaſon, ℣. 49. ſee the note there.

℣. 16. And Caleb ſaid, he that ſmiteth Kirjath-ſepher, and taketh it, &c.] Which he ordered to be proclaimed through the army that was under his command; and which was done not ſo much on the account of the difficulty of taking the place, through the number of the inhabitants of it, and its fortifications, which it ſeems had fallen again into the hands of the Canaanites, ſince it was taken by Joſhua; nor through inactivity, diffidence and timorouſneſs in himſelf; but that others, who were officers, and men of valour under him, might gather ſome laurels as well as himſelf; and chiefly being under a divine impulſe, he ordered this declaration to be made, whereby his brother Othniel, who was to be a judge in Iſrael, might appear a great man, and fit for ſuch an office; and as an encouragement, he promiſes as follows: to him will I give Achſah my daughter to wife; and to be married into the family of the chief prince of the tribe of Judah, was a very great honour, as well as no doubt a very large dowry might be expected, and was given with her, and very probably the city of Debir was promiſed that ſhould be taken. This Achſah ſeems to be a daughter of Caleb by a concubine, 1 Chron. ii. 48, 49.

℣. 17. And Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, the brother of Caleb, took it, &c.] The relation of Othniel to Caleb is a little intricate, and, as it is underſtood, occaſions objections to the marriage of Caleb's daughter to him; it ſeems at firſt ſight, that he was Caleb's own brother, a younger brother, and ſo uncle to his daughter, and ſuch marriages were forbidden, Lev. xviii. 14. Jarchi thinks he was the brother of Caleb by his mother's ſide; Kimchi, both by father and mother's ſide; but not to obſerve, that beſides the word brother ſometimes ſignifies only a kinſman, or near relation, and not preciſely a brother; it is not Othniel that is called the brother of Caleb, but Kenaz, who was the father of Othniel; ſo that Caleb was Othniel's uncle, and Achſah and Othniel were brother's children, or own couſins, between whom marriage was allowed of: and he gave him Achſah his daughter to wife; according to the tenor of his proclamation, and the promiſe he made.

℣. 18. And it came to paſs as ſhe came unto him, &c.] To her huſband, being conducted from her father's houſe to his, in order to conſummate the marriage, juſt as we may ſuppoſe when ſhe was got to her huſband's houſe, before ſhe lighted off the beaſt on which ſhe rode: that ſhe moved him to aſk of her father a field; or perſuaded him to make ſuch a requeſt to him, or that he would give her leave to make it; that is, Achſah put Othniel her eſpouſed huſband upon it, to entreat her father Caleb, or ſuffer her to uſe her intereſt with him to obtain a field of him, over and above, and ſomething better than what he had already given: and ſhe lighted off her aſs; ſhe leaped off, or threw herſelf from it; or bowing herſelf, ſhe fell off on her feet, as Jarchi interprets it, and in an humble manner made her obeiſance to her father; though De Dieu, from the uſe of the word in the Ethiopic language gives, a different ſenſe, as if ſhe continued on her aſs, and did not alight, waiting the ſucceſs of her huſband's requeſt; or that her father, taking notice of this, might aſk the reaſon of it, which would give her an opportunity of aſking the favour of him, which ſhe judged was a proper time of doing it; and there are ſome verſions which ſeem to countenance this ſenſe; the Septuagint verſion is, "ſhe cried from off the aſs;" and the Vulgate Latin verſion, "ſhe ſighed as ſhe ſat upon the aſs:" and Caleb ſaid unto her, what wouldeſt thou? what wouldeſt thou have? what is thy requeſt? for he perceived by the poſture ſhe put herſelf in, that ſhe had ſomething to ſay to him.

℣. 19. Who anſwered, give me a bleſſing, &c.] By which ſhe meant not a paternal benediction, or that he would wiſh and pray for a bleſſing on her; nor food, or a maintenance, as Jarchi, that her huſband would provide for her; but rather an inheritance or poſſeſſion, as the Targum; or a gift, as Abendana, a preſent, or ſomething over and above what he had already given her; or an addition to her portion, as Kimchi: the word is ſometimes uſed for a fiſh-pool, as well as a bleſſing, and ſo glances at what ſhe had in view, pools of water, or a well-watered land: for thou haſt given me a ſouth land; a dry land, as the Jewiſh writers[a] generally interpret this word, otherwiſe all the land belonging to the tribe of Judah was ſouth land, and Caleb could give her no other; but Debir, as Hebron was, was in the hill-country, was mountainous, and ſo dry, and wanted watering: give me alſo ſprings of water; ſhe means land in which there were ſprings of water; for unleſs ſhe was poſſeſſed of the land in which they were, ſhe would have no command of the ſprings, and ſo have little or no uſe of them: and he gave her the upper ſprings, and the nether ſprings; ſuch as were in the higher grounds, and ſuch as were in the lower ones, that ſhe might have a ſufficiency to water all her lands and fields; or as ſhe moved her huſband to aſk a field, and he put her on doing the ſame, Caleb gave her a field, in the upper part of which were ſprings, and alſo in the lower part; though he ſeems to have given more than ſhe requeſted.

℣. 20. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Judah, according to their families.] The general deſcription of which is given in the preceding part of the chapter, as the particular cities belonging to it are enumerated in the following part; the account of the gift of Hebron to Caleb, and the taking of Debir by Othniel, with the requeſt of Achſah, and the grant of it, are inſerted be-between them, and ſtand as it were in a parentheſis.

℣. 21. And the uttermoſt cities of the tribe of the children of Judah, &c.] That is, thoſe cities which were the outward part of the tribe of Judah, the ſouthern border of it; for the midland cities are not in this part of the deſcription reckoned, which reaches from hence to the end of ℣. 32: toward the coaſt of Edom ſouthward; it begins about the dead ſea, and goes on in that part of the land of Canaan which bordered on Idumea, and ſo proceeds on weſtward towards Gaza, and the Mediterrancan ſea: the cities in this part of the tribe were Kabzeel, called Jekabzeel, Neh. xi. 25. and was the native place of Benaiah, one of David's mighty men, 2 Sam. xxiii. 20: and Eder and Jagur; of which we have no mention elſewhere.

℣. 22. And Kinah, and Dimonah, and Adadah.] The firſt of theſe we read of no where elſe; the ſecond is thought to be the ſame with Dibon, Neh. xi. 25. and Jerom [b] obſerves, that a place elſewhere was indifferently called in his time Dibon and Dimon; and the laſt of theſe is no where met with.

℣. 23. And Kedeſh, and Hazor, and Ithnan.] The firſt of theſe ſeems to be Kadeſh-barnea, which was to the ſouth of the land, and on the borders of Edom, from whence the ſpies were ſent; and Hazor is another city from that which is mentioned ch. xi. 1. and was in the tribe of Naphtali; and Ithnan, which Jerom [c] calls Jedna, was, according to him, ſix miles from Eleutheropolis, as you go to Hebron; the Greek verſion joins this and the former city together, and makes them one.

℣. 24. Ziph, and Telem, and Bealoth.] Ziph was of the tribe of Judah in the ſouth, on the borders of Eleutheropolis, as Jerom ſays [d], and was eight miles from Hebron to the eaſt; and in his time a village was ſhewn, where David was hid; but that Ziph ſeems to be in another part of this tribe near Carmel, and from whence a wilderneſs had its name; ſee ℣. 55. 1 Sam. xxiii. 14. and Telem is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Telaim, 1 Sam. xv. 4. of Bealoth we read no where elſe.

℣. 25. And Hazor, Hadattah, and Kerioth, and Hezron, which is Hazor.] According to the Targum, two cities only are here meant, which reads, and Hazor-hadattah, and Kerioth-hezron, which is Hazor; and this reading ſeems to be right; there were three Hazors in this tribe, one in ℣. 23. and two more here, which are diſtinguiſhed, the firſt is called Hazor-hadattah, or new Hazor; of which Jerom ſays [e], there is a village at this day called Aſor, in the borders of Aſcalon, to the eaſt of it, which fell to the lot of the tribe of Judah: the ſcripture makes mention of it, calling it new Aſor, to diſtinguiſh it from the old; and Kerioth hezron, is the ſame with Hezron, ℣. 3. and had alſo the name of Hezron. From this place, Judas Iſcariot is thought to have his name, being Iſh-ceriot, a man of Keriot.

℣. 26. Amam, and Shema, and Moladah, &c.] Of Amam we read no where elſe. Shema is thought by ſome to be ſame with Sheba, though wrongly, given afterwards to the tribe of Simeon, as was alſo Moladah, mentioned with it, ch. xix. 2. it is alſo ſpoken of in 1 Chron. iv. 28. Neh. xi. 25. and ſeems to be the ſame with Malathi or Malatis, about 20 miles from Hebron [f].

℣. 27. And Hazar-gaddah, and Heſhmon, and Beth-palet.] The firſt of theſe, it is probable, is the ſame, Jerom [g] calls Gadda in the tribe of Judah, which was in his day a village in the extreme borders of Doroma to the eaſt, hanging over the dead ſea; Heſhmon is met with no where elſe; Beth-palet is in Neh. xi. 26. where it is called Beth-phelet.

℣. 28. And Hazar-ſhual, and Beer-ſheba, and Bizjoth-jah;] The firſt of theſe ſeems to have its name from an haunt of foxes here, and was given to the tribe of Simeon, ch. xix. 3. and is mentioned as here with Beerſheba, 1 Chron. iv. 28. Neh. xi. 27. which was a city well known in the extreme border of the land of Canaan ſouthward; hence the phraſe from Dan to Beer-ſheba, of which Jerom ſays, [h] Berſabee in the tribe of Judah or Simeon, is at this day a large village, 20 miles from Hebron to the ſouth, in which there is a Roman garriſon; and from hence the borders of the land of Judea begin, and go on to Dan, which is by Paneas; of the latter city no mention is made elſewhere.

℣. 29. Baalah, and Iim, and Azem;] Baalah and Azem were given to the tribe of Simeon, ch. xix. 3. for Baalah is the ſame with Balah there, as it is with Bilha, 1 Chron. iv. 29. though according to the Jeruſalem Talmud [i] it is the ſame with Baalah, given to the tribe of Dan. ch. xix. 44. and was one of thoſe places whoſe houſes were in Judah and their fields in Dan; and Azem is the ſame with Ezem there; of Iim we read no where elſe.

℣. 30. And Eltolad, and Cheſil, and Hormah;] The firſt of theſe is called Tolad, 1 Chron. iv. 29. and the next ſeems to be the ſame with Bethul and Bethuel, ch. xix. 4. 1 Chron. iv. 30. and here the Greek verſion calls it Baithel; and Hormah is the ſame with Zephath, Judg. i. 17. all theſe three cities were given to the tribe of Simeon, ch. xix. 4.

℣. 31. And Ziglag, and Madmannah, and Sanſannah;] Ziglag was alſo given to the tribe of Simeon, ch. xix. 5. it was in the hands of the king of Gath, in the times of David, who gave it to him; it bordered on the Amalekites, and is placed by Jerom [k] in Daroma, on the ſouth of the lot of Judah or Simeon. Madmannah according to the ſame writer [l] was in his time called Menois, a town near the city Gaza; of Sanſannah no mention is made elſewhere.

℣. 32. And Lebaoth, and Shilhim, and Ain, and Rimmon, &c.] Whether Lebaoth is the ſame with Beth-lebaoth, given to the tribe of Simeon, ch. xix. 6. is not certain; Shilhim is nowhere elſe ſpoken of. Ain ſeems to be the ſame with that in Numb. xxxiv. 11. ſee the note there; and Rimmon the place Jerom [m] calls Eremmon, which he ſays was a large village of the Jews, 16 miles from Eleutheropolis to the ſouth, in Daroma; this and the preceding are joined together as one, and called Enrimmon, Neh. xi. 29. It is probable they were near to each other, and in proceſs of time the buildings of each might increaſe, ſo as to meet and join each other: all the cities are 29, with their villages; but according to our verſion, and as we point them, they are 38; ſome make them 36, others 37; the Jews generally make 38 of them, as we do, and account for the difference of number thus; that 9 of theſe cities were given to the tribe of Simeon, ch. xix. and theſe being taken out out of the 38, there remain 29; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi account for it; but as the number of the cities is uncertain, and this account is given before the ſeparation of the 9, and they are all reckoned together, this does not ſeem to be ſatisfactory; rather, as Abarbinel obſerves, the 29 of the places enumerated were cities, and the other were villages, unwalled towns, or not of ſo much note as the 29.

℣. 33. And in the valley, &c.] From hence to the end of ℣. 47. are enumerated the ſeveral cities belonging to the tribe of Judah which lay in the valley. Jerom [f] ſays, that now all the plain and champaign country near Eleutheropolis, which verges to the north and weſt, is called Sephela, or the valley: Eſhtaol, Zoreah, and Aſhnah; the two firſt of theſe ſeem to be given afterwards to the tribe of Dan, ch. xix. 41. between theſe two places Samſon was born and buried, Judg. xiii. 2, 25. and xvi. 31. they were both at the ſame diſtance from Eleutheropolis, according to Jerom; of Eſhtaol he ſays [g], it is ſhewed to this day 10 miles from Eleutheropolis, to the north, as you go to Nicopolis or Emmaus; and of Zoreah, which he calls Saara, he ſays [h] it is a village on the borders of Eleutheropolis, as you go to Nicopolis, about 10 miles of it in the tribe of Dan or Judah; as for Aſhnah no mention is made of it elſewhere; there was another place of the ſame name, but different from this, ℣. 43.

℣. 34. And Zanoah and En-gannim, and Tappuah, and Enam; the firſt of theſe Jerom ſays [i] is in the borders of Eleutheropolis, as you go to Ælia, (or Jeruſalem); there is at this day a village called Zanua; and En-gannim, which ſignifies a fountain of gardens, is now (according to the ſame writer [k]) a village near Bethel. Tappuah was a royal city, of which ſee ch. xii. 17. Enaim in the tribe of Judah, Jerom ſays [l] in his day was the village Bethenim, about the turpentine-tree, or oak of Mamre; but that ſeems to be the ſame with Ain, ℣. 32. of which he ſays the ſame under that word, and makes it to be two miles from the oak, and four from Hebron. Maſius thinks it is the ſame with Enam, near to Timnath, of which ſee the note on Gen. xxxviii. 14. it following Tappuah one would be tempted to think with Jarchi it was the ſame with En-Tappuah, but that that was on the borders of Manaſſeh, ch. xvii. 7. it has an ה prefixed to it, and may be read that Enam, as pointing out ſome known and remarkable place, though now unknown.

℣. 35. Jarmuth, and Adullam, Sochoh, and Azekah;] The two firſt of theſe were royal cities, of which ſee ch. x. 3. and xii. 15. Jerom ſays [m] there were two little villages in his day of the name of Socho, as you go to Ælia, (or Jeruſalem) from Eleutheropolis, in the ninth mile on the public way, one in the mountain, and the other in the plain, (the ſame with this) both of which were called Socoth: of this place was Antigonus, preſident of the ſanhedrim, and ſucceſſor of Simeon the juſt, called in the Miſnah [n] a man of Socho; of Azekah, ſee the note on ch. x. 10. It appears to be near to Sochoh from 1 Sam. xvii. 1. where the Philiſtines are ſaid to pitch their camp between them.

℣. 36. And Sharaim, and Adithaim, and Gederah, and Gederothaim, &c.] Sharaim ſeems to be the Saara of Jerom, which he deſcribes as a village on the borders of Eleutheropolis, to the north as you go to Nicopolis, (or Emmaus) about 10 miles from it in the tribe of Dan or Judah [o]; there was a place called Beth-Shaaraim, where the Sanhedrim ſometimes ſat [p], and where R. Judah was buried [q]. This ſeems to be the ſame with Shaaraim in 1 Sam. xvii. 52. and Jerom obſerves [r], under the word Adithaim, that there is a village called Adia, near Gaza, and another Aditha, near Dioſpolis, (or Lydda) to the eaſt, which ſeems to be the place here meant. Gederah ſeems to be the ſame he calls Gaddera, in the tribe of Judah [s], now, he ſays, called a village belonging to the country of Ælia, (or Jeruſalem) by the name of Gadera, about the turpentine tree. Of Gederothaim we no where elſe read; Kimchi thinks Gederah and Gederothaim were one city: 14 cities with their villages; but upon counting them, it will appear there are 15, which may be reduced to 14, if with Kimchi we take the two laſt to be but one, who in this way reconciles it; or with Jarchi make Tappuah and Enam to be one alſo, called En-tappuah, which is the way he takes to ſolve the difficulty; but perhaps the caſe is this, that one of the places in the account was not a city, but a village.

℣. 37. Zenan, and Hadaſhah, and Migdal-gad;] Here begins another liſt or catalogue of the cities in the valley or plain. Zenan perhaps is the ſame with Zaanan, Mic. i. 11. and Hadaſhah was ſo ſmall a city in Judea in the times of the Miſnic doctors, that they ſay [t] it had but fifty dwellings in it; and Jerom ſpeaks [u] of a place called Adaſa, in the tribe of Judah, in his times a village near Guphna; it ſhould be Taphna. Of Migdal-gad we no where elſe read; ſome think it had its name from ſome famous exploit done here by one of the tribe of Gad, who came over with Joſhua to aſſiſt in the war, as the ſtone of Bohan the Reubenite, ℣. 6.

℣. 38. And Dilean, and Mizpeh, and Joktheel;] Of the firſt and laſt of theſe nothing is to be ſaid; Mizpeh, of which name there were cities in other tribes; this in the tribe of Judah was in the times of Jerom [w] called Mapha, on the borders of Eleutheropolis to the ſouth, as you go to Ælia, or Jeruſalem.

℣. 39. Lachiſh, and Bozkath, and Eglon;] Lachiſh and Eglon were royal cities, of which ſee ch. x. 3. the other city is called Boſcath, of which place was the mother of king Joſiah, 2 Kings xxi. 1. ſome take it to be the ſame with Baſcama, 1 Maccab. xiii. 23.

℣. 40. And Cabbon, and Lahmam, and Kithliſh;] Cities of which we can give no account, not being mentioned elſewhere.

℣. 41. And Gederoth, Beth-dagon, and Naamah, and Makkedah, &c.] Gederoth is reckoned among the cities of the low country, and ſouth of Judah, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. Beth-dagon, in it very probably was a temple of Dagon, which was a principal deity of the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. v. 2. Jerom ſays [x] in his time was ſhewn a large village called Capher-Dagon, between Dioſpolis and Jamnia; of Naamah, the ſame writer ſays nothing only that it was a city of the tribe of Judah; of Makkedah, ſee ch. x. 10. it was a royal city, ch. xii. 16. ſixteen cities with their villages; and is the exact number of them, as before enumerated.

℣. 42. Lebnah, and Ether, and Aſhan ;] Here begins another diviſion or liſt of the cities of Judah, in the valley or plain. Lebnah is the ſame with Libnah, a royal city ; ſee ch. x. 29. and xii. 15. Ether was given to the tribe of Simeon, ch. xix. 7. and under Ether of the lot of Simeon. Jerom writes [y], there is now a very large village called Jethira, in interior Daroma, near Malatha, 20 miles from Eleutheropolis. Aſhan alſo was given to the tribe of Simeon, ch. xix. 7. and the above writer relates [z], that there was in his times a village called Beth-Aſan, belonging to Ælia, or Jeruſalem, 15 miles from it.

℣. 43. And Jiphta, and Aſhnah, and Nezib ;] Jiphta is no where elſe mentioned ; there was another Aſhnah of this tribe, and which was in the vale alſo, met with already in ℣. 33. Nezib was in Jerom's [a] times called Naſib, 7 miles from Eleutheropolis, as you go to Hebron.

℣. 44. And Keilah, and Achzib, and Mareſhah, &c.] The firſt of theſe is a well known city, which David ſaved from the hands of the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. xxiii. 1, &c. In Jerom's time, it was a little village to the eaſt of Eleutheropolis, about 8 miles from it, as you go to Hebron ; in which was ſhewn the ſepulchre of the prophet Habakkuk [b]. Achzib is ſaid to be on the borders of Aſher, ch. xix. 29. is ſuppoſed the ſame with Cezib, Gen. xxxviii. 5. and the Ecdippa of Joſephus and others, and now called Zib ; ſee the note on Mic. i. 14. Of Mareſhah Jerom ſays [c], only the ruins of it were to be ſeen two miles from Eleutheropolis : nine cities with their villages ; which is juſt their number.

℣. 45. Ekron, with her towns and her villages ;] One of the five principalities of the Philiſtines, which with two more next mentioned, though they fell to the lot of the tribe of Judah, were never poſſeſſed by them ; for which reaſon perhaps Gath and Aſcalon are not mentioned, and theſe are put for the reſt ; ſee ch. xiii. 3.

℣. 46. From Ekron even unto the ſea, &c.] The Mediterranean ſea, or the weſt, as the Targum : all that lay near Aſhdod, with their villages ; this is the Azotus of the new teſtament, another of the principalities of the Philiſtines, of which and Ekron ſee the notes on Amos i. 8. and Zeph. ii. 4.

℣. 47. Aſhdod with her towns and her villages, Gaza with her towns and her villages, &c.] Gaza was another of the principalities of the Philiſtines, of which ſee the notes on Amos i. 7. Zeph. ii. 4. Acts viii. 26. theſe with the two other principalities not mentioned, Gath and Aſcalon, were in the weſtern border of the tribe of Judah, which reached from Ekron the firſt that is mentioned, unto the river of Egypt ; of which ſee ℣. 4. and the great ſea, and the border thereof ; the Mediterranean ſea, called ſo in compariſon of the leſſer ſeas in Judea, the ſalt ſea, and the ſea of Tiberias ; whoſe border was its ſhore, and the cities upon it, and not the iſles in the ſea, as Jarchi.

℣. 48. And in the mountains, &c.] The hill-country of Judea, as it is called Luke i. 39, 65. in which were the following cities : Shamir and Jattir, and Sochoh ; the Alexandrian copy of the Greek verſion reads Sophir as the name of the firſt of theſe cities ; and Jerom ſays [d], there was a village of this name in the mountainous parts, ſituated between Eleutheropolis and Aſcalon in the tribe of Judah ; ſee Mic. i. 11. Jattir the ſame writer calls Jether, in the tribe of Judah ; and ſays [e] there was in his time a very large village called Jethira, 20 miles from Eleutheropolis, the inhabitants of which were then all Chriſtians : it was ſituated in interior Daroma, near Malatha ; and Sochoh is different from Sochoh in ℣. 35. that was in the plain, this in the mountain ; ſee the note there.

℣. 49. And Dannah and Kirjath-ſannah, which is Debir ;] Dannah is not mentioned elſewhere, and Kirjath-ſannah had three names, this and Debir, and Kirjath-ſepher, ℣. 15. ſee the note there ; all which are of much the ſame ſignification ; for Sanna with the Arabs [f], and ſo with the Phœnicians, ſignifies law, doctrine, and manner of life ; and with the Mahometans the ſecondary law to the Koran, and anſwers to the Jewiſh Miſnah ; and the Greek verſion interprets this name the city of letters. Jerom [g] calls it Daenna, and ſeems to confound it with Dannah.

℣. 50. And Anab and Aſhtemoth and Anim ;] Of Anab ſee the note on ch. xi. 21. Aſhtemoth is what Jerom calls [h] Aſtemech, a village in the tribe of Judah, and belongs to the Jews in Daroma, and is to the north of a place called Anem, perhaps the ſame with Anim here, which he ſays is the village Anea, near another of the ſame name ; which he places to the ſouth of Hebron, as he does this to the eaſt, the inhabitants of which in his time were all Chriſtians.

℣. 51. And Goſhen, and Holon, and Giloh, &c.] Of Goſhen in the land of Canaan, ſee the note on ch. x. 41. of Holon there is no other mention ; Giloh was the city of Ahitophel, 2 Sam. xv. 12. eleven cities with their villages ; the number agrees ; this is the firſt diviſion of cities in the mountains ; a ſecond follows.

℣. 52. Arab, and Dumah, and Eſhean ;] Arab is the ſame Jerom [i] calls Ereb, and was in his time a village in the ſouth, and was called Heromith ; and Duma, Jerom ſays [k], was a large village in the ſouth, alſo on the borders of Eleutheropolis, ſeventeen miles from it ; of Eſhean we have no account.

℣. 53. And Janum, and Beth tappuah, and Aphekah ;] Under the word Janum, Jerom writes [l], there is a village called Janua, three miles from Legion to the ſouth, but ſeems not to be what is written ; Beth-tappuah is by him called Bethaphua [m], and ſaid to be a village in the tribe of Judah, 14 miles beyond Raphia, as you go to Egypt, which is the border of Paleſtine ; and he ſpeaks [n] of a large caſtle in his time called Apheca, near the town of Paleſtine ; there were ſeveral places of the name of Aphek ; ſee the notes on ch. xii. 18. and xiii. 4. As for Beth-tappuah, it ſeems to be a place which was dedicated to a deity to which apples were ſacred, in memory of the apple by which mankind was ſeduced ; there was in after-times a goddeſs called Pomona from hence.

℣. 54. And Humtah, and Kirjath-Arba, which is Hebron and Zior, &c.] Of Humtah we no where elſe read ; of Kirjath-Arba frequently ; ſee the note on ch. xiv. 15. Jerom ſays [o], that in his time there was a village ſhewn by the name of Sibor, between Ælia (or Jeruſalem) and Eleutheropolis, in the tribe of Judah : 9 cities with their villages ; which which is exactly their number, as expreſſed; here ends the ſecond diviſion, or liſt of the cities in the hill-country of Judea; a third follows.

℣. 55. Maon, Carmel, and Ziph, and Juttah;] Maon was the dwelling-place of Nabal the Carmelite, whoſe poſſeſſions were in Carmel, and were not far from one another, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. It gave name to a wilderneſs near where David hid himſelf from Saul, 1 Sam. xxiii. 25. Jerom [p] places it to the eaſt of Daroma, who alſo informs [q] us, that there was in his time a village that went by the name of Carmelia, 10 miles from Hebron towards the eaſt, and where was a Roman garriſon. Ziph, according to the ſame writer [r], was eight miles from Hebron to the eaſt; and there was a village ſhewn in his time where David was hid; this gave name to a wilderneſs alſo, 1 Sam. xxiii. 14. Juttah, which Jerom calls [s] Jeſhan, was in his time a large village of the Jews, eighteen miles from Eleutheropolis, to the ſouthern part in Daroma. Reland [t] conjectures, that this was the native place of John the Baptiſt; and that inſtead of a city of Judah, it ſhould be read the city Juta, Luke i. 39.

℣. 56. And Jezreel, and Jokdeam, and Zanoah;] This Jezreel in the tribe of Judah is different from that which was once a royal ſeat of ſome of the kings of Iſrael, and from whence the famous valley of Jezreel or Eſdraelon had its name: of this we have no other account elſewhere, nor of Jokdeam; and this Zanoah is a diſtinct place from the city of the ſame name in the valley, ℣. 34.

℣. 57. Cain, Gibeah, and Timnah, &c.] Cain, or Hakain, that Cain, we no where elſe read of; whether the name was given it by the old Canaanites, in memory of Cain, the ſon of Adam, is not certain: there were other places that went by the name of Gibeah; there was a Gibeah in Benjamin, and another in the ſame tribe called Gibeah of Saul, to diſtinguiſh it from that; but this was in the tribe of Judah. Maſius conjectures it is the ſame with that in 1 Sam. xxiii. 19. which was near Ziph; and not amiſs. Jerom [u] makes mention of Gabaha and Gabatha, little villages to the eaſt of Daroma; and of another Gabatha, near Bethlehem, in the tribe of Judah; but whether either of theſe are meant, it is doubtful; of Timnah, ſee the note on ℣. 10. ten cities with their villages; the number agrees with the names of them.

℣. 58. Halhul, Beth-zur, and Gedor;] Here begins a fourth diviſion, or liſt, of the cities in the mountains. Halhul Jerom calls Ehul, and ſays [w], there was in his time in the country belonging to Ælia, (or Jeruſalem) a village by the name of Ahula, near Hebron; and Beth-zur, he ſays [x], was then called Beth ſeron, a village as you go from Ælia to Hebron, in the 20th mile, near which was a fountain at the bottom of a mount, where it is ſaid the eunuch was baptized by Philip: he makes mention of another village called Bethſur in the tribe of Judah, a mile from Eleutheropolis. In 2 Maccab. xi. 5. it is ſaid to be but five furlongs from Jeruſalem, but it muſt have been at a greater diſtance; of Gedor, ſee the note on ch. xii. 13.

℣. 59. And Maarath, and Beth-anoth, and Eltekon, &c.] Of theſe cities we have no account elſewhere; only mention is made of Eltekeh, in the tribe of Dan, ch. xix. 44. ſix cities with their villages; theſe were all in the mountainous part of Judea, as were the two following.

℣. 60. Kirjath-Baal, (which is, Kirjath-jearim) and Rabbah, &c.] Of Kirjath-Baal, and its ſeveral names, ſee the note on ℣. 9. of Rabbah we no where elſe read; for this is a very different city from the Rabbah of the children of Ammon, 2 Sam. xii. 26. two cities with their villages; why theſe are reckoned by themſelves, is not certain.

℣. 61. In the wilderneſs, &c.] The wilderneſs of Judea, which was not a deſert and uninhabited place, but had many cities and villages in it, particularly thoſe that follow: Beth-arabah, Middin, and Secacah; the firſt of theſe ſeems to be in the borders of Judah and Benjamin, and ſo is aſcribed to both; ſee ℣. 6. and ch. xviii. 22. Of the two laſt we read no where elſe, only in Judg. v. 10. what we tranſlate ye that ſit in judgment, Kimchi interprets, ye that dwell by Middin, and ſays it is the name of a place in Joſhua, and mentions this paſſage.

℣. 62. And Nibſhan, and the city of Salt, and Engedi, &c.] Of Nibſhan no mention is made elſewhere; ſome take the city of Salt to be Zoar, ſo called becauſe near the ſalt ſea, or where Lot's wife was turned into a pillar of ſalt, Gen. xix. 22, 26. but rather this city might be ſo called, becauſe ſalt was made here. Engedi or Engaddi is a well-known place, near the ſalt-ſea; ſee Ezek. xlvii. 10. and the note there. Jerom ſays [y], there was a very large village of Jews in his time called Engaddi, near the dead ſea, from whence comes the opobalſam; the ſame place is called Hazazon-Tamar, from the palm-trees which grew there, 2 Chron. xx. 2. It was famous for vineyards alſo, Cant. i. 14. it lay, according to Joſephus [z], 300 furlongs from Jeruſalem: ſix cities with their villages; the ſum total agrees with the particulars.

℣. 63. As for the Jebuſites, the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, &c.] From whom the city was called Jebus, Judg. xix. 10. The Jews ſay, that theſe Jebuſites were not thoſe of the ſeven nations; but there was a man whoſe name was Jebus, and he was of the Philiſtines, of the ſeed of Abimelech, and the place was called by his name Jebus; and the men of that family that dwelt at Jeruſalem, their names were called Jebuſites, having their deſcent from him; ſo Araunah, the Jebuſite, was king of that place; and the fort of that place was Zion, which was at Jeruſalem: ſo Kimchi relates from their Rabbins, and with whom Jarchi agrees, but without any foundation; there is no doubt to be made of it, that theſe Jebuſites were Canaanites: the children of Judah could not drive them out; according to the above Jewiſh writers they could have done it, but it was not fit and proper they ſhould, becauſe of the oath of Abraham to Abimelech, from whom they ſuppoſe theſe Jebuſites ſprung: but the caſe was this; though Joſhua ſlew the king of this place, and took his land with the reſt, ch. x. 1, 23, 26, 42. and though the men of Judah retook it after his death, it having been got into the hands of the Jebuſites again, Judg. i. 8. yet either the fort of Zion was never taken by either of them, or if taken, the Jebuſites got poſſeſſion of it again, and held it until the times of David; ſee 2 Sam. v. 6—9. but the Jebuſites dwelt with the children of Judah at Jeruſalem unto this day; the one in the fort of Zion, and the other in the city of Jeruſalem, ruſalem, properly ſo called, and thus they continued unto the writing of this book; by which it ſhould ſeem, that the Jebuſites were not diſpoſſeſſed of their fort, or a part of the city by Joſhua; or this might be added and inſerted by ſome inſpired man afterwards; or however it muſt be done before the times of David: and from the whole it appears, that the city of Jeruſalem, at leaſt a part of it, belonged to the tribe of Judah, as another part did to that of Benjamin, to which it is aſcribed, ch. xviii. 28. ſee Judg. i. 21.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter gives us an account of the lot of the children of Joſeph, Ephraim, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, one half having ſettled on the other ſide Jordan; and firſt the borders of the whole lot in general are given, ℣. 1—4. and then the borders of the tribe of Ephraim in particular, ℣. 4—8. and it is obſerved, that this tribe had beſides ſeparate cities among the children of Manaſſeh, and that there were ſome Canaanites, particularly in Gezer, not driven out by the Ephraimites, ℣. 9, 10.

℣. 1. And the lot of the children of Joſeph fell, &c.] Or, went out [a]; of the pot or urn, this being the next lot that was drawn to that of Judah, the government being Judah's, and the birthright Joſeph's, 1 Chron. v. 2. and by his children are here meant the tribe of Ephraim, and the tribe of Manaſſeh: or the line and border according to the lot went forth from Jordan by Jericho unto the water of Jericho on the eaſt; by which it appears, that this was the ſouthern border of the lot; for the tribe of Benjamin, in which Jericho was, lay between Judah and Ephraim, and the border began at Jordan, where it flowed near Jericho, and proceeded to a water which belonged to that city, and is generally thought to be the waters Eliſha healed, 2 Kings ii. 19—22. to the wilderneſs that goeth up throughout mount Bethel; this was the wilderneſs of Bethaven, ch. xviii. 12. Jarchi interprets it of the border that went up through mount Bethel; which is true, and ſo might the wilderneſs alſo, for which the Targum is expreſs; mention is made of a mountain on the eaſt of Bethel, Gen. xii. 8.

℣. 2. And goeth out from Bethel to Luz, &c.] For though theſe two places in time became one, yet they were originally diſtinct. Bethel, at which Jacob ſtopt, and who gave it its name, was a field adjacent to the city of Luz, Gen. xxviii. 11, 19. and therefore with propriety may be, as they here are diſtinguiſhed: and paſſeth along unto the borders of Archi to Ataroth; or to Archi-ataroth; theſe two words being the name of one and the ſame place, and to be joined as they are in the Greek verſion, and others; and is the ſame with Ataroth-addar, ℣. 5. and ch. xviii. 13. Ataroth was its proper name, but it had theſe additional epithets to diſtinguiſh it from another Ataroth; ſee ℣. 7. Jerom [b] makes mention of Atharoth by Ramma, in the tribe of Joſeph, and of another in the tribe of Ephraim, now a village at the north of Sebaſte, or Samaria, 4 miles from it, called Atharus; the former is here meant.

℣. 3. And goeth down weſtward to the coaſt of Japhleti, &c.] This place is now unknown, though no doubt well known to the ſons of Joſeph, when this lot fell to them, and its border was deſcribed: unto the coaſt of Beth-horon the nether; ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Bethoran the upper, ℣. 5. this was about 12 miles from Jeruſalem; ſee the note on ch. x. 10. and to Gezer; which was about a day's journey from Bethoron, as appears from 1 Maccab. vii. 39, 40, 45. Jerom [c] ſays in his time it was a village called Gazara, 4 miles from Nicopolis, or Emmaus. It is the ſame with Gadara, as it is ſometimes called by Joſephus, who ſays [d], the tribe of Ephraim took in the land from the river Jordan to Gadara; this was a royal city; ſee ch. x. 33. and the outgoings thereof are at the ſea; the Mediterranean ſea.

℣. 4. So the children of Joſeph, Manaſſeh and Ephraim, took their inheritance.] As it fell to them by the lot; by Manaſſeh is meant the half tribe of Manaſſeh, one half of that tribe having been ſettled by Moſes on the other ſide Jordan; and next follows an account of the borders of the inheritance of Ephraim in particular, as that of the half tribe of Manaſſeh is given in the next chapter.

℣. 5. And the border of the children of Ephraim, according to their families, was thus, &c.] Or what follows is the deſcription of it: even the border of their inheritance on the eaſt ſide, was Ataroth-addar unto Bethoron the upper; the firſt was on the ſouth of the inheritance, and the latter on the north, as Maſius has placed them; who has given us a type of this deſcription, by which it appears that this lot is here deſcribed in its breadth from ſouth to north.

℣. 6. And the border went out towards the ſea, &c.] The Mediterranean ſea: to Michmethah on the north-ſide; of the border, the ſame on which Bethoron was, from whence the border proceeded on to this place, of which we have no other account but in ch. xvii. 7. by which it appears to have been near Shechem, and in ſight of it: and the border went about eaſtward unto Taanath-ſhiloh; this ſeems to be the ſame Jerom [e] calls Thenath in the tribe of Joſeph; and who obſerves there was in his day a village of this name ten miles from Neapolis (or Shechem) to the eaſt, as you go down to Jordan: and paſſed by it on the eaſt to Janohah; which the above writer [f] wrongly calls Janon, and ſays, that in his time a village of this name was ſhewn in the country of Acrabatena, twelve miles to the eaſt from Neapolis or Shechem; the border paſſed by Taanath on the eaſt of it, and went on to this place.

℣. 7. And it went down from Janohah to Ataroth, and to Naarath, &c.] This is different from Ataroth before mentioned; there were ſeveral places of this name, as before obſerved; this ſeems to be that which Jerom places four miles from Sebaſte or Samaria, ſee the note on ℣. 2. the ſame writer [g] ſays, that Naarath was in his time called Naorath, a village of the Jews, five miles from Jericho; and is the village Joſephus [h] calls Neara, where was a water, half of which Archelaus turned, and led to the field planted with palm-trees, near Jericho; and, according to the Jewiſh writers [i], there was a place called Noaran near to Jericho, which ſeems to be this: and came to Jericho; where it ended this way, which was eaſtward.

℣. 8. The border went out from Tappuah, weſtward, &c.] Which was different from the Tappuah in the tribe of Judah; this was in the tribe of Ephraim on the border of Manaſſeh, ch. xvii. 8. unto the river Kanah; ſuppoſed by ſome to be the brook Cherith, by which Elijah hid himſelf, 1 Kings xvii. 3, 5. though objected to by others; it ſeems to have had its name from the reeds which grew in it, or on the banks of it: and the goings out thereof were at the ſea; if the river Kanah was the brook Cherith, this muſt be the dead or ſalt ſea; but that is never called the ſea, rather the Mediterranean ſea is meant, and conſequently Kanah could not be Cherith, which was at too great a diſtance from this ſea: this is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Ephraim by their families; that is, this is the deſcription of the border of it; for the cities within are not mentioned, and the deſcriptions in general are very obſcure.

℣. 9. And the ſeparate cities for the children of Ephraim, &c.] The tribe of Ephraim, being much larger than the half tribe of Manaſſeh, beſides the lot that fell to it, deſcribed before by its boundaries, had ſeveral particular and diſtinct cities given to it: which were among the inheritance of the children of Manaſſeh; ſome that were upon the borders of Ephraim, and within the territory of Manaſſeh, and it may be where it jetted out in a nook or corner, ſee ch. xvii. 8, 9. all the cities with their villages; not the ſeparate cities only, but the little towns adjacent to them.

℣. 10. And they drave not out the Canaanites which dwelt in Gezer, &c.] Which was the border of their tribe length-way, and was near the ſea, ℣. 3. in this they did not obey the command of God, and either they did not drive them out, becauſe they could not, God not delivering them up into their hands, becauſe of their ſins; or thro' their ſlothfulneſs, or it may be through covetouſneſs, being willing to make ſome advantage to themſelves by them, being a trading people, which ſeems to be intended in the next clauſe: but the Canaanites dwelt among the Ephraimites unto this day; which Joſhua, the writer of this book, might truly ſay, and be no objection to it, ſince the ſame is obſerved after his death, Judg. i. 29. and indeed they continued to dwell there until the times of Solomon, when it was taken by Pharaoh king of Egypt, and given as a preſent to his daughter, the wife of Solomon, 1 Kings ix. 15—17. and though this clauſe does not furniſh out an argument againſt the writing of this book by Joſhua, yet from the inſtance given, it appears it muſt have been written before the times of Solomon, and ſo not by Ezra, as ſome: and ſerve under tribute; ſo that they were under their power, and therefore could have driven them out, or ſlain them, as by the command of God they ſhould; but they ſpared them for the ſake of the tribute they received from them, which ſeems to agree with the character of the Ephraimites, Hoſ. xii. 8.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the lot that fell to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, to the male-children of Manaſſeh, and to the daughters of Zelophehad, ℣. 1—6. and deſcribes the coaſt of that lot, ℣. 7—13. and relates the requeſt of the ſons of Joſeph, to have their lot enlarged, which was granted, ℣. 14—18.

℣. 1. There was alſo a lot for the tribe of Manaſſeh, &c.] As well as for the tribe of Ephraim: for he was the firſt-born of Joſeph; and therefore ought to have his part and ſhare in the lot of the children of Joſeph, though Ephraim was preferred before him in the bleſſing of Jacob. Some think this is given as a reaſon why he had a double portion, one on the other ſide Jordan, and another in the land of Canaan: to wit, for Machir the firſt-born of Manaſſeh the father of Gilead; who was the only ſon of Manaſſeh, and ſo through him, and by his ſon Gilead, the whole tribe ſprung from that patriarch: and becauſe he was a man of war, therefore he had Gilead and Baſhan; which were given to his poſterity by Moſes, and lay on the other ſide Jordan, ſee Deut. iii. 13, 15. This Machir very likely had ſhewn his warlike diſpoſition and courage in Egypt, and had fought under the kings there againſt the common enemy of that country; for it is highly probable he was dead before the children of Iſrael came out from thence, but the ſame warlike ſpirit continued in his poſterity; they had their part aſſigned them on the other ſide Jordan, to defend that country, whilſt the tribes of Reuben and Gad attended to the care of their flocks and herds.

℣. 2. There was alſo a lot for the reſt of the children of Manaſſeh by their families, &c.] For ſuch that had no part in Gilead and Baſhan on the other ſide Jordan, even for the other half tribe, whoſe families are particularly mentioned, as follows: for the children of Abiezer; who is called Jeezer in Numb. xxvi. 30. and was a ſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, as the reſt that follow were: and for the children of Helek, and for the children of Aſriel, and for the children of Shechem, and for the children of Hepher, and for the children of Shemida; hence the families of the Jeezerites, Helekites, Aſrielites, Shechemites, Hepherites, and Shemidaites, mentioned in Numb. xxvi. 30—32. and for which families was the lot here ſpoken of: theſe were the male-children of Manaſſeh the ſon of Joſeph by their families; which is obſerved for the ſake of, and to lead unto what follows, otherwiſe in common none but males inherited; but the following is an excepted and remarkable caſe.

℣. 3. But Zelophehad the ſon of Hepher, the ſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, had no ſons, but daughters, &c.] The deſcent of this man is particularly given, to ſhew the truth and reality of it, upon which his daughters made their requeſt, and that granted and now claimed: and theſe are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah; by the ſame names, and in the ſame order they are called in Numb. xxvi. 33. and xxvii. 1. the order is a little different in ch. xxxvi. 11.

℣. 4. And they came near before Eleazar the prieſt, and before Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and before the princes, &c.] The ten princes, who with Eleazar and Joſhua, were appointed to divide the land, Numb. xxxiv. 17—29. and were now met together for that purpoſe, ch. xiv. 1. ſaying, the Lord commanded Moſes to give us an inheritance among among our brethren; those of the same tribe with them; for upon their application to Moses he enquired of the Lord, who ordered him to grant their request, Numb. xxvii. 1—7. therefore according to the commandment of the Lord he gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their fathers; that is, to the half tribe of Manasseh, the lot which fell to it was divided into ten parts: according to the Jewish writers, the six families before mentioned, had six parts, and the daughters of Zelophehad had four parts; one on the account of Zelophehad their father, two on the account of their grandfather Hepher, who they say was the first-born, and one on account of their uncle, their father's brother, who died in the wilderness without children; so Jarchi and Kimchi relate from the Talmud [k]; but the true case seems to be this, there were six portions for the six families, but there being no sons in Hepher's family, his part was divided into five, and given to the five daughters of Zelophehad: beside the land of Gilead and Bashan, which were on the other side Jordan; which were given to the other half tribe, as before observed.

℣. 6. Because the daughters of Manasseh had an inheritance among his sons, &c.] Which occasioned such a number of portions; the daughters of Zelophehad are meant, who descended from Manasseh: and the rest of Manasseh, some had the land of Gilead; that is, those besides the six families before expressed, namely, the two families of the Machirites and Gileadites, Numb. xxvi. 29.

℣. 7. And the coast of Manasseh was from Asher, &c.] Not from the border of the tribe of Asher, as Kimchi, in which he is followed by Vatablus; for that was at too great a distance; but a city of the tribe of Manasseh; and in Jerom's [l] time, a village of this name was shewn 15 miles from Neapolis or Shechem, as you go from thence to Scythopolis, near the public road: to Michmethah that lieth before Shechem; the same place mentioned in the description of the border of Ephraim, ch. xvi 6. see the note there: and the border went along on the right-hand, unto the inhabitants of En-tappuah; that is, leaving this place, and its inhabitants to the right, which was a place in the land of that name, next mentioned; and seems to be so called from a fountain in it, or near it, as well as from a multitude of apples growing there, and with which perhaps the country abounded, of which in the following verse.

℣. 8. Now Manasseh had the land of Tappuah, &c.] The whole territory that went by that name, from a city of note in it, next mentioned; all the the fields and villages in it belonged to the tribe of Manasseh: but Tappuah on the border of Manasseh belonged to the children of Ephraim; and was one of those separate cities they had among the inheritance of the children of Manasseh; though it seems they had only the city, not the territory adjacent to it, and which was named from it.

℣. 9. And the coast descended unto the river Kanah, southward of the river, &c.] The same mentioned in the account of the coast of Ephraim, ch. xvi. 8. which was north of that river, as Manasseh was to the south of it: these cities of Ephraim are among the cities of Manasseh; that is, the cities before mentioned, Asher, Michmethah, En-tappuah, and Tappuah; though they were in the tribe of Manasseh, yet they were inhabited by the Ephraimites: the coast of Manasseh also was on the north side of the river; of the river Kanah, as well as on the south of it; it had cities there, though possessed by the tribe of Ephraim: and the out-goings of it were at the sea; the Mediterranean sea.

℣. 10. Southward it was Ephraim's, and northward it was Manasseh's, &c.] As Ephraim lay to the south of Manasseh, Manasseh lay to the north of Ephraim: and the sea is his border; the Mediterranean sea was their boundary on the west: and they met together in Asher on the north; that is, on the north-west towards the Mediterranean sea, as at mount Carmel: and in Issachar on the east; towards Jordan.

℣. 11. And Manasseh had in Issachar, and in Asher, Beth-shean and her towns, &c.] As Ephraim had cities in Manasseh, so had Manasseh cities in these two tribes, which in some parts bordered on it, before described, even the cities following, and the first that is named is Beth-shean: this lay in the tribe of Issachar, and was the uttermost border of Manasseh that way; it was, as Josephus [m] says, called Scythopolis; but not from the Scythians, as Pliny [n] suggests, but from Succoth, a place where Jacob resided, and which was not far from it, Gen. xxxiii. 17. 1 Kings iv. 12. and vii. 46. it lay before the great plain of Jezreel, and was at the entrance into it, 1 Maccab. v. 52. and was 600 furlongs, or 75 miles from Jerusalem, according to 2 Maccab. xii. 29. and was one of the cities of Decapolis, from whence our Lord had hearers, Matt. iv. 25. It was such a pleasant place, that it is said in the Talmud [o], that if the garden of Eden was in the land of Israel, Beth-shean was the gate of it; on which the gloss says, that its fruits were the sweetest in the land of Israel: and Ibleam and her towns; it seems to be the same with Bileam, by a transposition of the two first letters, 1 Chron. vi. 70. and was a place not far from Megiddo, after mentioned, as appears from 2 Kings ix. 27: and the inhabitants of Dor and her towns; this had been a royal city, ch. xi. 2. and xii. 23. see the notes there: and the inhabitants of Endor and her towns; this place became famous for a witch there in the times of Saul, 1 Sam. xxviii. 7. in the times of Jerom [p] it was a large village near mount Tabor, four miles to the south, which he calls Aendor, of or in Jezreel; and elsewhere [q] he speaks of Endor, as near the town of Naim, where our Lord raised the widow's son from the dead, and is about Scythopolis: and the inhabitants of Taanach and her towns; this had been a royal city, see the note on ch. xii. 22: and the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns; this was another royal city mentioned with the former, ch. xii. 21. see the note there: even three countries; the three last cities, with their towns, that are mentioned, Endor, Taanach and Megiddo; all which perhaps belonged to Dor, and may be the Naphoth-dor spoken of ch. xi. 2. and xii. 23. where the same word is used as here; so Jarchi interprets it.

