℣. 17. And he ſaid unto him, if now I have found grace in thy ſight, &c.] Or ſeeing he had, as appeared by his ſalutation of him as a man of might, by the work he gave him a commiſſion to do, and by the promiſe of aſſiſtance and ſucceſs: then ſhew me a ſign that thou talkeſt with me; in the name of God, as a meſſenger ſent from him, whether an angel or a man; for who he was as yet Gideon was not clear in it, and that what he had ſaid was truth, and would be certainly fulfilled; and which Gideon might deſire, not ſo much, or at leaſt not only for his own ſake, and the confirmation of his faith, for which he is renowned, as that he might be able to ſatisfy others, that he had a commiſſion from God by a meſſenger of his, to attempt the deliverance of Iſrael.

℣. 18. Depart not hence, I pray thee, until I come unto thee, &c.] Intending to go to his own, or his father's houſe, to fetch ſome food to entertain him with, and therefore entreats he would not quit the place where he was, until he returned: and bring forth my preſent, and ſet it before thee; to treat him with, as a ſtranger and a meſſenger of God; and perhaps he thought, by this means, the better to diſcover who he was, whether an angel or a man: the word for the preſent is minchah, often uſed for a meat-offering, therefore ſome have thought of a ſacrifice; but it appears by what follows, that it was not of the nature of a ſacrifice; and beſides, Gideon was no prieſt, nor was this a place for ſacrifice, nor was there here any altar; and beſides, as Gideon did not yet know, that it was the Lord himſelf, he could never think of offering a ſacrifice to him: and he ſaid, I will tarry until thou come again; which was a wonderful inſtance of divine condeſcenſion, it being ſome time he waited ere Gideon could prepare what he brought, as follows.

℣. 19. And Gideon went in, &c.] Into his own houſe, or his father's: and made ready a kid; boiled it, as appears by the broth he brought, at leaſt part of it was ſo dreſſed; and perhaps it was only ſome part of one that he brought, ſince a whole one was too much to be ſet before one perſon, and if even he himſelf intended to eat with him: and unleavened cakes of an ephah of flour; that is, probably thoſe were made out of an ephah of flour; not that the whole ephah was made into cakes; ſince an omer, the tenth part of an ephah, was ſufficient for one man a whole day; and, according to the computation of Waſerus [n], an ephah was enough for 45 men for a whole day; unleſs it can be thought, that this was done to ſhow his great hoſpitality to a ſtranger, and the great reſpect he had for him as a meſſenger of God: the rather rather unleavened cakes were brought, becauſe of diſpatch, being ſoon made. Jarchi ſays, from hence it may be learned, that it was now the time of the paſſover, and the day of waving the ſheaf; but this is no ſufficient proof of it; beſides, if this was new wheat Gideon had been threſhing, it ſhows it to be about the wheat-harveſt, which was not till Pentecoſt; it was the barley-harveſt that began at the paſſover: the fleſh he put in a baſket; the fleſh of the kid which was boiled, or if any part of it was dreſſed another way, it was put by itſelf in a baſket for more eaſy and commodious carriage: and he put the broth in a pot; a brazen pot, as Kimchi interprets it, in which the kid was boiled; and this, as he ſays, was the water it was boiled in: and brought it out unto him under the oak; where he firſt appeared, and was now waiting the return of Gideon there: and preſented it; ſet it before him, perhaps upon a table, which might be brought by his ſervants, or on a ſeat, which was placed under the oak to ſit upon under its ſhade for pleaſure.

[l] אלפי chilias mea, Montanus, Druſius; mea millenaria, Tigurine verſion; mille meum, Piſcator. Pagninus; ſo ſome in Druſius. [m] Pater meus, [n] De Antiq. menſuris Heb. l. 2. c. 5. §. 9.

℣. 20. And the angel of God ſaid unto him, &c.] Inſtead of ſitting down and partaking of the entertainment made for him, he bid him do as follows: take the fleſh, and the unleavened cakes, and lay them upon this rock; not as a table to eat it from, but as an altar to offer it upon; and which rock and altar might be typical of Chriſt, who ſanctifies every gift, preſent and offering of his people: this rock was undoubtedly in ſight, and very probably the oak, under which they were, grew upon it, or at the bottom of it, where it was no unuſual thing for oaks to grow, Gen. xxxv. 8. but it was upon the top of the rock, that theſe were to be laid, where afterwards an altar was built, ℣. 26. and pour out the broth; upon the fleſh and cakes, and upon the rock alſo, which by bringing from his houſe muſt have been cool, and it became cooler by being poured out, and cooler ſtill by being poured upon a cold rock: and he did ſo; he readily obeyed his orders; though he had reaſon to wonder he ſhould have ſo ordered the food he brought for his entertainment to be thus made uſe of; perhaps he might expect, that he intended to give him a ſign as he deſired, and therefore the more readily, without any objection, complied with his order.

℣. 21. Then the angel of the Lord put forth the end of the ſtaff that was in his hand, &c.] With which he walked, appearing as a traveller, and which was one reaſon of Gideon's providing for his refreſhment, before he proceeded on in his journey: and touched the fleſh and the unleavened cakes; did not ſtrike the rock with it, as Moſes did with his rod, to fetch out water for the Iſraelites, but touched the proviſions brought him; not uſing it inſtead of a knife to ſeparate any part of them, but for the working of a miracle, as follows: and there roſe up fire out of the rock; had he ſtruck the rock with his ſtaff, the miracle would not have appeared ſo great, becauſe it might be thought there was an iron ferule at the end of it, which ſtriking on a flinty rock might cauſe fire; but it was the fleſh and cakes only that were touched, and theſe alſo as having broth poured on them, and the rock likewiſe: and conſumed the fleſh, and the unleavened cakes; though they had the broth poured on them, and were ſodden with it; ſo that the miracle was ſimilar to that wrought by Elijah on mount Carmel, 1 Kings xviii. 33—38. and thoſe who think that this angel was the man, the prophet before mentioned, and he, Phinehas, and Phinehas Elijah, are confirmed in their opinion by this likeneſs; tho' there is no ſufficient ground for it: then the angel of the Lord departed out of his ſight; not went on his journey as he might ſeem, but vaniſhed immediately; which circumſtance plainly ſhewed, and fully convinced Gideon, that he was not a man, but an angelic ſpirit, as well as the miracle wrought proved him to be more than a man; and ſo Gideon had what he deſired, a ſign that he might know who talked with him, and that what he talked of, would certainly come to paſs.

℣. 22. And when Gideon perceived he was an angel of the Lord, &c.] By the miracle wrought, and the manner of his departure: Gideon ſaid, alas! O Lord God; wo to me, what will become of me, or befal me, I ſhall ſurely die: for becauſe I have ſeen an angel of the Lord face to face; and whom he had reaſon to believe was the Lord himſelf, a divine perſon, by the miracle wrought; and it was a commonly received notion even among good men, in thoſe times, that the Lord was not to be ſeen by them and live, as appears from Jacob, Manoah, and others; at leaſt the appearance of a divine perſon, and even of any meſſenger from heaven was ſtartling, ſurprizing and frightful to them; which aroſe from a ſenſe they had of the divine being, and of their own ſinfulneſs and frailty.

℣. 23. And the Lord ſaid unto him, &c.] Either by a ſecret impulſe upon his ſpirit, or by a voice from heaven; and even, as Kimchi obſerves, the angel, after he aſcended, might cauſe this voice to be heard, ſeeing him in great fear, becauſe he knew he was an angel; and which is another proof of this angel being Jehovah himſelf, the eternal Word: peace be unto thee, fear not, thou ſhalt not die; let not thy mind be ruffled and diſturbed, but ſerene and calm; fear not that any evil ſhall befal thee, and particularly death; thou ſhalt be ſafe from any danger whatever, and eſpecially from death, which he expected in his fright would immediately follow.

℣. 24. Then Gideon built an altar there unto the Lord, &c.] On the top of the rock where he had laid his proviſions, and which had been conſumed by fire iſſuing out of it, as a token of divine acceptance, and as an aſſurance of his deſtroying the Midianites as eaſily and quickly as the fire had conſumed them, and therefore had great encouragement to erect an altar here for God: and called it Jehovah-ſhalom; the Lord is peace, the author and giver of peace, temporal, ſpiritual and eternal; ſo Jarchi, "the Lord is our peace," a fit name for the angel that appeared to him, who was no other than the man the peace; who is our peace, the author of peace between God and man. This name he gave the altar, with reſpect to the words of comfort ſaid to him in his fright, peace be to thee; and by way of prophecy, that peace would be wrought for Iſrael by the Lord, and proſperity given them; or by way of prayer, the Lord grant or ſend peace: unto this day it is yet in Ophrah of the Abiezrites; that is, the altar Gideon built remained to the times of Samuel, the writer of this book, and was then to be ſeen in the city of Ophrah, which belonged to the family of the Abiezrites, who were of the tribe of Manaſſeh.

℣. 25. And it came to paſs the ſame night, &c.] The night which followed the day in which the angel appeared to Gideon as he was threſhing: that the Lord ſaid unto him; perhaps in a dream, ſince it was in the night: take thy father's young bullock; or the bullock, the ox [p]; a bullock which was a large grown ox, and was not only his father's property, but what his father designed, and set apart for the service of Baal; and though it was his father's, yet having a divine warrant for it, it was sufficient for him to take it without his leave, and especially as it was designed for such an ill use: even the second bullock of seven years old; which, according to Hesiod [q], is in its prime and full strength at nine years old, and lives much longer. In Homer [r], one of five years old is said to be sacrificed: this farther describes what he was to take, the second that stood in the stall of the bullocks, or that drew in the second row at plough, or the second in age and value, or the second that was set apart for the service of Baal; though the words may rendered, and the second bullock [s]; besides that of his father's, he was to take another, which perhaps belonged to the people, and was the second in birth or age with respect to the former, being seven years old; or as the Targum is, that had been fatted seven years, and had been so long preparing for the sacrifice of Baal; which was as long as the tyranny of the Midianites over them, and was occasioned by the idolatry of the people of Israel; and such a bullock was ordered to be taken with respect to that, and to shew that it would end with the sacrifice of this creature: and throw down the altar of Baal that thy father hath; upon his ground, in some part of his possessions, and perhaps built at his own expence, though for public use: and cut down the grove that is by it; or about it, as the Vulgate Latin version; it being usual with the heathens to plant groves near or around their altars and temples, where religious worship was performed; partly to make them more pleasant and venerable, and partly for the commission of deeds which would not bear the light; or over it, for they were commonly tall trees which grew over the altar they erected. Some render it, upon it [t], and understand by it an idol placed on it: so the Arabic version is, "cut down the female idol Astra (perhaps the same with Astarte) which is upon the same altar;" and so the Syriac version to the same purpose, which calls it the idol Estere, set upon the altar.

ỿ. 26. And build an altar to the Lord thy God upon the top of this rock, &c.] Where the provisions were laid, and out of which came forth fire that consumed them; and where the altar, called by the name of Jehovah-shalom, had been built by him, near it very probably; and there might be room enough for both upon the top of the rock; for this seems to be a distinct altar from that, that was erected as a monumental altar, in memory of the miracle there wrought, and in gratitude by Gideon for the preservation of his life, and the peace and prosperity there and then promised, and which altar was to continue, and did; but this was for sacrifice, and only for the present time; for the proper place for sacrifice was the tabernacle: and this was to be built in the ordered place; either in the place where Gideon was ordered to put the flesh and the unleavened cakes; or in an orderly way and manner, according as was commanded in the law, as that it should be of earth and unhewn stones, and so framed, as that it might be fit to have the wood and sacrifice laid in order on it; or in a plain place, as Kimchi, upon the top of the rock, where he might lay in order the stones of the altar: and take the second bullock, and offer a burnt sacrifice with the wood of the grove which thou shalt cut down; mention being made only of one bullock that was to be offered, has made some think, that only one was ordered to be taken, namely this second, which agrees with our version of ỿ. 25 for if two were taken, what became of the first, since only the second was ordered to be sacrificed? to which Kimchi makes answer, that he was ordered to take it away, that his father might not offer it to an idol, as he intended, and therefore this was done to prevent idolatry; and as this second bullock was to be a burnt-sacrifice, and to be burned with the wood of the grove just cut down, it seems to confirm the sense of such versions and interpreters who understand it of an idol on the altar of Baal; since wood just cut down would not be fit to burn, whereas an idol of wood, that had been of some standing, would be very proper: every thing ordered and done were different from the laws and usages directed to by Moses, and practiced by the Jews. Gideon was no priest, and yet bid to offer sacrifice, and that on an altar of his own erecting, and not the altar of God; and upon the top of a rock, and not at the tabernacle; and the wood of a grove or idol was to be made use of, which in other cases was not allowed; and all this done in the night, which was not the time of sacrificing; but the divine warrant was sufficient for Gideon. The Jews say [u], there were eight things that were made free or allowed now, which were not at another time: and it was necessary before Gideon acted the part of a deliverer, that he should become a reformer, and it was proper to begin at his own family.

ỿ. 27. Then Gideon took ten men of his servants, &c.] Not only whom he could command, but could confide in, and whom he knew would chearfully engage in this work, being like himself, who had not bowed the knee to Baal; and as there was much work to do, and it required dispatch, such a number was necessary; since he had not only the altar of Baal to throw down, and his grove or idol to cut down, but an altar to build, and a sacrifice to be taken and offered: and did as the Lord had said unto him; all the above things, he set about them at once, and dispatched them all in one night; so ready and chearful was he in obedience to the divine command: and so it was, because he feared his father's household, and the men of the city, that he could not do it by day, that he did it by night; for both his father's family, and the inhabitants of the city of Ophrah, were all idolaters, worshippers of Baal; and this fear of them was not a fear of being reproached or punished for what he did, or of any harm coming to him for the fact, which as he might expect would be known, so the risque was the same, be it done when it would; but it was a fear of being restrained and hindered from doing it, and therefore in point of prudence, and consulting the honour of God and religion, and not his own safety, he took the time of the night to do it in.

ỿ. 28.

[p] פר השור Juvencum, bovem, Drusius; juvencum adultiorem, Junius & Tremellius. [q] Opera & dies, l. 2. ỿ. 54, 55. [r] Iliad. 2. ỿ. 403. & Iliad. 7. ỿ. 35. [s] ופר & juvencum alium, Tigurine version; & alterum taurum, V. L. & juvencum secundum, Pagninus, Montanus. [t] על יו ad illo, Sept. super illud, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius. [u] T. Bab. Temurah, fol. 28. 2. & 29. 1.

℣. 28. And when the men of the city aroſe early in the morning, &c.] And came to the place where the altar of Baal, his grove and image were, to pay their morning-devotions to him: behold, the altar of Baal was caſt down, and the grove was cut down that was by it, and the ſecond bullock was offered upon the altar that was built; upon the new altar that Gideon built, and which very probably was burning when they came; and it is very likely that the place, where the altar of Baal had ſtood, was not far from the rock where this new altar was erected.

℣. 29. And they ſaid one to another, who hath done this thing? &c.] They were ſtruck with amazement, and could not deviſe who could be ſo daring and wicked as to do ſuch an action: and when they enquired and aſked; one and another, every one preſent, or they could think of as proper to enquire of; they were very diligent and induſtrious to find it out; and perhaps they enquired of the family and ſervants of Joaſh and Gideon, in whoſe ground the altar ſtood: they ſaid, Gideon the ſon of Joaſh hath done this thing; when they had enquired of every body they could, and thought of one perſon and another, there was none appeared to them more likely to have done it than Gideon; partly becauſe they knew he was no friend of Baal, and partly becauſe he was a man of ſpirit and courage, and they concluded none but ſuch an one would have ventured to have done it; and beſides, they conſidered he was the ſon of Joaſh, who perhaps was their chief magiſtrate, and that he might preſume on his father's protection, as they might ſuppoſe, and being near the premiſes, he was the moſt likely perſon they could think of; and it is not improbable, that upon enquiry they got it out of the ſervants concerned, or that had knowledge of it from them, or from ſome that ſaw him that morning at the ſacrifice, or returning from it, and therefore peremptorily aſſert he was the man that did it.

℣. 30. Then the men of the city ſaid unto Joaſh, &c.] The principal inhabitants of the place met together, and in a body went to Joaſh their chief magiſtrate, to have juſtice done in this caſe: bring out thy ſon, that he may die; they don't aſk to have the cauſe tried by him, to hear what proof they had of the fact, or what Gideon had to ſay in his own defence; nor do they wait for the ſentence of Joaſh, but determine it themſelves, and require the delinquent to be given up to them, that they might put him to death; a ſtrange requeſt of Iſraelites, whoſe law judged no man before it heard him; and beſides, according to that, the worſhippers of Baal, and not the deſtroyers of him, and his altars, were to be put to death, which ſhows how ſtrangely mad and infatuated theſe people were: becauſe he hath cut down the altar of Baal, and becauſe he hath cut down the grove that was by it; they take no notice of the bullock which he had taken and offered, it being his father's property; and which ſeems to confirm the ſenſe of our verſion, that there was but one, ℣. 25. for had the ſecond been a different one, and the peoples property, they would have accuſed him of theft as well as ſacrilege reſpecting that.

℣. 31. And Joaſh ſaid unto all that ſtood againſt him, &c.] Againſt his ſon; that were his accuſers and adverſaries, and required him to be given up to them, that they might put him to death: will ye plead for Baal? what, Iſraelites, and plead for Baal! or what need is there for this, can't he plead for himſelf? will ye ſave him? what, take upon you to ſave your god! can't he ſave himſelf? he ought to ſave both himſelf and you, if he is a god, and not you ſave him: he that will plead for him, let him be put to death, whilſt it is yet morning; immediately, before noon, for it was now morning when they came to him; this he ſaid to terrify them, and to expreſs the hatred he now had of idolatry, and the juſt ſenſe of its being puniſhable with death by the law of God. This he may be ſuppoſed to ſay, to ſave his ſon from their preſent wrath and fury, hoping by that time to find out ſome ways and means for his ſafety: if he be a god, let him plead for himſelf, becauſe one hath caſt down his altar; if he is a god, he knows who has done it, and is able to avenge himſelf on him, and put him to death himſelf that has done it, and therefore leave it with him to plead his own cauſe, and avenge his own injuries: this he ſaid, deriding the deity; for though Joaſh had been a worſhipper of Baal, yet he might be now convinced by his ſon of the ſinfulneſs of it, and of the neceſſity of a reformation, in order to a deliverance from the Midianites, for which he had a commiſſion, and had perhaps informed his father of it; or however he was not ſo attached to Baal, but that he preferred the life of his ſon to the worſhip of him.

℣. 32. Therefore on that day he called him Jerubbaal, &c.] That is, Joaſh called his ſon Gideon by that name; who, ſome think, is the ſame with Jerombalus the prieſt of the god Jevo or Jehovah; from whom Sanchoniatho, an ancient Phœnician writer, as Philo Byblius ſays [w], received the principal things in his hiſtory reſpecting the Jews: ſaying, let Baal plead againſt him, becauſe he hath thrown down his altar; giving this as the reaſon of the name of Jerubbaal he called him by, which ſignifies, let Baal plead; let Baal plead his own cauſe, and avenge himſelf on Gideon for what he has done to him, and put him to death if he can.

℣. 33. Then all the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and the children of the eaſt, &c.] The Arabians, ſee ℣. 3. were gathered together; not as being alarmed with this fact of Gideon in deſtroying the altar of Baal, and ſo came to avenge it; but it was their uſual time of gathering together to come into Canaan, being harveſt-time, as appears by Gideon being employed in threſhing, to fetch away the increaſe of the earth, as they had done for ſome years paſt: and went over; the river Jordan, which lay between the Midianites and the Iſraelites: and pitched in the valley of Jezreel; a very large, delightful and fruitful plain; of which ſee the note on Hoſ. i. 5. a very proper place for ſuch a large number to pitch on, and from whence they might receive much; and a ſuitable place to bring the increaſe of the land to, from the ſeveral parts of it, which was the buſineſs they came upon; and as this lay on the borders of Iſſachar and Manaſſeh, it was not far from Gideon, and this gave him an opportunity of exerting himſelf, and executing his commiſſion.

℣. 34. But the ſpirit of the Lord came upon Gideon, &c.] Not the ſpirit of prophecy, as Maimonides [x], who calls this ſpirit the firſt degree of prophecy, but a ſpirit of fortitude and courage, as the Targum; the Spirit of God filled him, or as in

[w] Apud Euſeb. Evangel. Præpar. l. 1. p. 31.

[x] Moreh Nevochim, par. 2. c. 45.

in the Hebrew text, clothed [r] him with zeal, ſtrength and might, moved and animated him to engage with this great body of people come into the land, to ravage and waſte it, and to attempt the deliverance of Iſrael from their bondage: and he blew a trumpet; as an alarm of war, and as a token to as many as heard to reſort to him, and join with him in the common cauſe againſt the enemy: and Abiezer was gathered after him; the Abiezrites, one of the families of the tribe of Manaſſeh, of which Gideon, and his father's houſe were; and even it is probable the inhabitants of Ophrah, who were Abiezrites, being now convinced of their idolatry, and having entertained a good opinion of Gideon as a man of valour, and who, in the preſent emergence, they looked upon as an hopeful inſtrument of their deliverance, and therefore joined him.

℣. 35. And he ſent meſſengers through all Manaſſeh, &c.] Of which tribe he was; not only he called by the trumper that part of the tribe the Abiezrites, who were within the ſound of it, but the reſt of the tribe at a greater diſtance from him he ſent meſſengers to, acquainting them with his deſign, and inviting them to his aſſiſtance. Some think this refers both to the half tribe of Manaſſeh within Jordan, and the other half tribe on the other ſide Jordan; but that is not very probable, only the half tribe within it is meant: who alſo was gathered after him; obeying the ſummons and invitation he gave them by the meſſengers: and he ſent meſſengers unto Aſher, and unto Zebulun, and unto Naphtali; which three tribes lay neareſt to him on the north; but he ſent not to the inhabitants of the tribe of Ephraim, which lay to the ſouth, and which afterwards occaſioned a quarrel, ch. viii. 1. and they came up to meet them; that is the inhabitants of the above three tribes, at leaſt many of them, came up from the places of their habitations to meet Gideon, and thoſe that were aſſociated with him, at their place of rendezvous.

℣. 36. And Gideon ſaid unto God, &c.] Not to a prophet of God who was there, of whom he aſked the following ſigns to be done, as Ben Gerſom, but to God in prayer, as Abarbinel: if thou wilt ſave Iſrael by mine hand, as thou haſt ſaid; not that he doubted of it, but was willing to have a confirmation of his faith; and perhaps his view was more for the encouragement of thoſe that were with him than himſelf, that he deſired the following ſigns; and though he had had one before, that was to ſhew that he was truly an angel that ſpoke to him, and not to aſcertain the ſalvation that ſhould be wrought by him; though that might be concluded from his being an angel that ſpoke to him, and aſſured him of it.

℣. 37. Behold, I will put a fleece of wool on the floor, &c.] On the floor where he was threſhing, where the angel firſt appeared to him, and which lay expoſed to the open air, ſo that the dew might eaſily fall upon it: and if the dew be on the fleece only; the dew that falls from heaven in the night, when he propoſed it ſhould lie on the floor till morning: and it be dry upon all the earth beſide; meaning not upon all the world, nor even upon all the land of Iſrael, but upon all the floor about the fleece: then ſhall I know that thou wilt ſave Iſrael by my hand, as thou haſt ſaid; for the dew being a token of divine favour, ſee Hoſ. xiv. 5. it would ſhew that Gideon would partake of it, whilſt his enemies would be dry and deſolate, and ruin and deſtruction would be their portion.

℣. 38. And it was ſo, &c.] The Lord condeſcended to work this miracle for the confirmation of his faith, and for the encouragement of thoſe that were with him; the fleece was wet with the dew of heaven, and all the ground about it dry: for he roſe up early in the morning; being eagerly deſirous of knowing whether his requeſt would be granted, and how it would be with the fleece: and thruſt the fleece together; to ſatisfy himſelf whether the dew had fallen on it, and there was any moiſture in it, which by being ſqueezed together he would more eaſily perceive: and wringed the dew out of the fleece, a bowl full of water; ſo that it appeared it had not only fallen on it, but it had taken in a large quantity of it; the word here uſed is the ſame as in ch. v. 25. ſee the note there; the Targum calls it a flagon.

℣. 39. And Gideon ſaid unto God, &c.] In the ſame way as before, and on the morning when he had been favoured with the ſight of the above miracle: let not thine anger be hot againſt me, and I will ſpeak but this once; he was conſcious to himſelf that it ſhewed great preſumption and boldneſs in him to repeat his requeſt, and that it had the appearance of great diffidence and diſtruſt in him, after he had been indulged with ſuch a ſign to confirm his faith; but as it was not ſo much on his own account as others, and promiſing to aſk no more favours of this kind, he hoped his boldneſs would not be reſented: let me prove, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; one time more with it, and that not to try the power of God, of which he had no doubt, but the will of God, whether it was the good pleaſure of God to ſave Iſrael by his hand, and whether now was the time, or another: let it now be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew; which might ſeem to be a greater, at leaſt a plainer miracle than the former, and leſs liable to cavil and objection; for it might be urged, that a fleece of wool naturally draws in, and drinks up moiſture about it; wherefore that to be dry, and the ground all around it wet, would be a ſure ſign and evidence of the wonderful interpoſition of the power and providence of God, in directing the fall of the dew on the one, and not on the other.

℣. 40. And God did ſo that night, &c.] The night following, the night being the ſeaſon in which the dew falls: for it was dry upon the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground; and this might ſignify, that not Gideon only, as before, ſhould partake of the divine favour, but all the Iſraelites, who would ſhare in the ſalvation wrought by him. Many interpreters obſerve, that all this is an emblem of the different caſe and ſtate of the Jews and Gentiles under the different diſpenſations; that whereas under the former diſpenſation the Jews partook of the divine favour only, and of the bleſſings of grace, and enjoyed the words and ordinances with which they were watered, when the Gentiles all around them were like a barren wilderneſs; ſo under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, the Gentiles ſhare the above benefits to a greater degree, whilſt the Jews are entirely deſtitute of them.

[r] לבשה induit, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. Vid. Maimon. ut ſupra. So Homer often repreſents his heroes as clothed with fortitude and courage; ſee Iliad. 17.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

IN this chapter we have an account of the army under Gideon gathered out of ſeveral tribes, which from 32,000, were reduced to 300, and we are told by what means this was done, ℣. 1—8. and how he was directed to go into the hoſt of the Midianites, where he heard one of them telling his dream to his fellow, which greatly encouraged him to believe he ſhould ſucceed, ℣. 9—15. alſo we are told the form and manner in which he diſpoſed of his little army to attack the Midianites, and the orders he gave them to obſerve, which had the deſired effect, and iſſued in the total rout of that large body of people, ℣. 16—22. and thoſe that were not deſtroyed, were purſued by perſons gathered out of ſeveral tribes, and the paſſages of Jordan were taken by the Ephraimites, ſo that thoſe that attempted their eſcape into their own country, there fell into their hands, ℣. 23—25.

℣. 1. Then Jerubbaal, who is Gideon, &c.] That being the name his father had lately given him, ch. vi. 32. and all the people that were with him roſe up early; encouraged by the ſigns and miracles wrought, by which he was aſſured of ſucceſs; he was eager to be about his work, and therefore roſe early in the morning, and got his army together, and marched to engage the enemy: and pitched beſide the well of Harod; which he might chuſe for the refreſhment of his army on occaſion; or however, ſo he was directed in providence here, where a trial was to be made of them by water: this well or fountain ſeems to be the ſame with that in 1 Sam. xxix. 1. it ſignifies fear and trembling, and might have its name either from the fear and trembling of the 22,000 Iſraelites, whoſe hearts were diſmayed at the Midianites, and they were ordered to return home; or from the fear and trembling of the Midianites, who were diſcomfited here; the former ſeems to be the true reaſon, ſee ℣. 3. ſo that the Midianites were on the north-ſide of them; which Gideon, no doubt, judged to be an advantageous poſt to him: by the hill of Moreh, in the valley; the valley of Jezreel, one of the mountains of Gilboa, as is ſuppoſed; the Targum is, "by the hill which looks to the plain;" from whence he could have a view of the Midianitiſh army, and the diſpoſition of it. Some think this hill had its name from the Midianitiſh archers; but according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, from there being a watch here to direct the ways, or to give notice to the inhabitants of the valley when an army came againſt them; though ſome take it to be a ſchool of ſome eminent teacher in thoſe days [z].

℣. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto Gideon, the people that are with thee, are too many, &c.] It appears by what follows, that there were 32,000 of them, which was but a ſmall army to engage with one of 100,000 more than they; for ſuch was the army of the Midianites and their aſſociates, ſee ch. viii. 10. but the people were too many, ſays the Lord, for me to give the Midianites into their hands; who would be apt to aſcribe the victory to themſelves, and not to the Lord; to their number, ſtrength and valour, and not to the hand of the Lord: leſt Iſrael vaunt themſelves againſt me, ſaying, mine own hand hath ſaved me; or glory over me, take the glory from me, and aſcribe it to themſelves, boaſting that by their power and proweſs they had obtained the victory.

℣. 3. Now therefore go to, proclaim in the ears of the people, &c.] Such a proclamation as follows, was, according to the law of God, to be made when Iſrael went out to battle againſt their enemies, Deut. xx. 8. though it looks as if Gideon would not have made ſuch proclamation, had he not been directed to it by the Lord, his army being ſo ſmall in compariſon of the enemy; and perhaps Gideon might underſtand that law, to have reſpect only to war made for the enlargement of their country, and not for defence againſt invaders: ſaying, whoſoever is fearful and afraid; to engage in battle, becauſe of the number of the enemy: let him return and depart early from mount Gilead; where it ſeems they now were, being the ſame with the hill of Moreh, or adjoining to it; a mountain in the tribe of Manaſſeh, ſo called either from its likeneſs to mount Gilead on the other ſide Jordan; or rather in memory of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, from whence the half tribe ſprung, which was on this ſide, as well as that on the other; and perhaps this name might be given to the mount, to ſhew that they were of the ſame tribe, though ſeparated by Jordan: now the fearful and faint-hearted had leave given them by this proclamation to return home directly; and as both armies lay ſo near, and it might reaſonably be expected the battle would be the next day, they are directed to get away in the morning, as early as they could, that they might not be ſeen, and ſo be filled with ſhame themſelves, and diſcourage others. Tho' ſome think mount Gilead, on the other ſide Jordan, is meant, from whence it is ſuppoſed many came to Gideon, ch. vi. 35. and now are ordered to return back, as many as were fearful; and inſtead of from, they render the word to, or towards, or beyond Gilead. Kimchi thinks the word we render depart early, has the ſignification of ſurrounding, a diadem being expreſſed by a word from hence, which encompaſſes the head, Iſ. xxviii. 5. and ſo the ſenſe is, that they were ordered to go round about mount Gilead, and ſo return home; but it rather may ſignify their haſty departure and ſpeedy flight, like that of a bird, Pſ. xi. 1. and there returned of the people 22,000, and there remained 10,000: ſo that they were in all 32,000: now tho' theſe of their own accord came and joined Gideon with an intention and reſolution to ſtand by him, and fight the enemy, yet when they came and ſaw what a large hoſt they had to engage with, and how ſmall the army was with Gideon, their hearts failed them, and they were glad to take the advantage of the proclamation.

℣. 4. And the Lord ſaid to Gideon, the people are yet too many, &c.] Though they were but juſt the number that Barak had with him, when he attacked Siſera's army and got the victory, which yet was aſcribed to God, whoſe hand was manifeſtly ſeen in it; but as theſe might be ſuppoſed to be able men of valour that remained, they were too many for God to have that glory he he intended to diſplay in this victory: bring them down unto the water; from the hill on which they were, to a brook that ran at the bottom of it, perhaps a ſtream from the fountain or well of Harod, ℣. 1. and I will try them for thee there, or purge them [a], as ſilver is purged from droſs, ſo the word ſignifies, as Kimchi obſerves, the righteous from the wicked, as he thinks; who, with others, ſuppoſe that by thoſe who bowed on their knees to drink, were ſuch as had been uſed to bow the knee to Baal, and the reſt not, and ſo one were diſcerned from the other; but this trial was only for the ſake of Gideon, to direct him whom he ſhould take with him, and whom not: and it ſhall be, that of whom I ſay unto thee, this ſhall go with thee, the ſame ſhall go with thee; and of whomſoever I ſay unto thee, this ſhall not go with thee, the ſame ſhall not go; by the different manner of his men drinking at the water, after related, Gideon knew not who ſhould go with him, and who not, whether they that bowed down to drink, or only lapped the water; this was determined by the mouth of the Lord, as follows.

[z] See Weemſe's Chriſtian Synagogue, l. 1. c. 6. §. 5.

℣. 5. So he brought them down to the water, &c.] His whole army of 10,000 men: and the Lord ſaid unto Gideon, every one that lappeth of the water with his tongue, as a dog lappeth, him ſhalt thou ſet by himſelf; this has led ſome, as particularly Grotius, to think of the Egyptian dogs; of whom Ælianus relates [b], that they don't drink at once freely, and to ſatiety, being afraid of the crocodiles in the river; but run about the bank, and by ſtealth ſnatch a little here, and a little there, and ſo ſatisfy themſelves: but the alluſion here is to dogs in common, whoſe uſual way it is not to ſup in, and drink a draught, but by putting out their tongues to lick and lap water with them, as Ariſtotle [c] ſays, all creatures do that have teeth like ſaws; and the likeneſs between the drinking of theſe men, to be obſerved, lay not in any thing elſe, but in the ſingle action of lapping; for they firſt took the water in the hollow of their hands, out of the ſtream, and then lapped it, as in ℣. 6. whereas a dog does not, and cannot take water that way; and this lapping was ſtanding upright, whereas dogs in common, as Ælianus in the ſame place ſuggeſts, bow themſelves and lap as much water as will ſatisfy their thirſt; and by this theſe men were diſtinguiſhed from thoſe that bowed on their knees to drink; for had they not taken up water in their hands, they muſt have bowed down on their knees to have lapped, as well as thoſe did, to ſup it, or take in a large draught of it; now all thoſe that thus lapped, were to be ſet apart by themſelves; but whether they were to go with Gideon or not, as yet he knew not: likewiſe every one that boweth down on his knee to drink; were to be ſet by themſelves alſo, but which of thoſe were to go with him, is after related.

℣. 6. And the number of them that lapped, putting their hand to their mouth, &c.] That is, that took up water in the hollow of their hands, which they lifted up to their mouths, and ſo lapped it, as the Egyptians about the Nile are ſaid [d] to do, who drank not out of pots and cups, but uſed heir hands to drink with: were 300 men; only ſuch a number out of 10,000: but all the reſt of the people bowed down upon their knees to drink water; even 9,700; and it was the cuſtom of ſome nations, as the Ichthyophagi, or fiſh-eaters, to caſt themſelves with their face to the ground, and drink after the manner of oxen [e].

℣. 7. And the Lord ſaid unto Gideon, by the 300 men that lapped, I will ſave, and deliver the Midianites into thine hand, &c.] It is hard to ſay, what character this action of the 300 is expreſſive of, whether of weakneſs or of courage. Some think, that thoſe who drank upon their knees were faint and weary, and men of intemperance, and indulged themſelves, and were unfit for war, whilſt thoſe that only lapped a little water to refreſh themſelves, appeared to be eager, and in haſte and readineſs to engage in it; and ſo Ben Gerſom takes thoſe that bowed to be ſlothful perſons, and thoſe that lapped, couragious and mighty men, and ſo were ordered to be taken and go along with Gideon; and this agrees with the method before taken, to diſmiſs the fearful, and only take thoſe that were men of courage; but Joſephus [f] is of opinion, that they that drank upon their knees were the men of ſpirit and courage, and thoſe that lapped, ſuch who drank haſtily, with trembling, and through fear of the enemy, and theſe were ordered to go with Gideon, and not the other: and indeed, this moſt diſplays the glory of God to ſave Iſrael, and deliver them from the Midianites by a handful of ſuch poor diſpirited creatures. Though it ſeems that all the 10,000 men were men of courage; and this method was taken not to diſtinguiſh thoſe that were the moſt couragious, from thoſe that were the leaſt ſo, but only to reduce the number that ſhould be engaged in this battle; for it being the ſummer-ſeaſon, it may reaſonably be ſuppoſed that the greater part of the army was very thirſty, and would kneel down to take a large draught of water, when thoſe that were not ſo thirſty would be the fewer number, and ſo taken: and let all the other people go every man to his place; all the reſt who bowed on their knees to drink, which were 9,700, theſe were ordered to march homewards; though perhaps before they got home, hearing of the victory, they returned and joined in the purſuit, ℣. 23.

℣. 8. So the people took victuals in their hands, and their trumpets, &c.] That is, the 300 took victuals of thoſe that departed, as much as was neceſſary for them, and alſo their trumpets, being directed thereunto by Gideon, no doubt; perhaps they took all the trumpets they had, however, as many as would furniſh every man with one. And from hence it appears, that theſe 300 that were ordered to ſtay and go with Gideon, were unarmed men, at leaſt could carry no arms in their hands; for in one hand they carried their victuals, and in the other hand their trumpets, ſo that the ſalvation wrought by them would moſt clearly appear to be of the Lord: and he ſent all the reſt of Iſrael, every man unto his tent; not to his tent in the army, but to his own houſe, in the tribe and city to which he belonged: and retained theſe 300 men; that had lapped water, to engage with the Midianites and their aſſociates: and the hoſt of Midian was beneath him in the valley; in the valley of Jezreel; for it ſeems as if Gideon, after he had brought down his men to the water to be tried, went up to the hill again with his 300 men only, to to wait the divine orders, when he ſhould attack the army of Midian below him.

[a] אצרפנו defæcabo, Druſius, eliquabo, ſeu purgabo, Fiſcator. [b] Var. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 4. [c] Hiſt. Animal. l. 8. c. 6. [d] Achilles Tatius, l. 4. [e] Strabo. Geograph. l. 16. p. 532. [f] Antiq. l. 5. c. 6. §. 3.

℣. 9. And it came to paſs, the ſame night that the Lord ſaid to him, &c.] The night after there had been ſo great a reduction of his army, from 32,000 to 300: ariſe, get thee down unto the hoſt, for I have delivered it into thine hands; that is, go down from the hill where he and his little army were, to the valley of Jezreel, where lay the numerous hoſt of Midian; aſſuring him, that though the diſproportion was ſo very great, the army of Midian ſhould be delivered into his hands; and it was enough that the Lord had ſaid it, for him to believe it; but in ſuch circumſtances that he was, it is no wonder that he had his fears and miſgivings of heart, wherefore it follows.

℣. 10. But if thou fear to go down, &c.] With his little army, to attack a numerous hoſt in the night, then he is directed to take this ſtep firſt: go thou with Phurah thy ſervant down to the hoſt; in a private manner; perhaps this man was his aid-de-camp, or however a truſty ſervant in whom he could confide, as well as valiant; more it was not proper to take in ſuch a ſecret expedition, and the fewer the better to truſt, and leſs liable to the obſervation of the enemy; and yet it was proper to have one with him, being company and animating, and who would be a witneſs with him of what ſhould be heard; in like manner, and for like reaſons, as Diomedes and Ulyſſes went into the Trojan army [y].

℣. 11. And thou ſhalt hear what they ſhall ſay, &c.] The Midianites, or what ſhall be ſaid by any of them; for though it was the night-ſeaſon, and ſo not a time for much converſation, as it may be ſuppoſed to be the dead of the night; yet ſomething would be ſaid and heard, which is a clear proof of the preſcience of God reſpecting future contingent events: and afterwards ſhall thine hands be ſtrengthened; and his heart encouraged by what he ſhould hear: to go down into the camp; in an hoſtile manner, with his 300 men, after his return to them: then went he down with Phurah his ſervant; firſt privately, only they two, leaving his little army on the hill: and came unto the outſide of the armed men that were in the hoſt; the centinels, who were without-ſide the camp, and ſtood compleat in armour to guard it; and they came as near to them, in as ſtill and private manner as they could, without being diſcovered. The ſeptuagint verſion is, "to the beginning of the 50 that were in the hoſt;" and the Syriac and Arabic verſions, "to the captain of the fifty;" theſe might be a party of the outguards, conſiſting of fifty men, with one at the head of them, placed for the ſafety of the army in the night-ſeaſon, and to give notice of any approach to them, or attempt on them.

℣. 12. And the Midianites and the Amalekites, and the children of the eaſt, &c.] The Arabians, who with the Amalekites joined the Midianites in this expedition: lay along in the valley; in the valley of Jezreel, in their tents, which overſpread the valley, or at leaſt great part of it: like graſshoppers for multitude; or locuſts, which uſually come in great numbers, and cover the air and the ſun where they fly, and the earth where they light, as they did the land of Egypt; this army conſiſted at leaſt of 135,000 men, as is clear from ch. viii. 10. and their camels were without number, as the ſand is by the ſea-ſide for multitude; an hyperbolical expreſſion, ſetting forth the great number of them which the countries of Midian and Arabia abounded with; and were very proper to bring with them, to load and carry off the booty they came for, the fruits of the earth; ſee ch. vi. 4, 5.

℣. 13. And when Gideon was come, &c.] With his ſervant, near and within hearing the talk and converſation of the out-guards or centinels: there was a man that told a dream unto his fellow; his comrade that ſtood next him, and was upon guard with him; perhaps it was a dream he had dreamt the night before, or this ſelf-ſame night, being juſt called up to take his turn in the watch, and ſo it was freſh upon his mind: and ſaid, behold, I dreamed a dream, and lo; thus it was as I am going to relate; twice he uſes the word behold, or lo, the dream having very much ſtruck and impreſſed his mind, and was what he thought worthy of the attention of his comrade: a cake of barley bread tumbled into the hoſt of Midian; barley bread, Pliny [z] ſays, was the moſt ancient food; the word for cake [a] ſignifies a ſhadow, and may deſign the appearance of a barley-loaf; or ſomething like one, to him appeared in the dream: or a noiſe; the noiſe of it rolling and tumbling, ſo that it ſeemed to the ſoldier that he heard a noiſe, as well as ſaw ſomething he took for a barley-loaf. Jarchi obſerves, that it ſignifies a cake baked upon coals, and it ſeemed to this man as if it came ſmoking hot, from the coals, tumbling down an hill, ſuch an one where Gideon and his army were, and rolling into the hoſt of Midian, which lay in a valley: and came unto a tent; or, the tent [b]; the largeſt and moſt magnificent in the hoſt; and Joſephus [c] calls it expreſsly the king's tent, and the Arabic verſion the tent of the generals: and ſmote it that it fell; which might juſtly ſeem ſtrange, that a barley-loaf ſhould come with ſuch a force againſt a tent, perhaps the largeſt and ſtrongeſt in the whole camp, which was faſtened with cords to ſtakes and nails driven into the ground, ſo as to cauſe it to fall: yea, it is added, and overturned it, that the tent lay along; turned it topſy-turvy, or turned it upwards [d], as the phraſe in the Hebrew text is; it fell with the bottom upwards; it was entirely demoliſhed, that there was no raiſing and ſetting of it up again.

℣. 14. And his fellow anſwered and ſaid, &c.] As the dream was no doubt from God, ſo the interpretation of it was; it was he that put into the mind of the ſoldier's comrade to whom he told it, to interpret it as follows; or otherwiſe in all likelihood he would never have thought of it: this is nothing elſe ſave the ſword of Gideon, the ſon of Joaſh, a man of Iſrael; that is, this ſignifies nothing elſe, and a fit emblem it was of him and his little army. A cake is but a ſmall thing, and let it come tumbling as it will, can have no force or ſtrength in it equal to overturn a tent; and a cake of barley is mean and contemptible; and a cake baked under aſhes, or on coals, is what is ſoon and haſtily done, and fitly repreſented the ſmalneſs and weakneſs of Gideon's army, their meanneſs and contemptibleneſs; the Iſraelites being, as Joſephus [c] repreſents the ſoldier ſaying, the vileſt of all the people of Aſia; and thoſe that were with Gideon were ſuddenly and haſtily got together, raw and undiſciplined, and very unfit to engage the veteran troops of the united forces of Midian, Amalek, [y] Homer. Iliad. 10. v. 222, &c.

[z] Nat. Hiſt. l. 18. c. 7.
[a] צלול umbra, vid. Guſſetium, p. 715. ſtrepitus, Tigurine verſion; ſo Kimchi & Ben Gerſom; ſubcineritius, V. L. toſtus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[b] האהל
[c] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 6. §. 4.
[d] למעלה deſuper, Pagninus, Montanus; ſuperne, Tigurine verſion.
[e] Ut ſupra.

Amalek, and Arabia. It appears from hence, that Gideon's name was well known in the camp of Midian, what was his deſcent, and his character as a valiant man, which is meant by a man of Iſrael; namely, a courageous mighty man, and the very name of him might ſtrike with terror: for into his hands hath God delivered Midian and all his hoſt; which the man concluded from this dream, and the interpretation of it ſuggeſted to him from God, and impreſſed upon his mind; which he ſpeaks of with the greateſt aſſurance and confidence, which he was inſpired to do, for the ſtrengthening of Gideon, and the encouragement of him to come down with his army, and fall on the hoſt of Midian.

℣. 15. And it was ſo when Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation thereof, &c.] Or, the breaking of it [g]; the dream itſelf being like ſomething cloſed up and ſealed, and the interpretation of it was like the breaking of a ſeal, and diſcovering what is hid under it; or like a nut, the kernel of which cannot be come at till the ſhell is broken: that he worſhipped; bowed his head with an awful reverence of God, and a ſenſe of his divine majeſty, and worſhipped him by ſending an ejaculatory prayer and praiſe to him; and ſo the Targum, "and he praiſed;" praiſed God for this gracious encouragement he had given, the aſſurance of victory he now had; for he ſaw clearly the hand of God in all this, both in cauſing one of the ſoldiers to dream as he did, and giving the other the interpretation of it, and himſelf the hearing of both: and returned into the hoſt of Iſrael; ſuch an one as it was, conſiſting only of 300 unarmed men: and ſaid, ariſe; from their ſleep and beds, it being the night-ſeaſon; and from their tents, and deſcend the hill with him: for the Lord hath delivered into your hand the hoſt of Midian; he made now no doubt of it, it was as ſure to him as if it had been actually done; hence Gideon is renowned for his faith, though he ſometimes was not without his fits of diffidence; ſee Heb. x. 32.

℣. 16. And he divided the 300 men into 3 companies, &c.] 100 in a company, partly to make the better figure, a ſhew of an army, with a right and left wing, and partly that they might fall upon the camp of Midian in different parts: and he put a trumpet in every man's hand; they that returned of the trumpeters having left their trumpets behind them, whereby there was a ſufficient number for 300 men; and theſe were put into their hands, that when they blew them together, the noiſe would be very great; and it would ſeem as if they were an exceeding great army, and ſo very much terrify their enemies: with empty pitchers, and lamps with the pitchers; the pitchers were of earth, and ſo eaſily broken, and would make a great noiſe when claſhed againſt each other; and theſe were empty of water, or otherwiſe would not have been fit to put lamps into, and the lamps put in them were not of oil; for then when the pitchers were broken, the oil would have run out; but were a kind of torches, made of roſin, wax, pitch, and ſuch like things; and theſe were put into the pitcher, partly to preſerve them from the wind, and chiefly to conceal them from the enemy, till juſt they came upon them, and then held them out; which in a dark night would make a terrible blaze, as before they ſerved to give them light down the hill into the camp.

℣. 17. And he ſaid unto them, look on me, and do likewiſe, &c.] Obſerve what I do, and do the ſame in blowing a trumpet, breaking a pitcher, and ſhouting with the words expreſſed by him: and behold, when I come to the outſide of the camp; where the centinels ſtood, and the watch was ſet: it ſhall be that as I do, ſo ſhall ye do; and not before; a trumpet was not to be blown, nor a pitcher broken, nor a torch held out, nor a word ſpoken, till juſt they came to the outſide of the camp; and then they were to obſerve the motions of Gideon, and do as he did.

℣. 18. When I blow with a trumpet, I and all that are with me, &c.] He being at the head of one of the three companies, ℣. 19. perhaps the middlemoſt, which might ſtand for the body of the army; and the other two be one to the right, and the other to the left of him, and ſo could more eaſily diſcover his motions: then blow ye the trumpet alſo on every ſide of all the camp; for it ſeems they were ſo diſpoſed as to be around the camp, which when the trumpets were blown at once on every ſide, with ſuch a blaze of light, and craſhing of the pitchers, muſt be very terrifying, as if there was no way for them to eſcape, and eſpecially when they ſhould hear the following dreadful ſounds: and ſay, the ſword of the Lord, and of Gideon; or for the Lord, and for Gideon; and which may be ſupplied, either the fight is for the Lord, and for Gideon; or the victory is for the Lord, and for Gideon; we ſupply it from ℣. 20. The name Jehovah, theſe heathens had often heard, as the God of Iſrael, would now be dreadful to them, and the name of Gideon alſo; whoſe name, as appears by the interpretation of the dream, was terrible among them; for which reaſon Gideon added it, and not out of arrogance and vanity; and puts it after the name of the Lord, as being only an inſtrument the Lord thought fit to make uſe of, otherwiſe all the glory belonged to him.

℣. 19. So Gideon and the 100 men that were with him, &c.] Which was one of the three companies his army was divided into, and which company he had the command of particularly: came unto the outſide of the camp, in the beginning of the middle watch; the ſecond watch, for the night was divided into three watches; for though in after times there were four watches, among the Romans [h], and which the Jews received from them; hence in the new teſtament we read of the fourth watch; yet in earlier times, with the Jews and other eaſtern nations, there were but three watches, as affirmed by Jarchi and Kimchi on the place: and very wiſely did Gideon fix on this watch for the time of his coming; for had he come at the firſt watch, many as yet might not have been in bed, or at leaſt not fallen aſleep; and had he come in the third watch, many might have been awake out of their ſleep, and others up; but he took this time, a little after midnight, in the dead of the night, when the whole army was faſt aſleep: and they had but newly ſet the watch; the firſt watch were juſt gone off, and the ſecond were placed in their room; but ſince ſuch an obſervation ſeems in a good meaſure unneceſſary, for as Gideon came in the beginning of the watch it muſt in courſe be newly ſet; rather the words may be rendered, in raiſing they raiſed up the watch [i]; that is, Gideon and his men did it by their approach; and they might call to them on purpoſe to give the alarm to the army, who upon that would at once hear the ſound of the trumpets, and and the clattering of the pitchers, and ſee the torches burning, to their great ſurprize: and they blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers that were in their hands; as ſoon as they came up to the watch and had raiſed them; this did Gideon and his hundred men.

[g] שברו fractionem ejus, Vatablus, Druſius; fracturam ejus, Piſcator. [h] Liv. Hiſt. l. 36. c. 24. Suidas in voce περιφυλακη, & in voce φυλακη. [i] הקם הקימו את השמרים ſuſcitando ſuſcitaverunt cuſtodes, Pagninus, Montanus.