℣. 12. Yet the children of Manasseh could not drive out the inhabitants of these cities, &c.] Mentioned in the preceding verse; they had not strength at first to do it, or either were negligent and slothful, and suffered them to dwell among them, and did not take the advantage they might have done; and afterwards it was too late, they became too strong and numerous for them, at least for a time: but the Canaanites would dwell in the land; whether they would or no.

℣. 3. Yet it came to paſs when the children of Iſrael were waxed ſtrong, &c.] Increaſed in numbers, and became ſuperior to the Canaanites, not only thoſe of the tribe of Manaſſeh, but of the other tribes alſo: that they put the Canaanites to tribute; they did not take away their lives, as they were commanded to do, but made them tributaries to them, which ſeems to ariſe from a covetous diſpoſition, and done for the ſake of gain: but did not utterly deſtroy them out; which they were ordered to do, and could now have done; for if they were able to make them pay tribute to them, they had power ſufficient to drive them out, or deſtroy them, and therefore broke the commandment of God, Deut. vii. 1, 2. and xx. 16, 17.

℣. 14. And the children of Joſeph ſpake unto Joſhua, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the children of Manaſſeh only; and indeed the complaint and arguments uſed. as well as ſome circumſtances in the account, beſt agree with them; yet certain it is, that the children of Ephraim accompanied the children of Manaſſeh, and were preſent at this interview, as appears from ℣. 17. and if they did not join with them in the requeſt and complaint expreſsly, they countenanced and encouraged the ſame by their preſence: why haſt thou given me but one lot and one portion to inherit; this ſeems to ſuit better with one than both; for there was a lot for the tribe of Manaſſeh alſo, as well as for Ephraim, ℣. 1. by which it ſhould ſeem that there were two, and if both made this expoſtulation, it was not fact; but it may be, that the inheritance which came to them by lot, was not as yet divided, and ſo they called it one lot and one portion, and then it might with propriety be ſaid by them both; and their ſenſe be, that the lot or portion aſſigned them was only ſufficient for one of them, and not for both: ſeeing I am a great people; as eſpecially both tribes put together were: foraſmuch as the Lord hath bleſſed me hitherto? this beſt agrees with the tribe of Manaſſeh, which ſince their coming out of Egypt, was increaſed 20,500, whereas the tribe of Ephraim was decreaſed; compare Numb. i. 33, 35. with ch. xxvi. 34, 37. Now it might have been expected by them, that as Joſhua was of the tribe of Ephraim, that he would have favoured their cauſe on that account, and that they ſhould have obtained the grant of an addition by that means; but Joſhua was impartial in his adminiſtration, and ſhowed no favour and affection on that ſcore, as appears by what follows.

℣. 15. And Joſhua anſwered them, &c.] By retorting their own argument upon them: if thou be a great people; which he does not deny, as they were for numbers and power: then get thee up to the wood country; which was near them, and within their borders, and lay on hills and mountains, perhaps the mountains of Gilboa, and therefore are bid to go up: and cut down for thyſelf there; cut down the trees of the wood, clear the ground of them, and ſo make it habitable, and by that means enlarge the places of their habitation: in the land of the Perizzites, and of the giants; or Rephaim; the former of theſe were one of the ſeven nations of the Canaanites, who from their name ſeem to have dwelt not in the cities, and walled towns, but in villages, and ſcattered houſes, in deſart places, and among the woods, where alſo the giants had retired and dwelt after Joſhua had driven them out of the cities; and by driving theſe out of their preſent habitations, they would gain more room to dwell in, and would find their lot ſufficient for them: if mount Ephraim be too narrow for thee; either meaning all Ephraim, and even the whole lot of the ſons of Joſeph, or rather the mount particularly ſo called; for the words may be rendered, for mount Ephraim haſtens for thee[q]; was clear or open for thee; ready to be delivered to thee, and thou mayeſt poſſeſs it at once.

℣. 16. And the children of Joſeph ſaid, the hill is not enough for us, &c.] Meaning either mount Ephraim, and all included in it; or it may be rather the wood-country on the hills and mountains they were bid to go up to; ſignifying, that if they could gain that out of the hands of the Perizzites and giants, and clear it of the wood, and make it habitable, even that would not be ſufficient for them; or that hill and mountain cannot be found by us[r], or obtained and poſſeſſed by us; we are not able to get it into our hands, there being a valley between us and that: and the Canaanites that dwell in the land of the valley have chariots of iron; not chariots made of iron, but chariots with iron ſcythes faſtened to the ſides, or axle trees of them, which when driven with great force and fury, would cut down the infantry in battle, as graſs is cut down with ſcythes, ſee Judg. iv. 2, 3: both they who are of Beth-ſhean and her towns, and they who are of the valley of Jezreel; both which belonged to the tribe of Manaſſeh, or were on the borders of it, though as yet they had not got poſſeſſion, ſee ℣. 11. and this circumſtance ſeems to favour the notion, that the tribe of Manaſſeh were at leaſt chiefly concerned in this addreſs.

℣. 17. And Joſhua ſpake unto the houſe of Joſeph, even to Ephraim and to Manaſſeh, &c.] From whence it is clear that ſome of both were preſent; and they being brethren, and their intereſts united, and their cities intermixed, it would be to their mutual advantage to have an enlargement; which the tribe of Manaſſeh wanted more eſpecially, more of their cities that fell to their lot being in the hands of the Canaanites, than of any other: ſaying, thou art a great people, and haſt great power; were very numerous, and ſo able to contend with the Canaanites, and make themſelves more room: thou ſhalt not have one lot only; or only have what they were poſſeſſed of, but ſhould have more; and as they wanted more, they were able enough to get more; and if they exerted their power, relying on the providence of God, through his bleſſing on their endeavours, they would certainly have an increaſe of their portion.

℣. 18. But the mountain ſhall be thine, &c.] Or for[s] it ſhall be thine; thou ſhall get the poſſeſſion of it, though attended with difficulties that ſeem inſuperable: for or if, though[t] it is a wood; the habitation of the Perizzites, and giants, and ſo dangerous to go up to it, and full of trees, and ſo ſeems unprofitable and uſeleſs: and thou ſhalt cut it down; both the inhabitants of it, and the trees of it, and clear it of both, and make it both ſafe and commodious to dwell in, which would be a fine fine enlargement for them: and the out-goings of it ſhall be thine; all it produces when cultivated, and all the parts adjacent to it: for thou ſhalt drive out the Canaanites; this Joſhua aſſures them of, to encourage them to attempt it: though they have iron chariots, and though they be ſtrong; be not afraid of their chariots, though terrible, nor of their giants and mighty men, God will be on your ſide, and you have nothing to fear from them, ſee Joſh. xi. 4, 6. whether the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh took this advice of Joſhua, is not ſaid.

CHAP. XVIII.

THIS chapter informs us of the ſetting up of the tabernacle at Shiloh, ℣. 1. of the notice Joſhua took, that ſeven tribes had not received their inheritance, ℣. 2. of the inſtructions he gave them to ſend three men out of each tribe, and deſcribe the land not yet diſpoſed of, and bring the account to him, which was accordingly done, ℣. 3—9. and then he caſt lots for them, and the firſt lot came up for Benjamin, ℣. 10, 11. the borders of whoſe lots are deſcribed, ℣. 12—20. and the ſeveveral cities in it enumerated, ℣. 21—28.

℣. 1. And the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael aſſembled together at Shiloh, &c.] The whole body of the people, men, women and children, as well as the camp, ℣. 9. at leaſt all that had not received their inheritances in the land. Hither they came from Gilgal, where the camp and tabernacle had been ever ſince their paſſage over Jordan; but now the land being in the main ſubdued, that was too far off both for the camp and tabernacle, and therefore they moved farther into the land, and nearer Jeruſalem, where in time the tabernacle was to be placed. The place they aſſembled at, Shiloh, was in the tribe of Ephraim, of which tribe Joſhua was, and whoſe lot and inheritance was now fixed, and it was not far from Jeruſalem, about two leagues. Jerom ſays [u], it was ten miles from Neapolis or Shechem, in the country of Acrabatena; and that there were ſcarce any ruins of it to be ſeen in his day, only an altar demoliſhed was ſhown [w]. It ſeems to have its name from the peaceable condition the land was now in, and very likely was now given it on that account: and ſet up the tabernacle of the congregation there; no doubt by the appointment and direction of God, ſignified to Eleazar the high-prieſt, either by a voice, or by Urim and Thummim; and the removal of it ſeemed neceſſary, partly that becauſe ſeveral camps which ſurrounded it, were now broken up and ſettled in their cities, as Reuben, Judah and Ephraim; and partly that it might be near where Joſhua, the governor of Iſrael, reſided, Ephraim being his tribe; and alſo ſince Gilgal, on the borders of the land, was too far off for the people to reſort to the tabernacle, and therefore it was proper it ſhould be more in the heart of the country: when this was done, cannot certainly be determined; Kimchi ſays it was 14 years after the Iſraelites came into the land of Canaan; and ſo ſays [x] their chronology; but it is highly probably it was before that time, and not longer than ſeven or eight years at moſt; here the tabernacle continued, according to the Jewiſh writers [y], 369 years, even unto the times of Samuel, when for the ſins of the ſons of Eli it was removed. Eupolemus [z], an heathen writer, ſpeaks of the holy temple being fixed at Shiloh by Joſhua: and the land was ſubdued before them; the far greater part of it, and all ſo as to have no diſturbance from, or war with the inhabitants.

℣. 2. And there remained among the children of Iſrael ſeven tribes, &c.] Which were thoſe of Benjamin, Simeon, Zebulun, Iſſachar, Aſher, Naphtali, and Dan: which had not yet received their inheritance; and for which the lots were not caſt.

℣. 3. And Joſhua ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] To thoſe of the ſeven tribes: how long are you ſlack to go to poſſeſs the land which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you? not that they might have taken poſſeſſion of it of themſelves, without having it aſſigned to them by lot; that they did not do this, is not what is complained of, and they ſtand reproved for; but that when two tribes and a half had received their inheritance, theſe ſeemed indifferent to it, ſhewed no inclination and diſpoſition towards it, and much leſs eagerneſs to have a ſettlement, and did not apply to the court for it; which dilatorineſs might ariſe from the preſent affluence of all good things they enjoyed through the ſpoils of the enemy; and partly through ſlothfulneſs, being tired of the war, and perceiving that they muſt be involved in it again to diſpoſſeſs the Canaanites of ſome of the cities that would fall to their lot; and perhaps their ſlackneſs might be the more increaſed, by obſerving the diſſatisfaction of the tribes with the lot they had received, and therefore waited till things were adjuſted to greater ſatisfaction.

℣. 4. Give out from among you three men for each tribe, &c.] That is, for each of the ſeven tribes, in all 21; though ſome think they were to be taken out of all the nine tribes and a half, and were 36; and ſo Joſephus [a] ſeems to underſtand it; but then he makes but one out of each tribe to be ſent, and but ten in all, which is a great overſight in that hiſtorian: and I will ſend them; Joſhua would not take upon him to name the perſons, but left it to their own choice for their greater ſatisfaction; but when choſen and preſented to him, he would give them a commiſſion and directions what to do: and they ſhall riſe; gird themſelves, and prepare for their journey, and ſet out: and go through the land of Canaan; not the whole of it, but that part which as yet was not diſpoſed of; though ſome think they were to go through and deſcribe the whole land; but I ſee no reaſon for that, for what was deſcribed was to be divided into ſeven parts only, and what belonged already to Judah aud Joſeph, ſeem plainly to be excepted in the following verſe: and deſcribe it according to the inheritance of them; take the dimenſions of it, and divide it into ſeven parts, according to the number of the tribes that had not received their inheritance. Jarchi thinks this deſcription and diviſion were not to be made equally, but according to the largeneſs and ſmalneſs of the tribes; but but this could not be done by the measurers, since the inheritance of each depended on the lot that was afterward to be cast, which by this means would have been rendered needless: and they shall come again to me; which seems to be not only a precept or instruction to them, that when they had done their business, they should come to Joshua and give him an account of it; but an assurance also of their safety, that they should receive no disturbance nor hurt from the remaining Canaanites, but should return safe and well.

℣. 5. And they shall divide it into seven parts, &c.] According to the number of the seven tribes not yet settled; and this they were to describe and divide, was all the land subdued, or not subdued, only the following excepted: Judah shall abide in their coast on the south; on the south of the land of Canaan, where their lot fell, so that needed not to be measured and described; and this tribe was to retain what they were possessed of, unless it should appear they had too much, and others wanted, and they willing to part with some of it to their brethren, as they afterwards did to the tribes of Simeon and Dan: and the house of Joseph shall abide in their coast on the north; on the north of the tribe of Judah; not of the land of Canaan, for some other tribes lay more northerly.

℣. 6. Ye shall therefore describe the land into seven parts, &c.] Or ye shall describe the land, even the seven parts of it when divided; it seems as if they were first to describe in general all the land not disposed of, and then divide it into seven parts, and make a particular description of each part, or form a plan, or draw a map of every part: and bring the description hither to me; not by word of mouth, but as written in a book, or marked out in a map, and laid before him, see ℣. 9. that I may cast lots for you here before the Lord your God; in Shiloh, at the door of the tabernacle, and so before the Lord who dwelt in it, at whose disposal the lot was, and by which every one of the seven tribes would have their part and portion assigned them, most fitting and convenient for them, according to the will and counsel of God, in which it became them to acquiesce.

℣. 7. But the Levites have no part among you, &c.] And so needed not to send any men out of their tribe to measure the land on their account, and is a reason why the remaining part of the land was to be divided into seven parts only: for the priesthood of the Lord is his inheritance; not only the office, but what appertained to it, all the perquisites of it, the tithes, first-fruits, parts of the sacrifices, &c. see ch. xiii. 14: and Gad, and Reuben, and half the tribe of Manasseh, have received their inheritance beyond Jordan on the east, which Moses the servant of the Lord gave them; and so had no share in the division of the land of Canaan, being sufficiently provided for.

℣. 8. And the men arose, and went away, &c.] The seven tribes took the advice of Joshua, chose three men out of each tribe, and presented them to him, who gave them their commission and instruction to go and describe the land of Canaan, not yet disposed of, and whether subdued, or not subdued; upon which they prepared for their journey, and took it, after he had given them the following charge: and Joshua charged them that went to describe the land; before they departed from him: saying, go and walk through the land; and take particular notice, and an exact survey of it, both of the quality and the quantity of it: and describe it; its cities and towns, hills and dales, the goodness and badness of the soil, and put it down in a book, or lay it out in a map, that it may be discerned by the eye what number of cities, and what space of ground it contains, and what parts are hilly and woody, and what otherwise: and come again to me; to make a report of it: that I may cast lots for you before the Lord in Shiloh; that is, for the several tribes which they belonged to, and by whom they were chosen for this purpose.

℣. 9. And the men went and passed through the land, &c.] Undisturbed by the inhabitants that remained; the fear of the Israelites being still upon them, and the providence of God restraining them, so that the men passed through the whole country, and took a survey of it without any molestation: and described it by cities, into seven parts, in a book; or map, or rather made seven maps of it, and set down the several cities in each division, with the places adjacent, hills and vales, and marked out a plain and exact chorography of the whole, by which it appears they must be men well skilled in geometry. Josephus [b] says, that Joshua added to them some that understood geometry: but doubtless the persons each tribe chose and sent, were such whom they knew were well versed in that art, and so fit for the business; and which they had, no doubt, learnt in Egypt, this being one part of the wisdom and learning of the Egyptians, who boasted of it as an invention of theirs, as Diodorus Siculus [c] relates; and indeed they were obliged to study it, their country being divided into several nomes, and these into lesser districts, and which also were subdivided, and according thereunto were the king's taxes levied upon them; and what with the confusion frequently made by the overflowings of the Nile, they were frequently obliged to measure their land over again; and hence they became expert in this science, which is commonly believed took its rise from them, and passed into Greece, as Herodotus [d], and Strabo [e], and other authors relate; however, it is certain from this instance in the time of Joshua, that geometry was not the invention of Anaximander, about 500 years before Christ, as some have asserted [f]: and came again to Joshua to the host at Shiloh; where the camp, as well as the people in common, and the tabernacle, were; they returned, as Josephus [g] says, at the end of seven months; and to measure so much land, and make such divisions of it, and give the plans and maps of each division, must take up a considerable time.

℣. 10. And Joshua cast lots for them in Shiloh before the Lord, &c.] For the seven tribes, as he had for the two tribes and a half at Gilgal; of the manner of casting lots, see the note on Numb. xxvi. 55: and there Joshua divided the land unto the children of Israel according to their division; the land that was divided into seven parts, he distributed to the seven tribes, as the lot came up for them, and then divided these several parts according to the families and households in each tribe.

℣. 11. And the lot of the tribe of the children of Benjamin came up according to their families, &c.] This was the first lot of the seven that came up; it was but a small lot, and therefore called little Benjamin, Ps. lxviii. 27. but the land was very pleasant and fruitful. Josephus [h] says, this lot was very very ſtrait, becauſe of the goodneſs of the ſoil, for it took in Jericho, and the city of Jeruſalem: the coaſt of their lot came forth between the children of Judah, and the children of Joſeph; having Judah on the ſouth, and Joſeph on the north; this was ſo ordered by the providence of God, that Benjamin ſhould lie cloſe to Joſeph, being own brothers, and the only children of Rachel, Jacob's beloved wife; and that it ſhould be next to Judah, with whom it was to unite, both in religious and civil affairs, and both met in and had a part of Jeruſalem, the metropolis of Iſrael; and this lot fell exactly according to the prediction of Moſes, and the order of it, who places Benjamin between Judah and Joſeph, the tribe of Levi having no ſhare in the diviſion of the land, Deut. xxxiii. 7, 12, 13.

℣. 12. And their border on the north-ſide was from Jordan, &c.] Which was the eaſtern boundary of the tribe, and hence proceeded from eaſt to weſt, and formed its northern border, which is deſcribed in like manner as the lot of the children of Joſeph, ch. xvi. 1, 2: and the border went up to the ſide of Jericho on the north-ſide; from Jordan it went to the north of Jericho, and ſo took in that place, which was within the tribe of Benjamin, ℣. 21: and went up through the mountains weſtward; the mountains that were on the north of Jericho; for, as Strabo ſays [i], Jericho was ſurrounded with mountains, ſee ch. ii. 16, 22. thro' theſe mountains the coaſt went on towards the weſtern border of the tribe: and the goings out thereof were at the wilderneſs of Beth-aven; a place near Bethel and Ai, to which there was a wilderneſs adjoining, ſee ch. vii. 2. and viii. 20. here ended the northern border.

℣. 13. And the border went over from thence towards Luz, &c.] From Beth-aven, where the northern border ended, the weſtern began, and went on to Luz: to the ſide of Luz, which is Bethel, ſouthward; that is, paſſed along, leaving that city to the ſouth, which formerly was called Luz, but now Bethel, which though diſtinct places formerly, yet being very near, might in proceſs of time be joined; ſee the note on ch. xvi. 2. and the border deſcended to Ataroth-adar, the ſame with Archi-ataroth, ch. xvi. 2, 5. ſee the note there: near the hill that lieth on the ſouth ſide of the nether Beth-horon; ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Beth-horon the upper, ſituated on an hill or mountain, ch. xvi. 5. this was rebuilt by Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 17.

℣. 14. And the border was drawn thence, &c.] From Beth-horon: and compaſſed the corner of the ſea ſouthward; it is hard to ſay what ſea is meant, or what by it. Fuller [k] conjectures, that as the Hebrews call any confluence of water a ſea, as we call ſuch a mere, the great waters in Gibeon may be meant, Jer. xli. 12. for it cannot mean the Mediterranean ſea, for Dan lay between Benjamin and that; and yet if a ſea is meant, no other can be; wherefore it is beſt to render it the weſt quarter, as it is in the latter part of this verſe; and ſo the ſame word is tranſlated, ℣. 12. the weſt, and not the ſea, as it ſometimes is; for the border of Benjamin did not reach the ſea any where; though Joſephus [l] makes it to extend to it, and ſays, that the length of it was from the river Jordan to the ſea: from the hill that lieth before Beth-horon ſouthward; the hill that lay to the ſouth of nether Beth-horon, as in the preceding verſe: and the goings out thereof; the end of the weſtern coaſt, were at Kirjath-baal, which is Kirjath-jearim, a city of the children of Judah; of which ſee ch. xv. 9, 60; this was the weſt-quarter; as thus deſcribed.

℣. 15. And the ſouth-quarter was from the end of Kirjath-jearim, &c.] Where the weſtern quarter ended: and the border went out on the weſt; not directly ſouth, but ſomewhat weſterly. It is in the original, the ſea, and ſhould be rendered, from the ſea, or from the weſt [m]; and Jarchi confeſſes his ignorance, and ſays, I know not what ſea it is; and well he might, for there was no ſea here; but the Mediterranean ſea, being to the weſt of the land of Iſrael, it is often uſed for the weſt in the Hebrew language, and ſo here: and went out to the well of waters of Nephtoah; ſee the note on ch. xv. 9.

℣. 16. And the border came down, &c.] In the deſcription of the border of Judah, hereabout, it is ſaid to go up, ch. xv. 5. becauſe there, as Jarchi obſerves, the meaſure was from eaſt to weſt, but here from weſt to eaſt: to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of the ſon of Hinnom; this ſouth-border of Benjamin is the ſame with the north-border of Judah; and the ſame places are mentioned in the deſcription of the one, as of the other, ſee ch. xv. 8. The mountain is mount Moriah, and which is in the valley of the giants on the north; on the north of the valley of Rephaim: and deſcended to the valley of Hinnom; the border from the end of mount Moriah to that valley: to the ſide of Jebuſi on the ſouth; to the ſouth-ſide of Jeruſalem, having that city on the ſouth: and deſcended to En-rogel; of which ſee the note on ch. xv. 7.

℣. 17. And was drawn from the north, &c.] Turning northward, and looking that way from the weſt to the eaſt: and went forth to En-ſhemeſh; or the fountain of the ſun, ſee ch. xv. 7: and went forth toward Geliloth; called Gilgal, ch. xv. 7: which is over-againſt the going up to Adummim; a place between Jeruſalem and Jericho, ſee ch. xv. 7: and deſcended to the ſtone of Bohan the ſon of Reuben; ſee ch. xv. 6.

℣. 18. And paſſed along toward the ſide over-againſt Arabah northward, &c.] The ſame with Beth-arabah, ch. xv. 6. and ſo it is called here in the Greek verſion: and went down unto Arabah; the ſame as before, and included it, for it is mentioned among the cities of this tribe, ℣. 22.

℣. 19. And the border paſſed along to the ſide of Beth-hoglah northward, &c.] Inclining ſomewhat toward the north, but not leaving the city to the north, for it is included in the lot of Benjamin, ℣. 21. of which place ſee ch. xv. 6: and the outgoings of the border were at the north-bay of the ſalt ſea; here ended the ſouthern border of Benjamin, even at the bay or creek of the ſalt ſea, which looked northward, as the ſouthern border of Judah began at that bay of it, which looked ſouthward, ch. xv. 2: at the ſouth-end of Jordan; where it fell into the ſalt ſea: this was the ſouth-coaſt; as before deſcribed.

℣. 20. And Jordan was the border of it on the eaſt-ſide, &c.] It had Jordan on the eaſt, Dan on the weſt, Judah on the ſouth, and Joſeph or Ephraim on the north: this was the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, by the coaſts thereof round about, according to their families; this is the general neral deſcription of the limits of this tribe, the particular cities in it follow.

℣. 21. Now the cities of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, according to their families, were Jericho, &c.] Which though deſtroyed, and not to be rebuilt as a city, was yet a place inhabited, and in future times was rebuilt, and in great ſplendor, and continued to the time of Chriſt; of which ſee ch. ii. 1. Beth-hoglah, where or near to which was the threſhing-floor of Atad, at which lamentation was made for Jacob, Gen. l. 10. ſee the note there, and on Joſh. xv. 6: and the valley of Keziz; or Emek-keziz; ſo the Greek verſion calls it Amecaſis: it is highly probable it was in the valley or plain of Jericho, and perhaps might have its name from the inciſion of the balſam-tree there; which, as Pliny [n] ſays, was cut with glaſs or a ſtone, or with knives made of bone; if cut with iron, it kills it.

℣. 22. And Beth-arabah, and Zemaraim, and Beth-el.] Of the firſt and laſt of theſe, ſee the notes on ch. vii. 2. and xv. 6. One of the ſons of Canaan was named Zemari, Gen. x. 18. by whom this city Zemaraim might be built, or however have its name given it, in memory of him; there was a mountain of this name in the tribe of Ephraim, near to which this city might be, 2 Chron. xiii. 4.

℣. 23. And Avim, and Parah, and Ophrah.] Of the two firſt of theſe we read no where elſe. Ophrah is not the ſame with Ophra in Judg. vi. 11. that belonged to the tribe of Manaſſeh, but rather that which was in the land of Shuah, 1 Sam. xiii. 17. Jerom calls this place Aphra, in the tribe of Benjamin, and ſays [o], in his time there was a village called Effrem, five miles from Bethel to the eaſt, which very probably is the ſame with this.

℣. 24. And Chephar-haammonai, and Ophni, and Gaba, &c.] Of the two firſt of theſe no mention is made elſewhere. Gaba is the ſame with Gibeah, a well-known place, becauſe of the foul fact committed there, which had like to have been the ruin of this tribe, Judg. xix. and for being the native place of king Saul, hence called Gibeah of Saul; it was about ſix or ſeven miles from Jeruſalem, ſee the note on Hoſ. v. 8: twelve cities with their villages; which agrees with the account of them.

℣. 25. Gibeon, and Ramah, and Beeroth.] Gibeon is the place from whence the Gibeonites came, who deceived Joſhua, ch. ix. Jerom ſays [p], in his time there was a village ſhewn of this name, four miles from Bethel to the eaſt, near Ramah, next mentioned; and which the ſame writer relates [q] was ſix miles from Ælia or Jeruſalem to the north, againſt Bethel. Rauwolff, a traveller in thoſe parts, ſays [r], that the town of Rama is ſituated on an aſcent, in plain fields, which extend themſelves for two leagues to the hill of the city of Jeruſalem; theſe fields are very fruitful, and well tilled and ſown with corn, cotton, and Indian millet; the town is pretty large, but very open, like unto a village, very pitifully built, where one may ſtill ſee here and there ſome ſigns of old buildings. Beeroth was a city that belonged to the Gibeonites, ch. ix. 17. and Jerom ſays [s], in his time was ſhewn the village, ſeven miles from Ælia or Jeruſalem, as you go to Neapolis or Shechem.

℣. 26. And Mizpeh, and Chephirah, and Mozah.] Frequent mention is made of Mizpeh in ſcripture; according to Fuller [t], it was about eight miles from Gibeah; it was near Ramathon, which Joſephus ſays [u] was 40 furlongs from Jeruſalem. Chephirah was one of the cities ſubject to Gibeon, ch. ix. 17. There was a place called Motza, near to Jeruſalem, where they uſed to go to get willows at the feaſt of tabernacles [w].

℣. 27. And Rekem, and Irpeel, and Taralah.] Of theſe cities, there is no mention made elſewhere.

℣. 28. And Zelah, Eleph, and Jebuſi, which is Jeruſalem, Gibeath, and Kirjath, &c.] Zelah was the burying-place of Saul and his family, 2 Sam. xxi. 14. Eleph is no where elſe mentioned; ſome join it with Zelah, and make one city of it, but then the number of cities given could not be compleated; both Jarchi and Kimchi ſay, they were two cities, as doubtleſs they were; of Jeruſalem being called Jebuſi, ſee ch. xv. 63. it belonged partly to the tribe of Judah, and partly to the tribe of Benjamin; mount Zion belonged to Judah, and Moriah to Benjamin; Gibeath was a diſtinct city both from Gaba and Gibeon; by its being mentioned with Jeruſalem, it ſhould ſeem to be near it. Jerom [y] ſpeaks of Gabaatha in the tribe of Benjamin, 12 miles from Eleutheropolis, where the grave of the prophet Habakkuk was ſhown; Kirjath ſignifies a city, but what city is meant is not known: fourteen cities with their villages; and juſt ſo many are mentioned by name: this is the inheritance of the children of Benjamin according to their families; theſe cities, with others perhaps not mentioned, were allotted to the tribe of Benjamin for their families to dwell in.

CHAP. XIX.

IN this chapter an account is given of the lots of the ſix remaining tribes, and the cities in them, as of Simeon, whoſe cities were chiefly within the tribe of Judah, ℣. 1—9. of Zebulun, its border, and cities, ℣. 10—16. of Iſſachar, its border, and cities, ℣. 17—23. of Aſher, its border and cities, ℣. 24—31. of Naphtali, its border and cities, ℣. 32—39. of Dan, its border and cities, ℣. 40—48. and laſtly of a gift of inheritance to Joſhua, ℣. 49, 50, 51.

℣. 1. And the ſecond lot came forth to Simeon, &c.] That is, the ſecond of the ſeven lots, of which Benjamin's was the firſt; otherwiſe there were the two lots of Judah and Joſeph, which preceded both theſe: even for the tribe of the children of Simeon, according to their families; for though many of their cities had been given by lot to the tribe of Judah, yet it ſeems as if there were others they had by a ſpecial lot caſt for them, as many as were ſufficient for their families: and their inheritance was within the inheritance of the children of Judah; which was done partly becauſe this was but a ſmall tribe, and particularly becauſe the lot put up, which fell to the tribe of Judah, was too large for it, more than they could occupy, too much being being put to this lot by the firſt meaſurers of the land; and partly to fulfil the prophecy of Jacob, that the Simeonites ſhould be ſcattered in Jacob, and divided in Iſrael, Gen. xlix. 7. and hence it is that the lots of theſe two tribes lying together, and being ſo intermixed, that the tribe of Judah called upon that of Simeon to join them in fighting againſt the Canaanites, and taking out of their hands the cities that belonged to them, Judg. i. 3.

℣. 2. And they had in their inheritance Beerſheba and Sheba, &c.] Or, Beerſheba, that is, Sheba; for ſo the particle Vau is ſometimes uſed [z], and muſt be ſo uſed here; or otherwiſe inſtead of 13, it will appear that there are 14 cities, contrary to the account of them, ℣. 6. ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech make them one city. And it may be obſerved, that in the enumeration of the cities of Simeon, 1 Chron. iv. 28. Sheba is left out, and only Beerſheba is mentioned; which was a well known place in the fartheſt border of the land of Iſrael ſouthward, and the reaſon of its name is manifeſt, Gen. xxi. 31. ſee the note on ch. xv. 28. and Moladah; another of the cities of Judah, ch. xv. 26.

℣. 3. And Hazor-ſhual, and Balah, and Azem;] Of theſe places ſee the notes on ch. xv. 28, 29. for Balah is the ſame with Baalah there, and with Bilha, 1 Chron. iv. 29. and Azem with Ezem there.

℣. 4. And Eltolad, and Bethul, and Hormah;] Theſe were all cities of Judah, ch. xv. 30. Eltolad is the ſame with Tolad, and Bethul with Bethuel, 1 Chron. iv. 29, 30. and with Cheſil, ch. xv. 30. mentioned there along with Hormah; ſee the note there.

℣. 5. And Ziklag, &c.] Another of the cities of Judah, ch. xv. 31. and Beth-marcaboth, and Hazar-ſuſah; or Suſim, as in 1 Chron. iv. 31. the one ſignifies a chariot-houſe, and the other a court or ſtable for horſes, which made Bochart conjecture [a], that they were places where Solomon kept his chariots and horſes; but it ſhould be obſerved that theſe were the names by which theſe places went in the times of the old Canaanites; and ſeem to me rather where ſome of their kings had their horſes and chariots; or rather where there were temples dedicated to the horſes and chariots of the ſun; ſee 2 Kings xxiii. 11.

℣. 6. And Beth-lebaoth, and Sharuhen, &c.] Whether the firſt is the ſame with Lebaoth, a city of Judah, ch. xv. 32. and with the Bethleptepha, of Joſephus [b], and the Betholene of Pliny [c], is not certain: in this place ſeems to have been an idol-temple of the Canaanites, dedicated to lions, as in Egypt there was a city called Leontopolis, from whence was the Leontopolitan nome, the inhabitants of which worſhipped lions [d]; and the Egyptians had temples dedicated to them, as Ælianus [e] relates. Both theſe places are thought to be the ſame with Bethbieri and Shaaraim in 1 Chron. iv. 31. of the latter of which ſee ch. xv. 36. Thoſe who take Sheba, ℣. 2. to be the ſame with Shema, ch. xv. 26. make but one city here, and take away the laſt, as the Greek verſion does, and render the word and their fields, and ſo the number ſtill is as follows: thirteen cities and their villages; the ſum total of thoſe enumerated above.

℣. 7. Ain, Remmon, and Ether, and Aſhan, &c.] Of the two firſt, which were cities of Judah, ſee the note on ch. xv. 32. and of the two laſt, ſee the note on ℣. 42. four cities and their villages; Ain, Remmon, therefore, could not be one city, at this time, as it ſeems to have been in the times of Nehemiah, ch. xi. 29. or otherwiſe there would have been but three cities.

℣. 8. And all the villages that were round about theſe cities, &c.] Not only the ſuburbs adjoining to thoſe cities which are mentioned before, but the ſeveral ſmall diſtinct towns and villages, ſcattered up and down in the country: to Baalath-beer, Ramath of the ſouth; this is the ſame with Baal in 1 Chron. iv. 33. and with Ramath of the ſouth, or ſouth Ramoth, as it is called 1 Sam. xxx. 27. all theſe are the names of one and the ſame city: this is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Simeon, according to their families; that is, the above named cities fell to the lot of the inheritance of the Simeonites, and were divided among them according to the number of their reſpective families; at leaſt, theſe were the chief and principal of them; for all that they poſſeſſed are not mentioned, particularly one called Tochen, 1 Chron. iv. 32. and another the name of which is Etam there, unleſs that is thought to be the ſame with Ether here in the preceding verſe. Joſephus ſays [f], this tribe took by lot that part of Idumea which lay near to Egypt and Arabia.

℣. 9. Out of the portion of the children of Judah was the inheritance of the children of Simeon, &c.] Which is the reaſon why no deſcription is given of the border of their inheritance, becauſe that is before given in the account of the lot of Judah: for the part of the children of Judah was too much for them; they had more cities than they could fill with people, and more land than they could cultivate; they had 114 cities with their villages: therefore the children of Simeon had their inheritance within the inheritance of them; the one being a ſmall tribe, and the other large, and for the reaſons given on ℣. 1. ſee the note there.

℣. 10. And the third lot came up for the children of Zebulun, according to their families, &c.] Who though younger than Iſſachar, has his lot before him, agreeable to the order, in which his bleſſing is predicted, both by Jacob and Moſes, Gen. xlix. 13. Deut. xxxiii. 18. and the border of their inheritance was unto Sarid; or by Sarid, as Maſius, who takes this to be the ſouth-weſt border of Zebulun, being near Carmel; in which he ſeems to be right.

℣. 11. And their border went up toward the ſea, &c.] Weſtward towards the Mediterranean ſea, which fulfilled the prophecies of Jacob and Moſes, that Zebulun ſhould dwell by the ſea, be an haven of ſhips, and ſuck of the abundance of the ſeas, as in the places before referred to; and ſo Joſephus ſays, the Zebulonites took the land unto the lake of Geneſaret, by or about Carmel and the ſea: and Maralah; which Jerom calls [g] the aſcent of Zebulun; for from hence it went up from the ſea, and reached to Dabbaſheth; which Jerom calls Daſbath; the word ſignifies a bunch that is on a camel's back, Iſ. xxx. 6. ſo called becauſe when that is hurt by burdens it is cured with honey [h]: it ſeems to denote ſome place or city at a point of land or promontory, that ſtood out towards the ſea, as that of Carmel; or ſome city on the back of Carmel, reſembling a camel's bunch: and reached to the river that is before Jokneam; of Jokneam, ſee the note on ch. xii. 22. and this river was either the river

℣. 12. And turned from Sarid eaſtward, &c.] This deſcribes the ſouthern border, going on from weſt to eaſt: towards the ſun-riſing, unto the border of Chiſloth-tabor; this Jerom places in the tribe of Iſſachar, it bordered on both tribes; and he ſays [l], that in his time there was a little village called Chaſelus, eight miles from Diocæſaræa, at the foot of mount Tabor in the plains: and then goeth out to Daberath; which alſo was a city in the tribe of Iſſachar, given to the Levites, ch. xxi. 28. Jerom ſpeaks of a little village of the Jews by mount Tabor, of the country belonging to Diocæſarea, called Dabira; this place is ſtill in being. Mr. Maundrell ſays [m], at the bottom of Tabor weſtward ſtands Debarah, ſuppoſed by ſome to take its name from Deborah, the famous judge and deliverer of Iſrael: and goeth up to Japhia; this Jerom [n] ſays is the town called Sycamine, as you go from Cæſarea to Ptolemais, above the ſea, becauſe of mount Carmel, called Epha, thought by ſome to be the Jebba of Pliny [o]. It ſeems, however, to be the Japha of Joſephus [q], which he ſpeaks of as being a ſtrong fortified place both by nature and art.

℣. 13. And from thence paſſeth on along on the eaſt to Gittah hepher, &c.] Which was the native place of Jonah the prophet, 2 Kings xiv. 25. and where Jerom ſays [r] his grave was ſhown, and was a ſmall village in his time two miles from Sippore, then called Diocæſarea, to Ittah-kazin; of this place we have no account elſe-where, but it was not far from the former: and goeth out to Remmon-methoar to Neah; where the eaſtern border ended. Some verſions make Remmon-Methoar, diſtinct places; but where either of them were exactly is not known: ſome, as the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi, render the word Methoar which goes about; that is, the border went about from Remmon to Neah, which by Jerom is called Anna, and who obſerves [s], that there is another village called Anna, 10 miles from Neapolis, as you go to Ælia; and by whom alſo Methoar is reckoned a diſtinct place, and called Amathar.

℣. 14. And the border compaſſeth it from the north ſide to Hannathon, &c.] This is the northern border of the tribe, which took a circuit from the laſt place to this; of which and the following place we have no account; Jerom only makes mention of them as in the tribe of Zebulun: and the outgoings thereof are in the valley of Jiphthah-el; here the northern border ended, which Maſius conjectures was part of the valley of Carmel.

℣. 15. And Kattah, and Nahallal, and Shimron, and Idalah, and Bethlehem, &c.] Of the two firſt of theſe we read no where elſe, but in ch. xxi. 34, 35. and in Judg. i. 30. Shimron was a royal city, the king of which Joſhua took and hanged, Joſh. xi. 1. and xii. 20. Idalah is a place Bochart conjectures [t] where the goddeſs Venus was worſhipped, Idalia being one of her names; and Bethlehem is a different place from that which was the birth-place of our Lord, called Bethlehem of Judah, to diſtinguiſh it from this: twelve cities with their villages; more are named, but ſome of them belonged to other tribes, and only lay on the borders of this; and others might not be properly cities, but ſmall towns.

℣. 16. This is the inheritance of the children of Zebulun, according to their families, &c.] Which was allotted to it and divided, according to the number of its families: theſe cities with their villages; before enumerated, excepting ſuch as only bordered on them; though indeed there were other cities which belonged to them, or might be after given them, not here mentioned, as Kartah and Dimnah, ch. xxi. 34, 35.

℣. 17. And the fourth lot came out to Iſſachar, &c.] The fourth of the ſeven drawn at Shiloh: for the children of Iſſachar, according to their families; among whom the inheritance that came to them by the lot was divided, according to the number of them.

℣. 18. And their border was towards Jezreel, &c.] Which was a royal ſeat in the time of Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. 1. and according to Jerom was near to Maximianopolis; ſee the note on Hoſ. i. 5. and the ſame writer [u] ſays in his day a large village of this name was ſhewn in the great plain between Scythopolis and Legion (he means the plain of Jezreel) and it was the border of Iſſachar: and Cheſulloth and Shunem; the firſt of theſe was different from the Chiſloth-tabor, ℣. 12. that, as Maſius obſerves, was to the north, this to the ſouth of mount Tabor. Shunem is a place well known for being the dwelling-place of a certain woman in the times of Eliſha, whoſe ſon the prophet raiſed from the dead, 2 Kings iv. 8. Jerom calls it Sonam, where was the Shunamite woman; but this city here ſeems to be what he calls Sulem, in the tribe of Iſſachar; and he adds, that there was ſhewn in his day a village by this name, 5 miles from mount Tabor to the ſouth [w]: according to Bunting [x], it was 48 miles from Jeruſalem to the north, not far from Naim.

℣. 19. And Hapharaim, and Shion, and Anaharath;] The firſt of theſe is by Jerom [y] called Aphraim, a city of the tribe of Iſſachar; and adds, there is at this day a village called Affarea, 6 miles from Legion to the north; and of Seon or Soen, the ſame with Shion here, he ſays [z] there was a village of this name ſhewn in his time near mount Tabor; of the latter we have no account elſewhere.

℣. 20. And Rabbith, and Kiſhion, and Abez;] The firſt of theſe Jerom calls [a] Rabboth in the tribe of Iſſachar; and Kiſhion, as Maſius notes, ſeems to have given name to the river Kiſhon near it; ſome take it to be the ſame with Kedeſh, 1 Chron. vi. 72. of Abez no mention is made elſewhere.

℣. 21. And Remeth and En-gannim, and Enhaddah, and Beth-pazzez;] Remeth ſeems to be the ſame with Jarmuth, ch. xxi. 29. and with Ramoth, 1 Chron. vi. 73. and En-gannim the ſame with Anem in the ſame place: there were ſeveral of this name, which ſeem to have been places full of gardens, and well watered; for the word ſignifies a fountain of gardens. En-gannim is now called Jenine, diſtant from Tabor 22 miles, a place of gardens, of water and of pleaſure, as a traveller [b] of ours tells us; who alſo declares [c], that in his whole journey from Damaſcus to Jeruſalem, he ſaw not more fruitful ground, and ſo much together, gether, than he did in 22 miles riding between mount Tabor and En-gannim. This ſeems to be the ſame place Mr. Maundrell [d] calls Jeneen, a large old towr on the ſkirts of Eſdraelon. Dr. Lightfoot [e] is inclined to believe, that Nain, where the widow's ſon was raiſed to life, Luke vii. 11. is the ſame with En-gannim, for which he gives divers reaſons. Jerom ſays, in his time [f] there was a village called Enadda, 10 miles from Eleutheropolis, as you go from thence to Ælia; but ſeems not to be the ſame with En-haddah here; but of Beth-pazzez no mention is made elſewhere. Beth ſignifies a houſe, and Pazzez in the Arabic tongue ſignifies ſilver; ſo this with the old Canaanites might be a treaſure-city, like thoſe in Egypt, Exod. i. 11. But where a word begins with Beth, as the name of a place, I always ſuſpect there was an idol-temple there; now as the word in Hebrew ſignifies the ſame as Peor, opening, here might be a temple to that deity, or to one that was ſimilar to the God of the Moabites, and deſign a Priapus, among the Canaanites like that; or as the word in the Syriac and Chaldee languages ſignifies to redeem, deliver, and ſave, this temple might be dedicated to ſome idol as their deliverer and ſaviour.

℣. 22. And the coaſt reacheth to Tabor, and Shahazimah, and Beth-ſhemeſh, &c.] Tabor was the name of a mountain in thoſe parts; it is generally ſuppoſed to be the mountain on which our Lord was transfigured, though it is not ſufficiently evident; ſee the note on Jer. xlvi. 18. There was a city of this name near it, 1 Chron. vi. 77. and which is meant here, and which either gave unto, or received name from the mount. The Greeks call it Itabyrium, and it is deſcribed by Polybius [g] as ſituated on a hill riſing in the form of a pap or breaſt, and has an aſcent of more than fifteen furlongs, and he calls it a city. Shahazimah is not mentioned any where elſe; and there ſeem to have been ſeveral cities, at leaſt more than one, of the name of Beth-ſhemeſh; one in the tribe of Judah, ch. xxi. 16. and another in the tribe of Napthali, ℣. 38. which perhaps may be the ſame with this, it lying on the borders of both tribes. In this and ſo in others of the ſame name, was a temple dedicated to the ſun by the heathens, as there was one of the ſame name in Egypt for the ſame reaſon, Jer. xliii. 13. and the outgoings of their border were at Jordan; here it ended: ſo Joſephus ſays, that the border of this tribe in the length of it were mount Carmel (at one end) and the river (i. e. Jordan at the other) and at the breadth of it the mountain Itabyrium, or mount Tabor: it had Jordan on the eaſt, the ſea on the weſt, Zebulun on the north, and Manaſſeh on the ſouth: ſixteen cities with their villages; which was the ſum total of them.

℣. 23. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Iſſachar, &c.] Which fell to them by lot, as before deſcribed: according to their families; was divided among them, according to the number of them: the cities and their villages; the cities before enumerated, and the villages adjacent to them.

℣. 24. And the fifth lot came out for the tribe of the children of Aſher, &c.] Which entitled them to an inheritance next deſcribed: according to their families; which was ſufficient for them, and divided to them, according to their number.

℣. 25. And their border was Helkath, and Hali, and Beten, and Achſhaph;] Halkath ſeems to be the ſame with Hukok, 1 Chron. vi. 75. and according to Maſius it lay 10 or 12 miles above Ptolemais; of Hali we read no where elſe. Beten is by Jerom [h] called Bathne, and was in his time a village by the name of Bethebem, 8 miles from Ptolemais to the eaſt. Reland [i] ſeems to think it might be the Ecbatana of Pliny [k], which he ſpeaks of as near mount Carmel, and not far from Ptolemais. Achſhaph was a royal city, whoſe king was taken by Joſhua, ch. xi. 1. ſee the note there.

℣. 26. And Alammelech, and Amad, and Miſheal, &c.] Of the two firſt of theſe there is no mention elſewhere. Miſheal is the ſame with Maſhal, 1 Chron. vi. 74. and is by Jerom [l] called Maſan, and ſaid to be near Carmel to the ſea: and reacheth to Carmel weſtward; or, to the ſea, as Carmel is called Carmel by the ſea, Jer. xlvi. 18. ſee the note there: it is hereby diſtinguiſhed from Carmel in the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 55. (Pliny [m] calls it a promontory): and to Sihor-libnath; the Vulgate Latin and Septuagint verſions make two places of it; but the ſum of the cities after given will not admit of it: more rightly Junius renders it Sihor by Libnath, and takes Sihor to be the river Belus, or Pagidus; ſo called either becauſe of its likeneſs to the Nile, one of whoſe names is Sihor, Jer. ii. 18. or becauſe its waters might be black and muddy; it was the river out of which ſand was fetched to make glaſs of: and Libnath, which has its name from whiteneſs, the ſame writer thinks may be the Album Promontorium, or white promontory of Pliny [n], which he places near Ptolemais, between Ecdippa and Tyre, and is very probable.

℣. 27. And turneth towards the ſun-riſing, &c.] Or eaſtward, to Beth-dagon; there was a city of this name in the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 41. ſee the note there. Dagon being a God of the Phœnicians, had temples built for him in various places in Canaan: and reacheth to Zebulun; not the tribe of Zebulun, but a city ſo called, the ſame Joſephus [o] calls a ſtrong city of Galilee, which had the name of Men, perhaps from the populouſneſs of it, and ſeparated Ptolemais from Judea: and to the valley of Jiphthah-el; ſee ℣. 14. toward the north-ſide of Beth emek, and Neiel; of Beth-emek no mention is made elſewhere: perhaps here was an idol-temple before dedicated to the God of the vallies; ſee 1 Kings xx. 28. the latter the Greek verſion calls Inael, of which Jerom ſays [p], it is a certain village called Betoaenea, 15 miles from Cæſarea, ſituated on a mountain to the eaſt, on which are ſaid to be wholeſome baths: and goeth out to Cabul on the left hand; not the land of Cabul, 1 Kings ix. 13. but a city, which Joſephus [q] calls a village on the borders of Ptolemais. The Jews [r] ſpeak of a city of this name, deſtroyed becauſe of contentions in it.

℣. 28. And Hebron, and Rehob, and Hammon, &c.] Hebron ſeems to be the ſame with Abdon, ch. xxi. 30. 1 Chron. vi. 74. ר and ד being changed, of which there are other inſtances; and hereby this is diſtinguiſhed from another Hebron in the tribe of Judah, more commonly known, ch. xv. 54. In the time of Jerom [s], there was a village called Rooba, 4 miles from Scythopolis, and which he ſays was a city ſeparated to the Levites, as this was, or one of the ſame name in this tribe; for there was another ℣. 30. ſee ch. xxi. 31. but whether either of of them is the ſame with this is not certain; of Hammon we read no where elſe: and Kanah, even unto great Zidon; this Kanah is generally thought to be the ſame where Chriſt wrought his firſt miracle, Joh. ii. 1, 11. Jerom expreſly ſays [a], there was a Cana in the tribe of Aſher, where our lord and ſaviour turned water into wine, and from whence was Nathanael; and it is at this day, adds he, a town in Galilee of the Gentiles. Phocas [w] places Cana between Sippori and Nazareth, which is now ſhewn 6 Roman miles from Sippori to the weſt, a little inclining to the north; and there is alſo in the ſame tract Cephar Cana, 4 miles from Nazareth to the north, inclining to the eaſt; and it is diſputed which of theſe two is Cana of Galilee in the new teſtament: with this account agrees pretty much what our countryman Mr. Maundrell [x] gives of his travels in thoſe parts: "taking leave of Nazareth, he ſays, and going at firſt northward, we croſſed the hills that encompaſſed the vale of Nazareth at that ſide; after which we turned to the weſtward, and paſſed in view of Cana of Galilee, the place ſignalized with the beginning of Chriſt's miracles, Joh. ii. 11. in an hour and a half more we came to Sepharia;" or Sippori: of great Zidon, and why ſo called, ſee the note on ch. xi. 8.

℣. 29. And then the coaſt turneth to Ramah, &c.] Which was a city in the tribe of Naphtali, ℣. 36. and on the borders of Aſher; though Jerom [y] diſtinguiſhes them, and ſpeaks of a Ramah in Aſher, and another in Naphtali, as different cities of the ſame name; as there were ſeveral of this name, ſo called from their being built on an eminence. Maſius conjectures it is the ſame with Sarepta, Luke iv. 26. famous for its wine; and Bacchus, as the poet ſays, loves the hills: and to the ſtrong city Tyre; it is thought this is not to be underſtood of the famous city, ſo much ſpoken of in other parts of ſcripture, and in prophane hiſtory; ſince, as it is obſerved, that is not mentioned in ſcripture until the times of David; and though Homer makes frequent mention of Sidon, yet never of Tyre. The words ſignify the ſtrong fortreſs of a rock, or a fortreſs on a high rock; ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech; and it might be a fortified city, which being built on a rock, might have the name of Zor or Tyre, and not be the famous city of that name. Jerom [z] renders it the fortified city of the Aſſyrians: and the coaſt turneth to Hoſah; of which we no where elſe read: and the outgoings thereof are at the ſea; the Mediterranean ſea; where the coaſt ended this way: from the coaſt to Achzib; this Jerom [a] ſays is Ecdippa, 9 miles from Ptolemais, as you go to Tyre; and this is confirmed by a learned traveller of our own nation [b]; it is now called Zib; ſee the note on Mic. i. 14.

℣. 30. Ummah alſo, and Aphek, and Rehob, &c.] Ummah is not mentioned any where elſe; of Aphek ſee the notes on ch. xii. 18. and xiii. 4. and of Rehob, ℣. 28. twenty and two cities with their villages; there are more ſet down in the account, but ſome of them did not belong to the tribe, only were on the border of it.

℣. 31. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Aſher, &c.] As before deſcribed, a goodly heritage; it was according to the prediction of Jacob and Moſes, Gen. xlix. 20. Deut. xxxiii. 24, 25. a very fruitful country. Joſephus [c] ſays, the country from Carmel called the valley, becauſe it was ſuch, even all over againſt Sidon, fell to the Aſherites. Aſher had mount Libanus on the north, Naphtali on the eaſt, Zebulun on the ſouth and ſouth-eaſt, the ſea on the weſt: according to their families; the number of them, ſo their lot was divided to them: theſe cities with their villages; before named.

℣. 32. The ſixth lot came out to the children of Naphtali, &c.] The tribe of Naphtali, and directed what ſhould be the inheritance of this tribe: even for the children of Naphtali, according to their families; which was to be divided among them, according to the number of their families.

℣. 33. And their coaſt was from Heleph, &c.] That is, their northern coaſt, reaching from weſt to eaſt, as appears by the ending of it at Jordan; the Alexandrian copy of the Greek verſion calls it Mlepeh, the Targum Meheleph, and Jerom Mealeb, which he calls the border of Naphtali; which tho' to the north, cannot be expreſly ſaid what and where it was: from Allon to Zaanannim; or rather from the oak, or from the plain in Zaanannim [d]; for it ſeems to be the ſame with the plain of Zanaaim, Judg. iv. 11. and Adami, Nekeb; ſome make theſe to be but one city, and the latter only an epithet of the former; but the Talmudiſts [e] make them two, as we do, and call the firſt Damin, and the latter Ziadetha; but what and where either of them were exactly is not known; for Adami cannot be the ſame with Adam, ch. iii. 16. as ſome think; for that was in Peræa, on the other ſide Jordan; ſee the note there: and Jabneel, unto Lakum; Jabneel is different from that which was on the borders of Judah, ch. xv. 11. and is called by the Jews [f] ſince Cepher-jamah; and of Lakum we no where elſe read: and the outgoings thereof were at Jordan; here the coaſt ended this way.

℣. 34. And then the coaſt turneth weſtward to Aznoth-tabor, &c.] This was the ſouthern border, reaching from eaſt to weſt; it began at Aznoth-tabor, which Jerom [g] ſays was a village in his time belonging to the country of Diocæſarea, in the plains; there is another place called Chiſloth-tabor, on the borders of Zebulun, ℣. 12. and goeth out from thence to Hukkok; there the ſouthern border ended, which was in the border of Aſher, and is the ſame with Helkath, ℣. 25. with which compare 1 Chron. vi. 75. and reacheth to Zebulun on the ſouth-ſide, and reacheth to Aſher on the weſt-ſide, and to Judah upon Jordan towards the ſun-riſing; ſo that as it was bounded by Lebanon on the north, near to which ſome of the cities were, mentioned in the preceding verſe, it had Zebulun on the ſouth, Aſher on the weſt, and Jordan to the eaſt; for by Judah is not meant the tribe of Judah, from which Naphtali was at a great diſtance, but a city ſo called, as Fuller [h] ſeems rightly to conjecture.

℣. 35. And the fenced cities are Ziddim, Zer, and Hammath, Rakkath, and Cinnereth;] The later name of Ziddim, according to the Talmud [i], was Cephar-chitiya, or the village of wheat, perhaps from the large quantity or goodneſs of wheat there. Zer is called by Jerom [k] Sor, and interpreted Tyre, the metropolis of Phœnicia very wrongly, and in the the tribe of Naphtali. Hammath probably was built by the youngeſt ſon of Canaan, Gen. vi. 18. or had its name in memory of him; it lay to the north of the land of Iſrael; ſee Numb. xxxiv. 8. Rakkath, according to the Jewiſh writers [k], is the ſame with Tiberias, as Cinnereth with Geneſareth, from whence the lake or ſea of Tiberias, and the country and lake of Geneſareth had their names, often mentioned in the new teſtament. Geneſareth was a moſt delicious and fruitful ſpot, and fulfilled the prophecy of Moſes, Deut. xxxiii. 23. concerning Naphtali.

℣. 36. And Adamah, and Ramah, and Hazor;] Adamah is different from Adami, ℣. 33. and may ſeem to confirm the notion of ſome, that Nekeb there is an epithet of it, and ſo diſtinguiſhes it from Adamah here; of Ramah, as there were ſeveral places of this name, ſee the note on ℣. 29. and on ch. xviii. 25. Hazor was a royal city, of which ſee ch. xi. 1.

℣. 37. And Kedeſh, and Edrei, and En-hazor;] This is Kedeſh in Galilee, in mount Naphtali, to diſtinguiſh it from others of the ſame name; it was one of the cities of refuge, ch. xx. 7. Jerom ſays [l] in his day it was called Cidiſſus, and was 20 miles from Tyre by Paneas; ſee the note on ch. xii. 22. Edrei is a different place from one of that name in the kingdom of Og, Numb. xxi. 23. and of En-hazor we read no where elſe.

℣. 38. And Iron, and Migdal el, Horem, and Beth-anath, and Beth-ſhemeſh, &c.] Of Iron no mention is made elſewhere; Migdal-el, which Jerom calls Magdiel, he ſays [m] was ſhewn a ſmall village, 5 miles from Dara, as you go to Ptolemais; and who alſo relates [n], that Bathana, in the tribe of Naphtali, was a village that went by the name of Bethanea, 15 miles from Cæſarea. Beth-ſhemeſh was another city, in which was a temple dedicated to the ſun, when inhabited by the Canaanites; ſee ℣. 22. and ſo in Beth-anath, there might be a temple dedicated to ſome deity, though now uncertain what: nineteen cities with their villages; there are more mentioned, but ſome of them might be only boundaries, and ſo belonged to another tribe:

℣. 39. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, &c.] Which Joſephus [o] thus deſcribes; "the country to the eaſt, as far as Damaſcus the city, and upper Galilee, the Naphtalites took, unto mount Lebanon, and the fountains of Jordan, which flow out of the mount, reaching the northern border of the city Arce:" according to their families; which was divided among them, according to the number of their families: the cities and their villages; before enumerated.

℣. 40. And the ſeventh lot came out for the tribe of the children of Dan, &c.] Which was the laſt lot drawn, and which appointed an inheritance to this tribe: according to their families; the number of them.

℣. 41. And the coaſt of their inheritance was Zorah, and Eſh-taol, and Ir-ſhemeſh;] The tribe of Dan is not deſcribed by places the boundaries of it, as other tribes, but by its cities, which were chiefly, at leaſt ſeveral of them, taken out of the tribe of Judah, as the two firſt of theſe moſt manifeſtly were; ſee ch. xv. 33. and the note there. Ir-ſhemeſh ſignifies the city of the ſun, as the Targum interprets it, and was ſo called very probably from a temple in it, dedicated to the idolatrous worſhip of the ſun, but a different place from Beth-ſhemeſh in other tribes; though thoſe of that name, as this, had it for the like reaſon; and ſo Heliopolis, in Egypt, which ſignifies the ſame, where was a temple of the ſame kind; as there was another city of this name, between the mountains of Libanus and Antilibanus, now called Balbec [p], where the ruins of the temple are yet to be ſeen: but this was a different place, the Septuagint verſion calls it Sammaus, and it was according to Jerom [q] the ſame with Emmaus, afterwards called Nicopolis; which if the ſame Emmaus with that in Luke xxiv. 13. though ſome doubt it, was ſixty furlongs from Jeruſalem, or ſeven miles and a half.

℣. 42. And Shaalabbin, and Aijalon, and Jethlah;] The firſt of theſe is the ſame with Shaalbim, Judg. i. 35. and which Jerom [r] calls Selah, in the tribe of Dan; and which he ſays was in his day ſhewn a large village on the borders of Sebaſte, by the name of Selaba. Aijalon is famous for the ſtanding ſtill of the moon in its valley whilſt Joſhua purſued his enemies, ch. x. 12. ſee the note there; of Jethlah, we read no where elſe.

℣. 43. And Elon, and Thimnathah, and Ekron;] Of Elon no mention is made elſewhere; Thimnathah is a different place from Timnah in the tribe of Judah, ch. xv. 10, 57. Jerom [s] ſpeaks of the Thamnitic country, ſo called from the village Thamna, which ſeems to be this. Ekron was one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines, and never poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites; it firſt fell by lot to the tribe of Judah, and afterwards given to the tribe of Dan, ch. xv. 45.

℣. 44. And Eltekeh, and Gibbethon, and Baalath;] Eltekeh was a city given to the Levites, ch. xxi. 23. and ſuppoſed by ſome to be the ſame with Eltekon in the tribe of Judah given to the Danites, ch. xv. 59. Gibbethon was in the hands of the Philiſtines in the reign of Aſa, 1 Kings xv. 21. and xvi. 15. and in the ſame place Jerom [t] calls Gebatha a city of the ſtrangers, or Philiſtines; and which he places near Bethlehem in the tribe of Judah. Baalath is not the ſame with Baalah, ch. xv. 29. but the Baalath rebuilt by Solomon, 1 Kings ix. 18. called by Joſephus [u] Baleth, and ſpoken of by him as near to Gazara in the land of the Philiſtines; of theſe two laſt cities, the Talmudiſts [w] ſay that their houſes belonged to Judah, and their fields to Dan.

℣. 45. And Jehud, and Bene-berak, and Gath-rimmon;] Of Jehud no mention is made elſewhere; Bene-berak ſignifies ſons of lightning; ſee Mark iii. 17. Jerom [x] ſpeaks of this as the name of two places, Bane in the tribe of Dan, and Barach in the ſame tribe, and which was in his day near Azotus. This place was famous in later times among the Jews for being a place where one of their noted Rabbins, R. Akiba, abode and taught for ſome time [y]: and Gath-rimmon was in Jerom's [z] time a very large village, 12 miles from Dioſpolis, or Lydda, as you go from Eleutheropolis to it; it was a city given to the Levites, ch. xxi. 24.

℣. 46. And Me-jarkon, and Rakkon, with the border before Japho;] Of the two firſt of theſe we read no where elſe. Japho is the ſame with Joppa, now now called at this day Jaffa, a port in the Mediterranean ſea, famous for being the place where Jonah took ſhipping, and where the apoſtle Peter reſided ſome time; ſee the notes on Jonah i. 3. Acts ix. 36, 38. It is not certain whether Joppa itſelf was in the tribe of Dan, or only on the borders of it; the coaſt of Dan reached over-againſt it, as it may be rendered, and included the villages and little cities that were near it; for ſuch there were, as Joſephus [b] teſtifies.

℣. 47. And the coaſt of the children of Dan went out too little for them, &c.] Being a very numerous tribe, the cities allotted them were not ſufficient for them; or rather, leaving out the ſupplement too little, the words will run, it went out from them; they loſt part of it, being driven out of the valley into the mountain by the Amorites, Judg. i. 34, 35. which obliged them to ſeek out elſewhere for habitations: therefore the children of Dan went out to fight againſt Leſhem; called Laiſh, Judg. xviii. where the whole ſtory is related of their fighting againſt this place and taking it; which though ſome time after the death of Joſhua, is here recorded to give at once an account of the inheritance of Dan; and which is no argument againſt Joſhua's being the writer of this book, as is urged; ſince it might be inſerted by another hand, Ezra, or ſome other inſpired man, for the reaſon before given: and took and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and poſſeſſed it, and dwelt therein; being a Canaanitiſh city, they put all in it to the ſword, as the Lord had commanded, and took poſſeſſion of it for an habitation: and called Leſhem Dan, after the name of Dan their father; this is the place which is always meant, where the phraſe is uſed from Dan to Beerſheba, this being at the utmoſt northern border of the land of Canaan, as Beerſheba was at the farther part of the ſouthern coaſt of it. It was, according to Jerom [c], ſituated near Paneas, out of which the river Jordan flowed; and Kimchi on the text obſerves, their Rabbins [d] ſay, that Leſhem is Pamias (i. e. Paneas) and that Jordan flows from the cave of Pamias, and had its name שיורד מדן becauſe it deſcended from Dan; and ſo Joſephus [e] ſays, that Panium is a cave under a mountain, from whence riſe the ſprings of Jordan, and is the fountain of it; and Pliny alſo ſays [f], the river Jordan riſes out of the fountain Paneas. This city was enlarged and beautified by Philip Herod, and he called it by the name of Cæſarea Philippi, both in honour of Tiberius Cæſar [g], and after his own name, by which name it goes in Matt. xvi. 13. Mark viii. 27. and is called in the Jeruſalem Targum on Gen. xiv. 14. Dan of Cæſarea.

℣. 48. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Dan, &c.] Before deſcribed by its cities, which were in it. This tribe was bounded by Ephraim on the north, by Judah on the eaſt, by Simeon on the ſouth, and by the Mediterranean ſea on the weſt. Joſephus [h] ſays, the Danites enjoyed the vale which lies to the ſetting ſun, bounded by Azotus and Doris, and all Jamnia and Getta, from Accaron (or Ekron) to the mountain from whence the tribe of Judah begins: according to their families; which inheritance was diſtributed, according to the number of their families: their cities with their villages; before named.

℣. 49. And when they made an end of dividing the land for inheritance by their coaſts, &c.] That is, Eleazar, Joſhua, and the ten men appointed for this purpoſe; when all the lots were drawn, and the ſeveral inheritances which came up to them, were divided among the families of the reſpective tribes, this work being finiſhed: the children of Iſrael gave an inheritance to Joſhua the ſon of Nun among them; moſt interpreters obſerve the modeſty of Joſhua, that though the oldeſt and the greateſt man in the nation, the chief governor, yet had his inheritance laſt of all; nor did he take any part to himſelf, it was given to him by the people, who had the whole land divided among them; in which he was a type of Chriſt; ſee 2 Cor. viii. 9. Phil. ii. 6, 7.

℣. 50. According to the word of the Lord, &c.] Or mouth of the Lord; either according to the oracle of Urim and Thummim, which Eleazar conſulted on this occaſion; or according to what the Lord had ſaid to Moſes, at the ſame time that Hebron was ordered to Caleb, ch. xiv. 6. and they gave him the city which he aſked, even Timnath-ſerah in mount Ephraim; he choſe a place in his own tribe, for he was of the tribe of Ephraim; and it ſeems that what he choſe was none of the beſt of places; for Paula, as Jerom [i] relates, when ſhe travelled into thoſe parts, wondered that the diſtributor of the poſſeſſions of the children of Iſrael ſhould chuſe ſuch a rough and mountainous place for himſelf; of its ſituation, ſee ch. xxiv. 30. and he built the city, and dwelt therein; he rebuilt it, and fitted it for his own habitation, and for thoſe that belonged to him.

℣. 51. Theſe are the inheritances which Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, &c.] The one the high prieſt, and the other the chief governor of the nation: and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael; the princes appointed for this ſervice, whoſe names are given Numb. xxxiv. 18—28. the inheritances before deſcribed in the preceding chapters by their boundaries and cities, theſe the ſaid perſons divided for an inheritance by lot in Shiloh; and ſo has particular reference to the 7 lots drawn there for 7 of the tribes, by which their inheritances were aſſigned to them: and this was done before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; ſee ch. xviii. 1, 10. ſo they made an end of dividing the country; though it was not as yet wholly ſubdued.

CHAP. XX.

THE contents of this chapter are the renewal of the order to appoint cities of refuge for ſuch that commit man-ſlaughter ignorantly, to flee unto, and have ſhelter in from the avenger of blood, ℣. 1—6. and the execution of this order, ℣. 7, 8, 9.

℣. 1. The Lord alſo ſpake unto Joſhua, &c.] Out of the tabernacle, at the door of which he with the high prieſt and princes were: the Lord had ſpoken to him before concerning dividing the land among the tribes, ch. xiii. 1—7. and this being done he ſpeaks to him again: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak to the children of Iſrael, ſaying, &c] Whom the affair concerned the Lord ſpake to Joſhua about, they having now the whole land divided among them: appoint out for you cities of refuge; of the name, nature, uſe, and number of theſe cities, ſee the note on Numb. xxxv. 6. whereof I ſpake unto you by the hand of Moſes; Numb. xxxv. Deut. xix.

℣. 3. That the ſlayer that killeth any perſon unawares and unwittingly, may flee thither, &c.] Who through mere accident, and without deſign, killed a perſon, friend or foe, one of his own kindred, or a ſtranger, without any malice againſt him, or intention to take away his life: and they ſhall be your refuge from the avenger of blood; from any of the relations of the deceaſed, who might be ſtirred up to avenge the blood of his kinſman on the ſlayer; ſee Numb. xxxv. 12.

℣. 4. And when he that doth flee unto one of thoſe cities, &c.] Any one of them, that was neareſt to him: ſhall ſtand at the entering of the gate of the city; for he might not ruſh in without leave: and ſhall declare his cauſe in the ears of the elders of that city; lay before them the whole matter, how that he had killed a perſon unawares, by what means it came about, and that it was merely through error, without any malicious deſign, and was a mere accident: they ſhall take him into the city unto them; directly, leſt the avenger of blood ſhould come and ſeize on him, and kill him; and they were to take him into the city, not only to prevent that, but to examine him ſtill more cloſely about the matter, and get farther ſatisfaction; and being ſatisfied, were to continue him in it: and give him a place that he might dwell among them; until his death, or the death of the high prieſt, if that was firſt. Kimchi obſerves from their Rabbins, that he was not to hire a houſe all the time of his dwelling there, but was to have one freely, becauſe it is ſaid, and give him, &c.

℣. 5. And if the avenger of blood purſue after him, &c.] To the city of refuge, whither he is fled, and demand him: then they ſhall not deliver the ſlayer up into his hands; to be ſlain by him, but ſhall protect him: becauſe he ſmote his neighbour unwittingly, and hated him not before time; ſee the notes on Numb. xxxv. 22, 23. and Deut xix. 6.

℣. 6. And he ſhall dwell in that city, until he ſhall ſtand before the congregation for judgment, &c.] That is, until his cauſe was heard in the court of judicature in his own city, or in any other to which the avenger of blood ſhould appeal; ſee Numb. xxxv. 24, 25. who if they found him guilty of death, they put him to death; but if only guilty of accidental manſlaughter, then they delivered him up to his city of refuge for ſafety, where he was to abide until the death of the high prieſt that ſhall be in thoſe days; ſee Numb. xxxv. 25. then ſhall the ſlayer return, and come unto his own city, and unto his own houſe, unto the city from whence he fled; and live with his family in the enjoyment of his poſſeſſions and eſtates, honours, and privileges belonging to him as before; ſee Numb. xxxv. 28.

℣. 7. And they appointed Kedeſh in Galilee in mount Naphtali, &c.] Of which ſee ch. xix. 37. the appointment of this and the two cities following was made by the children of Iſrael at this time: and Shechem in mount Ephraim; called Sichem, Gen. xii. 6. and Shechem from a prince of that name that poſſeſſed it, Gen. xxxiv. it fell to the lot of the tribe of Ephraim; its name in the new teſtament is Sychar, John iv. 5. and it is now called Neapolis, or Naplouſe: and Kirjath-arba, which is Hebron, in the mountain of Judah; it ſtood in the hill-country of Judea, Luke i. 39, 65. of which ſee ch. xiv. 15. and xv. 54. There ſeems to be a difficulty here, ſince this city was before given to Caleb, ch. xiv. 13, 14. and yet afterwards given to the Levites, and appointed a city of refuge. The Jews reconcile this by obſerving, that the city and ſuburbs were given to the Levites, and fixed for a city of refuge; but the villages and fields, and country around it, and belonging to it, were given to Caleb, ch. xxi. 12. and Abarbinel makes no doubt, that the children of Judah gave ſomething elſe to Caleb in lieu of it. As theſe cities of refuge were typical of Chriſt, as has been obſerved on Numb. xxxv. 29. their names are applicable to him. Kedeſh ſignifies holy or holineſs; Chriſt is holy in both his natures, divine and human; and ſo abundantly qualified to be the mediator, ſaviour, and redeemer; and is the fountain of holineſs to his people, and is made ſanctification to them, Pſ. xvi. 10. Heb. vii. 26. 1 Cor. i. 30. and Shebiem ſignifies the ſhoulder; and not only the government of the church and people of God is on the ſhoulder of Chriſt, but all their ſins have been laid upon him, and bore by him; and every particular ſoul in converſion, every loſt ſheep is looked up by him, and taken up and brought home on his ſhoulder, Iſ. ix. 6. and liii. 6. Luke xv. 4. Hebron ſignifies fellowſhip; in effectual vocation, the ſaints are called into fellowſhip with Chriſt, and their fellowſhip is with the Father, and his ſon Jeſus Chriſt; through him they have acceſs to God, and communion with him now, and ſhall have uninterrupted communion with him to all eternity, 1 Cor. i. 9. 1 Joh. i. 3. Eph. ii. 18. Joh. xvii. 24.

℣. 8. And on the other ſide Jordan by Jericho eaſtward, &c.] In the country poſſeſſed by the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh: they aſſigned Bezer in the wilderneſs, upon the plain, out of the tribe of Reuben, and Ramoth in Gilead out of the tribe of Gad, and Golan in Baſhan out of the tribe of Manaſſeh; of theſe places, and the ſignification of their names, and of the application of them to Chriſt, the antitype of the cities of refuge, ſee the note on Deut. iv. 43. Theſe laſt cities were not appointed now, they were appointed in the times of Moſes, and ſevered by him, Deut. iv. 41. nor are they here ſaid to be appointed, but to be aſſigned or given [c]; they were now delivered up into the hands of the Levites for cities of refuge, for they were before ſevered for that uſe; they were not, according to the Jews [d], made uſe of as ſuch, until the other three were appointed.

℣. 9. Theſe were the cities appointed for all the children of Iſrael, &c.] For the common uſe of them all, and not for that tribe only in which they ſtood: and for the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them; not only for the proſelytes of righteouſneſs, but for the proſelytes of the gate alſo, as well as for the natives of Iſrael; Chriſt is a refuge for Jews and Gentiles, for all ſinners that flee to him: that whoſoever killeth any perſon unawares might flee thither; and find ſhelter and ſafety: and not die by the hand of the avenger of blood; getting thither before he could overtake him: until he ſtood before the congregation; either before the congregation, the elders of the city, or court of judicature in the city of refuge, or before the court of his own city from whence he fled, if ſummoned thither.

CHAP. XXI.

THIS chapter contains the addreſs of the Levites to the court, to have the cities and ſuburbs given them according to the command of God by Moſes, ℣. 1, 2. the grant of them by lot out of the ſeveral tribes, ℣. 3—8. the particular cities out of the tribes of Judah and Simeon are mentioned by name, ℣. 9—16. then thoſe out of the tribe of Benjamin, ℣. 17, 18, 19. next thoſe out of the tribe of Ephraim, ℣. 20, 21, 22. afterwards thoſe out of the tribe of Dan, ℣. 23—26. then thoſe out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh, ℣. 27. and out of the tribe of Iſſachar, ℣. 28, 29. and out of the tribe of Aſher, ℣. 30, 31. and of Napthali, ℣. 32, 33. and of Zebulun, ℣. 34, 35. and of Reuben, ℣. 36, 37. and of Gad, ℣. 38, 39, 40. which in all made forty-eight, ℣. 41, 42. and the chapter is concluded with obſerving, that God gave Iſrael all the land of Canaan, and reſt in it, according to his promiſe, very faithfully and punctually, ℣. 43, 44, 45.

℣. 1. Then came near the heads of the fathers of the Levites, &c.] When the land was divided to the ſeveral tribes, and every one knew the cities that belonged to them, and what they could and ſhould part with to the Levites, and when the ſix cities of refuge were fixed; the Levites came to put in their claim for cities of habitation, they having no ſhare in the diviſion of the land; and yet it was neceſſary they ſhould have habitations; the perſons that undertook to put in a claim for them were the principal men among them; the fathers of them were Kohath, Gerſhon, and Merari; the heads of thoſe were the chief men that were then living; theſe came unto Eleazar the prieſt, and unto Joſhua the ſon of Nun; the high prieſt and chief magiſtrate: and unto the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael; the princes appointed to divide the land with the two great perſonages before mentioned, Numb. xxxiv. 17—29.

℣. 2. And they ſpake unto them at Shiloh in the land of Canaan, &c.] Where the tabernacle was fixed, at or near which the above perſons met to caſt lots for the diviſion of the land to the ſeven tribes that had not received their inheritance: ſaying, the Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes to give us cities to dwell in, with thē ſuburbs thereof for our cattle; this command is extant in Numb. xxxv. 2—8.

℣. 3. And the children of Iſrael gave unto the Levites out of their inheritance, &c.] Knowing full well there was ſuch a command, made no objection to their motion, but freely gave them cities out of the portion of inheritance allotted to them; this they did at the commandment of the Lord, and in obedience to it, even gave theſe cities and ſuburbs; after mentioned: this was done by the tribes themſelves; as there were a certain number fixed by the commandment of God, they agreed among themſelves how many and what cities ſhould be given out of each tribe; and then lots were caſt for them by Joſhua, what and which cities ſhould be appropriated to their ſeveral diviſions, as the Kohathites that ſprang from Aaron, and the reſt of them that did not, and the Gerſhonites and Merarites, as follows.

℣. 4. And the lot came out for the family of the Kohathites, &c.] The firſt lot that was drawn out of the pot or urn was for the deſcendants of Kohath, a ſon of Levi: and the children of Aaron the prieſt which were of the Levites; who deſcended from Amram, the eldeſt ſon of Kohath, and theſe were not only Levites, but prieſts: theſe had by lot out of the tribe of Judah, and out of the tribe of Simeon, and out of the tribe of Benjamin, thirteen cities; which are after mentioned by name; and as theſe were prieſts, whoſe buſineſs was to ſerve in the temple, and at the altar, the cities aſſigned them by the lot, were by the wiſe diſpoſal of divine providence, ordered them out of thoſe tribes which lay neareſt to Jeruſalem; the place God had choſen to put his name in, where the temple would be built, and the altars erected for ſacrifices and incenſe.

℣. 5. And the reſt of the children of Kohath, &c.] Which did not deſcend from him in the line of Amram and Aaron, but of Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel, who were not prieſts, but Levites: had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Ephraim, and out of the tribe of Dan, and out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh, ten cities; theſe other ſort of Kohathites had their cities in tribes next to the other three where the Kohathites that were prieſts had theirs.

℣. 6. And the children of Gerſhon had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Iſſachar, &c.] Theſe were Levites who deſcended from Gerſhon, the eldeſt ſon of Levi, and had their cities by lot aſſigned them in tribes at a greater diſtance, not only out of Iſſachar, but out of the tribe of Aſher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh in Baſhan; which was the other half of the tribe beyond Jordan: thirteen cities; as many as were given out of the tribes of Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin.

℣. 7. The children of Merari by their families, &c.] The deſcendants of Merari, the third ſon of Levi: had out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad; which were both on the other ſide Jordan: and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities; in all 48, as the Lord commanded, Numb. xxxv. 7.

℣. 8. And the children of Iſrael gave by lot unto the Levites theſe cities with their ſuburbs, &c.] Reaching 2000 cubits from the cities all around: theſe cities did not lye all together, and ſo could not be deſcribed by their coaſts; but in the ſeveral tribes, and intermixed with their cities; which fulfilled Jacob's prophecy, that they ſhould be divided and ſcattered in Iſrael, Gen. xlix. 7. as well as it was ſo ordered for the benefit of the ſeveral tribes, that they might have the aſſiſtance of the prieſts and Levites, to inſtruct them in the knowledge of the laws and commandments of God, and all divine things: as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes; Numb. xxxv. 2.

℣. 9. And they gave out of the tribe of the children of Judah, &c.] Here follows a particular account of the ſeveral cities which were given out of each tribe, and firſt out of this: and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon; which is joined with that of Judah, becauſe the cities of it lay within it, ch. xix. 1. theſe cities which are here mentioned by name; ℣. 13, 14, 15, 16.

℣. 10. Which the children of Aaron being of the families of the Kohathites, &c.] Who deſcending from Kohath, in the line of Aaron, were prieſts:

who were of the children of Levi, had; they were Levites, as deſcending from Levi, but were prieſts alſo, as being of the ſtock of Aaron, and the cities hereafter mentioned in the ſaid tribe fell to their portion: for theirs was the firſt lot; for being of the line of Aaron, and prieſts, they had the honour and privilege to have the firſt lot drawn for them, and out of the tribe for which the firſt lot was alſo drawn, the tribe of Judah; here they had their cities allotted them, for a reaſon before given.

℣. 11. And they gave them the city of Arbah, the father of Anak, &c.] Which from him was called Kirjath-Arbah, ch. xiv. 15. and Anak, according to Kimchi, is not the name of a man, but a general name, comprehending the Anakim, a race of giants, among whom Arbah was the chief and principal man, a prince and ruler over them, as Ben Melech: which city is Hebron in the hill-country of Judah; as in ch. xiv. 15. ſee Luke i. 39, 65. with the ſuburbs thereof round about it; as far as 2000 cubits, which were to put their cattle in, and proviſion for them.

℣. 12. But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, &c.] Which lay beyond the 2000 cubits: gave they to Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, for his poſſeſſion; as Moſes had promiſed, and Joſhua had confirmed to him; and now the children of Iſrael gave them to him, and put him in the poſſeſſion of, ch. xiv. 6, 13. and xv. 13. and the ſame is to be obſerved of all the other cities given to the Levites, that they and their ſuburbs, extending to ſuch a diſtance only, were given to them; but the fields and villages, which belonged to them, continued the inheritance of the tribes in which they were.

℣. 13. Thus they gave to the children of Aaron the prieſt, &c.] The families of the Kohathites, that part of them which deſcended from him, and were prieſts: Hebron with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer; that had ſlain a perſon unawares, and without deſign; ſee on ch. xx. 3, 7. and Libnah with her ſuburbs; a royal city, of which ſee ch. x. 29, 30.

℣. 14, 15, 16. And Jattir with her ſuburbs, and Eſhtemoa with her ſuburbs, and Holon with her ſuburbs, and Debir with her ſuburbs, and Ain with her ſuburbs, and Juttah with her ſuburbs, &c.] Of which ſix cities, ſee the notes on ch. xv. 32, 48, 49, 50, 51, 55. and Beth-ſhemeſh with her ſuburbs; which is not mentioned among the cities of Judah, ch. xv. only as in the borders of it, ℣. 10. and perhaps is the ſame Beth-ſhemeſh to which the ark was directed by the Philiſtines from Aſhdod, 1 Sam. vi. 9, 12. in it formerly was a temple dedicated to the ſun, from whence it had its name: nine cities out of thoſe two tribes; and they ſeem, all but one, which is Ain, to be of the tribe of Judah, and that originally belonged to it; and as that tribe had the largeſt number of cities in its lot, the more were given out of it to the Levites, according to a rule preſcribed, Numb. xxxv. 8.

℣. 17. And out of the tribe of Benjamin, Gibeon with her ſuburbs, Geba with her ſuburbs;] Of which ſee the notes on ch. xviii. 24, 25. from the former came the Gibeonites.

℣. 18. Anathoth with her ſuburbs, &c.] This is not mentioned among the cities of Benjamin, ch. xviii. it was the native place of the prophet Jeremiah, Jer. i. 1. ſee the note there; it lay about two or three miles north of Jeruſalem; three, ſays Jerom [k]. Rauwolf [l] ſpeaks of it as a ſmall village, when he travelled into thoſe parts, and as lying on a height or eminence, and which was within 20 furlongs of Jeruſalem, as Joſephus writes [m]: and Almon with her ſuburbs; this alſo is not mentioned among the cities of Benjamin, ch. xviii. it is called Alemeth, 1 Chron. vi. 60. Jarchi and Kimchi ſay it is the ſame with Bahurim, 2 Sam. iii. 16. where the Targum renders it by Almeth, and both words ſignify the ſame thing, youth: four cities; which were a large number for ſo ſmall a tribe as little Benjamin to give.

℣. 19. All the cities of the children of Aaron, the prieſts, &c.] Thoſe of the Kohathites that came from him: were thirteen cities with their ſuburbs; and juſt ſo many are mentioned by name in the preceding verſes.

℣. 20. And the families of the children of Kohath, the Levites, &c.] Who were not prieſts: which remained of the children of Kohath; theſe are the children of Moſes, as Jarchi ſays, and thoſe that deſcended from Kohath in the lines of Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel: even they had the cities of their lot out of the tribe of Ephraim; and were as follow.

℣. 21. For they gave them Shechem, with her ſuburbs, in mount Ephraim, &c.] Of which ſee ch. xx. 7. to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer; which being on a mountain, was the more conſpicuous, and the fitter for this purpoſe, as was Hebron in the hill-country of Judea, ℣. 11, 13. this is the ſecond city of refuge mentioned: and Gezer with her ſuburbs; a place from whence the Canaanites were not expelled; ſee the note on ch. xvi. 10.

℣. 22. And Kibzaim with her ſuburbs, &c.] Which ſeems to be the ſame with Jokneam, 1 Chron. vi. 68. of it we read no where elſe: and Beth-horon with her ſuburbs; upper Bethoron, for there were two, an upper and a nether; ſee ch. xvi. 3, 5. four cities; as mentioned by name.

℣. 25. And out of the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, Taanach with her ſuburbs, &c.] Of which ſee ch. xvii. 10. and Gath-rimmon with her ſuburbs; there was a city of this name in Dan, as in the preceding verſe; nor was it unuſual for cities to be called by the ſame name in different tribes: two cities; theſe are called Aner and Bilean in 1 Chron. vi. 70. in proceſs of time cities changed their names; two cities were a proper proportion for this half tribe; two more were given out of the other half tribe on the other ſide Jordan, as appears by what follows.

℣. 26. All the cities were ten with her ſuburbs, &c.] Four out of Ephraim, four out of Dan, and two out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh: which were for the families of the children of Kohath that remained; who were of the other branch of the Kohathites, and who did not deſcend from Aaron, and were only Levites, and not prieſts; ſee the note on ℣. 20.

℣. 27. And unto the children of Gerſhon, of the families of the Levites, &c.] The deſcendants of the ſecond ſon of Levi: out of the other half tribe of Manaſſeh; that which was ſettled beyond Jordan: they gave Golan in Baſhan, with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer; ſee ch. xx. 8. this is the

the third city of refuge mentioned: and Beeſhterah with her ſuburbs; called Aſhtaroth, 1 Chron. vi. 71. which had been the royal city of Og, king of Baſhan, where he had his palace, Deut i. 4 Here ſeems to have been formerly a temple dedicated to the goddeſs Aſtarte; for Beeſhterah is a compound of Beth and Aſhterah, or Aſtarte; that is, the houſe or temple of Aſtarte, but now become a city of the Levites: two cities; two more having been before given out of the other half tribe.

℣. 28. And out of the tribe of Iſſachar, Kiſhon with her ſuburbs, &c.] From whence the river Kiſhon probably had its name, or the city from that; it is the ſame with Kiſhion, ch. xix. 20. and called Kedeſh, 1 Chron. vi. 72. Dabareh with her ſuburbs; the ſame with Daberath on the border of Zebulun, ch. xix. 12. ſee the note there.

℣. 29. Jarmuth with her ſuburbs, &c.] Called Ramoth, 1 Chron. vi. 73. very probably the ſame with Remeth, ch. xix. 21. Engannim with her ſuburbs; called Anen, 1 Chron. vi. 73. four cities; ſo many are mentioned by name.

℣. 30. And out of the tribe of Aſher, Miſhal with her ſuburbs, &c.] The ſame with Miſheal, ch. xix. 26. called Maſhal, 1 Chron. vi. 74. Abdon with her ſuburbs; not mentioned among the cities of Aſher, unleſs the ſame with Hebron, ch. xix. 28.

℣. 31. Helkath with her ſuburbs, &c.] The ſame with Hukok in 1 Chron. vi. 75. and Rehob with her ſuburbs, four cities; of which ſee the notes on ch. xix. 25, 26, 28.

℣. 32. And out of the tribe of Naphtali Kedeſh in Galilee, with her ſuburbs, &c.] Of which ſee ch. xx. 7. to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer; this is the fourth city of refuge mentioned: and Hammoth-dor with her ſuburbs; the ſame with Hammon, 1 Chron. vi. 76. and with Hammath, ch. xix. 35. and is thought by ſome to be Tiberias, ſo called from the hot baths in or near it: and Kartan with her ſuburbs; called Kirjathaim, 1 Chron. vi. 76. but cannot be the Kirjathaim in Numb. xxxii. 37. for that belonged to the tribe of Reuben, and was on the other ſide Jordan: three cities; this being a leſſer tribe than ſome others gave fewer cities, according to the rule in Numb. xxxv. 8.

℣. 33. All the cities of the Gerſhonites, according to their families, &c.] Which were divided among them, according to the number of their families: were 13 cities with their ſuburbs; two out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh beyond Jordan, four out of Iſſachar, four out of Aſher, and three out of Naphtali.

℣. 34. And unto the families of the children of Merari, the reſt of the Levites, &c.] The deſcendants of the youngeſt ſon of Levi, who were all that remained of the Levites unprovided of cities: out of the tribe of Zebulun, Jokneam with her ſuburbs; which lay near Carmel, and was a royal city; ſee the note on ch. xii. 22. and Kartah with her ſuburbs; perhaps the ſame with Kattath, ch. xix. 15.

℣. 35. Dimnah with her ſuburbs, &c.] No where mentioned, unleſs the ſame with Rimmon, 1 Chron. vi. 77. Nahalal with her ſuburbs; ſee ch. xix. 15. four cities; only two are mentioned, 1 Chron. vi. 77. and they by different names; the one is Rimmon, before obſerved, and the other Tabor; perhaps the ſame with Chiſloth-tabor, ch. xix. 12.

℣. 36. And out of the tribe of Reuben Bezer with her ſuburbs, &c.] Which was a city of refuge, and the fifth of them in this account, though not obſerved as ſuch here, but is in the Greek verſion; ſee ch. xx. 8. and Jahazah with her ſuburbs; called Jahaz, Numb. xxi. 23. ſee the note there.

℣. 37. Kedemoth with her ſuburbs, &c.] Near to which was a wilderneſs of that name; ſee Deut. ii. 26. and Mephaath with her ſuburbs; of which ſee the note on ch. xiii. 18. where the two preceding cities are mentioned along with it; four cities. This and the preceding verſe are not in ſome antient copies of the Hebrew bible, as is noted by the Maſorites; but are in ſome others, as Kimchi owns, and ſtand in the Targum, in the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and in a manuſcript referred to by Hottinger [c]; and the ſame words are to be found in 1 Chron. vi. 78, 79. and are abſolutely neceſſary to be retained, ſince without them there would be but eight cities for the Merarites, whereas they are expreſsly ſaid to be twelve, ℣. 40.

℣. 38. And out of the tribe of Gad, &c.] Which alſo, as that of Reuben, lay on the other ſide Jordan: Ramoth in Gilead with her ſuburbs; of which ſee ch. xx. 8. to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer; and is the ſixth and laſt city of refuge in this account: and Mahanaim with her ſuburbs; here it was the angels met Jacob, which gave riſe to the name of the place, Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. afterwards a city was built here, and was on the borders of the tribe of Gad, and belonged to it, ch. xiii. 26. mention is made of it in other places, 2 Sam. ii. 8. 1 Kings ii. 8.

℣. 39. Heſhbon with her ſuburbs, &c.] Which was formerly the royal city of Sihon king of the Amorites, and was firſt given to and rebuilt by the Reubenites, but was upon the border of the tribe of Gad; and appears from hence to have been one of their cities, Numb. xxi. 26. and xxxii. 37. Joſh. xiii. 17, 21, 26. Jazer with her ſuburbs; ſometimes called Jaazer, another city in the ſame country, and near Heſhbon; ſee Numb. xxi. 32. four cities in all; which were Ramoth-Gilead, Mahanaim, Heſhbon, and Jazer.

℣. 40. So all the cities for the children of Merari by their families, &c.] Which were diſtributed by lot to them, according to the number of their families, and were ſufficient for them: which were remaining of the families of the Levites; the laſt diviſion of them, beſides thoſe of the Kohathites, Levites, and the Gerſhonites: were by their lot twelve cities; four out of the tribe of Zebulun, four out of the tribe of Reuben, and four out of the tribe of Gad, whoſe names are before given.

℣. 41. All the cities of the Levites, within the poſſeſſion of the children of Iſrael, &c.] As comprized in one ſum total: were forty-eight cities with their ſuburbs; which is juſt the number that Moſes from the mouth of God ordered to be given unto them, before they entered into the land, and before they were in poſſeſſion of one city in it, Numb. xxxv. 7. which as it is a proof of the omniſcience, preſcience, and predetermination of God; ſo of the ſure and true prediction of Moſes, who could not be otherwiſe certain than from the Lord, of the Iſraelites being able to give ſo many cities to them, out of their ſeveral tribes: and it is to be obſerved, that this tribe of Levi, though it had no ſhare in the diviſion of the land, yet had more cities by lot given to it than any other, excepting the tribe of Judah; though indeed in the account of ſome of the tribes, all the cities in them are not mentioned; and and beſides, they had only the cities they had with their ſuburbs round about them, but not the lands belonging to them, nor the villages; however, this ſhews that a large and liberal maintenance of the miniſters of the Lord, that ſerve in his ſanctuary, ſhould be allowed and made for them, as in the legal, ſo under the goſpel-diſpenſation.

℣. 42. Theſe cities were every one with their ſuburbs round about them, &c.] Which reached to the ſpace of 2000 cubits on every ſide; and ſuch a ſpace was aſſigned to every one of the above cities for their cattle, to keep them in and lay up proviſion for them: thus were all their cities; ſix of them cities of refuge, and forty-two for the prieſts and Levites to dwell in, and for the commodious uſe of their herds and flocks.

℣. 43. And the Lord gave unto Iſrael all the land which he ſware to give unto their fathers, &c.] It was all given them by lot, whether ſubdued or not ſubdued, and the far greater part was actually put into their hands, and they had as much as they could for the preſent occupy and cultivate; and ſuch as were in the hands of the Canaanites, were ſubject to pay tribute to them; and it was owing to their own ſlothfulneſs and ſluggiſhneſs, that they did not poſſeſs more hereafter; though it was the will of God that their enemies ſhould be driven out by little and little, until the Iſraelites were ſo increaſed as to occupy the whole, leſt any part of the land ſhould lie waſte and become barren, and leſt the wild beaſts of the field ſhould multiply upon them: and they poſſeſſed it and dwelt therein; each according to their lot in the ſeveral places aſſigned them; as many cities as they could at preſent people, and as much land as they could now manage.

℣. 44. And the Lord gave them reſt round about, &c.] Not only from their travels, with which they had been fatigued forty years in the wilderneſs, but from wars with the Canaanites they had been engaged in for ſome years paſt: according to all that he ſware unto their fathers; not only to give them the land, but peace, reſt, and ſafety in it: and there ſtood not a man of all their enemies before them; for whenever any roſe up to oppoſe them, they were immediately cut off: this is to be underſtood whilſt Joſhua was living; for afterwards, ſinning againſt God, they were again and again delivered up into the hands of their enemies: the Lord delivered all their enemies into their hands; that is, that made war with them.

℣. 45. There failed not ought of any good thing, &c.] Not only every good thing in general, but every part and particular of that good thing; that, with all that was included in it, or were appendages to it, or circumſtances of it: which the Lord had ſpoken to the houſe of Iſrael; as of their deliverance out of Egypt, and paſſage thro' the Red-ſea and wilderneſs, with all conveniences for them therein; ſo of their paſſage through Jordan, ſucceſs of their arms, the conqueſt of their enemies, poſſeſſion of their land, a land flowing with milk and honey: all came to paſs; exactly, preciſely, and punctually, even every thing relative to their temporal and ſpiritual good: ſo all that God promiſes to his ſpiritual Iſrael, with reſpect to their preſent comfort or everlaſting happineſs; all is exactly fulfilled, all his promiſes in Chriſt are yea and amen.

CHAP. XXII.

THE war with the Canaanites being ended, Joſhua called to him the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, who came over Jordan with him to aſſiſt in it, and commended them for their obedience to Moſes and to himſelf, and to God by them; and then diſmiſſed them, with ſome inſtructions to keep the ways and worſhip of God, and with his bleſſing upon them, ℣. 1—8. upon which they returned to their country, and when they came to the borders of it ſet up an altar by Jordan, ℣. 9—10. which when the children of Iſrael heard of, it gave them great offence, they fearing they were going to make a revolt from the pure worſhip of God, and therefore ſent a deputation of princes to them, with the ſon of the high prieſt, to enquire into the matter, and expoſtulate with them about it, who did ℣. 11—20. and who received from them a very ſatisfactory anſwer, ℣. 21—31. with which they returned and reported to the children of Iſrael, and which gave them pleaſure, ℣. 32, 33, 34.

℣. 1. Then Joſhua called the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh;] The promiſe of God to Iſrael being fulfilled, the land of Canaan being for the moſt part ſubdued, the war at an end, and reſt had on all ſides from their enemies, and the land divided among the nine tribes and a half, and they ſettled in the quiet poſſeſſion of their lots; Joſhua ſent for the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, who had at their own requeſt their portion allotted them on the other ſide Jordan, and who came over that river with him to aſſiſt their brethren in their wars with the Canaanites, and addreſſed them in the following reſpectable manner.