℣. 20. And the three companies blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers, &c.] The other two, obſerving what Gideon and his company did, followed their example, and at the ſame time blew their trumpets, and broke their pitchers; for that there were four companies, three beſides Gideon's, as Kimchi and Ben Melech ſuggeſt, there is no reaſon to believe: and held the lamps in their left hands; which they took out of the pitchers when they broke them, and holding them up in their left hands, gave a great blaze of light, which muſt be very ſurprizing to the hoſt of Midian, juſt awaked out of their ſleep: and the trumpets in their right hands to blow withal; and which they continued blowing, the ſound of which muſt be very dreadful, ſince it might be concluded from ſuch a number of trumpets, that there muſt be a vaſt army: and they cried, the ſword of the Lord and of Gideon; ſignifying that was drawn againſt the Midianites, and they muſt expect to be cut in pieces by it, ſince the ſword was Jehovah's, ſent and commiſſioned by him, and was put into the hand of Gideon as an inſtrument, with which execution would be done, the Lord helping him. The Targum is, "the ſword of the Lord, and victory by the hand of Gideon;" which victory was to be aſcribed to the ſword and power of God. This was an emblem of the efficacy of the word of God, accompanied with his power, to the deſtruction of the kingdom of Satan; the blowing of the trumpets may denote the miniſtration of the goſpel, the great trumpet to be blowed by the apoſtles and miniſters of the word; the holding forth the lamps may ſignify the ſame, the light of the divine word in the miniſters of it, and the holding forth of it to others; and which is carried in earthern veſſels, frail mortal men; and done that the excellency of the power may appear to be of God, and not of men; and the ſword of the Lord is the word of God in the mouths of miniſters, accompanied by the power of God; for it can only be through God that ſuch weapons of warfare can become mighty to do the execution that is done by them; ſee 2 Cor. iv. 7. and x. 4, 5. blowing of trumpets, and then a cry or ſhout of the ſoldiers to terrify the enemy, were uſed in later times [k].

℣. 21. And they ſtood every man in his place around the camp, &c.] To ſee the ſalvation of God, and that it might moſt clearly appear to be his own doing; and indeed had they gone into it, they could have done nothing; they had no weapons in their hands, a trumpet in one hand, and a lamp in the other; though this their poſition ſerved to increaſe the terror of the enemy, who might ſuppoſe that they ſtood either to light and introduce a large army at the back of them; or to light the forces already in the midſt of them, whilſt they deſtroyed them; which latter ſeems rather to be the thing their imaginations were poſſeſſed with, ſince they fell to ſlaying their fellows, ſuppoſing them to be enemies, as in the following verſe: and all the hoſt ran and cried, and fled; or were broken [l]; as ſome render the firſt word, their lines were broken; they could not put themſelves in rank and file, but were thrown into the utmoſt confuſion; and cried as being in the utmoſt danger of their lives, and fled for their ſafety as faſt as they could; ſee Iſ. xxvii. 13. Heb. vi. 18.

℣. 22. And the 300 men blew the trumpets, &c.] Kept blowing them to continue and increaſe the terror of the enemy, and ſtill held the lamps in their hands, and ſtood as torch-bearers to light the Midianites and their aſſociates to deſtroy one another, as follows: and the Lord ſet every man's ſword againſt his fellow throughout the hoſt; and ſo ſlew one another; either ſuſpecting treachery, as Grotius, and ſo in revenge, wrath, and indignation, drew their ſwords on each other; or through the terror and amazement they were in at the ſounds they heard, and the blazing torches dazzling their eyes, they knew not what they did, or who they fell upon, taking their friends for foes, ſuppoſing the Iſraelites were got into their camp; and the rather they might be led into this miſtake, ſince there were people of different languages among them, as Joſephus [m] obſerves; but the thing was of God, it was he that took away their reaſon and judgment from them, and infatuated them, and filled their imaginations with ſuch ſtrange apprehenſions of things; and threw into their minds ſuch terror and amazement, and directed them to point their ſwords at one another: and the hoſt fled to Beth-ſhittah in Zererath; that is, which was left of it, which had not deſtroyed each other; the firſt of theſe places ſhould be read Beth-haſhittah; and perhaps had its name from the ſhittah or ſhittim trees which might grow near it in plenty, or the houſes in it might be built of ſhittim wood; or it may be here ſtood a temple formerly dedicated to ſome deity of this name, and near it a grove of the above trees. Zererath, Kimchi obſerves, is written with two Reſhes, or R's, to diſtinguiſh it from another place called Tzeredah; but where either of theſe places mentioned were cannot be particularly ſaid; though it is highly probable they were in the tribe of Manaſſeh, and in the way to Jordan, whither in all probability the Midianites would ſteer their courſe to eſcape to their own land: and to the border of Abel-meholah unto Tabbath; the former of theſe was the birth-place of Eliſha the prophet, 1 Kings xix. 16. and it appears very plainly that it was in the tribe of Manaſſeh, being mentioned with other places in that tribe, 1 Kings iv. 12. Jerom [n] under this word ſays, there was in his time a village in Aulon, or the plain, 10 miles from Scythopolis to the ſouth, which was called Bethahula; and the Targum is, "to the border of the plain of Abel-meholah;" but of Tabbath we no where elſe read.

℣. 23. And the men of Iſrael gathered themſelves together, &c.] Not out of all the tribes, but out of thoſe which lay neareſt, and which are particularly mentioned: out of Naphtali, and out of Aſher, and out of all Manaſſeh; and theſe ſeem to be the ſame perſons out of thoſe tribes who firſt joined Gideon, but were ſeparated from his army; both thoſe that were fearful, and thoſe that bowed their knees to drink, and who perhaps had not gone far before they heard of the defeat and flight of the Midianites; and therefore though they had not courage to face the enemy, at leaſt moſt of them, yet had ſpirit enough to purſue a flying enemy;

[k] At tuba terribilem ſonitum, &c. Virgil. Æneid. 9.
[l] רצו confracta, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.
[m] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 6. §. 5.
[n] De loc. Heb. fol. 88. M.

enemy; wherefore they returned, or however directed their courſe the neareſt way, where they ſuppoſed they fled: and purſued after the Midianites; and thoſe that were with them.

℣. 24. And Gideon ſent meſſengers throughout all mount Ephraim, &c.] To raiſe the inhabitants of it, who lay nearer Jordan, to which the Midianites would make, in order to intercept them in their flight; or however get poſſeſſion of the fords of Jordan before them, and hinder their paſſage over it: ſaying, come down againſt the Midianites; for though he had routed them, and they were fled before him, yet he had not men enough with him to deſtroy them; and beſides as they had their camels to ride on, and he and his men only on foot, they could not come up with them: and take before them the waters unto Beth-barah and Jordan; namely, all the fords and paſſages over Jordan, reaching from the lake of Geneſaret to Beth-barah, the ſame with Bethabara, Joh. i. 28. which was a paſſage over Jordan; or theſe waters were, as Kimchi thinks, diſtinct from thoſe of Jordan, and were waters that lay in the way of the flight of the Midianites, before they came to Beth-barah, their paſſage over Jordan; and Jarchi thinks they were waters, which divided between Syria and the land of Canaan, which is not likely; others think the waters are the ſame with Jordan, and render the words, take the waters—even Jordan [o]; gain the paſſes over that before them, and ſo prevent their eſcape to their own land: then all the men of Ephraim; that is, great numbers of them, whoſe hearts were inclined to, and whoſe ſituation lay beſt for this ſervice: gathered themſelves together; in a body, at ſome place of rendezvous appointed: and took the waters unto Beth-barah and Jordan; took poſſeſſion of all the paſſes, and guarded them, as Gideon directed.

℣. 25. And they took two princes of the Midianites, Oreb, and Zeeb, &c.] The one ſignifies a raven, and the other a wolf; which were either nicknames given them becauſe of their voraciouſneſs and cruelty, or which they took themſelves, or their anceſtors before them, to make themſelves terrible to others; ſo the Romans had the families of the Corvini, &c. and they ſlew Oreb upon the rock Oreb; perhaps they found him in a cave of the rock, and dragging him out ſlew him, from whence the rock afterwards had its name. So we read of the rock of Corax in Homer [p], which was in Ithaca, and another high mountain of the ſame name in Ætolia, mentioned by Livy [q], and which ſignifies the ſame as Oreb. This is a different rock or mountain from Horeb, the ſame with Sinai, from whence the law was given; which always ought to be written with an H or Ch, to diſtinguiſh it from this; though that is written Oreb by Lactantius [r], and ſo by Milton [s], contrary to the propriety of the language: and Zeeb they ſlew at the wine-preſs of Zeeb; the Targum is, the plain of Zeeb, which, as Kimchi and Ben Gerſom ſuppoſe, was in the form of a wine-preſs, having high lips or hills around it, and which afterwards took its name from this prince being ſlain in it: and purſued Midian; the reſt of the Midianites, even beyond Jordan, thoſe that got over it: and brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon on the other ſide Jordan; that is, when he had paſſed over it the next morning, as Jarchi remarks; for after this we read of Gideon's going over Jordan, ch. viii. 4. unleſs this is ſaid by way of anticipation; though the phraſe will bear to be rendered, on this ſide Jordan, for it ſignifies both. It ſeems they cut off the heads of thoſe two princes, and preſented them to Gideon, as it has been uſual to bring the heads of enemies to kings and conquerors; ſee 1 Sam. xvii. 54. and 2 Sam. iv. 2, 8.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter we are told how Gideon pacified the Ephraimites, who complained becauſe they were not ſent unto to fight the Midianites, ℣. 1, 2, 3. how he purſued the Midianites, until he took their two kings, and on his return chaſtized the men of Succoth and Penuel, becauſe they refuſed to relieve his men with food as they were purſuing, ℣. 4—17. how he ſlew the two kings of Midian, ℣. 18—21. and after this conqueſt refuſed to take the government of Iſrael when offered him, ℣. 22, 23. how he requeſted of the Iſraelites the earrings they had taken from the Midianites, with which he weakly made an ephod, which proved a ſnare to his houſe, ℣. 24—27. how that the people were in peace forty years during his life, and that he had a numerous iſſue, and died in a good old age, ℣. 28—32. but that after his death the Iſraelites fell into idolatry, and were ungrateful to his family, ℣. 33, 34, 35.

℣. 1. And the men of Ephraim ſaid unto him, &c.] To Gideon, when they brought him the heads of Oreb and Zeeb; taking this to be a proper opportunity to expoſtulate and chide with him, when they had done ſo much ſervice: why haſt thou ſerved us thus; neglected them, overlooked them, which they took as a reproach to them, and as if he had bore them ill-will: that thou calledſt us not when thou wenteſt to fight with the Midianites? that he did not call them firſt, when he called other tribes, as Aſher, Zebulun, and Naphtali, when they were as near or nearer, and more nearly allied, being both the deſcendants of Joſeph; and were the tribe that Jacob had given the preference to; and being of proud ſpirits they envied the glory that Gideon, who was of the tribe of Manaſſeh, had got; and by which they were jealous he would advance that tribe above theirs: and they did chide with him ſharply; uſed rough words and ill language, and threw out many keen and biting expreſſions, which diſcovered great anger and wrath, envy and ill-will.

℣. 2. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] In a very mild and gentle manner, giving ſoft words, which turn away wrath: what have I done in compariſon of you? he and his men, he ſignifies, had only blew trumpets, broke pitchers, and held torches; it was the Lord that did all, and ſet the Midianites one againſt another to ſlay each other; and in the purſuit as yet he had only pioked up and ſlain ſome common [o] Nempe Jordanis aquas, Junius & Tremellius; nempe Jordanem, Piſcator.

[p] Odyſſ. 13, prope finem.
[q] Hiſt. l. 36. c. 30.
[r] De vera Sap. l. 4. c. 17.
[s] Paradiſe Loſt, l. 1. v. 7.

common ſoldiers, when they had taken two princes of Midian, Oreb and Zeeb, and had brought their heads in triumph to him: is not the gleaning of the grapes of Ephraim, better than the vintage of Abiezer? the family of Abiezer, of which Gideon was; the meaning is, that whereas he began the fight, which may be called the vintage, and they had finiſhed it, which was like gleaning; yet what they did laſt was much preferable to what was done by him at firſt; or the princes of Midian, which they had taken in the purſuit, and was like gleaning after a vintage, were equal, yea ſuperior, to all the camp of Midian, or that part of it that had fallen into his hands. The Targum is, "are not the weak of the houſe of Ephraim, better than the ſtrong of the houſe of Abiezer?"

℣. 3. God hath delivered into your hands the princes of Midian, Oreb and Zeeb, &c.] A high honour this conferred upon you, and with which you may be well contented: and what was I able to do in compariſon of you? what he had done in defeating and purſuing the army of Midian, in ſlaying and taking any of them priſoners, was nothing in compariſon of what they had done; nay, he ſignifies, that he was not capable of doing any thing worth mentioning without them; the glory of finiſhing this conqueſt was reſerved for them: then their anger was abated towards him when he had ſaid that; it being what gratified their pride and was pleaſing to them; and this conduct of Gideon ſhewed him to be a wiſe and humble man.

℣. 4. And Gideon came to Jordan, and paſſed over, &c.] That river; ſee the note on ch. vii. 25. he and 300 men that were with him; at the defeat of the Midianites in the valley of Jezreel; ſo that neither at that, nor in the purſuit of them hitherto, had he loſt one man: faint, yet purſuing them; they were faint with being up all night, and continually blowing their trumpets; and had been upon the purſuit of their enemies ever ſince the defeat; and yet though they were ſo faint, they did not leave off the purſuit, but were eager at it.

℣. 5. And he ſaid to the men of Succoth, &c.] The inhabitants of that place, the principal men of it, which lay in his way as he was purſuing the Midianites in their flight to their own country; for this was a city on the other ſide Jordan, and in the tribe of Gad, and was inhabited by Iſraelites, Joſh. xiii. 27. it had its name from the booths or tents which Jacob erected here, Gen. xxxiii. 17. give I pray you loaves of bread unto the people that follow me; he did not deſire them to quit their habitations and families, and join him in purſuing his and their enemies, or to furniſh him and his men with arms; only to give them ſome proviſions, and that not dainties, but loaves of bread; or morſels of bread[t], and broken pieces; and theſe he did not demand in an authoritative manner, as he might have done as a general, but in a way of intreaty; and the arguments he uſes are, for they be faint; for want of food, through the long fatigue from midnight hitherto, in the purſuit of the enemy, and which was not over: and I am purſuing after Zebah and Zalmunna, kings of Midian; who had fled with 15,000 men, and were now, as Jarchi conjectures, deſtroying the countries of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; and now Gideon and his men were cloſely purſuing them, in hopes of taking them, and ſo compleat the conqueſt, and thoroughly deliver Iſrael from their bondage on both ſides Jordan, the benefits of which theſe men of Succoth would ſhare with others; theſe were the arguments, and cogent ones they were, to perſuade them to give his weary troops ſome refreſhment.

℣. 6. And the princes of Succoth ſaid, &c.] The chief magiſtrates of the place made anſwer, or in the name of the reſt; for the word ſaid is in the ſingular number: are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hands? that is, are they taken priſoners, and hand-cuffed, or their hands bound behind them, and put into the hands of Gideon, to do with them as he pleaſed? no, they were not; and they ſuggeſt they never would, deriding him and his ſmall number of men as not a match for theſe kings, whom, perhaps a little before, they had ſeen paſs by with 15,000 men; with whom his little army would not be able to encounter, ſhould they turn and fall upon them, which they ſuppoſed would be the caſe; and therefore ſay they, when theſe are in thine hands, which they thought would never be, it will be time enough, that we ſhould give bread to thine army? for they feared ſhould they do that, theſe kings would hear of it, and they ſhould ſuffer for it, and their bondage be harder than it was before; ſo ſelfiſh and diffident in themſelves, ſo cruel and uncompaſſion to their brethren, and ſo ungrateful to their deliverers, which ſtirred up the ſpirit of this humble and good man to great reſentment.

℣. 7. And Gideon ſaid, &c.] In anſwer to the princes of Succoth: therefore when the Lord hath delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into mine hand; of which he made no doubt, having the promiſe of God that he would deliver the hoſt of Midian into his hand, on which his faith reſted; and having it in great part performed already, moſt firmly believed the full performance of it; ſee ch. vii. 7, 9. then I will tear your fleſh with the thorns of the wilderneſs, and with briers; which grew in a wilderneſs near this city, and from whence, as Kimchi thinks, it had its name; the word Succoth being uſed for thorns in Job xli. 7. and the ſenſe is, either that he would ſcourge them with thorns and briers; or, as the Targum, thruſt their fleſh upon them; which Kimchi interprets of caſting their naked bodies upon thorns and briers, and then treading on them with the feet; or draw a cart over them, as they thus lay, in like manner as it was uſual to do when corn was threſhed out; ſee Iſ. xxviii. 27.

℣. 8. And he went up thence to Penuel, &c.] A place not far from Succoth, and to which alſo Jacob gave name, from the Lord's appearing to him there face to face, Gen. xxxii. 30. but here was nothing of God in this place now: and ſpake unto them likewiſe; deſired bread for his men, as he had of the inhabitants of Succoth: and the men of Penuel anſwered him, as the men of Succoth had anſwered him; denied him his requeſt in the ſame jeering manner.

℣. 9. And he ſpake alſo unto the men of Penuel, &c.] In a threatening way, as he had ſpoken to the men of Succoth: ſaying, when I come again in peace; having conquered all his enemies, and delivered Iſrael from their bondage, and reſtored peace and proſperity to them, of which he had no doubt: I will break down this tower; pointing to it, and which ſtood in their city, and in which they placed their confidence; and when he threatened them, boaſted of it as their ſecurity.

℣. 10. Now Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor, kor, &c.] Jerom[t] under this word says, there was in his time a castle called Carcaria, a day's journey from Petra, which was the metropolis of Idumea; but whether the same with this is not clear: and their host with them, about 15,000 men; to which number Gideon and his 300 men were very unequal; and yet, faint and weary as they were, closely pursued them, attacked and conquered them. Josephus[u] very wrongly makes this number to be about 18,000: all that were left of the hosts of the children of the east; the Arabians, who with the Amalekites joined the Midianites in this expedition; and perhaps the remainder of the army chiefly consisted of Arabians, the others having mostly suffered in the valley of Jezreel, and at the fords of Jordan: for there fell 120,000 men that drew sword; besides infirm men, women, and children, which may reasonably be supposed; so that this host consisted of 135,000 fighting men.

[t] כמרוז לחם buccellas panis, Vatablus; tractas panis, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo the Targum.

℣. 11. And Gideon went up by the way of them that dwell in tents, &c.] That is, of the Arabians and Kedarenes, who dwelt in tents for the sake of feeding their flocks, as the Targum and Jarchi; he did not pursue them in the direct road, but went a round about way, where these people dwelt, that he might surprize the host of the kings of Midian at an unawares: and he came upon them, on the east of Nobah and Jogbehah; the first was in the tribe of Manasseh, and the latter in the tribe of Gad, and both it seems were on the confines of those tribes; see Numb. xxxii. 35, 42. the Targum calls the latter Ramatha; both words have the signification of height in them, this city very probably being built on an eminence. According to Bunting[x] Penuel was two miles from Succoth, Nobah two miles from Penuel, and Jogbehah four miles from Nobah, and Karkor four miles from Jogbehah, whither he pursued the kings, and took them, after he had discomfited the army: and smote the host, for the host was secure; having got over Jordan, and it being night very probably, they thought themselves safe from Gideon's army, who they could have no thought that they would come up with them so soon, being on foot, weary, and fatigued.

℣. 12. And when Zebah and Zalmunna fled, &c.] Their host being smitten and thrown into confusion by the sudden approach of Gideon's army; and who probably attacked them in somewhat like manner as before, blowing their trumpets, and calling out the sword of the Lord and of Gideon; which were such terrifying sounds to them, that they fled at once: he pursued after them, and took the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, and discomfited all the host; or terrified them, so that they fled some one way and some another, and the kings being left alone were easily taken.

℣. 13. And Gideon the son of Joash returned from battle, &c.] To Penuel and Succoth, to chastise them for their ill treatment of him and his men: before the sun was up; by which it appears that it was in the night that he fell upon the host at Karkor, which must be the night following; it could not be the same night in which he had defeated them in the valley of Jezreel; though Vatablus thinks this battle was begun and finished in one night; but there were, according to this history, so many things done after the first defeat, as sending messengers to mount Ephraim and the Ephraimites, upon the taking the fords of Jordan, and bringing the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon, expostulating with him, and his answer to them, and his stay at Succoth and Penuel; which make it more probable that the day following was spent in the pursuit, and that it was the night after that that the whole affair was finished; and before sun-rise, Gideon returned to Penuel and Succoth again; so Ben Gersom and Abarbinel; but according to the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi, this phrase is to be rendered before the sun-set, whilst it yet appeared, and was above the horizon; and so it must be in the day-time that he pursued the two kings and took them, and returned before sun-set. Abendana observes the word for sun may be the name of a place, and so the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic versions call it the ascent of Ares or Heres; as if it was the name of the place from whence Gideon returned, so called in like manner as the ascent of Akrabbim, and the like.

℣. 14. And caught a young man of the men of Succoth, and enquired of him, &c.] Just before he came to the city, he spied a young man which belonged to it, and laid hold on him, and enquired of him about the chief magistrates of the city, who they were, what their names, and their places of abode: and he described unto him the princes of Succoth, and the elders thereof, even 77 men; by which it appears that this was no inconsiderable city to have so many princes and elders in it; these the young man described to Gideon, what sort of men they were, what their names, and where they dwelt: or he wrote unto him[y]; wrote down their names, and what part of the city they dwelt in; or Gideon took down in writing for himself their names and places of abode from the young man, that he might not forget: and in this Gideon shewed great wisdom, and strict justice; being desirous to punish only the delinquents, and not the innocent with the wicked, the people with their rulers; for tho' he asked bread of the men of Succoth, the answer was returned in the ill-natured manner it was by the princes.

℣. 15. And he came unto the men of Succoth, &c.] Entered the city, and bespoke the inhabitants of it in the following manner: and said, behold, Zebah and Zalmunna with whom ye did upbraid me; as not in his hands, and never would be, he being with his 300 men an unequal match to them with 15,000; but he had taken them, and brought them with him, and perhaps spared them for this very reason, to let them see they were in his hands, and now calls upon them to behold them with their own eyes, concerning whom they had flouted and jeered him: saying, are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thy hand, that we should give bread unto thy men that are weary; he delivers their own expres words, which he had carefully observed and laid up in his memory, for their greater conviction and confusion; only adds the character of his men that they were weary, to expose their vile ingratitude the more, that they should refuse them a few loaves of bread, who were faint and weary in the service of them.

℣. 16. And he took the elders of the city, &c.] All of them, especially those of them who had been most guilty, and had them to a proper place, where they might be made public examples of: and thorns of the wilderness, and briers; which were near at hand, and soon cut up, for which he gave orders to proper persons: and with them he taught the men of Succoth; either the inhabitants of the place place, as distinct from the elders, by whose punishment he taught them to be cautious not to follow such examples, or to behave ill to their superiors; or the princes and elders of the city are meant by the men of it, whom Gideon taught or chastized with thorns and briers; and so it is usual with us for a parent or master to say to his child or servant that has offended, I will teach you to do so or so, or to do otherwise, when he threatens to chastize: or with them he made them to know [z]; that is, their sin and the heinousness of it, by the punishment he inflicted on them. Abarbinel thinks the word know has the signification of mercy in it, as in Exod. ii. 25. in that he did not punish in general the men of that city, only the elders of it. The Targum is, "he broke upon them, or by them, the men of Succoth;" so Jarchi and others; that is, he broke the briers and thorns upon them, scourging them with them; or rather, broke and tore their flesh by them: whether they died or no, is not certain.

[t] De loc. Heb. fol. 90. B. [u] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 6. §. 5. [x] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 109.
[y] ויכתב אליו & scripsit ad eum, Montanus, Piscator; & scripsit sibi, Pagninus, Munster; so some in Drusius.

℣. 17. And he beat down the tower of Penuel, &c.] As he threatened he would, ℣. 9. whether this was before or after he had chastized the elders of Succoth, is not clear; one would think by the course he steered going from Succoth to Penuel, as he went he should come to Penuel first at his return; however, he demolished their tower in which they trusted: and slew the men of the city; perhaps they might, as Kimchi conjectures, resist when he went about to beat down their tower; on which a fray might ensue, in which they were slain; or they might upon his approach, sensible of the offence they had given him, fly to their tower for safety, and were killed in it when that was beaten down about them. In what manner this was done is not said; no doubt they had instruments in those days for demolishing such edifices.

℣. 18. Then said he unto Zebah and Zalmunna, &c.] Not at Penuel or Succoth, but when he had brought them into the land of Canaan, and perhaps to his own city Ophrah: what manner of men were they whom ye slew at Tabor? mount Tabor, to which these men had betaken and hid themselves, in some caves and dens there; see ch. vi. 2. and these kings some little time before the battle had taken them, and slew them, of which it seems Gideon had notice; and some of his brethren being not to be found, he suspected they were the persons, and therefore asked this question: and they answered, as thou art, so were they; very much like him in countenance and stature, stout, able-bodied men, of a graceful and majestic appearance. Abarbinel takes it to be a curse on Gideon, be thou, or thou shalt be as they are; as they died by the hand of the Midianites, so shalt thou; but the former sense seems best, and agrees with what follows: each one resembled the children of a king; being brought up in a delicate manner, as these persons seemed to have been: according to Jarchi and Kimchi, the sense is, they were like him, and had all one and the same form and lovely aspect, resembling kings children; but according to Ben Gersom they were in general very much like Gideon, and one of them was like his children, who were then present, particularly his eldest son, as appears from ℣. 20. It is said in the Misnah [a] all the Israelites are the children of kings.

℣. 19. And he said, they were my brethren, even the sons of my mother, &c.] His brethren by his mother's side, but not by his father's side; or the phrase the sons of my mother is added, to shew that he did not mean brethren in a large sense, as all the Israelites were, but in a strict sense, being so nearly related as his mother's children: as the Lord liveth, if ye had saved them alive, I would not slay you; for not being Canaanites, he was not obliged by the law of God to put them to death; and by the law of nations, as they had surrendered themselves, and were made prisoners of war, they ought to have been saved; but as they appeared to be murderers, and had slain the Israelites in cold blood, they deserved to dye; and the persons they had slain being Gideon's brethren, he was the avenger of blood, and it became him to put them to death.

℣. 20. And he said unto Jether his first-born, up and slay them, &c.] Being the near kinsman of his father's brethren, whom these kings had slain, was a proper person to avenge their blood on them; and the rather Gideon might order him to do it, for the greater mortification of the kings, to die by the hand of a youth; and for the honour of his son, to be the slayer of two kings, and to inure him to draw his sword against the enemies of Israel, and embolden him to do such exploits: but the youth drew not his sword, for he feared, because he was yet a youth; his not drawing his sword was not out of disobedience to his father, but through fear of the kings; not of their doing him any hurt, being bound; but there was perhaps a ferocity, as well as majesty in their countenances, which made the young man timorous and fearful.

℣. 21. Then Zebah and Zalmunna said, rise thou and fall upon us, &c.] Since they must die, they chose rather to die by the hand of so great a man and valiant a commander as Gideon, which was more honourable than to die by the hand of a youth: for as the man is, so is his strength; signifying, that as he was a stout, able man, he had strength sufficient to dispatch them at once, which his son had not, and therefore they must have died a lingering and painful death; wherefore as they consulted their honour, so their ease, in desiring to die by the hand of Gideon: and Gideon arose and slew Zebah and Zalmunna; nor was it unusual in those early times for great personages, as judges and generals, to be executioners of others, as were Samuel and Benaiah, 1 Sam. xv. 33. 1 Kings ii. 25, 34. and took away the ornaments that were on their camel's necks; the Targum calls them chains, as in ℣. 26. no doubt of gold; so the horses of king Latinus [b] had golden poïtrels or collars hanging down their breasts. They were, according to Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Gersom, in the form of the moon; see Isa. iii. 18. some have thought that these were worn in honour of Astarte, or the moon, the goddess of the Phœnicians, from whom these people had borrowed that idolatry.

℣. 22. Then the men of Israel said unto Gideon, &c.] Some time after his return, the chief men of Israel having met in a body, and consulted matters among themselves, sent a deputation to Gideon with an offer of the government of them: rule thou over us, both thou and thy son, and thy son's son also; by which they meant, that he would take the kingly government of them, and which they proposed to settle in his posterity for ages to come; for as a judge in Israel, he had a sort of rule and government of them under God already, but amounted not to regal power and authority; and this was what the people of Israel were fond of, that they might [z] ויודע et cognoscere fecit, Montanus; so some in Vatablus; notificavit, Piscator.

[a] Sabbat. c. 14. §. 4.
[b] Virg. Æneid. l. 7. v. 278

might be like their neighbours; and this they tempted Gideon with, who had done such very wonderful and extraordinary things for them, which they alledge as a reason: for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian; from the bondage they were in to them, and therefore fit to be a king over them.

℣. 23. And Gideon said unto them, I will not rule over you, &c.] Not that he declined the government of them as a judge, to which he was raised of God, but as a king, for which he had no authority and call from God; the choice of a king belonging to him, and not to the people: neither shall my son rule over you; which Abarbinel thinks he spake as a prophet, and under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit; for after his death neither Jether his eldest son, nor any of the rest of his legitimate sons, ruled over them; for they were all slain by Abimelech, the son of his concubine, who was made king: the Lord shall rule over you; as he did; their government was a theocracy, which they would have changed, but Gideon would not agree to it.

℣. 24. And Gideon said unto them, I would desire a request of you, &c.] Which he thought they would scarcely deny, and it was now a fair opportunity to make it, since they had offered him a crown, or to be king over them: and the favour he asked was, that you would give me every man the ear rings of his prey; or, an ear-ring of his prey; for it is in the singular number; every man one ear-ring, as Abarbinel interprets it; for though they might have more, yet only one ear-ring of every man is desired: for they had golden ear-rings, because they were Ishmaelites; so the Midianites and Ishmaelites are spoken of as the same, they being mixed and dwelling together, or very near each other, Gen. xxxvii. 25, 28, 36. and Kimchi accounts for it thus, why the Midianites are called Ishmaelites; because they were the sons of Keturah, and Keturah was Hagar the mother of Ishmael. The Targum calls them Arabians, and who it seems used to wear ear-rings, as men in the eastern countries did; see Gen. xxxv. 4. Exod. xxxii. 2, 3. So Pliny says [c] in the east it was reckoned ornamental for men to wear gold in their ears.

℣. 25. And they answered, we will willingly give them, &c.] Or, in giving we will give [d]; give them with all their hearts, most freely and chearfully: and they spread a garment, and did cast therein every man the ear-rings of his prey; every man one, which would amount to no more than 300; though perhaps those who joined in the pursuit might take many more, or otherwise the weight of them would not amount to what in the next verse they are said to weigh.

℣. 26. And the weight of the golden ear-rings he requested was 1700 shekels of gold, &c.] Which, as Scheuchzer [e] computes was 810 ounces, 5 drams, 1 scruple, and 10 grains, of the weight of physicians; but as reckoned by Montanus [f] amounted to 850 ounces, and were of the value of 6800 crowns of gold; and according to Waserus [g], it amounted to 3400 Hungarian pieces of gold, and of their money at Zurich upwards of 15413 pounds, and of our money 2380 pounds: besides ornaments; such as were upon the necks of the camels, ℣. 21. for the same word is used here as there: and collars; the Targum renders it a crown, and Ben Melech says in the Arabic language the word signifies clear crystal; but Kimchi and Ben Gersom take them to be golden vessels, in which they put sweet, or some odoriferous liquor, and so were properly smelling bottles: and purple raiment that was on the kings of Midian; which it seems was the colour that kings wore, as they now do; so Strabo [h] says of the kings of Arabia, that they are clothed in purple: and besides the chains that were about their camel's necks; which seem to be different from the other ornaments about them, since another word is here used; now all these seem to have been what fell to his share, as the general of the army, and not what were given him by the people.

℣. 27. And Gideon made an ephod thereof, &c.] That is, of some of this gold; for such a quantity could never have been expended on an ephod only, even taking it not for a linen ephod, but such an one as the high priest wore, made of gold, of blue, purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, with curious work, together with a curious girdle of the same work; unless we suppose such a breast-plate with it, of 12 precious stones, as Aaron had; and with little images of Teraphim, or Cherubim in it, as Dr. Spencer thinks [i]. The Jewish commentators generally understand this ephod to be made as a memorial of the great salvation God had wrought by his hands for Israel, and of the wonderful things done by him; so Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Gersom; but such a garment, whether worn by him, or hung up in some certain place, seems not so proper and pertinent to perpetuate the memory of his victories, as a monument or pillar would have been; it looks therefore more likely to be done with a religious view, which afterwards was perverted to superstitious uses; and whereas Gideon had built an altar already by the command of God, and had sacrificed upon it, he might think himself authorized as a priest, and therefore provided this ephod for himself; or however for a priest he might think of taking into his family, and so use it as an oracle to consult upon special occasions, without going to Shiloh, the Ephraimites having displeased him in their rough expostulations with him; and so R. Isaiah interprets it of a kind of divination or oracle which gave answers: and put it in his city, even in Ophrah; hung it up in some proper place as a monument of his victories, as is generally thought; or in a structure built on purpose for it, to which he might resort as to an oracle: and all Israel went thither a-whoring after it; made an idol of it and worshipped it, and so committed spiritual fornication, which is idolatry. Some render it, after him [k]; not after the ephod, but after Gideon; that is, after his death, so Jarchi; no ill use was made of it in Gideon's time, though he cannot be altogether excused from sin and weakness in making it; but after his death it was soon made an ill use of: which thing proved a snare to Gideon and to his house; it was a snare to him if he consulted it as an oracle, which could not be without sin, since the only Urim and Thummim to be consulted were in the breast-plate of the high-priest at the tabernacle; and it was what led his family into idolatry, and was the ruin of it, as well as it reflected great discredit and disgrace upon so good and brave a man: some some read the words [1] to Gideon, that is, to his house; or family; he being so good a man himself, it is not thought that he could be ensnared into idolatry itself; though it is apparent that men as wise and as good have fallen into it, as particularly Solomon.

[c] Nat. Hist. l. 11, c. 37. [d] נתון נתן dando dabimus, Pagninus, Montanus. [e] Physica Sacra, vol. 3. p. 468. [f] Tubal Cain, p. 15. [g] De Numis. Heb. l. 2. c. 10. [h] Geograph. l. 16. p. 539. [i] De leg. Heb. l. 3. c. 3. Dissert. 7. §. 5. [k] אחריו post ipsum, Vatablus.

℣. 28. Thus was Midian subdued before the children of Israel, &c.] By the hand of Gideon humbled and brought under, their power over Israel was broken, and they delivered out of their hands: so that they lifted up their heads no more; in a proud and haughty manner to insult them, and in an hostile way to invade and oppress them; such a blow was given them that they could not recover themselves, nor do we read of any effort of theirs ever after, or of their giving or attempting to give any disturbance to Israel, or any other nation: and the country was in quietness forty years in the days of Gideon; that is, the land of Canaan; it was free from wars with Midian, or any other people, and enjoyed undisturbed peace and tranquillity. According to bishop Usher [k], this was the 40th year from the rest restored by Deborah and Barak; and according to Abarbinel and others, these 40 years are to be reckoned from the beginning of the servitude; that is, the seven years oppression under the Midianites are included in them; but I cannot see that in this instance, and in others before met with, years of bondage can be counted with years of peace and prosperity, and go under that general name. The true sense seems to be, that after the Israelites had been in subjection to the Midianites for seven years, and Gideon had delivered them, that from thence forward they had rest and quietness 40 years, which in all probability was the time Gideon lived after his victories.

℣. 29. And Jerubbaal the son of Joash, &c.] That is, Gideon, Jerubbaal being another name of his; see ch. vi. 32. and vii. 1. went and dwelt in his own house; which was at Ophrah, as appears from ch. ix. 5. the war being ended, he disbanded his army, and retired to his own house; not that he lived altogether a private life there, but as a judge in Israel.

℣. 30. And Gideon had 70 sons, of his body begotten, &c.] Not after his victories, for it is plain he had children before; mention is made of Jether, his first-born, as a youth able to draw a sword, and slay with it, ℣. 20. but this was the number of all his sons, both before and after, and a large number it was; and the phrase of his body begotten, or that went out of his thigh, is used to shew that they were his own sons, begotten in wedlock, and not sons that he had taken into his family by adoption, or that he was father-in-law to, having married a woman or women that had sons by a former husband; but these were all his own: for he had many wives; which though not agreeable to the original law of marriage was customary in those times, and even with good men, and was connived at; and this is a reason accounting for his having so many sons.

℣. 31. And his concubine that was in Shechem, &c.] Which was not an harlot, but a secondary or half-wife; such were generally taken from handmaids, and of the meaner sort, and were not in such esteem as proper wives, had not the management of household affairs, only a share in the bed, and their children did not inherit. This concubine of Gideon's seems not to have been taken into his house at all, but lived at Shechem, perhaps in her father's house, and here Gideon met with her when he went to Shechem as a judge to try causes; her name, according to Josephus [l], was Druma: she also bare him a son; as his other wives did; perhaps all the children he had were sons, and this was one over and above the 70, and not to be reckoned into that number: whose name he called Abimelech; which signifies, my father a king; which he gave him either in memory of the offer made him to be king of Israel, or through foresight of what this son of his would be; or he might be moved to it by the mother from pride and vanity, and which name might afterwards inspire the young man to be made a king, as he was; and the account given of his name is because of the narrative of him in the following chapter.

℣. 32. And Gideon the son of Joash died in a good old age, &c.] Having lived it seems forty years after his war with Midian, blessed with a large family, much wealth and riches, great credit and esteem among his people, and in favour with God and men: and was buried in the sepulchre of Joash his father, in Ophrah of the Abiezrites; a city which belonged to the family of the Abiezrites, who were of the tribe of Manasseh, in which Gideon lived, and his father before him; and where there was a family vault, in which he was interred. In the days of this judge 'tis supposed [m] was the famous expedition of the Argonauts to Colchis, to fetch from thence the golden fleece.

℣. 33. And it came to pass as soon as Gideon was dead, that the children of Israel turned again, &c.] From God, and the pure worship of him, to idolatry: and went a-whoring after Baalim; the gods of the Phœnicians and Canaanites, the several Baal's of other nations, the lords many which they served; these they committed spiritual whoredom with; that is, idolatry: particularly and made Baal Berith their God; which was the idol of the Shechemites, as appears from a temple being built at Shechem for it, ch. ix. 5. and had its name either from Berytus, a city of Phœnicia, of which Mela [n] and Pliny [o] make mention, and where this Baal might be first worshipped; it was 400 furlongs from Sidon, and was in after-times a seat of learning [p]; of this city was Sanchoniatho, a Phœnician historian, who is said to receive many things he writes about the Jews from Jerombalus, supposed to be Jerubbaal, or Gideon; see the note on ch. vi. 32. and who tells [q] us, that Cronus or Ham gave this city to Neptune and the Cabiri, and who also relates [r] that Beruth is the name of a Phœnician deity. Though it may be rather this idol had its name from its supposed concern in covenants, the word Berith signifying a covenant; and so the Targum and Syriac version call him the lord of covenant; and the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions are, "and they made a covenant with Baal, that he should be their god;" as if he had his name from hence; though rather from his presiding over covenants, as Janus is said [s] to do, and from his avenging the breach of them, and rewarding those that kept them; the same with Jupiter Fidius Ultor, and Sponsor [t] with the Romans, and Horcius [u] with the Greeks.

℣. 34. And the children of Israel remembered not the

[1] So Junius & Tremellius, Noldius, p 280. N°. 1205.
[k] Annal. Vet. Test. p. 43.
[l] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 7. §. 1.
[m] Gerard. Voss. Chronolog. Sacr. Dissert. 1. p. 4.
[n] De situ orbis, l. 1. c. 12.
[o] Nat. Hist. l. 5. c. 20.
[p] Eunapius in vita Proæresii, p. 117,
[q] Apud Euseb. Evangel. Præpar. l. 1. p. 38.
[r] Ibid. p. 36.
[s] Servius in Virgil. Æneid. l. 12. Latonæque genus, &c. Vid. Liv. Hist. l. 8. c. 5, 6.
[t] Vid. Kipping. Antiqu. Roman. l. 1. c. 1. p. 48.
[u] Pausan. Eliac. 1. sive l. 5. p. 336. Sophocles in Philoctete, prope finem.

the Lord their God, &c.] Or, as the Targum, the worſhip of the Lord their God; they forgot him, and forſook him, which ſhewed baſe ingratitude: who had delivered them out of the hands of their enemies on every ſide; not only out of the hands of Midian, but all other nations round about them, as Edom, Moab, Ammon, &c. not one attempting to oppreſs them.

℣. 35. Neither ſhewed they kindneſs to the houſe of Jerubbaal, namely Gideon, &c.] But on the contrary, great unkindneſs and cruelty, ſlaying his 70 ſons, as related in the following chapter: according to all the goodneſs which he had ſhewed unto Iſrael; in expoſing his life to danger for their ſake, in delivering them out of the hands of their oppreſſors, in adminiſtring juſtice to them, in protecting them in their civil and religious liberties, and leaving them in the quiet and peaceable poſſeſſion of them.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter contains an account of the craft and cruelty of Abimelech, by which he got himſelf made king of the Shechemites, ℣. 1—6. of the parable of Jotham, the youngeſt ſon of Gideon, concerning the trees, in which he expoſes their folly in making Abimelech king, and foretels the ruin of them both, ℣. 7—21. of the contentions which aroſe between Abimelech, and the men of Shechem, increaſed by Gaal the ſon of Ebed, ℣. 22—29. who was drawn into a battle with Abimelech, and beaten and forced to fly, ℣. 30—41. but the quarrel between Abimelech and the men of Shechem ceaſed not, but ſtill continued, which iſſued in the entire ruin of the city and the inhabitants of it, ℣. 42—49. and in the death of Abimelech himſelf, according to Jotham's curſe, ℣. 50—57.

℣. 1. And Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbaal went to Shechem, unto his mother's brethren, &c.] It ſeems that though the mother of Abimelech lived at Shechem, he was taken and brought up in his father's houſe at Ophrah, where he was when he died; and from hence he came to Shechem, to pay a viſit to his uncles there; whether his mother was now living, is not certain: and communed with them; about the death of his father, the ſtate of his family, and the government of Iſrael: and with all the family of the houſe of his mother's father; that deſcended from his grandfather, the ſeveral branches of them, and of the family, the heads of them at leaſt: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak, I pray you, in the ears of all the men of Shechem, &c.] Which, though the Targum calls the inhabitants of the place, Ben Melech better interprets it, the lords of Shechem, as the phraſe will bear to be rendered; for it is more likely he would have this firſt whiſpered and ſuggeſted to the principal men of the city, before the common people were acquainted with it, and indeed in order to uſe their influence with them: whether is better for you, either that all the ſons of Jerubbaal, which are 70 perſons, reign over you, or that one reign over you? intimating thereby, that though Gideon his father had refuſed the regal government when offered him, it was but reaſonable that his ſons, or ſome one of them ſhould be tried, whether it would be acceptable to them; nay, he would inſinuate, that the ſons of Gideon, who were 70 in number, were either contending with one another about it, or contriving to divide the government among them, and therefore deſired it might be moved to conſideration, whether it would not be more eligible to fix upon ſome one perſon to be their ruler, than to be under the government of 70; or, in other words, whether it was not better to have one king than 70 kings; but in reality there was no neceſſity for any conſultation about this matter, the ſons of judges never ſucceeded their fathers in government; nor does it appear that any of Gideon's ſons had any thought about it, nor any deſire to be made kings, as appears from Jotham's parable; and this was only a wicked inſinuation of this man's, with an ambitious view of getting the kingdom to himſelf, as follows: remember alſo that I am your bone and your fleſh; was of the ſame tribe and city with them, born among them, his mother always living with them, and he having now many near relations by his mother's ſide that dwelt there; and therefore whilſt they had this affair of government under conſideration, he would have them think of him to be their king, which would be to their honour, and to their advantage, to have one ſo nearly related to them on the throne, from whom they might expect many favours.

℣. 3. And his mother's brethren ſpake of him in the ears of the men of Shechem all theſe words, &c.] Got them together in ſome certain place, and laid before them all that Abimelech had ſuggeſted to them, and ſpake in his favour to them: and their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech, for they ſaid he is our brother; being fond of kingly government, as the Iſraelites generally were, it ſeemed moſt agreeable to them to have one king over them, and none more acceptable than one ſo nearly related to them, who they doubted not from his alliance to them, would be ready to oblige them on all occaſions.

℣. 4. And they gave him 70 pieces of ſilver out of the houſe of Baal-berith, &c.] The temple of their idol; of this name ſee ch. viii. 33. out of the money which had been dedicated to his ſervice by free will-offering, or out of a bank which they depoſited there for greater ſafety, and perhaps out of a ſuperſtitious notion of its being more proſperous and ſucceſsful: of what value theſe pieces were, is not certain; by pieces of ſilver, commonly ſhekels, are meant; but theſe are thought to be of too little value to be given to a man to raiſe an army with, or carry on a ſcheme to advance himſelf to the throne; and talents are judged to be too large a ſum for ſuch a city to contribute out of a temple of theirs, and that but lately built, as it muſt be ſince the death of Gideon; they are therefore thought to be pounds, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; however, in the tale of them there ſeems to be ſome reference to the number of Gideon's ſons, who were to be deſtroyed by bribing men with this ſum, which was the ſcheme concerted between Abimelech and the men of Shechem; wherewith Abimelech hired vain and light perſons, which followed him; perhaps 70 of them, giving to each a piece or pound of ſilver; theſe were a baſe ſcoundrel ſort of people, that lived in an idle ſcandalous manner, a ſort of free booters, that lived upon what they could lay hold on in a way of force and rapine; men of light heads and empty brains, and whoſe pockets were as light and empty as their heads, and fit to engage in any enterprise, though ever so barbarous, for the sake of a little money.

℣. 5. And he went to his father's house at Ophrah, &c.] Which, according to Bunting [a], was 10 miles from Shechem: and slew his brethren the sons of Jerubbaal, being 70 persons upon one stone; in which he was assisted by the ruffians he had hired with 70 pieces of silver; these were laid one after another upon one and the same stone, as being convenient for the execution of them; or as serving as an altar on which they were sacrificed to Baal, out of whose temple the money was taken to hire the executioners with. They are said to be 70 that were slain, tho' one escaped, the round number being given, as in many other instances, as in Gen. xlvi. 27. John xx. 24. notwithstanding, yet Jotham the youngest son of Jerubbaal was left; or remained alive, not out of compassion to his youth, but because he could not be found: for he hid himself; for no doubt Abimelech, and his crew, were most forward to lay hold of the eldest, and sacrifice them first, as being most in his way; this gave Jotham the youngest not only notice of their design, but an opportunity of providing for his safety, or however his friends; for it may be rendered, as in some versions, he was hidden [b], that is, by others.

℣. 6. And all the men of Shechem gathered together, &c.] Upon the return of Abimelech, after he with his banditti had committed the execrable murder of his brethren: and all the house of Millo; which was either the men of a place near to Shechem, or of his brother's family, or of some grand leading family in Shechem; or it may mean the town-hall, where the principal inhabitants met in full house, as Millo signifies, on this occasion: and went and made Abimelech king; which was a most bold and daring action; being done without asking counsel of God, without which no king was to be set over Israel, and by a single city, without the knowledge, advice and consent of the body of the people of Israel: by the plain of the pillar that was in Shechem; the place where they met together, and did this business in voting Abimelech to be king, was near a place where a pillar was set in Shechem; or by the oak of the pillar in Shechem, and so may mean the stone under an oak, which Joshua placed there as a testimony between God and the people, Josh. xxiv. 25, 26, 27. and here in the same place where Joshua convened the people of Israel, and made his last speech to them, was this business done.

℣. 7. And when they told it to Jotham, &c.] Or when it was told him that Abimelech was made king in Shechem by some of his friends: he went and stood in the top of mount Gerizzim; a mount near Shechem; it hung over the city, as Josephus says [c], and so a very proper place to stand on and deliver a speech from it to the inhabitants of it; who, as the same writer says, were now keeping a festival, on what account he says not, perhaps to Baalberith their idol: over-against this mountain was another, called Ebal, and between them a valley; and very likely they were assembled in this valley, where the children of Israel stood when the blessings were delivered from Gerrizzim, and the curses from Ebal; and if so, Jotham might be heard very well by the Shechemites: and he lifted up his voice and cried; that he might be heard by them: and said unto them, hearken unto me, ye men of Shechem, that God may hearken unto you; which was a very solemn manner of address to them, tending to excite attention, as having somewhat of importance to say to them, and suggesting, that if they did not hearken to him, God would not hearken to them when they cried to him, and therefore it behoved them to attend: it is an adjuration of them to hearken to him, or a wish that God would not hearken to them if they were inattentive to him.

℣. 8. The trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them, &c.] This is an apologue or fable, and a very fine and beautiful one; it is fitly expressed to answer the design, and the most ancient of the kind, being made seven hundred years before the times of Æsop, so famous for his fables, and exceeds any thing written by him. By the trees are meant the people of Israel in general, and the Shechemites in particular, who had been for some time very desirous of a king, but could not persuade any of their great and good men to accept of that office: and they said unto the olive-tree, reign thou over us; a fit emblem of a good man, endowed with excellent virtues and qualifications for good, as David king of Israel, who is compared to such a tree, Ps. lii. 8. Jarchi applies this to Othniel the first judge; but it may be better applied to Gideon, an excellent good man, full of fruits of righteousness, and eminently useful, and to whom kingly government was offered, and was refused by him; and the men of Shechem could scarcely fail of thinking of him, and applying it to him, as Jotham was delivering his fable.

℣. 9. But the olive-tree said unto them, &c.] In reply to the request of the trees: should I leave my fatness, wherewith by me they honour God and man; by fatness, oil is meant, pressed out of the fruit of the olive-tree, and which was much made use of, both in the burning of the lamps in the tabernacle, and in many sacrifices, as the meat-offerings and others, whereby God was honoured; and it was also made use of in the investiture of the greatest personages with the highest offices among men, as kings, priests and prophets, as well as eaten with pleasure and delight by all sorts of men, and even by the greatest, and so men are honoured by it: and go to be promoted over the trees; desert so useful a station, in which it was planted and fixed, to move to and fro, as the word signifies, and reign over trees; suggesting that it was unreasonable, at least not eligible to a good man to desert a private station in life, to which he was called of God, and in which he acted with honour and usefulness to others, and take upon him a public office, attended with much care and trouble, and with neglect of private affairs, and with the loss of much personal peace and comfort.

℣. 10. And the trees said to the fig-tree, &c.] Another useful and fruit-bearing tree, and to which also good men are sometimes compared, see Cant. ii. 13. come thou, and reign over us; which Jarchi applies to Deborah, but may be better applied to one of Gideon's sons; who, though they had not a personal offer of kingly government themselves, yet it was made to them through their father, and refused as for himself, so for them; and had it been offered to them, they would have rejected it, as Jotham seems to intimate by this parable.

℣ 11.

[a] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 111.

[b] נחבא εκρυβη, Sept. absconditus est, V. L. qui absconditus fuit, Tigurine version; so the Targum.

[c] Antiq. l. 5. c. 7. §. 2.

℣. 11. And the fig-tree ſaid unto them, &c.] Rejecting the offer made: ſhould I forſake my ſweetneſs and my good fruit; for ſuch the fruit of the fig-tree is, ſweet and good: ſo Julian[d] the emperor ſhews from various authors, Ariſtophanes, Herodotus, and Homer, that nothing is ſweeter than figs, excepting honey, and that no kind of fruit is better, and where they are, no good is wanting: and go to be promoted over the trees? the ſame is deſigned by this as the former.