℣. 2. And ſaid unto them, ye have kept all that Moſes the ſervant of the Lord commanded you, &c.] Which was, that they ſhould leave their wives and children, and flocks and herds, behind them in the land of Gilead, and paſs over Jordan, with their brethren the children of Iſrael armed, and fight with them, and for them, until the Canaanites were ſubdued, and not return until their brethren were peaceably ſettled in the poſſeſſion of their inheritances; all which they had punctually obſerved, and inviolably kept, as they agreed to, Numb. xxxii. and have obeyed my voice in all that I commanded you; as the generaliſſimo and commander in chief of the Iſraelitiſh forces; as what rank and poſition to be in, what part to take in an engagement, what attack to make, when and where, or on what expedition to go; whereever he ordered them to go, they went; and upon whatſoever and whereſoever he ſent them, they readily and chearfully obeyed, as they promiſed, ch. i. 16, 17. and approved themſelves as good ſoldiers under him; for all which he commends them, and gives them military honour.

℣. 3. Ye have not left your brethren theſe many days unto this day, &c.] For the ſpace of 14 years, which is the commonly received notion of the Jews [f]; ſeven years according to them the land was ſubduing, and ſeven more ſpent in dividing it, it, and then theſe tribes were ſent for and diſmiſſed; all this time they ſtuck cloſe by their brethren, and aſſiſted them in their wars, and never offered to return to their wives and children, until they had an order from their general: but have kept the charge of the commandment of the Lord your God; for what both Moſes and Joſhua commanded them, was from the mouth of the Lord; ſo that in obeying them, they obeyed him.

[f] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 11. p. 32.

℣. 4. And now the Lord your God hath given reſt unto your brethren, as he promiſed them, &c.] As in ch. xxi. 44. ſee Deut. xii. 9, 10. therefore now return ye, and get ye unto your tents; not their military tents in the army, from which they now came to Joſhua, but their houſes, as the Greek verſion, and their cities, as the Targum; they having been ſo long uſed to tents in the wilderneſs, and during the wars in Canaan, this was a familiar word for their dwellings: and unto the land of your poſſeſſion, which Moſes the ſervant of the Lord gave you, on the other ſide Jordan; before his death, on condition of doing what they now had done; even the land of Gilead and Baſhan beyond Jordan.

℣. 5. But take diligent heed to do the commandment and the law, &c.] The ten commandments, and all other laws, both ceremonial and civil: which Moſes the ſervant of the Lord charged you; in the name of the Lord, to keep and obſerve: to love the Lord your God; of which keeping the commands of God is an evidence, and which is the true principle and motive of hearty, ſincere, and chearful obedience to them: and to walk in all his ways; which he has preſcribed, all his ways of worſhip, paths of duty, faith, truth, holineſs and righteouſneſs: and to keep his commandments; whether moral, ceremonial or judicial; whether of natural and moral obligation, or of poſitive inſtitution: and to cleave unto him; and not depart from his ways, worſhip, word and ordinances: and to ſerve him with all your heart, and with all your ſoul; in the moſt ſtrict and affectionate manner. This advice Joſhua thought proper to give them, and inculcate into them, now they were about to leave their brethren, and go on the other ſide Jordan; where they would be at a diſtance from the tabernacle, altar and ſervice of God, and might be under temptation to relinquiſh it, and ſet up another form of worſhip elſewhere.

℣. 6. So Joſhua bleſſed them, and ſent them away, &c.] Diſmiſſed them from his preſence with a bleſſing, in order to go to their own country; this he did by wiſhing them well, praying to God for a bleſſing on them, their perſons and families, who had been ſo uſeful in aſſiſting their brethren to get poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan. Some think this bleſſing includes gifts and preſents he beſtowed on them: and they went unto their tents; here the word means their military tents in the camp of Iſrael, to which they returned, in order to take with them their goods, their ſubſtance and riches, their part of the ſpoil of the enemy, which of right belonged to them.

℣. 7. Now to the one half of the tribe of Manaſſeh, Moſes had given poſſeſſion in Baſhan, &c.] The kingdom of Og, ſee Deut. iii. 13. but unto the other half thereof gave Joſhua among their brethren on this ſide Jordan weſtward; of which an account is given, and the border of their lot deſcribed, ch. xvii. and when Joſhua ſent them alſo unto their tents, then he bleſſed them; it ſeems as if this half tribe was ſeparately diſmiſſed and bleſſed, they being more nearly related to Joſhua, who was of the tribe of Ephraim, and ſo had a more particular diſmiſſion and bleſſing; and he took his leave of them in a different and affectionate manner. Kimchi makes mention of a Deraſh, or expoſition of theirs, which ſays, that after they had taken leave they ſtayed two days, and returned and took leave a ſecond time, and which he underſtands of them all, and not of the half tribe only; but it is plainly the half tribe, that is only ſpoken of.

℣. 8. And he ſpake unto them, &c.] To the half tribe of Manaſſeh only, though ſome think alſo to the other ten tribes: ſaying, return with much riches unto your tents; that is, return to their own land and habitations there, with whatſoever riches they had got from the ſpoil of the enemy: and with very much cattle; they had taken from them, and fell to their ſhare, and for which they had good paſturage in Gilead and Baſhan, and therefore very proper to take with them: with ſilver and with gold, and with braſs, and with iron; whether in maſſy pieces, or wrought up into veſſels, which they found in the houſes of the Canaanites when they plundered them: and with very much raiment; ſome no doubt very rich and coſtly, ſuch as their kings, princes, nobles and great perſonages among them wore: divide the ſpoil of your enemies with your brethren; according to Jarchi and Kimchi this is ſpoken to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, to divide their ſpoil with the tribes of Reuben and Gad; but it rather means the dividing the above ſpoil, when they came to their own country with their brethren they left behind; who as they were employed in guarding and defending their cities, their wives and children, herds and flocks in their abſence, they had a right to part of the ſpoil; and as in other inſtances it appears to be a common caſe, for thoſe that ſtaid at home to ſhare in the ſpoil with them that went to war, ſee Numb. xxxi. 27. 1 Sam. xxx. 24, 25. Pſ. lxviii. 12. though the notion of Abarbinel pleaſes me beſt, that by their brethren are meant the other half tribe of Manaſſeh that remained in Canaan, and were ſettled there: when the ſpoil of the Canaanites was divided among all the tribes, the whole tribe of Manaſſeh had its ſhare; and whereas now half of it were going to their own country on the other ſide Jordan, it was but reaſonable they ſhould have their part of the ſpoil to carry with them; and this ſeems to be the true reaſon of their being ſeparately addreſſed, and diſmiſſed and bleſſed.

℣. 9. And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh returned, &c.] Firſt to the camp to take their ſubſtance, and then ſet forward to their own land: and departed from the children of Iſrael; from the reſt of them, for otherwiſe they were children of Iſrael alſo: out of Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan; for here the camp of Iſrael was, as well as the tabernacle: to go unto the country of Gilead, to the land of their poſſeſſion, whereof they were poſſeſſed; Gilead is put for the whole country on the other ſide Jordan, as the land of Jazer, and the kingdom of Baſhan, which the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh were poſſeſſed of: according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moſes; for when they moved to have that country, Moſes, it ſeems, conſulted the Lord about it, who declared it to be his will they ſhould have it, on performing what they promiſed, ſee Numb. xxxii. 31.

℣. 10. And when they came unto the borders of Jordan, that are in the land of Canaan, &c.] To the banks of it, or the ſand-heaps, ſome take the word to ſignify, which were thrown up to reſtrain the waters from overflowing; ſome by Geliloth underſtand a place ſo called; and Jerom [g] ſays it was near Jordan, in the tribe of Benjamin: but rather the word ſignifies the meanders, windings and turnings of the river [h]; and ſuch circuits and compaſſes it fetched near Jericho, as the ſame writer [i] obſerves, where we may ſuppoſe theſe tribes went over, and at a place where the river jetted out into the land of Canaan: the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, built there an altar; or then; that is, when they had paſſed over the river into their own country, for which Joſephus is expreſs [k]; and certain it is, that the altar was built not on the Canaan-ſide of Jordan, but on the oppoſite ſide, as is clear from the following verſe: and indeed they had no right to build on any other ground than their own; and they pitched upon a ſpot where the river jetted out into the land of Canaan, as moſt proper to erect it on, to be a witneſs, that though ſeparated from the reſt of the Iſraelites by the river Jordan, yet were a part of them, and had a right to join them in the ſervice of God, and bring their ſacrifices to the altar of God in the tabernacle, as more fully appears in ſome after verſes: a great altar to ſee to; built up very high, ſo that it might be ſeen at a great diſtance.

℣. 11. And the children of Iſrael heard ſay, &c.] Thoſe that dwelt in the land of Canaan, for otherwiſe, as before obſerved, the two tribes and a half on the other ſide Jordan were Iſraelites alſo; and this is a farther proof, that the altar was built on their ſide, or thoſe in the land of Canaan would have known of the building of it, and have ſeen them at it, and not come at the knowledge of it by hearſay only, as it ſeems they did, it being reported to them by ſome who had been in thoſe parts, and had ſeen the ſtructure: behold, the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, have built an altar over-againſt the land of Canaan; which clearly ſhews it was on the other ſide Jordan, tho' Noldius, who places it in the land of Canaan, renders the words, in the neighbourhood of it; [l] which will not much help him, ſince it might be in the neighbourhood of it, and yet not in it: in the borders of Jordan; on the banks of it, or in one of the meanders and windings of it, at a place where it ran out and fetched a compaſs in the land of Canaan: at the paſſage of the children of Iſrael; where they paſſed over when they firſt came into Canaan, and where thoſe tribes alſo paſſed over at their return; ſuppoſed to be the Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing, John i. 28.

℣. 12. And when the children of Iſrael heard of it, &c.] Of the building the altar in the above place, namely the nine tribes and a half ſettled in the land of Canaan: the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael gathered themſelves together at Shiloh; where the tabernacle and altar of the Lord were, whoſe cauſe they undertook to avenge, being injured as they imagined by the altar the other tribes had built, and where they could conſult the Lord by Urim and Thummim, if needful; hither they repaired from the ſeveral places around, where their tribes were ſettled; not the whole body of the people, but their heads and repreſentatives: to go up to war againſt them; to conſult about it, and to prepare for it, which they were obliged to do by the law of God, as in the caſe of a city, ſo of a tribe drawn aſide to idolatry; and which they imagined was the caſe of theſe tribes, or at leaſt what they had done had a tendency to apoſtaſy from the true worſhip of God, which they were zealous to defend at the hazard of their lives, and though it ſhould iſſue in an extirpation of one or more of their tribes; ſee Deut. xiii. 12—16.

℣. 13. And the children of Iſrael, &c.] In the land of Canaan: ſent unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, unto the land of Gilead; they were poſſeſſed of, and had now returned unto and dwelt in; hither they ſent an embaſſy to them, to enquire into the truth of what they had heard, and the reaſon of it, before they went to war with them, or proclaimed it, or took any farther ſteps towards it; and which they were obliged to do by the above law, when there was any ſuſpicion of idolatry, and any good ground and reaſon for it, Deut. xiii. 14. and at the head of this deputation was Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt; a man zealous for the Lord of hoſts, and his glory, of which there is an inſtance in Numb. xxv. 7, 11, 13. and ſo a fit perſon to be employed in this affair, who would be faithful, bold and zealous, as well as capable of giving advice and counſel to both parties, if needful.

℣. 14. And with him ten princes, of each chief houſe a prince, throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, &c.] The nine tribes and a half, ſo that the half tribe of Manaſſeh ſent a prince, as well as the whole tribes: and each one was an head of the houſe of their fathers among the thouſands of Iſrael; that is, among the rulers of the thouſands of Iſrael; and ſo the Greek verſion calls them Chiliarchs, rulers of thouſands; for the people were divided into tens, fifties, hundreds, and thouſands, over whom there were diſtinct rulers, Exod. xviii. 25. Now theſe were the chief among them, of the higheſt rank and authority; they were the chief princes, heads of ſeveral tribes, a very honourable deputation this! the ſon of the high-prieſt, and ten princes, the heads of the tribes; theſe were choſen and ſent, partly in honour to their brethren beyond Jordan, and partly that they might carry the greater authority with them, and prevail upon them to hearken to them.

℣. 15. And they came unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, unto the land of Gilead, &c.] The deputation came thither; they either ſent for the chiefs among the two tribes and a half, to meet them at ſome place, or they having a notion of their coming, aſſembled together to receive them, and hear what they had to ſay to them: and they ſpake with them, ſaying; as follows; very probably Phinehas was the mouth of the whole, for there could be but one ſpeaker.

℣. 16. Thus ſaith the whole congregation of the Lord, &c.] By whom they were ſent, and whom they repreſented; and they don't call them the congregation of Iſrael, but of the Lord, becauſe it was not on a civil but religious account they were come, and not to plead their own cauſe, but the cauſe of God; and not ſo much to ſhew a concern for their own honour and intereſt, as for the glory of God: what treſpaſs is this that ye have committed againſt the God of Iſrael; they took it for granted, that they had committed a ſin, and that ſo great, they were not able to expreſs the greatgreatneſs of it in all its aggravated circumſtances, and plainly ſuggeſt it was idolatry; which was too premature, when as yet they had not enquired into it; but their zeal for God, and his honour, hurried them into this haſty ſtep: to turn away this day from following the Lord; they intimate, that they had begun a revolt from the worſhip of God, which is aggravated by their falling into it ſo ſoon, having received ſo many favours from God, and had ſo lately ſeen ſuch wonderful appearances of his power and goodneſs, and had juſt had ſuch excellent inſtructions, exhortations and cautions given them by Joſhua, when he diſmiſſed them: in that ye have built you an altar; which they ſuppoſed was to offer ſacrifices upon; whereas there was to be but one altar, and that in the place which the Lord ſhould chuſe to put his name in, and which he had now choſen, where all ſacrifices were to be brought and offered up; ſee Exod. xx. 24. Lev. xvii. 3, 4. Deut. xii. 5, 6: that ye might rebel this day againſt the Lord? againſt the commandment of the Lord expreſſed in the places referred to, which they charge with rebellion againſt himſelf, a very high and heavy charge indeed! but they ſhould firſt have enquired whether they were guilty of the treſpaſs, or with what view they had built the altar, whether for ſacrifice, or for ſome other uſe; but they took it for granted it was for ſacrifice.

℣. 17. Is the iniquity of Peor too little for us, &c.] The worſhipping of that idol, when in the plains of Moab; the hiſtory of which, ſee in Numb. xxv. 2, 3. was, that ſo ſmall a ſin, that another muſt be added to it, or a greater committed? ſince building an altar ſeemed deſigned not for a ſingle action of idolatrous worſhip, but for the continuance of it, whereas the ſin of Peor was only committed at one time, and not continued in: from which we are not cleanſed until this day; not cleared from the ſhame and diſgrace of it, or the guilt of it expiated or removed; but it might be expected, as in the caſe of the golden calf, that God would ſtill at times puniſh for it, when provoked by new crimes; or the ſenſe is, that there were thoſe among them that were infected with the ſame contagion, and whoſe inclinations were to commit the ſame, or like ſin of idolatry: although there was a plague in the congregation of the Lord; of which 24,000 died, Numb. xxv. 9.

℣. 18. But that you muſt turn away this day from following the Lord? &c.] From the worſhip of the Lord, as the Targum, and ſo on ℣. 16. not content with the former tranſgreſſion, but muſt add this revolt unto it, and at a time which ſadly aggravates it: and it will be, that ſeeing ye rebel to-day againſt the Lord; againſt the Word of the Lord, as the Targum, and ſo on ℣. 16. that to-morrow he will be wroth with the whole congregation; or in a little time, if a ſtop is not put to this revolt, the whole body of the people will ſuffer for it: here they expreſs a concern for the whole nation of Iſrael, as well as for the glory of God; for ſometimes the whole congregation has been charged with the ſins of individuals, and puniſhed for it, as a caſe after-mentioned ſhews; ſee ch. vii. 1, 5.

℣. 19. Notwithſtanding, if the land of your poſſeſſion be unclean, &c.] That is, if it was judged to be ſo by them, becauſe not cleanſed from the ſins of the former inhabitants of it by ſacrifice, or becauſe there was no altar in it to offer up ſacrifice for the expiation of ſin: then paſs ye over unto the land of the poſſeſſion of the Lord, wherein the Lord's tabernacle dwelleth; if you repent of the choice you have made of a country to dwell in, quit it, and come over into the land of Canaan, which the Lord has taken poſſeſſion of, and reſidence in, and where his tabernacle is fixed, the place of his preſence and worſhip, and where an altar is erected to ſacrifice upon: and take poſſeſſion among us; they were willing to quit poſſeſſion of their own, and make room for them in their ſeveral tribes, and even though they ſtraitened themſelves, and parted with much of their eſtates, rather than they ſhould make a ſchiſm, or go into idolatrous practices; which was a brave, noble ſpirit indeed, and ſhewed their great concern for the honour and glory of God, and his worſhip, and their love to their brethren, and affectionate regard for their ſpiritual welfare, above their own private, perſonal and temporal good: but rebel not againſt the Lord; the Word of the Lord, as the Targum, either Chriſt the eſſential Word, the angel of Jehovah's preſence, or his word of command: nor rebel againſt us; by breaking off from us, and ſetting up another religion or form of worſhip: in building you an alar beſide the altar of the Lord our God; which ought to be common to both, and no other to be ſet up againſt it, or uſed beſide it.

℣. 20. Did not Achan the ſon of Zerah, &c.] One that deſcended from Zerah the ſon of Judah, ch. vii. 18. commit a treſpaſs in the accurſed thing; in taking what was devoted to ſacred uſes: and wrath fell on all the congregation? and which was what was feared now; and this inſtance is brought to ſhew, that ſuch fears were not groundleſs: and that man periſhed not alone in his iniquity; which ſeems to confirm the notion of thoſe who think that his children ſuffered with him; though it may be obſerved, that it was through his ſin that 36 men were ſlain by the men of Ai, ch. vii. 5.

℣. 21. Then the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, anſwered, &c.] By ſome perſon whom they appointed to deliver the anſwer in their name: and ſaid unto the heads of the thouſands of Iſrael; who were over thoſe that were rulers of the thouſands of Iſrael, perſons of greater authority than they, being princes of the reſpective tribes to which they belonged.

℣. 22. The Lord God of gods, the Lord God of gods, &c.] They firſt ſet out in their anſwer with aſſerting their firm belief of Jehovah, the God of Iſrael, being the ſupreme God, God over all; over all that are called gods, whether angels, of whom Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; or civil magiſtrates and judges of the earth, who bare the ſame name; nor are the gods of the Gentiles to be ſpoken of with Jehovah, the God of Iſrael, who is the ſupreme Being, ſelf-exiſtent, the Being of beings, eternal and immutable, all which is contained in his name Jehovah; now this is repeated by them for the confirmation of their faith in this great article of it, and ſhews the ſteadineſs of it, and to expreſs their earneſt and vehement affection for this truth, and to clear themſelves from any imputation of idolatry, or thought of it, or doing any thing that might have a tendency to it: he knoweth; he is the omniſcient God, the ſearcher of the hearts, and the trier of the reins of the children of men; he knows our cordial belief of this truth, the integrity of our hearts, the intention of our minds, that we never had a thought in us of departing from his worſhip, and of ſetting up an altar beſide his in oppoſition to it: and Iſrael he ſhall know; our brethren the Iſraelites that dwell in in the land of Canaan, whose representatives you are, shall know, not only by our present declaration, but by our future conduct, and strict adherence to the pure worship of God in time to come, that it was never our view by what we have done to depart from it: if it be in rebellion, or if in transgression against the Lord; with a design to rebel against his word, and transgress his command: save us not this day; this is said with respect to God, and as an apostrophe to him, as Jarchi, Kimchi and Abarbinel observe; as expressing their desire to have no mercy shewn them by him, but that vengeance might be taken on them by him, to whom all things were naked and open, and who full well knew whether they were guilty or not; or else the address is to Phinehas, and the princes, that they would rise up and put them to death by sword, if this appeared to be the case; or that all the other tribes would rise up, and make war against them, and cut them off with the edge of the sword, and not spare them.

℣. 23. That we have built us an altar, to turn from following the Lord, &c.] That is, we desire, as we deserve, to be cut to pieces, and not saved, if it should appear to be our view in building this altar, to revolt from the pure worship of God: or if to offer thereon burnt-offering, or meat-offering, or if to offer peace-offerings; even to the Lord himself: they declare that as they had no design to apostatize from God, and worship idols, so it was not their intention to offer any kind of sacrifice on the altar they had built, even to the Lord himself; and they take notice of every kind of offering, to remove every charge of this sort from them, and to purge themselves of every imputation of this nature: then the Lord himself require it; seek it out, who is the omniscient God, and revenge it, who is the Lord God almighty, just and true.

℣. 24. And if we have not rather done it for fear of this thing, &c.] So far they suggest were they from doing this, in order to turn from the pure worship of God, and introduce idolatrous worship, that it was to guard against every thing of that kind for the future; and through fear of it, and anxiety and distress of mind, lest some time or another there should be any temptation to it in their posterity, had they built this altar: saying, in time to come your children might speak unto our children; or to-morrow [m], in a short time after your heads, and ours, are laid in the grave, your posterity will accost us: saying, what have you to do with the Lord God of Israel? you are aliens and strangers from the commonwealth of Israel, live in a foreign land, and not in the land of Canaan; are separated from us by the river Jordan, are a different people from us, and have nothing to do with the tabernacle of the Lord, and the service of it, or with the altar of the Lord, to offer sacrifice on it. Now as they returned to their own country, or when got there, such anxious thoughts and fears rose up in their minds, which they communicated to one another, and thought of this expedient to prevent what would be so fatal to their posterity. The Targum is, "you have no part in the Word of the Lord God of Israel;" see John xiii. 8.

℣. 25. For the Lord hath made Jordan a border between us and you, &c.] And by it separated them from them, as if they were a distinct people; not that this was really the case, but so they feared it would be represented in time to come; for though Jordan was the border of the land of Canaan, strictly so called, eastward, Numb. xxxiv. 12. yet it did not exclude the land of the two tribes and a half from being part of the land of promise; for the Amorites, which before inhabited it, and were driven out of it, were Canaanites, and were one part of the people, whose land the Lord promised to Abraham, Gen. xv. 18—21. ye children of Reuben, and children of Gad, have no part in the Lord; in his covenant and promises, in his worship, word and ordinances; these are things you have nothing to do with, being separated from us his peculiar people; or have no part in the Word of the Lord, as the Targum, the promised Messiah, being without, or separated from him, as the Gentiles are said to be, Eph. ii. 12. so shall your children make our children cease from fearing the Lord; from worshipping the Lord, the fear of the Lord being often put for the whole worship of God, external and internal, Eccl. xii. 13. by behaving in the above manner towards them, they would be the cause and occasion of their apostacy from the true God, and it would be in effect to say to them, go serve other gods, 1 Sam. xxvi. 19.

℣. 26. Therefore we said, &c.] One to another, in order to prevent the apostacy of our children from God, their departure from his worship, and going into idolatry: let us now prepare to build us an altar; get materials ready, and set about it instantly, without any delay, whilst the thing dwells upon our minds: not for burnt-offering, nor for sacrifice; not for offerings of any kind required by the law, neither for sin-offerings nor trespass-offerings, nor any other not named.

℣. 27. But that it may be a witness between us and you, and our generations after us, &c.] That we are one people, worship one God, and serve at one altar, of which this built was a resemblance, and would put them in mind of it: that we might do the service of the Lord before him; in the tabernacle, and at the altar, in the place where he had chosen to put his name and dwell: with our burnt-offerings, and with our sacrifices, and with our peace-offerings; to be brought at stated times, or as occasion required: that your children may not say to our children in time to come, ye have no part in the Lord; nor right to his altar, and so forbid them offering their sacrifices on it; or "have no part in the Word of the Lord," as the Targum; the Messiah, whose sacrifice was typified by the sacrifices of the legal dispensation, and all such who offered theirs in the faith of that, had a part in it, and their sins were expiated by it.

℣. 28. Therefore said we, &c.] To prevent any such usage of our children, and that they might have a ready answer to give: that it shall be when they should so say unto us, or to our generations in time to come; as above suggested, that they were a separate people from them, and had no interest in the Lord, nor right to his altar, nor concern in his worship: that we may say again; in reply, that is, our posterity: behold, the pattern of the altar of the Lord, which our fathers made; which exactly agrees with the Mosaic altar, and which they could never have framed in so exact a manner, if they had not seen it, and served at it; wherefore this was a plain proof of their being originally worshippers of the same God, partakers of the same altar, and were in the faith, fellowship aud communion of Israel. According to Gussetius [n], this was not the altar the Reubenites, &c. built, which the children of Israel would be bid to behold, but the Mosaic altar at the tabernacle bernacle or temple, which was the archetype and exemplar, according to which, that of the Reubenites was formed; and therefore say not, come and behold, but behold the altar present before them, that of Moses, and acknowledge that to be a type and exemplar, which they had related, and so confess it to be a testimony of their mutual fellowship: and what they had made in imitation of it, which exactly answered to it, was not for burnt-offerings, nor for sacrifices; of any sort, that was not the intention of erecting it: but it is a witness between us and you; that we worship the same God, and are of the same faith and fellowship.

℣. 29. God forbid that we should rebel against the Lord, &c.] Against the command of the Lord, who ordered one altar to be made, to which all sacrifices were to be brought from the several parts of the land of Israel, and there to be offered on it; or "against the Word of the Lord," as the Targum, Christ typified both by the altar and the sacrifices on it; and who is but one, one priest, one sacrifice, one altar, one mediator and saviour: and turn this day from following the Lord; apostatize from him, and from his worship: to build an altar for burnt-offerings, for meat-offerings, or for sacrifices; which was never our intention, or ever entered into our hearts to erect one for such a purpose: besides the altar of the Lord our God, that is before his tabernacle; it standing in the court of the tabernacle before the holy place.

℣. 30. And when Phinehas the priest, &c.] For so he was, being the son of Eleazar the high-priest, and so the word priest, ℣. 13. is to be joined, not to Eleazar but to Phinehas: and the princes of the congregation; the ten princes, who were sent by the congregation of Israel, one out of each tribe: and heads out of the thousands of Israel; these are the same with the princes, and this belongs to their title, who were heads of the Chiliarchs, or those who were rulers of thousands in Israel: which were with him; with Phinehas, who were joined with him in the embassy, and now present with him: heard the words that the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the children of Manasseh spake; in defence of themselves, explaining the meaning and design of the altar they had built: it pleased them; they were not only satisfied with their answer, but highly delighted with what they had done, as tending to preserve the common faith and fellowship of Israel.

℣. 31. And Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, &c.] As the mouth of the deputation, and in their name: said unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the children of Manasseh; the representatives of them assembled together on this occasion: this day we perceive that the Lord is among us; his Shekinah, as the Targum; his powerful presence in preserving their brethren from committing a trespass, as they feared; his gracious presence smiling upon them; and as the God of peace and order, and not of confusion, uniting and cementing their hearts in love to one another: because ye have not committed this trespass against the Lord; which they were fearful and jealous of they had, but they found that the Lord had been good and gracious in preserving them from it: now ye have delivered the children of Israel out of the hand of the Lord; into which they would have fallen, had that been the case, and would have felt the effects of the divine resentment, but now they were secure from them.

℣. 32. And Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, and the princes, &c.] Being fully satisfied with the relation of things that had been given them, and having taken their leave of the assembly: returned from the children of Reuben, and from the children of Gad; the Greek version adds, and from the half tribe of Manasseh; which though not in the Hebrew text, is undoubtedly meant: out of the land of Gilead; which though only a part of the country these tribes inhabited, is put for the whole, and it is not improbable that the assembly might be held in it: unto the land of Canaan, to the children of Israel; the rest of the children of Israel who dwelt in the land of Canaan, properly so called: and brought them word again; reported the whole affair, related all that had passed, and acquainted them with the intention and design of their brethren erecting the altar, and what had been the issue of their embassy to them.

℣. 33. And the thing pleased the children of Israel, &c.] They were quite satisfied with the account of things, and were pleased and delighted with what their brethren, the other two tribes, had done: and the children of Israel blessed God; returned thanks to him, that there was no trespass committed against him, and no schism like to be made among them, nor any wrath to come upon them: and did not intend to go up against them in battle; for though upon first hearing of their building an altar, which they supposed was for idolatry, they had intended to make war against them, but now understanding the design of that building, they laid aside all thoughts of that kind: to destroy the land wherein the children of Reuben and Gad dwelt; which they judged by the law in Deut. xiii. 12. they were obliged to do. The Greek version here adds also, and the half tribe of Manasseh, and renders the last clause, and they dwelt in it; continued to dwell in it undisturbed by their brethren.

℣. 34. And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, called the altar Ed, &c.] Which signifies a witness; they caused such an inscription to be put upon it, or this word to be engraved on it, that so the intention of erecting it might be known in future time; that it was not for sacrifice, but to be a testimony of their being one with their brethren on the other side Jordan, in worship, faith and fellowship: for it shall be a witness between us, that the Lord is God; is the one God, the God of them both, of all Israel, whether on the one or the other side of Jordan; to be worshipped by them in one and the same manner, and their sacrifices to be offered to him on his altar before the tabernacle.

CHAP. XXIII.

JOSHUA being old, convenes the ſtates of Iſrael a little before his death, ℣. 1, 2. and in his addreſs to them obſerves what God had done for them, and would do, ℣. 3, 4, 5. and exhorts them to keep the commandments of God, and cleave to him, and not to mix with the Gentiles, and join with them in idolatrous practices, and then it would be well with them, ℣. 6—11. but otherwiſe ſhould they join with them, and depart from the Lord, who had ſo faithfully and punctually performed every good thing he had promiſed them, they might expect all evils and calamities, utter ruin and deſtruction to befal them, ℣. 12—16.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs a long time after, &c.] Or after many days °, that is, years: that the Lord had given reſt unto Iſrael from all their enemies round about; the greateſt part of the land of Canaan was ſubdued, the whole divided by lot to the tribes of Iſrael, and they quietly ſettled in the reſpective portions aſſigned them, the Canaanites that remained giving them no diſturbance, in which ſtate of reſt and peace they had now been for ſome years; and this may be reaſonably ſuppoſed to be the laſt year of the life of Joſhua, ſee ℣. 14. that Joſhua waxed old and ſtricken in age; and became feeble and decrepit, and greatly declined; for though he was ten years younger than Moſes when he died, yet not ſo vigorous, ſtrong and robuſt as he, but was preſſed and bore down with the infirmities of age.

℣. 2. And Joſhua called for all Iſrael, &c.] Summoned them together, whether at Timnath-ſerah, his own city, he being old and infirm, and not able to go elſewhere; or whether at Shechem, where it is plain they were afterwards convened, ch. xxiv. 1. or whether rather at Shiloh, where the tabernacle was, is not certain; and by all Iſrael cannot be meant the whole body of the people, unleſs it can be thought to be at one of the feaſts, when all the males in Iſrael appeared before the Lord; though this ſeems to be not a ſtated convocation, but occaſionally made, and to be underſtood of the repreſentatives of the people called together, as explained in the following clauſe: and for their elders, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers; the firſt and is ſupplied, and another word or words may be ſupplied, as even, or that is, or the like, and ſo explanative of all Iſrael, namely their elders, both in age and office, eſpecially the latter, the ſeventy elders, or who compoſed what in after-times was called the great Sanhedrim; and the heads of their tribes, the chief princes of every tribe; and their judges in their ſeveral cities, who heard and tried cauſes, and adminiſtred juſtice and judgment to the people; and their officers, who attended on them to execute the judgment they pronounced: and ſaid unto them, I am old and ſtricken in age; which he obſerves as a reaſon of his calling them together to give them ſome advice and inſtructions before his death, and in order to command greater reverence of him, and reſpect to him, and to excite attention to what he had to ſay to them.

℣. 3. And ye have ſeen all that the Lord your God hath done unto all thoſe nations becauſe of you, &c.] How he had deſtroyed them, and driven them out of their habitations to make room for them, meaning the ſeven nations of the Canaanites: for the Lord your God is he that hath fought for you; Joſhua does not attribute any of the things that were done to his own valour, nor theirs, nor ſo much as mentions himſelf or them as inſtruments, but wholly aſcribes all to the Lord, who fought their battles for them, and conquered their enemies, and ſubdued them under them; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord fought for you;" the captain of the hoſt of the Lord, ch. v. 14, 15.

℣. 4. Behold, I have divided to you by lot theſe nations that remain, &c.] Who are unſubdued, not yet conquered, as well as thoſe that are to be an inheritance for your tribes; to be poſſeſſed by them and their children for ever: from Jordan, with all the nations I have cut off, even unto the great ſea weſtward; the phraſe with all the nations I have cut off, is to be read in connexion with thoſe nations that remain; both thoſe that were cut off by the ſword of Joſhua, and thoſe that remained unconquered, being divided by lot to the tribes of Iſrael; and which reached from Jordan eaſtward, where Joſhua and Iſrael entered into the land, to the Mediterranean ſea, called the great ſea in compariſon of little ones in Canaan, as the dead ſea, and the ſea of Tiberias; and which great ſea lay weſt to the land of Iſrael, or where the ſun ſets, as the phraſe in the Hebrew text is.

℣. 5. And the Lord your God he ſhall expel them from before you, &c.] That is, ſuch of them as yet remained among them: and drive them from out of your ſight; the ſame thing expreſſed by different words, for the confirmation of it: and ye ſhall poſſeſs their land, as the Lord your God hath promiſed unto you; all which is to be underſtood on condition of their good behaviour towards the Lord, and obedience to his commands; by which tenure they held the poſſeſſion of the land when put into it, and for their diſobedience did not poſſeſs the whole.

℣. 6. Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moſes, &c.] To obſerve which required ſpiritual ſtrength, fortitude of mind, a holy courage, a firm and fixed reſolution, and particularly to deſtroy the Canaanites required in that book, and to abſtain from all communion and fellowſhip with them: that ye turn not aſide therefrom, to the right hand or the left; ſee the note on ch. i. 7.

℣. 7. That ye come not among theſe nations, theſe that remain among you, &c.] That remained unſubdued, or that were ſuffered to dwell among them, being tributaries to them; with theſe they were not to converſe freely and familiarly, nor to carry on trade and commerce with them, nor enter into any alliances or marriages with them, and not even attend any of their feaſts, and eſpecially their idolatrous ones: neither make mention of the name of their gods; not in common converſation, and ſtill leſs in any religious matters; never with any reverence of them, or in any reſpectable manner; but always with indignation and contempt, calling; calling them dunghil-gods and the like, as they often are in ſcripture: nor cauſe to ſwear by them; neither ſwear by them themſelves, nor cauſe others to ſwear by them, as Abarbinel; or a man his neighbour, as Kimchi; no, not a Gentile, as Ben Melech; ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [p], "he that vows in the name of an idol, and confirms in his name, (which Eartenora interprets, ſwears by his name) tranſgreſſes a negative precept." Maimonides [q] alſo ſays, "he that vows in the name of an idol, and ſwears by it, is to be beaten—he that ſwears by it himſelf, or cauſes a Gentile to ſwear by it; for it is forbidden to cauſe a Gentile to ſwear by his fear (or idol) and even to cauſe him to make mention of it, though not in the way of an oath, it is forbidden:" neither ſerve them; by offering any ſacrifice or incenſe to them, or by praying to them, or offering them praiſes on any account, or by performing any religious ſervice in any inſtance or form whatever: nor bow yourſelves unto them; give them any adoration or worſhip, external or internal.

℣. 8. But cleave unto the Lord your God, &c.] To his word, worſhip, and ordinances; externally, by cloſe adherence to them, and ſtrict obſervation of them; and internally, by ſtrong affection to him, hope, truſt, and confidence in him, expectation of all good things from him, and conſtant application to him for help in all times of need, and a fixed dependence on him: as ye have done unto this day; that is, ſince they came into the land of Canaan, and had been under the government of Joſhua; for otherwiſe, while in the wilderneſs, they frequently revolted from God, and murmured againſt him; and this is to be underſtood not of individuals, who doubtleſs were guilty of various failings and ſins: but of the whole body, and with reſpect to any notorious offence, particularly idolatry, which they had not fallen into ſince they came into the land of Canaan, and had very lately ſhewn great zeal againſt it; not only the tribes on this ſide, but thoſe on the other ſide Jordan, as the preceding chapter largely relates.

℣. 9. For the Lord hath driven out before you great nations and ſtrong, &c.] Eſpecially as they were reckoned in thoſe times, before any great monarchies had exiſted, as did afterwards; and indeed theſe were, conſidering the land they inhabited, very numerous and populous, and were very ſtout and able-bodied men, and ſome of a gigantic ſtature; and all dwelt in ſtrong fortified cities, and were able to bring out large armies into the field, with chariots of iron, ſo that they were very formidable; but notwithſtanding all this, the Lord drove them out of their ſtrong holds, and put Iſrael into the poſſeſſion of them, and of their land: but as for you, no man hath been able to ſtand before you unto this day; that is, of thoſe that came out againſt them, and fought with them; theſe were all to a man cut off by them, or fled before them, and became tributaries to them; otherwiſe there were many, who as yet were not expelled by them; this the Lord had promiſed, and now had fulfilled, Deut. xi. 25. Joſh. i. 5.

℣. 10. One man of you ſhall chaſe a thouſand, &c.] Here Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve, that the future tenſe is put for the paſt, and that the ſenſe is, one of them had chaſed a thouſand in their war with the Canaanites; but Abarbinel diſapproves of this obſervation, and thinks it refers to time to come, what they ſhould be able to do if they cleaved unto the Lord; this was fulfilled in Samſon, Judg. xv. 15. ſuch a promiſe was made, Lev. xxvi. 8. for the Lord your God he it is that fighteth for you; and no wonder then that a thouſand ſhould be put to flight by one man; the Targum interprets it of the Word of the Lord, as in ℣. 3. as he hath promiſed you; ſee Deut. i. 30. and iii. 22.

℣. 11. Take good heed therefore unto yourſelves, &c.] To be upon their guard, and to be watchful, were very neceſſary to them, that they might not be enſnared by the Canaanites, and drawn aſide by them into idolatry, and ſo apoſtatize from the Lord and his worſhip, ſince their temptations would be many: that ye love the Lord your God; which would the moſt ſtrongly influence and engage them to ſerve and worſhip the Lord, and obey his commands, and be the beſt preſervative againſt idolatry and falſe worſhip.

℣. 12. Elſe if ye do in any wiſe go back, &c.] From the Lord and his worſhip, from his word and ordinances: and cleave unto the remnant of theſe nations, even thoſe that remain among you; in cities not taken, or in ſeveral which the Philiſtines were in poſſeſſion of, or lived among them as tributaries to them, if they ſhould take to them, and be free and familiar with them, which may lead on to nearer connexions in civil and religious matters: and ſhall make marriages with them; marry their daughters to the ſons of Canaanites, or admit the daughters of Canaanites to be married to their ſons: and go in unto them, and they to you; which is expreſſive of the conſummation of marriage, and of the performance of the conjugal duty.

℣. 13. Know for a certainty, that the Lord your God will no more drive out any of theſe nations from before you, &c.] Or, knowing ye ſhall know [r]; or know ye; this may be taken for granted, or the fulleſt proof, and cleareſt demonſtration, and ſtrongeſt aſſurance will be given of it, that in caſe of ſuch bad conduct and diſobedience to the will of God, no more of the nations of the Canaanites will be driven out of the cities in which they are; but they ſhall be ſnares and traps unto you; who by their bad examples would draw them both to idolatry and ſuperſtitious worſhip, and into all irreligion, profaneneſs, and immorality, as they did Pſ. cvi. 35—39. and ſcourges in your ſides; who either by enſnaring them, would get an advantage over them, and diſtreſs them in their perſons, families, and eſtates; or would be the means of the Lord's correcting and chaſtiſing them with the rod and ſtripes of men, for the iniquities theſe would draw them into; the alluſion is to ſcourges and laſhes laid on the ſides of men, or to goads with which beaſts are puſhed on their ſides and driven: and thorns in your eyes; very troubleſome and diſtreſſing; for even a mote in the eye is very afflicting, and much more a thorn; ſee the note on Numb. xxxiii. 55. Jarchi interprets this word by camps ſurrounding them, as ſhields do the bodies of men, and which is approved of by Guſſetius [s]: until ye periſh from off this good land, which the Lord your God hath given you; by ſword, famine, peſtilence, or captivity, which has been their caſe.

℣. 14. And behold, this day I am going the way of all the earth, &c.] That is, about to dye; not that preciſe day, but in a ſhort time, of which the daily increaſing infirmities of old age gave him notice.

tice. Death is a journey from this world to another, a man's going to his long home, a path trodden by all men, and but once [t]; a way in which all men without exception muſt and do walk, and even the beſt as well as the greateſt of men, ſuch as Joſhua; no man is exempted from death, be he ever ſo great or good, ever ſo wiſe and knowing, ever ſo holy or ſo uſeful; ſee 1 Kings ii. 2. and ye know in all your hearts, and in all your ſouls; in their conſciences; it was a glaring truth which none could deny; it had a teſtimony in every man's breaſt: that not one thing hath failed of all the good things, which the Lord your God hath ſpoken concerning you; particularly concerning the good land, and the Lord's bringing them into it, removing the old inhabitants, and ſettling them in their room, and putting them in poſſeſſion of all temporal good things and ſpiritual privileges, as the word and ordinances: all are come to paſs unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof; ſee ch. xxi. 45.

℣. 15. Therefore it ſhall come to paſs, that as all the good things are come upon you, which the Lord hath promiſed you, &c.] Of which there was full proof, and it could not be denied: ſo ſhall the Lord bring upon you all evil things; calamities and diſtreſſes, by his ſore judgments of famine, ſword, peſtilence, evil beaſts, and captivity in caſe of diſobedience to his commands: until he have deſtroyed you from off this good land which the Lord your God hath given you; for as he is faithful to his promiſes, ſo to his threatenings; and from his punctual performance of the one, may be argued and expected the ſure fulfilment of the other, and which has been abundantly verified in that people; ſee the notes on Lev. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii.

℣. 16. When ye have tranſgreſſed the covenant of the Lord your God, which he commanded you, &c.] The law ſo called, and the ſeveral precepts of it, particularly thoſe which relate to the faith and worſhip of the one only true God; ſee Exod. xxiv. 7, 8. and have gone and ſerved other gods, and have bowed down yourſelves unto them; been guilty of idolatry, of having and worſhipping other gods, which are no gods, with or beſides the God of Iſrael; ſee ℣. 7. then ſhall the anger of the Lord be kindled againſt you; nothing being more provoking to him than idolatry, he being a jealous God of his honour and worſhip: and ye ſhall periſh quickly from off the good land which he hath given unto you; as they did at the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, and at the laſt deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans.

CHAP. XXIV.

THIS chapter gives us an account of another ſummons of the tribes of Iſrael by Joſhua, who obeyed it, and preſented themſelves before the Lord at Shechem, ℣. 1. when Joſhua in the name of the Lord rehearſed to them the many great and good things the Lord had done for them, from the time of their anceſtor Abraham to that day, ℣. 2—13. and then exhorted them to fear and ſerve the Lord, and reject idols, ℣. 14. and put them upon making their choice, whether they would ſerve the true God, or the gods of the Canaanites; and they, chuſing the former, he adviſed them to abide by their choice, ℣. 15—24. and made a covenant with them to that purpoſe, and then diſmiſſed them, ℣. 25—28. and the chapter is concluded with an account of the death and burial of Joſhua and Eleazar, and of the interment of the bones of Joſeph, ℣. 29—33.

℣. 1. And Joſhua gathered all the tribes of Iſrael to Shechem, &c.] The nine tribes and a half, not all the individuals of them, but the chief among them, their repreſentatives, as afterwards explained, whom he gathered together a ſecond time, being willing, as long as he was among them, to improve his time for their ſpiritual as well as civil good; to impreſs their minds with a ſenſe of religion, and to ſtrengthen, enlarge, and enforce the exhortations he had given them to ſerve the Lord; and Abarbinel thinks he gathered them together again, becauſe before they returned him no anſwer, and therefore he determined now to put ſuch queſtions to them, as would oblige them to give one, as they did, and which iſſued in making a covenant with them; the place where they aſſembled was Shechem, which ſome take to be Shiloh, becauſe of what is ſaid ℣. 26. that being as they ſay in the fields of Shechem; which is not likely, ſince Shiloh, as Jerom ſays [u], was ten miles from Neapolis, or Shechem. This place was choſen becauſe neareſt to Joſhua, who was now old and infirm, and unfit to travel; and the rather becauſe it was the place where the Lord firſt appeared to Abraham, when he brought him into the land of Canaan, and where he made a promiſe of giving the land to his ſeed, and where Abraham built an altar to him, Gen. xii. 6, 7. where alſo Jacob pitched his tent when he came from Padan-aram, bought a parcel of a field, and erected an altar to the Lord, Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19, 20. and where Joſhua alſo repeated the law to, and renewed the covenant with the children of Iſrael, quickly after their coming into the land of Canaan, for Ebal and Gerizzim were near to Shechem, ch. viii. 30—35. and called for the elders of Iſrael, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers; ſee the note on ch. xxiii. 2. and they preſented themſelves before God; Kimchi and Abarbinel are of opinion, that the ark was fetched from the tabernacle at Shiloh, and brought hither on this occaſion, which was the ſymbol of the divine preſence; and therefore the place becoming ſacred thereby is called the ſanctuary of the Lord, and certain it is that here was the book of the law of Moſes, ℣. 26. which was put on the ſide of the ark, Deut. xxxi. 26.

℣. 2. And Joſhua ſaid unto all the people, &c.] Then preſent, or to all Iſrael by their repreſentatives: thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael; he ſpoke to them in the name of the Lord, as the prophet did, being himſelf a prophet, and at this time under a divine impulſe, and ſpirit of prophecy. According to an Arabic writer [w] the angel of God appeared in the form of a man, and with a loud voice delivered the following, though they are expreſſed by by him in a different manner; perhaps he means the captain of the Lord's hoft, ch. xv. 13, 14. and which is not unlikely: your fathers dwelt on the other fide of the flood in old time; on the other fide the river Euphrates; fo the Targum, "beyond Perat;" i. e. Euphrates; in Mefopotamia and Chaldea; meaning not the remoteft of their anceftors, Noah and Shem, but the more near, and who are expreffly named: even Terah the father of Abraham, and the father of Nachor; the Ifraelites fprung from Terah, in the line of Abraham, on the father's fide, and from him in the line of Nachor on the mother's fide, Rebekah, Leah, and Rachel being of Nachor's family: and they ferved other gods; befides the true God, ftrange gods which were no gods: idols; the idols of the people, as the Targum; fo did Terah, Abraham, and Nachor; fee the notes on Gen. xi. 26, 28. and xii. 1.

℣. 3. And I took your father Abraham from the other fide of the flood, &c.] The river Euphrates, as before: or your father, to wit Abraham, as Noldius [x]; he took him not only in a providential way, and brought him from the other fide of the Euphrates, out of an idolatrous country and family; but he apprehended him by his grace, and called and converted him by it, and brought him to a fpiritual knowledge of himfelf, and of the meffiah that fhould fpring from his feed, and of the covenant of grace, and of the bleffings of it, and of his intereft therein; which was a peculiar and diftinguifhing favour: and led him throughout all the land of Canaan; from the northern to the fouthern part of it; he led him as far as Shechem, where Ifrael was now affembled, and then to Bethel, and ftill onward to the fouth, Gen. xii. 6—9. that he might have a view of the land his pofterity was to inherit, and by treading on it and walking through it, take as it were a kind of poffeffion of it: and multiplied his feed, and gave him Ifaac; he multiplied his feed by Hagar, by whom he had Ifhmael, who begat twelve princes; and by Keturah, from whofe fons feveral nations fprung; fee Gen. xvii. 20. and xxv. 1—4. and by Sarah, who bore him Ifaac in old age, in whom his feed was called; and from whom, in the line of Jacob, fprung the twelve tribes of Ifrael, and which feed may be chiefly meant; and the fenfe is, that he multiplied his pofterity after he had given him Ifaac, and by him a numerous feed; fo Vatablus: Ifhmael is not mentioned, becaufe, as Kimchi obferves, he was born of an handmaid; but Abarbinel thinks only fuch are mentioned, who were born in a miraculous manner, when their parents were barren, as in this and alfo in the next inftance.

℣. 4. And I gave unto Ifaac Jacob and Efau, &c.] When Rebekah was barren, fo that the children appeared the more to be the gift of God; though Efau perhaps is mentioned, for the fake of what follows: and I gave unto Efau mount Seir to poffefs it; that Jacob and his pofterity alone might inherit Canaan, and Efau and his feed make no pretenfion to it: but Jacob and his children went down into Egypt; where they continued many years, and great part of the time in bondage and mifery, which is here taken no notice of; and this was in order to their being brought into the land of Canaan, and that the power and goodnefs of God might be the more confpicuous in it.

℣. 5. I fent Mofes alfo and Aaron, &c.] To demand Ifrael's difmiffion of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and to be the deliverers of them: and I plagued Egypt according to that which I did amongft them; inflicting ten plagues upon them for refufing to let Ifrael go: and afterwards I brought you out; that is, out of Egypt, with an high hand, and ftretched-out arm.

℣. 6. And I brought your fathers out of Egypt, &c.] Which more fully expreffes the fenfe of the laft claufe of the preceding verfe: and you came unto the fea; which refpects fome fenior perfons then prefent; for befides Caleb and Joshua, there were many at this time alive who came to and paffed through the Red-fea, at their coming out of Egypt; for thofe whofe carcafes fell in the wilderneſs, were fuch as were more than twenty years of age, at their coming out from Egypt, and who were the murmurers in the wilderneſs; and it may be reafonably fuppofed, that many of thofe who were under twenty years of age at that time were now living: and the Egyptians purfued after your fathers, with chariots and horfemen, into the Red-fea; of the number of their chariots and horfemen, fee Exod. xiv. 7, 9. with thefe they purfued the Ifraelites, not only unto, but into the Red-fea, following them into it; the reafon of which ftrange action is given in the next verfe.

℣. 7. And when they cried unto the Lord, &c.] That is, the Ifraelites, being in the utmoft diftrefs, the fea before them, Pharaoh's large hoft behind them, and the rocks on each fide of them; fee Exod. xiv. 10. he put darkneſs between you and the Egyptians; the pillar of cloud, the dark fide of which was turned to the Egyptians, and which was the reafon of their following the Ifraelites into the fea; for not being able to fee their way, knew not where they were; fee Exod. xiv. 20. and brought the fea upon them, and covered them; or upon him, and covered him [y]; on Pharaoh, as Kimchi; or on Egypt; that is, the Egyptians; or on every one of them, as Jarchi, none efcaped; fee Exod. xiv. 26, 27, 28. and your eyes have feen what I have done in Egypt; what figns and wonders were wrought there, before they were brought out of it, and what he had done to and upon the Egyptians at the Red-fea; fome then prefent had been eye-witneffes of them: and ye dwelt in the wilderneſs a long feafon; forty years, where they had the law given them, were preferved from many evils and enemies, were fed with manna, and fupplied with the neceffaries of life, were led about and inftructed, and at length brought out of it.

℣. 8. And I brought you into the land of the Amorites, which dwelt on the other fide Jordan, &c.] The kingdom of Sihon and Og: and they fought with you; the two kings of them, and their armies: and I gave them into your hand, that ye might poffefs their land; and which was now poffeffed by the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaffeh: and I deftroyed them from before you; the kings, their forces, and the inhabitants of their countries; the hiftory of which fee in Numb. xxi.

℣. 9. Then Balak the fon of Zippor, the king of Moab arofe, &c.] Being alarmed with what Ifrael had done to the two kings of the Amorites, and by their near approach to the borders of his kingdom: and warred againft Ifrael; he fully deſigned it, and purpofe is put for action, as Kimchi obferves; he prepared for it, proclaimed war, and commenced commenced it, though he did not come to a battle; he made use of stratagems and wiles, and magical arts, to hurt them, and sent for Balaam to curse them, that they both together might smite the Israelites, and drive them out of the land, Numb. xxii. 6. so his fighting is interpreted by the next clause: and sent and called Balaam the son of Beor to curse you; by which means he hoped to prevail in battle, and get the victory over them; but not being able to bring this about, durst not engage in battle with them.

℣. 10. But I would not hearken unto Balaam, &c.] Who was very solicitous to get leave of the Lord to curse Israel, which he knew he could not do without; he had a good-will to it, but could not accomplish it: therefore he blessed you still; went on blessing Israel to the last, when Balak hoped every time he would have cursed them; and Balaam himself was very desirous of doing it, but could not, being over-ruled by the Lord, and under his restraint; which shews his power over evil spirits, and their agents: so I delivered you out of his hands; both out of the hand of Balak, who was intimidated from bringing his forces against them, and out of the hand of Balaam, who was not suffered to curse them.

℣. 11. And ye went over Jordan, &c.] In a miraculous manner, the waters parting to make way for the host of Israel: and came unto Jericho; the first city of any bigness and strength in the land, which was about seven or eight miles from Jordan; see the note on Numb. xxii. 1. and the men of Jericho fought against you; by endeavouring to intercept their spies, and cut them off; by shutting up the gates of their city against Israel; and it may be throwing darts, arrows, and stones, from off the walls of it at them. Kimchi thinks that some of the great men of Jericho went out from thence, to give notice and warning to the kings of Canaan of the approach of the Israelites, and in the mean time the city was taken; and that these afterwards joined with the kings in fighting against Joshua and the people of Israel: the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Girgashites, the Hivites and the Jebusites; the seven nations of Canaan; this they did at different times, and in different places: and I delivered them into your hand; these nations and their kings.

℣. 12. And I sent the hornet before you, &c.] Of which see the note on Exod. xxiii. 28. which drave them out from before you, even the two kings of the Amorites; who were Sihon and Og, and not only them, and the Amorites under them, but the other nations, Hivites, Hittites, &c. but not with thy sword, nor with thy bow; but by insects of the Lord's sending to them, which, as Kimchi says, so blinded their eyes, that they could not see to fight, and so Israel came upon them, and slew them; in which the hand of the Lord was manifestly seen, and to whose power, and not their own, the destruction of their enemies was to be ascribed.

℣. 13. And I have given you a land for which ye did not labour, &c.] Or, in which [z], by manuring and cultivating it, by dunging, and plowing, and sowing: and cities which ye built not, and ye dwell in them; neither built the houses in them, nor the walls and fortifications about them; in which now they dwelt safely, and at ease, and which had been promised them, as well as what follows; see Deut. vi. 10, 11. of the vineyards and olive-yards which ye planted not, do ye eat; thus far an account is given of the many mercies they had been and were favoured with, and thus far are the words of the Lord by Joshua; next follow the use and improvement Joshua made of them.

℣. 14. Now therefore fear the Lord, &c.] Since he has done such great and good things, fear the Lord and his goodness, fear him for his goodness-sake; nothing so influences fear, or a reverential affection for God, as a sense of his goodness; this engages men sensible of it to fear the Lord, that is, to worship him both internally and externally in the exercise of every grace, and in the performance of every duty: and serve him in sincerity and in truth; in the uprightness of their souls, without hypocrisy and deceit, and according to the truth of his word, and of his mind and will revealed in it, without any mixture of superstition and will-worship, or of the commands and inventions of men: and put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt; that is, express an abhorrence of them, and keep at a distance from them, and shew that you are far from giving in to such idolatries your ancestors were guilty of, when they lived on the other side Euphrates, in Chaldea, or when they were sojourners in Egypt; for it can't be thought that the Israelites were at this time guilty of such gross idolatry, at least openly, since Joshua had bore such a testimony of them, that they had cleaved to the Lord unto that day, ch. xxiii. 8. and their zeal against the two tribes and a half, on suspicion of idolatry, or of going into it, is a proof of it also: and serve ye the Lord; and him only.

℣. 15. And if it seem evil to you to serve the Lord, &c.] Irksome and troublesome, a burden, a weariness, and not a pleasure and delight: chuse you this day whom you will serve; say if you have found a better master, and whose service will be more pleasant and profitable: whether the gods your fathers served, that were on the other side of the flood; the river Euphrates; these may bid fairest for antiquity, but then they were such their fathers had relinquished, and for which undoubtedly they had good reason; and to take up with the worship of these again, was to impeach their wisdom, judgment and good sense: or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell; but then these were such as could not preserve their worshippers in the land, or the Israelites had not dwelt in it, and therefore no dependence could be had upon them for future security. The Amorites are only mentioned, because they were a principal nation, some of which dwelt on one side Jordan, and some on the other, and indeed there were of them in the several parts of the land: but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord; be your choice as it may be: this was the resolution of Joshua, and so far as he knew the sense of his family, or had influence over it, could and did speak for them; and which he observes as an example set for the Israelites to follow after; he full well knowing that the examples of great personages, such as governors, supreme and subordinate, have great influence over those that are under them.

℣. 16. And the people answered and said, &c.] To Joshua, upon his proposal to them, the option he gave them to serve, the Lord or idols, and which was only done to try them: God forbid that we should forsake the Lord, to serve other gods; they speak with the utmost abhorrence of idolatry, as

as a thing far from their hearts and thoughts, as the moſt abominable and execrable, that could be thought or ſpoken of; to forſake the word, and worſhip, and ordinances of God, and ſerve the idols of the Gentiles, ſtrange gods, whether more ancient or more recent, ſuch as their fathers worſhipped in former times, or the inhabitants of the land they now dwelt in, for which they were ſpewed out of it.

℣. 17. For the Lord our God, he it is that brought us up, and our fathers out of the land of Egypt, &c.] When Pharaoh, the king of it, refuſed to let them go, yet he wrought ſuch wonders in it, and inflicted ſuch plagues on it, as obliged Pharaoh and his people to diſmiſs them: from the houſe of bondage; where they were held in the greateſt thraldom and ſlavery, and their lives made bitter and miſerable: and which did thoſe great ſigns in our ſight; meaning the wonders and marvellous things wrought before Pharaoh and his people, and in the ſight of Iſrael, Pſ. lxxviii. 11, 12, 43. though Abarbinel is of opinion, it refers to what had been done in their ſight of late in the land of Canaan, as the dividing of the waters of Jordan, the fall of the walls of Jericho, the ſtanding ſtill of the ſun in Gibeon; but this ſeems not ſo well to agree with what follows: and preſerved us in all the way wherein we went: in the wilderneſs from ſerpents, and ſcorpions, and beaſts of prey, and from all dangers from every quarter: and among all the people through whom we paſſed; thro' whoſe borders they paſſed, as the Edomites, Moabites, and Amorites; though the above writer ſeems to underſtand it of preſervation from the dangers of their enemies in the land of Canaan.

℣. 18. And the Lord drave out from before us all the people, &c.] The ſeven nations of the land of Canaan: even the Amorites which dwelt in the land; the ſtrongſt and moſt populous of the nations, Amos ii. 9. or eſpecially the Amorites, ſo Vatablus; or with the Amorites, as others; thoſe that lived on the other ſide Jordan, over whom Sihon and Og reigned: therefore will we alſo ſerve the Lord; as well as Joſhua and his houſe, for the reaſons before given, becauſe he had done ſuch great and good things for them: for he is our God; that has made and preſerved us, and loaded us with his benefits, and is our Covenant-God, and therefore will we fear and ſerve him.

℣. 19. And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, &c.] To their heads and repreſentatives now aſſembled together, and who had returned to him the preceding anſwer: ye cannot ſerve the Lord; which he ſaid not to diſcourage or deter them from ſerving the Lord, ſince it was his principal veiw, thro' the whole of this converſation with them, to engage them in it, but to obſerve to them their own inability and inſufficiency of themſelves to perform ſervice acceptable to God; and therefore it became them to implore grace and ſtrength from the Lord to aſſiſt them in it, and to depend upon that, and not to lean to and truſt in their own ſtrength; as alſo to obſerve to them, that they could not ſerve him perfectly without any defect and failure in their ſervice, for there is no man that does good and ſins not; and therefore when a man has done all he can, he muſt not depend upon it for his juſtification before God; or conſider it as his juſtifying righteouſneſs, which was what that people were always prone to; ſome ſupply it, "you cannot ſerve the Lord with your images," or along with them, ſo Vatablus: for he is an holy God; perfectly holy, ſo that the beſt of men, and the beſt of their ſervices, are impure and unholy before him, and will not bear to be compared with him, and therefore by no means to be truſted in; and it requires much grace and ſpiritual ſtrength to perform any ſervice that may be acceptable to him thro' Chriſt. In the Hebrew text it is, for the holy ones are he, which may ſerve to illuſtrate and confirm the doctrine of the Trinity of perſons in the unity of the divine Eſſence, or of the three divine holy perſons, holy Father, holy Son, holy Spirit, as the one God, ſee Iſ. vi. 3. he is a jealous God; of his honour and glory, and of his worſhip, in which he will admit of no rival, of no graven images, or any idols to be worſhipped with him, or beſides him; nor will he ſuffer the idol of mens righteouſneſs to be ſet up in the room of, or in oppoſition to the righteouſneſs of God, even no ſervices and works of men, be they ever ſo good, ſince they cannot be perfect before him: he will not forgive your tranſgreſſions, nor your ſins; even the tranſgreſſions and ſins of ſuch that forſake the worſhip and ſervice of him, and fall into idolatry, or who ſeek for juſtification by their own ſervices, theſe are both abominable to him; otherwiſe he is a God pardoning the iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin of all thoſe who ſeek unto him and ſerve him, confeſs their ſins, and renounce their own righteouſneſs; ſee Exod. xxiii. 21.

℣. 20. If you forſake the Lord, and ſerve ſtrange gods, &c.] Joſhua knew the proneneſs of this people to idolatry, and therefore expreſſes his jealouſy of them, that they would not be able to continue in the ſervice of God, and would be apt to be carried away after idols; and therefore to make them the more cautious and watchful, he repreſents to them the danger they were in, and what would befal them ſhould they forſake the Lord they now promiſed to ſerve, and follow after other gods, which their fathers worſhipped before they were called out of their eſtate of heatheniſm, or which the Canaanites or Egyptians worſhipped, whoſe examples they were too ready to imitate: then he will turn and do you hurt; not that there is properly any change in God, either of his counſel or covenant, or of love and affection to his people, but of his providential dealings, or outward manner of acting towards men; or the ſenſe is, he will again do you hurt, bring evils and calamities upon you again and again, frequently as you revolt from him, ſuch as the ſword, peſtilence, famine and captivity, which theſe people after experienced when they fell into idolatry: and conſume you; by theſe his ſore judgments: after that he hath done you good; by bringing you into ſuch a good land, and beſtowing ſo many good things upon you, natural, civil and religious; and yet notwithſtanding being diſobedient to him, and eſpecially in the inſtances mentioned, they are made to expect his reſentment, and the effects of it.

℣. 21. And the people ſaid unto Joſhua, nay, &c.] We will not ſerve ſtrange gods: but we will ſerve the Lord; according to his revealed will, and him only.

℣. 22. And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, &c.] In reply to their anſwer and reſolution: ye are witneſſes againſt yourſelves, that ye have choſen you the Lord God to ſerve him; that is, ſhould they after this choice of him, which they had ſo publickly declared, deſert his ſervice, and go into idolatry, their teſtimony would riſe up againſt them, and they would be ſelf-condemned: and they ſaid, we are witneſſes; ſhould we ever apoſtatize from the Lord and his worſhip, we are content to have this our witneſs produced againſt us.

℣. 23. Now therefore put away, ſaid he, &c.] Which laſt words are rightly ſupplied, for they are the words of Joſhua: the ſtrange gods which are among you; not their private notions and ſecret ſentiments that ſome of them had imbibed in favour of idols, and the worſhip of them, as Ben Gerſom thinks; but, as the Targum expreſſes it, "the idols of the Gentiles;" either ſuch as they had brought out of Egypt, or had found among the plunder of the Canaanites, and had ſecretly retained; or, as others think, their penates, or houſhold gods, they had privately kept and worſhipped, ſuch as thoſe that were in Jacob's family, which he cauſed to be delivered to him, and which he hid under an oak in this place where Iſrael were now aſſembled, Gen. xxxv. 2, 4. and which Joſhua by a prophetic diſcerning ſpirit perceived was now among them: and incline your heart unto the Lord God of Iſrael; to love, fear and ſerve him; that is, pray that your hearts may be inclined thereunto, and make uſe of all means that may tend to direct your hearts to him and his ſervice; ſo the Targum, "to the worſhip of the Lord God of Iſrael."

℣. 24. And the people ſaid unto Joſhua, &c.] A third time, that as by the mouth of two or three witneſſes every thing is confirmed, ſo by three teſtimonies of the ſame perſons: the Lord our God will we ſerve: as they had before declared, and to which they add: and his voice will we obey; or his Word, as the Targum, not only his word of command, but his eſſential Word, the Son of God.

℣. 25. So Joſhua made a covenant with the people that day, &c.] Propoſing to them what was moſt eligible, and their duty to do, and they agreeing to it, this formally conſtituted a covenant, of which they themſelves were both parties and witneſſes: and ſet them a ſtatute, and an ordinance in Shechem; either made this covenant to have the nature of a ſtatute and ordinance binding upon them, or repeated and renewed the laws of Moſes, both moral and ceremonial, which had been delivered at mount Sinai, and now upon this repetition in Schechem, might be called a ſtatute and ordinance there.

℣. 26. And Joſhua wrote theſe words, &c.] Which had paſſed between him and the people: in the book of the law of God; written by Moſes, and which he ordered to be put in the ſide of the ark, and that being now preſent, the book could be eaſily taken out, and theſe words inſerted in it, Deut. xxxi. 26. and took a great ſtone; on which alſo might be inſcribed the ſame words: and ſet it up there under an oak, that was by the ſanctuary of the Lord; or in it[a]; that is, in the field or place where the ark was, which made it ſacred, and upon which account the place was called a ſanctuary, or an holy place; for there is no need to ſay that the tabernacle or ſanctuary itſelf was brought hither, only the ark; and much leſs can it be thought, that an oak ſhould be in it; though it was not improbable, that had it been thither brought, it might have been placed under, or by an oak, as we render it; and it is a tradition of the Jews, which both Jarchi and Kimchi make mention of, that this was the ſame oak under which Jacob hid the ſtrange gods of his family in Shechem, Gen. xxxv. 4. Mr. Mede[b] is of opinion that neither ark nor tabernacle were here, but that by ſanctuary is meant a proſeucha, or place for prayer; ſuch an one as in after-times was near Shechem, as Epiphanius[c] relates, built by the Samaritans in imitation of the Jews; but it is a queſtion, whether there were any ſuch places ſo early as the times of Joſhua, nor is it clear that ſuch are ever called ſanctuaries.

℣. 27. And Joſhua ſaid unto all the people, &c.] The chief of them now gathered together, and who repreſented the whole body: behold, this ſtone ſhall be a witneſs unto us; of the covenant now made, and the agreement entered into, as the heap of ſtones were between Jacob and Laban, Gen. xxxi. 45, 46, 47. for it hath heard all the words of the Lord which he ſpake unto us; this is ſaid by a figure called Proſopopœia, frequent in ſcripture, by which inanimate creatures are repreſented, as hearing, ſeeing and ſpeaking, and may ſignify, that ſhould the Iſraelites break this covenant, and disobey the commands of the Lord they had promiſed to keep, they would be as ſtupid and ſenſeleſs as this ſtone, or more ſo, which would riſe in judgment againſt them. Nachmanides[d], a Jewiſh commentator, interprets this ſtone of the Meſſiah, the ſame as in Gen. xlix. 24. Pſ. cxviii. 22. Zech. iii. 8, 9: it ſhall be therefore a witneſs unto you, leſt ye deny your God; for a memorial and teſtimony to prevent them from going into atheiſm, a denying of the true God, or into apoſtacy from him, and into idolatry and falſe worſhip. The Targum of which is, "behold, this ſtone ſhall be to us as the two tables of ſtone of the covenant; for we made it for a teſtimony; for the words which are written upon it, are the ſum of all the words of the Lord which he ſpake unto us, and it ſhall be unto you for a memorial, and for a teſtimony, leſt ye lie before the Lord."

℣. 28. So Joſhua let the people depart, every man unto his inheritance.] Diſmiſſed them, and took his final leave and farewel of them, dying ſoon after; upon which they returned to the poſſeſſions and inheritances aſſigned by lot to the ſeveral tribes, of which they were the heads, and princes.

℣. 29. And it came to paſs after theſe things, &c.] Some little time after, very probably the ſame year: that Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of the Lord, died, being an hundred and ten years old; he wanted ten years of Moſes his predeceſſor, and juſt the age of Joſeph, from whom he ſprung, being of the tribe of Ephraim.

℣. 30. And they buried him in the border of his inheritance, &c.] In a field belonging to his eſtate; for they buried not in towns and cities in thoſe times. The Greek verſion adds, "and they put into the tomb, in which he was buried, the ſtone-knives with which he circumciſed the children of Iſrael at Gilgal, when he brought them out of Egypt;" and an Arabic writer[e] affirms the ſame, but without any foundation: in Timnath-ſerah, which is in mount Ephraim; which was his city, and where he dwelt; and of which ſee the note on ch. xix. 50. and his grave was near the city; here, they ſay[f], his father Nun, and Caleb alſo, were buried: on the north ſide of the hill of Gaaſh; of the brooks or vallies of Gaaſh, mention is made in 2 Sam. xxiii. 30. which very probably were at the bottom of this hill.

℣. 31. And the children of Iſrael ſerved the Lord all the days of Joſhua, &c.] Without going into idolatrous practices: and all the days of the elders that overlived Joſhua; that lived a few years longer than he; ſome of them that came young out of Egypt, and were now elderly men; and ſome of them doubtleſs were of the court of the ſeventy elders; theſe could not overlive Joſhua a great many many years, for in the times of Cuſhan-riſhathaim, Iſrael fell into idolatry, Judg. ii. 6, 7, 8. and which had known all the works of the Lord, that he had done for Iſrael; in Egypt, at the Red Sea, in the wilderneſs, as well as ſince their coming into the land of Canaan.

℣. 32. And the bones of Joſeph, which the children of Iſrael brought up out of Egypt, &c.] At the requeſt, and by the order of Joſeph, Gen. l. 25. which were punctually obſerved by the children of Iſrael under the direction and command of Moſes, and therefore is aſcribed to him, as here to them, Exod. xiii. 19. buried they in Shechem; not in the city, but in a field near it, as the next clauſe ſhews. The Jews in their Cippi Hebraici ſay [g], that Joſeph was buried at a village called Belata, a ſabbath-day's journey from Shechem; but Jerom ſays [h], he was buried in Shechem, and his monument was to be ſeen there in his time. Not that they buried him at the ſame time Joſhua was buried, but very probably as ſoon as the tribe of Ephraim was in the quiet poſſeſſion of this place; though the hiſtorian inſerts the account of it here, taking an occaſion for it from the interment of Joſhua: in a parcel of ground which Jacob bought of the ſons of Hamor the father of Shechem, for an hundred pieces of ſilver; of which purchaſe ſee the note on Gen. xxxiii. 19. and it became the inheritance of the children of Joſeph; and particularly of the tribe of Ephraim by lot, agreeable to the gift and diſpoſal of it by Jacob to Joſeph, Gen. xlviii. 22. ſee the note there.

℣. 33. And Eleazar the ſon of Aaron died, &c.] Very probably in a ſhort time after Joſhua; and according to the Samaritan chronicle [i], he died as Joſhua did, gathered the chief men of the children of Iſrael a little before his death, and enjoined them ſtrict obedience to the commands of God, and took his leave of them, and then ſtript himſelf of his holy garments, and clothed Phinehas his ſon with them; what his age was, is not ſaid: and they buried him in a hill that pertaineth to Phinehas his ſon; or in the hill of Phinehas; which was ſo called from him, and might have the name given it by his father, who might poſſeſs it before him, and what adjoined to it. The Jews in the above treatiſe ſay [k], that at Avarta was a ſchool of Phinehas in a temple of the Gentiles; that Eleazar was buried upon the hill, and Joſhua below the village among the olives, and on this hill is ſaid [l] to be a ſchool or village of Phinehas: which was given him in mount Ephraim; either to Eleazar, that he might be near to Shiloh, where the tabernacle then was, as the cities given to the prieſts and Levites were chiefly in thoſe tribes that lay neareſt to Jeruſalem; though the Jews ſay, as Jarchi and Kimchi relate, that Phinehas might come into the poſſeſſion of that place thro' his wife, or it might fall to him as being a devoted field; but it is moſt likely it was given to his father by the children of Ephraim, for the reaſon before obſerved. The Talmudiſts ſay, that Joſhua wrote his own book, which is very probable; yet the laſt five verſes muſt be written by another hand, even as the laſt eight verſes in Deuteronomy were written by him, as they alſo ſay; and therefore this is no more an objection to his being the writer of this book, than the addition of eight verſes by him to Deuteronomy, is to Moſes being the writer of that; and the ſame Talmudiſts [m] alſo obſerve, that ℣. 29, 30, 31, 32. Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of the Lord, died, &c. were written by Eleazar, and ℣. 33. and Eleazar the ſon of Aaron, died, &c. by Phinehas, which is not improbable.

The Book of JUDGES.

THE title of this book in the Hebrew copies is Sepher Shophetim, the book of Judges; but the Syriac and Arabic interpreters call it, "the book of the Judges of the children of Iſrael;" and the Septuagint only Judges; ſo called, not becauſe it was written by them, though ſome think it was compiled out of annals and diaries kept by them; but it ſeems to be the work of one perſon only: the true reaſon of its name is, becauſe it treats of the judges of Iſrael, gives an account of their lives and actions, and eſpecially ſuch as concerned their office; which office was different from that of kings, and ſeems only to have been occaſional, and chiefly lay in delivering the people out of the hands of their enemies, when oppreſſed, diſtreſſed, or carried captive by them, in protecting them in the enjoyment of their country, rights and liberties; in leading out their armies againſt their enemies when needful, and in compoſing differences, judging law-ſuits, and adminiſtring juſtice. The government of the nation, during their time, was a theocracy. It is not certain who was the penman of this book; ſome aſcribe it to king Hezekiah, others to Ezra; but the Jewiſh writers [a] are generally of opinion, that it was written by Samuel, which is moſt likely, who was the laſt of the judges; and it ſeems plainly to be written before the times of David, as appears from a ſpeech of Joab, 2 Sam. xi. 21. and from ſome paſſages in Pſ. lxviii. 8, 9. and xcvii. 5. which ſeem to refer or allude to Judg. v. 4, 5. and from Jeruſalem being called Jebus, which ſhews it to be inhabited by the Jebuſites in the time of the writer of this book, whereas it was taken out of their hands by David; beſides, Samuel himſelf refers to the annals of this book, 1 Sam. xii. 9, 10, 11. and from whoſe teſtimonies, as well as from others in the New Teſtament, there is no doubt to be made of its being genuine and authentic, and written by divine inſpiration; as is evident from the uſe the apoſtle Paul, and the author of the epiſtle to the Hebrews have made of it, Acts xiii. 20. Heb. xi. 32. it is uſeful as an hiſtory, and without which the hiſtory of the people of Iſrael would not be compleat; it containing an account of all their judges, excepting the two laſt, Eli and Samuel, of whom an account is given in the following books, and of ſome facts incidental to thoſe times, related in an appendix at the end of it concerning the idol of Micah, and the war of Benjamin; and furniſhes out many uſeful moral obſervations concerning God's diſpleaſure at ſin in his own people Iſrael, and his corrections for it; and about his providential care of them in raiſing up for them deliverers in their time of need, as well as points at various virtues and excellencies in great and good men worthy of imitation. It contains, according to Piſcator, Dr. Lightfoot, and others, an hiſtory of 299 years.

CHAP. I.

THE children of Iſrael, after Joſhua's death, enquiring of the Lord which tribes ſhould firſt go up againſt the remaining Canaanites, Judah is ordered to go up, who with Simeon did, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and had ſucceſs againſt the Canaanites under Adoni-bezek, whom they brought to Jeruſalem, ℣. 4—8. and againſt the Canaanites in Hebron, Debir, Zephath, Hormah, Gaza, Aſkelon and Ekron, ℣. 9—20. the Benjamites had not ſuch good ſucceſs as Judah againſt the Jebuſites in Jeruſalem, ℣. 21. nor as the houſe of Joſeph had againſt Bethel, ℣. 22—26. nor could the tribes of Manaſſeh, Ephraim, Zebulun, Aſher and Naphtali drive out the Canaanites from ſeveral places which belonged unto them, though many of them became their tributaries, ℣. 27—33. and as for the Amorites, they were too powerful for the tribe of Dan, though ſome of them became tributaries to the houſe of Joſeph, ℣. 34, 35, 36.

℣. 1. Now after the death of Joſhua, &c.] With the account of which the preceding book is concluded, and therefore this very properly follows after that; though Epiphanius [b] places the book of Job between them: it came to paſs that the children of Iſrael aſked the Lord; that is, the heads of them who gathered together at Shiloh, where the tabernacle was; and ſtanding before the high-prieſt, either Eleazar, or rather Phinehas his ſon, Eleazar being in all probability dead, enquired by Urim and Thummim: ſaying, who ſhall go up for us againſt the Canaanites firſt, to fight againſt them? for they had had no commander in chief, Joſhua leaving no ſucceſſor, though the Samaritan chronicle [c] pretends he did; one Abel, a ſon of Caleb's brother, of the tribe of Judah, on whom the lot fell, out of 12 of the 9 tribes and a half, to whom Joſhua delivered the government of the nation, and crowned him: but this enquiry was not for any man to go before them all as their generaliſſimo, but to know what tribe ſhould firſt go up, and they were deſirous of having the mind of God in it, when they might expect to ſucceed; which to do at their firſt ſetting out, would not only be a great encouragement to them to go on, but ſtrike dread and terror into their enemies; and this is to be underſtood of the Canaanites who remained unſubdued, that dwelt among them, and in cities, which though divided to them by lot, they were not in the poſſeſſion of; and theſe being troubleſome neighbours to them, and beſides the Iſraelites daily increaſing, needed more room and more cities to occupy, and more land to cultivate.

℣. 2. And the Lord ſaid, &c.] By an articulate voice, which 'tis probable was the uſual way of anſwering by Urim and Thummim: Judah ſhall go up; not Judah in perſon, who was long ago dead, but the tribe of Judah; it was the will of the Lord that that tribe ſhould engage firſt with the Canaanites, being the principal one, and the moſt numerous, powerful and valiant, and perhaps had the greateſt number of Canaanites among them; and who ſucceeding, would inſpire the other tribes with courage, and fill their enemies with a panic: behold, I have delivered the land into his hands; that part of it which belonged to that tribe as yet unſubdued, the conqueſt of which they are aſſured of for their encouragement.

℣. 3. And Judah ſaid unto Simeon his brother, &c.] The men of the tribe of Judah ſaid to thoſe of the tribe of Simeon, they being not only brethren by father's and mother's ſide, which was not the caſe of all the ſons of Jacob, but their poſſeſſions and inheritances lay near together; and indeed thoſe of Simeon were within the inheritance of the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xix. 1. ſo that as they lived in great nearneſs and familiarity with each other, their intereſts were cloſely united together: come up with me into my lot, that we may fight againſt the Canaanites; conjunctly; the meaning is, that the tribe of Simeon, as many of their warlike men as could would come and join their forces with thoſe of the tribe of Judah, in order to reduce ſuch cities in the lot of that tribe, the Canaanites as yet were in the poſſeſſion of: and I likewiſe will go with thee into thy lot; the cities being conquered which were in the lot of the tribe of Judah, that tribe propoſed to bring their united forces into the lot of the tribe of Simeon, and reduce ſuch cities as were in that lot: ſo Simeon went with him; the tribe of Simeon agreed to the propoſal, and went along with the tribe of Judah againſt their common enemy.

℣. 4. And Judah went up, &c.] Simeon being along with him, from the ſourthern parts of the land, where they dwelt, and went more northward towards Jeruſalem, and which therefore is called a going up: and the Lord delivered the Canaanites and Perizzites into their hands; into the hands of Judah and Simeon; the Canaanites here is not the common name of the ſeven nations, but the name of one of thoſe nations, diſtinguiſhed from the reſt as here from the Perizzites, who otherwiſe were alſo Canaanites; and both theſe, at leaſt many of them, dwelt in thoſe parts, and were ſubdued by the united forces of Judah and Simeon, whereby the Lord's promiſe was fulfilled, ℣. 2. and they ſlew of them in Bezek 10,000 men; that is, in and about Bezek, firſt and laſt, in the courſe of this war, as after related. Jerom ſays [d], there were two villages of this name in his time near one another, ſeven miles from Neapolis, as you go to Scythopolis; and our countryman Mr. Sandys [e] ſays, that when they departed from Bethlehem, bending their courſe from the mountains of Judea lying weſt from it, near to which, on the ſide of the oppoſite hill, they paſſed a little village called Bezek, as he took it, two miles from Bethſur, ſee 1 Sam. xi. 8.

℣. 5. And they found Adoni-bezek in Bezek, &c.] Who was king of the place, and whoſe name ſignifies lord of Bezek; not that they took him there, for he is afterwards ſaid to make his eſcape from thence, but here he was when they came againſt that city, and into which they ruſhed upon him, and fell upon him as follows: and they fought againſt him; entering the city with their forces: and they ſlew the Canaanites and the Perizzites; that were in it, or about it, even to the number of 10,000, as before related.

℣. 6. But Adoni-bezek fled, and they purſued after him, and caught him, &c.] It is very probable his view was to get to Jebus or Jeruſalem, a ſtrong and fortified city, and he made his way thither as faſt he could, but was purſued and overtaken by ſome of the forces of Judah and Simeon; and the rather it may ſeem he took this courſe, ſince when he was taken by them, they brought him thither, as follows: and cut off his thumbs and his great toes; whereby he was diſabled both for fighting and for fleeing. So the Athenians cut off the thumbs of the right-hand of the Æginetæ, the inhabitants of the iſland of Ægina, to diſable them from holding a ſpear, as various writers [f] relate. Whether the Iſraelites did this, as knowing this king had uſed others in like manner, and ſo according to their law of retaliation, eye for eye, &c. required it; or whether ignorant of it, were ſo moved and directed by the providence of God to do this, that the ſame meaſure might be meaſured to him which he had meaſured to others, is not certain; the latter ſeems moſt probable, ſince the Iſraelites did not uſually inflict ſuch ſort of puniſhments; and beſides, according to the command of God, they ſhould have put him to death, as they were to do to all Canaanites.

℣. 7. And Adoni-bezek ſaid, &c.] To the men of Judah, after his thumbs and toes were cut off, his conſcience accuſing him for what he had done to others, and being obliged to acknowledge he was righteouſly dealt with: 70 kings having their thumbs and their great toes cut off; that is by him, or by his orders, whom he had conquered and made captives; according to Joſephus [g], they were 72. the number may be accounted for, by obſerving, that in thoſe times, as appears by the preceding book, every city had a king over it; and beſides, theſe 70 kings might not be ſuch who had had the government of ſo many cities, but many of them ſuch who had reigned ſucceſſively in the ſame city, and had fallen into the hands of this cruel and tyrannical king, one after another, and their ſons alſo with them might be ſo called: and theſe theſe he ſays gathered their meat under my table; were glad to eat of the crumbs and ſcraps which fell from thence, and might in their turns be put there at times for his ſport and pleaſure, and there be fed with the offal of his meat, as Bajazet the Turk was ſerved by Tamerlane, who put him into an iron cage, and carried him about in it, and uſed him as his footſtool to mount his horſe, and at times fed him like a dog with crumbs from his table [h]: as I have done, ſo God hath requited me; whether he had any knowledge of the true God, and of his juſtice in dealing with him according to his deſerts, and had a real ſenſe of his ſin, and true repentance for it, is not certain; ſince the word for God is in the plural number, and ſometimes uſed of heathen deities, as it may be here by him; however the righteous judgment of God clearly appears in this inſtance: and they brought him to Jeruſalem; to that part of Jeruſalem which belonged to the tribe of Judah; ſee Joſh. xv. 8, 63. here they brought him alive, and dying, buried him, as Joſephus [i] ſays; which might be their view in carrying him thither, perceiving he was a dying man; or they had him thither to expoſe him as a trophy of victory, and as an example of divine juſtice: and there he died; whether thro' grief and vexation, or of the wounds he had received, or by the immediate hand of God, or by the hands of the Iſraelites, is not ſaid; neither are improbable.

℣. 8. Now the children of Judah had fought againſt Jeruſalem, and had taken it, &c.] Which accounted for their carrying Adoni-bezek thither. This they had done in the times of Joſhua; for when the king of that place was taken and ſlain by Joſhua, it ſeems that he and Iſrael went and fought againſt the city, and took that in which the tribe of Judah had a principal concern; ſo Kimchi and Ben Gerſom interpret it; but Jarchi and Abarbinel are of opinion, that now from Bezek they went up to Jeruſalem, and fought againſt it, and took it; and ſo others think, becauſe only the children of Judah are mentioned, and not all Iſrael, who fought together in Joſhua's time; nor is there any mention made of its being taken in his time, and yet it ſeems plain that it was inhabited in part by the children of Judah, Joſh. xv. 63. ſome therefore have thought that it was twice taken, that after Joſhua had taken it, he and the children of Iſrael being employed in making conqueſts in other parts of the land, the Jebuſites repoſſeſſed it, from whence they were now again in part driven, not wholly; and Joſephus ſays [k], the lower part was taken, and all the inhabitants killed, but the upper part was hard to be taken, becauſe of the ſtrength of the walls, and the nature of the place: and ſmitten it with the edge of the ſword; the inhabitants of it, ſo far as they got poſſeſſion of it: and ſet the city on fire; ſome part of it only, for in ſome part of it dwelt the children of Judah, and in another part the Jebuſites.

℣. 9. And afterwards the children of Judah, &c.] After the taking of Bezek, and the king of it, and having him to Jeruſalem, where he died: they went down from Jeruſalem; which was on high ground: to fight againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in the mountain, and in the ſouth, and in the valley; into which ſeveral parts the lot of the tribe of Judah was divided; in each of which they had cities, and ſome, as it ſeems, yet unſubdued, and in the hands of the Canaanites; of theſe ſeveral parts, and the cities in them, ſee Joſh. xv. 21, 33, 48.

℣. 10. And Judah went againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in Hebron, &c.] Hebron was firſt taken by Joſhua, and the inhabitants of it put to the ſword, Joſh. x. 36, 37. but whilſt Joſhua was employed in making other conqueſts, the Canaanites found ways and means of getting into the poſſeſſion of it again; wherefore when a grant of it was made to Caleb, he with the aſſiſtance of the tribe of Judah, of which he was prince, regained it, Joſh. xv. 13, 14. wherefore what is recorded here, is only a repetition of what was then done; unleſs it can be thought that this fact was there inſerted by anticipation, or that there were two expeditions of the children of Judah againſt this place, Hebron which before was Kirjath-arba; ſee Joſh. xiv. 15. in the firſt of which Caleb, with the aſſiſtance of this tribe, drove out the three giants only, who afterwards got poſſeſſion again, and in this put them to death, as follows, and they ſlew Sheſhai, and Ahiman, and Talmai; ſee Numb. xiii. 22. Joſh. xv. 14. but what follows concerning their going from hence to Debir, and the offer of Caleb to give his daughter in marriage to whomſoever ſhould take it, does not ſeem ſo well to agree with times after the death of Joſhua; ſince it is highly probable that Caleb, who was cotemporary with him and Eleazar, was now dead, and at leaſt can't well be thought to have a young daughter at this time undiſpoſed of in marriage; wherefore theſe facts are only repeated upon obſerving Judah's having taking Jeruſalem, to ſhew what exploits were performed by men of that tribe; wherefore for what is after ſaid, to the end of the 15th verſe, ſee the notes on Joſh. xv. 15—19. where the ſame things are related in expreſs words as here, containing the requeſt of Caleb's daughter: ſuch an one as made to Domitian is related by Martial [l].

℣. 16. And the children of the Kenite, Moſes' father-in-law, &c.] The poſterity of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes; for though Jethro returned to his own country, after he had paid a viſit to Moſes in the wilderneſs, yet Hobab his ſon, at the perſuaſion of Moſes, travelled with him and Iſrael through the wilderneſs, and went with them into Canaan, at leaſt ſome of his deſcendants, and ſettled there, ſome in one part of the land, and ſome in another, of whom we read in ſeveral places of ſcripture; they continued to the days of Jeremiah, and then went by the name of Rechabites, ſo called from Rechab, a deſcendant of Jethro: theſe went up out of the city of palm-trees; from the city of Jericho, as the Targum, ſo called from the great number of palm-trees which grew near it, ſee Deut. xxxiv. 3. This is to be underſtood not of the city itſelf, that was utterly deſtroyed by Joſhua, and the rebuilding of it was forbidden under a curſe, but the country adjacent, the valley in which it ſtood, which was ſet with palm-trees; here was a grove of palm-trees [m], and the garden of balſam, which grew no where elſe, as Strabo [n] ſays; and who alſo obſerves, that here was a royal palace in his time; this belonged to Herod king of Judea in the times of Auguſtus Cæſar, to whoſe palm-tree groves there Horace [o] refers. Here the Kenites firſt ſettled when they came firſt over Jordan dan with Joſhua, being a moſt pleaſant and delightful place, and ſuitable to ſuch perſons who dwelt in tents, as they did, and anſwered to the promiſe of Moſes to Hobab, Numb. x. 29. and here it ſeems they had remained to this time: and now they left it, and came with the children of Judah into the wilderneſs; which was alſo a convenient place for the habitation of ſuch perſons, who loved a ſolitary life. Perhaps the Canaanites about Jericho might be troubleſome to them, and therefore choſe to ſtay no longer there, or having a peculiar affection for the tribe of Judah, they choſe to be within their lot; and the rather, as they were a warlike and valiant tribe, they might expect the greater ſafety and protection among them: which lieth in the ſouth of Arad; that is, which wilderneſs of Judah lay there, of which name there was a country or city, ſee Numb. xxi. 1. and Joſh. xii. 14. and here ſome of them dwelt to the times of Saul, the Amalekites then having got poſſeſſion of the ſouthern parts, which they infeſted and were troubleſome to, ſee 1 Sam. xv. 6. and xxx. 1. and they went and dwelt among the people; of the tribe of Judah, near ſome of the cities which were in the wilderneſs; of which ſee Joſh. xv. 63.

℣. 17. And Judah went with Simeon his brother, &c.] Having ſubdued his Canaanites which were in his own lot, according to his promiſe, he went with his brother Simeon, or the tribe of Simeon, into their lot to reduce thoſe that were in that: and they ſlew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, and utterly deſtroyed it; where and what this city was, is not certain; there was a place of this name in upper Galilee, mentioned in Jewiſh writings [p], which can't be meant here; and we read of the valley of Zephathah, 2 Chron. xiv. 10. which might have its name from hence, and if ſo it was near Mareſhah: and the name of the city was called Hormah; from the deſtruction made of it, and of the country about it; for now what had been vowed by Iſrael in the wilderneſs, when near Arad, was fulfilled, Numb. xxi. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 18. Alſo Judah took Gaza, with the coaſt thereof, &c.] Which by lot fell to that tribe, Joſh. xv. 47. but was not till now ſubdued: and Aſkelon, with the coaſt thereof; which, according to our countryman Sandys [q], was ten miles from Gaza: and Ekron, with the coaſt thereof; this alſo is the lot that fell to Judah, but was afterwards given to the tribe of Dan, Joſh. xv. 45. and xix. 43. for whom Judah now fought and took it; but in a ſhort time all theſe places were retaken, and poſſeſſed by the Philiſtines, and were three of their five principalities which they ever after retained, ſee Judg. iii. 3. 1 Sam. vi. 16.

℣. 19. And the Lord was with Judah, &c.] Encouraging, ſtrengthening, ſucceeding and giving the tribe victory over the Canaanites; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was for the help of the houſe of Judah:" and he drove out the inhabitants of the mountains; the mountainous part of Judea, ſuch as was about Jeruſalem, and where Hebron ſtood, and other cities, ſee Joſh. xv. 48, &c. which though fortified both by nature and art, yet God being with them, they were eaſily ſubdued: but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley; God forſaking them, becauſe they were afraid of them, for a reaſon after mentioned, or through ſlothfulneſs, and being weary of fighting, or becauſe they fell into ſome ſins, which occaſioned the divine diſpleaſure; ſo the Targum, "after they had ſinned, they could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley:" becauſe they had chariots of iron; but this was no reaſon why they could not drive them out, if God was with them, who could as eaſily have delivered theſe into their hands, as the inhabitants of the mountains; but is the reaſon why they were afraid to fight with them, and to attempt to drive them out, and which they themſelves gave why they did not.

℣. 20. And they gave Hebron unto Caleb, as Moſes ſaid, &c.] Which was done in the times of Joſhua, both by him and all the people, according to the order of Moſes. This is to be underſtood not of the city which was given to the Levites, but of the fields and parts adjacent, Joſh. xiv. 13. and xxi. 11, 12. and he expelled thence the three ſons of Anak; whoſe names are given ℣. 10. this ſhews that this refers to the ſame expedition as in Joſh. xv. 14. and is expreſſed in the ſame manner.

℣. 21. And the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebuſites that inhabited Jeruſalem, &c.] That is, that part of it which belonged to them, for it lay between Judah and Benjamin; and neither of them ſeparately, nor both conjunctly, could drive out the Jebuſites from it, particularly the ſtrong hold on the top of mount Sion, which they held to the times of David. Abarbinel is of opinion, that Jeruſalem in thoſe times was not a city incloſed about, but was a large province, part of which belonged to the tribe of Judah, and another to the tribe of Benjamin, and another was poſſeſſed by the Jebuſites; and ſo Jarchi ſays it was a province, the name of which was Jebuſi: but the Jebuſites dwelt with the children of Benjamin unto this day; when this book was written, which was done by Samuel, as Kimchi and Ben Gerſom; and it is certain from hence it muſt have been written before the reign of David, who diſpoſſeſſed the Jebuſites, 2 Sam. v. 6—9.

℣. 22. And the houſe of Joſeph, they alſo went up againſt Bethel, &c.] Which lay upon the borders of the ſons of Joſeph, Ephraim and Manaſſeh, Joſh. xvi. 1, 2. and though it ſeems to have been taken when Ai was, Joſh. viii. 17. yet it appears that it was now in the poſſeſſion of the Canaanites; wherefore the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh being deſirous of enlarging their borders after the example of Judah, went againſt this place in order to take it: and the Lord was with them; the Word of the Lord, as the Targum, directing, aſſiſting and ſucceeding them in their attempt.

℣. 23. And the houſe of Joſeph ſent to deſcry Bethel, &c.] To reconnoitre the place, to obſerve its paſſes and avenues, which were moſt acceſſible, and to examine the walls of it, where they were weakeſt and leaſt defended: now the name of the city before was Luz; which ſignifies a nut; perhaps it was ſo called from large numbers of nut-trees which grew near it; the Jews ſuggeſt as if it was like a nut, no entrance into it but thro' a cave or ſome ſubterraneous paſſage, ſee Gen. xxviii. 19.