℣. 12. Then ſaid the trees unto the vine, &c.] Another emblem of good and uſeful men; and it may be obſerved, that Jotham takes no notice of any trees but fruitful ones till he comes to the bramble, and them only ſuch as were well known and of the greateſt uſe, in the land of Judea, as olives, figs and vines, ſee Deut. viii. 8. Hab. iii. 17. come thou, and reign over us; this Jarchi applies to Gideon; but ſince there are three ſorts of trees brought into the fable, and when the kingdom was offered to Gideon, it was propoſed to him, and to his ſon, and his ſon's ſon, and refuſed, ſome reference may be had unto it in this apologue. Abarbinel thinks three ſorts of men are intended as proper perſons for rule and government, as honourable ones, ſuch as are wealthy and rich, and alſo of good behaviour to God and man, as Gideon's ſons were; but Abimelech was all the reverſe.

℣. 13. And the vine ſaid unto them, &c.] By way of denial and refuſal as the other two: ſhall I leave my wine, which cheereth God and man; which being uſed in the drink-offerings was acceptable to God, and of a ſweet ſavour to him, Numb. xv. 7. and being drank by man, revives, refreſhes and makes glad, when before ſorrowful, drooping, faint and weary, Pſ. civ. 15. though ſome by Elohim, rendered God, underſtand great perſonages, as men of quality, magiſtrates, &c. and by man the common people, and ſo in ℣. 9. and go to be promoted over the trees; all ſpeak the ſame language, being of the ſame ſentiment.

℣. 14. Then ſaid all the trees unto the bramble, &c.] Perceiving they could not prevail upon any of the uſeful and fruitful trees to take the government of them, they unite in a requeſt to a bramble, ſcarce to be called a tree, and however a very barren and fruitleſs one, yea hurtful and diſtreſſing: come thou, and reign over us; this reſpects Abimelech, and deſcribes him as a mean perſon, the ſon of a concubine, as having no goodneſs in him, not any good qualifications to recommend him to government, but all the reverſe, cruel, tyrannical and oppreſſive; and this expoſes the folly of the Shechemites, and their eagerneſs to have a king at any rate, tho' ever ſo mean and deſpicable, uſeleſs and pernicious.

℣. 15. And the bramble ſaid unto the trees, &c.] Accepting of their offer at once: if ye in truth anoint me king over you; ſuſpecting they were not hearty and cordial in their choice and call to the kingly authority over them: then come and put your truſt in my ſhadow; promiſing protection to them as his ſubjects, requiring their confidence in him, and boaſting of the good they ſhould receive from him, as is common with wicked princes at their firſt entering on their office; but, alas! what ſhadow or protection can there be in a bramble? if a man attempts to put himſelf under it for ſhelter, he will find it will be of no uſe to him, but hurtful, ſince the nearer and cloſer he comes to it, the more he will be ſcratched and torn by it: and if not, let fire come out of the bramble, and devour the cedars of Lebanon; ſignifying, that if they did not heartily ſubmit to his government, and put confidence in him, and prove faithful to him, they ſhould ſmart for it, and feel his wrath and vengeance, even the greateſt men among them, comparable to the cedars of Lebanon; for thorns and brambles catching fire, as they eaſily do, or fire being put to them, as weak as they are, and placed under the talleſt and ſtrongeſt cedars, will ſoon fetch them down to the ground; and the words of the bramble, or Abimelech, proved true to the Shechemites, he is made to ſpeak in this parable.

℣. 16. Now therefore, if ye have done truly and ſincerely, in that ye have made Abimeleth king, &c.] If they had done this conſcientiouſly, and in the uprightneſs of their hearts, to take ſuch a baſe man, and a murderer, and make him their king, which Jotham doubted, and put it in this manner to them, that they might conſider of it themſelves: if ye have dealt well with Jerubbaal, and his houſe; if they could think ſo, which ſurely they could not, when they reflected upon the murder of his family they had conſented to: and have done unto him according to the deſervings of his hands; to his memory, and to his family, according to the merit of his works which he had performed on their account, next mentioned.

℣. 17. For my father fought for you, &c.] In the valley of Jezreel, and at Karkor, where with 300 men he routed and deſtroyed an army of 135,000: and adventured his life far; which, according to our verſion, may ſeem to have reſpect to his going over Jordan, and following the Midianites, fleeing into their country, and fighting them at Karkor, at a great diſtance from his native place; but the phraſe in the original text is, he caſt away his life afar off[e], made no account of it, expoſed it to the greateſt danger; or, as the Targum, "he delivered his life as it were to deſtruction:" and delivered you out of the hand of Midian; from the oppreſſion and bondage of the Midianites, under which they had laboured ſeven years.

℣. 18. And ye are riſen up againſt my father's houſe this day, &c.] Which was an inſtance of great ingratitude in them, after ſuch ſervices done for them, and favours received by them: and have ſlain his ſons, 70 perſons on one ſtone; excepting one, himſelf, and he was intentionally ſlain, their deſign was to cut off every one; and all being ſlain but one, the round number is given, and this being ſo large, is the rather obſerved; and though Abimelech committed the fact, the men of Shechem were acceſſory to it, they gave him money, with which he hired men to aſſiſt him in it, ſee ℣. 21. and it is very probable they were privy to his intention, and encouraged him to it; and certain it is, they ſhowed their approbation of it, by making Abimelech king after it, and therefore they are juſtly charged with it: and have made Abimelech, the ſon of his handmaid, king over the men of Shechem; which was both to the diſgrace of Gideon, and his family, and of themſelves too, that a baſe ſon of his ſhould be made their king; when it would have been more to the credit of Gideon, and his his family, that he had lived in obſcurity, and had not been known as a ſon of his; and this was to the reproach of the men of Shechem, and eſpecially to the princes thereof; for by the men of Shechem are meant the lords, and great men thereof, as Kimchi obſerves; and great contempt is caſt on Abilemech himſelf, who is here repreſented as making a very poor figure, being by extraction the ſon of an handmaid, and king only over the men of Shechem; and who made him ſo for no other reaſon but this, becauſe he is your brother; not becauſe he had any right to the kingdom, or had any qualification for it, but becauſe his mother lived among them, and her family belonged to them, and ſo he was related to many of them, and they hoped on that account to have preferment and favours from him.

[d] Opera, par. 2. ep. 24. Sarapioni, p. 142.

[e] וישלך את נפשו מנגד & projecit animam ſuam a longe, Pagninus; vel eminus, Montanus; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

ver. 19. If ye then have dealt truly and ſincerely with Jerubbaal, and his houſe this day, &c.] If they could in their conſciences think and believe they had done well, and acted the faithful and upright part by him and his family, which he left with them to conſider of: then rejoice ye in Abimelech, and let him alſo rejoice in you; may you be happy in him as a king, and he be happy in you as his ſubjects, and live peaceably and comfortably together; and this he ſuggeſts as a teſt of their former conduct, that ſhould this alliance between Abimelech and them be attended with happineſs, which he could not believe would be the caſe, then it would ſeem that they had done a right part by Gideon and his family; but if they ſhould be unhappy together, as he ſuppoſed they would, then it would be clear that they had acted a baſe and diſingenuous part by his father's family.

ver. 20 But if not, &c.] If it appeared that they had not acted uprightly and ſincerely in this matter: let fire come out of Abilemech, and devour the men of Shechem, and the houſe of Millo; let wrath, rage and fury break out from Abimelech like fire, and iſſue in the deſtruction of thoſe that made him king, both thoſe of Shechem and of Millo: and let fire come out from the men of Shechem, and from the houſe of Millo, and devour Abimelech; let them be incenſed againſt Abimelech, and ſeek his ruin, and procure it: the ſenſe is, that he wiſhes that ſtrife, contention and quarrels might ariſe among them, and they mutually deſtroy each other; the words are imprecative of evil upon them both, and which had its exact fulfilment.

ver. 21. And Jotham ran away, and fled, &c.] Having delivered his fable, and the application of it, he made his eſcape, having the advantage of being on the top of a mountain, at ſome diſtance from the people, and perhaps they might not be inclined to do him any hurt: and went to Beer; which ſome take to be ſame with Baalath-beer in the tribe of Simeon, Joſh. xix. 8. Jerom[f] ſays, the village Bera, whither Jotham fled, is eight miles from Eleutheropolis to the north; but Mr. Maundrel[g], who was in thoſe parts in 1697, gives us a better account of it; and, according to him, it is about two hours and a half's travel from Bethel to it, and three hours and one third from it to Jeruſalem; Beer, he ſays, enjoys a very pleaſant ſituation, on an eaſy declivity, fronting ſouthward; at the bottom of the hill it has a plentiful fountain of excellent water, from which it had its name: and dwelt there for fear of Abimelech his brother; how long he dwelt there is not certain, and we hear no more of him after this. Joſephus ſays[h], he lay hid in the mountains three years for fear of Abimelech, which perhaps he concluded from Abimelech's reigning three years, as follows.

ver. 22. When Abimelech had reigned three years over Iſrael.] The people in general conſenting to what the men of Shechem had done, at leaſt not oppoſing it, all being deſirous of a king, and therefore put up with a mean perſon, rather than have none; though it is amazing they ſhould, and that they had not roſe up as one man againſt Abimelech, and avenged the blood of the ſons of Gideon, who had been ſo uſeful and ſerviceable to them; it is indeed ſaid, that he reigned over all Iſrael, and his reign, ſuch as it was, was very ſhort, as is often the caſe with wicked princes.

ver. 23. Then God ſent an evil ſpirit between Abimelech, and the men of Shechem, &c.] Permitted, yea gave a commiſſion to ſatan, the evil ſpirit, to go among them, who ſtirred up ſuſpicions, jealouſies, hatred and ill-will to one another, and ſowed the ſeeds of diſcord and contention among them; or God gave them up to their own hearts luſts, to think ill of one another, grow jealous, and meditate revenge: and the men of Shechem dealt treacherouſly with Abimelech; did not openly declare their minds, but ſecretly conſpired againſt him, and privately conſulted ways and means to get rid of him, and ſhake off his government.

ver. 24. That the cruelty done to the 70 ſons of Jerubbaal might come, &c.] That vengeance might come on the authors of it; ſo things were ordered in providence that this might come paſs: and their blood be laid upon Abimelech their brother, which ſlew them; be charged to his account, and he ſuffer for ſhedding it: and upon the men of Shechem which aided him in killing of his brethren; by giving him money to hire men to go with him to do it, and perhaps by words encouraging the aſſaſſins, and who might be of the city of Shechem.

ver. 25. And the men of Shechem ſet liers in wait for him in the top of the mountains, &c.] Of Ebal and Gerizzim, which were near Shechem, by the way of which he paſſed when he came to that city, and theſe they ſet there, either to ſlay him, or to ſeize his perſon, and bring him to them: and they robbed all that came along that way by them; that belonged to Abimelech and others alſo; and this they did to ſhew their contempt of his government, and that they were no longer under it, and every man did what was right in his own eyes, as if they had no governor over them; though ſome think this was done to draw him thither to ſecure his ſubjects from ſuch rapine and violence, that they might have an opportunity to lay hold upon him, or this they did on purpoſe to begin a civil war: and it was told Abimelech; that they lay in wait for him, and ſo he kept himſelf from them.

ver. 26. And Gaal the ſon of Ebed came with his brethren, and went over to Shechem, &c.] Who this Gaal was, and who his brethren, and from whence he came, and the place he went over, are all uncertain. Jarchi thinks he was a Gentile, and it looks, by ſome ſpeeches of his afterwards, as if he was a deſcendent of Hamor, prince of Shechem, in the times of Jacob, who ſince the expulſion of the Canaanites, his family had retired to ſome diſtant parts; but hearing of a differnce between Abimelech and the Shechemites, Gaal, with ſome of the family, came over, perhaps over Jordan, to make what advantage he could of it: and the men of Shechem put their confidence in him; freely freely told him their mind, the ill opinion they had of Abimelech, and what was their deſign againſt him; and he aſſuring them he would take their part, and defend them to the uttermoſt, they depended on him, and therefore very ſecurely went about their buſineſs in the fields, as follows.

[f] De loc. Heb. fol. 89. I. [g] Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 64, 66. [h] Antiq. l 5. c. 7. §. 2.

℣. 27. And they went into the fields, and gathered their vineyards, &c.] Before they kept within the city, and durſt not ſtir out to gather in the vintage, the time being come, for fear of the troops of Abimelech; for their lying in wait for him, and the robberies committed being made known to him, he had prepared to raiſe ſome forces, and attack them, of which they had had information; but now being encouraged with the protection of Gaal, they ventured out to gather their grapes in their vineyards without fear: and trode the grapes, and made merry; ſung ſongs and danced, as was uſual at the ingathering of the fruits of the earth, and treading the wine-preſs, Iſ. xvi. 10. Jer. xviii. 33. though Abendana thinks, this joy and merriment were made to their idol, to whom they gave the praiſe of their vintage, they ſhould have done to the true God, and what follows may ſeem to confirm it: and they went into the houſe of their god; the temple of Baal-berith, ℣. 5. and did eat and drink; in their idol-temple, as was the manner of idolaters to do, bringing their firſt-fruits to rejoice, and make glad with: and curſed Abimelech; wiſhed they had never ſeen him and known him, hoped they ſhould be rid of him in a little time, and that he would meet with his deſerved diſgrace and puniſhment; and this they did in that very temple from whence they had taken money to aſſiſt him in making way for his government of them; ſo fickle and changeable were they.

℣. 28. And Gaal the ſon of Ebed ſaid, &c.] As they were then making merry, drinking and carouſing: who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem, that we ſhould ſerve him? who is this Abimelech the Shechemite? or who is he more than Shechem the old prince of this place long ago diſpoſſeſſed of it? the one is no better than the other, nor has a better title to rule and government than the other, that we ſhould ſerve him; nay, of the two, the deſcendants of the old Shechem have the beſt title: is not he the ſon of Jerubbaal; that pleaded againſt Baal, and threw down his altar, the god you now ſerve: and Zebul his officer? has he not ſet him over you? not content to rule you himſelf, he has ſet up another as an officer over you under him, and thus you are like to be governed in a tyrannical manner, and oppreſſed: ſerve the men of Hamor — for why ſhould we ſerve him? that is, rather ſerve them than him; which was ſpeaking very contemptuouſly of his government, preferring the deſcendents of Hamor, the old Canaaniti/h prince, that ruled in this place, to Abimelech; and if Gaal was a deſcendent of his, he ſpoke in good earneſt, and thought this a proper opportunity to get the government of the city reſtored to him and his family, ſince their old religion and idolatry were eſtabliſhed among them; and if they had received one, why not the other?

℣. 29. And would to God this people were under my hand, &c.] Or government, that I were but the ruler of their city, and general of their forces: then would I remove Abimelech; from his kingly office, and rid Shechem of him, and all the country round about, and indeed remove him out of the world: and he ſaid to Abimelech; as if he was preſent, in a hectoring and bluſtering manner; or he ſaid what follows to his officer under him, that repreſented him; or he ſent a meſſenger to him, ſaying, increaſe thine army, and come out; bidding him defiance, challenging him to come into the open field and fight him, and bring as many forces along with him as he could or would, not doubting but he ſhould be a match for him; and the men of Shechem would ſee they had nothing to fear from him, having ſuch a man as Gaal at the head of them; this he ſaid to engage the Shechemites to make him their ruler.

℣. 30. And when Zebul the ruler of the city, &c.] Whom Abimelech had placed there under him: heard the words of Gaal the ſon of Ebed, his anger was kindled; becauſe he ſpoke ſlightly of him, and wiſhed to have his place; perhaps before, Zebul was inclined to be on the ſide of the Shechemites againſt Abimelech, or at leaſt diſſembled that he was; but now being incenſed at the words of Gaal, determined to take the ſide of Abimelech, and let him know how things were carrying on againſt him.

℣. 31. And he ſent meſſengers unto Abimelech privily, &c.] In a ſecret manner, unknown to Gaal and the men of Shechem; or craftily, as Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it, ſtill diſſembling, notwithſtanding his anger, to be in the intereſt of Gaal, and the men of Shechem, as appears indeed afterwards by a ſhew of friendlineſs with Gaal, ℣. 36. though, according to Joſeph Kimchi and Ben Gerſom, Thormah is the name of the place where Abimelech was, the ſame with Arumah, ℣. 41. and the ſenſe is, that he ſent meſſengers to Abimelech at Thormah or Arumah: ſaying, Gaal the ſon of Ebed, and his brethren, be come to Shechem; a family that Abimelech well knew, and if they were of the race of the old Canaanites, he would eaſily perceive their deſign: and behold, they fortify the city againſt thee; by repairing its fortifications, or adding new works; or beſiege[1] it, which, as that is done by placing an army around it without, that none can come out of it, ſo by ſetting a watch within, and upon the walls, and at the gates of it, that none can come in, which is here meant; though ſome interpret it of their deſign to beſiege the city Thormah, where Abimelech was, of which he gives him notice; or rather they ſet the city againſt thee, make the inhabitants thine enemies.

℣. 32. Now therefore up by night, &c.] The night following, that no time might be loſt: and the people that is with thee; the troops he had with him; not only ſuch he had for his own guards, but what he had been raiſing, having intelligence before this of the revolt of the Shechemites from him: and lie in wait in the fields; he thought it moſt adviſeable for him to march with the forces he had, from the place where he was in the night, and leſs liable to be diſcovered, and remain in the fields of Shechem till morning, and then come upon the Shechemites before they were aware, and ſurprize them.

℣. 33. And it ſhall be, that in the morning as ſoon as the ſun is up, thou ſhalt riſe early, and ſet upon the city, &c.] For being with his forces advanced near to it by a march in the night, he would be able by ſun-riſing to attack the city before the inhabitants were up to defend it, and ſo ſurpriſe them: and behold, when he and the people that is with him come out againſt thee; that is, Gaal, and the men with him, as many as he upon a ſurprize can get together: thou mayeſt do to them as thou ſhalt find occaſion; as the ſituation of things would direct him, and he in his wiſdom, and according to his ability, and as opportunity offered, would ſee plainly what was fit and right to be done; Zebul did not pretend to adviſe him farther, but left the reſt to his diſcretion, as things ſhould appear to him.

a

[1] צרים obſident, Pagninus, Munſter, Druſius; obſidere cogitant, Piſcator.

℣. 34. And Abimelech roſe up, and all the people that were with him, by night, &c.] According to the advice of Zebul: and they laid wait againſt Shechem in four companies; he divided his army into four parts, which he placed on the four ſides of the city, at ſome diſtance from it, to act as they ſhould have opportunity, to find ways and means of getting into it on either quarter.

℣. 35. And Gaal the ſon of Ebed went out, &c.] He roſe up early that morning, being a man of vigilance and activity, and perhaps had ſome intelligence of the preparations of Abimelech, his deſign againſt the city, though he did not expect he was ſo near at hand: and ſtood in the entering of the gate of the city; to ſee whether the guards were on their duty within, and whether he could obſerve any thing without, any approaching danger: and Abimelech roſe up, and the people that were with him, from lying in wait; came out of their ambuſh, and appeared juſt as Gaal was at the gate.

℣. 36. And when Gaal ſaw the people, he ſaid to Zebul, &c.] Who was up as early, and came to the gate of the city, to ſee how things went, and whether there was any appearance of Abimelech and his forces, and whether any opportunity offered to let him into the city; and it ſeems as if he came and ſtood by Gaal, and appeared friendly with him: behold, there come people down from the tops of the mountains; the mountains of Ebal and Gerizzim, which were near to Shechem: and Zebul ſaid unto him, thou ſeeſt the ſhadow of the mountains, as if they were men; either deriding him, as being juſt out of his bed, and his eyes ſcarce open, that he could not diſcern ſhadows from men; or rather as being of ſuch a timorous ſpirit, that he was afraid of ſhadows; or elſe he ſaid this, putting on an air of ſeriouſneſs, as if he really believed this to be caſe, on purpoſe to deceive him, and keep him from talking about them, whilſt Abimelech and his men made further advances, before Gaal could make any preparation to meet them.

℣. 37. And Gaal ſpake again, and ſaid, &c.] Looking towards the mountains, and taking another view of what he before ſaw for farther ſatisfaction: ſee, there come people down by the middle of the land; either in the valley between the two mountains; or rather thoſe he firſt ſaw on the top of the mountains, were now come down about the middle of them, called in the Hebrew text the navel, from the prominence of the mountains thereabout, or becauſe the navel is in the middle of the body, as this part of them was the middle on which he ſaw them. R. Iſaiah interprets it, between the two cities: and another company come along by the plain of Meonenim; of which we read no where elſe. Montanus renders it, the oak of Meonenim, or of the ſoothſayers; oaks being had in great eſteem with idolaters for their oracles and divinations; and perhaps this was a place, whether an oak or a plain, where ſuch perſons uſed to meet to make their divinations.

℣. 38. Then ſaid Zebul unto him, &c.] Not being able to put him off any longer, and willing to take the opportunity to upbraid him with what he had ſaid: where is now thy mouth, wherewith thou ſaidſt, who is Abimelech that we ſhould ſerve him? dareſt thou ſay the ſame thou haſt done, and utter the contemptuous language concerning Abimelech, aſking who he was that he ſhould be ſerved? Here he is, ſpeak to his face; what are become of thoſe boaſts and brags, and great ſwelling words, what thou wouldſt do if thou hadſt the command of this city? is not this the people thou haſt deſpiſed? as ſmall and inſignificant, bidding Abimelech increaſe his army, and come out and fight: go out, I pray thee now, and fight with them; and ſhew thyſelf to be a man of courage, and not a mere bluſterer, a man that can uſe his ſword as well as his tongue.

℣. 39. And Gaal went out before the men of Shechem, &c.] At the head of them to meet Abimelech, having gathered together as many, and put them in as good order, as he could, and the time would admit of: and fought with Abimelech; without the city.

℣. 40. And Abimelech chaſed him, and he fled before him, &c.] Abimelech got the better of him in the battle, and obliged him to give way, and he purſued him cloſely as he was fleeing: and many were overthrown and wounded, even unto the entering of the gate; or they fell many wounded [k] or ſlain, as the Targum; that is, many were killed and wounded, as in the battle ſo in the purſuit, and lay all the way to the entrance into the gate of the city, to which Gaal, and the men of Shechem, made for their ſafety, and got in.

℣. 41. And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah, &c.] Called alſo Aarima, as Jerom [l] ſays, and in his time called Remphtis; it ſeems to be not far off from Shechem, he returned to the place where he was before, ſee ℣. 31. contenting himſelf with the advantage he had got, and waiting when another opportunity would offer, which quickly did, to be revenged on the Shechemites: and Zebul thruſt out Gaal and his brethren, that they ſhould not dwell in Shechem; there ſeems to have been two parties in Shechem before, one that hated Abimelech, and another more friendly to his intereſt; by which means Zebul his officer kept his poſt, and Gaal could not get the government into his hand; and now by the loſs in the late battle, who were Abimelech's ſworn enemies, and the diſgrace Gaal fell into by being beaten, Zebul was able, ſo far able to carry his point, as to drive Gaal and his brethren out of the city; though he had not ſtrength to put him to death, or to ſeize him and deliver him into the hands of Abimelech.

℣. 42. And it came to paſs on the morrow, &c.] The day after the battle: that the people went out into the field; ſome think to fight, and try the event of another battle, in order to be freed from Abimelech, but that ſeems not ſo likely; rather to finiſh their vintage, as Joſephus [m], or to till their ground, to plow and ſow, which quickly came on after the vintage was ended; and this they might do the more ſecurely, ſince Abimelech had withdrawn himſelf and his forces to his place of habitation, and ſo concluded he would not ſoon at leaſt return to them; and the rather they might think he would be more eaſy with them, ſince Gaal was thruſt out from among them: and they told Abimelech; or it was told Abimelech, that the people came came out into the field, and ſo an opportunity offered to him to come and cut them off, as they were at their buſineſs unarmed.

[k] יפלו חללים & ceciderunt vulnerati multi, Pagninus, Montanus.
[l] De loc. Heb. fol. 94. B.
[m] Antiq. l. 5. c. 7. §. 4.

℣. 43. And he took the people, &c.] That is, the forces he had with him at Arumah: and divided them into three companies; each having a ſeparate leader, and the command of one of them he had himſelf: and laid wait in the field; in the field of Shechem, one company in one part, and one in another part of the field: and looked, and behold, the people were come forth out of the city; he watched them when they did: and he roſe up againſt them, and ſmote them; the companies roſe up out of their ambuſh, in different parts, and killed them.

℣. 44. And Abimelech, and the company that was with him, &c.] Which he had the particular command of; or the heads [m], for in the company with him, as Kimchi obſerves, were great men; and ſo the Septuagint renders it, the princes that were with him: ruſhed forward, and ſtood in the entering of the gate of the city; to prevent the people that were in the field getting into it, and any from coming out of it to their relief: and the two other companies ran upon all the people that were in the fields, and ſlew them; ſo that by this means none eſcaped.

℣. 45. And Abimelech fought againſt the city all that day, &c.] By throwing ſtones or arrows into it: and he took the city; it was ſurrendered to him, not being able to ſtand out againſt his forces: and ſlew the people that was therein; all but thoſe that were of his own family and his friends; all that had taken up arms againſt him, or had ſhown their diſlike of his government, and were his enemies: and beat down the city; the houſes in it, and walls of it, though it was his native place: and ſowed it with ſalt; not to make it barren, for he would rather then have ſowed the field, though this would not have had any effect of that kind, for any time at leaſt; but to ſhow his deteſtation of it, becauſe of the ill uſage he had met with, and as a token of its perpetual deſtruction, to which he devoted it, determining that if it was in his power it ſhould never be rebuilt; but it was hereafter, and became again a very flouriſhing city in Jeroboam's time. Thus the emperor Frederick Barbaroſſa, in the year 1162, when he took Milain, not only ploughed it up, but ſowed it with ſalt; and in memory of it, there is a ſtreet in it, now called la contrada della Sala [n]: beſides, Abimelech did this to deter other cities from rebelling againſt him; for if he ſo uſed his own city, more ſeverely, if poſſible, would he uſe others.

℣. 46. And when all the men of the tower of Shechem heard that, &c.] That the city of Shechem was taken, the inhabitants of it ſlain, the city beaten down, and ſowed with ſalt; by which it appears that this tower was not within the city, for then the men of it would have ſeen what was done, and not be ſaid only to hear it; though it was not far from it, and poſſeſſed by Shechemites, and whither ſome of the principal inhabitants had now fled for ſafety; perhaps it is the ſame with the houſe of Millo, and ſo that part of Jotham's curſe, which reſpected that, had now its accompliſhment, otherwiſe no account is given of it: they entered into an hold of the houſe of the god Berith; not thinking themſelves ſafe enough in the tower, they betook themſelves to the temple of Baal-berith their god, ſee ℣. 4. and ch. viii. 33. which was a ſtrong fortified place, as temples often were; or however had a ſtrong hold belonging to it, and hither they fled, either becauſe of the greater ſtrength of the place, or becauſe of the ſanctity of it, and imagining Abimelech would not deſtroy it on that account; and the rather, becauſe of the ſupply he had from it, which enabled him to raiſe himſelf to the government of Iſrael.

℣. 47. And it was told Abimelech, &c.] Who had his ſpies about, and particularly to obſerve the motions of the men in this tower: that all the men of the tower of Shechem were gathered together; in the hold of the temple of Baal-berith.

℣. 48. And Abimelech got him to up mount Zalmon, &c.] A mountain near Shechem, and thought to be the ſame with Salmon in Pſ. lxviii. 14. which ſeems to have had its name from the ſhade of the trees which grew upon it: he and all the people that were with him; his whole army: and Abimelech took an ax in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees; which grew upon mount Zalmon: and took it, and laid it on his ſhoulders; and carried it along with him: and ſaid unto the people that were with him, what ye have ſeen me do, make haſte, and do as I have done; take an ax, and every man cut down a bough with all poſſible haſte, and lay it on his ſhoulder.

℣. 49. And all the people likewiſe cut down every man his bough, and followed Abimelech, &c.] With their boughs on their ſhoulders, ſo that they were men that ſeemed to be as trees walking: and put them to the hold, and ſet the hold on fire upon them; upon the men in it, or with them, the boughs of trees; it is probable the hold was made of wood, and ſo could the more eaſily be ſet on fire. Jarchi ſays, it was a wood or foreſt, where they bent the trees, and divided them round about, and made a fence of them; but they would ſcarcely have left the tower for ſuch a ſhelter: ſo that all the men of the tower of Shechem died alſo; fire being put to the hold, and they burnt in it; the Vulgate Latin verſion adds, with fire and ſmoke; for they being boughs of trees juſt cut down, with which they ſet fire to the hold, they would not burn eaſily and clearly, but make a prodigious ſmoke, with which many might be ſuffocated, as others burnt with fire; and it is unaccountable that Joſephus [o] ſhould ſay, that faggots of dry wood were taken, and with them fire ſet to the hold, when the text is ſo expreſs for it, that they were boughs of green trees juſt cut off: about 1000 men and women; but the above hiſtorian makes them to be many more; he ſays the men were about 1500, and the reſt a great multitude; this literally fulfilled Jotham's curſe.

℣. 50. Then went Abimelech to Thebez, &c.] Which, according to Ben Gerſom, had rebelled againſt him; it was near to Shechem. Adrichomius ſays [p], the ruins, where he thinks ſtood the city of Thebez, were but one furlong from Neapolis or Shechem, where, to the left of Jacob's well, were to be ſeen ruins of a large town, marble ſtones, whole pillars, and other ſigns of large palaces, and the ſoil wonderfully fruitful; and Jerom ſays [q], that in his time there was a village called Thebes, on on the borders of Neapolis or Shechem, as you go to Scythopolis, 13 miles from it. It must be near Shechem, inhabited by Shechemites, to fulfil Jotham's curse, ℣. 20. and encamped against Thebez. and took it; it seems not to have held out long, being deserted by its inhabitants, who fled to the tower, as follows.

[m] וְרָאשִׁים & capita, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; & principes, Vatablus. [n] Sigonius de regn. Ital. l. 13. & 14. [o] Antiq. l. 5. c. 7. §. 4. [p] Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 70. [q] De loc. Heb. 95. D.

℣. 51. But there was a strong tower within the city, &c.] The tower of Shechem was without the city, but this within, as towers generally are: and thither fled all the men and women, and all they of the city; men, women and children, man and maid-servants, all the inhabitants of the city; the tower being a large place, having not only many rooms in it, but perhaps a large area in the midst of it, as well as it had battlements on the top of it: and shut it to them; the gates of it, and which no doubt they strongly barred and bolted, to keep out the enemy: and gat them up to the top of the tower; to observe the motions of Abimelech, and annoy him as much as they could with what they carried with them, as stones, and the like.

℣. 52. And Abimelech came unto the tower, &c.] With his army to besiege it: and fought against it; using all the methods he could to oblige those in it to surrender: and went hard unto the door of the tower to burn it with fire; in order to get entrance into it; and perhaps the tower was built of stone, so that no other part could be set fire to; and to do this he drew near to the door himself, for nothing more is meant by the phrase, went hard, then drawing near in his own person to the door; hazarding his life in the enterprize, being so bent upon it, thinking to do by this tower what he had done to the hold of the temple of Baal-berith.

℣. 53. And a certain woman cast a piece of a milstone, &c.] Of the upper milstone, as the word signifies, which is observed by Jarchi and other Jewish commentators; this with other stones being carried up to the top of the tower, to do what execution they could with them: and a woman observing Abimelech making up to the door of the tower, took up this piece of milstone, and threw it down upon Abimelech's head, and all to break his skull; she did it with that view, though it may as well be rendered, or she, or it broke his skull[r]; it made a fracture in it, which was mortal. Abendana observes, and so others, that that was measure for measure, a righteous retaliation, that as he had slain 70 of his brethren on one stone, he should die by means of a stone.

℣. 54. Then he called hastily to the young man his armour-bearer, &c.] Perceiving it was a mortal blow that was given him, and he should soon expire; and that the cast of the stone was by the hand of a woman, and therefore he was in haste to have the young man come to him: and said unto him, draw thy sword, and slay me, that men say not of me, a woman slew him; it being reckoned very ignominious and reproachful to die by the hand of a woman, and especially any great personage, as a king or general of an army [s]; to avoid this, he chose rather to be guilty of suicide, or of what cannot well be excused from it, and so died a self-murderer; which added to all his other sins, he seemed to have no sense of, or repentance for; and the method he took to conceal the shame of his death, served the more to spread it; for this circumstance of his death could not be given without the reason of it, and which was remembered and related punctually near 200 years afterwards, 2 Sam. xi. 21.

℣. 55. And when the men of Israel saw that Abimelech was dead, &c.] That is, those that were with him, the men of his army, who were all Israelites: they departed every man to his place; disbanded themselves, and went every one to their own home, and so the inhabitants of Thebez escaped the vengeance of Abimelech.

℣. 56. Thus God rendered the wickedness of Abimelech which he did unto his father, &c.] To the disgrace of his father's character, and to the hurt of his father's family: in slaying his seventy brethren; excepting one, which was a piece of unheard-of wickedness, attended with most sad aggravations; the shedding such blood required blood to be shed again, and it was righteous judgment God rendered to him: this and the following verse contain the remarks made upon this history by the writer of it, who, as we have seen, in all probability, was the prophet Samuel.

℣. 57. And all the evil of the men of Shechem, &c.] In aiding Abimelech to slay his brethren, and in making him king after so foul a fact committed: did God render upon their heads; by suffering Abimelech to beat down their city, and destroy the inhabitants of it, and by burning the hold in which the men of the tower of Shechem were, and them in it: and upon them came the curse of Jotham the son of Jerubbaal; both upon Abimelech, and the men of Shechem, they being destroyed by one another, as Jotham imprecated they might, and foretold they would, see ℣. 20.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter gives an account of two judges of Israel, in whose days they enjoyed peace, ℣. 1—5. after which they sinning against God, came into trouble, and were oppressed by their enemies 18 years, and were also invaded by an army of the Ammonites, ℣. 6—9. when they cried unto the Lord for deliverance, confessing their sin; but he had first refused to grant them any, tho' upon their importunity and reformation he had compassion on them, ℣. 10—16. and the chapter is concluded with the preparation made by both armies for a battle, ℣. 17, 18.

℣. 1. And after Abimelech, there arose to defend Israel, &c.] To save, deliver and protect Israel; which does not necessarily imply that Abimelech did; for he was no judge of God's raising up, or the peoples chusing, but usurped a kingly power over them; and was so far from saving and defending them, that he involved them in trouble and distress, and ruled over them in a tyrannical manner, and left them in the practice of idolatry: it only signifies, that after his death arose a person next described, to which this may well be attributed, that he was raised up as a judge by the Lord; and though though we read of no enemies particularly, that he delivered the people from in his days, yet it is not impoſſible nor unlikely that there might be ſuch, though not made mention of; beſides, he might be ſaid to ſave them, as the word ſignifies, in that he was an happy inſtrument of compoſing thoſe differences and diſſenſions, which Abimelech had occaſioned, and of recovering them from the idolatry they had fallen into in his times, and of protecting them in their liberties, civil and religious: and this was Tola the ſon of Puah, the ſon of Dodo, a man of Iſſachar; he was of the tribe of Iſſachar, and bore the ſame name as the eldeſt ſon of Iſſachar did, as his father Puah had the name of the ſecond ſon of Iſſachar, 1 Chron. vii. 1. and as for Dodo his grandfather, this is elſewhere mentioned as the name of a man, as it doubtleſs is here, 2 Sam. xxiii. 9, 24. though ſome copies of the Targum, the Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, the ſon of his uncle or father's brother; meaning that his father Puah was the ſon of Abimelech's uncle or father's brother, and ſo was one of the family which was raiſed up to be a judge after his death; but it is not likely that Gideon, the father of Abimelech, and Puah, the father of this man, ſhould be brethren, when the one was of the tribe of Manaſſeh, and the other of the tribe of Iſſachar: and he dwelt in Shamir in mount Ephraim; that is, when he became judge in Iſrael he removed to this place, as being in the midſt of the tribes, and near the tabernacle of Shiloh, and ſo fit for a judge to reſide in, to whom the people might apply from all parts to have juſtice and judgment adminiſtered to them. It is called Shamir in mount Ephraim, to diſtinguiſh it from another of the ſame name in the mountain of Judah, Joſh. xv. 48. it ſeems to have its name from the thorns which grew about it.

[r] תרץ את גלגלהו & confregit cranium ejus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so Tigurine version.

[s] O turpe fatum! fœmina Herculeæ necis Auctor feretur —— Seneca Œtæo.

℣. 2. And he judged Iſrael 23 years, and died, &c.] He did not take upon him to be king, as Abimelech did, but acted as a judge, in which office he continued 23 years, and faithfully diſcharged it, and died in honour: and was buried in Shamir; the place where he executed his office. It is ſaid [t], that in the firſt year of Tola, the ſon of Puah, Priamus reigned in Troy.

℣. 3. And after him aroſe Jair, a Gileadite, &c.] Who was of the half tribe of Manaſſeh, on the other ſide Jordan, which inhabited the land of Gilead, and who is the firſt of the judges that was on that ſide Jordan; it pleaſed God before the government was ſettled in a particular tribe, to remove it from one to another, and to honour them all, and to ſhew that though the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, were ſeparated from their brethren by the river Jordan, they were not neglected by the Lord; and generally ſpeaking judges were raiſed up in all thoſe parts which were moſt oppreſſed, and liable to be oppreſſed by their enemies, as Gilead by the Ammonites; wherefore this, and the next judge that followed him, Jephthah, were of Gilead: and judged Iſrael 22 years; protected them from their enemies, adminiſtered juſtice to them, and preſerved them in the true religion.

℣. 4. And he had 30 ſons that rode upon 30 aſs-colts, &c.] Which to ride on in thoſe times was reckoned honourable, and on which judges rode in their circuits, ch. v. 10. and ſuch might be theſe ſons of Jair, who were appointed under him to ride about, and do juſtice in the ſeveral parts of the country, as Samuel's ſons were judges under him, 1 Sam. viii. 1. and they had 30 cities which are called Havoth-jair unto this day, which are in the land of Gilead; or the villages of Jair. There were ſome of this name that belonged to Jair, a ſon of Manaſſeh, in the times of Moſes, Numb. xxxii. 41. and theſe may be the ſame, at leaſt ſome of them; for they were but 23 he had, whereas theſe were 30, 1 Chron. ii. 22. and theſe coming by inheritance to this Jair, a deſcendant of the former, and he being of the ſame name, and theſe cities perhaps repaired and enlarged by him, the name of them was continued and eſtabliſhed; for it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, as ſome have done, that this is the ſame Jair that lived in the times of Moſes, who if ſo, muſt have lived more than 300 years, an age men did not live to in thoſe times.

℣. 5. And Jair died, and was buried in Camon.] A city of Gilead, as Joſephus [u] calls it; Jerom [w], under this word Camon, makes mention of a village in his times, called Cimana, in the large plain ſix miles from Legion to the north, as you go to Ptolemais; but as Reland [x] obſerves, this ſeems not to be the ſame place, but rather this is the Camon Polybius [y] ſpeaks of among other cities of Peræa, taken by Antiochus.

℣. 6. And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] After the death of the above judges they fell into idolatry again, as the following inſtances ſhew: and ſerved Baalim, and Aſhtaroth; as they had before, ch. ii. 11, 13. ſee the notes there: and beſides theſe, alſo the gods of Syria; their gods and goddeſſes, Belus and Saturn, Aſtarte and the Dea Syria, Lucian writes of: and the gods of Zidon; the goddeſs of the Zidonians was Aſhtaroth, 1 Kings xi. 5. and it ſeems they had other deities: and the gods of Moab; the chief of which were Baal-peor and Chemoſh, Numb. xxv. 2. 1 Kings xi. 7. and the gods of the children of Ammon; as Milcom or Molech, 1 Kings xi. 5, 7. and the gods of the Philiſtines; as Dagon the god of Aſhdod, Beelzebub the god of Ekron, Marnas the god of Gaza, and Derceto the goddeſs of Aſcalon: and forſook the Lord, and ſerved not him; not even in conjunction with the above deities, as Jarchi and others obſerve; at other times, when they worſhipped other gods, they pretended to worſhip the Lord alſo, they ſerved the creature beſides the Creator; but now they were ſo dreadfully ſunk into idolatry, that they had wholly forſaken the Lord and his worſhip at the tabernacle, and made no pretenſions to it, but entirely neglected it.

℣. 7. And the anger of the Lord was hot againſt Iſrael, &c.] His anger burned like fire, he was exceedingly incenſed againſt them, nothing being more provoking to him than idolatry, as after mentioned: and he ſold them into the hands of the Philiſtines, and into the hands of the children of Ammon; that is, delivered them into their hands, and they became ſubject, and were in bondage to them, as ſuch are that are ſold for ſlaves; part of them that lay to the weſt of the land of Iſrael, fell into the hands of the Philiſtines; and another part, which lay to the eaſt, were oppreſſed by the children of Ammon, particularly thoſe that were on the other ſide Jordan, came into the hands of the latter.

℣. 8.

[t] Juchaſin, fol. 136. 1. illuſtr. tom. 2. p. 679.

[u] Antiq. l. 5. c. 7. §. 6.

[y] Hiſt. l. 5.

[w] De loc. Heb. fol. 90. B.

[x] Paleſtina

℣. 8. And that year they vexed and oppreſſed the children of Iſrael, &c.] The Philiſtines on one ſide, and the children of Ammon on the other; meaning either that year in which Jair died, as Jarchi; or the firſt year they began to bring them into bondage, as R. Iſaiah; and from that year, as Kimchi and Ben Melech, that they vexed and diſtreſſed them, they continued to vex and diſtreſs them 18 years; or, as Abarbinel interprets it, with that year, they vexed and oppreſſed them eighteen years, that is, ſo many more, or reckoning that into the number of them; and theſe eighteen years of their oppreſſion are not to be reckoned into the years of Jair's government, and as commencing from the fourth of it, as biſhop Uſher, Lightfoot, and others; for it does not appear that there was any oppreſſion in his days, but from the time of his death to the raiſing up of Jephthah a new judge: and the people oppreſſed by the children of Ammon, during that time, were all the children of Iſrael that were on the other ſide Jordan, in the land of the Ammonites, which is in Gilead; even the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh.

℣. 9. Moreover, the children of Ammon paſſed over Jordan, &c.] Not content with the oppreſſion of the tribes on the other ſide Jordan, which had continued 18 years, they came over Jordan into the land of Canaan to ravage that, and bring other of the tribes into ſubjection to them, particularly the three next mentioned, which lay readieſt for them, when they were come over Jordan: to fight alſo againſt Judah, and againſt Benjamin, and againſt the houſe of Ephraim; who lay to the ſouth and the ſouth-eaſt of the land of Canaan, and were the firſt the Ammonites had to fight with and ſubdue, when they had croſſed Jordan to the eaſt of it: ſo that Iſrael was ſore diſtreſſed; by the Ammonites in the eaſt, threatening thoſe three tribes mentioned, and the Philiſtines on the weſt, who gave diſturbance to the tribes that lay neareſt them, as Aſher, Zebulun, Naphtali, Iſſachar and Dan; and this diſtreſs was begun the ſame year in different parts, by different enemies.

℣. 10. And the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, &c.] In this their diſtreſs, ſeeing nothing but ruin and deſtruction before their eyes, their land being invaded by ſuch powerful enemies in different quarters; this opened their eyes to a ſenſe of their ſins, the cauſe of it, and brought them to a confeſſion of them: ſaying, we have ſinned againſt thee, both becauſe we have forſaken our God, and alſo ſerved Baalim; had been guilty not only of ſins of omiſſion, neglecting the pure worſhip of God, but alſo of ſins of commiſſion, even of groſs idolatry, in ſerving Baalim, and other gods, before mentioned.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] By a prophet he ſent unto them, as Kimchi and Abarbinel, ſee ch. vi. 8. whom Ben Gerſom takes to be Phinehas, but he could not be living at this time; or by an angel, a created one, ſent on this occaſion; or the increated one, the Son and Word of God, who might appear in an human form, and to whom all that is here ſaid is applicable: did not I deliver you from the Egyptians; by bringing them out of ſubjection and bondage to them, and by delivering them out of their hands at the Red-ſea: and from the Amorites; the kings of Sihon and Og, whoſe countries were taken from them, and put into their hands, when they attempted to ſtop them in their march to the land of Canaan: from the children of Ammon; when they joined with the Moabites againſt them, ch. iii. 13. and from the Philiſtines? in the times of Shamgar, ch. iii 31.

℣. 12. The Zidonians alſo, &c.] Who were left in the land to diſtreſs them, though there is no particular mention of them, and of the diſtreſs they gave them, and of their deliverance from it, which yet is not at all to be queſtioned: and the Amalekites; both quickly after they came out of Egypt, Exod. xvii. 13. and when they were come into the land of Canaan, joining the Moabites and the Midianites againſt them, ch. iii. 13. and vi. 3. and the Maonites did oppreſs you; meaning either the old inhabitants of Maon, a city in the mountains of Judah, near to which was a wilderneſs of this name, Joſh. xv. 55. 1 Sam. xxiii. 24. or rather a people of Arabia, called by Strabo[z], and Diodorus Siculus[a], Minæans, the ſame with Mehunim, mentioned with the Arabians, 2 Chron. xxvi. 7. and who perhaps came along with the Midianites, when they oppreſſed Iſrael; though ſome have thought of the old inhabitants of Beth-meon and Baal-meon, Numb. xxxii 38. Jer. xlviii. 23. and ye cried unto me, and I delivered you out of their hands; all thoſe mercies and deliverances are mentioned to aggravate their ſins, that notwithſtanding the Lord had ſo often, and ſo eminently appeared for them, yet they deſerted him and his worſhip, and fell into idolatry. Jarchi obſerves, that here are ſeven ſalvations or deliverances mentioned in oppoſition to the ſeven ſorts of falſe gods or idols they had ſerved, ℣. 6.

℣. 13. Ye have forſaken me, and ſerved other gods, &c.] Since they had been ſo remarkably ſaved, time after time, and delivered from ſo many powerful enemies, which was dreadful ingratitude: wherefore I will deliver you no more; which is not to be underſtood abſolutely, ſince after this he did deliver them, but conditionally, unleſs they repented of their idolatries, and forſook them. This is ſaid to bring them to a ſenſe of their ſin and danger.

℣. 14. Go and cry unto the gods which ye have choſen, &c.] For they were their choice, and not what they were obliged to ſerve through perſecution, and by compulſion of others, and whom they needed not, having the Lord Jehovah to be their God; and they are bid not ſeriouſly, but in an ironical or ſarcaſtic way, to call upon them for help in this their time of diſtreſs, in whoſe power it was not to relieve them: let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation; if they can, whom you have ſerved in your proſperity.

℣. 15. And the children of Iſrael ſaid unto the Lord, we have ſinned, &c.] By ſerving other gods particularly; and they ſeemed to have a true ſenſe of their ſin, and their confeſſions of it to be ingenuous, by what follows: do thou unto us whatſoever ſeemeth good unto thee; inflict what puniſhment he would upon them, as famine or peſtilence, they could not but own it would be juſt and righteous, and what their ſins deſerved: deliver us only, we pray thee, this day; out of the hands of men; they choſe rather to fall into the hands of God; and however he thought fit to deal with them, they entreated that this once he would ſave them out of the hands of their enemies.

℣. 16. And they put away the ſtrange gods from among them, &c.] Which was an evidence of the truth of their repentance, and ſhowed their confeſſions feſſions and humiliations to be genuine: and ſerved the Lord; and him only, both in private and public; in the obſervance of duties, both moral and ceremonial; in an attendance on the ſervice of the ſanctuary, and by offering ſacrifices to God there, according to his will: and his ſoul was grieved for the miſery of Iſrael; which is to be underſtood after the manner of men; for grief properly does not belong to God, there being no paſſion in him; but it denotes a carriage or behaviour of his, which ſhows what looks like ſympathy in men; a love and affection for Iſrael, notwithſtanding their ill behaviour to him, and a change of his diſpenſations in providence towards them, according to his unchangeable will; ſo Maimonides [b] underſtands it of the good-will and pleaſure of God, to ceaſe from afflicting the people of Iſrael; but Abarbinel is of opinion, that this refers to the ſoul of Iſrael, which was ſhortened and contracted, as the word ſignifies, becauſe of the labour of ſervitude, the affliction and diſtreſs they were in.

[z] Geograph. l. 16. p. 528.

[a] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 176.

℣. 17. Then the children of Ammon were gathered together, &c.] By a crier, as Jarchi; they had paſſed over Jordan, as in ℣. 9. and had been diſtreſſing three of the tribes of Iſrael on that ſide, but now being informed by an herald at arms, that the children of Iſrael, on the other ſide Jordan, were riſen up in defence of their country, rights and liberties, the children of Ammon came back and repaſſed Jordan: and encamped in Gilead; in the land of Gilead, part of which belonged to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the other part to the half tribe of Manaſſeh: and the children of Iſrael aſſembled themſelves together, and encamped at Mizpeh; of which name there were ſeveral cities in the land of Iſrael, on both ſides Jordan; this muſt deſign a place on the other ſide Jordan, either in the tribe of Gad or Manaſſeh, for it ſeems there was of this name in each, ſee Gen. xxxi. 49. Joſh. xi. 3.

℣. 18. And the people and princes of Gilead ſaid one to another, &c.] Being thus aſſembled and encamped: what man is he that will begin to fight with the children of Ammon? for though the forces were aſſembled together for battle, yet it ſeems they had no general to command them, and lead them on to it: he ſhall be head over all the inhabitants of Gilead; this they ordered to be proclaimed, to encourage ſome perſon to take the command of them, and go before them to battle, promiſing him that he ſhould be judge or governor over all the tribes on that ſide Jordan.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter gives an account of another judge of Iſrael, Jephthah, of his deſcent and character, ℣. 1, 2, 3. of the call the elders of Gilead gave him to be their captain-general, and lead out their forces againſt the Ammonites, and the agreement he made with them, ℣. 4—11. of the meſſage he ſent to the children of Ammon, which brought on a diſpute between him and them about the land Iſrael poſſeſſed on that ſide Jordan, the Ammonites claimed; Iſrael's right to which Jephthah defended, and made it clearly to appear, hoping thereby to put an end to the quarrel without ſhedding of blood, ℣. 12—27. but the children of Ammon not attending to what he ſaid, he prepared to give them battle, and previous to it he made a vow, and then ſet forward and fought them, and got the victory over them, ℣. 28—33. and the chapter concludes with the difficulties Jephthah was embaraſſed with upon his return home, on account of his vow, and the performance of it, ℣. 34—40.

℣. 1. Now Jephthah the Gileadite was a mighty man of valour, &c.] Jephthah had his name of Gileadite either from his father, whoſe name was Gilead, or from the city and country in which he was born, which is moſt likely, and ſo was of the ſame country with the preceding judge; and he was a man of great ſtrength and valour, and which perhaps became known by his ſucceſsful excurſions on parties of the enemies of Iſrael, the Ammonites, being at the head of a band of men, who lived by the booty they got from them: and he was the ſon of an harlot; the Targum ſays, an innkeeper; and, according to Kimchi, ſhe was a concubine, which ſome reckoned no better than an harlot, but ſuch are not uſually called ſo: ſome Jewiſh writers will have her to be one of another tribe his father ought not to have married; and others, that ſhe was of another nation, a Gentile, ſo Joſephus [c]; and, according to Patricides [d], he was the ſon of a Saracen woman; but neither of theſe are ſufficient to denominate her a harlot: and Gilead begat Jephthah; he was his ſon; this was a deſcendant of Gilead the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, called after the name of his great anceſtor.