℣. 24. And the ſpies ſaw a man come forth out of the city, &c.] Or the keepers [r]; thoſe that were ſent ſent to watch, and obſerve, and get what intelligence they could of the city, and the way into it: and they ſaid unto him, ſhew us, we pray thee, the entrance into the city; not the gate or gates of it, which no doubt were viſible enough, but ſome private way into it; the Jews, as before obſerved, think the entrance was by the way of a cave, or ſome hidden paſſage, of which Jarchi and Kimchi make mention: and we will ſhew thee mercy; give him a reward for it, or ſpare him and his family when the city came into their hands.

ver. 25. And when he ſhewed them the entrance into the city, &c.] Pointing to it with his fingers, as the ſame writers obſerve: they ſmote the city with the edge of the ſword; they gave notice of what intelligence they had got to the body of the army, who came up, entered the city, took it, and put the inhabitants of it to the ſword, as they were ordered to do with all the Canaanites: but they let go the man and all his family; who had returned to it, encouraged by the promiſe made him, and for the ſake of ſaving of his family; which though not expreſſed, he might have aſked the favour of ſparing them, which might be promiſed, as was in the caſe of Rahab; provided he would either renounce heatheniſm, and embrace the true religion, or depart to another country, the latter of which he choſe.

ver. 26. And the man went into the land of the Hittites, &c.] With his family; Kimchi ſays, this was not one of the ſeven nations of Canaan; and it is very clear from this narrative, that the land this man went to was not in the land of Canaan; though it is certain a people of this name formerly dwelt there, Gen. xiv. 10. and xxiii. 3. and xxvi. 34. and the land of Canaan is called the land of the Hittites, Joſh. i. 4. theſe either might flee to another country upon Joſhua's entry into the land of Canaan, or a colony of them from thence might ſettle elſewhere, to which this man choſe to go, who might be originally of them: and built a city; his family was numerous, and he a man of wealth, and was allowed to carry all his ſubſtance with him: and called the name of it Luz; in memory of the place he left, and had long lived in. There is a city called Louſſa, among the cities which Joſephus ſays [s] were taken by the Jews from the Arabians; and which is very probably the Lyſa of Ptolemy [t], which he places in Arabia Petræa, and might be the ſame with this Luz; and if ſo, this ſhews the land this man went into, was in Edom, which is not unlikely; there is another Luza, which Jerom [u] ſays fell to the lot of the ſons of Joſeph, near Sichem, three miles from Neapolis: which is the name thereof unto this day; the time of the writing of this book; ſee the note on ver. 21.

ver. 27. Neither did Manaſſeh, &c.] One of the ſons of Joſeph before mentioned; and it reſpects that half tribe of Manaſſeh, which had its portion on this ſide Jordan in the land of Canaan: theſe did not drive out the inhabitants of Beth-ſhean and her towns, nor Taanach and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Ibleam and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns; all which were places the half tribe had aſſigned them in Iſſachar and Aſher; of which ſee the note on Joſh. xvii. 11. This tribe ſeems to have been ſluggiſh, and not to have exerted itſelf at all, or made any attempts to drive out theſe people: but the Canaanites would dwell in that land; not only deſire it, but were determined on it, and rather chuſe to ſubmit to a tribute than be expelled, at leaſt would not depart unleſs they were forced.

ver. 28. And it came to paſs when Iſrael was ſtrong, &c.] All the tribes of Iſrael were become numerous, and able to drive the Canaanites out of the land every where, and particularly were able to aſſiſt Manaſſeh in expelling the Canaanites out of the above places, yet they did not; but all they did was, that they put the Canaanites to tribute, and did not utterly drive them out; which flowed from covetouſneſs, and a love of eaſe; they did not care to be at the trouble of expelling them, as they found it turned more to their account and preſent advantage, to make them tributaries; and this was true of the Iſraelites in general, and of the half tribe of Manaſſeh in particular; which, as Abarbinel thinks, is here reſpected.

ver. 29. Neither did Ephraim drive out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer, &c.] Nor ſo much as made them tributaries, but made a covenant with them, it is probable, contrary to the expreſs will of God: but the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among them; the Ephraimites agreeing to it, and here they dwelt to the times of Solomon; ſee the note on Joſh. xvi. 10. where indeed they are ſaid to be under tribute; but that ſeems to reſpect ſome after-time, and not when they were firſt admitted to dwell among them, ſince no mention is made of it here.

ver. 30. Neither did Zebulun drive out the inhabitants of Kitron, nor the inhabitants of Nahalol, &c.] The firſt of theſe ſeems to be the ſame with Kattah or Kartah, and the latter with Nahalal, both cities given to the Levites, Joſh. xix. 15. and xxi. 34, 35. which perhaps was the reaſon of their ſloth in driving them out; though it aggravated their ſin not to take care to rid thoſe cities of the Canaanites, which were given to religious perſons: but the Canaanites dwelt among them, and became tributaries; which is obſerved ſo far in their favour, that they exerted themſelves to make them tributaries, which was more than was done by ſome others.

ver. 31. Neither did Aſher drive out the inhabitants of Accho, &c.] The ſame with Ptolemais, Acts xxi. 7. ſee the note there; ſo called from the firſt Ptolemy king of Egypt, who enlarged it; but it has ſince recovered its ancient name pretty nearly, and is now called Acca or Acra. "On its north and eaſt ſides, Mr. Maundrel ſays [w], it is encompaſſed with a ſpacious and fertile plain; on the weſt it is waſhed by the Mediterranean ſea; and on the ſouth by a large bay, extending from the city as far as mount Carmel:" nor the inhabitants of Zidon; a well-known city in Phœnicia, belonging to this tribe, ſee Joſh. xix. 21. nor of Ahlab, nor of Achzib, nor Helbah, nor Aphik, nor of Rehob; two of theſe places, Ahlab and Helbah, are not mentioned among the cities of the tribe of Aſher, Joſh. xviii. unleſs Helbah is the ſame with Helkath, ver. 25. of the reſt, Achzib, Aphik and Rehob, ſee the notes on Joſh. xix. 29, 30.

ver. 32. But the Aſherites dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land, &c.] They were in a worſe condition than thoſe before mentioned; for the Canaanites were poſſeſſed of their country, eſpeially of the above cities, and were maſters of them; and the Aſherites only dwelt among them upon ſufferance: for they did not drive them out; either tither they did not attempt it, or they could not do it, and contented themſelves with having leave to dwell among them.

℣. 33. Neither did Naphtali drive out the inhabitants of Beth-ſhemeſh, nor the inhabitants of Beth-anath, &c.] Of which places ſee the note on Joſh. xix. 38. but he dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land; in the ſame diſgraceful manner as Aſher did, owing to cowardice or ſloth: nevertheleſs, the inhabitants of Beth-ſhemeſh and of Beth-anath became tributaries unto them; theſe two cities did at length exert themſelves, and got the maſtery over the Canaanites, as to make them pay tribute to them; though they ought to have expelled them, and even deſtroyed them, according to the command of God, but avarice prevailed over them.

℣. 34. And the Amorites forced the children of Dan into the mountain, &c.] Into the mountainous part of the tribe of Dan; the moſt noted mountains in it were Seir and Baalah, which lay on the border of Judah, Joſh. xv. 10, 11. Joppa in this tribe was built on an high rock, and ſo Gibbethon, as its name ſeems to import, perhaps was built on a hill or mountain, as were the cities after mentioned: for they would not ſuffer them to come down to the valley; which lay between Joppa and Cæſarea, the plain of Sharon, in which were Lydda, Jamnia, &c. which belonged to their tribe, and they afterwards enjoyed; ſee the note on Joſh. xix. 48.

℣. 35. But the Amorites would dwell in mount Heres in Aijalon, and in Shaalbim, &c.] And they would not ſuffer the Danites to dwell in the valley, a fruitful and delightful part of their country, terrifying them with their iron-chariots, which in the vale they could make uſe of to great advantage; ſo neither would they let them dwell alone in the mountainous part of their tribe, but would dwell with them, particularly in three places mentioned: where mount Heres was, is not certain, it ſignifies the ſun; very probably it had its name from the worſhip of the ſun on it, or from the ſun ſtanding ſtill near it; for Aijalon, where that miracle was wrought, is next mentioned. Perhaps it might be near to Timnath-heres, which was in mount Ephraim, ch. ii. 3. ſince Ephraim aſſiſted in making theſe places tributaries; of the two cities, Aijalon and Shaalbim, ſee Joſh. xix. 42. yet the hand of the houſe of Joſeph prevailed, ſo that they became tributaries; or the hand of it became heavy [x]; by which it does not clearly appear whether the hand of Joſeph was made heavy, and to hang down, by the Amorites; or whether it was heavy upon them, and ſo prevailed over them, as our verſion; but the Septuagint puts it out of doubt, reading the words, "and the hand of the houſe of Joſeph was heavy upon the Amorites;" the Ephraimites being near to the tribe of Dan, and obſerving how they were preſſed by the Amorites, took up arms in their favour, and obliged the Canaanites of the above places to become tributaries to the Danites.

℣. 36. And the coaſt of the Amorites was from the going-up to Akrabbim, &c.] Of which mention is made in Numb. xxxiv. 4. Joſh. xv. 3. ſee the notes there: from the rock, and upwards; even from the city Petra in Idumea, and beyond that; and there was a country near Idumea, called Acrabatane, from this mountain Akrabbim, 1 Maccab. v. 3. ſuch was the extent of theſe people, that their coaſt reached from the places mentioned to the mountains, where the above cities of Dan were; they were the moſt powerful people among the Canaanites, and lay on both ſides of Jordan, and were very troubleſome to Iſrael, yet were at length deſtroyed, Amos ii. 9.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter gives an account of an angel of the Lord appearing and rebuking the children of Iſrael for their preſent miſconduct, ℣. 1—5. of their good behaviour under Joſhua, and the elders that out-lived him, ℣. 6—10. and of their idolatries they fell into afterwards, which greatly provoked the Lord to anger, ℣. 11—15. and of the goodneſs of God to them nevertheleſs, in raiſing up judges to deliver them out of the hands of their enemies, of which there are many inſtances in the following chapters, ℣. 16—18. and yet that how, upon the demiſe of ſuch perſons, they relapſed into idolatry, which cauſed the anger of God to be hot againſt them, and to determine not to drive out the Canaanites utterly from them, but to leave them among them to try them, ℣. 19—23.

℣. 1. And an angel of the Lord came up from Gilgal to Bochim, &c.] The Targum calls him a prophet [y]; and the Jewiſh commentators in general interpret it of Phinehas [z]; and that a man is meant is given into by others, becauſe he is ſaid to come from a certain place in Canaan, and not from heaven, and ſpoke in a public congregation, and is not ſaid to diſappear; but neither a man, nor a created angel is meant, or otherwiſe he would have ſpoken in the name of the Lord, and have ſaid, thus ſaith the Lord, and not in his own name; aſcribing to himſelf the bringing of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and ſwearing to them, and making a covenant with them, and threatening what he would do to them becauſe of their ſin; wherefore the uncreated angel, the angel of the covenant is meant, who brought Iſrael out of Egypt, was with them in the wilderneſs, and introduced them into the land of Canaan, and appeared to Joſhua as the captain of the Lord's hoſt at or near Gilgal, Joſh. v. 13, 14. and becauſe he had not appeared ſince, therefore he is ſaid to come from thence to a place afterwards called Bochim, from what happened at this time: and ſaid, I made you to go out of Egypt; that is, obliged Pharaoh king of Egypt to let them go, by inflicting plagues upon him and his people, which made them urgent upon them to depart: and I have brought you unto the land which I ſware unto your fathers; into the land of Canaan, now for the moſt part conquered, and divided among them, and in which they were ſettled: and I ſaid, I will never break my covenant with you; if the covenant between them was broken, it ſhould not begin with him, it would be their own fault; all all which is mentioned as so many instances of divine goodness to them, and as so many aggravations of their sins against God.

ver. 2. And ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land, &c.] This the Lord charged them not to do, when he covenanted with them, and assured them of bringing them into the land; and yet they had done it, as some instances in the preceding chapter shew, which were the occasion of the angel's coming to them to rebuke them, see Deut. vii. 2. you shall throw down their altars; this they ought to have done as soon as they were come into the land, and possessed of the places where they were erected, to shew their detestation of idolatry, and to prevent the use of them to idolatrous purposes, see Deut. vii. 5. and xii. 3. but ye have not obeyed my voice; the command of God, but on the contrary had made leagues and covenants with several inhabitants of the land, allowing them to dwell among them on paying a certain tax or tribute to them; and had suffered their altars to continue, and them to sacrifice upon them to their idols, according to their former customs: why have ye done this? transgressed the commandment of God in the instances mentioned. It shewed the wickedness of their hearts, their ingratitude to God, who had done such great things for them, and their proneness to idolatry, and liking of it.

ver. 3. Wherefore I also said, &c.] Supposing, or on condition of their being guilty of the above things, which was foreseen they would: I will not drive them out from before you; the seven nations of the Canaanites entirely, and which accounts for the various instances related in the preceding chapter; where it is observed, that they could not, or did not, drive the old inhabitants out of such and such places, because they sinned against the Lord, and he forsook them, and would not assist them in their enterprizes, or left them to their sloth and indolence: but they shall be as thorns in your sides; very troublesome and afflicting, see Numb. xxxiii. 55. or for straits, as the Septuagint, or be such as would bring them into tribulation, and distress them, as the Targum, so they often did: and their gods shall be a snare unto you; which they suffered to continue, and did not destroy them, as they ought to have done; they would be as they proved, ensnaring to them, and whereby they were drawn to forsake the worship of the true God, and bow down to them, as we read in some following verses.

ver. 4. And it came to pass when the angel of the Lord spake these words unto all the children of Israel, &c.] This being either one of the three solemn feasts, when all the males appeared at the tabernacle of the Lord; or else here was now a solemn convention of all the tribes to enquire of the Lord the reason why they were not able to drive out the Canaanites in some places, and why they prevailed over them in many: that the people lift up their voice, and wept; being affected with what the angel said, and convicted in their consciences of their sins, and so fearing the bad consequences thereof, they wept because of the sins they had been guilty of, and because of the evils that were like to befal them on account of them.

ver. 5. And they called the name of that place Bochim, &c.] Which signifies weepers, from the general lamentation of the people, which before had another name; very probably it was Shiloh itself; since all Israel was gathered together, the tabernacle being now at Shiloh, and also because sacrifices were offered up, as follows: and they sacrificed there unto the Lord; to atone for the sins they had committed; and if they did this in the faith of the great sacrifice of the Messiah, they did well; however, so far there was an acknowledgment of their guilt, and a compliance with the appointments of God directed to in such cases.

ver. 6. And when Joshua had let the people go, &c.] This is not to be connected with what goes before, as if that was done in Joshua's life-time, for during that, as is after testified, the people of Israel served the Lord; whereas the angel, in the speech to them before related, charges them with disobeying the voice of the Lord, making leagues with the inhabitants of the land, and not demolishing their altars, all which was after the death of Joshua; but this refers to a meeting of them with him before his death, and his dismission of them, which was either when he had divided the land by lot unto them, or when he had given them his last charge before his death, see Josh. xxiv. 28. and this, and what follows, are repeated and introduced here, to connect the history of Israel, and to shew them how they fell into idolatry, and so under the divine displeasure, which brought them into distress, from which they were delivered at various times by judges of his own raising up, which is the subject-matter of this book: the children of Israel went every man unto his inheritance to possess the land; as it was divided to the several tribes and their families; which seems to confirm the first sense given, that this refers to the dismission of the people upon the division of the land among them.

ver. 7. And the people served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that out-lived Joshua, who had seen all the great works of the Lord that he did for Israel.] In Egypt, at the Red-sea, in the wilderness, at the river Jordan, and in the land of Canaan; see the note on Josh. xxiv. 31. The Jews [a] say, the elders died on the 5th of Shebet, which answers to part of January and part of February, on which account a fast was kept on that day.

ver. 8. And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of the Lord, died, &c.] See the note on Josh. xxiv. 29.

ver. 9. And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-heres, &c.] In Josh. xxiv. 30. it is called Timnath-serah, the letters of serah being here inverted, make heres, which sometimes is used for the sun, Job ix. 7. and therefore some observe, that the whole name signifies the figure of the sun, which the Jews say was put on his monument, in commemoration of the miracle of the sun standing still at his request, and had this inscription on it, "this is he that caused the sun to stand still;" but this is not very probable, since it might have had a tendency to idolatry, the sun being what was the first object of idolatrous worship among the heathens, and had the greatest shew of reason for it: in the mount of Ephraim, on the north side of the hill Gaash; see the note on Josh xxiv. 30.

ver. 10. And also all that generation were gathered unto their fathers, &c.] Were dead and buried, that is, the greatest part of those that were cotemporaries with the elders that out-lived Joshua; for they might not be all dead, at least not all that came out of Egypt, and still less all that came into the land of Canaan; for according to the computation putation of Ben Gerſom, the time of Joſhua and the elders were but 27 years; and there were no more than 67 years from their coming out of Egypt to this time; and no doubt there were men living of 80 years of age and more, but theſe might be but few: and there aroſe another generation after them, which knew not the Lord; ſo as to love, fear, ſerve, and worſhip him; did not own him to be the one only living and true God, otherwiſe they muſt know him notionally, being educated in the true religion: nor yet the works which he had done for Iſrael; ſome of them, as before obſerved, might have ſeen the works and wonders of the Lord for Iſrael, at their firſt coming out of Egypt; though not being wiſe, as the above writer obſerves, it had no effect upon them, to keep them from doing evil in the ſight of God; and they all of them had been informed of them, and many had ſeen, and muſt have had perſonal knowledge of what was done for them at their coming into the land of Canaan; but not a practical knowledge, or ſuch as had any influence upon them, to preſerve them from idolatry.

℣. 11. And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Openly and publickly, boldly and impudently, in the very face of God, and amidſt all the good things they received from him, which were aggravating circumſtances of their ſins; what the evil was they did is next obſerved: and ſerved Baalim; the idol Baal, as the Arabic verſion, of which there were many, and therefore a plural word is uſed; to which the apoſtle refers 1 Cor. 8. 5. for the word ſignifies Lords, and there were Baal-peor, Baal-zebub, Baal-Berith, &c. and who ſeem to have their name from Bal, Bel, or Belus, a king of Babylon after Nimrod, and who was the firſt monarch that was deified, the Jupiter of the heathens. Theophilus of Antioch [p] ſays, that according to the hiſtory of Thallus, Belus the king of the Aſſyrians whom they worſhipped, was older than the Trojan war 322 years; and that ſome call Cronus or Saturn Bel and Bal; by the Aſſyrians called Bel, and in the Punic or Phœnician language Bal [q].

℣. 12. And they forſook the Lord God of their fathers, &c.] The Covenant God of their fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and of their more immediate anceſtors; his worſhip they forſook, neglected his tabernacle, and the ſervice of it: which brought them out of the land of Egypt; out of wretched miſery and bondage there, with an high hand, and out-ſtretched arm; and led them thro' the wilderneſs, and provided for them there, and brought them into the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey; but all theſe mercies were forgotten by them: and followed other gods, of the gods of the people that were round about them; the gods of the Canaanites and Phœnicians, of the Egyptians, and of the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites that were round about them on the borders of them; inſtead of one God they worſhipped many, even all in or about the land of Canaan; ſo much given were they to idolatry: and bowed themſelves unto them; giving them all religious worſhip and honour they were capable of: and provoked the Lord to anger; nothing is more provoking to him than idolatry; he being a jealous God, and will not bear any rival in worſhip, nor his glory to be given to another, to a ſtrange god.

℣. 13. And they forſook the Lord, &c.] The worſhip of the Lord, as the Targum; this is repeated to obſerve the heinous ſin they were guilty of, and how diſpleaſing it was to God: and ſerved Baal and Aſhtaroth; two images, as the Arabic verſion adds; Baal, from whence Baalim, may ſignify the he-deities of the Gentiles, as Jupiter, Hercules, &c. and Aſhtaroth their ſhe-deities, as Juno, Venus, Diana, &c. the word is plural, and uſed for flocks of ſheep, ſo called becauſe they make the owners of them rich; and Kimchi and Ben Melech ſay theſe were images in the form of female ſheep. Perhaps as Baal may ſignify the ſun, ſo Aſhtaroth the moon, and the ſtars like flocks of ſheep about her. Aſhtaroth was the goddeſs of the Zidonians, 1 Kings xi. 5, 33. the ſame with Aſtarte, the wife of Cronus or Ham, ſaid to be the Phœnician or Syrian Venus. So Lucian ſays [r] there was a temple in Phœnicia, belonging to the Sidonians, which they ſay is the temple of Aſtarte; and ſays he, I think that Aſtarte is the moon; and Aſtarte is both by the Phœnicians [s] and Grecians [t] ſaid to be Venus, and was worſhipped by the Syrians alſo, as Minutius Felix [u] and Tertullian [w] affirm; the ſame with Eoſtre, or Æſtar, the Saxon goddeſs; hence to this day we call the paſſover Eaſter [x], being in Eoſtermonth; and with Andraſte, a goddeſs of the ancient Britains [y]. There were 4 of them, and therefore the Septuagint here uſes the plural number Aſtartes; ſo called either from Aſher, being reckoned bleſſed ones, or from Aſheroth, the groves they were worſhipped in; or from עש Aſh and תור Tor, the conſtellation Taurus or the bull; ſo Aſtarte by Sanchoniatho is ſaid to put upon her head the head of a bull, as the token of her ſovereignty; ſee the note on Gen. xiv. 5, ℣. 14. And the anger of the Lord was hot againſt Iſrael, &c.] For the idolatries they were guilty of; it burned within him, it broke forth, and was poured out like fire on them, and conſumed them; ſee Nahum i. 6. and he delivered them into the hands of ſpoilers that ſpoiled them; that rifled their houſes, and plundered them of their goods and ſubſtance: and he ſold them into the hands of their enemies round about; that is, delivered them into their hands, who carried them captive, where they were as men ſold for ſlaves; ſee Pſ. xliv. 12. and this was in juſt retaliation, that as they had ſold themſelves to work wickedneſs, the Lord ſold them into the hands of their enemies for their wickedneſs; and as they had followed the gods of the people round about them, ſo he delivered them up into the hands of their enemies round about them, as the Meſopotamians, Moabites, Midianites, Philiſtines, and Ammonites: ſo that they could not any longer ſtand before their enemies; but turned their backs on them, and fled whenever engaged in war with them.

℣. 15. Whitherſoever they went out, the hand of the Lord was againſt them for evil, &c.] They proſpered not in any buſineſs they undertook, or put their hands unto; or in any expedition they went upon, or when they went out to war, as Kimchi, Ben Melech, and Abarbinel explain the phraſe: the battle went againſt them, becauſe God was againſt them; his hand was againſt them, and there was no no reſiſting and turning that back; and this ſenſe ſeems to agree with what goes before and follows after; though in ſome Jewiſh writings [a] it is explained of thoſe, that went out of the land to eſcape the calamities of it, and particularly of Elimelech and his two ſons Mahlon and Chilion, Ruth i. 1, 2. as the Lord had ſaid, and as the Lord had ſworn unto them; having ratified and confirmed his threatening with an oath, that if they ſerved other gods, he would ſurely bring upon them all the curſes of the law; ſee Deut. xxix. 12—20. and they were greatly diſtreſſed; by the Canaanites they ſuffered to dwell among them, who were pricks in their eyes, and thorns in their ſides, as had been threatened them; and by the nations round about them, who came in upon them, and plundered them, and carried them captive.

℣. 16. Nevertheleſs the Lord raiſed up judges, &c.] Who are particularly mentioned by name, and their exploits recorded, in ſome following chapters, and from whom the book in general has its name: theſe were men that God raiſed up in an extraordinary manner, and ſpirited and qualified for the work he had to do by them; which was to deliver the people of Iſrael out of the hands of their oppreſſors, and reſtore them to their privileges and liberties, and protect them in them, and adminiſter juſtice to them; which was a wonderful inſtance of the goodneſs of God to them, notwithſtanding their many provoking ſins and tranſgreſſions: which delivered them out of the hands of thoſe that ſpoiled them; who took away their goods and cattle from them, and carried their perſons captive: theſe were the inſtruments of recovering both again, juſt as Abraham brought again Lot and all his goods.

℣. 17. And yet they would not hearken unto their judges, &c.] Afterwards, or not always; but when they admoniſhed them of their ſins, and adviſed them to walk in the good ways of God, and ſerve him only; they turned a deaf ear to them, and went on in their own ways, which is a ſad aggravation of their iniquities: but they went a-whoring after their gods; committing ſpiritual adultery, for ſuch idolatry is, and is often ſo repreſented in ſcripture; for by it they broke the covenant God made with them, which had the nature of a matrimonial contract, and in which God was as an huſband to them; and therefore ſerving other gods, was rejecting him as ſuch, and committing whoredom with others; than which nothing was more provoking to God, jealous of his honour and glory: they turned quickly out of the way which their fathers walked in; as ſoon as ever Joſhua and the elders were dead, they departed from the God of their fathers, and the way in which they worſhipped him; and ſo likewiſe quickly after they had been delivered by the judges, or however as ſoon as they were dead: obeying the commandments of the Lord; ſerving him at his tabernacle, according to the laws, commands, and ordinances he gave to Moſes, which is to be underſtood of their fathers: but they did not ſo; did not walk in the ſame way, nor ſerve the Lord, and obey his commands, as their fathers did; but all the reverſe.

℣. 18. And when the Lord raiſed them up judges, then the Lord was with the judge, &c.] Every one of them that he raiſed up; as he ſtirred up their ſpirits for ſuch ſervice, to judge his people, and qualified them for it; he aſſiſted and ſtrengthened them, and abode by them, and ſucceeded them in whatſoever they engaged for the welfare of the people; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was for the help of the judge:" and delivered them out of the hands of their enemies, all the days of the judge; ſo long as a judge lived, or continued to be their judge, they were protected by him, and preſerved from falling into the hands of their enemies: for it repented the Lord becauſe of their groanings, by reaſon of them that oppreſſed them and vexed them; the Lord being merciful had compaſſion upon them, when they groaned under their oppreſſions, and cried unto him, then he received their prayer, as the Targum, and ſent them a deliverer; and ſo did what men do when they repent of a thing, change their conduct; thus the Lord changed the outward diſpenſation of his providence towards them, according to his unchangeable will; for otherwiſe repentance, properly ſpeaking, does not belong unto God: the Targum is, "he turned from the word he ſpake;" the threatening he had denounced.

℣. 19. And it came to paſs when the judge was dead, &c.] Any one of them, the firſt and ſo all ſucceeding ones: that they returned; to their evil ways and idolatrous practices, from which they reformed, and for which they ſhewed outward repentance during the life of the judge; but he dying, they returned again to them: and corrupted themſelves more than their fathers; in Egypt and in the wilderneſs; or rather, than their fathers that lived in the generation after the death of Joſhua; and ſo in every generation that lived before a judge was raiſed up to deliver them out of the evils brought upon them; the children of thoſe in every age ſucceſſively grew worſe than their fathers: in following other gods to ſerve them, and to bow down unto them; not content with the idols their fathers ſerved, they ſought after and found out others, and were more conſtant and frequent in their worſhip and ſervice of them, and increaſed their ſacrifices and acts of devotion to them: they ceaſed not from their own doings; or, did not let them fall [b]; but retained them, and continued in the practice of them, being what they were naturally inclined unto and delighted in: nor from their ſtubborn way; which they were bent upon, and determined to continue in: or their hard way [c]; which their hard hearts had choſen, and they obſtinately perſiſted in, being obdurate and ſtiff-necked; and which, in the iſſue, they would find hard, troubleſome, and diſtreſſing to them, though at preſent ſoft and agreeable, and in which they went on ſmoothly; but in time would find it rough and rugged, offenſive, ſtumbling and ruinous; or it may ſignify a hard beaten path, a broad road which multitudes trod in, as is the way of ſin.

℣. 20. And the anger of the Lord was hot againſt Iſrael, &c.] As at firſt, ſo whenever they fell into idolatry; ſee ℣. 14. and he ſaid, becauſe this people have tranſgreſſed my covenant which I commanded their fathers; made at Sinai, in which they were enjoined to have no other gods before him: and have not hearkened to my voice; in his commands, and particularly what related to his worſhip and againſt idolatry.

℣. 21. I alſo henceforth will not drive out any from before them, &c.] At leaſt not as yet, not very ſoon nor haſtily, as in ℣. 23. of the nations which which Joſhua left when he died; that is, unſubdued; which was owing either to the infirmities of old age coming upon him, which made him incapable of engaging farther in war with the Canaanites; or to the ſloth and indolence of the people, being weary of war, and not caring to proſecute it; or to want of men to cultivate any more land, and people other cities, than what they were poſſeſſed of; and chiefly this was owing to the providence of God, who had an end to anſwer hereby as follows.

℣. 22. That through them I may prove Iſrael, &c.] Afflict them by them, and ſo prove or try them, their faith and patience, which are tried by afflictions; and ſuch were the Canaanites to them, as afflictions and temptations are to the ſpiritual Iſrael of God; or rather, whether they would keep in the ways of God, or walk in thoſe the Canaanites did, as follows: whether they will keep the way of the Lord as their fathers did keep it, or not; whether they would worſhip the true God their fathers did, or the gods of the Canaanites; not that the Lord was ignorant of what they would do, and ſo made the experiment; but that the ſincerity and faithfulneſs, or inſincerity and unfaithfulneſs of their hearts, might appear to themſelves and others.

℣. 23. Therefore the Lord left theſe nations without driving them out haſtily, &c.] Left them unſubdued, or ſuffered them to continue among the Iſraelites, and did not drive them out as he could have done; which was permitted, either that it might be ſeen and known whether Iſrael would give into the idolatry of theſe nations or not, ℣. 22. of which there could have been no trial, if they and their idols had been utterly deſtroyed; or becauſe the children of Iſrael had tranſgreſſed the covenant of the Lord, therefore he would drive no more of them out, but leave them to afflict and diſtreſs them, and thereby prove and try them, ℣. 20, 21. both ſenſes may very well ſtand, but the former ſeems rather to agree with what follows: neither delivered he them into the hand of Joſhua; having an end to be anſwered by them before ſuggeſted, namely, to prove and try Iſrael; and for a like reaſon, the indwelling ſin and corruptions of God's people are ſuffered to remain in them, for the trial of their graces, and that the power of God in the ſupport and deliverance of them might appear the more manifeſt.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter gives an account of the nations left in Canaan to prove Iſrael, and who became a ſnare unto them, ℣. 1—7. and of the ſervitude of Iſrael under the king of Meſopotamia for their ſins, from which they were delivered by Othniel, ℣. 8—11. and of their ſubjection to the Moabites, from which they were freed by Ehud, who privately aſſaſſinated the king of Moab, and then made his eſcape, ℣. 12—30. and of the deſtruction of a large number of Philiſtines by Shamgar with an ox-goad, ℣. 31.

℣. 1. Now theſe are the nations which the Lord left to prove Iſrael by them, &c.] Which are aftermentioned, ℣. 3, 5. even as many of Iſrael as had not known all the wars of Canaan; thoſe that Joſhua, and the people of Iſrael under him, had with the Canaanites, when they firſt entered the land and ſubdued it; being then not born, or ſo young as not to have knowledge of them, at leaſt not able to bear arms at that time.

℣. 2. Only that the generations of the children of Iſrael might know and teach them war, &c.] That is, the following nations were left in the land, that the young generations of Iſrael might by their wars and conflicts with them learn the art of war, and be inured to martial diſcipline; which, if none had been left to engage with, they had been ignorant of: beſides, their fathers in Joſhua's time, as Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve, had no need to learn the art of war, for God fought for them; they did not get poſſeſſion of the land by their own arm, and by their ſword, but by the power of God in a miraculous way; but now this was not to be expected, and the Canaanites were left among them to expel, that they might be trained up in the knowledge of warlike affairs, and ſo be alſo capable of teaching their children the military art; which they ſhould make uſe of in obeying the command of God, by driving out the remains of the Canaanites, and not give themſelves up to ſloth and indolence; though ſome think that the meaning is, that God left theſe nations among them, that they might know what war was, and the ſad effects of it; and the difference of fighting with their enemies alone, as other men, and the Lord fighting along with them, and for them, as he did for their fathers: at leaſt ſuch as before knew nothing thereof; being either unborn, or at an age uncapable of bearing arms, or learning the art of war.

℣. 3. Namely, five lords of the Philiſtines, &c.] The places they were lords of were Gaza, Aſhdod, Aſhkelon, Gath, and Ekron; ſee Joſh. xiii. 3. three of theſe, Gaza, Aſhkelon, and Ekron, had been taken from them by Judah, ſince the death of Joſhua, ch. i. 18. but they ſoon recovered them again, perhaps by the help of the other two. The Philiſtines were a people originally of Egypt, but came from thence and ſettled in theſe parts, and were here as early as in the times of Abraham, and were very troubleſome neighbours to the Iſraelites in after-times; ſee Gen. x. 14. and xxi. 33. and all the Canaanites; theſe were a particular tribe or nation in the land ſo called, which inhabited by the ſea, and by the coaſt of Jordan, Numb. xiii. 29. otherwiſe this is the general name for the ſeven nations: and the Sidonians; the inhabitants of the famous city of Sidon, which had its name from the firſt-born of Canaan, Gen. x. 15. and the Hivites that dwelt in mount Lebanon; on the north of the land of Canaan: from mount Baal-Hermon; the eaſtern part of Lebanon, the ſame with Baal-Gad, where Baal was worſhipped: unto the entering-in of Hamath; the boundary of the northern part of the land, which entrance led into the valley between Libanus and Antilibanus; ſee Numb. xxxiv. 8. Joſh. xi. 3. and xiii. 5.

℣. 4. And they were to prove Iſrael by them, &c.] They were left in the land as to inure them to war, and try their courage, ſo to prove their faithfulneſs to God: to know whether they would hearken to the commandments of the Lord, which he commanded their fathers by the hand of Moſes; even all the commandments of the Lord delivered to them by Moſes, moral, civil, and ceremonial, and particularly ticularly thoſe that concerned the deſtruction of the Canaanites, their altars, and their idols, Deut. vii. 1, 5.

℣. 5. And the children of Iſrael dwelt among the Canaanites, &c.] As if they had been only ſojourners with them, and not conquerors of them; and dwelt by ſufferance, and not as proprietors and owners; ſuch were their ſloth and indolence, and ſuch the advantage the inhabitants of the land got over them through it, and through their compliances with them; and this was the caſe not only of one ſort of them, the Canaanites, but of the reſt: the Hittites, and Amorites, and Perizzites, and Hivites, and Jebuſites; who all had cities in the ſeveral parts of the land, with whom the children of Iſrael were mixed, and with whom they were permitted to dwell.

℣. 6. And they took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their ſons, &c.] The Iſraelites intermarried with the inhabitants of the land, contrary to the expreſs command of God, Deut. vii. 3. whereby they confounded their families, debaſed their blood, and were enſnared into idolatry, as follows: perhaps to theſe unlawful marriages in their firſt ſettlement in the land of Canaan, reference is had in Ezek. xvi. 3. thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite; an Amorite marrying a daughter of Iſrael, and an Iſraelitiſh man an Hittite woman: and ſerved their gods; this was the natural conſequence of their intermarriages, which the Lord foreſaw, and therefore cautioned them againſt them, Exod. xxxiv. 15, 16. Deut. vii. 3, 4.

℣. 7. And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Both by marrying with heathens, and worſhipping their gods: and forgot the Lord their God; as if they had never heard of him, or known him, their maker and preſerver, who had done ſo many great and good things for them: and ſerved Baalim and the groves; of Baalim, ſee ch. ii. 11. the groves mean either idols worſhipped in groves, as Jupiter was worſhipped in a grove of oaks, hence the oak of Dodona; and Apollo in a grove of laurels in Daphne: there were uſually groves where idol-temples were built; and ſo in Phœnicia, or Canaan, Dido the Sidonian queen built a temple for Juno in the midſt of the city, where was a grove of an agreeable ſhade [d]: ſo Barthius [e] obſerves, that moſt of the ancient gods of the heathens uſed to be worſhipped in groves. And groves and trees themſelves were worſhipped; ſo Tacitus ſays [f] of the Germans, that they conſecrated groves and foreſts, and called them by the names of gods. Groves are here put in the room of Aſhtaroth, ch. ii. 13. perhaps the goddeſſes. of that name were worſhipped in groves; and if Diana is meant by Aſtarte, Servius [g] ſays that every oak is ſacred to Jupiter, and every grove to Diana; and Ovid [h] ſpeaks of a temple of Diana in a grove. But as they are joined with Baalim, the original of which were deified kings and heroes, the groves may be ſuch as were conſecrated to them; for as the ſame writer obſerves [i], the ſouls of heroes were ſuppoſed to have their abode in groves; ſee the notes on Exod. xxxiv. 13. and Deut. vii. 5. It was in this time of defection, that the idolatry of Micah and of the Danites, and the war of Benjamin about the Levite's concubine happened, though related at the end of the book; ſo Joſephus [k] places the account here.

℣. 8. Therefore the anger of the Lord was hot againſt Iſrael, &c.] Becauſe of their idolatry; ſee ch. ii. 14, 20. and he ſold them into the hand of Chuſhan-riſhathaim, king of Meſopotamia; or Aram-naharaim; that is, Syria, between the two rivers, which were Tigris and Euphrates; hence the Greek name of this place is as here called Meſopotamia. Joſephus [l] calls him king of Aſſyria, and gives him the name of Chuſarthus; and indeed Cuſhan-riſhathaim ſeems to be his whole name, though the Targum makes Riſhathaim to be an epithet, and calls him Cuſhan, the wicked king of Syria; the word is of the dual number, and ſignifies two wickedneſſes; which, according to the myſtical expoſition of the Jews [m], refers to two wicked things Syria did to Iſrael, one by Balaam the Syrian, and the other by this Cuſhan. Mr. Bedford [n] thinks it may be rendered, "Cuſhan, king of the two wicked kingdoms;" the Aſſyrian monarchy being at this time like two kingdoms, Babylon being the metropolis of the one, and Nineveh of the other; but it is a queſtion whether the monarchy was as yet in being. Hillerus [o] makes Cuſhan to be an Arab Scenite, from Hab. iii. 7. and Riſhathaim to denote diſquietudes; and it repreſents him as a man very turbulent, never quiet and eaſy, and ſo it ſeems he was; for not content with his kingdom on the other ſide Euphrates, he paſſed over that, and came into Canaan, to ſubject that to him, and add it to his dominions. Kimchi ſays that Riſhathaim may be the name of a place, and ſome conjecture it to be the ſame with the Rhiſina of Ptolemy [p]; but it ſeems rather a part of this king's name, who came and fought againſt Iſrael, and the Lord delivered them into his hands: and the children of Iſrael ſerved Cuſhan-riſhathaim eight years; became tributaries to him during that ſpace of time, but when that began is not eaſy to ſay. Biſhop Uſher [q] places it in A. M. 2591. and before Chriſt 1413.

℣. 9. And when the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, &c.] Towards the cloſe of the eight years bondage, as it may be ſuppoſed, groaning under the oppreſſive taxes laid upon them, and the bondage they were brought into: and the Lord raiſed up a deliverer to the children of Iſrael; he heard their cry, and ſent them a ſaviour, whoſe ſpirit he ſtirred up, and whom he qualified for this ſervice: who delivered them; out of the hands of the king of Meſopotamia, and freed them from his oppreſſions: even Othniel, the ſon of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother; the ſame that took Debir, and married Achſah, the daughter of Caleb, ch. i. 12, 13. who now very probably was a man in years.

℣. 10. And the ſpirit of the Lord came upon him, &c.] Moved him to engage in this work of delivering Iſrael, inſpired him with courage, and filled him with every needful gift, qualifying him for it; the Targum interprets it the ſpirit of prophecy: it ſeems rather to be the ſpirit of counſel and courage, of ſtrength and fortitude of body and mind: and he judged Iſrael; took upon him the office of a judge over them, and executed it; very probably the firſt work he ſet about was to reprove them for

for their ſins, and convince them of them, and reform them from their idolatry, and reſtore among them the pure worſhip of God; and this he did firſt before he took up arms for them: and he went out to war; raiſed an army, and went out at the head of them, to fight with their oppreſſor: and the Lord delivered Cuſhan-riſhathaim into his hand; gave him the victory over him and his army, ſo that he fell into his hands, became his captive, and perhaps was ſlain by him.

℣. 11. And the land had reſt forty years, &c.] As it ſhould ſeem from the time of this deliverance; though according to Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel, the eight years ſervitude are to be included in them; and biſhop Uſher [r] reckons theſe forty years from the reſt firſt ſettled in the land by Joſhua; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt: and Othniel the ſon of Kenaz died; not at the end of the forty years; it is not likely he ſhould live ſo long, but when he died is not certain; Euſebius [s] ſays he judged Iſrael fifty years.

℣. 12. And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Fell into idolatry again, which was a great evil in the ſight of God, and what they were prone to fall into: and the Lord ſtrengthened Eglon the king of Moab againſt Iſrael; put it into his heart to invade them, and encouraged him to it, and gave him ſucceſs; what kings reigned over Moab between Balak and this king, we know not: it is a commonly received notion of the Jews, that Ruth was the daughter of Eglon; ſee Ruth i. 4. and it was about this time that Elimelech with his two ſons went into Moab, and when many of thoſe things recorded in the book of Ruth were tranſacted: becauſe they had done evil in the ſight of the Lord; which had greatly provoked him to anger, and was the cauſe of ſtirring up the king of Moab againſt them.

℣. 13. And he gathered unto him the children of Ammon and Amalek, &c.] Either the Lord gathered them to Eglon, inclined them to enter into a confederacy with him, to aſſiſt in the war againſt Iſrael; or the king of Moab got them to join with him in it, they being his neighbours, and enemies to Iſrael, and eſpecially Amalek: and went and ſmote Iſrael; firſt the two tribes and a half, which lay on that ſide Jordan Moab did, whom it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe he would attack firſt; and having defeated them, he came over Jordan: and poſſeſſed the city of the palm-trees; Jericho, as the Targum, which was ſet with palm-trees; ſee Deut. xxxiv. 3. Judg. i. 16. not the city itſelf, for that was deſtroyed by Joſhua, and not rebuilt until the time of Ahab; but the country about it, or, as Abarbinel thinks, a city that was near it; here Joſephus ſays [t] he had his royal palace; it is probable he built a fort or garriſon here, to ſecure the fords of Jordan, and his own retreat; as well as to keep up a communication with his own people, and prevent the tribes of the other ſide giving any aſſiſtance to their brethren, if able and diſpoſed to do it.

℣. 14. So the children of Iſrael ſerved Eglon king of Moab 18 years;] Ten years longer than they ſerved the king of Meſopotamia, as a ſeverer correction of them for their relapſe into idolatry.

℣. 15. But when the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, &c.] After being long oppreſſed, and groaning under their burdens, and brought to a ſenſe of their ſins, and humiliation for them, they aſked forgiveneſs of God, and deliverance from their bondage; for it is very probable they were until towards the cloſe of thoſe years ſtupid and hardened, and did not conſider what was the reaſon of their being thus dealt with: the Lord raiſed them up a deliverer; another ſaviour, one that he made uſe of as an inſtrument of their deliverance: Ehud the ſon of Gera a Benjamite, a man left-handed; who is deſcribed by his parentage, a ſon of Gera, but who his father was is not known; by his tribe a Benjamite, in which Jericho was, Eglon poſſeſſed, and ſo might be more oppreſſed than any other part; and therefore the Lord ſtirred up one of that tribe to be the deliverer; and by his being a left-handed man, as ſeveral of that tribe were, ch. xx. 16. though a Benjamite ſignifies a ſon of the right hand; and he perhaps was one of thoſe left-handed Benjamites that fled to the rock Rimmon, as Dr. Lightfoot [u] conjectures ch. xx. 47. for that affair, though there related, was before this: the ſeptuagint verſion calls him an ambidexter, one that could uſe both hands equally alike; but the Hebrew phraſe ſignifies one that is ſhut up in his right hand [w]; who has not the true uſe of it, cannot exerciſe it as his other hand, being weak and impotent, or contracted through diſuſe, or ſome diſeaſe; or, as Joſephus [x] expreſſes it, who could uſe his left hand beſt, and who alſo calls him a young man of a courageous mind, and ſtrong of body, and ſays he dwelt at Jericho, and was very familiar with Eglon, and who by his gifts and preſents had endeared himſelf to all about the king: and by him the children of Iſrael ſent a preſent unto Eglon the king of Moab; either their yearly tribute, or rather a gift unto him, to ſoften him, and reconcile him to them, and make their bondage eaſier; or to give him acceſs to him with more confidence and ſafety, though it does not ſeem that they knew any thing of Ehud's deſign.

℣. 16. But Ehud made him a dagger, which had two edges, of a cubit length, &c.] A little ſword, as Joſephus call it [y], with two edges, that it might cut both ways, and do the execution he deſigned by it, and was about half a yard long; which he could the more eaſily conceal, and uſe for his purpoſe: and he did gird it under his raiment; that it might not be ſeen, and give occaſion of ſuſpicion; this was a military garment, the ſagum, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, which was coarſe, and made of wool, and reached to the ancle, and was buttoned upon the ſhoulder, and put over the coat [z]; the ſeptuagint makes uſe of a word Suidas [a] interprets a coat of mail: upon his right thigh; whereas a ſword is more commonly girt upon the left; though ſome obſerve, from various writers, that the eaſtern people uſed to gird their ſwords on their right thigh; or this was done that it might be the leſs diſcernible and ſuſpected, and chiefly as being moſt convenient for him, a left-handed man, to draw it out upon occaſion.

Joſephus ſays [b], and who doubtleſs bore the preſents; for that there were ſuch with him that did is clear from the following verſe; nor can it be thought that ſo great a perſonage as a judge in Iſrael, ſhould go alone and carry a preſent in his own hands; though it is poſſible when come to the king of Moab, he might take it from his ſervants, and deliver it to him with his own hands: and Eglon was a very fat man; and ſo the leſs active, and unable to decline and avoid the ſtroke, he might ſee, when about to be given him.

℣. 18. And when he had made an end to offer the preſent, &c.] Had delivered the ſeveral things contained in it, and very probably made a ſpeech to the king in the name of the people of Iſrael from whom he brought it: he ſent away the people that bare the preſent; not the ſervants of Eglon that introduced him, as if they aſſiſted in bringing in the preſent to the king; for over them he could not have ſo much power, as to diſmiſs them at pleaſure; but the children of Iſrael that came along with him, and carried the preſent for him: theſe he diſmiſſed, not in the preſence of the king of Moab, but after he had taken his leave of him, and when he had gone on ſome way in his return home; and this he did for the greater ſecrecy of his deſign, and that he might when he had finiſhed it the more eaſily eſcape alone, and be without any concern for or care of the ſafety of others.

℣. 19. But he himſelf turned again from the quarries that were by Gilgal, &c.] For ſo far he accompanied the men that came with him. Theſe quarries were places where they dug ſtones and hewed them, according to the Targum, and moſt Jewiſh writers; but ſome render the word engravings, and underſtand them of inſcriptions engraved on pillars here, which remained from the times of Seth the ſon of Adam; of which ſee more on ℣. 26. but according to the Vulgate Latin, and other verſions, graven images or idols are meant, which the king of Moab ſet up here in contempt of the Iſraelites, it being a place where the ark remained ſome time, and circumciſion had been performed; or in order to draw them into idolatry, thoſe idols perhaps being made of the twelve ſtones they had ſet up there; or rather in honour of his gods, to invoke their aſſiſtance when he firſt entered into the land, or by way of gratitude and thankfulneſs for the ſubduing of it: and this 'tis thought by ſome ſtirred up the ſpirit of Ehud, and cauſed him to turn back, reſolving to avenge this prophaneneſs: and ſaid; when he came to the palace of the king of Moab, and into his preſence: I have a ſecret errand unto thee, O king; which he had forgot when with him before, as he might pretend; or ſomething new had occurred unto him to acquaint him of, and which required privacy: who ſaid, keep ſilence; that is, the king of Moab ſaid ſo either to Ehud, to be ſilent until he had ſent out his ſervants that were about him, that they might not hear the ſecret; or to a perſon or perſons that were ſpeaking to him, whom he bid to deſiſt and depart, it being his pleaſure to hear Ehud before them; ſo Ben Gerſom; but the former ſenſe rather ſeems beſt: and all that ſtood by him went out from him; his ſervants, his courtiers that were waiting upon him, or ſuch as were admitted into his preſence, to have audience of him, and deliver their meſſages, or make their petitions to him.

℣. 20. And Ehud came unto him, &c.] Somewhat nearer him than he was before; it ſeems probable that Eglon retired from the preſence-chamber, where he received company, into his ſummer parlour; which was ſmaller and more private, and in which he had uſed to be alone as follows, and whither Ehud went in unto him, as he directed him: and he was ſitting in a ſummer-parlour, which he had for himſelf alone; into which he was wont to go and ſit alone, for the ſake of coolneſs and refreſhment in the hot ſeaſon of the year, which it ſeems it now was; a room this was, in which, as Kimchi and others obſerve, were many windows to let in air to cool and refreſh; or it was in ſuch a part of the palace, that was cool and ſheltered from the heat of the ſun; ſee Amos iii. 15. and Ehud ſaid, I have a meſſage from God unto thee; which was to kill him; and undoubtedly he was ſent of God on this errand to him: whether it be rendered a word or thing from God, as it ſignifies both, it was true, and no lie; for it was the Lord that ſpoke to him by an impulſe on his ſpirit, and the thing was from the Lord he was to do, for nothing leſs could have juſtified him in ſuch an action; and therefore this inſtance can be no warrant for the aſſaſſination of princes; as Ehud did not this of himſelf, but of the Lord, ſo neither did he do it as a private man, but as a judge of Iſrael. Joſephus [c] ſays, he told him that he had a dream at the order of God to declare unto him; but for this there is no warrant; however it ſeems pretty plain that his view in making mention of the name of God, and of Elohim, a name given to falſe gods as well as the true, rather than Jehovah, was to ſtrike his mind with awe and reverence, and cauſe him to riſe from his ſeat, that he might the better thruſt him with his dagger; and it had the deſired effect: and he aroſe out of his ſeat; in reverence of God, from whom he expected to receive a meſſage; this he did, though in his mind a blind, ignorant idolater; in his body fat, corpulent, and unweildy; and in his office a king, and a proud and tyrannical man. The above writer ſays, that for joy at the dream he was to hear, he roſe from his throne.

℣. 22. And the haft went in after the blade, &c.] The handle of the dagger, as well as the blade; ſo ſtrong and violent was the thruſt, he determining to do his buſineſs effectually: and the fat cloſed upon the blade; being an exceſſive fat man, the wound made by the dagger cloſed up at once upon it, through the fat: ſo that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly; being not able to take hold of the haft or handle, that having ſlipt in through the fat after the blade, ſo that he was obliged to leave it in him: and the dirt came out; the margin of our bibles is, it came out at the fundament; that is, the dagger did, the thruſt being ſo ſtrong and vehement; but that is not ſo likely, the dagger being ſo ſhort, and Eglon a very fat man. The Targum is, "his food went out;" which was in his bowels; but as the wound was cloſed up up through fat, and the dagger ſtuck faſt in it, it could not come out that way: rather therefore this is to be underſtood of his excrements, and of their coming out at the uſual place, it being common for perſons that die a violent death, and indeed others, to purge upon it; ſome, as Kimchi obſerves, interpret it of the place where the guards were, the guard-room, through which Ehud went out, but that is expreſſed in another word in the following verſe; the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, he went out in haſte, that is, Ehud.

℣. 23. Then Ehud went forth through the porch, &c.] Which the Targum interprets by exedra, a place, as Kimchi, where there were many ſeats, either for the people to ſit in whilſt waiting to have admittance into the preſence of the king, or where the guards ſat, and may be called the guard-room; through this Ehud paſſed with all ſerenity and compoſure of mind imaginable, without the leaſt ſhew of diſtreſs and uneaſineſs in his countenance, being fully ſatisfied that what he had done was right, and according to the will of God: and ſhut the doors of the parlour upon him, and locked them; joined the doors of the parlour, as the Targum, the two folds of the door, ſhut them cloſe together upon Eglon within the parlour, and bolted them within, or drew the bolt on the inſide, which he was able to do with a key for that purpoſe; of which ſee more on ℣. 25. and which it is probable he took away along with him; this muſt be underſtood as done before he went through the porch, and therefore ſhould be rendered, when or after he had ſhut the doors, &c. [e] wherefore in the Vulgate Latin verſion this clauſe is put firſt.

℣. 24. When he was gone out, his ſervants came, &c.] When Ehud was gone through the porch, and out of the palace, the ſervants of Eglon, who had been put out, came to the parlour-door to reaſſume their former place, and finiſh their buſineſs with the king, or in order to wait upon him as uſual: and when they ſaw, that behold the doors of the parlour were locked; which they ſuppoſed were done by the king himſelf within-ſide, having no ſuſpicion of Ehud: they ſaid, ſurely, or perhaps, as Noldius [f] renders it, he covereth his feet in his ſummer-chamber; that is, was eaſing nature; and as the eaſtern people wore long and looſe garments, when they ſat down on ſuch an occaſion, their feet were covered with them; or they purpoſely gathered them about their feet to cover them, and ſo this became a modeſt expreſſion for this work of nature, ſee 1 Sam. xxiv. 3. though ſome think that in that place, and alſo in this, is meant lying down to ſleep; and that Eglon's ſervants ſuppoſed, that he had laid himſelf down on his couch in his ſummer-chamber to take ſleep, when it was uſual to cover the feet with long garments, to hide thoſe parts of nature, which otherwiſe might be expoſed; and it muſt be owned, that this ſeems more agreeable to a ſummer-parlour than the former, and better accounts for the ſervants waiting ſo long as they did; and Joſephus [g] is expreſs for it, that his ſervants thought he had fallen aſleep. Indeed, the Jews in after-times uſed the phraſe in the firſt ſenſe [h], which ſeems to be taken from hence.

℣. 25. And they tarried until they were aſhamed, &c.] And knew not what to think of it, or what methods to take to be ſatisfied of the truth of the matter, and what ſhould be the meaning of the doors being kept locked ſo long: and behold, he opened not the doors of the parlour; this was what ſurprized them, and threw them into this confuſion of mind, that they knew not what courſe to take for fear of incurring the king's diſpleaſure, and yet wondered the doors were not opened for ſo long a time: therefore they took a key and opened them; this is the firſt time we read of a key, which only ſignifies ſomething to open with; and the keys of the ancients were different from thoſe of ours; they were ſomewhat like a crooked ſickle [i], which they put in through a hole in the door, and with it could draw on or draw back a bolt, and ſo could lock or unlock within ſide; ſee Cant. v. 4, 5. and at this day the keys in the eaſtern countries are unlike ours. Chardin [k] ſays, that a lock among the eaſtern people is like a little harrow, which enters half way into a wooden ſtaple, and the key is a wooden handle with points at the end of it, which are puſhed into the ſtaple, and ſo raiſe this little harrow: and behold, their lord was fallen dead on the earth; lay proſtrate on the floor of the parlour dead.

℣. 26. And Ehud eſcaped while they tarried, &c.] While the ſervants of the king of Moab tarried waiting for the opening of the doors of the parlour, this gave him time enough to make his eſcape, ſo as to be out of the reach of purſuers; or elſe the ſenſe is, that even when they had opened the doors, and found the king dead, whilſt they were in confuſion at it, not knowing what to aſcribe it to, the dagger being incloſed in the wound, and perhaps but little blood, if any, iſſued out, being cloſed up with fat, and ſo had no ſuſpicion of his being killed by Ehud; but rather ſuppoſing it to be an accidental fall from his ſeat, and might call in the phyſicians to examine him, and uſe their ſkill, if there were any hopes of recovery; all which prolonged time, and facilitated the eſcape of Ehud: and paſſed beyond the quarries, and eſcaped to Seirath; he got beyond the quarries, which were by Gilgal, which ſhows that it could not be at Jericho, where the king of Moab was, as Joſephus thinks, but either in his own country beyond Jordan, though no mention is made of Ehud's croſſing Jordan, or however ſome place nearer the fords of Jordan; ſince Gilgal, from whence he returned, and whither he came again after he had killed the king of Moab, lay on that ſide of Jericho, which was towards Jordan; and this Seirath he eſcaped to, was in or near the mountain of Ephraim, as appears from the next verſe, but of it we have no account elſewhere; but it is thought by ſome learned men [l] to be the place where Seth's pillars ſtood, and they to be the engravings here ſpoken of, which we tranſlate quarries: the words of Joſephus [m] are, that the poſterity of Seth, who very much ſtudied aſtronomy, having heard that Adam foretold the deſtruction of the univerſe, at one time by fire, and at another by water, erected two pillars, one of ſtone, and the other of brick, on which they inſcribed their inventions (in aſtronomy) that they might be preſerved, and which remain to this day in the land of Siriad; but this account of Joſephus ſeems to be taken from a fabulous relation of Manetho, the Egyptian, and is abundantly confuted by Dr. Stillingfleet [n]. Jarchi interprets this of Seirath, a thick thick wood or foreſt, the trees of which grew as thick as the hair on a man's head, and ſo a proper place to eſcape to, and hide in; it may be it was the woody part of the mount Ephraim, ſee Joſh. xvii. 18.

℣. 27. And it came to paſs when he was come, &c.] That is, to Seirath, in the tribe of Ephraim: that he blew a trumpet in the mountain of Ephraim; which being an high mountain, the ſound of the trumpet was heard afar off; and if Ehud's deſign was known to the Iſraelites, what he intended to do, this might be the token agreed on, ſhould he ſucceed. to call them together, ſee Jer. xxxi. 6. and the children of Iſrael went down with him from the mount, and he before them; being there aſſembled together, and which might be the place before appointed for their rendezvous, and where and when he took the command of them, and went before them as their general.

℣. 28. And he ſaid unto them, follow after me, &c.] This he ſaid to encourage them, putting himſelf at the head of them, ſhewing himſelf ready to expoſe his own life, if there was any danger: for the Lord hath delivered your enemies the Moabites into your hands; which he concluded from the ſucceſs he had had in cutting off the king of Moab, which had thrown the Moabites into great confuſion and diſtreſs, and from an impulſe on his mind from the Lord, aſſuring him of this deliverance: and they went down after him; from the mountain of Ephraim: and took the fords of Jordan towards Moab; where the river was fordable, and there was a paſſage into the country of Moab, which lay on the other ſide Jordan; this they did to prevent the Moabites, which were in the land of Iſrael, going into their own land upon this alarm, and thoſe in the land of Moab from going over to help them: and ſuffered not a man to paſs over; neither out of Iſrael into Moab, nor out of Moab into Iſrael.

℣. 29. And they ſlew of Moab at that time about 10,000 men, &c.] Who had been ſent into the land of Iſrael to keep it in ſubjection, or had ſettled themſelves there for their better convenience, profit and pleaſure; it is very probable there were ſome of both ſorts: all luſty, and all men of valour; the word for luſty ſignifies fat, living in eaſe for a long time, and in a plentiful country, were grown fat; and according to Ben Gerſom, it ſignifies rich men, ſuch as had acquired wealth by living in the land of Canaan; or who came over Jordan thither, and ſettled about Jericho, becauſe of the delightfulneſs of the place, and others were ſtout and valiant ſoldiers, whom the king of Moab had placed there to keep the land in ſubjection he had ſubdued, and to ſubdue what remained of it; but they were all deſtroyed: and there eſcaped not a man; for there being no other way of getting into the land of Moab, but at the fords of Jordan, they fell into the hands of the Iſraelites poſſeſſed of them, as they made up unto them.

℣. 30. So Moab was ſubdued that day under the hand of Iſrael, &c.] Or the Moabites were broken, as the Targum, that is, their forces in the land of Iſrael; for the land of Moab itſelf was not ſubdued and brought into ſubjection to the Iſraelites; but they were ſo weakened by this ſtroke upon them, that they could not detain the Iſraelites under their power any longer: and the land had reſt 80 years; which, according to Ben Gerſom, are to be reckoned from the beginning of their ſervitude, and that the reſt properly was but 62 years, and ſo both reſt and ſervitude were 80 years, as R. Iſaiah; and according to Abarbinel, the reſt was from the death of Othniel; and our biſhop Uſher [o] reckons this 80th year from the former reſt reſtored to it by Othniel; but others [p] are of opinion, that there were ſeveral judges at a time in ſeveral parts of the land, and that the land was at reſt in one part, when there was war in another; and ſo that at this time it was only the eaſtern part of the land that had reſt, while the weſtern parts were diſtreſſed by the Philiſtines, and the northern parts by Jabin king of Canaan, as in the following verſe, and ch. iv. 1.

℣. 31. And after him was Shamgar the ſon of Anath, &c.] That is, after the death of Ehud, when the people of Iſrael were in diſtreſs again from another quarter, this man was raiſed up of God to be a judge and deliverer of them; but who he was, and who his father, and of what tribe, we no where elſe read: which ſlew of the Philiſtines 600 men; who invaded the land, and came in an hoſtile manner into it; or rather as it ſeems from ch. v. 6. they entered as a banditti of thieves and robbers, who poſted themſelves in the highways, and robbed travellers as they paſſed, ſo that they were obliged to leave off travelling, or go through bye paths, and not in the public road; and this man, who ſeems to have been called from the plough to be a judge of Iſrael, as ſome among the Romans were called from thence to be dictators and deliverers of them from the Gauls: with an ox-goad; which he had uſed to puſh on his oxen with at ploughing, cleared the country of them, and with no other weapon than this ſlew 600 of them, either at certain times, or in a body together; which is no ways incredible, being ſtrengthened and ſucceeded by the Lord, any more than Samſon's ſlaying 1000 men with the jaw-bone of an aſs. So Lycurgus is ſaid to put to flight the forces of Bacchus with an ox-goad [q], which is ſaid to be done near Carmel, a mountain in Judea, which makes it probable that this is hammered out of the ſacred hiſtory; or that Shamgar and Lycurgus are the ſame, as Bochart conjectures [r]. The ox-goad, as now uſed in thoſe parts, is an inſtrument fit to do great execution with it, as Mr. Maundrel [s], who ſaw many of them, deſcribes it; on meaſuring them, he found them to be eight feet long, at the bigger end ſix inches in circumference, at the leſſer end was a ſharp prickle for driving the oxen, and at the other end a ſmall ſpade, or paddle of iron, for cleanſing the plough from the clay: and he alſo delivered Iſrael; from thoſe robbers and plunderers, and prevented their doing any further miſchief in the land, and ſubjecting it to their power, and ſo may very properly be reckoned among the judges of Iſrael; but how long he judged is not ſaid, perhaps his time is to be reckoned into the 80 years of reſt before mentioned; or, as Abarbinel thinks, into the 40 years of Deborah, the next judge; and who alſo obſerves, that their Rabbins ſay, Shamgar judged but one year.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter ſhows how that Iſrael ſinning was delivered into the hands of Jabin king of Canaan, by whom they were oppreſſed twenty years, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and that Deborah and Barak conſulted togther about their deliverance, ℣. 4—9. and that Barak, encouraged by Deborah, gathered ſome forces and fought Siſera the captain of Jabin's army, whom he met, and obtained a victory over, ℣. 10—15. who fleeing on foot to the tent of Jael, the wife of Heber, was received into it, and ſlain by her while aſleep in it, ℣. 16—22. which iſſued in a compleat deliverance of the children of Iſrael, ℣. 23, 24.

℣. 1. And the children of Iſrael again did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Which was the fruit and effect of the long reſt and peace they enjoyed; and which is often the caſe of a people favoured with peace, plenty and proſperity, who are apt to abuſe their mercies, and forget God, the author and giver of them; and the principal evil, though not expreſſed, was idolatry, worſhipping Baalim, the gods of the nations about them; though it is highly probable they were guilty of other ſins, which they indulged in the times of their peace and proſperity: when Ehud was dead; Shamgar is not mentioned, becauſe his time of judging Iſrael was ſhort, and the people were not reformed in his time, but fell into ſin as ſoon as Ehud was dead, and continued. Some chuſe to render the words, for Ehud was dead [t], who had been the inſtrument of reforming them, and of preſerving them from idolatry, but he being dead, they fell into it again; and the particle vau is often to be taken in this ſenſe, of which Noldius [u] gives many inſtances.

℣. 2. And the Lord ſold them, &c.] Delivered them into a ſtate of bondage and ſlavery, where they were like men ſold for ſlaves, ſee ch. iii. 8. into the hand of Jabin king of Canaan, that reigned in Hazor; there was a city of this name, and a king of it of the ſame name, as here, in the times of Joſhua, which city was taken and burnt by him, and its king ſlain, Joſh. xi. 1, 10, 11. and either the country about it is here meant, as Jericho in the preceding chapter is put for the country adjacent to it; or this city had been rebuilt, over which reigned one of the poſterity of the ancient kings of it, and of the ſame name; or Jabin was a name common to the kings of Canaan, as Pharaoh to the Egyptian kings; and by Canaan is meant, not the land of Canaan in general, but a particular part of it inhabited by that, or ſome of that nation or tribe, which was peculiarly ſo called: the captain of whoſe hoſt was Siſera; Jabin maintained a ſtanding army to keep the people of Iſrael in ſubjection, the general of which was Siſera, of whom many things are after ſaid: which dwelt in Haroſheth of the Gentiles; not Jabin, as many underſtand it, for he had his royal ſeat and reſidence in Hazor; but Siſera his general, and where the army under his command was. This place had its name, either becauſe it was built by ſome of divers nations, or inhabited by workmen of different countries; or rather it was a wood originally, as the name ſignifies, to which many of the ſeven nations of the Canaanites fled from before Joſhua, and hid and ſheltered themſelves, and in proceſs of time built ſtrong towers and fortreſſes in it, and became numerous and powerful; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes the words, "and he dwelt in the ſtrength of the towers of the people;" and in other times, as Strabo relates [w], the northern parts of the land of Canaan, as thoſe were, where Hazor and Haroſheth were, were inhabited by a mixed people, Egyptians, Arabians and Phœnicians; ſuch were they, he ſays, that held Galilee, Jericho, Philadelphia and Samaria.

℣. 3. And the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, &c.] Becauſe of their hard bondage, and begged deliverance from it, being brought to a ſenſe of their ſins, and humbled for them: for he had 900 chariots of iron; the ſame with the αρμαλα τα δρεπανηφορα, chariots which carried ſcythes at the ſide of them, faſtened to the orbs of the wheels [x], and were on both ſides; and in ſome ſtood out ten cubits [y], which running furiouſly among the infantry, cut them to pieces in a terrible manner; of which Cyrus had in his army at firſt but 100, afterwards increaſed to 300 [z]; and yet here a petty prince of Canaan had 900 of them; and which Joſephus [a] has increaſed, beyond all belief, to the number of 3000; which ſtruck great terror into the Iſraelites, and who therefore durſt not attempt to ſhake off his yoke, but cried to the Lord for help: 20 years he mightily oppreſſed the children of Iſrael; as they increaſed their ſins, and repeated their revolts, the Lord increaſed their oppreſſions, and continued them the longer; the firſt was only eight years, the next 18, and this 20, and which was a very heavy one; the other being foreign princes that oppreſſed them, but this a Canaanitiſh king, an implacable enemy, and who doubtleſs uſed them the more ſeverely for what they had done to his anceſtors, killed his father or grandfather, burnt the city of Hazor, and deſtroyed the inhabitants of it in Joſhua's time; and the ſervitude was the harder, and the more intolerable to the Iſraelites, that they were under a people whoſe land had been given them to poſſeſs, and whom they had expelled, and now were become ſubject to them.

℣. 4. And Deborah a propheteſs, the wife of Lapidoth, &c.] Deborah was a name common to women with the eaſtern people, ſee Gen. xxxv. 8. as Meliſſa, which is of the ſame ſignification with the Greeks, and both ſignify a bee; and to which Deborah anſwered in her induſtry, ſagacity and ſweetneſs of temper, to her friends, and ſharpneſs to her enemies: ſhe was a propheteſs, and foretold things to come, as the drawing of Siſera and his army to a certain place named by her, the victory that ſhould be gained over him, and the delivery of him into the hands of a woman. Who Lapidoth was, or what is meant by the name, is not certain; moſt take it to be the name of her huſband, which ſeems beſt, but who he was is not known; the Jews

Jews will have him to be the ſame with Barak, there being, as they think, ſome agreement in the names, Barak ſignifying lightening, and Lapidoth lamps; but the whole context ſhows the contrary, that he was not her huſband. Some render the words, a woman of Lapidoth, taking it for the name of her native place or habitation; but where there was a place of this name, no account can be given: ſome ſay ſhe was ſo called from her employment before ſhe was a propheteſs and judge, making wicks for the lamps in the ſanctuary, as Jarchi relates; and others take it to be expreſſive of her excellencies and virtues, which ſhone in her as lamps; the firſt ſenſe is beſt: ſhe judged Iſrael at that time; toward the cloſe of the twenty years oppreſſion under Jabin, being raiſed up of God as other judges were, and eminently endowed with gifts and grace; ſhe endeavoured to convince the people of their ſins, exhorted them to repentance, and was a means of reforming them, and adminiſtring juſtice and judgment in all caſes brought before her; and which Jabin might admit of, connive at, or take no notice of, ſhe being a woman, of whoſe growing power and intereſt he had no jealouſy.

℣. 5. And ſhe dwelt under the palm-tree of Deborah, &c.] Her dwelling-houſe was under a palm-tree, or rather ſhe ſat under one, in the open air, when the people came to her with their caſes, and it was called from hence after her name; though ſome, as Abarbinel obſerves, think it was ſo called, becauſe Deborah, the nurſe of Rebekah, was buried here, and which was near Bethel, one of the places next mentioned, ſee Gen. xxxv. 8. between Ramah and Bethel in mount Ephraim; which places were in the tribe of Benjamin in the borders of Ephraim, ſee Joſh. xvi. 2. and xviii. 22, 25. The Jews conclude from the ſituation of her, that ſhe was a very opulent woman; the Targum is, "ſhe was dwelling in a city in Ataroth, Deborah was ſupported of her own; ſhe had palm-trees in Jericho, orchards in Ramah, olives producing oil in the valley, a place of watering in Bethel, and white duſt in the king's mountain:" and the children of Iſrael came up to her; from all parts of the land to the mount of Ephraim: for judgment; to have her advice and counſel in matters of difficulty, and to have cauſes between contending parties heard and decided by her, ſo that ſhe might be truly reckoned among the judges.

℣. 6. And ſhe ſent and called Barak the ſon of Abinoam, out of Kedeſh-naphtali, &c.] So called to diſtinguiſh it from other places of the ſame name, this being in the tribe of Naphtali, and a city of refuge, Joſh. xx. 7. of which tribe and place Barak was, but who he and his father Abinoam were, we have no other account; it ſeems clear from hence, that he was not the huſband of Deborah, as the Jews ſay, or they would have lived together; tho' according to Ben Gerſom, ſhe lived ſeparate from him, becauſe of the ſpirit of prophecy that was upon her; however, in this miſſion and meſſage to Barak, ſhe acted not as a private perſon, but as a judge in Iſrael, and as having and exerciſing public power and authority: and ſaid unto him; when come to her upon her ſummons: hath not the Lord God of Iſrael commanded; can any doubt be made of it? can Barak in the leaſt queſtion it, as if ſhe ſhould ſay? the interrogation carries in it a ſtrong affirmation, that the Lord had commanded, and that he had commanded by her mouth: ſaying, go and draw toward mount Tabor; a mountain on the border of Zebulun, and between the tribes of Iſſachar and Naphtali, and ſo lay very convenient for the inhabitants of theſe tribes to meet here; of which ſee the note on Joſh. xix. 22. here Barak is directed to ſteer his courſe, and betake himſelf, and draw others with him by perſuaſive motives and arguments, urging the command of God by Deborah the propheteſs, and the aſſurance given from the Lord by her of victory over their enemies, and deliverance from them; for otherwiſe the children of Iſrael were in great fear of Jabin, becauſe of his large army, and iron-chariots: and take with thee 10,000 men of the children of Naphtali, and of the children of Zebulun? which were near at hand, and were the tribes which perhaps were moſt oppreſſed, and therefore more eaſily to be perſuaded to engage in this expedition; and the number of them is fixed, as being ſufficient for this ſervice, and whoſe hearts the Lord would engage in it, ſo that Barak would have little to do but to move it to them, and enforce it with proper arguments; and as they would willingly offer themſelves, as it appears afterwards they did, he was at once to take them with him to mount Tabor, on the top of which was a plain of 26 furlongs, as Joſephus [b] ſays, ſurrounded by a wall; though modern travellers make it much leſs, on which however he might draw up his army of 10,000 men, and muſter and exerciſe them.

℣. 7. And I will draw unto thee, &c.] Which are the words of the Lord by Deborah, as are the preceding, ſignifying, that by the ſecret and powerful influence of his providence he would ſo order things, and the circumſtances of them; and ſo powerfully operate on the mind and heart of the Canaaniteſh general as to engage him to come to the river Kiſhon, Siſera the captain of Jabin's army, with his chariots, and his multitude; called the ancient river, the river Kiſhon, ch. v. 21. According to Mr. Maundrel [c], the fountain of it was near the valley, at the bottom of mount Tabor, where Barak was to have his army in readineſs to attack Siſera; and which river, according to the ſame traveller [d], cuts his way down the middle of the plain of Edraelon, and then continuing his courſe cloſe by the ſide of mount Carmel, falls into the ſea at a place called Caypha; with which agrees the account of Mr. Sandys [e], who ſays it flows from the mountains of Tabor and Hermon, and gliding by the north ſkirts of Carmel, diſchargeth itſelf into the ſea. This river is ſuppoſed to be the Chorſæus of Ptolemy [f]: hither the Lord in his providence would incline the mind of Siſera to come with his large army and chariots, and give Barak an opportunity to fall upon him: and I will deliver him into thine hand; not his perſon only, but his numerous hoſts, and his 900 chariots.

℣. 8. And Barak ſaid unto her, &c.] To Deborah, after ſhe had delivered the words of the Lord unto him: if thou wilt go with me, then I will go; which ſhewed faith in the word of the Lord, for which he is commended, and a readineſs to do the will of God, and courage to engage in ſuch a work with a powerful adverſary, and is therefore reckoned among the heroes for faith, Heb. xi. 32. but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go; which though it might diſcover ſome weakneſs in him, yet ſhewed the high opinion he had had of Deborah as a judge of Iſrael, and propheteſs of the Lord; being deſirous that he might have her with him to pray to God for him, to give him advice and counſel on any emergency, ſhe being as the oracle of God; and whereby he teſtified his regard to the Lord, and to his preſence, which he concluded he ſhould have, the propheteſs being with hm; and more eſpecially his reaſon for inſiſting on her going with him, might be to prevail upon the inhabitants of Naphtali and Zebulun to go with him, who he might fear would not believe him, or pay any regard to his words, and be in dread of engaging with the enemy, unleſs ſhe was preſent; which he ſuppoſed would ſatisfy them as to the mind of God in it, and animate them, and give them heart and ſpirit.

℣. 9. And ſhe ſaid, I will ſurely go with thee, &c.] She made no heſitation about it, but agreed at once to go with him for his encouragement; perceiving ſome degree of weakneſs in him, and yet an hearty and ſincere inclination to engage in the work propoſed, and that this might be no hinderance, ſhe readily aſſents to it: adding, notwithſtanding the journey thou takeſt; the way or courſe he ſteered, the methods he took in inſiſting on it that ſhe ſhould go with him: ſhall not be for thine honour; as a general of an army, who is commonly ſolicitous to have the whole glory of an action: for the Lord ſhall ſell Siſera into the hand of a woman; meaning either herſelf, for ſhe being judge of Iſrael, and going along with him, would have the glory of the victory aſcribed to her, as uſually is to the principal perſon in the army; and ſo it would be ſaid in future time, that the Lord delivered Siſera and his army, not into the hand of Barak, but into the hand of Deborah, whereby he would not have all the honour which otherwiſe he would have, if ſhe went not with him; or elſe Jael, Heber's wife, is meant, into whoſe hands Siſera did fall, and by whom he was ſlain; but this ſeems to have no connexion with Deborah's going, or not going with him, it did not depend upon that one way or another; unleſs it can be thought that thus it was ordered in providence as a rebuke of his diffidence and weakneſs, that becauſe he would not go without a woman, Siſera ſhould fall not into his hands, but into the hands of a woman; and if ſo, this is a clear inſtance of Deborah's having a ſpirit of propheſy, and of a prediction of a future contingent event: and Deborah aroſe, and went with Barak to Kedeſh; that is, they went together from the palm-tree between Ramah and Bethel in mount Ephraim, to Kedeſh in mount Naphtali, in order to raiſe the 10,000 men that were to fight with Siſera.

℣. 10. And Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali to Kedeſh, &c.] This he did either by the ſound of a trumpet, as Ehud did, or by ſending meſſengers to them to collect 10,000 men from among them, which they accordingly did, and came to him in Kedeſh: and he went up with 10,000 men at his feet; they following him up to mount Tabor chearfully and readily, being all footmen; for the Iſraelites had no cavalry, and yet got the victory over Siſera's army, which, according to Joſephus [g], had 10,000 horſe in it: And Deborah went up with him; and his 10,000 footmen, to the top of mount Tabor, to encourage him and them with her preſence, and give her beſt advice when to deſcend and engage the enemy.

℣. 11. Now Heber the Kenite, &c.] A deſcendent of Kain, a principal man among the Midianites; the Targum calls him the Selmæan: which was of the children of Hobab the ſather-in-law of Moſes; who came along with the children of Iſrael through the wilderneſs into the land of Canaan, and firſt ſettled about Jericho, and then removed into the wilderneſs of Judah, ch. i. 16. had ſevered himſelf from the Kenites; which dwelt in the ſaid wilderneſs; to whom he belonged when this ſeparation was made, and on what account, is not certain. Aben-Ezra thinks, that it was done now, and with a deſign to help Iſrael, that hearing Barak was gone up to mount Tabor, and ſeeing Siſera prepared to fight with him, he made as if he was diſguſted with his own people, and ſeparated from them, that Jabin, with whom he was at peace, might the more confide in him; when it was out of love to Iſrael, and with a view to aſſiſt them, as occaſion ſhould offer, that he removed; but this is not very likely, as theſe Kenites were a people that kept themſelves from meddling with military affairs as much as poſſible: and pitched his tent unto the plain of Zaanaim, which is by Kedeſh; for theſe people dwelt in tents as the Midianites did, from whence they ſprung, and as the Scenite Arabs; and yet near to cities, as here, and in places fit for the paſturage of their cattle, in which they were chiefly employed, and here pitched upon a plain, where were fields and meadows: the Targum calls it a plain of pools, where were pools of water for the watering of their flocks; or rather it might be rendered the oak or grove of oaks of Zaanaim, the ſame with Allon-zaanannim in Joſh. xix. 33. ſee the note there. This place lay between Haroſheth of the Gentiles, from whence Siſera came, and mount Tabor, where Barak was. This little piece of hiſtory is inſerted here, partly to account for it, that there ſhould be any Kenites here, when we are told before they ſettled in the wilderneſs of Judah, and partly on account of the following narrative of Siſera being ſlain by this man's wife.

℣. 12. And they ſhewed Siſera, &c.] Either ſome of the Canaanites that dwelt near Tabor, or ſome ſpies that Siſera had out; though ſome think the Kenites told him, who were at peace with Jabin, ℣. 17. yet whether out of good-will or ill-will, cannot be ſaid: however, ſo it was ordered by the providence of God, that by ſome means or another Siſera ſhould be informed, that Barak the ſon of Abinoam was gone up to mount Tabor; and no doubt at the ſame time he was told the number of men that went with him; from whence he might well conclude, that ſuch a warlike man, with ſuch a force collected together, and having poſted himſelf in an high and ſtrong mountain, muſt have ſome deſign to cauſe a revolt of Iſrael from Jabin his prince.

℣. 13. And Siſera gathered together all his chariots, &c.] Or therefore he gathered them together, which might lie ſome in one place, and ſome in another, for the better quartering of the men that belonged to them: even 900 chariots of iron; and which, as before obſerved, are magnified by Joſephus, and made to be 3000: and all the people that were with him; his ſoldiers, Jabin's army, of which he was captain, and are called a multitude, ℣. 7. and which, the above writer ſays [h], conſiſted of 300,000 foot, and 10,000 horſe, beſides the iron-chariots: theſe he collected together, and brought with him, from Haroſheth of the Gentiles; tiles; the place where he reſided with his army, ℣. 2. unto the river of Kiſhon; which was near mount Tabor, the rendezvous of Barak and his men, ſee ℣. 6, 7.

℣. 14. And Deborah ſaid unto Barak, up, &c.] Not go up higher, for they were upon the top of a mountain; but riſe, beſtir thyſelf, prepare for battle, put the army in rank and file, and march and meet the enemy without delay: for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Siſera into thine hand; by a ſpirit of prophecy ſhe knew this was the preciſe day, the exact time in which it was the will of God this deliverance ſhould be wrought; and ſhe ſpeaks of it as if it was paſt, becauſe of the certainty of it, and the full aſſurance ſhe had of it, and Barak might have; nor is what ſhe ſays any contradiction to what ſhe had ſaid before, that Siſera ſhould be ſold or delivered into the hands of a woman, ℣. 9. for both were true, Siſera firſt fell into the hands of Jael, a woman, and then into the hands of Barak, and into the hands of both on the ſame day: is not the Lord gone out before thee? it was manifeſt he was, at leaſt to Deborah, who was fully aſſured of it, and therefore it became Barak and his men, and great encouragement they had to follow, ſince as the Lord went before them as their generaliſſimo, they might be ſure of victory: perhaps there might be ſome viſible appearance, ſome ſhining luſtre and ſplendor of the Shekinah, or divine majeſty; the Targum is, "is not the angel of the Lord gone out before thee, to proſper thee?" ſo Barak went down from mount Tabor, and 10,000 men after him; no mention is made of Deborah's coming down with them, perhaps ſhe ſtayed on the mountain till the battle was over; nor might Barak be urgent upon her now to go with him, being confident of ſucceſs, and having all the ends anſwered by her preſence, he could wiſh for.

℣. 15. And the Lord diſcomfited Siſera, and all his chariots, and all his hoſt, &c.] Frighted them, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, or diſturbed them with a noiſe and tumult, as the word ſignifies; with a noiſe in the heavens, which were in their ears, as Abarbinel obſerves, like the noiſe of a large army, as was the caſe of the Syrians, 2 Kings vii. 6. and they ſaw, he ſays, horſes and chariots of fire, and the like, which terrified them; and all this he ſuppoſes was done before Barak deſcended from the mountain, ſo that he had nothing to do when he came, but to purſue and kill, whereby it plainly appeared it was the Lord's doing. Joſephus [i] ſays, there was a great tempeſt of rain and hail, and the wind blew the rain in their faces, which ſo blinded their eyes, that their ſlings and arrows were of no uſe to them; and they that bore armour were ſo benumbed, that they could not hold their ſwords. Something of this kind is intimated by Deborah in her ſong, ch. v. 20. and this was accompanied or followed by a ſlaughter with the edge of the ſword before Barak; the fright and dread they were put into, was increaſed by the appearance of Barak, who fell upon them in their confuſion, and cut them to pieces: ſo that Siſera lighted down off his chariot, and fled away on his feet; being very probably ſwift of foot; and beſides thought it ſafeſt to quit his chariot, which in the confuſion was in danger of being run againſt by others; as alſo he might judge he ſhould not be ſo eaſily diſcerned who he was when on foot, as a common ſoldier, as in his ſplendid chariot; and this he might do in his fright, not conſidering his horſes were ſwifter than he: thus Homer repreſents a Trojan warrior leaping out of his chariot to eſcape Diomedes, and another as doing the ſame to get clear of Achilles [k].

℣. 16. But Barak purſued after the chariot, and after the hoſt, unto Haroſheth of the Gentiles, &c.] The place from whence they came, and to which they endeavoured to eſcape: but he followed them ſo cloſe all that way, and made ſuch havock of them, that all the hoſt of Siſera fell upon the edge of the ſword, and there was not a man left; no not one, excepting Siſera, as in the next verſe; or even to one [l], as in the original text; not one eſcaped to Hazor to acquaint Jabin of the loſs of his army. Philo Byblius ſays, that 997 thouſand of Siſera's army were ſlain.

℣. 17. Howbeit, Siſera fled away on his feet, &c.] Got off, and made his eſcape to the tent of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite; before ſpoken of, ℣. 11. and he made to that, becauſe he might think himſelf ſafer in a tent than in a town; and eſpecially in the tent of a woman, where he might imagine no ſearch would be made; for women of note, in thoſe times, had ſeparate tents, ſee Gen. xxiv. 67. and the rather he made his eſcape hither for a reaſon that follows: for there was peace between Jabin the king of Hazor, and the houſe of Heber the Kenite; which Jabin might the more readily come into, becauſe theſe were not Iſraelites, nor did they make any claim to the country, and lived only in tents, and attended their flocks, and were a quiet people, and not at all diſpoſed to war; and it might be ſo ordered by the providence of God, as a rebuke to the Iſraelites for their ſins, when thoſe who were only proſelytes kept cloſe to the worſhip of God, and ſo enjoyed liberty, peace and proſperity.

℣. 18. And Jael went out to meet Siſera, &c.] Seeing him coming, and knowing him full well, ſhe ſtept forward towards him, to invite him into her tent: ſome think ſhe was looking out, that if ſhe ſaw any Iſraelite in diſtreſs to take him in; and very probably had been ſome time at her tent-door, to enquire how the battle went, of which no doubt, living ſo near Kedeſh, ſhe knew was expected: and ſaid unto him, turn in, my lord; that is, into her tent: and ſhe addreſſes him with the title of lord, for the ſake of honour, having been general of a large army; and not becauſe her huſband was a ſervant, and in ſubjection to him, as Abarbinel ſuggeſts: turn in to me, fear not; ſhe repeats the invitation, to ſhew that ſhe was hearty and ſincere, and that he had nothing to fear from her, nor any in her houſe; and it may be at firſt ſhe had no thought of doing what ſhe afterwards did to him, it being put into her heart after this: and when he had turned in unto her in the tent; and laid himſelf down upon the ground, being weary: ſhe covered him with a mantle; either to hide him, ſhould any ſearch be made for him, or it may be to keep him from catching cold, being in a ſweat through his flight, and being alſo perhaps inclined to ſleep through wearineſs. The word for a mantle, according to Kimchi, ſignifies ſuch a garment which has locks of wool on both ſides of it, a ſort of rug, and ſo very fit to cover with, and keep warm. So David de Pomis [m] deſcribes it, as having locks and threads hanging down here and there.

℣. 19. And he ſaid unto her, give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink, for I am thirſty, &c.] Which might be occaſioned by the heat of the battle, and by the heat of the day, and by heat in running; he aſks for a little water, that being very deſirable by perſons athirſt. Some think he did not aſk for wine, becauſe he knew the Kenites did not drink any, and ſo of courſe kept none in their tents; but though this was the cuſtom of the Rechabites, who were the ſame with the Kenites, Jer. xxxv. 8. yet it is very probable this cuſtom had not yet obtained among them, ſince it was enjoined by Jonadab their father, who lived in the times of Jehu, 2 Kings x. 15. and ſhe opened a bottle of milk, and gave him to drink; which ſhe did either out of courteſy, being a better liquor, or with deſign to throw him into a ſleep, which milk inclines to, making heavy, as all the Jewiſh commentators obſerve; though Joſephus [n] has no authority to ſay, as he does, that the milk ſhe gave him was bad and corrupt: and covered him; again, after he had taken a draught of milk, which it ſeems ſhe poured into a diſh with the cream on it, ſee ch. v. 25.

℣. 20. And he ſaid unto her, ſtand in the door of the tent, &c.] This he ſaid, not in an imperious way, as ſome think, but by intreaty: and it ſhall be when any man ſhall come, and enquire of thee; ſeeing her at the door, and where he deſired ſhe would ſtand to prevent their coming into the tent: and ſay, is there any man here? any beſides what belongs to the family? or any of Siſera's army? that thou ſhalt ſay, no; there is no man; but to this ſhe made no anſwer that is recorded.

℣. 21. Then Jael Heber's wife took a nail of the tent, &c.] When ſhe perceived he was faſt aſleep, and it being now put into her heart to kill him, having an impulſe upon her ſpirit, which ſhe was perſuaded by the effect it had upon her, that it was of God; not filling her with malice and revenge, but a concern for the glory of God, the intereſt of religion, and the good of Iſrael, ſhe took this method to effect the death of this enemy of God, and his people; having no arms in the houſe, for the Kenites uſed none, ſhe took up an iron pin, with which her tent was faſtened to the ground: and took a hammer in her hand; which perhaps ſhe knew full well how to handle, being uſed to drive the pins of the tents into the ground with it: and went ſoftly unto him; leſt ſhe ſhould awake him: and ſmote the nail into his temples; as he lay on one ſide, theſe being the tendereſt part of the head, from whence they have their name in the Hebrew language, and into which therefore a nail, or iron pin might be more eaſily driven: and faſtened it into the ground; ſhe ſmote the nail with ſuch force and violence, that ſhe drove it through both his temples into the ground on which he lay, and then, as it ſeems from ch. v. 26. cut off his head, to make ſure work of it: for he was faſt aſleep and weary; and ſo heard not when ſhe came to him: ſo he died; not in the field of battle, but in a tent; not by the ſword, but by a nail; not by the hand of a man, but of a woman, as Deborah foretold, ℣. 9.

℣. 22. And behold, as Barak purſued Siſera, &c.] Knowing the way he took, at leaſt as he ſuppoſed: Jael came out to meet him; as ſhe did Siſera, but with greater pleaſure: and ſaid unto him, come, and I will ſhew thee the man whom thou ſeekeſt; for ſhe full well knew whom he was in purſuit of: and when he came into her tent; at her invitation: behold, Siſera lay dead, and the nail was in his temples; which ſhe did not attempt to draw out, but left it there, that it might be ſeen in what way ſhe had diſpatched him.

℣. 23. So God ſubdued on that day, Jabin king of Canaan, before the children of Iſrael.] Freed Iſrael from ſubjection to him, and delivered him into the hands of the Iſraelites; for Joſephus [o] ſays, that as Barak went towards Hazor, he met Jabin, and ſlew him; who perhaps having heard of the defeat of his army under Siſera, came forth with another againſt Iſrael, which being overcome by them, he was ſlain, and the city utterly deſtroyed, as the ſame writer ſays; but by what follows, it ſeems rather that the total conqueſt of him was afterwards and gradually accompliſhed.

℣. 24. And the hand of the children of Iſrael proſpered and prevailed againſt Jabin the king of Canaan, &c.] They continued their wars with him, in which they were ſucceſsful: until they had deſtroyed Jabin king of Canaan; took him, and put him to death, and took his cities, and deſtroyed the inhabitants of them, and ſo acted more agreeably to the declared will of God, that they ſhould not ſpare the Canaanites, but deſtroy them.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter contains a ſong of praiſe on account of the victories obtained over Jabin, and his kingdom; after an exhortation to praiſe is given, and kings excited to attend to it; the majeſtic appearance of God at Seir, on Sinai, is obſerved, to raiſe in the mind a divine veneration of him, ℣. 1—5. then the miſerable ſtate and condition Iſrael was in before theſe victories, and therefore had the more reaſon to be thankful, ℣. 6, 7, 8. the governors, and judges, and the people that were delivered, together with Deborah and Barak, are ſtirred up to rehearſe the righteous acts of the Lord, and bleſs his name, ℣. 9—13. and thoſe who willingly engaged in the war are praiſed, and ſuch who were negligent reproved, and ſome even curſed, ℣. 14—23. but Jael, Heber's wife, is particularly commended for her exploit in ſlaying Siſera, ℣. 24—27. and the mother of Siſera, and her ladies, are repreſented as wondering at his long delay, and as aſſured of his having got the victory, ℣. 28, 29, 30. and the ſong is concluded with a prayer for the deſtruction of the enemies of the Lord, and for the happineſs and glory of them that love him, ℣. 31.

℣. 1. Then ſang Deborah and Barak the ſon of Abinoam, &c.] Deborah is firſt mentioned, becauſe ſhe was, as Kimchi ſays, the root or foundation of the work, the chief perſon in it, both in the direction of the war, and in the compoſition of this ſong; and indeed, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, ſhe alone compoſed it, ſee ℣. 7. and the verb is ſingular:

[n] Ut ſupra.

gular: then ſung Deborah; and after her, and in her words, ſung alſo Barak; he joined with her, not in making the ſong, but in ſinging it; and ſo likewiſe the people of Iſrael joined with her in ſinging it, as they did with Moſes at the Red-ſea; and this ſong was ſung on that day; not on the preciſe day on which the victory was obtained over Siſera and his army, but on occaſion of that memorable day, and what followed upon it: ſaying; the following divine hymn or ſong, penned by Deborah, under divine inſpiration, as the ſublimity of the ſtile, the fine and noble thoughts and ſentiments that are in it, the beautiful and elegant phraſes in which they are expreſſed, abundantly ſhew; no Sappho, or any Grecian poeteſs, nor indeed any poet whatever, un-inſpired, being equal to the writer of this poem.

℣. 2. Praiſe ye the Lord for the avenging of Iſrael, &c.] The injuries done to Iſrael by any of their enemies, and particularly what wrongs had been done them by Jabin king of Canaan for 20 years paſt; though ſome underſtand it of the vengeance God took on Iſrael for their ſins; and though praiſe is not given directly for that, yet inaſmuch as when that was the caſe, there were ſome whoſe ſpirits were ſtirred up to engage voluntarily in the deliverance of them from the oppreſſion of their enemies, it was matter of praiſe: when the people willingly offered themſelves; to go and fight for Iſrael againſt their enemies, particularly thoſe of the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali, ℣. 18. tho' not excluding others that joined, who could not have been forced to it, had they not freely offered themſelves; and which was owing to the ſecret influence of divine providence on their hearts, moving and drawing them to this ſervice; and therefore praiſe was due to the Lord on this account, who works in the hearts of men both to will and to do, as in things ſpiritual and religious, ſo in things natural and civil.

℣. 3. Hear, O ye kings, give ear, O ye princes, &c.] Not only the neighbouring ones, but all the kings and princes of the earth, far and near, then and in ſucceeding ages; Deborah deſires and wiſhes that all potentates might hear of the wonderful works of God done for his people, that they might learn to know there is one that is higher than they, to whom all the amazing things done in the world are to be aſcribed; and be cautious how they oppreſſed the people of God, ſince ſooner or later he would avenge them on them. The Targum reſtrains this to the kings that came with Siſera and the governors with Jabin; but if there were any ſuch, as it is not improbable there were, ſee ℣. 19. yet it is moſt likely that they were ſlain with them: there are ſome, as Kimchi obſerves, who think this reſpects the people of Iſrael, who were all the ſons of kings; but the firſt ſenſe is beſt: I even I will ſing unto the Lord, I will ſing praiſe to the Lord God of Iſrael; which are the words of Deborah particularly, and the repetitions ſerve to expreſs how cordial, earneſt, and vehement ſhe was in her praiſe and thankfulneſs to God; thereby ſetting an example to others, encouraging them to the ſame practice, and directing perſons of every rank and quality to give praiſe only to Jehovah, the ſelf-exiſting, everlaſting, and unchangeable Being; to him who is the Lord and God of Iſrael in a peculiar manner, and not to any of the gods of the Gentiles.

℣. 4. Lord, when thou wenteſt out of Seir, when thou marchedſt out of the fields of Edom, &c.] Here properly begins the ſong, what goes before being but a preface to it; and it begins with an apoſtrophe to the Lord, taking notice of ſome ancient appearances of God for his people, which were always matter of praiſe and thankfulneſs; and the rather are they taken notice of here, becauſe of ſome likeneſs between them, and what God had now wrought; and this paſſage refers either to the giving of the law on Sinai, as the Targum and Jarchi; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 2. or rather, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and others, to the Lord's going before Iſrael, after they had encompaſſed the land of Edom, and marched from thence towards the land of Canaan, when they fought with Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, and conquered them; which ſtruck terror into all the nations round about them, and the prophecies of Moſes in his ſong began to be fulfilled, Exod. xv. 14, 15. and which dread and terror are expreſſed in the following figurative phraſes: the earth trembled; and the like figure Homer[a] uſes at the approach of Neptune, whom he calls the ſhaker of the earth, perhaps borrowed from hence; it may deſign the inhabitants of it, the Amorites, Moabites, Edomites, Philiſtines, Canaanites, and others: and the heavens dropped, the clouds alſo dropped water; which as it may literally refer to the ſtorm and tempeſt of rain that might be then as now; ſee ch. iv. 15. ſo may figuratively expreſs the panic great perſonages, comparable to the heavens and the clouds in them, were thrown into, when their hearts melted like water, or were like clouds diſſolved into it.

℣. 5. The mountains melted from before the Lord, &c.] The inhabitants of them through fear, the Lord going before Iſrael in a pillar of cloud and fire, and delivering mighty kings and their kingdoms into their hand: even that Sinai from before the Lord God of Iſrael; or, as that Sinai, the note of ſimilitude being wanting; and the ſenſe is, the mountains melted, juſt as the famous mountain Sinai in a literal ſenſe did, when it trembled and quaked at the preſence of God on it; the tokens of it, the fire and ſmoke, thunders, lightenings, and tempeſts there ſeen and heard; and which being obſerved, would call to mind the benefit Iſrael then received, which required praiſe and thankfulneſs, as well as would ſerve to expreſs the awe and reverence of God due unto him.

℣. 6. In the days of Shamgar, the ſon of Anath, &c.] Of whom ſee ch. iv. 31. who ſucceeded Ehud as a judge, but lived not long, and did not much; at leaſt wrought not a perfect deliverance of the children of Iſrael; but during his time till now, quite through the twenty years of Jabin's oppreſſion, things were as they are after deſcribed: in the days of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite; ſpoken of in the preceding chapter, who appears to be a woman of a maſculine ſpirit, and endeavoured to do what good ſhe could to Iſrael, tho' not a judge among them, as Jarchi ſuggeſts; and who before this affair of Siſera had ſignalized herſelf by ſome deeds of hers in favour of Iſrael, and againſt their enemies; yet far from putting a ſtop to the outrages committed; for in the times of both theſe perſons, the highways were unoccupied, and the travellers walked through by-ways; the public roads were ſo infeſted with thieves and robbers, who ſtopped all they met with, and robbed them of what they had, that travellers and merchants with their carriages were obliged either to to quit their employments, and not travel at all; or if they did, were obliged to go in private roads, and round-about ways, to keep clear of those rapparees the highways and public roads abounded with.