℣. 2. And Gilead's wife bare him ſons, &c.] It ſeems that after the birth of Jephthah, Gilead took him a lawful wife, who bore him ſons: and his wife's ſons grew up; to the eſtate of men: and they thruſt out Jephthah; out of his father's houſe, his father in all likelihood being dead, or he would not have ſuffered it, and what follows confirms it, that he was dead: and ſaid unto him, thou ſhalt not inherit in our father's houſe; as he might not, if the ſon of an harlot, or of a woman of another tribe, or of a concubine; though as Kimchi, from their Rabbins, obſerves, the ſon of ſuch an one might, provided his mother was not an handmaid nor a ſtranger. And it looks as if this was not rightly done, but that Jephthah was injuriouſly dealt with by his brethren, of which he complains: for thou art the ſon of a ſtrange woman; or of another woman [e], that was not their father's lawful wife; or of a woman of another tribe, as the Targum; or of another nation, as others, proſtitutes being uſed to go into foreign countries to get a livelihood, and hide the ſhame of their families; hence a ſtrange woman, and a harlot, ſignified the ſame [f], ſee ℣. 1.

℣. 3. Then Jephthah fled from his brethren, &c.] Being ill uſed by them, and a man of ſpirit and courage, and could not bear to be treated with contempt, nor to live in a dependence on others, and therefore ſought to make himſelf another way: and

[b] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 41. leg, Ebr. c. 3. p. 32. lius, Piſcator; ſo Tigurine verſion.

[c] Antiq. l. 5. c. 7. §. 7.

[e] אישה אחרת mulieris alterius, Pagninus, Montanus; exteræ, Junius & Tremel-

[d] Apud Selden. de Succeſſ. ad

[f] Pro uxore hanc peregrinam, Terent. Andria, act 1. ſcen. 1. l. 118.

and dwelt in the land of Tob; which Kimchi and Ben Gerſom think was the name of the lord and owner of the land; Abarbinel interprets it, a good land, as Tob ſignifies, ſo the Targum; but others, the name of a city or country, and conjecture, it may be the ſame with Iſh-tob, and which was not far from the children of Ammon, ſince they ſent thither for aſſiſtance, 2 Sam. x. 6. Jerom [g] takes it for a country, in which Jephthah dwelt, but ſays no more of it. Junius ſays, it was on the entrance of Arabia deſerta, ſee 1 Maccab. v. 13. 2 Maccab. xii. 17. where the inhabitants of it are called Tobienians or Tubienians: and there were gathered vain men to Jephthah; not wicked men, but empty men, whoſe pockets were empty; men without money, as Abarbinel interprets it, had nothing to live upon, no more than Jephthah, and he being a valiant man, they enliſted themſelves under him: and went out with him; not on any bad deſign, as to rob and plunder, but to get their living by hunting; or rather by making excurſions into the enemies country, and carrying off booty on which they lived. Joſephus [h] ſays, he maintained them at his own expence, and paid them wages.

℣. 4. And it came to paſs in proceſs of time, &c.] Some time after Jephthah had been expelled his father's houſe, and he was become famous for his martial genius, and military exploits; or at the cloſe of the 18 years oppreſſion of the children of Iſrael by the Ammonites, or ſome few days after the children of Iſrael were gathered together at Mizpeh, that the people and princes of Gilead were preparing for war with Ammon, and were thinking of a proper perſon to be their general: that the children of Ammon made war againſt Iſrael; not only repaſſed Jordan, and encamped in Gilead, but began to attack them in ſome place or another, at leaſt threatened them with it, and made motions towards it.

℣. 5. And it was ſo, that when the children of Ammon made war againſt Iſrael, &c.] Were preparing for it, and had aſſembled their forces near them, and had began to make ſome efforts againſt them: the elders of Gilead went to fetch Jephthah out of the land of Tob; they did not ſend meſſengers to him, but went themſelves, partly to ſhew greater reſpect to him, and partly in hopes of better ſucceſs, being aware of objections he would make, which they could better anſwer themſelves, than a deputation.

℣. 6. And they ſaid unto Jephthah, come and be our captain, &c.] The general of their army, to conduct and lead on their forces; they did not propoſe him to be their king, being convinced by Abimelech's conduct, that ſuch a ſtep would be wrong; nor did they ſay any thing of his being their judge, having no other view than to ſerve their preſent exigence; beſides, a judge was not one choſen by the people, but raiſed up of God, and which honour was conferred on Jephthah afterwards: that he may fight with the children of Ammon; with judgment, courage and ſucceſs; they did not make this propoſal to him to ſave themſelves from being engaged in the war, but that they might have one ſkilful in military affairs at the head of them, to inſtruct them in the art of war, and lead them on in a regular manner, and animate them by his brave example.

℣. 7. And Jephthah ſaid unto the elders of Gilead, &c.] In anſwer to their requeſt; who tho' not backward to engage in the war with them, yet thought it proper to take this opportunity to upbraid them with their former unkindneſs to him: did not ye hate me, and expel me out of my father's houſe? for it ſeems ſome of theſe elders at leaſt were his brethren; for who elſe could be thought to hate him, and through hatred to thruſt him out of his father's houſe, but they? nor is it at all improbable that they were among the elders of Gilead, conſidering what family they were of: though indeed the magiſtrates of the city might be aſſiſting to Jephthah's brethren in the expulſion of him, or however connived at it, when they ſhould, as he thought, have protected him, and taken care that he had juſtice done him; for even though illegitimate, a maintenance was due to him: and why are ye come unto me now, when ye are in diſtreſs? intimating, that it was not love and reſpect to him, but neceſſity, that brought them to him with this requeſt; and that ſince they uſed him ſo ill, they could not reaſonably expect he ſhould have any regard unto them.

℣. 8. And the elders of Gilead ſaid unto Jephthah, &c.] In reply to his objection: therefore we turn again unto thee now; being ſenſible of the injury they had done him, and repenting of it, of which their return to him was an evidence; it being with this view to remove the diſgrace and diſhonour that had been caſt upon him, by conferring ſuch honour on him, as to be their chief ruler: that thou mayeſt go with us, and fight againſt the children of Ammon, and be our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead; the end of their coming to him was not only to bring him back with them to his own country, and to fight againſt the Ammonites, and the defence of it, but to be the ſole governor of it; not of all Iſrael, but of the tribes beyond Jordan, which inhabited the land of Gilead: more than this they could not promiſe, tho' he afterwards was judge over all Iſrael, notwithſtanding there was a law in Iſrael, that no ſpurious perſon ſhould enter into the congregation, or bear any public office; ſo it was a law with the Athenians [i], that unleſs a man was born of both parents citizens, he ſhould be reckoned ſpurious, and have no ſhare in the government, ſee ℣. 2.

℣. 9. And Jephthah ſaid unto the elders of Gilead, &c.] Conſidering the former uſage he had met with from them, and the character which he himſelf bore, and the fickleneſs of men, when their turn is ſerved, was willing to make a ſure bargain with them: if ye bring me home again to fight againſt the children of Ammon; that is, ſhould he conſent to go along with them, and fight their battle for them: and the Lord deliver them before me; or into his hands, on whom he depended for ſucceſs, and not on his own courage and valour, and military ſkill: ſhall I be your head? not only captain-general of their forces during the war, but the chief ruler of them when that was ended.

℣. 10. And the elders of Gilead ſaid unto Jephthah, &c.] Aſſenting to his propoſal, and not only giving their word for it, but their oath: the Lord be witneſs between us, if we do not ſo according to thy words; that is, make him head over them; they appealed to the omniſcient God, and called on him to be a witneſs of their agreement to it, and ſwore by him they would fulfil it; or if they did not, that the Lord would take vengeance on them for it, and puniſh the breach of this covenant and oath oath in some way or another; the Targum of Jonathan is, "the Word of the Lord be a witness between us, &c."

[g] De loc. Heb. fol. 25. A. Suidas in voce Δημωποιητος.

[h] Ut ſupra.

[i] Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 10. l. 13. c. 24.

℣. 11. Then Jephthah went with the elders of Israel, &c.] From the land of Tob into the land of Gilead, his native country: and the people made him head and captain over them; ratified and confirmed what the elders had promised, and by a general unanimous vote appointed him both to be the captain of their forces, and to be the chief ruler and governor of them. And this they did, though he was the son of an harlot; and according to the law in Deut. xxiii. 2. such an one was not to be a civil magistrate; but this was a case of necessity, and in which no doubt they were directed by the Lord, who could dispense with his own law: besides, they had come to such an agreement before they had pitched on any particular person, that who should begin to fight with the children of Ammon, should be head over all the inhabitants of Gilead, so that they were obliged to it by their vote and decree, when they assembled at Mizpeh, where it is probable they consulted the Lord, and acted under his direction, ch. x. 17, 18. and where this was confirmed as seems from the following clause: and Jephthah uttered all his words before the Lord in Mizpeh; where the congregation of Israel were assembled, and in which the Shekinah, or divine majesty dwelt, as is observed by Jarchi and Kimchi, and not Mizpeh in Josh. xi. 3, 8. as the latter says, but this was on the other side Jordan in the land of Gilead; however, as it was a solemn meeting, the Lord was there, and, as in his presence, Jephthah rehearsed all that passed between him, and the elders of Gilead; and no doubt in prayer to God desired he would signify his approbation and ratification of their agreement, and would give him success in his undertakings against the children of Ammon.

℣. 12. And Jephthah sent messengers unto the king of the children of Ammon, &c.] Being now declared chief and sole governor of the tribes on the other side Jordan, he acted in character, and as such sent messengers to the king of the Ammonites, to know the reason of his invading the land that belonged to Israel, being desirous of adjusting things in an amicable way, and to prevent the shedding of blood; in which he behaved as a good man, and not at all inconsistent with a man of valour and courage: saying, what hast thou to do with me; to invade my land, and disturb my people, what have I or they done to give occasion for it? that thou art come against me to fight in my land? he speaks in the language of a governor, and as a man of spirit concerned for the good of his country, and determined to defend the rights and liberties of it.

℣. 13. And the king of the children of Ammon answered unto the messengers of Jephthah, &c.] Who this king of Ammon was is not said, however he returned an answer to Jephthah's messengers, which they brought to him, and it was to this purpose; that the reason of his invading the land, and bringing war into it, was, because Israel took away my land when they came out of Egypt; not as soon as they came out of Egypt, for it was 39 years afterwards and upwards, even a little before they entered into the land of Canaan; and the land they took was not theirs, but in the possession of Sihon and Og kings of the Amorites; though indeed before their conquest of it, it had been in the hands of the Moabites and Ammonites, and who being confederates or subjects of the same king, is here claimed by the king of the children of Ammon: from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and unto Jordan; the river Arnon was the border between Moab and the Amorites, and the river Jabbok was the border of the children of Ammon, Numb. xxi. 13, 24. the one was to the south of the country claimed, and the other to the north and to the west, which was Jordan, and the wilderness to the east, ℣. 22. now therefore restore these lands again peaceably; this is demanded or proposed as terms or conditions of peace, and what would prevent a war, and nothing short of this would do it.

℣. 14. And Jephthah sent messengers again unto the king of the children of Ammon.] Being willing to give him all the satisfaction he could, and if possible live peaceably with him, and prevent the effusion of blood.

℣. 15. And said unto him, &c.] By his messengers: thus saith Jephthah; in a majestic stile, as governor of Israel: Israel took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon; they were charged not to take any, nor did they take any that belonged to any of these countries, or that was then in the possession of either of them, Deut. ii. 9, 19. what they did take was in the hands of Sihon and Og, and they had obtained it by conquest, and so no more belonging to either of these.

℣. 16. But when Israel came up from Egypt, &c.] In order to go to the land of Canaan, which was higher than the land of Israel, which lay low[k]: and walked through the wilderness unto the Red-sea; which is to be understood, not of their walking to it; when they first came out of Egypt, they indeed then came to the edge of the wilderness of Etham, and so to the Red-sea, and walked through it as on dry land, and came into the wilderness of Shur, Sin and Sinai; and after their departure from mount Sinai they came into the wilderness of Paran, in which they were 38 years; and this is the wilderness meant they walked through, and came to Ezion-geber, on the shore of the Red-sea, Numb. xxxiii. 35. and came to Kadesh; not Kadesh-barnea, from whence the spies were sent, but Kadesh on the borders of Edom, from whence messengers were sent to the king of it, as follows.

℣. 17. Then Israel sent messengers unto the king of Edom, &c.] The history of which may be read in Numb. xx. 14, &c. saying, let me, I pray thee, pass through thy land; the land of Edom, from the south to the north of it, according to Jarchi, which was the nearest and shortest way to the land of Canaan; so far were the Israelites from invading and seizing upon the properties of others, that they would not attempt to set their foot in another's country without leave; which they asked in an humble manner, promising to do no injury to any, but pay for whatever they eat and drank in their passage: but the king of Edom would not hearken thereto; or grant their request, but refused them passage through his country: and in like manner they sent unto the king of Moab, but he would not consent; that they should pass through his country, which lay, as Jarchi says, at the end of the land of Edom, to the west of it, and to the south of Canaan; and though we no where else read of their sending messengers to the king of Moab, and of the denial he made them, it is not at at all to be doubted of, and the Jewiſh commentators obſerve, that it is clearly intimated by Moſes, Deut. ii. 29. as the children of Eſau, who dwelt in Seir, and the Moabites which dwelt in Ar, did unto me; which they interpret thus, as the children of Eſau would not ſuffer Iſrael to paſs through their land, when deſired of them, ſo neither would the Moabites, when the ſame requeſt was made to them: and Iſrael abode in Kadeſh; quietly and peaceably, and did not attempt to force their way through either country, but continued in Kadeſh ſome little time to conſider what way they ſhould take, and to wait for divine direction.

[k] Χθαμαλος Αἰσυπίος, Theocrit. Idyll. 17. ℣ 79.

℣. 18. Then they went along the wilderneſs, &c.] The wilderneſs of Paran, which lay along the borders of Edom; they went, according to Jarchi, from the weſt to the eaſt on the ſouth border of Edom and Moab: and compaſſed the land of Edom, and the land of Moab; all the ſouth of the land of Edom, and all the ſouth of the land of Moab; towards the ſun-riſing, as in Numb. xxi. 11. and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon; the river Arnon, which, according to Jarchi, was at the eaſt-end of the land of Moab, where began the country of Sihon and Og: but came not within the border of Moab; ſo far were they from attempting to take away any part of that land from the king of it, though ill treated by him: for Arnon was the border of Moab; which divided between Moab and the Amorites, Numb. xxi. 13.

℣. 19. And Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heſhbon, &c.] Which was his royal city, where he had his palace, and kept his court, and is therefore particularly mentioned; and the rather, becauſe he had taken it from the Moabites, and was part of that land now in diſpute; and this Sihon was not only in poſſeſſion of, when Iſrael ſent meſſengers to him, but it was his royal ſeat, the metropolis of his kingdom, and he was called king of it: and Iſrael ſaid unto him, let us paſs, we pray thee, through thy land unto my place; the land of Canaan, prepared and reſerved for them when the moſt high divided to the nations their inheritance, promiſed by the Lord to their anceſtors and to them, and given unto them, who is ſovereign Lord of all; and all that Iſrael deſired of Sihon was only a paſſage through his land to that, promiſing the ſame as to the king of Edom; ſee the hiſtory of it in Numb. xxi. 21, &c.

℣. 20. But Sihon truſted not Iſrael to paſs through his coaſt, &c.] For fear they ſhould ſeize upon his dominions, and retain them; and the more fearful he might be, as he knew that his people were one of the ſeven nations of the Canaanites, whoſe land they were going to poſſeſs, and whom they were to deſtroy: but Sihon gathered all his people together; in ſome certain place, and armed them, and went out in an hoſtile manner againſt Iſrael in the wilderneſs to attack them; whereby it appears that he was the aggreſſor, and therefore Iſrael was not to be blamed, as not for defending themſelves, ſo neither for ſeizing and poſſeſſing his country when they had conquered him: and pitched in Jahaz, and fought againſt Iſrael; there was a battle between them at the place mentioned, and the victory was on Iſrael's ſide, ſee Numb. xxi. 23.

℣. 21. And the Lord God of Iſrael delivered Sihon and all his people into the hand of Iſrael, &c.] So that as Sihon, his people, and his country, fell into the hands of Iſrael through the victory the Lord gave them over him, they had a divine right to the land now in diſpute: and they ſmote them; deſtroyed him and all his people, as they were ordered to deſtroy the ſeven nations of Canaan, of which the Amorites were one, Deut. vii. 1. ſo Iſrael poſſeſſed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country; by means of the above victory they came into the lawful and rightful poſſeſſion of all the land that belonged to the Amorites, who were at that time, and none elſe, the inhabitants of it; and therefore the Ammonites could have no claim to it, nor was any made till now.

℣. 22. And they poſſeſſed all the coaſts of the Amorites, &c.] Peaceably and quietly, nor did any pretend to call their right in queſtion, or diſpute their title, or give them any diſturbance: from Arnon unto Jabbok; which was the length of the country, and the direction was from ſouth to north, and reached from the river Arnon, the border of Moab, to the river Jabbok, the border of Ammon; ſo that it included no part of what was at this time in the poſſeſſion of either: and from the wilderneſs even unto Jordan; which was the breadth of it, and its direction was from the weſt to the eaſt, reaching from the wilderneſs of Arabia to the river Jordan.

℣. 23. So now the Lord God of Iſrael hath diſpoſſeſſed the Amorites from before his people Iſrael, &c.] It is his doing, and not the Iſraelites; it is he that diſpoſſeſſed the Amorites, and put the Iſraelites into the poſſeſſion of their land, and therefore they enjoy it by a good tenure: and ſhouldeſt thou poſſeſs it? what through the bleſſing of God on their arms they have obtained by conqueſt, and he has ſettled them in; did they conquer, that thou ſhould poſſeſs what they conquered? did their God put it into their hands to deliver it into thine? did they fight to recover for thee what thou hadſt loſt, and to put thee into the poſſeſſion of it? did not they fight in their own defence, and their enemies and their land fell into their hands, and by the laws and right of nations became theirs? and canſt thou expect to poſſeſs it? what reaſon is there for it?

℣. 24. Wilt not thou poſſeſs that which Chemoſh thy god giveth thee to poſſeſs, &c.] Chemoſh was the idol of the Moabites, ſee Numb. xxi. 29. which has led ſome to think, that the preſent king of Ammon was alſo king of Moab, and who inſiſted on that part of the country which formerly belonged to Moab, to be delivered to him, as well as that which had belonged to Ammon. Now ſince the land, which they now inhabited, as well as what they had loſt, they had taken away from others, Deut. ii. 10, 11, 20, 21. having conquered them, and which they aſcribed to the help and aſſiſtance they had from their idol, and poſſeſſed as his gift; Jephthah argues with them ad hominem, from the leſs to the greater: ſo whomſoever the Lord our God ſhall drive out from before us, them will we poſſeſs; we have ſurely as good a claim to what the Lord our God gives to us in a way of conqueſt, as you have, or can think you have, to what your idol, as you ſuppoſe, has given you: however, what we have got, or get this way, we are determined to poſſeſs, and keep poſſeſſion of

℣. 25. And now art thou any thing better than Balak the ſon of Zippor king of Moab? &c.] This argument ſeems to ſtrengthen the conjecture, that this king was king of Moab at this time, and ſo Balak was one of his predeceſſors. Now he is aſked, whether he thought he was a wiſer and more knowing prince than he, as to what was his right and due; or whether he had a better claim, or any additional one to the land in diſpute the other had not; or whether he judged he was more able to regain what belonged to him: did he ever ſtrive againſt Iſrael? for the land they took away from Sihon formerly, in the poſſeſſion of the Moabites? did he ever lay any claim to it, or enter into any diſpute, or litigate with Iſrael about it? not at all: or did he ever fight againſt Iſrael? that is, on that account; no, he ſent for Balaam to curſe Iſrael, and ſought to defend and ſecure his own country he was in poſſeſſion of, which he thought was in danger by the Iſraelites being ſo near him; but he never made war with them under any ſuch pretence, that they had done him any injury by inheriting the land they had taken from Sihon and Og kings of the Amorites.

or

℣. 26. While Iſrael dwelt in Heſhbon and her towns, &c.] This was the principal city, which formerly belonged to the Moabites, and was taken from them by Sihon; who being conquered by Iſrael, it fell into their hands, and they inhabited it, and the towns adjacent to it, from that time to the preſent; ſee Numb. xxi. 25. and in Aroer and her towns; another city with its villages, taken at the ſame time, and ever ſince inhabited by the Iſraelites, even by the tribe of Gad, who rebuilt it; it lay near the river Arnon; ſee Numb. xxxii. 34. Deut. iii. 12. and in all the cities that be along by the coaſts of Arnon; which lay along by the ſide of that river, which divided Moab from the kingdom of the Amorites; theſe Iſrael had dwelt in 300 years; and during this time, neither Balak king of Moab, nor any of his ſucceſſors, had ever diſputed Iſrael's title to thoſe cities, or commenced a war with them on account of them; but they had continued in the peaceable enjoyment of them ſo long as 300 years; which are thus reckoned in the Jewiſh chronology [z]; Joſhua governed Iſrael 28 years, Othniel 40, Ehud 80, Deborah 40, Gideon 40, Abimelech 3, Tola 23, Jair 22, and 18 years Iſrael was oppreſſed by the children of Ammon, which with the 6 years of Jephthah make juſt 300; ſo that, according to this computation, there were 6 years ſhort of it; but being ſo near, the round number is given: why therefore did ye not recover them within that time? ſignifying they ought to have put in their claim ſooner, and endeavoured to have recovered them long before this time, if they had any right unto them; wherefore Jephthah pleads preſcription, and which in a courſe of time ought to take place; or otherwiſe the world would be full of endleſs contentions and controverſies, and kingdoms and ſtates would never be at peace, nor each one know and enjoy for certainty its proper domains.

℣. 27. Wherefore I have not ſinned againſt thee, &c.] Had done him no injury, not wronged him of any thing, nor had taken away any part of his country from him; this Jephthah ſaid in the name of all Iſrael, of whom he was governor: but thou doeſt me wrong to war againſt me; meaning that he had no juſt cauſe to commence a war againſt Iſrael, but acted an injurious part; and ſeeing things could not be adjuſted in an amicable way, but muſt be decided by the ſword, he leaves the affair with the Lord, and appeals to him: the Lord the judge; the judge of the whole earth, the omniſcient God, that knows all things, the right and wrong of every cauſe, on which ſide truth and juſtice lie: be judge this day between the children of Iſrael and the children of Ammon; not that he expected a deciſion of the controverſy between them would be made that preciſe and exact day; but that from henceforward the Lord would appear, by giving ſucceſs to that party which was in the right in this conteſt.

℣. 28. Howbeit, the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he ſent him;] He attended not to the arguments Jephthah made uſe of, and did not chuſe to ſeem at leaſt to be convinced by them; nor to regard the awful appeal he had made to the great Jehovah.

℣. 29. Then the ſpirit of the Lord came upon Jephthah, &c.] The ſpirit of ſtrength, as the Targum; of fortitude of mind, of uncommon valour and courage, and of zeal for God and Iſrael, and againſt their enemies; ſuch a ſpirit as uſed to be given to men, when they were in an extraordinary manner raiſed up by the Lord, to be judges, ſaviours, and deliverers of his people; ſo that as Jephthah was before choſen by the people to be the general, and head of the tribes beyond Jordan, he was raiſed up and qualified by the Lord now to be the judge of all Iſrael; of which the ſpirit of the Lord coming on him was a ſufficient proof and evidence: and he paſſed over Gilead and Manaſſeh; the countries that belonged to Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; however, all that part of it which lay from the place where he was, to the land of the children of Ammon: and paſſed over Mizpeh of Gilead; which lay to the north of the land of Gilead, or tribe of Gad: and from Mizpeh of Gilead he paſſed over to the children of Ammon; did not ſtay for them, to bring on the war in the land of Gilead, but prevented it by carrying it into the land of the children of Ammon. It ſeems by this, that though the children of Ammon had encamped in Gilead ſome time before, ch. x. 17. yet for ſome reaſon or another they had decamped, and had retired into their own country; but yet threatening Iſrael with a war, and preparing for it.

℣. 30. And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, &c.] Before he ſet out for the land of the children of Ammon, and to fight with them; hoping that ſuch a religious diſpoſition of mind would be regarded by the Lord, and be acceptable to him, and he ſhould be bleſſed with ſucceſs in his enterprize: and ſaid, if thou ſhalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into mine hands; though he was aſſured of the juſtneſs of his cauſe, and of his call to engage in it, he ſeems to have ſome little diffidence in his mind about the ſucceſs of it; at leaſt, was not fully certain of it.

℣. 31. Then it ſhall be, that whatſoever cometh forth of the doors of my houſe to meet me, &c.] If this phraſe, to meet me, is meant intentionally, then no other than an human creature can be meant; a child, or ſervant, or any other of mankind; for none elſe could come forth with a deſign to meet him: but if this is to be underſtood eventually, of what might meet him, though not with deſign, then any other creature may be intended; and it muſt be meant what came forth firſt, as the Vulgate Latin verſion expreſſes it, or otherwiſe many might come forth at ſuch a time: when I return in peace from the children of Ammon; ſafe in his own perſon, and having conquered the Ammonites, and reſtored peace to Iſrael: ſhall ſurely be the Lord's; be devoted to him, and made uſe of, or the price of

[z] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 12. Vid. Jarchium & Kimchium in loc.

of it, with which it is redeemed, in his ſervice: and I will offer it for a burnt-offering; that is, if it is what according to the law may be offered up, as an ox, ſheep, ram, or lamb; ſome read the words disjunctively, or I will offer it, &c. it ſhall either be devoted to the Lord in the manner that perſons or things, according to the law, are directed to be; or it ſhall be offered up for a burnt-offering, if fit and proper for the ſervice; ſo Joſeph and David Kimchi, Ben Melech, and Abarbinel, with others, interpret it; but ſuch a disjunction is objected to as improper and ridiculous, to diſtinguiſh two ſentences, when the one is more general, and the other more ſpecial.

℣. 32. So Jephthah paſſed over unto the children of Ammon, to fight againſt them, &c.] As in ℣. 29. after he had made the above vow: and the Lord delivered them into his hands; when both armies met and engaged, victory was on the ſide of Jephthah; the Lord being with him, and giving him ſucceſs, to whom all is juſtly aſcribed.

℣. 33. And he ſmote them from Aroer, &c.] A city which lay near the river Arnon, on the borders of Moab, Deut. iii. 12. even till thou come to Minnith; which ſeems to have been a place famous for wheat, Ezek. xxvii. 17. ſo David de Pomis [a] ſays it was a place where the beſt wheat grew. Jerom ſays [b] in his time was ſhewn a village called Mannith, 4 miles from Eſbus (or Heſhbon) as you go to Philadelphia. Joſephus [c] calls it Maniathe, and it is thought by ſome to be the Anitha of Ptolemy [d], which he places in Arabia Petræa: even twenty cities; which he purſued them through and took: and unto the plain of the vineyards, with a very great ſlaughter; or, Abel Ceramim. Jerom ſays [e] in his time was ſeen a village called Abela, planted with vineyards, 7 miles from Philadelphia: thus the children of Ammon were ſubdued before the children of Iſrael; ſo that they were not able to oppreſs them any more.

℣. 34. And Jephthah came to Mizpeh unto his houſe, &c.] Where he had uttered his words before the Lord, which had paſſed between him and the elders of Gilead, and from whence he ſet out to fight the children of Ammon, and whither he returned after he had got the victory over them, ℣. 11, 29. and where it ſeems he had a houſe, and his family dwelt; for upon his being fetched from the land of Tob, he brought what family he had with him, and ſettled them at Mizpeh, whilſt he went on the expedition againſt the children of Ammon: and behold, his daughter came out to meet him, with timbrels, and with dances; accompanied with young women, having timbrels in their hands, and playing upon them, and dancing as they came along; expreſſing their joy at, and congratulating him upon the victory he had obtained over the children of Ammon: and ſhe was his only child; and ſo dear unto him, and upon whom all his hopes and expectations of a poſterity from him depended: beſides her he had neither ſon nor daughter; ſome read it, of her [f]; that is, ſhe had neither ſon nor daughter; and ſo by this vow, be it underſtood in which way it may be, if fulfilled, ſhe muſt die without any iſſue; though the phraſe in the Hebrew text is, of himſelf [g]; he had none, though his wife whom he married might have ſons and daughters by an huſband ſhe had before him, and ſo theſe were brought up in Jephthah's houſe as his children; yet they were not begotten by him, they were not of his body, not his own children; he had none but this daughter, which made the trial the more grievous to him; her name, according to Philo, was Seila.

℣. 35. And it came to paſs when he ſaw her, &c.] She being the firſt perſon that preſented to his view, as ſhe was at the head of the virgins with their timbrels and dances: that he rent his clothes; as was the uſual manner, when any thing calamitous and diſtreſſing happened; ſee Gen. xxxvii. 34. Job i. 20. and ſaid, alas, my daughter, thou haſt brought me very low; damped his ſpirits, ſunk him very low, ſo that he was ready to drop into the earth, as we ſay; he that was now returning in triumph, amidſt the acclamations of the people, in the height of his glory, and extolled to the ſkies, and perhaps elated in his own mind; on a ſudden, at the ſight of his daughter, was ſo depreſſed in his ſpirits, that he could not bear up; but was ready to ſink and die away, all his honour being as it were laid in the duſt, and nothing to him: and thou art one of them that trouble me; or among his troublers, and the greateſt he ever met with; he had been in trouble from his brethren, when they drove him from his father's houſe, and he had had trouble with the children of Ammon to ſubdue them; but this was the greateſt trouble of all, that his daughter ſhould be the firſt that ſhould meet him; of whom, according to his vow, he was to be deprived; and ſo all his future comforts, hopes, and expectations from her gone; and therefore ranks her among, and at the head of his troublers: for I have opened my mouth unto the Lord; in a vow; not only had purpoſed it in his heart, but had expreſſed it with his lips: and I cannot go back; or retract it; looking upon himſelf under an indiſpenſible obligation to perform it; of which, be it as it may, he ſeems to have had miſtaken notions and apprehenſions; for if his vow was to ſacrifice her, as ſome think, he was not obliged to do it, ſince it was contrary to the law of God, and abominable in his ſight; and beſides, what was vowed to be the Lord's, or devoted to him, might be redeemed according to the law, a female for 30 pieces of ſilver, Lev. xxvii. 2, 3, 4. and if the vow was to ſeparate his daughter from the company of men, and oblige her never to marry, ſuch a power as this parents had not allowed them over their children, according to the laws of God or of men, in the Jewiſh nation; and therefore, be it which it will, what he had to do was to repent of this raſh vow, and humble himſelf before God for making it, and not add ſin to ſin by performing it.

℣. 36. And ſhe ſaid unto him, my father, if thou haſt opened thy mouth unto the Lord, &c.] The conditional word if may be left out, as it is not in the original text; for her father had told her, that he had opened his mouth, or made a vow to the Lord, and had no doubt explained it to her what it was, though it is not expreſſed; ſhe knew it reſpected her, as it had iſſued, and was concerning her, as appears by her after requeſt: do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; which is a remarkable inſtance of filial ſubjection and obedience to a parent, and which perhaps was ſtrengthened by a like miſtaken notion, as that of her father concerning the vow, that it could not be dispenſed

[a] Tzemach David, fol. 81. 3. [b] De loc. Heb. fol. 93. E. [c] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 7. §. 12.
[d] Geograph. l. 5. c. 17. [e] De loc. Heb. fol. 88. K. [f] מכנה Targum apud Kimchi.
Vid. Maſoram in loc. ex ea, ſo ſome in Vatablus. [g] מכנו ex ſe, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, ſo Noldius, p. 614. No. 1641.

penſed with; and therefore was moved under a ſenſe of religion, as well as filial duty, to expreſs herſelf in this manner, as well as by what follows: foraſmuch as the Lord hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon; ſuch was her public ſpirit, and the grateful ſenſe ſhe had of the divine goodneſs, in giving victory over Iſrael's enemies, and delivering them from them, with vengeance on them, ſhe cared not what was done to her; yea, deſired that what was vowed might be performed.

℣. 37. And ſhe ſaid unto her father, let this thing be done for me, &c.] She had but one favour to aſk of him, which ſhe thought might be granted, without any breach of the vow: let me alone two months; ſhe deſired ſuch a ſpace of time might be allowed her before the vow took place; and the rather ſhe might be encouraged to expect that her requeſt would be granted, ſince no time was fixed by the vow for the accompliſhment of it, and ſince the time ſhe aſked was not very long, and the end to be anſwered not unreaſonable: that I may go up and down upon the mountains; or, deſcend upon the mountains [h]; Jephthah's houſe in Mizpeh being higher than the mountains; or there might be, as Kimchi and Ben Melech note, a valley between that and the mountains, to which ſhe deſcended in order to go up to the mountains; ſee Joſh. ix. 24. theſe ſhe choſe to make her abode, and take her walks in, during the time ſhe aſked, as being moſt fit for retirement and ſolitude; where ſhe might give up herſelf to meditation and prayer, and converſation with her fellow-virgins ſhe would take with her, and ſo be wrought up to a greater degree of reſignation and ſubmiſſion to her father's will, and to the will of God in it, as ſhe might ſuppoſe: and bewail my virginity, I and my fellows; the virgins her companions; this ſhe propoſed to be the ſubject that ſhe and her aſſociates would dwell upon, during this time of ſolitude; and the rather, as this may be thought to be the thing contained in the vow, that as ſhe was a virgin, ſo ſhe ſhould continue; by which means ſhe would not be the happy inſtrument of increaſing the number of the children of Iſrael, nor of being the progenitrix of the Meſſiah; upon which accounts it was reckoned in thoſe times to be very grievous and reproachful, to live and die without iſſue, and ſo matter of lamentation and weeping.

℣. 38. And he ſaid, go, &c.] He granted her requeſt at once: and he ſent her away for two months; as ſhe deſired: and ſhe went with her companions, and bewailed her virginity upon the mountains; for the ſpace of two months: the Jewiſh commentators make mention of an allegorical expoſition of a writer [i] of theirs, who by mountains underſtands the ſanhedrim, to whom ſhe propoſed to go, who perhaps might find a way for the looſing of the vow; but it is a queſtion whether there was ſuch a court then in Iſrael; and had there been one, and either ſhe or her father had applied to it, in this caſe the prieſts would have pointed out what was to be done, and eſpecially if the vow had any regard to the ſacrifice of his daughter; and even to her virginity, which he had no power to oblige her to; but the literal ſenſe is no doubt to be followed.

℣. 39. And it came to paſs, at the end of two months ſhe returned to her father, &c.] For the requeſt ſhe made was not a pretence to make her eſcape out of his hands; but having done what ſhe propoſed to do, and the time fixed for it being come, ſhe returned to her father's houſe, and delivered up herſelf to him: who did with her according to his vow which he had vowed; but what he did is a queſtion, and which is not eaſily reſolved; ſome think he really ſacrificed her, through a miſtaken ſenſe of Lev. xxvii. 29. and which and his action are accounted for through his living a military life, and in a diſtant part of the country, and at a time when idolatry had greatly prevailed in Iſrael, and to ſuch a degree as it had not before, and no doubt that branch of it, ſacrificing children to Moloch; and Jephthah might think that though that was ſinful, yet ſuch a ſacrifice might be acceptable to the Lord; and eſpecially ſince his vow, as he thought, bound him to it; and how far the inſtance of Abraham offering up his ſon Iſaac, might encourage him to it, cannot be ſaid: of this mind were Joſephus [k], Jonathan Ben Uzziah the Targumiſt, and ſome other Jewiſh writers [l]; and many of the ancient Chriſtian fathers, and many modern authors of every name among Chriſtians; and it has been thought that the ſtory of Iphigenia, who Capellus [m] thinks is the ſame with Jepthigenia, that is, the daughter of Jephthah, and was ſlain by her father Agamemnon, having ſeveral circumſtances in it ſimilar to this, is taken from hence: and there is much ſuch a caſe as this related [n] of Idomeneus, a king of the Cretians, who upon his return after the deſtruction of Troy, being in a tempeſt, vowed, ſhould he be ſaved, that he would ſacrifice the firſt he met with to the gods; and as it was his ſon he firſt met with, he ſacrificed him; or as others ſay, would have done it, but was prevented by the citizens, and who on this account drove him from his kingdom. But others are of opinion, that what Jephthah did according to his vow was, that he ſhut up his daughter, and ſeparated her from the company of men, and obliged her to live unmarried all her days, and therefore ſhe is ſaid to bewail her virginity. Kimchi and Ben Melech ſay, he built a houſe for her without the city, where ſhe dwelt alone, and knew no man; and where her father ſupported her, and obliged her to live all her days; and Abarbinel thinks, that the Romaniſts from hence learnt to build their cloyſters to put their nuns in; and ſo Ben Gerſom interprets this vow of her being ſeparated from men, and devoted to the ſervice of God; and which is the ſenſe of many Chriſtian interpreters. Now though Jephthah had no ſuch power over his daughter, as to oblige her to perpetual virginity, nor did his vow bind him to it; for perſons devoted to the Lord were not obliged to abſtain from marriage, nor have we any inſtances of a monaſtic life in thoſe times, nor among the Jews at any time; yet as he did ſomething not right, which he thought his vow obliged him to, one would be rather tempted to think, in charity to him, that of the two evils he did the leaſt; for if ſhe was put to death, it muſt be done either by the magiſtrates, or by the prieſts, or by Jephthah himſelf; neither of which is probable: and ſhe knew no man; never married, but lived and died a virgin: and it was a cuſtom in Iſrael; the Targum adds, "that a man might not offer his ſon or his daughter for a burnt-offering, as Jephthah the Gileadite did, and did not conſult conſult Phinehas the prieſt; for had he conſulted Phinehas the prieſt, he would have redeemed her with a price;" ſo Jarchi, according to Lev. xxvii. 4. but each ſtood upon their honour, as the Jews ſay [o]; Jephthah being a king would not go to Phinehas, and Phinehas being an high-prieſt, and the ſon of an high-prieſt, would not go to a plebeian; and ſo, between them both, the maiden was loſt; but the cuſtom refers to what follows.

[h] וירדתי על ההרים & deſcendam ſuper montes, Pagninus, Montanus; deſcendamque ad montes, Tigurine verſion. [i] Tanchuma. fol. 52. 3. Vajikra Rabbâ, §. 37. fol. 176. 4. [k] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 7. §. 10. [l] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 60. [m] De voto Jephthæ, §. 12. [n] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 3. c. 22. Servius in Virgil. Æneid. l. 3. col. 693. in l. 11. col. 1634.

℣. 40 That the daughters of Iſrael went yearly to lament the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite, &c.] Either the death of her, as ſome, or her virginity, as others; though the word [p] uſed may ſignify to talk and diſcourſe with her, to hold a confabulation with her, and comfort her, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; to bring her ſome news, and tell her ſome diverting ſtories, to chear and recreate her in her ſolitude. De Dieu obſerves, that the word ſignifies in the Arabic language to praiſe, or ſpeak in commendation of a perſon or thing; and indeed in this ſenſe it ſeems to be uſed in this book, ch. v. 11. they ſhall rehearſe, that is, with praiſe and thankſgiving, the righteous acts of the Lord; and ſo the daughters of Iſrael went every year to the place where the daughter of Jephthah was, to ſpeak in the praiſe of her, of her heroiſm, in ſo chearfully ſubmitting to her father's vow, and expreſſing ſuch gratitude and joy at the ſame time for victory over the enemies of Iſrael; and this they did in her preſence, and while ſhe lived, to keep up her ſpirits; or it may be, in ſome public place, and even after her death, in memory of her, and to celebrate her praiſe. Epiphanius ſays [q], that in his time at Sebaſte, formerly called Samaria, they deified the daughter of Jephthah, and kept a feaſt for her every year. The meeting of the daughters of Iſrael, ſo long as the cuſtom laſted, which perhaps was only during the life of Jephthah's daughter, was four days in a year; but whether they were four days running, or once in a quarter of a year, is not certain; the latter ſeems moſt probable.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter relates a quarrel between Jephthah and the Ephraimites, which was fatal to the latter, ℣. 1—6. the time of Jephthah judging Iſrael, his death and burial, ℣. 7. and it briefly makes mention of three more judges of Iſrael, Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon, ℣. 8—15.

℣. 1. And the men of Ephraim gathered themſelves together, &c.] Or cried [r]; got together by a cry or proclamation made: in the Hebrew text it is, a man of Ephraim; not a ſingle man, but a body of men, who met together and joined as one man. It is highly probable, that there were no leſs than 50,000 of them; for 42,000 of them were ſlain, ℣. 6. and went northward; or, went over northward [s]; that is, over the river Jordan, which lay between Gilead and Ephraim; and when they had croſſed the river, they turned northward; for Mizpeh, where Jephthah lived, was in the north of the land, near Hermon and Lebanon, Joſh. xi. 3. and ſaid unto Jephthah, wherefore paſſedſt thou over to fight againſt the children of Ammon? not over Jordan, but over that part of the land of Iſrael from the plain where Jephthah dwelt, to the country of the children of Ammon: and didſt not call us to go with thee? they quarrel with him juſt in the ſame manner as they did with Gideon: theſe Ephraimites were a proud and turbulent people, and eſpecially were very jealous of the tribe of Manaſſeh, of which both Gideon and Jephthah were; the one of the half-tribe on this ſide Jordan, and the other of the half that was on the other ſide; and they were jealous of both, leſt any honour and glory ſhould accrue thereunto, and they ſhould get any ſuperiority in any reſpect over them, ſince Jacob their father had given the preference to Ephraim; and this ſeems to lie at the bottom of all their proceedings: we will burn thine houſe upon thee with fire; that is, burn him and his houſe, burn his houſe and him in it; which ſhews that they were in great wrath and fury, and argued not only the height of pride and envy, but wretched ingratitude, and a cruel diſpoſition; who, inſtead of congratulating him as Iſrael's deliverer, and condoling him with reſpect to the caſe of his only child, threaten him in this bruiſh manner.

℣. 2. And Jephthah ſaid unto them, I and my people were at a great ſtrife with the children of Ammon, &c.] As to the cauſe of the war, or the reaſon of his going over to fight the children of Ammon, it was a ſtrife or contention between the Gileadites and them, concerning their country; which the children of Ammon claimed as theirs, and the Gileadites inſiſted on it they had a juſt right to it; by which it appeared, that this was not a perſonal contention between Jephthah and them; and therefore the Ephraimites had no reaſon to fall ſo furiouſly upon him particularly; and it was a contention which chiefly concerned the two tribes and a half, and not the reſt; and ſo could not be blamed for defending themſelves alone if they could, without intereſting others in the quarrel: but this is not all he has to ſay, he adds, and when I called you, ye delivered me not out of their hands; it ſeems he had called them to aſſiſt in driving the enemy out of their coaſts when there, and they refuſed to help him; though it is not elſewhere ſaid, and it is not denied by them, ſo that it was falſe what they alledged; or however, ſince they declined giving him any aſſiſtance, when the children of Ammon were in his country, he could not expect they would join him in an expedition into theirs.

℣. 3. And when I ſaw that ye delivered me not, &c.] Gave him no aſſiſtance againſt their common enemy, did not attempt to ſave him and his people out of their hands, but left them to defend themſelves: I put my life in my hands; ready to deliver it up in the defence of his country; the meaning is, that he expoſed himſelf to the utmoſt danger, hazarded his life in going with a few troops into an enemy's country to fight him, and ſo liable to loſe his life; which was in as much danger, as ſome obſerve, as any brittle thing contained in the hand is in danger of falling, or of being ſnatched out of it: and paſſed over againſt the children of Ammon; took a long and fatiguing march over the land of Gilead into that of the children of Ammon, to fight with them: and the Lord

[o] Bereſhit Rabba & Vajikra, ut ſupra; Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 81. 3. [p] לחנות ad alloquendum, Pagninus, Montanus; ut differerent, Tigurine verſion; ut colloquerentur, Vatablus; ad confabulandum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [q] Contr. Hæreſ. l. 2. hæreſ. 55. [r] יצעק εβοησεν, Sept. clamatus, i. e. clamando convocatus, Piſcator. [s] יעבר tranſivit, Pagninus, Montanus; tranſiverunt, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

Lord delivered them into my hand; gave him victory over them, which ſhewed that his cauſe was juſt, and his call to engage in it clear: wherefore then are ye come up unto me this day to fight againſt me? who rather ſhould have come with thanks to him for the ſervice he had done, not only for the Gileadites, but for all Iſrael; for had he not fought againſt the children of Ammon, and conquered them, they would have ſoon not only over-run and oppreſſed Gilead, but would have come over Jordan, and diſpoſſeſſed the other tribes, and particularly Ephraim, as they had done already, ch. x. 9. ſo that it was baſe ingratitude in theſe people to come to fight againſt Jephthah, who had fought for them, and wrought ſalvation for them.

℣. 4. Then Jephthah gathered together all the men of Gilead, and fought with Ephraim, &c.] The Ephraimites not being pacified with the account Jephthah gave of the war between him and the children of Ammon, but continuing in their tumultuous outrage; he, being a man of ſpirit and courage, got as many of the Gileadites together as he could, and gave them battle: and the men of Gilead ſmote Ephraim; had the advantage of them, worſted them, killed many of them, and put the reſt to flight: becauſe they ſaid, ye Gileadites are fugitives of Ephraim among the Ephraimites, and among the Manaſſites; what provoked them to fall upon them with the greater fury, and uſe them the more ſeverely when they had the better of them, was their reproachful language to them; inſulting the Gileadites, who perhaps were chiefly, if not all, of the half tribe of Manaſſeh beyond Jordan, of which Jephthah was, that they were the ſcum of the houſe of Joſeph, that they had run away from their brethren, and dwelt in a corner of the land by themſelves; and were of no account at all among Ephraim and Manaſſeh, and diſclaimed by them both, and not eſteemed by either. The Targum is, "the fugitives of Ephraim ſaid, what are ye Gileadites accounted of among the Ephraimites, and among the Manaſſites?" on which Kimchi remarks, that thoſe Ephraimites that came in this tumultuous manner, and inſulted Jephthah, were a moſt abject company of men, the refuſe of the tribe of Ephraim, ſhepherds who through neceſſity were obliged to come over Jordan with their flocks and herds for paſture: but the words may be rendered, for they ſaid, fugitives of Ephraim are ye, even the Gileadites, who were, or being between the Ephraimites and the Manaſſites; that is, the Gileadites called the Ephraimites ſo, when they fled before them, and when they got at the fords of Jordan, which lay between Ephraim and the half tribe of Manaſſeh on the other ſide Jordan; and they are in the next verſe expreſsly ſo called.

℣. 5. And the Gileadites took the paſſages of Jordan before the Ephraimites, &c.] Being either ſwifter of foot, or going a nearer and ſhorter way, being better acquainted with their own country: and it was ſo, that when thoſe Ephraimites which were eſcaped ſaid, let me go over; the fugitives of Ephraim, as before called, who ran away from the battle, made their eſcape, and the beſt of their way to the paſſages of Jordan, to get over there to their own country: that the men of Gilead ſaid unto him; to every one of them, as they came up, art thou an Ephraimite? or an Ephrathite; for ſo it ſeems thoſe of the tribe of Ephraim were called, as Jeroboam, 1 Kings xi. 26. if he ſaid nay; that he was not an Ephraimite;

℣. 6. Then ſaid they unto him, ſay now Shibboleth, &c.] Which ſignifies a ſtream or courſe of water, at which they now were; and ſo it was as if they had bid them ſay, "may I, or let me, paſs over the ſtream of this river;" ſo Jarchi; and this being the caſe, though it was done to try them, and by their pronunciation learn whether they were Ephraimites or no, they were not upon their guard, but in an hurry, and at once expreſſed the word as they commonly did: and he ſaid, ſibboleth; pronouncing the letter ſhin as if it was ſin, or a ſamech; juſt as the French, as Kimchi obſerves, pronounce ſ like a t; and though the Gileadites and Ephraimites were of the ſame nation of Iſrael, and ſpoke the ſame language, yet their pronunciation differed, as did that of the Galilean Jews from others in the times of Chriſt, Matt. xxvi. 73. and ſo in all nations, among the Greeks, Romans, and among ourſelves, people in different counties pronounce in a different manner; which Kimchi thinks was in the Ephraimites owing to the air or climate; as the French, he obſerves, pronounce ſ as a t, with a ſoft and gentle ſound: for he could not frame to pronounce it right; or thus [t], as he was bid to do; being uſed to pronounce otherwiſe, he could not frame the organs of ſpeech, or ſo diſpoſe and order them as to ſay ſhibboleth; or he did not frame, order, and diſpoſe [u]; he was not careful to do it, though with ſome care he could, being not aware of the deſign of the Gileadites in it: then they took him and ſlew him at the paſſages of Jordan; every one as they came thither, who could not ſay ſhibboleth; theſe they ſuffered not to paſs over, but ſlew them: and there fell at that time of the Ephraimites 42,000: not at the paſſages of Jordan only; but what fell there, with thoſe at the battle, and in the purſuit, amounted to this number; ſo that the Ephraimites paid dear for their pride and inſolence.

℣. 7. And Jephthah judged Iſrael ſix years, &c.] After the affair of the Ephraimites, he was acknowledged by all Iſrael as their judge and ſupreme governor, but did not live long; being perhaps depreſſed and worn away with grief, on account of his daughter, and other troubles that attended him: then died Jephthah the Gileadite, and was buried in one of the cities of Gilead; it is not ſaid in what city he was buried, but very probably it was in his own city Mizpeh, where he dwelt. Joſephus [w] ſays it was in his own country Sebee a city of Gilead.

℣. 8. And after him Ibzan of Bethlehem judged Iſrael;] There were two Bethlehems, one in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 15. of which ſome think this man was; and another in the tribe of Judah, the city of Jeſſe and David, and of the Meſſiah; and Joſephus ſays [x], Ibzan was of the tribe of Judah, of the city of Bethlehem; and becauſe Boaz was of the ſame place, and lived in the times of the judges, the Jewiſh Rabbins [y] are of opinion, that he is the ſame with Ibzan; ſo Jarchi and Ben Gerſom.

℣. 9. And he had 30 ſons and 30 daughters, &c.] Which was a very uncommon caſe, for a man to have ſo many children, and thoſe as to their ſex to be equal. Between the former judge and him there was a great difference, in reſpect of this circumſtance of children; he had but one daughter, an only child; and ſhe, by reaſon of his vow, not ſuffered ſuffered to marry. Such a difference does God, in his all-wiſe providence, make even among good men; nor is this any certain characteriſtic of a good man. Danaus had 50 daughters, and his brother Egyptus 50 ſons, who were married to each other; and the huſbands were all ſlain by their wives but one, on the wedding night, and ſo far from being happy in them: but it was otherwiſe with this judge, when he ſent abroad, and took in thirty daughters from abroad for his ſons; his daughters he ſent abroad, or married them, to perſons not of another nation, nor of another tribe, but of another family of the ſame tribe, and theſe he diſmiſſed from him to live with their huſbands; and he took in daughters of families in the ſame tribe to be wives to his ſons, and who ſeem to have dwelt together; it being the cuſtom then for ſons, though married, to abide with their father, and their wives with them; as Abarbinel ſays is the cuſtom at Zenobia unto this day: and he judged Iſrael ſeven years; and in his days the wars of Troy are ſaid [z] to begin; but they began in the times of Jephthah his predeceſſor, and ended in his [a].

[t] Sic, Pagninus, Montanus [u] לא יכון non dirigebat, Montanus. [w] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 7.
[x] Ibid. ſ. 13. [y] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 91. 1.

℣. 10. Then died Ibzan, and was buried in Bethlehem;] He died at the end of his ſeven years government, and was buried in his native place; nothing memorable having happened during his being judge; this is all that is recorded of him.

℣. 11. And after him Elon a Zebulonite judged Iſrael, &c.] One of the tribe of Zebulon: and he judged Iſrael ten years; adminiſtered juſtice to them, preſerved them in the true religion, and from idolatry; though it does not appear that any enemies aroſe in his time againſt them, from whom he delivered them.

℣. 12. And Elon the Zebulonite died, &c.] At the end of his ten years government: and was buried in Aijalon in the country of Zebulon; which is added to diſtinguiſh it from another Aijalon in the tribe of Dan, ch. i. 35.

℣. 13. And after him Abdon the ſon of Hillell, a Pirathonite, judged Iſrael;] So called from Pirathon, where he was born, and which was in the tribe of Ephraim, as appears from ℣. 15.

℣. 14. And he had 40 ſons, and 30 nephews, &c.] Or ſons ſons, that is, grandſons; ſo that he lived not only to ſee his ſons married, but his grandchildren grown up to men's eſtate; ſince it follows, that rode on 70 aſs-colts; who were either employed by him to ride about on theſe animals, which in thoſe times were reckoned honourable; ſee ch. v. 10. to adminiſter juſtice throughout the nation in their circuits; or rather, not following any trade, or being concerned in huſbandry, or feeding cattle, but being men of eſtates, rode about like gentlemen: and he judged Iſrael 8 years; in his time it is ſaid [b] the city of Troy was deſtroyed; ſo Euſebius [c], who calls this judge Labdon, though he elſewhere [d] places it in the times of Eli; ſee on ℣. 9.

℣. 15. And Abdon the ſon of Hillell the Pirathonite died, &c.] At the end of his 8 years government: and was buried at Pirathon, in the land of Ephraim, in the mount of the Amalekites; in the place where he was born, and from whence he had the name of a Pirathonite; and this was in the tribe of Ephraim, and the particular ſpot was mount Amalek; ſo called either from the name of the perſon to whom it belonged, or becauſe the Amalekites formerly dwelt in it; or rather, becauſe of ſome remarkable advantage got over them at this place; here, Joſephus ſays [e], this judge had a magnificent funeral.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter relates the birth of Samſon, another of the judges of Iſrael, which was foretold by an angel to his mother, who told her huſband of it, ℣. 1—7. upon whoſe intreaty the angel appeared again, and related the ſame to them both, ℣. 8—14. and who was very reſpectfully treated by the man, and by the wonderful things he did was known by him to be an angel of the Lord, which greatly ſurprized him, ℣. 15—23. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of the birth of Samſon, and of his being early endowed with the ſpirit of God, ℣. 24, 25.

℣. 1. And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Committed idolatry, which was the evil they were prone unto, and were frequently guilty of: and the Lord delivered them into the hands of the Philiſtines 40 years; which according to Joſephus [f] are to be reckoned from the death of the laſt judge, and the time of Samſon's birth; or rather from ſome time after the death of Jephthah, particularly taking in the two laſt years of Ibzan, when the Ephraimites having been weakened thro' the ſlaughter of them by Jephthah, might encourage the Philiſtines to break in upon them; from which time to the birth of Samſon were 20 years, and 20 more may be allowed before he could begin to deliver Iſrael out of their hands; ſo that the oppreſſion laſted 40 years. According to others, it began at the ſame time as the oppreſſion of the Ammonites did, though it laſted longer, ch. x. 7.

℣. 2. And there was a certain man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites, &c.] Of the tribe of Dan, in which tribe Zorah was, and ſeems to have lain both on the borders of Judah and Dan, Joſh. xv. 33. and xix. 41. ſee the notes there; and this man was not a mean man, but of rank and figure, a principal man in the country, according to Joſephus [g]; though the Talmudiſts [h] ſay he was a plebeian: whoſe name was Manoah; which ſignifies reſt, and has much the ſame ſignification as Noah; and by this name he was well known in thoſe times, and among his people: and his wife was barren, and bare not; had no child, as the Targum; and it is obſerved by many, that ſeveral eminent perſons were born of women that had been barren, as Iſaac, Jacob, Samuel, and John the Baptiſt; and it is remarkable, that the ſtrongeſt man that ever was, was born of ſuch a woman, as the following account relates. The name of this woman, the mother of Samſon, is ſaid [i] to be Zalalponith; ſee 1 Chron. iv. 3.

℣. 3. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto the woman,

2

[z] Juchaſin, fol. 136. 1. [a] Gerard. Voſſii Iſagoge Chron. diſſert. 1. p. 4. [b] Juchaſin, ut ſupra. [c] Evangel. Præpar. l. 10. c. 11. p. 484. [d] Ibid. p 503. [e] Ut ſupra, §. 15. [f] Ibid. c. 8. §. 1. [g] Ibid. §. 2. [h] T. Bab. Teracot, fol. 61. 1. [i] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 91. 1. Juchaſin, fol. 10. 2.

woman, &c.] According to Joſephus [k], it was in a plain without the city; and that he appeared in the form of a man is certain from ℣. 6, &c. but was not a mere man, a prophet of the Lord, nor a created angel, but the uncreated one, the angel of the covenant, the Son and Word of God, who often appeared in an human form; ſince his name is ſaid to be wonderful, and he to do wonderful things, and is called Jehovah, ℣. 18, 23. and ſaid unto her, behold, now thou art barren, and beareſt not; barren at that time, and ſo ſhe had been ever ſince ſhe was married to that time; and this is obſerved, that it might appear the more wonderful that ſhe ſhould after this have a child: but thou ſhalt conceive, and bear a ſon; which to do, muſt be aſcribed to divine power, that one in her circumſtances ſhould bear a ſon; as the prediction of it was owing to divine omniſcience, and a proof of it.

℣. 4. Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink not wine nor ſtrong drink, &c.] Any liquor inebriating and intoxicating, neither new wine nor old wine, as the Targum, and ſo Jarchi; the reaſon of this appears in the next verſe, becauſe the child ſhe ſhould conceive and bear was to be a Nazarite, and to be one from his mother's womb; and from all ſuch liquors, Nazarites, according to the law, were to abſtain, Numb. vi. 3. and eat not any unclean thing; meaning not ſo much ſuch ſort of food as was forbidden by the law to be eaten, which every Iſraelite was to abſtain from, but ſuch as were peculiarly forbidden to Nazarites, as moiſt and dried grapes, or any thing made of the vine-tree from the kernel to the huſk, Numb. vi. 3, 4. The reaſon of this is, becauſe the child in the womb is nouriſhed with the ſame the mother is; and as this child was to be a Nazarite from the womb, and even in it, his mother was to abſtain both from eatables and drinkables forbidden a Nazarite by the law.

℣. 5. For lo, thou ſhalt conceive and bear a ſon, &c.] Which is not only repeated for the confirmation of it, but that ſhe might take notice that he was to be a Nazarite, and therefore muſt conform to every thing agreeable to the law of the Nazarites, and take care that it was obſerved in him: and no razor ſhall come on his head; to cut off the hair of it, not from the time of his birth to his death; for he was to be a perpetual Nazarite: other Nazarites during the time of their Nazariteſhip were not to ſuffer a razor to come upon them, but afterwards might; but for ſuch an one as Samſon, it was not lawful ever to ſuffer his hair to be cut off; ſee Numb. vi. 5. for the child ſhall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb; in which he was a type of Chriſt, who was ſanctified by the Lord, ſeparated from ſinners, and called a Nazarene; was born of a virgin, as Samſon was of a barren woman, and his birth foretold by an angel as this: and he ſhall begin to deliver Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines; for the ſalvation he wrought for Iſrael was not compleat and perfect; it was only begun by him, and carried on in the times of Eli, Samuel, and Saul, and perfected by David. In this his antitype exceeds him, who is the author of the compleat ſalvation of his people out of the hands of all their enemies, ſin, ſatan, and the world; tho' in this there is a great reſemblance between Samſon and our Lord Jeſus, in that what he did he did himſelf alone; not at the head of an army, and with forces under him, as other judges; ſo Chriſt with his own arm, and of himſelf, and without others, wrought ſalvation for his people; ſee Iſ. lxiii. 5.

℣. 6. Then the woman came and told her huſband, &c.] To whom it would be joyful news, as it was to her: ſaying, a man of God came unto me; he appeared in an human form, and therefore ſhe calls him a man; and by his mien and deportment, and the meſſage he brought, ſhe concluded he was a man of God, that is, a prophet; by which name ſuch perſons went in thoſe days; and ſo the Targum calls him a prophet of the Lord: but it is a mere conceit of Ben Gerſom that it was Phinchas, who in all probability was not living; beſides what is after related ſhews, that this was a divine perſon, and no other than the Son of God: and his countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very terrible; for though ſhe might never have ſeen an angel, yet it being a common notion that angels were very illuſtrious, of a beautiful form and of a ſhining countenance, and very majeſtic, ſhe compares the man ſhe ſaw to one; for by being very terrible, is not meant that he was frightful, and ſtruck her with horror, but venerable and majeſtic, which filled her with admiration: but I aſked him not whence he was, neither told he me his name; this ſhe added to prevent her huſband's enquiring about his name and place of abode; and perhaps as ſhe came along, ſhe reflected on herſelf, that ſhe did not aſk thoſe queſtions; which might be owing to the ſurprize ſhe was in, partly at the awful and venerable appearance of the perſon, and partly at the joyful news he brought her; though it ſeems as if ſhe did aſk his name, but he did not tell her what it was.

℣. 7. But he ſaid unto me, behold, thou ſhalt conceive and bear a ſon, &c.] She ſays nothing of her barrenneſs, which the angel took notice of to her, that having been to her reproach: and now drink no wine nor ſtrong drink; neither new wine nor old wine; ſo the Targum as before: neither eat any unclean thing; which was ſo in a ceremonial ſenſe; otherwiſe every creature of God is good, and not to be called common or unclean; it here reſpects what was forbidden Nazarites to eat; ſee ℣. 4. for the child ſhall be a Nazarite to God from the womb; it is here added what is not before expreſſed, unto his death; for he was to be a perpetual Nazarite; ſome were only Nazarites for a time, for ſo many days or months, according to their vow; but this ſon was to be a Nazarite all his days, by the appointment of God; nor is it any objection to what is here ſaid, that his hair was cut off before his death, which cauſed his Nazariteſhip to ceaſe; ſince theſe words are not a prophecy, but a precept; and beſides, that affair happened but a little before his death, he died quickly afterwards.

℣. 8. Then Manoah intreated the Lord, &c.] Joſephus [l] makes the woman to intreat the Lord; but the text is clear for it that it was Manoah that prayed: and ſaid, O my Lord, let the man of God which thou didſt ſend unto us; he believed that the man that came to his wife was a man of God, and that he was of his ſending; nor was he incredulous of the meſſage he brought, as appears by what follows: and teach us what we ſhall do unto the child that ſhall be born; he believed there would be a child born, and he knew what was to be done to a Nazarite in common, according to the law of God reſpecting ſuch, and the angel had mentioned ſomewhat to the woman; yet this being an extraordinary traordinary caſe, a Nazarite from his birth to his death, he was deſirous of knowing what was further to be done; or if there was any thing more ſpecial and particular to be obſerved concerning him; which ſhewed his readineſs and chearfulneſs to obey the will of God in all things.

[k] Antiqu. ib.

[l] Ut ſupra, §. 3.

℣. 9. And God hearkened unto the voice of Manoah, &c.] Heard his prayer, and anſwered it: and the angel of God came again unto the woman as ſhe ſat in the field; who very likely returned to the ſame place where ſhe was before, in hope her huſband's prayers would be heard, and the man return and come to her where he had before met her; as well as ſhe might be here retired for meditation and prayer; unleſs it can be ſuppoſed that ſhe had buſineſs here to do, as keeping a flock of ſheep, which women, and thoſe great perſonages too, were wont to do in thoſe times and countries, as Rebekah the ſiſter of Laban, and the daughters of Jethro, prince of Midian: but Manoah her huſband was not with her; the angel appeared to the woman again, becauſe ſhe would know him to be the ſame; whereas had he appeared to Manoah, eſpecially alone, he could not have known whether he was the ſame or no. This clauſe is obſerved for the ſake of what follows.

℣. 10. And the woman made haſte and ran, &c.] It is not improbable what Joſephus ſays [m], that ſhe intreated the angel to ſtay a little till ſhe fetched her huſband, which he aſſented to, and then made all the haſte ſhe could to him, partly through eagerneſs to acquaint him with it, and partly that ſhe might not make the prophet ſhe took him to be wait too long: and ſhewed her huſband; that his prayer was heard: and ſaid unto him, behold the man hath appeared unto me that came unto me the other day; or, as the Targum, this day; ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech; for the word other is not in the text. It is very probable it was the ſame day he came again he had appeared to her; perhaps it was in the former part of the day he firſt came to her, when ſhe went home to her huſband, and acquainted him with it, who prayed to the Lord that he might be ſent again; and then ſhe returned to her place in the field, and in the latter part of the day the angel appeared again.

℣. 11. And Manoah aroſe and went after his wife, &c.] As ſoon as ſhe had delivered the above, ſhe made all the haſte ſhe could to the man again, leſt he ſhould think her too long, and depart; and it was proper enough ſhe ſhould go firſt, to direct her huſband where the man was; Jarchi interprets it, after her counſel and advice: and came to the man, and ſaid unto him, art thou the man that ſpakeſt unto the woman? meaning his wife then preſent: and he ſaid, I am; the very ſame perſon; for tho' he was not a man, yet appearing in an human form was taken for one; and therefore makes anſwer according to the ſuppoſition of him, and was the ſelf-ſame perſon, and in the ſame form he had appeared before.

℣. 12. And Manoah ſaid, now let thy words come to paſs, &c.] Which was not only a wiſh that they might, but a prayer of faith that they would come to paſs: how ſhall we order the child, and how ſhall we do unto him; he believed a child would be born, and as he was to be a Nazarite, he knew what were the rules and orders to be obſerved concerning one in common; but as he was to be an extraordinary one, he was deſirous of knowing what particular laws and rules were to be obſerved with reſpect to him, or what more was to be done to him than to another: the words may be rendered, as in the margin of our bibles, what ſhall be the judgment of the child, and his work; and ſeems to relate not to what ſhould be done to it, but what that ſhould do; for being an extraordinary Nazarite, he ſuppoſed that ſome extraordinary work would be done by him, and he was curious to know it; and ſo Abarbinel interprets it of his requeſt to know things future and wonderful, that ſhould be done after the child was grown up; but this the angel choſe not to inform him of, ſince it might have been prejudicial to them, ſhould the Philiſtines get knowledge that this child would be a judge, and ſaviour of Iſrael, and do ſuch and ſuch things to them as he did, they would have ſought to have ſlain his wife whilſt ſhe bare him, or the child when born; and it may be obſerved, that though the angel told the woman at firſt, that he ſhould begin to deliver Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines, ℣. 5. yet ſhe ſaid nothing of it to her huſband, nor did the angel repeat it.

℣. 13. And the angel of the Lord ſaid unto Manoah, &c.] Giving him no direct anſwer to his queſtion, either what ſhould be done to the child, or what that ſhould do; only reminds of and repeats what he had ſaid to his wife, which ſhe ſhould be careful to obſerve and would, and that was enough for him to know: of all that I ſaid to the woman, let her beware; take care to abſtain from every thing in eating and drinking, during the time of her going with child, he had enjoined, which are particularly repeated in the next verſe.

℣. 14. She may not eat of any thing that cometh of the vine, &c.] Grapes moiſt or dried, kernels, or huſks, or any thing made of them: neither let her drink wine, or ſtrong drink; as ſhe was to be careful to abſtain from ſuch liquors, ſo her huſband alſo is enjoined not to ſuffer her to drink any: nor eat any unclean thing; which was ſo by the law of Moſes, and particularly by the law of the Nazarites: all that I commanded her, let her obſerve; both with reſpect to herſelf and the child.

℣. 15. And Manoah ſaid unto the angel of the Lord, &c.] Being ſatisfied with what he had ſaid, and perceiving that he choſe to ſay no more, and was about to depart: I pray thee let me detain thee, until we ſhall have made ready a kid for thee; to eat a meal with them, in token of gratitude for the trouble he had been at in bringing theſe meſſages to them, taking him to be a man, a prophet of the Lord, for whom they were wont to make entertainments; and Abarbinel thinks Manoah propoſed this, on purpoſe to detain him, in hope that while they were eating together, he would reveal ſome ſecrets unto him.

℣. 16. And the angel of the Lord ſaid unto Manoah, &c.] In anſwer to his requeſt: though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread; that is, ſhould he be prevailed upon to ſtay a while with him, until an entertainment ſhould be got ready, he would not eat of any of his proviſions; for bread is put for all eatables, or whatſoever he might provide for the entertainment: and if, or but if [n] thou wilt offer a burnt-offering, thou muſt offer it unto the Lord; if he meant to provide not a feſtival entertainment, but a ſacrifice, then he ſhould take care that he did not offer it to ſtrange gods, as was now very much the cuſtom with Iſrael in this their time of apoſtacy, ℣. 1. but to the true Jehovah, and not to a ſervant of his, a prophet or an angel, but to himſelf,

[m] Ibid. Piſcator.

[n] אם ſi autem, V. L. quod ſi, Tigurine verſion; ſin autem, Junius & Tremellius; ſi vero, himself: for Manoah knew not that he was an angel of the Lord; he took him to be a man, a prophet sent of God, and not an angel; and much less the increated one, to whom as such only the sacrifice could be offered.

℣. 17. And Manoah said unto the angel of the Lord, what is thy name, &c.] Who art thou, and by what name art thou called? for since he could not prevail upon him to stay and eat a meal with him, he desired to know his name, and where he lived, that when he heard his name mentioned he might speak well of him, or send to him upon occasion; or if any message was sent from him, as Jarchi suggests, that he might shew a respect to him, and observe it: and particularly, that when thy sayings come to pass, we may do thee honour? say that such a prophet, whose name is such, and lives in such a place, foretold these things; or that they might send him a present, in gratitude for, and as a reward of his service and trouble; so the reward of a labourer, and the maintenance of a gospel-minister, is called honour, 1 Tim. v. 17. and thus Josephus [o] understood it, that they might give him thanks, and send him a present.

℣. 18. And the angel of the Lord said unto him, &c.] Being so importunate, and pressing upon him: why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is secret; and not to be known; as his nature and essence as a divine person, which may be meant by his name, is what passes knowledge, is infinite and incomprehensible; see Prov. xxx. 4. or wonderful [p]; which is one of the names of Christ, and fitly agrees with him, who is wonderful in his person, as God and man; in his incarnation, in his offices and relations, in his love to his people, and in all he is unto them, and has done for them; see Is. ix. 6. and the note there.

℣. 19. So Manoah took a kid with a meat-offering, &c.] The kid which he proposed to make an entertainment with, for the man of God, he took him to be, he fetched and brought for a burnt-offering, at the hint which the angel had given him, and joined to it a meat-offering, as was usual whenever burnt-offerings were made; see Numb. xv. 3, 4. and offered it upon a rock unto the Lord; for tho' Manoah was not a priest, nor was this a proper place for sacrifice; high places were now forbidden, and only at the tabernacle in Shiloh were offerings to be brought; yet all this was dispensed with, and Manoah was justified in what he did by the warrant of the angel, ℣. 16. The rock was probably near the place where this meeting of Manoah and his wife with the angel was, and where the discourse between them passed; and which served instead of an altar, and on which Manoah sacrificed, not to idols, but to the true Jehovah, as the angel directed: and the angel did wonderously; agreeable to his name, which was wonderful, ℣. 18. or he, Jehovah, did wonderously; for this angel was no other than Jehovah the son. The instance in which he did wonderously was, as Kimchi observes, by bringing fire out of the rock, which consumed the flesh of the kid, and the meat-offering; and so Josephus [q] says, that he touched the flesh with a rod he had, and fire sparkled out, and consumed it with the bread, or meat-offering; just in the same manner as the angel did with the kid and cakes that Gideon brought, ch. vi. 21. and Manoah and his wife looked on; to see either fire come down from heaven, or spring up out of the rock, which consumed the sacrifice, and shewed the Lord's acceptance of it, and also the angel's ascending in it as follows.

℣. 20. For it came to pass when the flame went up towards heaven from off the altar, &c.] That is, from the rock, which served instead of an altar, and from whence perhaps the fire sprung which consumed both the burnt-offering and the meat-offering, the flame of which went up to heaven; this rock or altar having no covering, but was sub dio, open to the heavens: that the angel of the Lord ascended in the flame of the altar; making use of the smoke, as Josephus [r] says, as a vehicle in which he openly went up to heaven: and Manoah and his wife looked on it; on the flame and smoke, and the angel in it as he ascended; just as the disciples of Christ looked stedfastly on him as he went up to heaven, when a cloud received him out of their sight, Acts i. 9, 10. and fell on their faces to the ground; with astonishment and surprize at what they saw, through fear and reverence of the divine being, of whose presence they were now sensible, and as worshipping of him, and praying to him.

℣. 21. But the angel of the Lord did no more appear to Manoah and to his wife, &c.] As the flame and smoke ascended, he disappeared therewith, and was seen no more: then Manoah knew that he was an angel of the Lord; by the wondrous things he did, causing fire to come down from heaven, or out of the rock, ascending in the midst of the flame, without being hurt by it, and going up to heaven in it.

℣. 22. And Manoah said unto his wife, &c.] Being risen from the ground, where they fell on their faces: we shall surely die, because we have seen God; by which it appears that he not only believed him to be an angel, and not a man, but a divine person; for though angels are sometimes called Elohim, the word here used, yet good men were not wont to fear death, or conclude they should die on sight of an angel; but their notion was, that an appearance of God to them was death, and were surprized when it did not follow, Gen. xxxii. 30. Judg. vi. 22, 23. see Exod. xxxiii. 20.

℣. 23. But his wife said unto him, &c.] Who was less fearful, and the strongest believer of the two, seeing her husband so very much intimidated, endeavoured to comfort and strengthen him by the three following arguments: if the Lord was pleased to kill us, he would not have received a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering at our hands; for it was at the direction of this illustrious person, that they offered these offerings, and who testified the divine acceptance of them, by causing fire in an extraordinary manner to consume them, which was always reckoned a token of God's acceptance of them; and besides, the angel went up in the flame, as being well pleased with them, and, as it were, carrying up the sacrifice to heaven with him, as a sweet-swelling savour to God. Here the angel is called Jehovah by the woman, and shews this was the increated angel: neither would he have shewed us all these things; which they saw, as the appearance of a divine person to them, in an human form, the consuming of the sacrifice by fire in so strange a manner, and the ascent of the angel heavenwards in the flame of it: nor would as at this time, have told us such things as these; as that they they ſhould have a ſon; how the woman was to manage herſelf, whilſt with child of him; and how when born he was to be brought up, and what things God would do by him, and begin to deliver Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines. Now all this would not have been told at ſuch a time of diſtreſs, as the nation was now in, but to comfort them, or he would never have told them of a ſon to be born of them, if they were to be deſtroyed immediately. So an enlightened ſoul may reaſon from the ſight and ſenſe he has had of his ſinful, loſt, and undone ſtate by nature; from the revelation of Chriſt to him, as the only way of ſalvation; from the views he has had of the glories of his perſon, and the riches of his grace; and from that communion with God he has ſometimes enjoyed; from all this he may reaſon, that if God had a deſign to damn him for his ſins, he would never have made ſuch diſcoveries of love, grace and mercy to him; as well as from the ſacrifice of Chriſt, God has provided and accepted of, on the foot of which juſtice is engaged to ſave; and beſides, grace and glory are inſeparable.

[o] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 8. §. 3. [p] פלאי θαυμαστον, Sept. mirabile, V. L. Montanus; mirificus, Junius & Tremellius.
[q] Ut supra. [r] Ibid.

℣. 24. And the woman bare a ſon, and called his name Samſon, &c.] After theſe appearances were over, Manoah and his wife returned to their habitation, and ſhe ſoon became pregnant, and at the uſual courſe of time brought forth a ſon, and ſhe gave him the name of Samſon; for what reaſon it is not eaſy to determine. Joſephus ſays [s], the word ſignifies ſtrong; perhaps he was born a ſtrong, robuſt child, which is not unlikely, or the woman might have ſome prophetic hint of his future ſtrength, and ſo gave him this name; but the word has not the ſignification of ſtrength in it; it rather ſignifies the ſun, which is indeed a ſtrong body, and is compared to a ſtrong man running his race, and ſo a ſtrong man may be compared to that; but rather with reſpect to the ſun, this name might be given him, becauſe of the ſplendor of his countenance with which he might be born, or in memory of the ſhining countenance of the angel which brought the tidings of his birth, or becauſe he was to be the inſtrument of diſpelling the darkneſs of calamity and diſtreſs Iſrael were now in: but the word more properly ſignifies a miniſter or ſervant, from whence the ſun has its name; for Samſon was to be, and was, a miniſter and ſervant of God, and of his people Iſrael. There is an agreement between the type and the antitype in this name in either ſenſe. Chriſt is the mighty God, and mighty Saviour, the ſun of righteouſneſs, the light of the world, and the deliverer of his people from darkneſs of calamity and diſtreſs; and who came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter and perform the great ſervice of redemption and ſalvation: and the child grew; in bodily ſtrength and ſtature, and grew up to man's eſtate, Luke ii. 40, 52. and the Lord bleſſed him; not only with extraordinary ſtrength of body, but with great endowments of mind, with the Spirit and graces of the Spirit; with grace, and bleſſings of it, and with his gracious preſence; with this compare Pſ. xxi. 3, 6. Eph. i. 3.

℣. 25. And the Spirit of the Lord began to move him at times in the camp of Dan, &c.] To go out into it, in order to be trained up in and inured to military exerciſes; or it began to ſtrike his mind, inject thoughts into it, and impreſs it with them concerning doing great things for the people of God in time to come; and for the preſent put him upon doing ſtrange and wonderful exploits, which were omens of what was to be done by him hereafter; and theſe were done by him now and then, not always, but as the Spirit of God came upon him, under the impulſe of which he did them, and by the ſtrength he gave him; ſo the Targum, "and the ſpirit of ſtrength from the Lord began to ſtrengthen him." This camp of Dan was either a camp formed in that tribe, to prevent the incurſions of the Philiſtines; or rather, ſince it does not ſeem that Iſrael had ſtrength enough to reſiſt them, they having got the power over them, this was the name of a place called Mahaneh-dan near Kirjath-jearim, from the Danites encamping in it, when they went to beſiege Laiſh, ch. xviii. 11, 12. for the fact was done before this time, though related afterwards: between Zorah and Eſhtaol; which were two cities in the tribe of Dan, and upon the borders of the tribe of Judah; of which ſee Joſh. xv. 33. and xix. 41. It may be obſerved, that as the tribe of Dan lay near to the Philiſtines, and ſo liable to their ravages, and might be moſt oppreſſed by them, ſo a deliverer of Iſrael was raiſed up in this tribe.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter treats of Samſon's courtſhip, and marriage of a Philiſtine woman, ℣. 1—5. of his meeting with a young lion as he went a courting, and of his ſlaying it, and afterwards finding honey in it, ℣. 6—9. of a riddle which he framed out of this incident, and put to his companions at his marriage to unriddle, giving them ſeven days to do it in, with a promiſe of a reward, ℣. 10—14. and of their unriddling it by means of his wife, who got the ſecret from him, ℣. 15—18. which led him to ſlay 30 Philiſtines, to make good his promiſe of 30 ſheets and changes of raiment, and to leave his new married wife, who was given to his companion, ℣. 19, 20.

℣. 1. And Samſon went down to Timnath, &c.] A city which by lot fell to the tribe of Judah, but was afterwards given to the tribe of Dan, and now in the hands of the Philiſtines, Joſh. xv. 57. and xix. 43. Judah is ſaid to go up to it, becauſe the place where he lived lay below it, Gen. xxxviii. 13. but Samſon is ſaid to go down to it, becauſe he lived above it. The Jews [t] differ about the reconciliation of theſe two places; ſome ſay there were two of this name, the one is a deſcent, and the other is an aſcent; others ſay there was but one, ſo ſituated, that they that came to it on one ſide aſcended, and they that came to it on the other ſide deſcended. Bochart [u] approves of the former. According to Bunting [w], this was 12 miles from Eſhtaol, where Samſon lived: and ſaw a woman in Timnath, of the daughters of the Philiſtines; who at this time dwelt there; he ſaw no doubt many other women beſides her, but he took ſpecial notice

[s] Ut ſupra, §. 4.
[t] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 10. 1.
[u] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 4. col. 763, 764.
[w] Travels, &c. p. 115.

tice of her, and entertained a particular affection for her; or, in other words, on ſight of her fell in love with her.

℣. 2. And he came up and told his father and his mother, &c.] Of his paſſion of love, being deſirous of having their approbation and conſent, in which he acted a dutiful part, and what became him; and may be an example to children to adviſe with their parents, and have their opinion and conſent before they engage in ſuch an enterprize, even before courtſhip: and ſaid, I have ſeen a women in Timnath of the daughters of the Philiſtines; whom he had a good liking of, and a ſtrong affection for; he is very open and ingenuous in his account, does not go about to hide any thing from his parents, or colour things over, or conceal her deſcent, but frankly tells them ſhe was a Philiſtine woman, which he knew would at once furniſh out an objection againſt her: now therefore get her for me to wife; for it ſeems it was the cuſtom then, when a young man had pitched upon a woman he liked, that it was left to his parents to treat with the woman and her friends about the marriage of her to him.

℣. 3. Then his father and his mother ſaid unto him, &c.] What he might expect, and doubtleſs did expect: is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goeſt to take a wife of the uncircumciſed Philiſtines? none in their own family, nor in the tribe of Dan, nor among the whole nation of Iſrael, but muſt go among the uncircumciſed Philiſtines; for though they were not of the ſeven nations of the Canaanites, with whom marriage was forbidden, yet they not only dwelt where they did, and where the Iſraelites ſhould, but were idolaters and impure perſons, and therefore affinity ſhould not be contracted with them, as being of a dangerous conſequence, which might entice to idolatry. Ben Gerſom obſerves, that their Rabbins ſay he made her a proſelyte firſt, though he did not acquaint his parents with it, and ſo Abarbinel; but this ſeems not likely, for had this been the caſe, he would have had an eaſy and ready reply to this objection of theirs: and Samſon ſaid unto his father, get her for me, for ſhe pleaſeth me well; or is right in mine eyes [x]; not only his eyes were taken with her beauty or external form, but it was right in his ſight, in his judgment, to marry her; he having an impulſe upon his mind from the Spirit of God unto it, though he did not let his parents know of it, but left them to conclude it ſprung from a violent affection to her perſon. Abarbinel obſerves, that he only addreſſed his father, and not his mother, ſhe being moſt vehemently againſt the match, and expreſſing more uneaſineſs at it than his father did; but it is moſt likely that he addreſſed his father particularly, becauſe he was the proper perſon to negotiate this affair for him.

℣. 4. And his father and mother knew not that it was of the Lord, &c.] That he ſhould marry this uncircumciſed Philiſtine; Samſon knew it was, and that his deſire of having her in marriage did not ariſe from carnal affection to her merely, being captivated with her beauty and external form, for ſhe was not ſo very fair, her younger ſiſter was fairer than ſhe, ch. xv. 2. but he perceived it was the mind and will of God that he ſhould take ſuch a perſon to wife, by the impulſe of the Spirit of God upon him, pointing it unto him, inclining and urging him to it, ſuggeſting the end and deſign of it, and the opportunity it would give him of quarrelling with the Philiſtines, and taking vengeance on them; but this his parents were ignorant of, nor did he let them know that this was of God: that he ſought an occaſion againſt the Philiſtines; in this way, by this means; they might know he ſought to get an opportunity to be avenged on them for their oppreſſion, and to attempt the deliverance of Iſrael; but they knew not that it was the will of God, that a way ſhould be opened for it by this means. Samſon might be directed by the Lord to reaſon thus in his mind, that if he propoſed to the Philiſtines to marry one of their daughters, and they ſhould reject his propoſal, this would give him a handle to fall out with them, and fall upon them; and if they ſhould agree to ſuch a match, he might expect they would be kind to him, and to his people for his ſake, being in alliance with them, or he ſhould reſent it, and take occaſion from hence to come to a rupture with them: for at that time the Philiſtines had dominion over Iſrael; had invaded their country, and dwelt in their cities, and made them tributary to them, and uſed them ill; which Samſon obſerving, was provoked to ſeek an opportunity of avenging the injuries done them, and of delivering them, and he was directed to it this way.

℣. 5. Then went Samſon down, and his father and his mother, to Timnath, &c.] They were prevailed upon to go with him, either becauſe they perceived his affections were ſo ſtrongly ſet upon a wife, that they thought it adviſeable to agree to it, leſt it ſhould be of bad conſequence to him, or becauſe he let them know that the thing was of God, and what was his deſign in it: and came to the vineyards of Timnath; the land of Canaan was a land of vineyards, and particularly that part of it which was inhabited by the Philiſtines and Phœnicians; and though we no where read of the wine of Timnath, yet frequent mention is made in authors of the wine of Aſcalon, Gaza, and Sarepta, inhabited by the above people; theſe vineyards ſeem to have lain ſomewhat out of Samſon's way; but hither he turned on ſome account or another from his parents, perhaps to eat ſome grapes: and behold, a young lion roared againſt him; not a whelp, that is expreſſed by another word, but one more grown, and is afterwards called a lion ſimply; and by the Targum, a lion, the ſon of lions or lioneſſes; which ſeeing him in the vineyards, where he was lurking, came out to meet him, and roared at him in a hideous manner, and made up to him to deſtroy him: theſe creatures, though now more rare in thoſe parts, were at this time frequent, and in after-times; ſee 1 Sam. xvii. 34. 1 Kings xiii. 24. and xx. 36. and ſeveral writers [y] make mention of lions in Meſopotania and Syria; and Strabo [z], and Pliny [a] ſpeak of a city in Phœnicia near Sidon, called the city of lions, becauſe perhaps it had been much infeſted with them; and for a like reaſon it may be ſome cities in the tribes of Judah and Simeon were called Lebaoth and Bethlebaoth, Joſh. xv. 32. and xix. 6.

℣. 6. And the ſpirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, &c.] The Spirit of might from the Lord, as the Targum, inſpiring him with courage and intrepidity of mind, and increaſing his bodily ſtrength: and he rent him as he would rend a kid; as he came up to him to ſeize him, he laid hold [x] יישרה בעיני recta in oculis meis, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius. Cunæus, l. 8. §. 1. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 16.

[y] Strabo Geograph. l. 16. p. 514.

[z] Geograph. l. 16 p. 520.

[a] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 20.

on him and ſtrangled him, as Joſephus [b] ſays, caught him by the throat, and tore it out; for it does not ſeem that the carcaſs was torn to pieces, or limb from limb, by what follows; and this he did with as much eaſe, as if he had had only a kid to deal with: and he had nothing in his hand; not a ſtaff to keep it off, nor a ſpear, ſword or knife to ſtab it with: in this Samſon was a type of Chriſt, who has deſtroyed our adverſary the devil, compared to a roaring lion, 1 Pet. v. 8. to a lion for his ſtrength, cruelty and voraciouſneſs; to a roaring lion, making a hideous noiſe and ſtir when the goſpel was carried unto the Gentiles, and they were about to be called and eſpouſed to Chriſt; from among whom he was caſt out, and by no other weapon than the miniſtration of the goſpel, accompanied with the power of Chriſt, and his Spirit: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done; when he overtook them, as he quickly did, he ſaid not a word to them of his meeting with a lion and ſlaying it; which as it ſhewed his modeſty in not blazing abroad his wonderful and heroic actions, in which alſo he was a type of Chriſt, but his great prudence in concealing this, leſt his great ſtrength ſhould be known too ſoon, and the Philiſtines be upon their guard againſt him, or ſeek to diſpatch him privately; tho' no doubt he had pondered this in his own mind, and conſidered it as an omen and preſage of the advantage he ſhould have over the Philiſtines his enemies, whom he ſhould as eaſily overcome as he had that lion, and that without any inſtrument of war.

℣. 7. And he went down, and talked with the woman, &c.] Entered into a converſation with her, that he might the better judge of her other qualifications, beſides that of outward form and beauty, whether ſhe would be a ſuitable yoke-fellow for him; and he talked with her about marriage, and propoſed it to her, or talked about her to her father and near relations; and, as the Targum expreſſes it, aſked the woman, not only aſked of her her conſent, but demanded her of her friends: it may refer, as Abarbinel obſerves, to his father, that he went down and talked with the woman, and with her relations about her, concerning the affair of his ſon's marriage with her: and ſhe pleaſed Samſon well; he liked her converſation as well as her perſon, and the more he converſed with her, the more agreeable ſhe was to him, and the more deſirous he was to marry her. Though ſome obſerve from hence, that ſhe did not pleaſe the father of Samſon as himſelf; ſo Abarbinel.

℣. 8. And after a time he returned to take her, &c.] Matters being agreed on, and ſettled on both ſides, and the eſpouſals made, he and his parents returned, and at the proper uſual time for the conſummation of the marriage, he went again to Timnath for that purpoſe. It is in the Hebrew text, after days [c], which ſometimes ſignifies a year, ſee Gen. iv. 3. Exod. xiii. 10. and ſo Ben Gerſom interprets it, that a year after this woman became Samſon's wife (i. e. betrothed to him) he returned to take her to himſelf to wife; and it ſeems, adds he, that twelve months were given her to prepare herſelf; and ſome conſiderable time muſt have elapſed, as appears from what had happened to the carcaſs of the lion, next related: and he turned aſide to ſee the carcaſs of the lion; juſt before he came to Timnath he thought of the lion he had ſlain ſome time again ago, and he went a little out of the way to ſee what was become of it, or had happened to it. Joſephus ſays [d], when he flew it he threw it into a woody place, perhaps among ſome buſhes, a little out of the road; for which reaſon it had not been ſeen and removed, and was in a more convenient place for what was done in it: and behold, there was a ſwarm of bees and honey in the carcaſs of the lion; and though naturaliſts [e] tell us, that bees are averſe to fleſh, and will not touch any, yet in the courſe of time that the carcaſs of this lion had lain, its fleſh might have been clean eaten off by the fowls of the air, or was quite dried away and conſumed, ſo that it was nothing but a mere ſkeleton; a bony carcaſs, as the Syriac verſion. Joſephus [f] ſays, the ſwarm was in the breaſt of the lion; and it is no more unlikely, that a ſwarm of bees ſhould ſettle in it, and continue and build combs, and lay up their honey there, than that the like ſhould be done in the ſkull of Oneſilus king of Cyprus, when hung up and dried, as Herodotus [g] relates. Beſides, according to Virgil [h], this was a method made uſe of to produce a new breed of bees, even from the corrupt gore and putrid bowels of ſlain beaſts; and Pythagoras [i] obſerves, they are produced from thence. This may be an emblem of thoſe ſweet bleſſings of grace, which come to the people of Chriſt through his having deſtroyed ſatan, the roaring lion, and all his works; and particularly which came to the poor Gentiles, when the devil was caſt out from them, and his empire there demoliſhed.

℣. 9. And he took thereof in his hands, and went on eating, &c.] Joſephus [k] ſays, he took three honey-combs, he means three pieces of the honey-comb, and eat the honey as he went along to Timnath; which he might do without touching the carcaſs of the lion, and defiling himſelf thereby, which, as a Nazarite, he was more eſpecially to be careful of: and came to his father and mother, and he gave them, and they did eat; who went down with him to the conſummation of the marriage, and from whom he had turned a little aſide; and now overtook them, and to whom he gave ſome of his honey to eat, which, having travelled ſome way, might be grateful to them. The above writer takes no notice of this, but ſays he gave of it to the young woman whom he betrothed, when he came to her; but of that the text makes no mention: but he told not them that he had taken the honey out of the carcaſs of the lion; either leſt they ſhould ſcruple eating it, being taken out of ſuch a carcaſs; or that the riddle, which perhaps he meditated as he came along eating the honey, might not be found out, which might more eaſily have been done, had this fact been known by any.

℣. 10. So his father went down unto the woman, &c.] At Timnath, whom Samſon had eſpouſed; the Targum is, "about the buſineſs of the woman;" about the conſummation of the marriage with her; they all three went, the father, the mother, and the ſon, as appears from the preceding verſe: for Samſon made a feaſt, for ſo uſed the young men to do; at the time of marriage; this was the nuptial feaſt common in all nations; but it ſeems the cuſtom now and here was, for the bridegroom to make it; whereas from other inſtances we learn, that the father of the bridegroom uſed to make it, Matt. xxii. 2. ſee the note there; and the Vulgate Latin

[b] Antiq. l. 5. c. 8. §. 5.
[c] מימים a diebus, Montanus; poſt dies, Vatablus.
[d] Ut ſupra.
[e] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 40. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 21.
[f] Ut ſupra, §. 6.
[g] Herpſichore, ſive, l. 5. c. 114
[h] — quoquo modo cæſis, &c. Georgic. l. 4. ℣. 284, &c. Liquefacta boum per viſcera, &c. Ib. ℣. 555.
[i] Apud Ovid. Metamorph. l. 15. fab. 4. ℣. 365, 366.
[k] Ut ſupra.

Latin verſion here renders it, and he made a feaſt for his ſon Samſon; the Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions add, ſeven days, and ſo long this feaſt was kept, ℣. 12. Now this marriage of Samſon with a daughter of the Philiſtines, was a type of the marriage of Chriſt with his people, eſpecially with the Gentile church, ſuch as were not of the commonwealth of Iſrael, but ſinners of the Gentiles, very ignorant of divine things, reproached by the Jews, and their calling an offence to them; and may fitly expreſs the love of Chriſt to his church, though unworthy of it, which is a love of complacency and delight, ariſing from his own good-will and pleaſure, and not owing to any ſuperior beauty, excellence, worth or worthineſs in them, they being no better than others, children of wrath, even as others, ſee ch. xv. 2. as well as there is an agreement in the manner of his obtaining and betrothing her, which was by applying to his father to get her for him, and being got and given, he betrothed her; ſo Chriſt aſked his people of his father to be his ſpouſe, which requeſt being obtained, he betrothed them to himſelf in righteouſneſs; and the goſpel-feaſt, or miniſtry of the word is kept and continued on account of it, Pſ. xxi. 2. Hoſ. ii. 19. Matt. xxii. 2, 3, 4.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs when they ſaw him, &c.] That is, the Philiſtines, the citizens of Timnath, when they ſaw that he was come to conſummate his marriage: that they brought 30 companions to be with him; to be the bridegroom's men, or children of the bride chamber, as they are called, Matt. ix. 15. or friends of the bridegroom, John iii. 29. to keep him company during the nuptial-feaſt: this they did according to cuſtom, and in honour and reſpect unto him; tho' ſome think, and ſo Joſephus[l], that they were brought to be guards upon him, obſerving that he was a man of great might, ſtrength and courage, ſo that they were afraid of him, leſt he ſhould have ſome deſign upon them; but it is not certain that there was any thing very viſible or terrible in him, more than in another man, that ſhewed him to be of extraordinary courage and ſtrength, ſince it was but at times the ſpirit of the Lord came upon him, and as yet he had done nothing to their knowledge which ſhewed him to be ſuch; had they indeed known of his rencounter with the lion, they might have had ſuch thoughts of him, but this they knew nothing of.

℣. 12. And Samſon ſaid unto them, &c.] His 30 companions, very likely on the firſt day of the feaſt: I will now put forth a riddle to you; a ſecret, hidden, abſtruſe thing, not eaſy to be underſtood; a dark ſaying, wrapt up in figurative terms; and this he propoſed as an amuſement to them, to exerciſe their wits, which it ſeems was uſual to entertain gueſts with, and might be both pleaſing and profitable: if you can certainly declare it unto me within the ſeven days of the feaſt; for ſo long the nuptial-feaſt was uſually kept, ſee Gen. xxix. 27, 28. If they could find it out; and with clearneſs and certainty explain the riddle to him within that period of time, which was giving them time enough to do it in: then I will give you 30 ſheets, and 30 change of garments; that is, every man one of each. By ſheets he means, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it, a covering of the body in the night next to the fleſh, in which a man lies, and was made of linen; meaning either what we call ſhirts, or bed-ſheets, and by change of raiment, a ſuit of clothes worn in the day-time.

℣. 13. But if ye cannot declare it unto me, &c.] Explain the riddle in the ſpace of time allowed: then ſhall ye give me 30 ſheets, and 30 change of garments; ſo many ſhirts and ſuits of apparel: and they ſaid unto him, put forth thy riddle that we may hear it; not thereby to judge whether they would agree to his propoſals, but hereby ſuggeſting that they accepted his terms and conditions, either to give or receive the above premium, if they did or did not hit on the explanation of the riddle.

℣. 14. And he ſaid unto them, out of the eater came forth meat, &c.] Out of a devouring eater, ſuch as the lion is, came forth honey, or that was taken out of it, which Samſon, and his father and mother eat of, and which was the common food of ſome perſons, as of John the Baptiſt: and out of the ſtrong came forth ſweetneſs; not only out of that which was ſtrong in body whilſt alive, but of a ſtrong and ill ſcent, as the carcaſs of a dead lion is, and out of that came forth honey, than which nothing is ſweeter. Joſephus[m] expreſſes it, "that which devours all things furniſhes out pleaſant food, when that itſelf is altogether unpleaſant:" and they could not in three days expound the riddle; ſo long they laboured to find it out, but then began to deſpair of it.

℣. 15. And it came to paſs on the 7th day, &c.] Not on the 7th day of the feaſt, for ſome time before that they applied to his wife, and ſhe preſſed him hard to diſcloſe it; but on the ſabbath-day, as Kimchi, and ſo Jarchi ſays, on the 7th day of the week, not on the 7th day of the feaſt, for it was the 4th day of the feaſt; this is ſo clear, that the Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions, inſtead of the 7th, read the 4th day: that they ſaid unto Samſon's wife, entice thy huſband, that he may declare unto us the riddle; that is, perſuade him to tell the meaning of it to her, that ſhe might declare it to them: leſt we burn thee and thy father's houſe with fire; in which ſhe now was, not as yet being taken home to her huſband, and her in it; this they ſaid to terrify her, and make her importunate with Samſon to explain the riddle to her, if he had any value for her, and her life: have ye called us to take that we have? invited them to the wedding-feaſt, to ſtrip them of their clothes, and even take their very ſhirts off of their backs, which they muſt have been obliged to part with, if they could not explain the riddle, or ſend for other ſuits and ſhirts from their own houſes: is it not ſo? verily this is the caſe, nor can it be underſtood otherwiſe than a contrived buſineſs between thee and thy huſband, to get our raiment, woollen and linen, from us.

℣. 16. And Samſon's wife wept before him, &c.] When ſhe came to him to get out of him the explanation of the riddle, thinking that her tears would move him to it: and ſaid, thou doſt but hate me, and loveſt me not; another artifice ſhe uſed, well knowing he could not bear to have his affection called in queſtion, which was now very ſtrong, as is uſual with new-married perſons: thou haſt put forth a riddle unto the children of my people; her countrymen, fellow-citizens, and neighbours, and could not but be dear to her, and reſpected by her; ſo that what affected and afflicted them, mu.t

[l] Ut ſupra. [m] Ibid.

must have some influence upon her: and hast not told me; that is, the explanation of it, otherwise it is likely she had heard the riddle itself told: and he said unto her, behold, I have not told it my father nor my mother, and shall I tell it thee? his parents he was greatly indebted to, for whom he had the highest reverence and esteem, whose fidelity and taciturnity he had sufficient knowledge of, and yet he had not thought fit to impart it to them; how therefore could she expect to be trusted with such a secret, with whom he had not been long acquainted, not long enough to know whether she could keep it or no?

℣. 17. And she wept before him the seven days, while the feast lasted, &c.] Those that remained of the seven days, from the 4th to this time, as Kimchi seems rightly to interpret it; though some think she began to beseech him with tears on the first day of the feast, to impart the secret to her for her own satisfaction; and then, after the men had urged her on the 4th day to persuade her husband to it, she continued pressing him more earnestly with tears unto the 7th day. Some, as Abarbinel observes, and to whom he seems to incline, think there were 14 days, seven days before the festival began, on the last of which they importuned her to try to get the secret from him, ℣. 15. and that she continued pressing all the second seven days; but it seems quite clear, that it was at the beginning of the seven days of the feast that the riddle was put, which was to be explained within that time, ℣. 12. and it came to pass on the 7th day, that he told her, because she lay sore upon him; pressed him most earnestly with her intreaties, cries and tears: and she told the riddle to the children of her people; though she knew it would be to her husband's detriment, and that he must be obliged to give them 30 sheets of linen, and as many suits of apparel, and tho' it is probable she had promised not to tell them.

℣. 18. And the men of the city said unto him, on the 7th day, before the sun went down, &c.] And so soon enough to free them from the obligation they otherwise would have been under, to have given him the sheets and changes of raiment agreed unto: what is sweeter than honey? nothing, at least that was known, sugar not being invented. Julian the emperor [n], in commendation of figs, shews, from various authors, that nothing is sweeter than they, excepting honey: and what is stronger than a lion? no creature is, it is the strongest among beasts, Prov. xxx. 30 Homer [o] gives the epithet of strong to a lion: and he said unto them, if ye had not plowed with my heifer; meaning his wife, whom he compares to an heifer, young, wanton and unaccustomed to the yoke [p]; and by plowing with her, he alludes to such creatures being employed therein, making use of her to get the secret out of him, and then plying her closely to obtain it from her; and this diligent application and search of theirs, by this means to inform themselves, was like plowing up ground; they got a discovery of that which before lay hid, and without which they could never have had the knowledge of, as he adds: ye had not found out my riddle; the explanation of it. Ben Gersom and Abarbinel interpret plowing, of committing adultery with her; in which sense the phrase is used by Greek and Latin writers [q]; but the first sense is best, for it is not said, plowed my heifer, but with her.

℣. 19. And the spirit of the Lord came upon him, &c.] The Spirit of might from the Lord, as the Targum; which filled him with zeal and courage, animating him to the following undertaking, and increased his bodily strength to perform it: and he went down to Askelon; one of the five principal cities of the Philistines; it lay near the Mediterranean sea, and according to Bunting [r], was 24 miles from Timnath; why he went so far, is not easy to say; some think there was some grand solemnity or festival observed there at this time, which he knew of, when persons put on their best suits of apparel, and such he wanted: and slew 30 men of them; in vindication of which, it may be observed, that Samson was now raised up of God to be judge of Israel; and that he acted now as such, and under the direction and impulse of the Spirit of God, and the persons he slew were the common enemies of Israel; and if now observing a festival in honour of their gods, they were justly cut off for their idolatry: and took their spoil; their clothes off their backs, stripped them of their apparel, and even of their shirts, all which he brought away with him: and here it may observed, that though Samson was a Nazarite, yet not a common one, and was an extraordinary person, and not in all things bound to the law of the Nazarites; at least that law was dispensed with in various instances relative to him, as taking honey out of the carcass of the lion, and here stripping dead bodies which were defiling, and other things: and gave change of garments unto them which expounded the riddle; to the 30 companions, to whom it was proposed, each man a suit of apparel taken from the 30 men he slew at Askelon, and sheets or shirts also no doubt, though not expressed. Indeed some have thought, because they did not find out the riddle of themselves, he did not give them the whole premium, and that by their own consent: and his anger was kindled; against his wife, for her treachery and unfaithfulness to him, and against his companions for their deceitful usage of him, and against the citizens of the place, who perhaps laughed at him being thus tricked and deceived: and he went up to his father's house; left his wife, and her relations, and his companions, and the men of Timnath, and betook himself to his father's house again, as if he had been never married; his parents very probably had returned before him.

℣. 20. But Samson's wife was given to his companion, &c.] By her father, and with her consent, both being affronted and provoked by Samson leaving her, who judged her not only to be injured, but hereby discharged from him, and free to marry another: and whom he had used as his friend; though there were 30 of them that were his companions, yet there was one of them that was the principal of them, and was the most intimate with him, whom he used in the most friendly manner, and admitted to a more free conversation than the rest, the same that is called the friend of the bridegroom, John iii. 29. whilst the others were called the children of the bride-chamber, Matt. ix. 15. It is not unlikely that this person had too much intimacy with Samson's wife before, and so had the secret of the riddle from her, and so very readily married her, as soon as Samson departed; and all this furnished out an occasion and opportunity, which Samson sought for, to be revenged on the Philistines, as in the following chapter.

CHAP.

[n] Opera, par. 2. epist. 24. Juvenca venit. Ovid. ep. 5. ℣. 117.
[o] Odyss. 4. ℣. 336.
[p] Vid. Horat. Carmin. l. 2. ode 5. Graja
[q] Vid. Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 41. col. 406.
[r] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 116.

CHAP. XV.

THIS chapter relates, that Samſon being denied his wife, did by a ſtrange ſtratagem burn the corn-fields, vineyards, and olives of the Philiſtines, ℣. 1—5. and that becauſe of their burning her and her father, he made a great ſlaughter of them, ℣. 6—8. which brought the Philiſtines againſt the men of Judah, who took Samſon and bound him, to deliver him to the Philiſtines, when he, looſing himſelf, ſlew a thouſand of them with the jaw-bone of an aſs, ℣. 9—17. and being athirſt, God in a wonderful manner ſupplied him with water, ℣. 18—20.

℣. 1. But it came to paſs within a while after, &c.] Or after days, a year after, the ſame phraſe as in ch. xiv. 8. in the time of wheat-harveſt; which began at Pentecoſt, as barley-harveſt did at the paſſover; this circumſtance is mentioned for the ſake of the following piece of hiſtory: that Samſon viſited his wife with a kid; by this time his paſſion of anger ſubſided, and he remembered his wife, as the Targum expreſſes it, and thought proper to return to her, and attempt a reconciliation with her; and for that purpoſe took a kid with him to eat a meal with her in her own apartment, which in thoſe days was reckoned an elegant entertainment, and was a preſent to a king, 1 Sam. xvi. 20. Iſidore [s] derives the Latin word for a kid, ab edendo, from eating, as if it was food by way of eminency, as it is both ſavoury and wholeſome: and he ſaid, I will go with my wife into the chamber; where ſhe was, as women had their chambers and apartments by themſelves; this he ſaid within himſelf, or reſolved in his own mind, and perhaps expreſſed it in her father's hearing, or however moved that way, which plainly indicated his deſign: but her father would not ſuffer him to go in; placed himſelf perhaps between him and the door, and parlayed with him, and declared he ſhould not go into his daughter's chamber; Samſon through his ſuperior ſtrength could eaſily have puſhed him away, and broke open the door, but he did not chuſe to uſe ſuch violent methods, and patiently heard what he had to ſay, and ſubmitted.

℣. 2. And her father ſaid, I verily thought that thou hadſt utterly hated her, &c.] Not only thought ſo, but ſaid ſo, and had ſaid it over and over again; for the words are, ſaying I ſaid [t], affirmed it confidently and conſtantly, that in hating thou haſt hated her [u], with an implacable hatred, that there was no hope of any reconciliation: therefore I gave her to thy companion; this he ſaid to excuſe his daughter, and ſoften his reſentment, that it was not his daughter's doing, but his, and that he had diſpoſed of her not to any body, but to a companion of Samſon's; and what follows ſeems to be ſaid with the ſame view, for he might be in ſome fear of Samſon, knowing him to be a man of ſpirit and ſtrength: is not her younger ſiſter fairer than ſhe? take her, I pray thee, inſtead of her; that is, to wife; and two things he obſerves to recommend her, her youth and beauty, in which ſhe was preferable to her ſiſter. Such inceſtuous marriages were common with the old Canaanites, and it ſeems ſtill continued; but were condemned by the law of God, and not allowed an Iſraelite, which Samſon knew full well, and therefore liſtened not to the propoſal; ſee Lev. xviii. 3, 18.

℣. 3. And Samſon ſaid concerning them, &c.] His wife's father, and other relations, and the citizens of Timnath; this, which is what follows, he ſaid either within himſelf reſpecting them, or he ſaid it to them openly and publickly before them all: now ſhall I be more blameleſs than the Philiſtines, though I do them a diſpleaſure; ſignifying, that if he did them an ill thing, or what might be reckoned an injury to their perſons or properties, and which would be diſagreeable and diſpleaſing to them, they could not juſtly blame him for it, ſince they had given him ſuch a provocation as to diſpoſe of his wife to another man; tho' Samſon did not mean to act, nor did he act in the following inſtances as a private perſon, taking private revenge, but as a public perſon, and judge of Iſrael; and took occaſion from the private injuries done him, to avenge the public ones of the children of Iſrael upon the Philiſtines; and they might thank themſelves for giving the opportunity which they could not juſtly condemn him for taking.

℣. 4. And Samſon went and caught 300 foxes, &c.] Nor ſhould this be thought at all incredible, ſince Canaan and Paleſtine abounded with foxes; hence ſeveral places therein had their names of Shual, which ſignifies a fox, Joſh. xv. 28. and xix. 3, 42. 1 Sam. xiii. 17. A traveller [w] in thoſe parts ſays, that foxes ſwarm there, and that there are very great numbers of them in the hedges, and ruins of buildings: and theſe creatures were very pernicious to vines, and ſo may reaſonably be thought to be about Timnath in great numbers, becauſe of the vineyards there, ch. xiv. 5. ſee Cant. ii. 15. beſides, there is no neceſſity of ſuppoſing that Samſon took all theſe himſelf, he might employ others in catching them for him, nor that he took them at the ſame time, on one and the ſame day; he might be many days and weeks about it, and keep them up until he had got his number: to which may be added, there was a creature in thoſe parts very much like a fox, called Thoes, which, as Bellonius [x] ſays, were about Ceſarea and Paleſtina, and go 200 in company; and ſo making uſe of proper means, which Samſon was not unacquainted with, great numbers might be taken together; but above all, it may be obſerved, that as this was under the direction of the divine providence, God could eaſily cauſe ſuch a number of creatures to be gathered together, and taken, as he ordered all the living creatures, as by an inſtinct, to come into the ark to Noah: and he took fire-brands; or rather torches, made of oily and reſinous matter, which were not eaſily extinguiſhed: and turned tail to tail; took two foxes, and tied their tails together with a cord, giving them room enough to run about, as ſuch creatures do, not forward, but in a crooked, flexuous manner, here and there: and put a fire-brand in the midſt between two tails; which torch, ſeems to have been faſtened to the cord with which the tails were tied; he did not put a fire-brand or torch to the tail of every ſingle fox, which

[s] Origin. l. 12. c. 1. p. 101.
[t] אמר אמרתי dicendo dixi, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator.
[u] שנא odiendo odires eam, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Piſcator in the word Fox.
[w] Morriſon's Voyage, l. 2. c. 31. apud Calmet.
[x] L. 2. c. 11. apud Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 3. p. 476.

which then would have made its way to its own den, but between two, which could not enter into one hole, and would draw different ways, and ſtop each other, and ſo do greater execution in fields and vineyards into which they came.

℣. 5. And when he had ſet the brands on fire, &c.] Diſpoſed as before related; and foxes being naturally fearful of, and frighted with fire, and eſpecially ſo near them as at their tails, would run into the firſt place they could for ſhelter: he let them go into the ſtanding corn of the Philiſtines; which being ripe, as it was now wheat-harveſt, would ſoon take fire; and taking fire, this would in courſe cauſe the foxes to run ſtill farther to other parts of ſtanding corn, and ſet fire to them alſo; beſides, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that Samſon did not let them go all at once on one ſpot, but diſpoſed of them, ſome here, and ſome there, to do the greater and more ſpeedy execution: and burnt up both the ſhocks, and alſo the ſtanding corn, with the vineyards and olives; for as it was in the time of harveſt, in ſome places the corn was ſtanding, and in other places it was cut down, and put into ſhocks or heaps; and to theſe the foxes would naturally run to ſhelter themſelves, and ſo ſet fire to them, as well as they would make their way to the vineyards or olive-yards, either for ſhelter alſo, or for the ſake of the grapes and olives, to ſatisfy their hunger, after having been detained long for this purpoſe; and thus by one means or another they deſtroyed the corn, the vines, and olives of the Philiſtines in thoſe parts. Some would have it, in order to ſhun the difficulties objected by the enemies of revelation, that the word for foxes ſhould be rendered ſheaves or ſhocks of corn, ſet end to end [y], which the word for tail is ſaid to ſignify; and fire-brands or torches being ſet on fire, communicated it to ſtanding-corn, ſhocks of corn, vineyards, and olive-yards; but there is no need to put ſuch a ſenſe upon the words, as already obſerved: nor is the word tranſlated foxes, ever uſed in ſcripture in any form for ſheaves or ſhocks of corn, but always others; nor in any Jewiſh writings, nor in the ſiſter dialects, Arabic, Chaldee, or Ethiopic; and in any place of ſcripture where it is tranſlated fox or foxes, ſhould the word ſheaves or ſhocks be put, the ſenſe would appear moſt ridiculous; nor is the word for tail ever uſed in ſcripture in a literal ſenſe, but for the tail of a living creature; nor is the word for took or caught ever uſed of taking any thing in common, but either of taking men or cities by force, or of creatures in nets, traps and ſnares: and the ſenſe which ſuch a verſion of the words would give, is not only contrary to the Hebrew text, and to the Chaldee paraphraſe, but to all the ancient verſions, Arabic, Syriac, Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin, and to Joſephus. The memory of this great event was kept up, or a cuſtom borrowed from it, as ſome learned men have obſerved in the Vulpinaria of the Romans, mentioned by Ovid [z], and others, which bore a great reſemblance to this, and which was obſerved at the ſame time of the year, about the middle of April, or calends of May; which exactly agrees with the time of wheat-harveſt in Paleſtine; when in the circus they uſed to ſend out foxes with burning torches fixed to their backs. Nor need this affair of Samſon's ſeem more ſtrange or incredible, than the great number of creatures brought into the Circus at Rome, to be ſeen there together. Sylla firſt introduced 100 lions, after him Pompey the great 300, and Julius Cæſar when he was dictator 400, as Pliny [a] relates. Probus [b] ſent into the amphitheatre at one time, which he made like a wood full of trees, 1000 oſtriches, a like number of harts, does, boars, and other creatures each; and at another time 100 lions, as many lioneſſes and leopards each, and 300 bears; Heliogabalus [c] got together 1000 weaſels, 10,000 mice, 10,000 weight of ſpiders and flies.

℣. 6. Then the Philiſtines ſaid, who hath done this? &c.] They aſked and enquired one of another, who they thought could be the author of ſuch miſchief: and they anſwered Samſon, the ſon-in-law of the Timnite; this they ſaid either by conjecture, which might be the caſe of ſome; and others more confidently aſſerted it, having heard what he ſaid, ℣. 3. and they aſſign a very good reaſon for it, becauſe he had already taken away his wife, and given her to his companion; which had provoked him to do ſuch an action as this; and perhaps the very ſame perſons that were very well pleaſed before, that Samſon was ſo ſerved, yet now were full of wrath and indignation at the Timnite having ſuffered ſo much in their property on his account: and the Philiſtines came up, and burnt her and her father with fire; Joſephus [d] ſays, her and her relations; they ſet fire to her father's houſe, where ſhe was, and burnt them both in it, whereby that evil came upon her ſhe thought to avoid, by getting the ſecret of the riddle out of Samſon, and telling it to his companion, ch. xiv. 15. and ſuffered the proper puniſhment for her adultery; the people that did this were thoſe that lived in the towns adjacent, from whence they came up to Timnath, whoſe fields, vineyards and olive-yards had been deſtroyed by the foxes with their fire-brands.

℣. 7. And Samſon ſaid unto them, &c.] After they had burnt his wife and her father in their dwelling-houſe, by which they thought to appeaſe him, being afraid of him: though ye have done this, yet will I be avenged of you; not for burning his wife and father-in-law; his ſenſe is, that tho' they had done this, in order to ingratiate themſelves with him, yet he ſhould not ſtop on this account, but be avenged on them, not for private injuries done to him, or any that had been in connexion with him, but for public injuries done to Iſrael, and their oppreſſion of them: and after that I will ceaſe; when he had taken full vengeance on them, and not before.

℣. 8. And he ſmote them hip and thigh with a great ſlaughter, &c.] Either ſmote them on their hips and thighs with his hands; (for it does not appear he had any weapon of war) ſo that they were ſadly bruiſed, and maimed, and lamed, that they could not ſtir, and of which blows and bruiſes multitudes died; or he ſmote them with his legs on their thighs, kicked them about at pleaſure, which kicks numbers of them never got over; or the meaning of the proverbial expreſſion is, he laid on them at a great rate, and ſmote them here and there, and any where, which iſſued in the death of many of them: the Targum is, "he ſmote them horſe and foot," their cavalry and infantry, deſtroyed them both; but it does not appear that they came out in an hoſtile manner unto him, and much leſs in the form of a regular army: and he went down and dwelt in the top of the rock Etam. Joſephus ſays [e], that Samſon having ſlain many in the fields of the Philiſtines, went and dwelt at

[y] Obſerv. Halenſ. apud Stockium in voc. שועל p. 1126. & Hardtius apud Marck. Diſſertat. Philolog. Exercitat. 5. §. 7. p. 196
[z] Faſti, l. 4. Vid. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 5. c. 26.
[a] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 16.
[b] Vopiſcus in vita Probi.
[c] Ib. in vita ejus.
[d] Antiq. l. 5. c. 8. §. 7.
[e] Ibid. §. 8.

at Etam, a ſtrong rock in the tribe of Judah; and which agrees with 2 Chron. xi. 6. where mention is made of the city Etam, along with Bethlehem and Tekoah, cities in that tribe, which had its name either from this rock, or the rock from that. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions read, "in a cave of the rock of Etam;" and the Syriac and Arabic verſions, in Sahaph, which is on the rock of Etam, as if Sahaph was the name of a city there; hither Samſon went, not through fear, or for ſafety, but to wait for another opportunity of farther avenging the injuries of Iſrael on the Philiſtines.

℣. 9. Then the Philiſtines went up, &c. From Paleſtine, which lay low on the ſhore of the Mediterranean ſea: and pitched in Judah; in the land of Judea, which lay higher, particularly in the tribe of Judah, whither they came with an army, and encamped there: and ſpread themſelves in Lehi; their forces were ſo many, that they extended a conſiderable way, and particularly reached to Lehi, that is, which was afterwards ſo called; for it has its name by anticipation from the jaw-bone, which it ſignifies, with which Samſon ſlew many in this place, as after related.

℣. 10. And the men of Judah ſaid, &c.] To the Philiſtines, very probably by a deputation, which they ſent unto them, to know the reaſon of this formidable appearance: why are ye come up againſt us? in this hoſtile manner, with ſuch a number of forces, ſince they were not conſcious to themſelves that they had done any thing to diſoblige them; they had not attempted to caſt off their yoke, they quietly ſubmitted to their government, and had paid their whole tribute, as Joſephus[f] repreſents them ſaying; they could not imagine what ſhould be the meaning of all this: and they anſwered, to bind Samſon are we come up; that is, to oblige them to bind him, and deliver him into their hands: to do to him as he hath done to us; to put him to death, as he had ſlain many of their people in the laſt rencounter with them.

℣. 11. Then 3000 men of Judah went up to the top of the rock of Etam, &c.] Or went down[g]; that is, into the cave of the rock of Etam, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions; and ſo it is taken by David de Pomis[h] for a cave dug in the rock: this was a large number that went to take one man, the reaſon is, they knew his great ſtrength; and ſaid to Samſon, knoweſt thou not that the Philiſtines are rulers over us? and therefore it muſt be a very unwiſe thing to diſoblige and provoke them, when it lay in their power to oppreſs them yet more and more, to increaſe their tribute, and make their burdens heavier, and even take away their lives: what is this that thou haſt done unto us? they aſk not what he had done to them, but unto us; though they mean that, but expreſs themſelves thus, becauſe what he had done to the Philiſtines, was the occaſion of their coming up againſt them, and ſo eventually it was doing them ill: and he ſaid unto them, as they did unto me, ſo have I done to them; they had done him ill, and therefore he did ill to them; they had burnt his wife and her father, with fire, and he had ſlain many of them; at leaſt this was what he thought fit to ſay in his own vindication; otherwiſe what he did was not in a way of private revenge, but on account of the injury done to the people of Iſrael, he taking what was done to them as done to himſelf, the chief magiſtrate and judge of Iſrael.

℣. 12. And they ſaid unto him, we are come down to bind thee, &c.] That is, they were come down into the cave where he was; otherwiſe more properly they were come up to the top of the rock: that we may deliver thee into the hands of the Philiſtines; they own what was their intention in binding him, and what put them upon it was not ill-will to him, but fear of the Philiſtines: and Samſon ſaid unto them, ſwear unto me, that ye will not fall upon me yourſelves; which ſhows he did not fear them, though they were 3000; and that if they attempted to take away his life, he ſhould defend himſelf, but he choſe not to ſhed the blood of any of them; and rather than they ſhould come into any diſtreſs through the Philiſtines, conſented to be bound by them, and delivered into their hands; in which he was a type of Chriſt, who was betrayed by the Jews, and delivered by them into the hands of the Romans; and though he could have delivered himſelf by his great ſtrength, would not, but ſuffered himſelf to be taken and bound, and given into the hands of his enemies, that his own people might go free; ſee John xviii. 4—12.

℣. 13. And they ſpake unto him, ſaying, no, &c.] They declared they would not fall upon him themſelves and ſlay him; nor would the Jews put Chriſt to death themſelves, though they were virtually his betrayers and murderers, John xviii. 31. but we will bind thee faſt, and deliver thee into their hands; as the Jews did Chriſt, and not only delivered him bound to the high-prieſt, but alſo to the Roman governor, Matt. xxvii. 2. but ſurely we will not kill thee; not with their own hands, but then they propoſed to deliver him into the hands of the Philiſtines, from whence nothing but death could be expected; ſo that had they put him to death, they would have been acceſſary to it, as the Jews were to the death of Chriſt, by delivering him to the Gentiles, and are charged with it, Acts ii. 23, 36. and they bound him with two new cords; not with one only, leſt it ſhould not be ſufficient to hold him, knowing his ſtrength, but with two, and theſe not old worn-out ones, but new ones juſt made, and very ſtrong; and, as Joſeph Kimchi noted by Ben Melech, were trebled, or made of three cords or thongs for greater ſecurity; and of flax, as the following verſe intimates, and ſuch are moſt firm and ſtrongeſt to hold any thing; hence nets were made of flax to hold creatures in, fiſh, fowl or beaſts[i]: and brought him up from the rock; the place, as Kimchi ſays, where the men of Judah dwelt, being higher than the rock; tho' rather the true ſenſe is, they brought him up out of the cave in the rock.

℣. 14. And when he came unto Lehi, &c.] The place which was afterwards ſo called, from what happened there at this time, and where the Philiſtines were ſpread, ℣. 9. this, according to Bunting[k], was ſix miles from Etam: the Philiſtines ſhouted againſt him; for joy that they had got him into their hands, and in the circumſtances he was, being bound, ſo that they had nothing to fear from him: and the ſpirit of the Lord came mightily upon him; as it at times did, and had done before; the Targum is, "the Spirit of might from the Lord,"

[f] Ut ſupra. [g] וירדו & deſcenderunt, Pagninus, Montanus; deſcenderunt ergo, V. L. Tigurine verſion.
[h] Tzemach David, fol. 112. 3. [i] Vid. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 19. 1. [k] Travels, p. 116.

Lord," which gave him courage and reſolution of mind, and great ſtrength of body, even more than he had at other times: and the cords that were upon his arms became as flax that was burnt with fire; as eaſily parted as the flax when fire takes it, which is conſumed at once: and his bonds looſed off from his hands; by which it appears that both arms and hands were bound with the cords; his arms were pinioned cloſe to his body, as well as his hands were tied together; and theſe, as in the original, melted away [l], like wax before the fire, or ſnow before the ſun, ſo eaſily were theſe bands ſeparated from him; this may be an emblem of Chriſt's looſing himſelf from the cords of death, Acts ii. 24.

℣. 15. And he found a new jaw-bone of an aſs, &c.] That is, the jaw-bone of an aſs lately killed, which perhaps had ſome of the fleſh upon it, the blood or purulent matter on it; for Jarchi ſays, he had read in the books of phyſicians, that the word here uſed ſignifies the ſanies or purulent matter of a wound; however, it was moiſt, and freſh, and ſo tough and ſtrong, and would bear to ſtrike with, and give hard blows with, when an old jaw-bone would have been dry and brittle; and perhaps the aſſes of thoſe countries were larger than ours, and ſo their jaw-bones bigger and ſtronger: and put forth his hand and took it; it lay near him, being ſo diſpoſed by the providence of God at the time and place where his cords were looſed from him, and he reached and took it up: and ſlew 1000 men therewith; ſuch was his great ſtrength, that every blow he gave in all probability killed a man; there have been wonderful things done by mighty warriors, but none like this; they have by the uſe of warlike weapons deſtroyed many, as with the ſword or ſpear, but not with ſuch an inſtrument. One of David's worthies ſlew 300 men at one time with his ſpear, 1 Chron. xi. 11. and Scanderbeg with his ſword ſlew great numbers of the Turks with his own hand at different times; what comes neareſt to this is Shamgar's killing 600 Philiſtines with an ox-goad, ch. iii. 31. this may be an emblem of the weak and contemptible means of the goſpel, the fooliſhneſs of preaching, by which Chriſt has conquered and ſubdued multitudes to himſelf.

℣. 16. And Samſon ſaid, &c.] In a kind of triumphant ſong: with the jaw-bone of an aſs, heaps upon heaps; that is, with ſuch an inſtrument he had ſlain heaps of men, who lay dead in heaps upon one another; in the words for an aſs, and for an heap, is an elegant paronomaſia, not eaſy to be expreſſed in our language: with the jaw of an aſs have I ſlain 1000 men; this he ſaid not in a proud and haughty manner, aſcribing it to himſelf, as Joſephus ſuggeſts [m], ſince he takes notice of the mean inſtrument he uſed; which ſhewed that he was ſenſible it was not done by his own power, but by the power of God, which enabled him by ſuch weak means to do ſuch wonderful things.

℣. 17. And it came to paſs, when he had made an end of ſpeaking, &c.] Of delivering out the above ſong, which very probably conſiſted of much more than what is here expreſſed: that he caſt away the jaw-bone out of his hand; which he held in his hand while he was ſpeaking, as a token of the wonders God had wrought by him through the means of it, and ſo ſerved to animate him to praiſe and thankfulneſs; but having no further uſe for it, he threw it away: and called the place Ramath-lehi; that is, the caſting away the jaw-bone, ſo Kimchi; but Ben Gerſom thinks it was an high place where it was thrown, and ſo ſignifies the elevation or lifting up of the jaw-bone, as the Septuagint verſion renders it.

℣. 18. And he was ſore a-thirſt, &c.] Which Joſephus [n] thinks came upon him as a rebuke unto him, for aſcribing the victory he had obtained to his own ſtrength, and not to the Lord, whereby he was ſhewn his own weakneſs, and how eaſily his ſtrength could be reduced; but for this there ſeems no foundation; it is not to wondered at in a natural way, that he ſhould be a-thirſt after he had been bound with cords, after he had ſo exerted himſelf, and ſlain 1000 men with his own hand, and after he had celebrated this victory with a triumphant ſong; and it may alſo be obſerved, that it was ſo ordered in providence, that he might in this be a type of the Meſſiah, who on the croſs, as he was ſpoiling principalities and powers, and triumphing over them in it, ſaid, I thirſt, John xix. 28. and called on the Lord, and ſaid; in prayer to him: thou haſt given this great deliverance into the hand of thy ſervant; he owns the deliverance to be great, as indeed it was, and that it was of the Lord, and he only his ſervant and inſtrument in it: and now ſhall I die for thirſt; when my life has been ſaved in ſo wonderful a manner, and ſo great a ſalvation has been wrought by my hands, as an inſtrument: and fall into the hands of the uncircumciſed? which would be matter of joy and triumph to them, and mar the glory of the deliverance wrought.

℣. 19. And God clave an hollow place that was in the jaw, and there came water thereout, &c.] A ſocket, in which was faſtened one of the teeth, and was in the form of a mortar; ſo Jarchi and Ben Melech, as the word for an hollow place ſignifies; one of the grinders was knocked out, and ſo the place where it had been was left hollow, and out of that ſprung a ſtream or flow of water; which was very wonderful, ſince out of ſuch a place rather blood, or purulent matter, would naturally have iſſued; the Targum is, "the Lord clave the rock which was in the jaw;" which Kimchi interprets thus, the rock was under the jaw, and the rock was made as a hollow place, and therefore they call it maktes, a mortar: the ſenſe ſeems to be this, that the place on which Samſon caſt the jaw-bone, was a rock, and there God clave an hollow place, out of which water ſprung, and which perhaps was under the jaw-bone, and ſprung under it, and through it; and ſo Joſephus ſays [o], that God at his prayer brought a ſweet and large fountain out of a certain rock; and the words of the text will bear to be rendered, and God clave an hollow place, which is in Lehi; that is, in the place called Lehi, ℣. 9, 14. and not in the jaw-bone itſelf: and when he had drank, his ſpirit came again, and he revived; his ſpirit was ſunk and gone, as it were, but upon drinking a draught of this water he was refreſhed and cheered, recovered his ſpirits, and became briſk and lively: wherefore he called the name thereof En-hakkore; that is, "the fountain of him that was calling;" of Samſon that called upon God in prayer, and was heard, in memory of which he gave it this name; ſo the Targum, "therefore its name was called the fountain that was given through the prayer of Samſon:" which is in Lehi unto this day; or in the jaw-bone; not that the jaw-bone continued unto the time of the the writer of this book, but the name of the place where this miracle was wrought, which was in Lehi, continued to be called En-hakkore unto that time, and it may be the fountain itſelf continued alſo; nay, Glycas [p] ſays, who lived but about 600 years ago, that the fountain continued unto his time, and was to be ſeen in the ſuburbs of Eleutheropolis, and was called the fountain of the jawbone.

[l] יִמַּסּוּ diffluxerunt, Tigurine verſion; liquefacta ſunt, Piſcator. [m] Antiq. l. 5. c. 8. §. 9. [n] Ibid. [o] Ibid.

℣. 20. And he judged Iſrael in the days of the Philiſtines 20 years.] Whilſt they had the power over the Iſraelites, who were not entirely delivered out of their hands by Samſon, he only began to deliver them, but did not completely do it; though he got many advantages over them, and wrought many ſalvations and deliverances, yet was not the author of perfect ſalvation, ſee ch. xiii. 5. however he was a check upon the Philiſtines, and protected the Iſraelites from heavier oppreſſions, which otherwiſe they would have come under; and no doubt adminiſtred juſtice and judgment among them, and was an inſtrument of their reformation, and of preſerving them from idolatry; for in ſuch things the work of a judge chiefly lay: ſome from hence obſerve, that this ſhews the years of ſervitude and bondage are included in the years of the judges.

CHAP. XVI.

IN this chapter we have an account of Samſon's too great familiarity with two harlots; by the one he was brought into great danger, and narrowly eſcaped, ℣. 1—3. and by the other he was betrayed into the hands of the Philiſtines, having got the ſecret out of him wherein his great ſtrength lay, ℣. 4—20. who having him in their hands, put out his eyes, impriſoned him, and in their idol-temple made ſport of him, ℣. 21—25. where praying for renewed ſtrength from the Lord, he pulled down the temple, and deſtroyed multitudes with the loſs of his own life, ℣. 26—31.

℣. 1. Then went Samſon to Gaza, &c.] One of the five principalities of the Philiſtines, which was 10 miles from Aſkelon, as Sandys [q] ſays; who alſo deſcribes [r] it, as ſtanding upon an hill environed with vallies, and theſe again well nigh incloſed with hills, moſt of them planted with all ſorts of delicate fruits; and, according to Bunting [s], 42 miles from Ramath-lehi, the place where we laſt hear of him, ſee the notes on Amos i. 6. and on Zeph. ii. 4. what he went hither for is not eaſy to ſay; it ſhowed great boldneſs and courage, after he had made ſuch a ſlaughter of the Philiſtines, to venture himſelf in one of their ſtrongeſt cities, where he muſt expect to be expoſed to danger; though it is highly probably this was a long time after his laſt rencounter with them: and ſaw there an harlot, and went in unto her; the Targum renders it an innkeeper, one that kept a victualling-houſe; ſo Kimchi, Ben Gerſom and Ben Melech interpret it; into whoſe houſe he went for entertainment and lodging, and very probably in the duſk of the evening; and the woman that kept this houſe might herſelf be an harlot, or however Samſon ſaw one in her houſe, with whom he was captivated, and went in unto her, or had criminal converſation with her; it ſeems as if he did not turn in thither with any ſuch wicked deſign, but on ſight of the perſon was inſnared to commit leudneſs with her; and, as Lyra ſays, there were many hoſteſſes in ſome places, and ſo here, who too eaſily proſtituted themſelves to their gueſts.

℣. 2. And it was told the Gazites, &c.] The inhabitants of Gaza, the principal ones of it, the magiſtrates of the city, either by ſome perſons that ſaw him come in, who knew him, or by the harlot into whoſe company he fell, to whom he made himſelf known: ſaying, Samſon is come hither; the man ſo famous for his ſtrength, and ſuch an enemy to the Philiſtines; his name was well known for his great exploits, and rung throughout Paleſtine, and was a terror to the whole country: and they compaſſed him in; not that they ſurrounded the houſe where he was, which perhaps they might not certainly know, but they ſecured all the avenues and gates of the city, made them faſt, and placed guards there, that he might not eſcape their hands: and laid wait for him all night in the gate; particularly at that gate, where if he went out for his country, he muſt paſs: and were quiet all the night; did not attempt to diſturb Samſon, or ſeize on him, if they knew where he was; knowing his great ſtrength, and what a tumult might be raiſed in the city, they ſaid nothing of it to any body that paſſed, what they were placed there for, leſt it ſhould come to his ears; they made as if they were deaf and dumb, as ſome interpret it, and heard and knew nothing: ſaying, in the morning when it is day we ſhall kill him; when they ſhould better know him, and make ſure their blow at him, and do it ſuddenly, unawares to him, as he came to the gate, to paſs through it.

℣. 3. And Samſon lay till midnight, and aroſe at midnight, &c.] Either not being able to lie any longer through the conviction of his conſcience for his leudneſs, or being warned by a dream, or having an impulſe upon his ſpirit, which ſuggeſted to him that wait was laid for him, and the danger he was in; and coming to the gate of the city, which he found ſhut and faſt barred and bolted, and the watch perhaps aſleep, not expecting his coming until day-light: and took the doors of the gate of the city, and the two poſts, and went away with them, bar and all; did not ſtand to break open the doors of the gate, but took the two ſide-poſts up, on which the folding doors of the gate were hung, out of the ground in which they were faſtened, with the bar which went acroſs the doors for the ſecurity of them: and carried them up to the top of an hill that is before Hebron; if this hill was near Hebron, as the words thus read ſeem to intimate, he muſt carry the gates 20 miles upon his ſhoulders, for ſo far was Hebron from Gaza; ſo Joſephus ſays it was over Hebron; but according to Adrichomius [t], it was near Gaza, looking towards Hebron; and ſo Sandys ſays [u], in the valley, on the eaſt-ſide of the city, are many ſtraggling buildings, beyond which there is a hill more eminent than the reſt, on the north-ſide of the way that leads to Babylon, ſaid to be that to which Samſon

[p] Annal. par. 2. p. 164. apud Reland. Paleſtin. illuſtrat. p. 872. [q] Travels, l. 3. p. 118. [r] Ib. p. 116. [s] Ut ſupra. [t] Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 133. [u] Ut ſupra, p. 117.

Samſon carried the gates of the city. It is very probable, as ſome think, that it was between Gaza and Hebron, in ſight of both cities, which may be meant by the phraſe before, or on the face of; being ſo high might be ſeen as far as Hebron, as well as at Gaza. This was an emblem of Chriſt's reſurrection, of whom Samſon was a type, who being encompaſſed in a ſepulchre, and ſealed and watched by ſoldiers, broke through the bars of death and the grave, and carried off the doors in triumph; and in a ſhort time aſcended to heaven, whereby he declared himſelf to be the Son of God with power. It was uſual for doors and bars of gates to be carried in triumph, and laid up in temples [w]; and the Jews ſay, theſe doors were not leſs than 60 cubits, and ſuppoſe Samſon's ſhoulders to be as broad [x].

ver. 4. And it came to paſs afterwards, that he loved a woman in the valley of Sorek, &c.] Which, according to Adrichomius [y], was but half a mile from the brook Eſhcol, from whence the ſpies brought a bunch of grapes, as a ſpecimen of the fruit of the land of Canaan; and this valley of Sorek ſeems to have been famous for the beſt wine, and hither Samſon retired for refreſhment and pleaſure; but, according to Jerom [z], it was on the north of Eleutheropolis, where, he ſays, was ſhewn a village in his time called Caphar-ſorech, near the village Zorah, from whence Samſon was; and Bunting [a] makes it to be 12 miles from Hebron, and 12 from Jeruſalem; where he met with a woman he loved; whether ſhe was an Iſraelite, or one of the daughters of the Philiſtines, they now being the rulers of Iſrael, is not ſaid; moſt likely the latter, as ſay Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel, ſince the lords of the Philiſtines were ſo intimate with her, and were entertained in her houſe, and ſhe ſhewed more reſpect to them than to Samſon. The Jews ſays, ſhe became a proſelyte, but if ſhe did, there is very little evidence of her being a ſincere one: ſome have thought, that the courtſhip to her was a lawful conjugal love; that falling in love with her, he courted and married her; but this is not very likely, ſince no mention is made of his marriage to her, nor did he take her home, but dwelt in her houſe: it rather ſeems to be an impure and unlawful love he had to her, and that ſhe was an harlot, as Joſephus [b]; and all her conduct and behaviour confirm the ſame: whoſe name was Delilah; the Jews ſay [c], ſhe was ſo called, becauſe ſhe weakened the heart and ſpirit of Samſon, and weakened his ſtrength, and weakened his works; and therefore if this had not been her name, they ſay it was one very proper for her.

ver. 5. And the lords of the Philiſtines came up unto her, &c.] Having heard that Samſon kept company with her, ſhe being a noted ſtrumpet, like Lais among the Grecians. Theſe were in number five, as appears from ch. iii. 3. and had under them five principalities, into which Paleſtine was divided; and theſe, if not united in their government, which poſſibly might be the caſe at this time, yet were united againſt their common enemy Samſon; and being great perſonages, it is thought by ſome they came not themſelves to this harlot's houſe, but ſent a deputation of five perſons in their names, though the text is very expreſs here and after: they are ſaid to come up to her, becauſe their country lay on the ſhore of the ſea, and lower than Judea: and ſaid unto her, entice him; perſuade him with ſoothing and flattering words; take an opportunity when in an amorous mood to improve her intereſt in his affections: and ſee wherein his great ſtrength lieth; for it might not appear by the bigneſs of his body, or from his natural conſtitution, and in the common actions of life, but only at certain times, and as it ſhould ſeem when he pleaſed; and he might have been heard to ſay that it was a ſecret he kept to himſelf, and no man knew it; or they might ſuſpect ſomething of magic in the caſe, that he carried ſomething about him, which if it could be got from him, would deprive him of his ſtrength: and by what means we may prevail againſt him, that we may bind him to afflict him; to humble him, bring him low, and reduce him to the common condition of men; they did not propoſe to kill him, which they might think ſhe would not agree to, and ſo reject their propoſal at once, but at moſt to diſtreſs him, and to chaſtize him with mockings and ſcourgings, bonds and impriſonment, for the miſchief he had indeed done them, and prevent him from doing more: and we will give thee, every one of us, 1100 pieces of ſilver; or ſhekels; it may ſeem ſtrange that they ſhould promiſe each 1100: ſome think their principalities offered each 1000 ſhekels, and the princes themſelves 100; but Abarbinel ſuppoſes, that this was on ſome account or another, in thoſe times an uſual ſum or computation, ſince the ſame is mentioned in the following chapter; though it may be obſerved, that theſe five ſeveral ſums put together, make a round number 5500 pieces of ſilver; which, taking them to be ſhekels, according to Waſerus [d], they amounted to 1375 rix-dollars, and of Helvetian money 3666 pounds, and a little more, and of our money near 700 pounds ſterling; a conſiderable bribe, and very tempting to a perſon of ſuch a character, and which ſhe readily embraced, as appears by what follows.

ver. 6. And Delilah ſaid to Samſon, &c.] At a proper opportunity, when in his cups and careſſes, as Joſephus relates [e], and introduced it in an artful manner, admiring his ſtrange exploits, and wondering how he could perform them: tell me, I pray thee, wherein thy great ſtrength lieth; which ſhe propoſed ſeemingly out of mere curioſity, and as it would be a proof of his affection to her, to impart the ſecret to her: and wherewith thou mightieſt be bound to afflict thee; not that ſhe ſuggeſted to him that ſhe was deſirous to have him afflicted, or to try the experiment herſelf in order to afflict him, but to know by what means, if he was bound, it would be afflicting to him, ſo that he could not relieve himſelf; ſhe knew he might be bound, if he would admit of it, as he had been, but ſhe wanted to know how he might be bound, ſo as to be held, and could not looſe himſelf.

ver. 7. And Samſon ſaid unto her, &c.] In anſwer to her preſſing ſolicitations: if they bind me with ſeven green withs, that were never dried; the word is ſometimes uſed for nerves, and cords or ropes; but neither of theſe can be here meant, ſince theſe, if moiſtened or made wet, are the leſs fit to bind with, and the drier the better; but rods or branches of trees juſt cut off, ſuch as faggots are bound up with, or green oſiers, which are eaſily

[w] ——— ſacris in poſtibus arma:
——— & portarum ingentia clauſtra. Virgil. Æneid. 7. ver. 185.

[x] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 10. 1.
[y] Ut ſupra, p. 24.
[z] De loc. Heb. fol. 94. L.
[a] Travels, p. 116, 117.
[b] Ut ſupra, §. 11.
[c] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 9. 2.
[d] De antiquis Numis, l. 2. c. 5.
[e] Ut ſupra.

eaſily bent and twiſted, and may bind with; Joſephus [u] calls them vine-branches: then ſhall I be weak, and be as another man; which can't well be excuſed from a lye; for Samſon knew full well, that being bound would not weaken his ſtrength; but as he had fallen into one ſin, it is no wonder he was drawn into another: unleſs this can be underſtood, as it is by ſome, as jeſting with her; however, it ſhews that he was compos mentis, as Joſephus [w] obſerves, and was upon his guard with reſpect to the ſecret of his ſtrength.

℣. 8. Then the lords of the Philiſtines brought up to her, &c.] To the chamber where ſhe was with Samſon, ſhe having acquainted them with what he had told her: ſeven green withs, which had not been dried; juſt ſuch as he had deſcribed and directed to: and ſhe bound him with them; taking an opportunity, very likely, when he was aſleep, and drunk too, according to Joſephus [x]: the Philiſtines did not attempt to bind him, ſuppoſing that he would not admit them to do it, if aware of them; and they might fear, if aſleep, he might awake before they could do it, and fall upon them and deſtroy them; but as to Delilah, if ſhe had been found at it, ſhe could have excuſed it as a piece of curioſity, being willing to try whether he told her truth or no.

℣. 9. Now there were men lying in wait, &c.] Very likely ſome of the ſervants of the lords of the Philiſtines, who were placed privately on purpoſe, that when an opportunity offered, they might ruſh out, and fall upon Samſon; Joſephus [y] calls them ſoldiers: abiding with her in the chamber; in a private part of it, or otherwiſe they could not be ſaid to lie in wait; in it may mean near it; perhaps it was in the next apartment to hers, where they were ſet: and ſhe ſaid unto him, the Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon; are juſt ready to fall upon thee, and ſeize thee; this ſhe ſaid to arouſe him, and try whether he could break the withs or no, before ſhe called in the men that lay in wait, and whether he had told her the truth or no: and he brake the withs as a thread of tow is broken, when it toucheth the fire; or ſmells it [z]; as ſoon as it comes near it; a thread of tow or linen catches the fire preſently, it being ſo weak that it can't ſtand before the leaſt force of it; ſo eaſily did the withs give way, and were broken, when Samſon did but juſt ſtir himſelf, and move his arms: ſo his ſtrength was not known; by Delilah, nor by the Philiſtines; that is, where it lay, ſo as that it might be weakened; for otherwiſe it was known by the eaſy breaking of the withs.

℣. 10. And Delilah ſaid unto Samſon, &c.] Not on the ſame day, but ſome time after, as Kimchi obſerves, when an opportunity offered, and he was in like circumſtances as before; for had ſhe immediately attacked him, it might have created ſome ſuſpicion in him of a deſign againſt him: behold, thou haſt mocked me, and told me lies; deceived her with lies, by telling her the other day that if he was bound with green withs, he ſhould become as weak as other men; which ſhe, out of curioſity as ſhe might pretend, had tried, and had found to be falſe; and which, ſhe might add, was an argument of want of true love to her, to mock her in ſuch a manner: now tell me, I pray thee, wherewith thou mightſt be bound; ſo as to be held.

℣. 11. And he ſaid unto her, &c.] Abarbinel repreſents Samſon replying to her, that he had told her the truth at firſt, only forgot one circumſtance, that the cords, for ſo he takes the word for withs to ſignify, ſhould be new, ſuch as were never uſed, as follows: if they bind me faſt with new ropes, that never were occupied; the word ſignifies thick ropes, which according to Kimchi and Ben Melech were trebled, or made of three cords twiſted together, and thoſe ſuch as were juſt made, and had never been put to any uſe, and ſo ſtrong and firm: then ſhall I be weak, and be as another man; ſee ℣. 7.

℣. 12. Delilah therefore took new ropes, and bound him therewith, &c.] Tried this experiment with him, according to his directions, being very deſirous of getting the ſum of money offered her: and ſaid unto him, the Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon; uſing the ſame words, and with the ſame view as ſhe had done before, ℣. 9. (and there were liers in wait abiding in the chamber); as before, ready upon occaſion to ruſh in upon him, as ſoon as any notice was given them: and he brake them from off his arms like a thread; as eaſily as a thread of linen can be ſnapped aſunder.

℣. 13. And Delilah ſaid unto Samſon, &c.] At another time, when ſhe thought it moſt proper to upbraid him with his deception of her: hitherto thou haſt mocked me, and told me lies; both the times that ſhe had ſolicited him to impart the ſecret of his ſtrength to her: tell me wherewith thou mightſt be bound; tell me the real truth, and deceive me no more: and he ſaid unto her, if thou weaveſt the ſeven locks of my head with the web; it ſeems that Samſon's hair was parted into ſeven locks, which no doubt hung down very long; and now he tells her, that if theſe were interwoven with the warp which was upon the beam in a loom hard by; perhaps in the ſame room, where Delilah uſed to weave, as was the cuſtom of thoſe times, and in various nations [a]; his ſtrength would be weakened; for Braunius [b] is miſtaken in ſuppoſing this to be the beam about which the web was rolled, as he is alſo in the pin next mentioned, which he takes to be the ſpatha, or lathe, with which the threads are knocked together.

℣. 14. And ſhe faſtened it with the pin, &c.] That is, after ſhe had interwoven the locks of his hair into the warp, ſhe faſtened the beam on which it was with the pin, that it might not roll back; or elſe her machine or loom to the ground, that it might ſtand more firmly; or the web into which the hair was woven, with the hair itſelf; which of them is right, it is difficult to ſay: but if the addition of the Septuagint verſion can be admitted as genuine, which ſupplies ſome things which ſeem to be wanting, and which beſt agrees with what follows, the whole will be plain and eaſy, and which after the preceding verſe runs thus; "and faſteneſt them with a pin to the wall, then ſhall I be weak as another man; and it came to paſs when he ſlept, and Delilah took ſeven locks of his head, and wove them in the web, and faſtened them with a pin pin to the wall;" and then it follows as here: and ſaid unto him, the Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon; as ſhe had twice before: and he awaked out of his ſleep; in which he was during her weaving his locks into the web; and this makes it probable, that he was in the ſame circumſtances when ſhe bound him both with withs and ropes, though it is not expreſſed: and went away with the pin of the beam, and with the web; carried off not the pin of the beam only, but the beam itſelf, and the warp on it, and the whole web into which his hair was woven. The Septuagint verſion is, he took the pin of the web out of the wall; and the Vulgate Latin, the pin with the hairs and web.

[u] Ut ſupra. [w] Ibid. [x] Ib. [y] Ib. [z] בהריחו cum olfecerit, Druſius, ſo Piſcator. [a] Arguto conjux, &c. Virgil. Georgic. l. 1. v. 294. So Penelope in Homer, Minerva & Arachne in Ovid. Metamorph. l. 6. fab. 1. v. 55, &c. Vid. Pignorium de ſervis, p. 418. Braunium de veſt. ſacerd. Hebr. l. 1. c. 17. §. 33. [b] Ib. c. 16. §. 8.

℣. 15. And ſhe ſaid unto him, how canſt thou ſay I love thee, when thine heart is not with me? &c.] She took an opportunity, when he was careſſing her, to upbraid him with diſſembled love, and a falſe heart: thou haſt mocked me theſe three times; ſhe had urged him to tell her where his ſtrength lay, and by what it might be weakened, firſt pretending it might be done by binding him with green withs, and then with new ropes, and a third time by weaving his locks into the web: and haſt not told me wherein thy great ſtrength lieth; the thing ſo frequently and ſo importunately requeſted.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs, when ſhe preſſed him daily with her words, and urged him, &c.] Lay at him day after day to communicate the ſecret to him, gave him no reſt, but was inceſſant in her applications to him: ſo that his ſoul was vexed unto death; could hardly bear to live, but wiſhed to die, being in the utmoſt perplexity what to do between two different paſſions, love and fear; on the one hand chained by his luſt to this harlot, that was continually teazing him, and whom he had not an heart to leave, or otherwiſe that would have cleared him of his difficulties; and on the other hand, ſhould he diſcloſe the ſecret, he feared, and was in danger of loſing his ſtrength, in which his glory lay: or his ſoul was ſhortened unto death [c]; it was the means of ſhortening his days, and haſtening his death. Abarbinel thinks that Samſon was ſenſible of this, that his days were ſhort, and the time of his death at hand; which made him the more willing to impart the ſeeret. This may put in mind of the ſtory of Milo, a man famous for his great ſtrength, ſaid to carry an ox upon his ſhoulders a furlong without breathing; of whom it is reported, that none of his adverſaries could deliver themſelves out of his hands, but his whore could, often contending with him; hence it is obſerved of him, that he was ſtrong in body, but not of a manly ſoul [d]; and there are many other things ſaid [e] of him concerning his great ſtrength, which ſeem to be taken from this hiſtory of Samſon.

℣. 17. That he told her all his heart, &c.] All that was in his heart concerning this affair, all that he knew relating to it; he had told her ſomething before, or at leaſt what came nearer to the truth of the matter, when he directed her to the weaving of his locks into the web; but now he told her all, which is as follows: and ſaid unto her, there hath not come a raſor upon mine head; his head had never been ſhaved ſince he was born; which was the order of the angel that foretold his birth, and it had been carefully obſerved to that time: for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb; one condition of which, or what was enjoined a Nazarite was, that he ſhould not be ſhaved, and which had been religiouſly obſerved in Samſon; and whereas abſtinence from wine and ſtrong drink, was another part of the law of Nazariteſhip, or what ſuch perſons were obliged unto, what Joſephus ſays concerning Samſon being drunk in the above caſes, could not be true; ſince his Nazariteſhip would have been made void by it, and ſo have affected his ſtrength: but it muſt be owned, that there were other things Nazarites were obliged to, which were diſpenſed with, as has been obſerved in the caſe of Samſon, a perpetual Nazarite; and therefore it is probable, that the principal thing he was to regard, and upon which his ſtrength was continued, was not ſhaving his head: if I be ſhaven then my ſtrength will go from me, and I ſhall become weak, and be like any other man; in which he ſays more than he ever did before, namely, that his ſtrength ſhould go from him; for tho' that did not ariſe from his hair, yet the keeping on of that was the condition of his retaining it.

℣. 18. And when Delilah ſaw that he had told her all his heart, &c.] Which ſhe perceived by his countenance, and the ſeriouſs manner in which he expreſſed himſelf; and Abarbinel conjectures that he might ſwear to her, that what he ſaid was truth; and who obſerves from their Rabbins, as does alſo Kimchi, that ſhe concluded he had told her the truth, by his making mention of the name of God, ſaying he was a Nazarite unto God, whoſe name ſhe knew he would not take in vain; and with the account he gave agreed the long hair he wore: ſhe ſent and called for the lords of the Philiſtines, ſaying, come up this once; for it ſeems as if they were returned home, finding that ſhe could do nothing with him, and was not able to get the ſecret out of him; but now believing ſhe had it, ſends to them, and intreats them to come once more, being very deſirous of having the money they had offered her: for he hath ſhewed me all his heart; there is a double reading of this clauſe; the Keri or marginal reading, which our verſion follows, is, hath ſhewed me, as being the words of Delilah to the lords of the Philiſtines; but the Cetib or textual reading is, he hath ſhewed her, as being the words of the meſſengers to them: then the lords of the Philiſtines came up unto her; that is, from their own country; for it can hardly be underſtood of their coming up into her room, or chamber; and eſpecially ſince it follows, and brought money in their hand; 1100 ſhekels of ſilver a piece, the ſum they firſt propoſed to give her; and now being pretty well aſſured of ſucceſs, brought it along with them to pay her for the ſervice done.

℣. 19. And ſhe made him ſleep upon her knees, &c.] Giving him, as ſome think, a ſleepy potion; or however encouraged him to take a nap upon her knees, and by her fondneſs lulled him to ſleep: and ſhe called for a man; a barber; in former times to ſhave was the work of a ſervant [f], and ſometimes of a woman; ſhe gave orders for one to be ſent for; for Jarchi calls him a meſſenger of the lords of the Philiſtines: and ſhe cauſed him to ſhave off the ſeven locks of his head; this ſhews that they were not wove into one another, and made but one lock, as ſome interpret what ſhe was before directed to do: and ſhe began to afflict him; as his hair was ſhaving off; though he was aſleep, yet he diſcovered ſome uneaſineſs, the effects of it began to appear: tho' the word began here may be redundant, as in Numb. xxv.

[c] תקצר abbreviata eſt, Montanus, Druſius. So Munſter. Pauſan. Eliac. 2. ſive l. 6. p. 309.

[d] Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 24.

[e] Vid. Pignorium de ſervis, p. 89, 90, 91. & Pompa de ſervis, p. 57, 58.

xxv. 1. Judg. xx. 40. and then the meaning is, that ſhe afflicted him, or again afflicted him; for ſhe had afflicted him, or at leaſt attempted it three times before, and therefore did not begin now; this Hebraiſm is uſed in Mar. iv. 1. and frequently in Jewiſh writings [g]: and his ſtrength went from him; ſenſibly and gradually; though ſome underſtand it of her ſhaking him in a violent manner to awake him, and ſhrieking and crying out terribly to affright him, with her old cry of the Philiſtines being on him, and of her binding him though not expreſſed; whereby ſhe perceived his ſtrength was gone, and he could not looſe himſelf.

℣. 20. And ſhe ſaid, the Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon, &c.] In like manner as ſhe had before, that ſhe might have full proof that the caſe was really ſuch, that his ſtrength was gone from him: and he awoke out of his ſleep; upon the cry ſhe made: and ſaid; within himſelf, purpoſing and determining in his own mind: I will go out as at other times before; as he had done at the three former times, and did not meet with any Philiſtines to fall upon him, and ſo concluded it would be the caſe now, and he, if he did, ſhould be able to defend himſelf againſt them: and ſhake myſelf; that he might be thoroughly awake, and be on his guard and defence: and he wiſt not that the Lord was departed from him; might have forgot what he had told Delilah of, and knew not what had been done to him, that his hair was ſhaved off; or if he did, was not ſenſible that the Lord had removed from him; but might hope that he would renew his ſtrength, when he ſhould ſtand in need of it; but he ſoon found his miſtake; he was quickly taken by the Philiſtines, and ill uſed, and in a little time loſt his life. And from hence it is thought ſprung the ſtory of Niſus, king of the Megarenſes, who is ſuppoſed to reign about this time; of whom it is reported [h], that the hair of his head was of a purple colour, and was told by the oracle, that ſo long as that was kept on he ſhould be ſafe, but if it was ſhaved off he ſhould die; and ſo it was, that when the Cretians beſieged him, his daughter falling in love with Minos, the king of the Cretians, cut off her father's hair, and ſo both he and his country were delivered into the hands of the enemy.

℣. 21. But the Philiſtines took him, &c.] Being aſſured by Delilah, that his ſtrength was gone from him, of which perhaps ſhe had made trial by binding him, and found he could not free himſelf from the bonds till ſhe looſed them; or otherwiſe they would have been afraid to have ventured to lay hold upon him: and put out his eyes; that ſhould his ſtrength return to him, he might not be able to ſee where, and whom to ſtrike, and ſo be uncapable of doing much miſchief any more; the word ſignifies, they dug or bored them [i] out; they plucked or cut out his eye-balls, ſo that it was impoſſible his ſight ſhould ever be recovered: according to the Arabic verſion, they blinded him by putting fire to his eyes; the Jews obſerve, that this was done in juſt retaliation, meaſure for meaſure; Samſon, they ſay [k], went after his eyes; that is, by taking one harlot after another; therefore the Philiſtines put out his eyes: and brought him down to Gaza; which lay on the ſea-coaſt, and therefore they are ſaid to bring him down to it; here he had been before of his own will, now againſt it; here in one inſtance he had acted to his own ſhame, by going in to an harlot; and in another, to the ſhame and diſgrace of the city, and the inhabitants of it, by carrying off their city-gates; through which they now brought him in triumph, in order to repair the diſhonour done them: though perhaps the true reaſon of carrying him thither was, that he might be at the greater diſtance from the Iſraelites, ſhould they think of reſcuing him out of their hands; and eſpecially becauſe it was a very ſtrong fortified city, it had its name from ſtrength; hence Mela [l] calls it Munita admodum Gaza, and ſays, that when Cambyſes made war in Egypt, he carried his wealth and money to this place: and bound him with fetters of braſs; the Targum calls them chains of braſs, and the word being of the dual number, it is probable there were two of them, with which he was bound for the greater ſecurity: and he did grind in the priſon-houſe; the motion of mills by water or wind was as yet not invented, but it was uſual, as it is ſtill in the eaſtern countries, to grind with hand-mills, at which one or more worked; or with mills moved around by beaſts or ſlaves, and was a work priſoners were employed in, Exod. xi. 5. and xii. 29. ſee Iſ. xlvii. 1, 2. and Samſon being a ſtrong man, they might expect much ſervice from him this way. The Talmudiſts [m] underſtand this in a criminal ſenſe, as they do Job xxxi. 10. but this is juſtly rejected by Kimchi.

℣. 22. Howbeit the hair of his head began to grow again after he was ſhaven;] It began to grow immediately no doubt, as it naturally would do; but it is highly probable it grew in an extraordinary manner, and in a ſhort time became, as when it was ſhaved [n], as it may be rendered, and upon which his ſtrength was renewed; not that his ſtrength naturally lay in his hair, and ſo naturally increaſed as that grew; but he being made ſenſible of his ſin, and repenting of it, renewed his Nazariteſhip, of which letting his hair grow was a token; and it pleaſed God, who accepted of his repentance as genuine, of his own good will and pleaſure to renew his ſtrength; particularly upon his prayer to him, after related.

℣. 23. Then the lords of the Philiſtines gathered them together, &c.] The five lords with their friends; not directly upon Samſon's being taken and committed to priſon, but ſome time after; perhaps ſome months: for to offer a great ſacrifice to Dagon their god; in after times their god was called Marnas [o], which ſignifies the lord of men, but now Dagon; who alſo had a temple at Aſhdod, another of the five principalities of the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. v. 2. and ſeems to have been at this time their common and chief deity: according to Jarchi in the place referred to, it was in the form of a fiſh, for Dag in Hebrew ſignifies a fiſh; and Kimchi on the ſame place ſays, that from its navel upwards it was in the form of a man, and from thence downwards in the form of a fiſh [p]; and Diodorus

[g] See Lightfoot. Hor. Heb. in Mar. 4. 1. Vid. Sterringæ Animadv. Philolog. Sacr. p. 248. [h] Pauſaniæ Attica, ſive l. 1. p. 33. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 8. fab. 1.

[i] נקרן effoderunt, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [k] Miſn. Sotah, c. 1. §. 8. [l] De ſitu orbis, l. 1. c. 11. [m] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 10. 1. [n] כאשר גלח ut raſus fuerat, Tigurine verſion, Vablus; ut quum abraderetur, Junius & Tremellius. [o] Hieron. in Iſ. xvii. fol. 39. K. [p] So David le Pomis Lexic. fol. 18. 3. & Milton in his Paradiſe Loſt, l. 8. v. 462, 463.

Dagon his name, ſea-monſter, upwards man,
And downwards fiſh.

Diodorus Siculus [q] relates that Derceto, a goddeſs of Aſcalon, another of the five principalities of Paleſtine, its face was human, and the other part of its body reſembled a fiſh; and the ſame Lucian ſays of the Syrian goddeſs; and Cicero [r] teſtifies, that the Syrians worſhipped a fiſh, and Porphyry [s] ſays they will not eat any; and Gaza being a maritime city, a ſea-port, this might be their ſea-god in this form: but Ben Gerſom in the above place ſays, it was in the form of a man; and Sanchoniatho [t] making mention of Dagan, a brother of Saturn, Philo Byblius, who tranſlated his hiſtory into Greek, interprets it by Siton, which ſignifies corn, deriving it from Dagan, which ſo ſignifies; as if this deity preſided over corn, as Ceres in other nations, and Jupiter Frumentarius, or Aratrius; yea, he ſays he invented corn and the plough; however this be, the Philiſtine princes met together to ſacrifice to him, not a common offering, but a great ſacrifice. It is very probable, that this was a public feſtival of the Philiſtines, as Joſephus [u] ſays, an anniverſary one; and perhaps was held in a more grand manner on the preſent occaſion, ſince it is added, and to rejoice; for they ſaid, our God hath delivered Samſon our enemy into our hands; for though Samſon's harlot had done it, and they had paid her for it, yet they attribute it to their God, ſuch was their blindneſs and ſtupidity; and yet this may ſhame us believers in the true God, who are ſo backward to aſcribe to him the great things he does for us, when ſuch heathens were ſo forward to give glory to their falſe deities, without any foundation for it.

℣. 24. And when the people ſaw him, &c.] In the condition he was, blinded and fettered, of whom and of his great exploits they had heard ſo much: they praiſed their god; as Belſhazzar did his, Dan. v. 4. in hymns and ſongs compoſed for them, the ſubſtance of which was as follows: for they ſaid, our God hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the deſtroyer of our country; as he had been, by tying firebrands to the tails of 300 foxes, and letting them go into their corn-fields, vineyards, and olive-yards: which ſlew many of us; 30 men at Aſhkelon, more at Timnath, and 1000 with the jaw-bone of an aſs at Lehi.

℣. 25. And it came to paſs when their hearts were merry, &c.] With wine, for which Gaza is famous in many writers [w]; with eating and drinking, dancing, and muſic; for it was uſual for the heathens to feaſt in their temples, and eſpecially no doubt they would on ſuch an occaſion as this: and they ſaid, call for Samſon, that he may make us ſport; by which it ſeems that what is before ſaid, when the people ſaw him, ℣. 24. is ſaid by anticipation; for as yet he was not in the temple, but in the priſon; and therefore a motion was made by ſome of the great perſonages, that he might be fetched from thence, and they might have ſome diverſion with him: and they called for Samſon out of the priſon-houſe; ſent ſome meſſengers to fetch him from thence: and he made them ſport; not actively, but paſſively; it cannot well be thought, that a man of ſo great a ſpirit as Samſon was, and in ſuch circumſtances as he now was, would ever either by words or geſtures do any thing on purpoſe to divert his enemies, and make them laugh; but he was the object of their ſport and ſcorn, and he bore it patiently, their cruel mockings, buffetings, and ſpittings; in which he was a type of Chriſt. It was a diverſion to them to ſee him in his rattling chains, groping and blundering along from poſt to pillar, one perhaps giving him a box of the ear, or a ſlap on the face, another plucking him by his noſe or beard, and another ſpitting in his face, and others taunting at him, and reproaching him: and they ſet him between the pillars; that he might be the better ſeen, and in which there was the direction of providence to bring about what follows.

℣. 26. And Samſon ſaid to the lad that held him by the hand, &c.] And led him about; as nothing is more common now than for a blind man to be led by a boy: ſuffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the houſe ſtandeth; he might by information know in what manner the houſe was built, that it was ſupported by pillars, if he had never been in it before when he had his ſight; and he might underſtand by ſome means or another, that he was near theſe pillars, and placed between them, though being blind did not know which way to direct his hands towards them to feel them, as he propoſed to do, and therefore deſired the lad that led him to guide his hands towards them: that I may lean upon them; being, as he might at leaſt pretend to be, weary, as Joſephus ſays [x]; either by grinding at the mill, or thro' being led to and fro in this houſe, that all might ſee him, and call their flouts and jeers at him.

℣. 27. Now the houſe was full of men and women, &c.] Within it, who were gathered together from all parts of the city, and perhaps from other places, on this occaſion: and all the lords of the Philiſtines were there; their five lords, the lords of Gaza, Aſhdod, Aſcalon, Gath, and Ekron: and there were upon the roof 3000 men and women; it being a flat roof, as the houſes in Canaan and Phœnicia, and the places adjacent were; ſee Deut. xxii. 8. and there might be ſome openings or windows in ſeveral parts of it, through which the people might ſee who were below them, and were within the houſe, and what was doing there, and particularly could have a ſight of Samſon through them as follows: that beheld whilſt Samſon made ſport; or was made a ſport of; whilſt he was buffeted and uſed in a ludicrous manner.

℣. 28. And Samſon called unto the Lord, &c.] In an ejaculatory manner, by mental prayer; though he might poſſibly expreſs it aloud, without being heard and obſerved by the people, amidſt their noiſe and mirth; and if it was heard, it might only furniſh out more ridicule and contempt; and be it as it may, the prayer muſt have been preſerved by the Lord himſelf, and given by inſpiration to the writer of this book; ſince there were none that heard it that lived to relate it to others, no not Samſon himſelf: and ſaid, O Lord God, remember me, I pray thee; the office that I bear as judge of Iſrael, the reproaches caſt upon me, and which fall upon thy people, cauſe, and intereſt; remember thy loving-kindneſs, formerly expreſſed to me, the gracious promiſes made unto me, and the help and aſſiſtance I have had from thee: and ſtrengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God; and it was a prayer of faith, as appears by its being heard, accepted, and anſwered; and ſhews that his ſtrength did not come with his hair, but was owing to the immediate communication of it from the Lord: that I may be at once avenged of the Philiſtines

[q] Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 92. & Ovid. Metamorph. l. 4. fab. 1. v. 44, &c.
[r] De Natura Deorum, l. 3.
[s] De Abſtinentia, l. 2. § 6.
[t] Apud Euſeb. Evangel. Præpar. l. 1. p. 36, 37.
[u] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 8. §. 12.
[w] Vid. Rivinum de Majumis, &c. c. 6. §. 13.
[x] Ut ſupra.

Philiſtines for my two eyes; once for all, and no more; take his laſt and final vengeance on them; or one vengeance for his two eyes, or vengeance for one of his two eyes; either ſenſes will bear. This was ſaid not from a private ſpirit of revenge for perſonal injuries; but as a civil magiſtrate, a judge of Iſrael, whoſe office it was to be a revenger, to execute wrath; and though he mentions only his own eyes, yet he ſuffered the loſs of them, and every other indignity and injury, as a public perſon, the common enemy of the Philiſtines, and deſtroyer of their country, and protector of Iſrael; and in this character he now acted.

℣. 29. And Samſon took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the houſe ſtood, and on which it was borne up, &c.] Some have objected, that a building ſo large and ſo capacious as this was, could not be ſupported by two pillars, and thoſe placed in the middle, and ſo near to each other that Samſon could lay hold on them; on which it has been obſerved, that the architecture of the antients is little known to us, and they might have curious and ingenious arts of building now loſt; and ſeveral authors have taken notice of two Roman theatres built by Curio, that held abundantly more people than this houſe did, which were ſupported only by a ſingle pin or hinge, as Pliny [y] relates; and our Weſtminſter hall, which was built by William Rufus, and is 270 feet long, and 74 broad [z], and has a roof the largeſt in all Europe, is ſupported without any pillars at all; add to all which, that mention being made of the two middle pillars of this houſe, ſuppoſes that there were others in other parts of it, though theſe were the main and principal ones, on which the weight of the building chiefly lay. Kimchi obſerves, that the word ſignifies to incline or bend, as if Samſon made the pillars to bend or bow; but it is a better ſenſe that he laid hold of them: of the one with his right hand, and the other with his left; and thus he ſtood with his arms ſtretched out, as Jeſus on the croſs, of whom he was a type, as often obſerved.

℣. 30. And Samſon ſaid, let me die with the Philiſtines, &c.] He ſought their death, and was content to loſe his own life to be avenged on them; in neither of which did he act a criminal part as a judge of Iſrael; and from a public ſpirit he might deſire the death of their enemies, and ſeek to effect it by all means poſſible; and was the more juſtifiable at this time, as they were not only inſulting him, the repreſentative of his nation, but were affronting the moſt high God with their idolatries, being now in the temple of their idol, and ſacrificing to him. As for his own death, he did not ſimply deſire that, only as he could not be avenged on his enemies without it, he was willing to ſubmit to it; nor did he lay hands on himſelf, and can't be charged with being guilty of ſuicide, and did no other than what a man of valour and public ſpirit will do; who for the good of his country will not only expoſe his life to danger in common, but for the ſake of that will engage in a deſperate enterprize, when he knows moſt certainly that he muſt periſh in it. Beſides Samſon ſaid this, and did what he did under the direction and influence of the Spirit of God; and herein was a type of Chriſt, who freely laid down his life for his people, that he might deſtroy his and their enemies: and he bowed himſelf with all his might; having freſh ſtrength, and a large meaſure of it given him at this inſtant, which he had faith in, and therefore made the attempt, and for which he is reckoned among the heroes for faith in Heb. xi. 32. and the houſe fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein; who were all killed, and Samſon himſelf; an emblem this of the deſtruction of Satan, and his principalities and powers by the death of Chriſt: ſo the dead which he ſlew at his death, were more than they which he ſlew in his life; for beſides the lords, and they that were in the houſe, there were 3000 men and women on the roof, which fell in and loſt their lives alſo, ſo that it is very likely there were at leaſt 6 or 7000 ſlain; Philo Byblius ſays 40,000, which is not probable; whereas in his life we only read of 1000 ſlain by him with the jaw-bone, beſides 30 men at Aſcalon, and the ſlaughter made when he ſmote hip and thigh, the number of which is not known. As this houſe pulled down by Samſon is generally thought to be the temple of Dagon, a traveller [a] in thoſe parts tells us, that there is now extant the temple of Dagon in Gaza, half demoliſhed, and the pillars of it are yet to be ſeen; but he doubtleſs miſtakes an edifice of a later conſtruction for it: and another traveller [b] of our own country ſays, on the north-eaſt corner and ſummit of the hill, (on which the city is built) are the ruins of huge arches ſunk low in the earth, and other foundations of a ſtately-building;—the Jews, adds he, do fable this place to have been the theatre of Samſon pulled down on the heads of the Philiſtines; but he takes it to be the ruins of a later building; ſee the note on 1 Sam. v. 2.

℣. 31. Then his brethren, and all the houſe of his father came down, &c.] To Gaza, having heard of what had befallen him there. This muſt be underſtood of his kindred and near relations, thoſe of his father's family; though it is not unlikely that he had brethren in a proper ſenſe, ſince tho' his mother was barren before his birth, yet afterwards might have many children, as Hannah had, whoſe caſe was ſimilar to hers: and took him and brought him up; took his body out of the ruins of the houſe, and brought him up on a bier, or ſome proper carriage, to his own country; and perhaps in great funeral pomp, as a judge of Iſrael; nor need it be wondered at that the Philiſtines ſhould admit of it, it being uſual in all ages, and among all people, to allow even an enemy to bury their dead; beſides Samſon's friends had done them no injury, only Samſon himſelf, and the Iſraelites in general were quiet and peaceable under their government; add to this, they were now in diſtreſs themſelves for their own dead, and might be in ſome fear of the Iſraelites falling upon them, and attempting to deliver themſelves out of their hands, ſince their five lords were dead, and no doubt many more of their principal men with them; ſo that they might judge this was not a proper time to refuſe ſuch a favour, leſt it ſhould occaſion a quarrel, which they were not in a condition to engage in; and had Iſrael taken this opportunity, in all likelihood they might have freed themſelves from them: and buried him between Zorah and Eſhtaol, in the burying-place of Manoah his father; the former of theſe ſeems to have been his native place, and

[y] Nat. Hiſt. l. 36. c. 15. [z] Rapin's Hiſtory of England, vol. I. p. 188. [a] Baumgarten. Peregrinatio, l. 2. c. 3. p. 27. Vid. Adriachom. Theatrum Terræ S. p. 134. [b] Sandy's Travels, l. 3. p. 116.

and the other was near it; and between these the Spirit of the Lord first began to move him, and here his father's sepulchre was, in which he was laid; see ch. xiii. 2, 25. and he judged Israel 20 years; by distressing and weakening their enemies; and though he did not compleat their deliverance out of their hands, yet no doubt their oppressions were fewer, and their burdens easier on his account; the time of his judging Israel is observed before, ch. xv. 20. and here repeated for the confirmation of it, and the rather because they were now ended by his death. Ben Gersom observes, that this is said to shew that the time that Samson dwelt in the land of the Philistines is included in these twenty years; some would infer from hence, that he judged Israel 40 years, 20 in the days of the Philistines, as it is expressed in the above place; that is, when they had the dominion over Israel, and 20 more afterwards; but it does not appear that their dominion over Israel ceased in his time. In the Jerusalem Talmud [c] it is also said, that he judged Israel 40 years, but for it there is no foundation; nor is the reason given of any force, that the Philistines feared him 20 years after his death; the other Talmud [d] says he judged Israel twenty-two years; but the word two is put into a parenthesis.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter relates the first rise of idolatry in Israel after the death of Joshua, which began in mount Ephraim, occasioned by a sum of money stolen by a man from his mother, which being restored, part was converted to an idolatrous use; two images were made of it, ℣. 1—5. and there being no king in Israel to take cognizance of it, the idolatry took place and continued, and afterwards spread, ℣. 6. and this idolater not only made one of his sons a priest, but took a Levite for another, whom he hired by the year to serve him, ℣. 7—13.

℣. 1. And there was a man of mount Ephraim, &c.] This and the four following chapters contain an history of facts, which were done not after the death of Samson, as some have thought, and as they may seem at first sight, by the order in which they are laid; but long before his time, and indeed before any of the judges in Israel, when there was no king, judge, or supreme governor among them, as appears from ℣. 6. and xix. 1. and xxi. 25. even between the death of Joshua and the elders, and the first judge of Israel, Othniel; and so Josephus [e] places them in his history, and the connexion of them is with ch. ii. 10. and so accounts for the rise of idolatry in Israel, how it got into the tribe of Dan, and spread itself over all the tribes of Israel, ch. ii. 11. which brought on their servitude to Cushan Rishathaim, in which time the Jewish chronology [f] places those events; but they were certainly before that, for the idolatry they fell into was the cause of it; yet could not be so early as the times of Joshua, and before his death; because in his days, and the days of the elders, Israel served the Lord; the reasons why they are postponed to the end of this book, and the account of them given here are, according to Dr. Lightfoot [g], that the reader observing how their state-policy failed in the death of Samson, who was a Danite, might presently be shewed God's justice in it, because their religion had first failed among the Danites; that when he observes that 1100 pieces of silver were given by every Philistine prince for the ruin of Samson, ch. xvi. 5. he might presently observe the 1100 pieces of silver that were given by Micah's mother for the making of an idol, which ruined religion in Samson's tribe; that the story of Micah of the hill-country of Ephraim, the first destroyer of religion, and the story of Samuel, of the hill-country of Ephraim, the first reformer of religion, might be laid together somewhat near. That the facts after related were so early done as has been observed, appears from the following things; the priest of the idol, Micah made, was a grandson of Moses, ch. xviii. 30. the Danites seeking to enlarge their possessions, related in the same chapter, was most probably as soon as they were driven into the mountains by the Amorites, ch. i. 34. Mahanah Dan from whence they marched, and had its name from their expedition, ch. xviii. 12. is mentioned before in the history of Samson, ch. xv. 25. and therefore the expedition must be before his time. Phinehas the son of Eleazar, was alive at the battle of Gibeah, ch. xx. 28. and Deborah speaks of the 40,000 Israelites slain by Benjamin at it, ch. 5. 8. This man with whom the idolatry began was of the tribe of Ephraim, and dwelt in the mountainous part of it: whose name was Micah; in the original it is Micajehu, with part of the name Jehovah affixed to it, as Dr. Lightfoot [h] remarks, till he set up his image, and thenceforward was called Micah; but according to Abarbinel, the former was his name whilst he was a child, and in his youth, and with his mother, being a diminutive term, and when he became a man he was called Micah, ℣. 5.

℣. 2. And he said unto his mother, &c.] Who seems to have been a widow, and an ancient woman, since Micah had sons, and one of them at an age to become a priest: the 1100 shekels of silver that were taken from thee; which were taken away by stealth from her, though it may be rendered taken to thee [i]; which she had taken to herself out of the rest of her substance, and had separated and devoted it to religious uses; but Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it as we do, and which seems to be the best sense; of the value of this sum, see the note on ch. xvi. 5. and because the like sum is there offered, and was given to Delilah, hence some have thought, as Jarchi relates, that this woman was Delilah; but, as he observes, it is a mistake; for this woman lived long before the times of Samson and Delilah: about which thou cursedst; which when she perceived was stolen from her, she fell into a passion, and cursed and swore, cursed the thief that took it, whether of her own family or another; or adjured her son, that if he knew any thing of it, that he would declare it, suspecting him of the robbery; some think this refers to the oath she had made, that she would devote the silver to a religious use: and spakest of also in mine ears; ears; of the ſum how much it was, and of the uſe ſhe deſigned it for; or rather the curſe was delivered in his hearing, and cut him to the heart, and wrought that conviction in him, that he could not retain the money any longer, not being able to bear his mother's curſe; though Abarbinel connects this with the following clauſe, behold the ſilver is with me; as if the ſenſe was, that ſhe ſpake in his ears, and charged him with the theft to his face; ſaying, verily the ſilver is with thee, thou haſt certainly taken it; upon which he confeſſed it, I took it; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt, that not being willing to lie under his mother's curſe, he owned that the money was in his hands, and he had taken it from her: and his mother ſaid, bleſſed be thou of the Lord my ſon; ſhe reverſed the curſe, and pronounced a bleſſing on him, or wiſhed one to him, and that without reproving him for his ſin, rejoicing to hear of her money again.

[c] T. Hieros. Sotah, fol. 17. 2. [d] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 10. 1. [e] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 2. §. 8, &c.
[f] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 12. p. 33. [g] Works, vol. I. p. 46. [h] Ibid. p. 45.
[i] לקח לך captum est tibi, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius.

℣. 3. And when he had reſtored the 1100 ſhekels of ſilver to his mother, &c.] The whole ſum, having embezzled none of it: his mother ſaid, I had wholly dedicated the ſilver unto the Lord from my hand, for my ſon to make a graven image and a molten image; this ſhe had done either before it was ſtolen, and it troubled her the more, and cauſed her the rather to curſe the man that had taken it; or after it was ſtolen, that if it ſhould be recovered again ſhe would appropriate it to ſuch a uſe; ſo Abarbinel; and by the Lord, or Jehovah, ſhe doubtleſs meant the true God; for ſhe had no intention to forſake him, but to worſhip him in and by theſe images, and which ſhe deſigned for the uſe of her ſon and his family, that they might not go ſo far as Shiloh to worſhip at the tabernacle there: therefore I will reſtore it unto thee; for that uſe, and ſo gave him the money again, to be laid out in images, or to make images of it.

℣. 4. Yet he reſtored the money unto his mother. &c.] Gave it to her a ſecond time, not as diſapproving her idolatrous intention, as the ſequel ſhews, but being deſirous to be entirely quit of it, and not have his mind diſturbed with it as it had been, and that ſhe might do with it as ſhe thought fit: and his mother took 200 ſhekels of ſilver, and gave them to the founder, who made thereof a graven image, and a molten image; the other 900 pieces ſhe kept to herſelf, repenting of her vow, and being unwilling to part with ſo much money for ſuch an uſe; or elſe they were laid out in an ephod, and Teraphim, and what elſe were thought neceſſary for the idolatrous worſhip they were about to ſet up; though Kimchi is of opinion, that the 200 ſhekels were what ſhe gave the founder for making the images, and of the 900 the images were made; and indeed the images muſt be very ſmall ones, if made out of 200 ſhekels of ſilver only; ſome have thought there was but one image, called both molten and graven; becauſe after the ſilver was melted, and caſt into a mould, it was faſhioned with a graving tool, as the golden calf was by Aaron; but they are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed and repreſented as two, ch. xviii. 17, 18. and they were in the houſe of Micah; in an apartment in his houſe, peculiar for them, as appears by the next verſe; here they were put and continued.

℣. 5. And the man Micah had an houſe of gods, &c.] Having two images in it, beſides Teraphim, which were a ſort of idols; and the Targum is, an houſe of images, or idols; though it may be rendered, an houſe of God; a temple, a place for religious worſhip: and made an ephod; a prieſtly garment, a linen one very probably, not ſo rich an one with a breaſt-plate to it as the high-prieſt had, which was very coſtly. Ben Melech interprets it a girdle, and there was a curious girdle of the ephod, with which it was girt; this may be here put for the reſt of the prieſtly garments which Micah provided: and Teraphim; which were a ſort of houſhold gods, like the Lares and Penates of the Romans, and by which conſultations were made; ſee the notes on Hoſ. iii. 3, 4. and Zech. x. 2. Micah propoſed to have an oracle in his houſe, whereby he might conſult the Lord about future things, and not be at the trouble of going to the tabernacle, and conſult there by Urim and Thummim; and the ſame ſome take the Teraphim to be: and conſecrated one of his ſons, who became his prieſt; or, filled the hand[k] of one of them; that is, with offerings, as Ben Melech interprets it; in which way prieſts were initiated, and conſecrated to their office; ſee Exod. xxviii. 41. and xxix. 9, 24. or, as Kimchi expreſſes it, he offered his offerings by the hand of one of his ſons, and appointed him to be a prieſt, very probably his eldeſt ſon.

℣. 6. In thoſe days there was no king in Iſrael, &c.] That is, no ſupreme magiſtrate, judge, or ruler, Joſhua being dead and Caleb alſo, and the elders cotemporary with them; for what the Samaritan chronicle ſays[l] is without foundation, that Joſhua a little before his death caſt a lot in the preſence of the congregation, to know who ſhould govern after him, and the lot came to one Abel, of the tribe of Judah: but every man did that which was right in his own eyes; which accounts for the idolatry of Micah, there being no ſupreme magiſtrate to take cognizance of his ſin, and reſtrain him from it, or puniſh him for it according to the law of God.

℣. 7. And there was a young man out of Bethlehem Judah, &c.] As there were two Bethlehems, one in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 15. and another in the tribe of Judah, the place here deſigned, Judah is added to it to diſtinguiſh it from the other: of the family of Judah; which refers either to the young man, who was by his father's ſide a Levite, and by his mother's ſide, as Jarchi thinks, of the tribe of Judah, which ſeems very probable, though the genealogies of families were not reckoned from the mother; wherefore he might be ſo called becauſe he had lived chiefly in the tribe of Judah, and particularly at Bethlehem; but Kimchi, and ſeveral other Jewiſh commentators, refer this to the city of Bethlehem, that was of the tribe of Judah, family being put for the tribe; or belonged to the children of Judah; though one would think there was no need to have added this, ſince it was fully expreſſed before by calling it Bethlehem Judah; the former ſenſe therefore ſeems beſt: who was a Levite; his father being, as before obſerved, of that tribe, though his mother might be of the tribe of Judah: and he ſojourned there; that is, at Bethlehem; he was not a native, nor an inhabitant there, but a ſojourner, it not being a Levitical city.

℣. 8. And the man departed out of the city from Bethlehem Judah, to ſojourn where he could find a place, &c.] Either being a man that had a rambling head, and of an unſettled mind, and could not eaſily fix any where; or elſe there being no ſupreme magiſtrate, to take care that the Levites had their due maintenance, for which there was a ſufficient ſufficient proviſion made by law; and the people being negligent of paying their tithes, there being none to oblige them to it, and they indifferent to the true worſhip of God, and prone to idolatry; this man was obliged to go abroad, and ſeek for a livelihood where he could get it, and ſojourn in a place the moſt convenient for him: and he came to mount Ephraim, to the houſe of Micah, as he journeyed; not with a deſign to ſtay there, but called by the way, having heard perhaps that Micah was both a wealthy and an hoſpitable man, and he alſo might have heard of the new form of worſhip he had ſet up in his houſe.

[k] וימלא את יד & implevit manum, Montanus, V. L.

[l] Apud Hottinger. Smegma Orient. p. 522.

℣. 9. And Micah ſaid unto him, whence comeſt thou? &c.] For as he might aſk for a meal, or for a night's lodging, it was but natural to put ſuch a queſtion to him, as from whence he came, and what was his buſineſs in theſe parts? or whither he was going? and he ſaid unto him, I am a Levite of Bethlehem Judah; the tribe he was of was Levi, and ſo a Levite by tribe and office, and the place he came laſt from, and where he had ſojourned a while, was Bethlehem, a city in the tribe of Judah: and I go to ſojourn where I may find a place; the moſt convenient to abide in, where he could get a livelihood.

℣. 10. And Micah ſaid unto him, dwell with me, &c.] Hearing that he was a Levite, he thought him a fit man for his purpoſe, and would give ſome credit to, and put a better face upon his new form of worſhip, and therefore without farther enquiry after him and his character, invites him to make his abode with him: and be unto me a father and a prieſt; a father to inſtruct him in the knowledge of divine things; ſo prophets were called fathers, and their diſciples their ſons; and a prieſt to offer ſacrifices for him, and to conſult before him by his Teraphim upon occaſion: and I will give thee ten ſhekels of ſilver by the year; or yearly, which was but a ſmall ſum, a poor ſalary for a prieſt, at moſt amounting but to 25 ſhillings, and ſcarce ſo much: and a ſuit of apparel; or an order of apparel[m]; ſuch as was fit for one of his rank and order as a prieſt to wear, ſo Jarchi and Abarbinel; or a couple of garments, as the Targum and Septuagint, a double ſuit of apparel, according to the order of the ſeaſon, one for ſummer and another for winter, as Kimchi and Ben Melech: and thy victuals; his meat and drink: ſo the Levite went in; into his houſe, and it looks as if the parley was made, and the bargain ſtruck at the door, Micah being at it as the Levite paſſed by, or came to it upon his knocking at it; he went after his counſel and advice, as Jarchi, or to do his buſineſs, as Kimchi.

℣. 11. And the Levite was content to dwell with the man, &c.] To continue with him; after he had made trial for ſome time, he liked his ſervice, and his wages, and way of living; it was all agreeable to him: and the young man was unto him as one of his ſons; as dearly beloved by him, and uſed as kindly and tenderly, as if he had been one of his own children; ſo ſtrong were the affections of Micah to him, and ſo well pleaſed was he with his ſervice.

℣. 12. And Micah conſecrated the Levite, &c.] Inſtalled him into, and inveſted him with the prieſtly office; in like manner he had conſecrated his ſon before, by filling his hand with ſacrifices, ſee ℣. 5. and the young man became his prieſt; and did the work and office of one; this was a very daring piece of preſumption in them both; in Micah, to take upon him to conſecrate a prieſt, who was himſelf of the tribe of Ephraim; and in the young man, to ſuffer himſelf to be put into ſuch an office, which did not belong to him; for tho' every prieſt was a Levite, or of the tribe of Levi, yet every Levite had not a right to be a prieſt, only thoſe who were of the family of Aaron: and was in the houſe of Micah; and continued there.

℣. 13. Then ſaid Micah, &c.] Within himſelf, pleaſed with what he had done, and with what he engaged in: now know I that the Lord will do me good; that I ſhall enjoy his favour, be a happy man, and proſper; and by this it appears, that notwithſtanding the idolatry he had fallen into, he had not utterly forſaken the Lord, but worſhipped him in and by his images; there was a mixture of the worſhip of God, and of the worſhip of images: ſeeing I have a Levite to my prieſt; who was of the ſame tribe the prieſts were, and ſo the neareſt to them of any, and which he thought would be acceptable to God, and an omen of good to himſelf.

CHAP. XVIII.

THIS chapter relates how the Danites being ſtraitened in their inheritance, ſent out ſpies to ſearch the land, and ſee if they could find any proper place to add unto it, and enlarge it, ℣. 1—6. who returned and reported Laiſh as ſuch, and encouraged the Danites to go and poſſeſs it; for which purpoſe they ſent 600 men up to it, ℣. 7—12. and as they went, called at the houſe of Micah, and took away his prieſt and his gods, ℣. 13—27. and having taken Laiſh, ſet up Micah's graven image there, ℣. 28—31.

℣. 1. In thoſe days there was no king in Iſrael, &c.] No ſupreme magiſtrate, no judge, for it was before the time of the judges, after the death of Joſhua, and before Othniel the firſt judge; this is obſerved before, ch. xvii. 6. and here repeated to account for the evil things done by the Danites, their conſulting Micah's oracle, taking away his prieſt and his gods, and ſetting up his graven image in Dan; by which means idolatry was ſpread in Iſrael, and brought on their ſervitude to Cuſhanriſhathaim, from which Othniel the firſt judge was their deliverer: and in thoſe days the tribe of the Danites ſought them an inheritance to dwell in; that is, a family of them, as in the next verſe, not the whole tribe; for as a family is ſometimes put for a tribe, Joſh. vii. 17. ſo a tribe for a family, ch. xx. 12. for unto that day all their inheritance had not fallen to them among the tribes of Iſrael; we rightly ſupply the words all their; for otherwiſe an inheritance had fallen to them by lot, as the other tribes, Joſh. xix. 40. but that was not only too little for them, ℣. 47. but all that was allotted to them did not come into their poſſeſſion, but a part remained unſubdued; and ſome they had poſſeſſion of they could not keep, either through the ſuperior ſtrength of the Amorites, or their own ſloth and cowardice dice, or for want of the help of their brethren; see ch. i. 34, 35.

[m] ערך בגדים ordinem veſtimentorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Munſter, Vatablus; demenſum veſtimentorum, Tigurine verſion.

℣. 2. And the children of Dan sent of their family five men, &c.] According to Abarbinel one out of a family, as Moses sent one out of a tribe to spy the land; and so there must be five families concerned in this affair: from their coasts, men of valour, from Zorah, and from Eshtaol, to spy out the land, and to search it; these men were sent from the borders of the tribe, the extreme parts of it, as the word may signify, where perhaps they were the most pressed and straitened; Zorah and Eshtaol are particularly mentioned, and were the first cities in their lot, and were the coast of their inheritance, Josh. xix. 41. see the note there: some take the phrase, rendered, from their coasts, to signify persons of extreme meanness, men of the lowest class among them; but the above-mentioned writers interpret it to a quite contrary sense, by Katzinim, princes, such as Moses sent to spy the land; and this better agrees with the next clause, men of valour; and the word used signifies not only magnanimity and fortitude of mind, but wealth and riches; and these were sent not to spy the land of Canaan, but such places as fell to this tribe, but were possessed by the Canaanites; and their errand was to observe in what condition they were, and whether fit for their purpose, and easy to obtain, and how they might get the possession of any of them: and they said unto them, go search the land; and see if some convenient place can't be found out to enlarge their inheritance, and give them more room and liberty for their families, now pent up, and a pasturage for their flocks and herds: who when they came to mount Ephraim; which lay upon the borders of them: to the house of Micah, they lodged there; that is, when they were come near to the house of Micah, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it, they took up their lodging in the neighbourhood of it, perhaps at a public house or inn; for the sense is not, that they lodged in Micah's house, for after this we read of their turning into it, as in the next verse. According to Bunting [r], this place was 24 miles from Zorah and Eshtaol, from whence these men came.

℣. 3. When they were by the house of Micah, &c.] At their inn, which might be next to it, or as they were passing by it: they knew the voice of the young man the Levite; who had been in their country, and they had been in his company and conversation, and they knew the tone of his voice when they heard it; a particular brogue he might have. Abarbinel conjectures, that he was singing to Micah's idol, or multiplying his prayers before him: and they turned in thither; into Micah's house, and into the apartment where the young man was; and said unto him, who brought thee hither? they knew he was of Bethlehem-judah; they enquire therefore how he came there, who sent for him, and by what means he was brought to that place: and what makest thou in this place? they knew he was a Levite, and that such an one had no business to minister but at the tabernacle, and therefore they enquire what was his employment here: and what hast thou here? to support himself with, what he had for his maintenance, or how he lived.

℣. 4. And he said unto them, thus and thus dealeth Micah with me, &c.] Told them the whole story, how he came to the door of Micah's house, how he enquired of him who he was, and from whence he came, and whither he was going, and then invited him into his house to stay with him: and hath hired me; by the year for ten shekels of silver, a suit of clothes, and meat and drink, and by this means he got a livelihood, and was supported: and I am his priest; and that was his business to offer sacrifice for his family, and to consult his oracle for him, and for whomsoever should apply.

℣. 5. And they said unto him, ask counsel, we pray thee, of God, &c.] They did not reprove him for assuming the priestly office, when they knew he was a Levite, such was the corruption of those times, and the great depravity and declensions they were fallen into; nor even for the idolatry he was guilty of, but encourage him in it, and thought they had got a fine opportunity, which they readily laid hold on, to have counsel asked for them of God, about the success of the errand they were sent about; to this they were led at sight of the ephod, which was like that in the tabernacle, and of the Teraphim, images, which, according to a notion that prevailed, when consulted, foretold future things; whether by God they meant the true God, who they thought would give an answer by these, or Micah's gods, is not certain; according to the Targum of Jonathan, they meant the true God, which paraphrases it, "ask of the Word of the Lord:" that we may know whether our way which we go shall be prosperous or no; whether they should find out a proper place to dwell in, and be able to get possession of it.

℣. 6. And the priest said to them, go in peace, &c.] After he had consulted the oracle, or had asked counsel by the ephod and teraphim; either of his own head, or by a voice he had heard, which satan might be permitted of God to deliver, he very roundly told them, that they might proceed on in their journey with their minds quite easy, and with full assurance of success: before the Lord is your way wherein ye go; it is seen, observed and taken notice of by him, and he approves of it; it is according to his will, and under his direction and protection, and success from him may be depended upon; though some observe that this answer is delivered in ambiguous terms, as generally the oracles of dæmons were, and might be taken in a good or bad sense, as the event should be; as that their way was before the Lord, and was seen by him either with pleasure or displeasure, with approbation or disapprobation, for their good, or for their hurt: so that let it fall out as it might, the credit of the oracle was saved.

℣. 7. And the five men departed, &c.] From mount Ephraim, and Micah's house there: and came to Laish; which, according to Bunting [s], was 104 miles from mount Ephraim, and so many he makes it to be from Jerusalem; it lay at the farthest northern border of the land of Canaan, at the foot of mount Lebanon, near the fountain of Jordan; it was four miles from Paneas, as Jerom says [t], as you go to Tyre; it is the Cæsarea Philippi of the New Testament, and the same that is called Leshem, Josh. xix. 47. see the note there: and saw the people that were therein; went into the city, and made their observations on the inhabitants of it, their number, strength and manner of living: how they dwelt careless, after the manner of the Zidonians, quiet and secure; the inhabitants tants of Zidon, whoſe cuſtoms they might imitate, whoſe laws they might uſe, and might be under their government, ſince they are ſaid to have no magiſtrate within themſelves; and their careleſſneſs and confidence might ariſe from their ſtrong fortreſſes; or rather becauſe they thought their city, and the land adjacent to it, did not belong to the land of Iſrael, and did not know that the Iſraelites made any pretenſions to it, and therefore were quite eaſy, and in no fear of them; had no watchmen to guard their city, and did not take care to furniſh themſelves with weapons of war for their defence, even as the Zidonians; who, beſides their city being a ſtrong and fortified one, were in no fear of the Iſraelites, becauſe their city was not in the land of Canaan, only the border of it reached to it: and there was no magiſtrate in the land that might put them to ſhame in any thing; to reſtrain them from vice, and puniſh them for it, or even to reprove and correct them, and ſo put them to ſhame; or put any mark of infamy and diſgrace upon them in a public manner, that might ſhame them; hence they lived in a diſorderly and diſſolute manner, whereby they became the more eaſy prey to others: or the ſenſe is, there was no king, nor an heir of the kingdom, as Kimchi interprets it, ſo that there were none to conteſt his right to the government of the place, or to accuſe another, and put him to ſhame for taking it away from him. Jarchi takes the ſenſe to be, that none needed to turn back his neighbour empty, when he aſked any thing of him for his relief, ſince there was no want of any thing in the land, as after obſerved; but the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt: and they were far from the Zidonians; who were the only people that could help them, being in friendſhip with them; and it may be they were under their government, as before obſerved; they are ſaid [u] to be about 11 miles from them, Joſephus ſays [w], a day's journey: and had no buſineſs with any man; no trade or commerce, but lived independent of others, and within themſelves, their land affording them every thing ſufficient for them. Some underſtand it of their not being in any league or alliance with any other people, and ſo had none to call in to their aſſiſtance in caſe of any attack upon them.

[r] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 112.

[s] Ut supra.

[t] De loc. Heb. fol. 90. H.

℣. 8. And they came unto their brethren to Zorah and Eſhtaol, &c.] After they had well viewed the city, and made their remarks on the inhabitants of it, the condition and circumſtances in which they were, and took notice of the goodneſs of the land about it, they returned to their brethren that ſent them, particularly thoſe that dwelt at the two places mentioned: and their brethren ſaid unto them, what ſay ye? what tidings do you bring? what account of the place and country where you have been?

℣. 9. And they ſaid, ariſe, that we may go up againſt them, &c.] That is, prepare for war, and go up in an hoſtile manner againſt the preſent poſſeſſors of the land, not doubting of being maſters of it eaſily: for we have ſeen the land, and behold, it is very good. Adrichomius [x] ſays, it was very good paſture-land, and fertile, abounding with fruits of all kinds; and the ſame is atteſted by Joſephus [y]: and are ye ſtill? can ye ſit ſtill, and be eaſy, and not beſtir yourſelves to go up and poſſeſs ſo good a country, of which an eaſy conqueſt may be made? or affirmatively, ye are ſtill or ſilent [z]; ye make no anſwer to what we ſay, and ſeem careleſs and indifferent about the matter; or by way of exhortation, be ſilent, either that the people may remain in their quiet, eaſy, careleſs ſtate, and leſt on hearing deſigns againſt them, ſhould prepare for their defence; or, as Abarbinel, leſt any of the other tribes of Iſrael ſhould hear of it, and go and take it before them: be not ſlothful to go, and to enter to poſſeſs the land; they ſuggeſt, that there was ſcarce any thing more to be done than to go and take poſſeſſion, and that it would be altogether owing to their ſloth and indolence if they did not.

℣. 10. When ye go, ye ſhall come to a people ſecure, and to a large land, &c.] For though it was but one city, the territories of it were large, and the villages belonging to it might be many; which, with the ſecurity of the people, might eaſily be ſurprized and taken, not being upon their guard, are the arguments uſed by the ſpies to encourage their countrymen to go up and take it, to which they add others: for God hath given it into your hands; which they concluded from the ſtate and condition they found the people in, thoughtleſs and defenceleſs; or it may be on account of the oracle in Micah's houſe they had conſulted, and to which they gave credit; though ſome think their faith was grounded upon this place being given by lot to the tribe of Dan, but this does not appear: a place where there is no want of any thing that is in the earth; in the land of Canaan; meaning, that there was nothing in the whole land but might be found there, as wheat and barley, vines, fig-trees, pomegranates, olives, and honey, with all other neceſſaries and conveniences of life.

℣. 11. And there went from thence of the family of the Danites, &c.] Or families, the ſingular being put for the plural; for it can hardly be thought that ſuch a number of men, as after mentioned, went out of one family: out of Zorah, and out of Eſhtaol; the two places the ſpies were ſent from, and now had returned unto: and upon their report, and at their inſtigation, and by the encouragement they gave, there were 600 men appointed with weapons of war; that ſet out armed from the above places, on the expedition to take Laiſh.

℣. 12. And they went up and pitched in Kirjath-jearim in Judah, &c.] Of which place ſee Joſh. xv. 9, 60. According to Bunting [a] it was 16 miles from Zorah and Eſhtaol, and this was their firſt day's march: wherefore they called the name of that place Mahaneh-dan unto this day; which ſignifies the camp of Dan, or of the Danites; ſo it was called in the times of Samſon, ch. xiii. 25. and is a proof that this expedition was before his time; and it was ſo called, it ſeems, in the time of Samuel, the writer of this book: behold, it is behind Kirjath-jearim; to the weſt of it; for though they are ſaid to pitch in that place, the meaning is, that they pitched near it, in the fields adjacent to it, which were the moſt proper and convenient for a camp.

℣. 13. And they paſſed thence unto mount Ephraim, &c.] Steering their coaſt ſtill north-ward; this, according to Bunting [b], was eight miles from Kirjath-jearim, or Mahaneh-dan, in which Micah's houſe was, for as yet they were not come to it, ſee ℣. 15.

℣. 14. Then they anſwered the five men that went to ſpy out the country of Laiſh, &c.] That were ſent by their brethren, ℣. 5. and, as it ſeems from hence, [u] Adrichom. Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 105. [w] Antiq. l. 5. c. 3. §. 1. [x] Ut ſupra.

[y] Ut ſupra. [z] אתם מחשים vos autem deſidetis, Tigurine verſion; & vos quieſcitis, Munſter.
[a] Ut ſupra. [b] Ibid.

hence, were ſent particularly to Laiſh; they had ſome notion of that place as proper for them, and therefore ſent thoſe men to reconnoitre it; and now as they had paſſed this way before, when they came within ſight of Micah's houſe, it put them in mind of what they had ſeen there; wherefore one in the name of the reſt, and with their approbation, acquainted the company with it: and ſaid unto their brethren, do ye know that there is in thoſe houſes; in one of them, pointing to the houſes of a village or town in ſight: an ephod and teraphim, and a graven image, and a molten image? of which ſee ch. xvii. 4, 5. and no doubt but they acquainted them, not only that they had ſeen them, and ſo were certain of it, but had conſulted them, and that with ſucceſs: now therefore conſider, ſay they, what ye have to do; whether it may not be proper to conſult them again, or rather to take them with us, to conſult as occaſion may require, and as tokens and pledges of God being with us, and ſo may the rather hope that every thing will ſucceed to our wiſhes.

℣. 15. And they turned thitherward, &c.] It ſeems as if the houſe lay a little out of their way, and therefore they turned on one hand to go unto it: and came to the houſe of the young man the Levite, even unto the houſe of Micah; for the young man's houſe was only an apartment of Micah's, and lay very probably next to that in which the images and oracle were; and they made up to the young man's apartment, rather than to Micah's, becauſe the above things were under his care: and ſaluted him; aſked him of his welfare in a kind and obliging manner, the rather to ingratiate themſelves unto him.

℣. 16. And the 600 men appointed with their weapons of war, &c.] Who were armed men, and marched with their armour about them: which were of the children of Dan; for no other were concerned in this expedition: ſtood by the entering of the gate; not of Micah's houſe, but of the city in which his houſe was; here they ſtood whilſt the five men went up to the houſe.

℣. 17. And the five men that went out to ſpy the land, went up and came thither, &c.] They firſt came to Micah's houſe, and ſaluted the young man, and after that ſalutation, told him there was ſuch a number of their brethren at the gate of the city, very probably, who would be glad to ſee him; and the young man being deſirous alſo of ſeeing them, and paying his reſpects to them, went with them thither, and after they had introduced him, left him diſcourſing with them, and then returned to his apartment: and took the graven image, and the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image; and brought them away with them; and from hence it appears plainly, that there were two images, the one graven, and the other molten, ſince they are ſo manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed, and the ephod and teraphim are ſpoken of between them: and the prieſt ſtood in the entering of the gate, with the 600 men that were appointed with the weapons of war; who kept him in talk, whilſt the five men went and ſtole the above things.

℣. 18. And theſe went into Micah's houſe, &c.] Into that part of it where his gods were; not the 600 men laſt mentioned, but the five men who knew the houſe, and the chapel where the things were: and fetched the carved image, the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image; and brought them away in their hands to their brethren at the gate, where the prieſt alſo was: and when he ſaw them, then ſaid the prieſt to them, what do ye? what do you mean by this? is this your kindneſs to me, to take away what are my care and charge, and on which my livelihood depends? and do you conſider the wickedneſs, the ſin of ſacrilege you are guilty of, to take away theſe ſacred things, theſe objects of religious devotion?

℣. 19. And they ſaid unto him, hold thy peace, &c.] Be ſilent, make no diſturbance, be quiet and eaſy: lay thy hand upon thy mouth; as a token of ſilence; ſo the Egyptians uſed to paint Harpocrates, the god of ſilence, with his fingers preſſing his lips: and go with us; for they wanted him as well as his gods, not knowing well how to make uſe of them without him: and be to us a father and a prieſt; to direct them, inſtruct them, perform acts of devotion for them, and aſk counſel on their account; it ſeems as if it was common in thoſe days to call a prieſt a father, ſee ch. xvii. 10. is it better for thee to be a prieſt unto the houſe of one man, or that thou be a prieſt unto a tribe and a family in Iſrael? ſuggeſting, that it muſt be much more honourable for him, and more to his advantage, to officiate as a prieſt to a body of people, that might be called a tribe, or to a family conſiſting of various houſes, than in the houſe of a private perſon; this they left him to conſider and judge of.

℣. 20. And the prieſt's heart was glad, &c.] He rejoiced that ſuch an opportunity offered; it ſuited well with his covetous, ambitious, rambling and unſettled diſpoſition of mind: and he took the ephod, and the teraphim, and the graven image; and no doubt the molten image alſo, out of the hands of the five men into his own, agreeing to go with them, and officiate for them: and went in the midſt of the people; the 600 armed men, either for the ſecurity of himſelf, if Micah ſhould raiſe his ſervants, and his neighbours, to purſue after him, and fetch him back, with his images; or, as others think, in imitation of the prieſts bearing the ark, who in journeying marched in the middle of the camp.

℣. 21. So they turned and departed, &c.] Turned from the gate of the city where Micah dwelt, and marched forward to Laiſh: and put the little ones, and the cattle, and the carriage before them; partly for ſafety from Micah, and his friends and neighbours, and partly that they might not be overdriven: their wives, who doubtleſs were with them, though not mentioned, and their children, and alſo their flocks and herds, they brought with them from Zorah and Eſhtaol, as never intending to return again thither, and being fully aſſured they ſhould take Laiſh, and the country about, and ſettle there; and alſo all their wealth and ſubſtance, as the Targum renders the word for carriage, whatever they were poſſeſſed of that was moveable; their veſſels, ſilver and gold, and other moveables, as Kimchi interprets it, whatever was weighty, valuable and glorious, as the word ſignifies, or that was of any importance and worth.

℣. 22. And when they were a good way from the houſe of Micah, &c.] For it might be ſome time before Micah knew that his gods were ſtolen, and his prieſt was decoyed from him; and it muſt take up more time ſtill to get his ſervants and neighbours together to purſue after thoſe that injured him: the men that were in the houſes near to Micah's houſe were gathered together; no doubt at the requeſt of Micah, who informed them of what had happened to him; and they being not only his neighbours, but deeply involved in the ſame ſuperſtition and idolatry, and cloſely addicted to it, and to whom it might in ſome reſpects be advantageous, as it brought people from various parts to worſhip, or to conſult the oracle: theſe being got together in a body, purſued and overtook the children of Dan; who were obliged to move but ſlowly, becauſe of their wives, little ones, and heavy ſubſtance they carried with them.

℣. 23. And they cried unto the children of Dan, &c.] When they had got pretty near them, and in their hearing, they called to them aloud, and deſired they would ſtop, having ſomething to ſay to them: and they turned their faces; that is, the Danites turned and looked at them, and ſtopped to hear what they had to ſay to them; theſe were they who were in the rear in marching: and ſaid unto Micah; who was at the head of them: what aileſt thou that thou comeſt with ſuch a company? as if he intended to attack them in an hoſtile way, and therefore aſks what ſhould be the occaſion of it? what affront had been given him? what injury had been done him, that had provoked him to come out and follow them in ſuch a manner?

℣. 24. And he ſaid, ye have taken away my gods that I made, &c.] Meaning his graven and molten images, which he had made, or cauſed to be made, out of the ſilver his mother gave him, or however had paid for the making of; and though this might be an argument proving his right unto them, it was a very poor one in favour of their deity; and it is aſtoniſhing he ſhould call them gods he knew the making of, and who could not ſave themſelves from being ſtolen and carried off: and the prieſt, and ye are gone away; they had not only took away his gods, but the prieſt that ſacrificed for him unto them, and aſſiſted him in acts of devotion to them, or to God by them, and were gone off with both: and what have I more? ſignifying, that all he had in the world, wife, children and ſubſtance, were all nothing in compariſon of theſe; there was nothing he ſo much valued as he did theſe, nor could he take any pleaſure or comfort in any thing, being deprived of them, ſo much was his heart ſet on them: and what is this that ye ſay unto me, what aileth thee? what a queſtion is this you aſk, as if the injury done me was none at all, and that I had no reaſon to complain; that it was a trifling, inſignificant thing, worthy of no regard, when it was a matter of the greateſt moment and importance to him in life?

℣. 25. And the children of Dan ſaid unto him, let not thy voice be heard among us, &c.] Complaining of us as having done an unjuſt thing, charging and reproaching us with theft and ſacrilege, inſiſting upon a reſtoration of the things taken, and abuſing with odious names and characters: leſt angry fellows run upon thee; leſt men of bitter and paſſionate ſpirits, provoked by ill language given them, ſhould draw their ſwords and fall upon thee: and thou loſe thy life, and the life of thy houſhold; the life of himſelf, his family, ſervants, tenants and neighbours with him, which ought to have been more precious and valuable than his gods; of which there was great danger in demanding his gods, which by this they let him know they would not part with.

℣. 26. And the children of Dan went their way, &c.] Went their way, would not ſtay to have any farther talk with him, as being an impertinent man, and unworthy of their regard, bidding him defiance, and do his worſt, having nothing to fear from him: and when Micah ſaw they were too ſtrong for him; that he could not prevail upon them by words and arguments; to take up arms, and uſe them, he perceived it was to no purpoſe, ſince they were more numerous and more mighty than he and his neighbours: he turned and went unto his own houſe; and if he returned from his idolatry to the true God, and the right worſhip of him, having loſt his gods, it was well for him they were taken away.

℣. 27. And they took the things which Micah had made, &c.] The ephod, teraphim and the two images, the Danites took them, or having taken them kept them, and went on with them: and the prieſt which he had; him alſo they took, and who was willing enough to go with them: and came unto Laiſh, unto a people that were quiet and ſecure; having no centinels placed at any diſtance to give them warning of an enemy, nor any watchmen on their walls to deſcry one; and perhaps their gates not ſhut, nor any guard at any of their paſſes and avenues, having no apprehenſion at all of being viſited by an enemy, eſpecially from Iſrael, not being apprized that they had any pretenſions to their city, and the land about it: and they ſmote them with the edge of the ſword; entered their city, and fell on them ſuddenly, and cut them to pieces: and burnt the city with fire; to ſtrike terror to all about; or it may be only they ſet fire to ſome part of it, as they entered, only to frighten the inhabitants, and throw them into the greater confuſion, that they might become a more eaſy prey to them; for their intention was to inhabit it, and it ſeems to be the ſame city ſtill, though they rebuilt it, and called it by another name.

℣. 28. And there was no deliverer, becauſe it was far from Zidon, &c.] Under whoſe government and protection they ſeem to have been; and that city being at a diſtance from them, and the Danites coming upon them ſuddenly, there was no time to ſend to them for help, or any to come in to their aſſiſtance, and ſave them from their enemies, ſee ℣. 7. and they had no buſineſs with any man; that could have given them notice of the deſign of the children of Dan againſt them, nor to the Zidonians to come ſoon enough for their protection and defence; none there were in alliance with them except them: and it was in the valley that lieth by Beth-rehob; which lay in the northern border of the land of Canaan, as you go to Hamath of Syria, Numb. xiii. 21. ſee the note there: and they built a city to dwell there; not a new one altogether, but they rebuilt and enlarged Laiſh, and made it convenient for them to dwell in.

℣. 29. And they called the name of the city Dan, &c.] The name of their tribe, and to ſhew, that though they were at the fartheſt part of the land northward, and at ſuch a diſtance from their tribe, which lay to the ſouth-weſt, yet they belonged to it: after the name of Dan their father, who was born unto Iſrael; one of the twelve ſons of Jacob or Iſrael: however, the name of the city was Laiſh at firſt; which ſignifies a lion, and might be ſo called from its being infeſted with lions, which might come from the mountain of Lebanon, near to which it was, and whither Dan, as a lion's whelp, leaped, Deut. xxxiii. 21. and now the prophecy had its accompliſhment. This place was alſo called Leſhem, Joſh. xix. 47. and it is remarkable, that Leſhem is the name of the precious ſtone in the high-prieſt's breaſt-plate, on which the name of Dan was engraved, which was done many years before this city fell into the hands of the Danites, though that might portend it.

℣. 30. And the children of Dan ſet up the graven image, &c.] In their new city Dan, and very probably bably had a houſe built for it, peculiar to it, in the ſame place where Jeroboam, in after-times, ſet up one of his golden calves. The Danites having ſucceeded, according to the oracle in Micah's houſe, they had a very great veneration for the images they brought away with them from thence, and ſet them up for religious worſhip in a proper place; for though only mention is made of the graven image, yet no doubt the molten image, and the teraphim, with the ephod, were all placed together for devotion and conſultation: and Jonathan the ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Manaſſeh, he, and his ſons were prieſts to the tribe of Dan; not to the whole tribe, but to that part of it which reſided in this city, called Dan; and this Jonathan ſeems to be no other than the Levite Micah took into his houſe, and made a prieſt of; and whom the Danites took with them to Laiſh, to be their prieſt, who is ſaid to be the ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Manaſſeh: now Gerſhom was the ſon of Moſes, and this man is thought by ſome to be a grandſon of his; and with this agrees the time in which he lived, for as Phinehas the grandſon of Aaron was now living, ch. xx. 28. ſo might a grandſon of Moſes; and though he is called a young man, he might be a younger ſon of Gerſhom's; nor is his being a Levite any objection, ſince it is a clear caſe that Moſes made no proviſion for his family, ſo diſintereſted was he, which may be obſerved againſt the deiſts: and it is remarkable that the nun, or N in Manaſſeh, is ſuſpended over the other letters in our printed copies of the Hebrew bible, and ſo without it may be read, Moſes; and the Jews [c] have a notion, that this was done for the honour of Moſes, and to obſerve that he was more like a ſon of Manaſſeh than of Moſes; though rather this being the firſt letter of נשה to forget, may ſuggeſt, as Alting [d] obſerves, that he had forgot the virtues of his grandfather; and the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, the ſon of Moſes; and ſome [e] are of opinion, that this is the true reading of the text; though it may be that another Gerſhom than the ſon of Moſes, and another Manaſſeh we know nothing of, are here intended, ſo Marcus Marinus [f]: however, this man, and his ſons in ſucceſſion after him, were prieſts in Dan, until the day of the captivity of the land; not till the captivity of Sennacherib or Salmaneſer, when Dan, with the reſt of the ten tribes, were carried captives, as Jarchi; for this idolatry, and theſe idolatrous prieſts, can hardly be thought to be continued here through the times of Samuel, David and Solomon: nor is it to be underſtood of the captivity of Iſrael by Jabin king of Canaan, as Ben Gerſom; for as the other is too long a time, this is too ſhort, ſince it is clear by the next verſe, that this idolatry continued all the time the houſe of God was at Shiloh; and which directs us to the captivity here ſpoken of, when the ark was carried captive by the Philiſtines, and the houſe of Shiloh was forſaken; which is the ſenſe of Kimchi, R. Iſaiah, and Abarbinel, and may be illuſtrated and confirmed by ſome paſſages in Pſ. lxxviii. 58, 59, 60, 61.

℣. 31. And they ſet them up Micah's graven image, which he made, &c.] Which is repeated for the ſake of the time of its continuance next expreſſed: all the time the houſe of God was in Shiloh; which, according to ſome Jewiſh writers [g], was 360 years; that is, ſo long as the tabernacle was there, which was afterwards removed to Nob.

CHAP. XIX.

THIS chapter gives an account of a ſad affair of a Levite and his concubine, and of the bad conſequence of it, how that ſhe played the whore, and went away from him to her father's houſe, whither he followed her, and where he was kindly entertained by her father ſeveral days, ℣. 1—9. and then ſet out on his journey to his own country; and paſſing by Jebus or Jeruſalem, he came to Gibeah, and could get no lodging, ℣. 10—15. but at length was taken in by an old man, an Ephraimite, ℣. 16—21. when the houſe where he was, was beſet by ſome wicked men in Gibeah, with the ſame intent as the men of Sodom beſet the houſe of Lot, ℣. 22—24. and after ſome expoſtulation of the old man with them, the concubine was brought out to them, and abuſed by them even unto death, ℣. 25—28. upon which the Levite her huſband cut her into 12 pieces, and ſent them into all the coaſts of Iſrael, which was ſhocking and ſurprizing, ℣. 29, 30. the conſequence of which is related in the next chapter.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs in thoſe days, when there was no king in Iſrael, &c.] The ſame is obſerved in ch. xvii. 6. and xviii. 1. and refers to the ſame times, the times before the judges, between them and the death of Joſhua, during which time there was no ſupreme magiſtrate or ruler in Iſrael, which is meant; and this is obſerved as before, to account for wickedneſs being committed with impunity, ſuch as adultery, ſodomy, murder, &c. afterwards related: that there was a certain Levite ſojourning on the ſide of mount Ephraim; in a city that was on one ſide of that mountain; it ſeems not to have been a Levitical city, becauſe he was only a ſojourner in it; perhaps he choſe to reſide there, as being near to the tabernacle at Shiloh, which was in that tribe: who took to him a concubine out of Bethlehem-judah; the ſame place from whence the wicked Levite came, ſpoken of in the preceding chapters, and who was the means of ſpreading idolatry in Iſrael; and here a wicked concubine of a Levite comes from the ſame, and was the cauſe of great effuſion of blood in Iſrael; which two inſtances may ſeem to reflect diſhonour and diſgrace on Bethlehem, which were wiped off by the birth of ſome eminent perſons in it, as Boaz, Jeſſe, David, and eſpecially the Meſſiah. The woman the Levite took from hence, is in the Hebrew called a wife, a concubine [h]; for a concubine was a ſecondary wife, taken without eſpouſals and a dowry: ſome think they were eſpouſed, though there was no dowry, and were reckoned truly wives, though they had not all the honour and privilege as others; and that this woman was accounted the wife of the Levite, appears from his being being called her husband frequently; and her father is said to be his father-in-law, and he his son-in-law; nor could she have been chargeable with adultery otherwise.

[c] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 109. 2. [d] Shiloh, l. 4. c. 28. p. 334. [e] See Dr. Kennicott's Diſſertation 2. p. 51, &c. [f] Apud Glaſſium in Philolog. Sacr. l. 1. tract. 1. §. 2. [g] Maimon. in Miſn. Zebachim, c. 14. §. 6. & Bartenora in ib. §. 7. [h] So Pagninus, Tigurine verſion, Druſius.

℣. 2. And his concubine played the whore against him, &c.] Was unfaithful to him and his bed, and broke the covenant and agreement between them; or with him [i], whilst she was with him in the house; or before him [k], of which he had knowledge and full proof; though some think this is not to be understood of whoredom or adultery, but of her ill usage of him, and departure from him. The Targum is, she despised him; so Kimchi and Ben Gersom interpret it, of her declining and turning aside from him, and returning to her father's house, as follows: and indeed, had she been guilty of such a crime, one would think he would never have sought after her to reconcile her, and take her again, since she not only deserved to be put away, but to be put to death according to the law of God: and went away from him to her father's house to Bethlehem-judah; where she was received, as she knew she should, having a parent perhaps too indulgent, and which was an encouragement to her to leave her husband: and was there some whole months; or a year and four months, according to Ben Gersom; so Kimchi and Ben Melech observe the copulative and, is wanting, which is expressed in 1 Sam. xxvii. 7. and yamim days is sometimes used for a year, see ch. xiv. 8. and xv. 1. and xxi. 19.

℣. 3. And her husband arose, &c.] From the place where he lived: and went after her; to Bethlehem-judah, where her father lived: to speak comfortably to her; or to her heart [l]; having heard perhaps that she repented of her sin, or if it was only upon a quarrel between them, his anger might cool and subside, and therefore sought for a reconciliation; and which was the more commendable in him, as he did not put her away, but she departed from him: and to bring her again; to his own city, and to his own house and bed, as before: having his servant with him, and a couple of asses; one of them for her to ride upon, and the other to carry provisions on: and she brought him into her father's house; it seems she met with him before he came thither, in the fields, or in the street; and by this it appears, that she was glad to see him, and received him in a loving manner, and introduced him into her father's house, so that things looked well, and promised success: and when the father of the damsel saw him, he rejoiced to meet him; having a good opinion of him, and perhaps understood even by his daughter's story, that she was most in fault, and therefore was well pleased to see him come after her; though he ought before this time to have sent her home, or sought for a reconciliation of her to her husband.

℣. 4. And his father-in law, the damsel's father, retained him, &c.] Prevailed upon him to stay some time with him: and he abode with him three days; it seems as if he agreed to stay with him so long, and that time he stayed contentedly: so they did eat and drink, and lodged there; the Levite and his servant were very handsomely entertained, and had every thing provided for them convenient for meat, drink and lodging.

℣. 5. And it came to pass on the fourth day, &c.] The time the Levite had agreed to stay being up: when they arose early in the morning; the Levite, his concubine and servant, in order to set out on their journey: that he arose to depart; the Levite rose up from his seat to take his leave of his father-in-law, and depart from his house, and proceed on his way homeward; for rising out of his bed, is before expressed: and the damsel's father said to his son-in-law, comfort thy heart with a morsel of bread; take a breakfast first, that he might be fitter for his journey, for bread comforts or strengthens mens hearts, Ps. civ. 15. though here it may be put for any, and all sorts of provisions, whatever might be proper to take early in a morning, and before setting out on a journey: and afterwards go your way; he seemed as if he was willing he should set forward, after he had refreshed himself with a meal.

℣. 6. And they sat down, &c.] Not only sat down upon their seats again, the Levite having rose up in order to go away, but sat down at table: and did eat and drink both of them together; both the Levite and his father-in-law; and it appears by this, and what follows, that the Levite did not take only a short repast, or breakfast with him, but stayed and dined with him, when they ate a plentiful meal, and drank freely after dinner: for the damsel's father had said to the man, be content, I pray thee, and tarry all night, and let thine heart be merry; let us spend a pleasant evening together, in drinking freely, though not to excess, in chearful conversation, and innocent mirth. This he proposed to him, and hoped he would agree to it.

℣. 7. And when the man rose up to depart, &c.] Rose up from table, having eat and drank sufficiently, in order to depart the house, and proceed on his journey: his father-in-law urged him; with much entreaty, and earnest solicitations, that he would stay all night with him: therefore he lodged there again; another night, being prevailed upon through his father's importunity.

℣. 8. And he rose early in the morning on the fifth day to depart, &c.] With a full intention to take his leave of his father, and be gone: and the damsel's father said, comfort thine heart, I pray thee; with a meal's meat, with a breakfast, before he set out on his journey, that he might be heartier and stronger for it: and they tarried until afternoon; or until the decline of the day [m], when the sun had passed the meridian, and was declining, as it immediately does when noon is past: and they did eat both of them; the man stayed and took a dinner with his father-in-law; and though no mention is made of the concubine, neither in this, nor in the other instances, no doubt she eat with them.

℣. 9. And when the man rose up to depart, he and his concubine, and his servant, &c.] Rose up from table, having comfortably refreshed themselves: his father-in-law, the damsel's father, said unto him, behold, now the day draweth towards evening; or is remiss, or weak [n]; that is, the heat, light and strength of the sun abated, and became weaker and more remiss, as it does the more it declines, and is nearer setting: I pray you tarry all night; suggesting, it was a very improper time to set out in on a journey: behold, the day groweth to an end; or behold, it is the encampment of the day [o], when the day or sun seems to be pitching its tent, tent, and going to reſt; or it being the time when an army on the march ſtops and pitches their tents, in order to continue all night; or when men go to their tents and habitations, and lie down and take their reſt: lodge here, that thine heart may be merry; and let us have another pleaſant evening together, which can't be had in an inn upon the road; you can't be comfortable there, as here, and therefore be perſuaded to ſtay, ſince it is not poſſible to get home to-night: and to morrow get you early on your way, that thou mayeſt go home; to thy city, as the Targum; ſignifying, that he ſhould not inſiſt upon their ſtaying any longer, and then they might ſet out on their journey as ſoon as they pleaſed.

[i] עליו apud eum, Pagninus, Piscator; cum eo, Junius & Tremellius. [k] Conspectu ejus, Vatablus; coram eo, Drusius. [l] על לבה ad cor, Pagninus. [m] עד נטות היום usque ad declinare diem, Montanus; to the same purpose Pagninus, Tigurine version, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. [n] רפו debilitata est, Pagninus, Vatablus; remissus est, Junius & Tremellius. [o] חנות היום castrametatio diei, Drusius.

℣. 10. But the man would not tarry that night, &c.] He was determined upon his journey; he perceived there was no end of the ſolicitations of his father-in-law, and did not know how long he intended to detain him, and therefore was reſolved not to hearken to him any longer: but he roſe up and departed; roſe up from his ſeat, took his leave of his father-in-law, and proceeded on his journey: and came over-againſt Jebus, which is Jeruſalem; which was then called Jebus, becauſe inhabited by the Jebuſites, as appears from the following verſe; this was about ſix miles from Bethlehem [p]; ſo far they were come on in their journey homewards: and there were with him two aſſes ſaddled; which he brought with him when he came to Bethlehem, ℣. 3. now ſaid to be ſaddled, either for him and his concubine to ride on; or they were bound or girt, as the word ſignifies, being loaded with bread, and wine, and provender; or it may be one of them was for him and his concubine to ride on by turns, and the other to carry the proviſions: and his concubine alſo was with him; matters being now made up between them, ſhe had agreed to go with him, and did, which was the end of his coming to her father's houſe; and therefore this is obſerved on that account, as well as for what follows in the tragical part of this hiſtory.

℣. 11. And when they were by Jebus, the day was far ſpent, &c.] Or was gone down very much [q], the ſun was going down apace, and near ſetting: and the ſervant ſaid unto his maſter, come, I pray thee; he propoſed it to him in a ſubmiſſive manner, and might uſe ſome intreaty for his maſter's good and ſafety: and let us turn in to this city of the Jebuſites, and lodge in it; for though that part of the city which belonged to the tribe of Judah, was taken by them after the death of Joſhua, yet that which belonged to the tribe of Benjamin, part of it was ſtill poſſeſſed by the Jebuſites, whom the Benjamites could not expel, ch. viii. 21. and Ben Gerſom thinks, that this affair of the Levite, and his concubine, was before the men of Judah fought againſt it, and took it; which is not unlikely, ſeeing it is called here a city of the Jebuſites, and becauſe the Levite objected going into it on that account; whereas there would not have been much in his objection, if one part of it was in the poſſeſſion of the men of Judah, and the other in the hands of the tribe of Benjamin, though they had ſome Jebuſites dwelling among them.

℣. 12. And his maſter ſaid unto him, we will not turn aſide hither into the city of a ſtranger, &c.] A city of the children of the Gentiles, as the Targum, as the Jebuſites were, being one of the ſeven nations of the land of Canaan, who were to be diſpoſſeſſed and deſtroyed; and which, one would think, he would not have ſo called, had it been inhabited, though but in part, by the children of Judah and Benjamin: by this it appears, that this Levite was a good man, and conſcientious, and ſhunned all appearance of evil, and the company of wicked men, as became his character and profeſſion: and it is added, that is not of the children of Iſrael; which farther confirms the above conjecture, that this city was not as yet at all in the hands of the Iſraelites; or if it had been, was retaken, and now in the hands of the Jebuſites: we will paſs over to Gibeah; which was in the tribe of Benjamin, and inhabited by men of that tribe, and ſo more agreeable to this Levite, though it proved fatal to him; this was, as Joſephus ſays [r], 30 furlongs, or near four miles from Jebus or Jeruſalem; and though it was near ſun-ſetting, he choſe rather to proceed on to this place, than to lodge at Jebus, and the rather it may be, as it was a Levitical city, Joſh. xxi. 17.

℣. 13. And he ſaid to his ſervant, come, and let us draw near, &c.] And get on as faſt as we can: to one of theſe places to lodge all night, in Gibeah or in Ramah; which were both in the tribe of Benjamin, and he left it to his ſervant to go to either, to that which was moſt convenient, becauſe of the time of the day, it being near ſun-ſetting; now, as before obſerved, Gibeah was not quite four miles from Jeruſalem; whereas, according to Jerom [s], Ramah was ſix miles, and therefore we find they took up at Gibeah, as being neareſt of theſe two places; ſee the notes on Joſh. xviii. 24, 25. and in Hoſ. v. 8.

℣. 14. And they paſſed on, and went their way; &c.] Proceeded on in their journey from Jebus or Jeruſalem, near to which they were: and the ſun went down upon them when they were by Gibeah, which belongeth to Benjamin; which is added, to diſtinguiſh it from another Gibeah in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 57. when they were come pretty near to this place, on the ſide of it, as it ſeems, the ſun was juſt ſetting, which determined them to take up their lodging here, as follows.

℣. 15. And they turned aſide thither to go in and lodge in Gibeah, &c.] Inſtead of going right forward, and paſſing by Gibeah, over-againſt which they were, they turned out of their road, and went into the city to ſeek a lodging in it: and when he went in, he ſat him down in a ſtreet of the city; to ſee whether any perſon would invite him into any of their houſes, as was uſual in thoſe hoſpitable times and countries, and where there were few inns for the entertainment of travellers and ſtrangers, or none at all, and eſpecially in cities; if any where, they were upon the public road: for there was no man that took them into his houſe to lodging; the ſpirit of hoſpitality being greatly declined, and even gone from among them; or, as ſome think, thoſe that had ſuch a ſpirit, and were willing to receive ſtrangers, were afraid, becauſe of their wicked neighbours, who would beſet their houſes to abuſe ſtrangers, as the ſequel of this hiſtory ſhows.

℣. 16. And behold, there came an old man from his work out of the field at even, &c.] Which is the time that men come from their labour, and take their reſt; and this man, though a man in years, and of ſome ſubſtance, as appears by what follows, yet attended the buſineſs of his calling, which was very commendable in him: which was alſo

[p] Adrichom. de loc. Heb. fol. 89. E.
[q] רד מיאד deſcenderat valde, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion.
[r] Antiq. Jud. l. 5. c. 2. §. 1.
[s] De loc. Heb. fol. 94. B.

alſo of mount Ephraim; as the Levite was, which when the old man underſtood, he was the more ready no doubt to receive him into his houſe: and he ſojourned in Gibeah; he was not a native of the place, and yet more kind to ſtrangers than ſuch as were; nor does he appear to be a Levite, though it was a Levitical city; on what account he ſojourned here, is not manifeſt: but the men of the place were Benjamites; for as yet the number of Levites were not large, others dwelt in the cities beſides them, even ſuch as were of the tribe to which they belonged.

℣. 17. And when he had lift up his eyes, &c.] For it may be as he came out of the field, he was muſing and meditating with his eyes downwards directed, but coming into the city looked up: he ſaw a wayfaring man in the ſtreet of the city; whom he ſuppoſed to be a traveller and a ſtranger by his dreſs, and other circumſtances, having never ſeen him before, and knowing pretty well the inhabitants of the place: and the old man ſaid, whither goeſt thou? and whence comeſt thou? the meaning of the queſtions is, what place he was travelling to, and from whence he came laſt.

℣. 18. And he ſaid unto him, we are paſſing from Bethlehem-judah, &c.] He anſwers to his laſt queſtion firſt, for this was the place from whence they came: towards the ſide of mount Ephraim; thither they were going, which is an anſwer to the firſt queſtion: and then adds, which is more than what was requeſted, from thence am I; that is, he was an inhabitant of a city on one ſide of mount Ephraim, but what that city was, he ſays not, nor is it elſewhere ſaid: and I went to Bethlehem-judah; on what account he does not declare, but the above narrative clearly ſhews for what reaſon he went thither: but I am now going to the houſe of the Lord; that is, the tabernacle in Shiloh, there he propoſed to go firſt to offer ſacrifice for the ſucceſs of his journey, and for the reconciliation of his wife to him, and to pray to God for happineſs in his habitation was; but rather it was at ſome diſtance, not far from mount Ephraim, and on the ſide of it, whither he ſhould return when he had performed thoſe acts of religion and devotion, which he judged were his duty: and there is no man that receiveth me to houſe; that had invited him to his houſe to take a lodging there, as was common to do to travellers, as the inſtances of Abraham, Lot, Job, and others ſhew. It was a law with the Lucani (a people in Italy) that if a ſtranger came at ſun-ſetting, and was deſirous of coming under the roof of any one, if ſuch an one did not receive him, he was to be mulcted, and ſuffer the puniſhment of inhoſpitality [t].

℣. 19. Yet there is both ſtraw and provender for our aſſes, &c.] Straw to litter them with, and provender to feed them with, which he had brought with him on them: and there is bread and wine alſo for me, and for thine hand-maid; meaning himſelf and his concubine; there were enough for them both, which were packed up, and carried by the aſſes: and for the young man which is with thy ſervants; the ſupplement, which is, ſeems quite needleſs, and even impertinent; for as yet the young man, by whom he means his ſervant, was not as yet in company with the ſervants of the old man; but the ſenſe is, that there was not only proviſions with him for himſelf, and his wife, and alſo for his ſervant, but even enough for the ſervants of the old man, whether maid or man-ſervants: there is no want of any thing; and therefore none needed to be ſhy of taking them in, ſince they ſhould not be burdenſome to any upon any account; all they wanted was a lodging.

℣. 20. And the old man ſaid, peace be with you, &c.] All happineſs attend thee, particularly eaſe and tranquility of mind, let nothing diſturb or diſtreſs thee: howſoever, let all thy wants lie upon me; ſignifying, that if he had neither bread nor wine for himſelf, his wife, and his ſervant, nor any litter nor provender for his aſſes, he was welcome to all from him; and whatever his wants were, he would ſupply them, which was nobly and generouſly ſaid: only lodge not in the ſtreet; that I can't bear to think of, as if he ſhould ſay; for a ſtranger, an Iſraelite, one of my own country, a good man, a Levite going to the houſe of God, to take up a lodging in the ſtreets, let it not be ſaid.

℣. 21. So he brought him into his houſe, &c.] Shewed him the way to it, and in a kind and friendly manner introduced him, and bid him welcome: and gave provender unto the aſſes; this is mentioned firſt, it being then perhaps as now, the firſt thing that a careful man is concerned for, to ſee that his cattle is taken care of, and then himſelf; and ſuch a method this ancient good man took with his gueſt: and they waſhed their feet; which was commonly done to ſtrangers in thoſe hot countries, and was very refreſhing, ſee Gen. xviii. 4. and xix. 2. and did eat and drink; ſat down at table and ſupped with him.

℣. 22. Now as they were making their hearts merry, &c.] With a glaſs of wine after ſupper, and converſing together in a chearful manner about their country and friends: behold, the men of the city, certain ſons of Belial; very wicked, lawleſs, ungovernable, worthleſs and unprofitable creatures, men under the influence of ſatan, and their own luſts: beſet the houſe round about; that none might eſcape out of it, eſpecially the Levite, his wife and ſervant: and beat at the door; to get entrance, either by thoſe within opening to them, or by breaking it open: and ſpake to the maſter of the houſe, the old man; who upon this noiſe and clamour made, came to the door, to enquire what was the meaning of all this: to whom they replied, ſaying, bring forth the man that came into thy houſe, that we may know him; not what manner of perſon he was, of what country and profeſſion, whither he was going, and what buſineſs he had here; but that they might have carnal knowledge of him in an unnatural way, or commit that ſin with him which is commonly called Sodomy; and the men of Sodom expreſſed their luſt by the ſame word, Gen. xix. 5.

℣. 23. And the man, the maſter of the houſe, went out unto them, &c.] Opened the door, and went out to converſe with them, and beſpoke them after this manner: and ſaid unto them, nay, my brethren, nay, I pray you, do not ſo wickedly; it is plain he underſtood them in ſuch ſenſe, that they meant not bare knowledge of the man, as who he was, &c. but to commit wickedneſs the moſt abominable; ſo great, that it cannot be well ſaid how great it is; and to diſſuade from it, he uſes the moſt tender language, and the moſt earneſt intreaties: ſeeing this man is come into my houſe, do not this folly; he argues from the law of hoſpitality, which ought not to be infringed; a man being obliged to protect a ſtranger under his roof; and from the nature of the crime, which was folly, folly, ſtupidity, and what was abominable to the laſt degree.

[t] Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 1.

℣. 24. Behold, here is my daughter, a maiden, and his concubine, &c.] His own daughter a virgin, and the concubine of the Levite his gueſt: them I will bring out now, and humble ye them, and do with them what ſeemeth good unto you; thoſe he propoſed to bring out, and deliver to them, to lie with, to do with as they pleaſed to gratify their raging luſt, which to do was more than he ought, or had power to do; he had no right to proſtitute his own daughter, and much leſs the concubine or wife of another man, though perhaps it might be with the conſent of the Levite; but all this he ſaid in a hurry and ſurprize, in a fright and terror, and of two evils chuſing the leaſt, and perhaps in imitation of Lot, whoſe caſe might come to remembrance: but unto this man do not ſo vile a thing; as he apprehended that to be which they were deſirous of, whether to kill him, as he himſelf ſays, ch. xx. 5. or to commit the unnatural ſin, and which rather than comply with, he ſhould have choſen to have been ſlain.

℣. 25. But the men would not hearken to him, &c.] Eſpecially with reſpect to his daughter, whom they knew very well, and had no affection for, perhaps was not handſome enough for them: ſo the man took his concubine, and brought her forth unto them; that is, not the old man, but the Levite took his own wife or concubine, and put her forth to them, very probably with her conſent, to try if that would pacify them, ſhe being a fair and beautiful woman, as Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel ſuggeſt; and Joſephus[u] intimates, that ſome young men of the city had ſeen her in the ſtreet, and were captivated with her beauty, and came on purpoſe for her, and would not be ſatisfied unleſs ſhe was delivered to them; and upon which her huſband perceiving this, laid hold on her by main ſtrength, as the word ſignifies, and brought her out whether ſhe would or no, as Kimchi notes: and they knew her, and abuſed her all night until the morning; had carnal knowledge of her, and uſed her in a moſt ſhocking manner one after another, all the night long until the morning appeared: and when the day began to ſpring; at break of day, when the light dawned: and let her go; their works being works of darkneſs, and would not bear the light.

℣. 26. Then came the woman in the dawning of the day, &c.] When thoſe wicked wretches who had abuſed her, had left her, having had her from place to place, at ſome diſtance from the houſe out of which ſhe was put, and to which ſhe got again, as well as ſhe could: and fell down at the door of the man's houſe where her lord was; her huſband, ſo called, not becauſe ſhe had been his ſervant, but becauſe ſhe was his wife; and at the door of the old man's houſe, where he was, which ſhe knew, and had found out by one means or another; ſhe fell down, either purpoſely for her eaſe, and to lie and wait there, until the time of opening the door in the morning; or rather through weakneſs, not being able to ſtand, nor ſo much as to knock at the door to get admittance: and there ſhe lay till it was light; broad day-light.

℣. 27. And her lord roſe up in the morning, &c.] Very early no doubt, and it is ſcarcely reaſonable to think he ſhould ſleep quietly after ſuch a riot, and his concubine or wife delivered up to the luſt of ſuch brutiſh creatures: and opened the doors of the houſe, and went out to go his way; either in ſearch of her, or rather to make the beſt of his way on his journey, to preſerve his own life, having given her up for loſt: and behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down at the door of the houſe, and her hands were upon the threſhold; in a poſture that perſons are when they fall, ſtretching out their hands to ſave themſelves what they can; or of ſuch who lay themſelves down to ſleep with their hands under their heads, and which her huſband thought was her caſe, by what follows.

℣. 28. And he ſaid unto her, up, and let us be going, &c.] He ſpoke to her as ſuppoſing her aſleep, in order to awake her, and prepare for their journey with all the haſte they could, leſt greater miſchief ſhould befal them: but none anſwered; for ſhe was dead; and her death was occaſioned, as Joſephus[w] ſays, partly through grief at what ſhe had ſuffered, and partly thro' ſhame, not daring to come into the ſight of her huſband; but chiefly through the injuries done her by the number of perſons that had lain with her: ſo it is reported[x] of the Theſſalonians, when they took Phocis, many women were deſtroyed through the abundance of rapes committed upon them. To theſe Abarbinel adds, the cold of the night, being without her clothes, or any thing to cover her: then the man took her up upon an aſs; and carried off her dead body, without making any remonſtrance to the inhabitants, from whom he could not expect that any juſtice would be done him: and the man roſe up, and got him unto his place; to his city on one ſide mount Ephraim, to which he made as much haſte as he could, inſtead of going to the houſe of God at Shiloh, as he propoſed; for now the circumſtances of things were changed with him, and inſtead of ſacrificing and giving praiſe to God in his houſe, his buſineſs was to ſeek for juſtice from the tribes of Iſrael.

℣. 29. And when he was come into his houſe, &c.] Having taken the dead body of his wife from off the aſs, and brought it in thither, and laid it in a proper place and order: he took a knife; a carving knife, ſuch as food is cut with, as the word ſignifies; the Targum is, a ſword: and laid hold on his concubine, and divided her, together with her bones, into 12 pieces; cut off her limbs at the joints of her bones, and made 12 pieces of them, according to the number of the tribes of Iſrael: and ſent her into all the coaſts of Iſrael; that is, to every tribe, as Joſephus ſays[y]: there was now no ſupreme magiſtrate to apply unto for juſtice, nor the court of 70 elders, and therefore he took this ſtrange and unheard-of method to acquaint the ſeveral tribes with the fact committed; this he did not out of diſreſpect to his wife, but to expreſs the vehement paſſion he was in on account of her death, in the way it was, and to raiſe their indignation at the perpetrators of it. Ben Gerſom thinks, he did not ſend to the tribe of Benjamin, where the evil was done; but Abarbinel is of another mind, and as Levi was not a tribe that lay together in one part of the land, but was ſcattered in it, pieces might be ſent to the two half tribes of Manaſſeh, as the one lay on the one ſide Jordan, and the other on the other, and ſo there were 12 for the 12 pieces to be ſent unto. So Ptolemy king of Egypt killed his eldeſt ſon, and divided his members, and put them them in a box, and ſent them to his mother on his birth-day [y]. Chytræus [z] writes, that about A. C. 140, a citizen of Vicentia, his daughter being raviſhed by the governor Carrarius, and cut to pieces, who had refuſed to ſend her to him, being ſent back again, he put up the carcaſs in a veſſel, and ſent it to the ſenate of Venice, and invited them to puniſh the governor, and ſeize upon the city.

[u] Antiq. l. 5. c. 2. §. 8. [w] Ut ſupra. [x] Herodot. Urania, ſive, l. 8. c. 33. [y] Ut ſupra.

℣. 30. And it was ſo, that all that ſaw it, &c.] The diſmembered pieces of the dead body, and were made acquainted with the cauſe of it; for ſo Joſephus [a] ſays, he gave the meſſengers a command to declare what was the cauſe of her death: ſaid, there was no ſuch deed done nor ſeen, from the day that the children of Iſrael came out of Egypt, unto this day; meaning not ſo much the cutting in pieces the dead body, and ſending it to different parts; though that was awful and ſhocking, as the complicated wickedneſs committed at Gibeah, which was the cauſe of it, to which reference is had, Hoſ. ix. 9. this is an obſervation of the writer of this book, Samuel; but what follows are the words either of thoſe the Levite ſent, who were bid to deliver them to thoſe to whom the pieces were ſent, or elſe of the perſons preſent at the time of the delivery of the pieces to them, or whom they got together to diſcloſe the matter to: conſider of it, take advice, and ſpeak your minds; well weigh and think of the matter within yourſelves, conſult with one another what is proper to be done, and give your opinion freely without any reſerve.

CHAP. XX.

THIS chapter relates, how that there was an aſſembly of the children of Iſrael at Mizpeh, upon what had happened to the concubine of the Levite, where he appeared and related the whole affair to them, ℣. 1—7. upon which they unanimouſly agreed to chaſtize the inhabitants of Gibeah for what they had done, ℣. 8—11. and in order to it ſent to the tribe of Benjamin to deliver up the guilty, but inſtead of that they took to their arms, and prepared for battle in defence of them, ℣. 12—17. and two battles enſued on this, in which the Iſraelites, who were on the right ſide of the queſtion, were worſted, ℣. 18—25. but upon their ſeeking the Lord again, and their humiliation before him, they engaged a third time in battle, and got an entire victory over the Benjaminites, and deſtroyed them all excepting 600 men, ℣. 26—48.

℣. 1. Then all the children of Iſrael went out, &c.] Of their tribes, cities, habitations, not every individual of them, but ſome of the chief of them, with a ſelect company with them: and the congregation was gathered together as one man; with as much unanimity and eaſe met together in one place, at the ſame time, as if only one man had been pitched upon and deputed for that purpoſe: from Dan even to Beerſheba; from the city Dan, lately built, which was in the moſt northern parts of the land of Canaan, to Beerſheba, a city in the moſt ſouthern part, which included all the tribes in the land of Canaan, who all, excepting Benjamin, aſſembled: with the land of Gilead; which lay on the other ſide Jordan, inhabited by the two tribes of Reuben and Dan, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, who alſo came on this occaſion: unto the Lord in Mizpeh; a city which lay upon the borders of Judah and Benjamin, and is therefore aſſigned to them both, Joſh. xv. 38. and xviii. 26. for this was not Mizpeh in the land of Gilead, but a city near to Shiloh; and, according to Fuller [b], eight miles from Gibeah, and ſo was a convenient place to meet at: it is not to be thought the tribes met here, by a ſecret impulſe upon their minds, but by a ſummons of ſome principal perſons in one of the tribes, very probably in the tribe of Ephraim, where the Levite dwelt, and in which was the tabernacle of the Lord, and of which the laſt ſupreme magiſtrate was, namely Joſhua; and all having notice of the occaſion of it, met very readily; and becauſe they aſſembled in the name and fear of God, and it was in the cauſe of God, and as a ſolemn aſſembly, a judicial one, in which God was uſually preſent, they are ſaid to be gathered unto him, and the rather, as they ſought for direction and counſel from him in the affair before them.

℣. 2. And the chief of all the people, &c.] The princes of the tribes and heads of families, rulers of thouſands, and hundreds, and fifties, and tens; or the corners [c], who were like the corner-ſtones in a building, which are not only the moſt valuable and ornamental, but the ſtrength of the building, which cement it, and ſupport it, and hold it together; though Abarbinel thinks, this intends the diviſion and ſeparation of each tribe, which encamped in a ſeparate corner and ſide by itſelf: but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt, and the meaning is, that the principal men of them, even of all the tribes of Iſrael; excepting the tribe of Benjamin: preſented themſelves in the aſſembly of the people of God; now gathered together: which aſſembly conſiſted, beſides the heads of them, of 400,000 footmen that drew ſword; or were armed men; there were 600,000 or more in Iſrael able to bear arms; but as now the wars in Canaan were pretty much at an end, the militia of the nation was not ſo regularly kept up, and many were employed in tilling the ground, and dreſſing the vines, and the like; and beſides, as there were none of the tribe of Benjamin preſent, it need not be wondered at there ſhould be no more, but rather that ſo many ſhould be gathered together on ſuch an occaſion.

℣. 3. Now the children of Benjamin heard that the children of Iſrael were gone up to Mizpeh, &c.] Having no doubt the ſame notice the reſt of the tribes had; but the thing complained of being done in their tribe, and by ſome of it, they might be willing to ſkreen the delinquents, or were careleſs about, and indifferent to the caſe, and ſecure and eaſy, as imagining their brethren would never go to war with them about it; or were proud and haughty, and would pay no regard to the ſummons given them: then ſaid the children of Iſrael, tell us, how was this wickedneſs? proclamation was made in the aſſembly, that if any perſon there knew any thing of this ſhocking affair, and horrid iniquity, which was the occaſion of their meeting together, that they would riſe up and declare what was the cauſe of it, how it came about, and by whom whom it was done; or they addreſſed themſelves particularly to the Levite, and his hoſt, and his ſervant, who might all be upon the ſpot to bear witneſs in this caſe, as it is certain the former of them was, who upon this ſtood up, and ſpoke as follows.

[y] Juſtin. e Trogo, l. 38. c. 8. [z] Apud Quiſtorp. in loc. [a] Ut ſupra. [b] Piſgah-Sight, b. 2. c. 12. p. 259. [c] פנות anguli, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Munſter, Vatablus, Druſius, Tigurine verſion.

℣. 4. And the Levite, the huſband of the woman that was ſlain, anſwered, and ſaid, &c.] He roſe up, and in anſwer to their requeſt, declared the whole affair as follows; and none ſo proper as he, who was upon the ſpot when it was done, and ſo near a relation of the deceaſed, and had a right to demand juſtice to be done; for from hence it appears, that ſhe was his lawful wife, though called a concubine: I came into Gibeah, that belongeth to Benjamin; which he ſo particularly deſcribes, to diſtinguiſh it from another of the ſame name in the tribe of Judah, leſt any miſtake ſhould be made, and an innocent people ſhould ſuffer in their reputation, or otherwiſe; and which alſo would account for the tribe of Benjamin not being preſent at this convention: I and my concubine, to lodge; thither they came, not with an intention to ſtay, to ſojourn there, and much leſs to do them any injury, or to infringe any of their rights and privileges; nor in the leaſt to be burdenſome to them, having brought all neceſſary proviſions with them for themſelves, ſervant and cattle, only to get a night's lodging with them.

℣. 5. And the men of Gibeah roſe againſt me, &c.] Not all of them, but ſome that dwelt in that city; he forbears giving them the character they juſtly deſerved, ſons of Belial. Theſe came in a tumultuous and violent manner, and beſet the houſe round about upon me by night; that he might not make his eſcape, reſolving if poſſible to get him into their hands, and do with him according to their will: and thought to have ſlain me; their firſt intention was to commit the unnatural ſin on him, and if he reſiſted, to ſlay him; but this he modeſtly conceals, as being a ſin not to be named in an aſſembly of ſaints; and beſides he might ſay this, becauſe he himſelf choſe rather to be ſlain then to ſubmit to their luſt, which he knew muſt be the caſe upon his refuſal and reſiſtance; and even if he had yielded, being over-powered, this would have been the conſequence, that he ſhould have been abuſed even unto death, as his wife was: and my concubine have they forced, that ſhe is dead; or afflicted, or humbled[a] her; which is a modeſt expreſſion for carnal knowledge of her, and which they had to ſuch exceſs, that ſhe died thro' it.

℣. 6. And I took my concubine, and cut her in pieces, &c.] Leſt it ſhould be thought that theſe barbarous creatures, after they had uſed her in ſuch a manner that occaſioned her death, that they had committed this fact alſo; the Levite takes it to himſelf, and owns that he did that: and ſent her throughout all the country of the inheritance of Iſrael; to alarm them, and excite their attention to what had paſſed, and to raiſe their indignation againſt it: for they have committed leudneſs and folly in Iſrael; being guilty of adultery and murder, and would have committed the unnatural crime, if they could have had an opportunity of doing it.

℣. 7. Behold, ye are all children of Iſrael, &c.] The deſcendants of one man that feared the Lord; were of one nation, and of one religion, men profeſſing godlineſs, and therefore ought to bear teſtimony againſt ſin and wickedneſs of every ſort, and eſpecially ſuch crying abominations as theſe: give here your adviſe and counſel; in this place, being aſſembled together on this occaſion; conſult what is beſt to be done, and let every man ſpeak his mind freely what ſtep he thinks ſhould be taken for the glory of God, and honour of religion, and to bring ſuch perſons to juſtice who had committed ſo foul a fact.

℣. 8. And all the people aroſe as one man, &c.] Either the heads of the people aſſembled in council, all agreed unanimouſly in one vote or reſolution, or all the 400,000 men were of the ſame mind, when the caſe was reported to them: ſaying, we will not any of us go to his tent, neither will we any of us turn into his houſe; that is, they would not return home, to take one night's reſt in their houſes, or attend to the buſineſs of their callings, or to any affair of life, however urgent, till ſatisfaction was made for the evil committed.

℣. 9. But now this ſhall be the thing which we will do to Gibeah, &c.] Where the fact was done; what follows was propoſed by ſome, and unanimouſly agreed to by all: we will go up by lot againſt it; caſt lots who ſhall go up to it, and demand ſatisfaction for the offence committed; and if denied, to act in an hoſtile manner againſt it.

℣. 10. And we will take ten men of an hundred, throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, &c.] Excepting that of Benjamin, which was not with them, not any of them: and a hundred out of a thouſand, and a thouſand out of ten thouſand; in all 40,000, out of the 400,000: to fetch victual for the people; ten men were to provide food for 90, and 100 men for 900, and 1000 men for 9000, in all 40,000, for 360,000; theſe were either to go to their own tribes and habitations, or to the towns and cities adjacent, to procure food for this large army; for they came from their homes without any proviſion, not knowing that the affair would retard them long; but perceiving that it would require time before is could be determined, they judged it the wiſeſt method for ſome to be appointed to take care of proviſion for the army, that it might not be ſcattered about on that account, but purſue the war with vigour till ſatisfaction was obtained: that they might do, when they came to Gibeah of Beniamin, according to all the folly that they have wrought in Iſrael; puniſh with death the delinquents, and chaſtize the inhabitants, and eſpecially the magiſtrates, for their connivance at ſuch wicked perſons among them, and negligence of doing their duty.

℣. 11. So all the men of Iſrael were gathered againſt the city, &c.] Of Gibeah, even 360,000 men: knit together as one man; went heart and hand together, united in their ſentiments and reſolutions, determining to have juſtice done, or loſe their lives in this cauſe: according to the Jews[c], this was on the 23d of Shebet, which anſwers to part of January and part of February, on which day a faſt was kept on this account.

℣. 12. And the tribes of Iſrael ſent men through all the tribes of Benjamin, &c.] Meaning the families of Benjamin; for as ſometimes a tribe is called a family, Joſh. vii. 17. ſo a family is called a tribe; and there were ten families in the tribe of Benjamin, according to the number of his ſons, the fathers of theſe families, ſee Gen. xlvi. 21. which being numerous and powerful, and conſiſting of men of courage, and expert in war, thought themſelves a match for the ten tribes of Iſrael now aſſembled, who ſent one out of each tribe, very pro-probably ten in all, upon this errand; for they judged it moſt adviſeable, before they went to war with them, to try to get the offenders delivered up to juſtice, and ſo prevent the ſhedding of blood of either ſide; and the rather, as there were none of the tribe of Benjamin at this aſſembly, and which indeed might give them reaſon to ſuſpect they meant not to join with them in an amicable manner in this affair: however, they were willing to try peaceable methods firſt: ſaying, what wickedneſs is this that is done among you? not that they were ſent to enquire what the crime was that was committed, that was fully known; but by putting the queſtion in this manner, their deſign was to aggravate it, and to put the men of Benjamin on conſidering how great it was, what an enormous ſin it was that was committed, and that among them; and therefore it lay upon them, either to puniſh the perpetrators of it themſelves, or deliver them up to them to be puniſhed according to the common law of Iſrael.

[a] affixerunt, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.

[c] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 580. §. 2.

℣. 13. Now therefore deliver us the men, the children of Belial, which are in Gibeah, &c.] Thoſe wicked men that were the authors of that abominable wickedneſs there committed: that we may put them to death; as they deſerved, ſince they were guilty both of adultery and murder; their meaning is, that they in conjunction with the tribe of Benjamin might adjudge them to death, and puniſh them with it, as their crime deſerved: and put away evil from Iſrael; prevent both the ſpread of ſuch a ſinful evil in the nation, encouraged by ſuch examples, and the evil of puniſhment coming upon them from God, ſhould they let ſuch wickedneſs paſs with impunity: but the children of Benjamin would not hearken to the voice of their brethren the children of Iſrael; they refuſed to give up the men of Gibeah, that had been guilty of ſuch great wickedneſs; reckoning it a reproach, as Joſephus [f] ſays, to obey the commands of others, for fear of war, and unwilling to yield to any in arms, neither on account of multitude nor courage.

℣. 14. But the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together out of the cities unto Gibeah, &c.] To protect and defend it againſt the other tribes, being a city of theirs, and where the perſons charged with the crime lived; theſe got together thither out of the ſeveral cities of the tribe of Benjamin, as many as could bear arms: to go out to battle againſt the children of Iſrael; they neither denied the fact, nor attempted to palliate and excuſe it, nor ſought for peace, but at once betook themſelves to arms; which ſhewed not only want of prudence, but pride, paſſion and ſelf-confidence, and that they were ſadly depraved in their morals to riſe up in defence of ſuch wicked men; and a ſtrange infatuation to expect ſucceſs againſt ſuch vaſtly ſuperior numbers, and in ſo bad a cauſe.

℣. 15. And the children of