℣. 7. The inhabitants of the villages ceased, &c.] Not only did those Canaanitish robbers go upon the highway, and robbed all they met with, which made travelling difficult and dangerous; but entered into the villages and unwalled towns, and broke into houses and plundered them; so that the inhabitants of them were obliged to quit their dwellings, and go into the fortified cities for security; by which means the villages were left empty, and in time fell to ruin, and ceased: they ceased in Israel; for they were the villages which belonged to the Israelites that were plundered, and not those that belonged to any of the Canaanites; and these were the unhappy circumstances Israel were under until that I Deborah arose, that I arose a mother in Israel; until it pleased God to raise her up, and endow her in a very wonderful and extraordinary manner with gifts, qualifying her to be a nursing mother to Israel, to teach and instruct them in the mind and will of God, to administer judgment and justice to them, to protect and defend them, and in all which she discovered a maternal affection for them; and as a good judge and ruler of a people may be called the father of them, so she, being a woman, is with propriety called a mother in Israel, having an affectionate concern for them as her children: now, till she arose, there was no perfect salvation and deliverance wrought for them, since the death of Ehud, even throughout the days of Shamgar and Jael; which is observed to excite praise and thankfulness on the present occasion, which hereby became the more illustrious.

℣. 8. They chose new gods, &c.] That is, Israel, as most of the Jewish commentators interpret it; for the verb is singular, and Israel agrees well with it: this they did after the death of Joshua; it refers to their first idolatry, begun by Micah, ch. xvii. they chose other gods than the true God; Baalim and Ashtaroth they are said to serve, ch. ii. 11, 13. and iii. 7. and besides the gods of the Canaanites and Phœnicians, they sought after and introduced new ones from other places, or the same may be meant; since all besides the true God, the eternal Jehovah, the antient of days, and everlasting king, are new gods that lately sprung up; the Arabic and Syriac versions are, "God chose a new king;" so Ben Gersom; to perfect this wonder; for not only Sisera and his army were drawn to the gates of Israel to a proper place to fall in, but the victory was not obtained by Israel by their own force and strength; for they had no weapons of war, not a shield nor a spear, but for a very few men, but it was the Lord that fought for them in a new way; the former sense seems best, and agrees with what follows: then was war in the gates; when they fell into idolatry, then God suffered the judgment of war to come upon them, even into the gates of their fortified cities, which were the security of them, and where were their courts of judicature, but by war disturbed and made to cease: was there a shield or spear seen among 40,000 in Israel? though the number of the Israelites were several hundred thousands, yet there were not to be seen among them shields and spears sufficient for 40,000; or not one among 40,000 was armed; which was owing either to their negligence and sloth in not providing themselves with arms, or not taking care of them in a time of peace; so that when war came into their gates, they had nothing to defend themselves with, or annoy their enemies; or to their cowardice, not daring to take up a shield or spear in their own defence; or to the enemy, Jabin king of Canaan, having disarmed them that they might not be able to make a revolt from him, and recover their liberties. Ben Gersom refers it to the times of Joshua, when there was no need of a shield and spear among the 40,000 of the children of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh, that came over Jordan with him, since God fought for them; and the Targum seems to understand it of Sisera's army, that came against Israel with shields, spears, and swords; and makes the number of them to be in all 300,000, which is just the number of foot soldiers Josephus makes his army to consist of; and yet though so numerous, and so well armed, could not stand before Barak with 10,000 men only; see the note on ch. iv. 13. the words rather refer to the intestine war of the Benjamites with the Israelites, when 40,000 of the latter were killed, which was before the times of Deborah, ch. xx. 21, 25.

℣. 9. My heart is towards the governors of Israel, &c.] Most of the Jewish commentators interpret this of their wise men and scribes, who were willing to teach the people the law and the commandments, even in times of trouble, and did not cease from doing it on that account, and therefore Deborah praises them for it; so the Targum; but Kimchi and Ben Melech understand by them the great men of the nation, their nobles and rulers, who enacted good laws and statutes; or at least took care to see that the good laws they had were put in execution; and these had a share in the affections and good wishes of Deborah, and that chiefly for the following reason: that offered themselves willingly among the people; to go along with them, and march at the head of them, to fight Sisera and his army; thereby setting a good example, and animating the people to battle, and inspiring them with courage and intrepidity; when they saw their chiefs and the heads of them exposing their lives with them in defence of their country, and the rights of it: bless ye the Lord; for giving them such spirits, to engage so willingly in this service, and for giving them success in it.

℣. 10. Speak ye that ride on white asses, &c.] Though in some countries as in ours it is reckoned disgraceful to ride on asses; so Leo Africanus [b] makes mention of a preacher in Africa, who was called the ass-rider, because he was continually sitting on an ass; yet in Judea, where there were no horses, or very few, it was accounted honourable; so it was in the time of our Lord; for his riding on an ass to Jerusalem was not mean and disgraceful, but honourable and glorious: and so it certainly was in those early times of the judges; for we read of the sons of two of them, which were very numerous, that rode on asses colts, ch. x. 4. and xii. 14. and it seems that white asses were the most valuable, and chiefly used by great personages. The ass in the Hebrew language has its name from redness, that being the usual colour of them in those parts; and hence they were hateful to the Egyptians, because that their Typhon was of that colour [c]; but there were some that were white, as there are wild ones now of that colour. A traveller [d] in those parts in the beginning of the last century tells us, that on the banks of the Euphrates phrates they beheld every day great droves of wild beasts, as wild asses all white, &c. The word we translate white is Zecborot, and perhaps may describe the same animal the Ethiopians call Zecora, and some Zebra; said to excel in beauty all four-footed creatures in the whole world. It is an animal of the bigness of a mule, found in the woods beyond Abyssinia, is easily tamed, and is the frequent and chief present of the kings of that country; about its loins is a circle of a black colour, in the form of a girdle, which is followed with more on each side, according to the part of the body, some broader, others narrower, both black and white, or of an ash colour, so neat that they seem to exceed the art of the most eminent painter; its only deformity are its ears, which are long; hence it is called by the Portuguese the wild ass, tho' wrongly; of what value and esteem it was, appears from the large price it has been sold for; one that was the gift of a king to a Turkish governor, was sold to an Indian for 2000 pieces of Venetian money, to make a present of to the great Mogor, king of the Indians [e], which was the value of 900 pounds. Those that rode on these creatures were the princes and nobles of Israel; though they are generally interpreted by the Jewish commentators of merchants that rode from place to place about business; and these are called upon to speak of the wonderful things God had done for Israel, in freeing them from the bondage of the Canaanites, so that these nobles or merchants might ride about the country, without any fear; and to discourse of them to others, and in their meditations give praise to God on account of them: ye that sit in judgment; which seems to describe judges upon the bench, sitting to hear and try causes, and pass righteous judgment; these are also exhorted to give thanks to the Lord, that they were now restored to their seats of judgment, from which they were driven; or where they could not peaceably exercise their office, which they now might and did: Cocceius renders the word on measures, as if these were persons that presided over measures, and took care that they were just and right. Though Kimchi and Ben Melech say, that Middin, which we render in judgment, is either the name of a city in the book of Joshua, ch. xv. 61. see the note there; or the name of a way [f] well known in which they were afraid to go because of the enemy, but now went in it with safety, and therefore had reason to speak well of God, and praise his name; but this is rather intended in the next clause: and walk by the way; the common people that travelled from place to place on business, who before were obliged to leave the public roads, and go in by-ways, ℣. 6. but now could travel in the common road without fear, and therefore ought to be thankful.

℣. 11. They that are delivered from the noise of archers, in the place of drawing water, &c.] Meaning either the army of the Israelites, delivered from the archers of Sisera's host at the river Kishon; or such persons, as maidens and others, that went out of the cities to fountains and wells of water, to fetch water from thence for their necessities, but were frightened by the noise of archers that shot at them; or shepherds who led their flocks to water them there, but were repulsed or slain by archers that lay in wait in woods or lurking places thereabout; but now the country being cleared of them, they could without fear have recourse to these places of drawing water for their flocks or other uses, which laid them under obligation to do as directed in the next clause. The words are by some rendered, "because of the voice of those that number (sheep and other cattle) at the places of drawing water [g];" which now they could do, being a time of peace; and for which the persons before described ought to be thankful: there shall they rehearse the righteous acts of the Lord; coming to those places again, it would put them in mind to what hazards and dangers they had been exposed formerly by the enemy, but now were freed from; and this would lead them to discourse of and repeat the righteous dealings of God in taking vengeance on their enemies, and delivering them from them: even the righteous acts towards the inhabitants of his villages in Israel; they being now in no danger of having their houses broke open, and their substance plundered as before, ℣. 7. then shall the people of the Lord go down to the gates; either of their enemies, pursuing them unto them, as they did ch. iv. 16. or rather, to the gates of their own cities, where they had now free egress and regress; and those that were in the fortified cities, who had fled thither from the villages because of the rapine of the enemy, now would go down to the gates, and pass through them, and return to their villages again; or else the meaning is, that the people would now frequent as formerly the courts of judicature held in the gates of their cities, to have justice done them, and be in no fear of being disturbed by the enemy, as before.

℣. 12. Awake, awake, Deborah, awake, awake, utter a song, &c.] Either perceiving some languor and remissness in her spirits, whilst she was delivering this song, and therefore arouses herself to attend to this service with more ardour and zeal; or rather finding herself more impressed with a sense of the great and good things the Lord had done for Israel, calls upon her soul to exert all its powers in celebrating the praises of the Lord, and therefore repeats the word awake so often as she does: arise, Barak, and lead thy captivity captive, thou son of Abinoam; for though the whole army of Sisera was destroyed, that not a man was left, ch. iv. 16. yet as Barak pursued to Harosheth of the Gentiles, many there and in other places which fell into his hands, that belonged to Jabin, might be taken captive by him; and though the Canaanites were to be slain, yet they might first be led captive in triumph; and besides, there might be some of other nations that were taken by him in this war; see Ps. lxviii. 18.

℣. 13. Then he made him that remaineth, &c.] The people of Israel that remained, who had been under the yoke of Jabin king of Canaan, under which many of the Israelites very probably died; but now the few mean and miserable that remained, were raised to an high estate, and made to have dominion over the nobles among the people; that is, over the Canaanitish nobility, that were among the people under Jabin; but he being conquered by the Israelites, his people and even his nobles became subject to them; and this was the Lord's doing, as the following words shew: the Lord made me have dominion over the mighty; that is, Deborah, to whom God gave dominion either over the mighty ones of Israel, being raised up to be their judge; or over the mighty Canaanites, she having a concern in the conquest of them and triumph triumph over them, through her direction, advice, command, and preſence, though a woman.

℣. 14. Out of Ephraim was there a root of them againſt Amalek, &c.] In this and ſome following verſes, Deborah makes mention of the tribes that were aiding and aſſiſting in this war, and of thoſe that were not; and begins with Ephraim, where ſhe herſelf dwelt, ℣. 4, 5. who was the root, foundation, and ſource of this expedition, that under a divine influence directed, animated, and encouraged to it; and by whom, and from whence, a detachment was ſent againſt the Amalekites, who upon all occaſions were ready to aſſiſt the Canaanites, and now were about to do it; and to prevent their junction, a party was ſent from Ephraim, and by the Ephraimites; though the Targum, and the Jewiſh commentators in general refer this to a paſt action, which Deborah here commemorates and celebrates; and underſtand by root Joſhua, who was of that tribe, and who diſcomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the ſword, Exod. xvii. 13. after thee Benjamin among thy people; which the ſame Targum and the ſame writers interpret of a future fact, and as ſpoken of by way of prophecy; and ſuppoſe that Saul of the tribe of Benjamin is meant, and the people of Benjamin, the two hundred thouſand footmen he took with him, and fought againſt Amalek, and deſtroyed them, 1 Sam. xv. but it is rather to be underſtood of the tribe of Benjamin in general, which at this time went out againſt Amalek, to prevent their giving any aſſiſtance to Jabin king of Canaan, and who were followed in it by a party of the Ephraimites; ſo that Benjamin has the greateſt honour given it, partly as it was firſt in this affair, and partly as it was general, the whole tribe engaged, whereas only a few in Ephraim, and thoſe ſtimulated by the example of Benjamin: out of Machir came down governors; Machir was the only ſon of Manaſſeh, and therefore this muſt reſpect that tribe, half of which was ſettled on the other ſide Jordan, and to which Jarchi and other Jewiſh writers aſcribe this, and ſuppoſe it refers to the princes and great men of it, who ſubdued the Amorites, and took the 60 cities of Argob in the time of Moſes; though Kimchi and Ben Gerſom underſtand it of ſome of them that came from thence to aſſiſt in this war; but it is clearly ſuggeſted in ℣. 17. that they abode beyond Jordan, and gave no aſſiſtance at all; it therefore muſt be underſtood of the half tribe of Manaſſeh, within Jordan, from whence came great perſonages, with a number of men no doubt along with them, to lend an helping hand againſt the Canaanites, or to be employed as aſſiſtants under Barak in this expedition: and out of Zebulun they that handle the pen of the writer; which being a maritime tribe, and employed in trade and navigation, had many clerks famous for their readineſs in handling the pen; but theſe through a zeal for the common cauſe dropped their pens, and took to the ſword, in vindication of the rights and liberties of themſelves and their brethren; for which they are juſtly commended.

℣. 15. And the princes of Iſſachar were with Deborah, &c.] On mount Tabor, whither they came to offer themſelves to join in the war againſt Jabin; or to aſſiſt with their counſels, the men of this tribe being underſtanding of the times, to know what Iſrael ought to do, 1 Chron. xii. 32. even Iſſachar; not the princes only, but the whole tribe alſo; ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "the reſt of the tribe of Iſſachar:" and alſo Barak he was ſent on foot into the valley; which was at the bottom of mount Tabor, from whence he was ſent down by Deborah, when Siſera's army was come thither; and where he went chearfully on foot at the head of his 10,000 men, to engage Siſera with his horſe and chariots; and which latter were capable of doing great execution in the valley, by running among the foot, and cutting them in pieces with the ſcythes at the ſide of them; but Barak, fearleſs of danger, readily obeyed the command of the judge and propheteſs, believing it was of God: or the words may be rendered, as by Noldius [h], as Iſſachar, ſo Barak; he was ſent, &c. the one as the other, with equal readineſs and chearfulneſs, courage and intrepidity, deſcended the mountain, at the order of Deborah, and took the field in the open plain, to engage with Siſera and his numerous hoſt: for the diviſion of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart; either for their diviſions among themſelves in their own councils, ſome being for going over Jordan to aſſiſt their brethren the Iſraelites againſt Jabin, and free them from his yoke, pitying their diſtreſſed ſtate and condition; and others were for keeping at home, and taking care of their flocks, and not intermeddle in the quarrel; judging it to be moſt for their worldly peace and profit, to obſerve a neutrality: by reaſon of which diviſions no aſſiſtance was given. Or for their diviſions and ſeparations from their brethren the Iſraelites, from whom they were not only ſeparated by the river Jordan, but in their affections to them, and regards for them; keeping at a diſtance from them, when their help was required: and this conduct of theirs cauſed many thoughts of heart in Deborah and Barak, in the princes and people of Iſrael, who could not well underſtand the reaſon of it; and which cauſed much grief and uneaſineſs of mind, that ſo powerful a tribe, and who had been aſſiſting to them in the conqueſt of the land, and lay convenient to help them, yet ſhould be ſo very indifferent to them.

℣. 16. Why abodeſt thou among the ſheepfolds, to hear the bleatings of the flocks? &c.] This tribe abounded with flocks and herds, and therefore choſe the country on the other ſide Jordan, as ſuitable for them; and now at this critical juncture, they judged it wiſeſt, and their beſt policy, to abide by them, and the care of them; leſt by intermeddling, ſhould Jabin prevail, he might be provoked to fall upon them, and take them from them; wherefore the bleatings of their flocks, and the whiſtlings of the ſhepherds that kept them, ſounded louder in their ears, and more engroſſed their attention, than the groans and cries of Iſrael under oppreſſion; or than the ſoundings of the trumpet, the alarm of war, or the loud calls of Deborah and Barak; being under the influence of a carnal, worldly ſpirit, and wanting affection and ſympathy towards their brethren, about which Deborah here expoſtulates with them: for the diviſions of Reuben there were great ſearchings of heart; this is repeated to ſhew how much the propheteſs, the general of the army, the princes and people, were affected with this conduct of the tribe of Reuben; it gave them much pain and uneaſineſs, occaſioned many enquiries, cauſed much diſcourſe and converſation, and put them upon thinking, and greatly exerciſed their minds, what ſhould be the meaning of their behaving after this manner. Cocceius takes theſe words to be ſpoken ironically, and renders them, them, "at the rivers of Reuben were great men in ſearchings of heart;" there were wiſdom, prudence, counſel, ſearching and diſcerning of ſpirits, preferring their flocks to the people of God.

℣. 17. Gilead abode beyond Jordan, &c.] A country which lay on the other ſide Jordan, and was given by Moſes, half of it to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the other half to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, Deut. iii. 12, 13. and being here diſtinguiſhed from Reuben, it ſeems that not only that tribe, but alſo the tribe of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, on that ſide Jordan, came not to the help of Iſrael; but abode where they were, attending their flocks and herds, and preferring their own private profit to the public good; yet as Gilead was given to Machir, Deut. iii. 15. and ſome are ſaid to come out from thence to ſerve in this expedition, ℣. 14. ſome read the words, as Kimchi obſerves, with an interrogation, did Gilead abide beyond Jordan? no, he did not; though his ſituation was beyond it, as well as Reuben's, yet he did not continue there, but came over to help his brethren; and ſo this is introduced to upbraid Reuben, and leave him without excuſe, ſince he could as well have left his flocks as Gilead did, and come over to the help of his brethren as well as he: and why did Dan remain in ſhips? the Danites inhabiting Joppa, and other places bordering on the Mediterranean ſea, attended their navigation and merchandize; and which they choſe rather to do, than to appear in the field of battle in the behalf of their brethren; judging this to be a ſufficient excuſe, though the queſtion put implies the contrary; according to the Targum, they were meditating a flight, and put their goods into ſhips to flee with them, ſhould Siſera get the day: Aſher continued on the ſea-ſhore; on the ſhore of the Mediterranean ſea, attending traffick and buſineſs, and did not concern themſelves at all in this war: and abode in his trenches; in his towns and cities, the walls of which had been broken down by the Canaanites, and remained unrepaired, nor were they ſuffered to repair them; and therefore excuſed themſelves on this account from engaging in the war, being obliged to ſtay at home to keep and defend their cities; which were in ſuch a ruinous and weak condition, that the enemy might enter at any time: ſome render it, in their creeks[1]; bays and havens where they had much ſhipping, and which required their attendance.

℣. 18. Zebulun and Naphtali were a people, &c.] Theſe two tribes were chiefly concerned in this war; out of them were the 10,000 men that followed Barak, who willingly offered themſelves, and were the moſt active and vigorous: that jeoparded themſelves unto the death; expoſed them to the utmoſt danger, fearleſs of death itſelf: or reproached[k] their lives; were careleſs of them, valued them not; they were not dear to them, but were ready to part with them freely, in the cauſe of liberty in which they were engaged: in the high places of the field; on the top of mount Tabor, where they were muſtered, and from whence they beheld the vaſt hoſt of Siſera ſurrounding them; and yet, with an undaunted bravery and courage, deſcended the hill to fight with them. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, in the country of Merome; in the plains and fields of it, near which were the waters of Merom, where Joſhua fought Jabin, a former king of Canaan, and ſuppoſed by ſome to be the ſame with Kiſhon here, Joſh. xi. 5. ſee Pſ. lxxxiii. 9.

℣. 19. The kings came, &c.] Who were with Siſera, as the Targum adds; unleſs Deborah can be thought to refer to the battle, ſuppoſed to be fought about the ſame place, between Joſhua and the kings in confederacy with Jabin, Joſh. x. 1, 7. then fought the kings of Canaan in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo; the other kings of Canaan, which came into the aſſiſtance of Jabin, either in the times of Joſhua; or rather, which now joined Siſera's army, in thoſe places, which both belonged to Manaſſeh, but were in the tribe of Iſſachar, of which ſee the note on Joſh. xvii. 11. and were at ſome diſtance from each other, as appears by the villages and country around, and belonging to each; and ſuch was the largeneſs of Siſera's army, reinforced by thoſe kings, that according to the Targum it reached from Taanach to Megiddo; the ſame is obſerved by the Jewiſh commentators; the waters of Megiddo are the ſame with the river Kiſhon, which ran near the city: they took no gain of money; that is, either of Jabin king of Canaan, whom they came to ſerve; but freely engaged with him, and maintained their own troops, which they brought into the field, and had raiſed at their own expence; but according to Kimchi the ſenſe is, they took no money of the Iſraelites that fell into their hands, but ſlew them, would not ſave their lives, though they offered them money, being like the mercileſs Medes, Iſ. xiii. 17, 18. but rather the meaning is, that whereas they came big with expectation of a large booty among the Iſraelites, they were diſappointed, and obliged to flee without any.

℣. 20. They fought from heaven, &c.] Either the angels of heaven, afterwards called ſtars; or the heavens, the elements fought for Iſrael, and againſt Siſera; a violent ſtorm of rain and hail falling at this time, which diſcomfited Siſera's army; ſee the note on ch. iv. 15. or this victory was obtained in ſuch a manner, as plainly ſhewed it was not of man, but of God from heaven; ſo the Targum, "from heaven war was made with them;" with the kings before mentioned; God fought againſt them, and no wonder they were conquered: the ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera; it ſeems as if it was in the night that this battle was fought, at leaſt that the purſuit laſted till night, when the ſtars by their brightneſs and clear ſhining favoured the Iſraelites, and were greatly to the diſadvantage of the Canaanites; unleſs it can be thought, as is by ſome, that the ſtars had an influence to cauſe a tempeſt of rain, hail, thunder, and lightnings, by which the army of Siſera was diſcomfited in the day-time, as before obſerved.

℣. 21. The river of Kiſhon ſwept them away, &c.] To which Siſera's army was drawn, and where it was diſcomfited; and very probably many of them in their confuſion, endeavoured to make their eſcape by fording or ſwimming over the river, by which they were ſwept away and drowned, the waters of it at this time ſwelling in a miraculous manner, as Ben Gerſom thinks; or were increaſed by the large ſhowers of rain that fell, as ſome note from Joſephus, though I find it not in him; however it is not improbable it might be the caſe; for our countryman Mr. Maundrell[l] thus obſerved when he was at it; "in the condition we ſaw it, it's waters were low and inconſiderable; but paſſing along along the ſide of the plain, we diſcovered the track of many leſſer torrents falling down into it from the mountains, which muſt needs make it ſwell exceedingly upon ſudden rains, as doubtleſs it actually did at the deſtruction of Siſera's hoſt, Judg. v. 21." that ancient river, the river Kiſhon; called ancient, either becauſe it was from the beginning of the creation, and not cut by the art of men, as ſome rivers are; or becauſe it was ſpoken of by poets and hiſtorians in ancient times; or becauſe of famous exploits done here of old; ſo the Targum, "the river where ſigns and mighty works were done for Iſrael of old." Some take the word Kedumim to be another name of the river, ſo called from its windings and turnings, and, as it were, meeting itſelf. So ſome travellers tell us[m], the river Kedumim, the ſame with Kiſhon, is ſo called, becauſe it meets itſelf, being by its meanders formed like a ſling or nooſe, as Kiſhon ſignifies; it riſes at mount Tabor, and diſcharges itſelf into the Mediterranean ſea, at the foot of mount Carmel; ſo Hillerus[n] ſays, Kiſhon ſignifies bending in manner of a ſnare, or net, or meander, and takes it to be the ſame with the Pagida of Pliny[o], which in the Greek tongue ſignifies the ſame: O my ſoul, thou haſt trodden down ſtrength; a ſtrong and mighty army through her prayers and ſupplication, advice and direction; or thou haſt trodden with ſtrength, that is, the river Kiſhon, as ſome Jewiſh interpreters underſtand it, who ſuppoſe that another miracle was wrought; that as the waters of the river ſwelled when the Canaanites attempted to eſcape over it, ſo it ſunk and became fordable for Deborah and the Iſraelites; a miracle, as they ſuppoſe, ſomewhat ſimilar to that at the Red-ſea.

℣. 22. Then were the horſe hoofs broken by means of the pranſings, &c.] Either through the force of the waters of the river, where they pranſed and plunged, and could have no ſtanding; or thro' the ſwift haſte they made to run away, ſtriking the earth ſo quick, and with ſuch force and vehemence, that their hoofs were broken thereby, eſpecially on ſtony ground, and ſo their ſpeed retarded: the pranſings of the mighty ones; either their riders, princes and great perſonages, who made them pranſe, leap and run with great ſpeed and force; or horſes ſtrong and mighty, being ſuch as were ſelected for this purpoſe, and trained to war.

℣. 23. Curſe ye Meroz, ſaid the angel of the Lord, &c.] Not Barak, as the Targum and Jarchi, but Deborah herſelf ſaid this under a ſpirit of prophecy, not from her own ſpirit in a revengeful way, but from the Spirit of God; or this was ſuggeſted to her by an angel, not a created, but the increated one, the angel of the covenant, by whom ſhe was inſpired, and an impulſe made by him on her to denounce a curſe on Meroz; which ſome ſay was a ſtar, Siſera's ſtar; others the name of a mighy man[p], ſo Jarchi; but rather it is ſome name of a city or place near where the battle was fought, ſo Kimchi, Ben Gerſom and Ben Melech: ſome take Meroz to be the ſame with Merom, at the waters of which Joſhua fought with Jabin, Joſh. xi. 5. and ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the waters of Megiddo, and the river Kiſhon, where this battle was fought; and Jerom[q], under the word Merom, obſerves, that there was in his time a village called Merrus, 12 miles from the city Sebaſte near Dothaim, and that Meroz here is the name of a place, is clear from what follows: curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; or curſe curſing[r]; repeat it, give them curſe upon curſe, curſe them moſt vehemently: the reaſon of which follows: becauſe they came not to the help of the Lord; that is, of the people of the Lord, whoſe cauſe was the Lord's; for though he ſtood in no need of their help, yet their negligence and neutrality were highly reſented by him, and therefore repeated: to the help of the Lord againſt the mighty; the mighty Canaanites, and their mighty kings, and mighty hoſts; or with the mighty[s], Barak and his 10,000: now though others, who did not come into their aſſiſtance, are only diſcommended, being at a diſtance, yet thoſe are curſed being very near, and ſaw the peril their brethren were in, and yet would not lend an helping hand.

℣. 24. Bleſſed above women ſhall Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite be, &c.] Under the ſame influence that Meroz was curſed, Jael is bleſſed, the one for not helping Iſrael in a public way, the other for doing it in a private manner; this bleſſing is pronounced, either in a way of prayer that it might be, or in a way of prophecy that it ſhould be, and indeed in both: bleſſed ſhall ſhe be above the women in the tent; above all women that dwell in tents: this being a proper deſcription of a woman, whoſe character it is to abide in her tent, dwell at home, and mind the buſineſs of her family; and may have reſpect to the manly action ſhe performed in her tent, equal, if not ſuperior, to what was done in the field.

℣. 25. He aſked water, and ſhe gave him milk, &c.] That is, Siſera aſked it of her, as the Targum expreſſes it, when he turned into her tent: ſhe brought him freſh butter in a lordly diſh; which ſignifies either the ſame, the milk with cream on it, for that is meant by butter; or having firſt taken off the cream, ſhe gave him milk to drink, and then brought the cream in a diſh for him to eat, and thereby the more incline him to ſleep; and this ſhe brought in a diſh fit for any lord or nobleman to eat out of; in ſuch a polite and courteous manner did ſhe uſe him, ſo that he could have no ſuſpicion of her having any ill deſign againſt him. R. Jonah, as Kimchi notes, interprets this of a diſh of the mighty or lordly ones, of the ſhepherds, the principal of the flock, as they are called in Jer. xxv. 34, 35. out of which they had uſed to drink their milk, or eat their cream, and ſuch an one was likely enough to be in Jael's tent; from this Hebrew word ſepel, here uſed, ſeems to come the Latin word ſimpucium or ſimpulum, uſed in things ſacred, and which, according to Pliny[t], was an earthen veſſel; and ſo ſome of the Rabbins, as Kimchi obſerves, ſay, this was a new earthen vial; it is very probable, it was a broad platter or diſh fit for ſuch an uſe.

℣. 26. She put her hand to the nail, &c.] Her left-hand, as the Septuagint, Arabic and Vulgate Latin verſions expreſs it, and as appears by what follows; ſhe having taken up a pin from her tent, with which it was faſtened to the ground, ſhe clapped it to the temples of Siſera: and her right-hand to the workman's hammer; in her right-hand ſhe took an hammer, ſuch as carpenters, and ſuch like workmen make uſe of, and workman-like went about her buſineſs ſhe had deviſed, and was determined upon, being under a divine impulſe, and ſo had had no fear or dread upon her: and with the hammer ſhe ſmote Siſera; not that with the hammer ſhe ſtruck him on the head, and ſtunned him, but ſmote the nail ſhe had put to his temples and drove it into them: ſhe ſmote off his head; after ſhe had driven the nail through his temples, ſhe took his ſword perhaps and cut off his head, as David cut off Goliah's, after he had ſlung a ſtone into his forehead; though as this ſeems needleſs, nor is there any hint of it in the hiſtory of this affair, the meaning may only be, that ſhe ſtruck the nail through his head, as the Septuagint, or broke his head, as the Targum: when ſhe had pierced and ſtricken thro' his temples; that being the ſofteſt and tendereſt part of the head, ſhe drove the nail quite thro' them to the ground, ch. iv. 21.

℣. 27. At her feet he bowed, he fell, he lay down, &c.] Perhaps at her firſt approach to him, and attempt to drive the nail, or at the blow ſhe gave, he roſe up, but ſhe had done his buſineſs ſo effectually at the firſt ſtroke, that he dropt at once, and laid down his head again: at her feet he bowed, he fell; when ſhe redoubled her blow: where he bowed, there he fell down dead; and ſtruggled and ſtirred no more; thus inglorioufly did this general of a vaſt army die. This action is no otherwiſe to be juſtified, but by its being done through an impulſe of the Spirit of God upon her, to take away the life of an implacable enemy of God's people; otherwiſe it might ſeem to be a breach of hoſpitality towards her gueſt ſhe had invited in, and of the peace which ſubſiſted between this general's prince and her huſband; and therefore is not to be drawn into an example where there is no appearance of a divine warrant.

℣. 28. The mother of Siſera looked out at a window, &c.] Which perhaps looked towards the high road, in which ſhe expected Siſera to return in his chariot with his victorious army; and ſhe was looking out for him, not through fear of any ill that had befallen him, or ſuſpicion of bad ſucceſs, but through impatience to ſee him return in triumph, wreathed with laurels: and cried through the lattice; which is but another word for a window, which was not of glaſs, that being of a later invention, but made in lattice-form, in a ſort of net-work full of little holes to let in air and light, and look out at; here ſhe ſtood and cried with a very loud uneaſy tone; the word ſignifies a ſort of a groaning, howling noiſe, diſcovering impatience and uneaſineſs; and ſo the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions render it, ſhe howled: ſaying in a whining way, why is his chariot ſo long in coming? ſhe did not doubt at all of victory, and concluded it would ſoon be obtained, and there would be very little trouble and difficulty in getting it, and therefore wondered his chariot was not in ſight: why tarry the wheels of his chariots? the 900 he took with him, of the return of which ſhe made no doubt, only was uneaſy until they appeared, that ſhe might be delighted with the glory of the triumph; the Targum is, "why are the runners hindered, who ſhould bring me a letter of the victories?"

℣. 29. Her wiſe ladies anſwered her, &c.] Every one in their turn endeavouring to comfort her and make her eaſy. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, "one that was wiſer than the reſt of his wives;" but they ſeem rather to be her maids of honour, or ladies of her acquaintance, who were come to pay her a viſit, and ſhare in the pleaſing ſight they expected to have of Siſera: yea, ſhe returned anſwer to herſelf; before they could well give theirs, ſhe ſoon recollected herſelf what might be, and muſt be, the occaſion of this delay; and this, according to the Targum, ſhe made in her wiſdom, what her great wiſdom quickly ſuggeſted to her, was certainly the caſe, and with which ſhe comforted and quieted herſelf.

℣. 30. Have they not ſped? &c.] Or ſound[a] the enemy Barak and his army, or the ſpoil of them? no doubt they have: have they not divided the prey? doubtleſs they have, which being large, and the captives many, has taken up much of their time to look over, and make an equal and proper diviſion of, and that moſt certainly is the cauſe of the delay: to every man a damſel or two? or a womb or two[y], uſing both unchaſte and contemptuous language[x], and pleaſing themſelves with the virgins of Iſrael being abuſed by the common ſoldiers, which was too frequently the caſe with the heathens at gaining a victory: to Siſera a prey of divers colours, a prey of divers colours of needle-work, of divers colours of needle-work on both ſides; ſuits of clothes of different colours, ſuch as were the works of the women of Sidon[z], and thoſe curiouſly interwoven or wrought with a needle, and that on both ſides of the ſilk or ſtuff of which they were made; and ſo ſuch as were of great worth and eſteem, and ſuch it was expected, and with confidence and aſſurance of it, Siſera would bring with him, and make preſents of to his mother and her ladies, or which he would have for his own wear and uſe, or both: meet for the necks of them that take the ſpoil? the general of the army, and the chief men to whom the ſpoil was brought, and then divided ſuitable to the rank and quality of every ſoldier. Pliny[z] ſays, the Phrygians firſt invented the art of needle-work; hence the garments wrought, and thoſe that made them, were called after their name; but it is certain it was known by the ancient Hebrews and Canaanites, ſee Exod. xxvi. 36.

℣. 31. So let all thine enemies periſh, O Lord! &c.] As Siſera and his army did, and be diſappointed as his mother and her ladies were; which is not only a wiſh or prayer that it might be, but a prophecy that ſo it would be: but let them that love him; that love the Lord ſuperlatively and ſincerely, with all their heart and ſoul, and from love ſerve and fear him: be as the ſun when he goeth forth in his might; in the middle of the day, when its heat and light are the greateſt, and in the ſummer-ſolſtice in the month of June, when the ſun is in Cancer, as Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel obſerve, and it is hotteſt: the ſenſe is, let the true friends of God be as bright and as glorious, and increaſe in light, luſtre and ſplendor as that glorious luminary in mid-day, and be no more liable to be reſiſted and ſtopped by their enemies, and as much out of the reach of them as that is: and the land had reſt 40 years; theſe are not the words of Deborah, whoſe ſong ends with the laſt clauſe, but of the writer of this book; which years, according to moſt, are to be reckoned from the death of Ehud, including the 20 years bondage under Jabin, as Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel; ſo that ſtrictly ſpeaking the reſt was but 20 years; one would think they ſhould be reckoned from the victory obtained over Jabin king of Canaan.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter we have an account of the diſtreſſed condition Iſrael was in through the Midianites, ℣. 1—6. of a prophet being ſent unto them to reprove them for their ſins, ℣. 7—10. of an angel appearing to Gideon, with an order to him to go and ſave Iſrael out of the hands of the Midianites, ℣. 11—16. and of a ſign given him by the angel, whereby he knew this order was of God, ℣. 17—24. and of the reformation from idolatry in his father's family he made upon this, throwing down the altar of Baal, and building one for the Lord, ℣. 25—32. and of the preparation he made to fight the Midianites and others, ℣. 33, 34, 35. but firſt deſired a ſign of the Lord, that Iſrael would be ſaved by his hand, which was granted and repeated, ℣. 36—40.

℣. 1. And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] After the death of Deborah and Barak, during whoſe life they kept to the pure worſhip of God, and who perhaps lived pretty near the cloſe of the 40 years reſt, or of the 20 years from their victory over Jabin; but they dying, the children of Iſrael fell into idolatry, for that that was the evil they did, appears from ℣. 10. even worſhipping the gods of the Amorites: and the Lord delivered them into the hand of Midian ſeven years; this was not the Midian where Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes lived, which lay more ſouthward, but that which joined to Moab, and was more eaſtward. This people had been deſtroyed by the Iſraelites in the times of Moſes, in their way to the land of Canaan, Numb. xxxi. wherefore they might bear them a grudge, and now took the opportunity to revenge themſelves on them, God permitting them ſo to do for their ſins; and though the deſtruction of this people by Iſrael was very general, yet as ſome of them might make their eſcape, and afterwards return to their own land, and this being about 200 years ago, might, with others joining them, repeople their country by this time, and become ſtrong and powerful.

℣. 2. And the hand of Midian prevailed againſt Iſrael, &c.] They were too ſtrong for them, and overcame them, and brought them into ſubjection to them, and no wonder, when the Lord delivered them into their hand: and becauſe of the Midianites; becauſe of their uſage of them, their manner of coming upon them yearly, and pillaging and plundering their ſubſtance, as after related: the children of Iſrael made them dens which are in the mountains; the word for dens has the ſignification of light in it, and are ſo called either by an antiphraſis, becauſe they were dark, or, as Kimchi thinks, becauſe they had a window at the top of them, which let in the light [a]; but Ben Gerſom conjectures they were torches, which gave a great light, and when they that held them ſaw from the mountains the Midianites, by theſe torches they made a ſignal to the Iſraelites to take care and hide themſelves and their ſubſtance: and caves, and ſtrong holds; the caves were for the poorer ſort, and the ſtrong holds for the richer to retire to with their goods; tho', according to Jarchi, the latter were no other than fences they made in woods, by cutting down trees, and ſetting them round about them, perhaps much the ſame as the thickets, 1 Sam. xiii. 6.

℣. 3. And ſo it was when Iſrael had ſown, &c.] Their land, and it was grown up, and near being ripe or quite; for the Midianites gave them no diſturbance in the winter, and during ſeed-time, when they came out of their lurking holes, and manured their land, and ſowed it: that the Midianites came up; into the land of Canaan, from the other ſide Jordan, where their country lay, and which it ſeems lay lower than the land of Iſrael: and the Amalekites, and the children of the eaſt; the former were implacable enemies of Iſrael, and on every occaſion would join other nations in oppreſſing them; and the children of the eaſt were Arabians, as Joſephus [b] expreſsly affirms: even they came up againſt them; all theſe three ſorts of people in a confederacy.

℣. 4. And they encamped againſt them, &c.] Formed a camp, from whence they ſent out parties to plunder the people; or "they were fixing their tents among them," as the Vulgate Latin verſion; and ſo the Targum, "they dwelt by them," or fixed their habitations by them; for they ſeem not to have come as a regular army, but as a ſort of banditti to pillage, and plunder, and deſtroy the fruits of the earth; and the Midianites and Arabians dwelt in tents chiefly: and deſtroyed the increaſe of the earth; the corn and graſs before they were well ripe, and fit to cut down; this they did, and gave it to their cattle, and the reſt they carried off: till thou come unto Gaza; a principality of the Philiſtines, which lay in the weſtern part of Canaan, on the ſhore of the Mediterranean ſea; ſo that as theſe people came out of the eaſt, and entered the eaſtern part, they went through the whole land from eaſt to weſt, cutting down all the fruits of the earth for forage for their cattle: and left no ſuſtenance for Iſrael; nothing to ſupport life with, cutting down their corn and their graſs, their vines and olives, ſo that they had nothing to live upon: neither ſheep, nor ox, nor aſs; not any thing for thoſe creatures to live upon, nor did not leave any of them, but carried them all away.

℣. 5. For they came up with their cattle, and their tents, &c.] Brought their flocks and their herds with them, to eat up the increaſe of the earth, and their tents which they pitched and removed from place to place, for the conveniency of feeding their cattle, and whilſt they cut down the fruit of the earth every where, which ſerves to confirm the ſenſe of the Targum and Vulgate Latin verſion of ℣. 4. and they came as graſhoppers for multitude; or as locuſts [c], they were like them for their number, and for devouring all they came to; and their camels were without number; which they brought with them, to load and carry off their plunder they could not eat. Midian was a place far famous for camels and dromedaries, Isa. lx. 6. and so Arabia, the people of which joined the Midianites in this expedition; of whom Leo Africanus says [d], that they reckon of their riches and possessions by their camels; wherefore if any one speaks of the riches of such a prince or nobleman, he says, that he is possessed of so many camels, and not of so many thousands of pieces of gold, see Job i. 3. and they entered into the city to destroy it; this was their sole view. In such like manner as this did Alyattes king of the Lydians make war with the Milesians, as Herodotus [e] relates; which passage Grotius has quoted at large.

ver. 6. And Israel was greatly impoverished, because of the Midianites, &c.] Were reduced very low, brought into famishing circumstances through the Midianites thus destroying the fruits of the earth year after year: and the children of Israel cried unto the Lord; which they should have done at first, instead of going into dens and caves; however, better late than not at all: they cried, not to the idols they had served, being sensible they could not help them, tho' so foolish as to worship them; but to Jehovah the God of the whole earth, and who was in a special sense their God, tho' they had forsaken him.

ver. 7. And it came to pass when the children of Israel cried unto the Lord, because of the Midianites.] Because of their oppressions and ill usage of them, and not because of their sins, which had brought those evils on them, of which, at present, they seemed not to be sensible; and yet such was the goodness and compassion of God to them, that having a mind to deliver them, he immediately, on their crying to him, sends them a messenger to bring them to a sense of their sins, and prepare them for the deliverance he designed to work for them, as follows.

ver. 8. And the Lord sent a prophet unto the children of Israel, &c.] A man, a prophet [f], as in the Hebrew text, not an angel, but a man; and this not Phinehas, as say some Jewish writers [g]; for it is not probable he should live so long as more than 200 years; and had he been living, it is very much he should not have been heard of in the times of the preceding judges, and that he was not made use of before now to reprove the people for their sins; but who the prophet was, we have no account now nor hereafter, here or elsewhere. Abarbinel supposes, he was raised up for a short time: which said unto them, thus saith the Lord God of Israel; he came in the name of the Lord, and using the form and manner of speech the prophets of Israel did, putting them in mind of the true God they had forgot, and who yet was their Lord and God: I brought you up from Egypt, and brought you forth out of the house of bondage; reminding them of the benefits they received from God, and the obligations they lay under to serve him, who when they were bond-slaves in Egypt, he appeared for them, and brought them out of their miserable condition.

ver. 9. And I delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, &c.] Even after they were brought out of Egypt, when the Egyptians pursued after them, and overtook them at the Red Sea; where they were in the utmost distress, and the Lord wrought salvation for them, gave them a passage thro' it, and destroyed the Egyptians in it: and out of the hand of all that oppressed you; the Amalekites who made war with them at Rephidim, Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, who came out to fight with them, and oppose their passage thro' their land into Canaan, and the kings of the Canaanites also, who combined against them: and drave them out from before you, and gave you their land; not only the land of Sihon and Og, but the whole land of Canaan, out of which more properly the inhabitants of it may be said to be driven.

ver. 10. And I said unto you, I am the Lord your God, &c.] The Covenant-God of them and their fathers, and they ought not to have owned and acknowledged any other besides him: fear not the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell; meaning not a fear of being hurt by them, but such a fear and reverence of them, as to worship them, which was only to be given to the Lord. The Amorites are here put for all the Canaanites, they being a principal people among them: but ye have not obeyed my voice; to cleave to him, fear and worship him; they had been guilty of idolatry, and this is the sin the prophet was sent to reprove them for, and bring them to a sense of.

ver. 11. And there came an angel of the Lord, &c.] This was not the prophet before mentioned, as Ben Gersom thinks, but an angel of God, as expressed, and not a created one, but the angel of Jehovah's presence, the Word and Son of God, and who is expressly called Jehovah himself, ver. 14, 23, 24. and sat under an oak; or staid there a while, as Kimchi interprets it, seeing, according to his observation, angels are not said to sit but stand: which was in Ophrah, that pertaineth to Joash the Abiezrite; which shews that this Ophrah is different from a city of this name in the tribe of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 23. for the oak that was in it, under which the angel sat, belonged to Joash an Abiezrite, a descendant of Abiezer, son of the sister of Gilead, who was the son of Machir the son of Manasseh, Josh. xvii. 2. 1 Chron. vii. 17, 18, 14. it is called by Josephus [h] Ephra, and by Jerom [i] Ephrata: and his son Gideon threshed wheat by the wine-press, to hide it from the Midianites; lest they should take it away, and bereave his father's family of their sustenance, as they were wont to do, where-ever they could find it; and all circumstances attending this affair were on this account; he threshed it himself, this he chose to do, and not trust his servants, lest it should be discovered; and he beat the wheat out with a staff, that it might be more silently done, and not with oxen, which was the usual way of treading out corn, who bellowing [k], would discover it; and this was done not on a threshing-floor, but where a wine-press stood, where there could be no suspicion of such work being doing.

ver. 12. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him, &c.] He stayed some time under the oak, and Gideon being busy in threshing, took no notice of him, wherefore he came and stood before him, in his sight: and said unto him, the Lord is with thee; the gracious presence of God was with Gideon while he was threshing, who very probably was sending up ejaculations to heaven, on account of the distressed case of Israel, and was deep in meditation about the affairs of the people of God, and contriving how to deliver them; or the angel might mean himself, who was no other than Jehovah, hovah, the eternal Word of God, who was present with him, and ſpake unto him; and ſo the Targum, "my Word is thy help:" thou mighty man of valour; who very probably was a ſtout man in body, and of a courageous mind naturally, and might at this inſtant have an increaſe both of bodily ſtrength, and greatneſs of ſoul; or however, this was ſaid to animate and encourage him to do what he was about to be ſent to do.

℣. 13. And Gideon ſaid to him, oh my lord, &c.] Taking him not to be an angel, but ſome illuſtrious and eminent perſon: if the Lord be with us, why then is all this befallen us? all theſe troubles and calamities through the oppreſſion of the Midianites; for he underſtood what was ſaid to him in the ſalutation, reſpecting not himſelf perſonally and privately, but the people of Iſrael; and he could not tell how to reconcile the Lord's being with them, and yet ſuffering ſuch ſad things to befal them they groaned under: where be all his miracles which our fathers told us of, ſaying, did not the Lord bring us up from Egypt? when God was with his people, and brought them out of Egypt, he wrought miracles for them, whereby they were delivered out of their bondage; of this their fathers had aſſured them, but nothing of this kind was wrought for them now, and therefore there was no appearance of the Lord being with them, but all the contrary, as follows: but now the Lord has forſaken us, and delivered us into the hand of the Midianites; and there was good reaſon for it, becauſe they had forſaken the Lord, and worſhipped the gods of the Amorites.

℣. 14. And the Lord looked upon him, &c.] The ſame before called the angel of the Lord, and who was no other than Jehovah himſelf; who looked upon him with great earneſtneſs, and with great delight and pleaſure ſmiled upon him, and thereby ſhewing he had a kindneſs for him, and meant well to him: and ſaid unto him, go in this thy might; both of body and mind, which had been before given unto him, and was now increaſed, and which no doubt Gideon was ſenſible of: and thou ſhall ſave Iſrael from the hand of the Midianites; as he did, and therefore juſtly reckoned among the ſaviours and judges of Iſrael: have not I ſent thee? to do this great work, ſave the people of Iſrael, from whence Gideon might perceive who it was that talked with him, and having a command and commiſſion from God, had authority enough to go about this ſervice.

℣. 15. And he ſaid unto him, O my lord, &c.] Whether he had yet ſuſpected who he was, or took him ſtill for ſome eminent perſon, is not certain; it is very probable he began to think he was ſome extraordinary perſon ſent of God, and ſpeaking in his name, and therefore expoſtulates with him about the work he put him upon: wherewith ſhall I ſave Iſrael? in what way is it poſſible for me to do it, who had neither men nor money ſufficient for ſuch an undertaking? behold, my family is poor in Manaſſeh; of which tribe he was, and the thouſand in it, as the word [l] here uſed ſignifies, was the meaneſt of all the thouſands in that tribe; ſome render it, my father [m]: and I am the leaſt in my father's houſe; perhaps the youngeſt ſon; tho' ſome take him, and others his father, to be the Chiliarch, or head of the thouſand; but by theſe words of his, it does not ſeem as if either was true; not but that he was of ſome wealth and ſubſtance, power and authority, by having ſuch a number of ſervants as to take ten of them with him, ℣. 27. however, this he ſays in great humility and modeſty, having no high thoughts of himſelf and family, nor any dependence on his own ſtrength, and on an arm of fleſh.

℣. 16. And the Lord ſaid unto him, ſurely I will be with thee, &c.] The Targum is, "my Word ſhall be thy help," which was ſufficient to anſwer all objections taken from his meanneſs, unworthineſs and weakneſs: and thou ſhalt ſmite the Midianites as one man; all together, and as eaſily as if thou hadſt but one man to deal with, and the deſtruction be ſo entire and general, that none ſhall be left.
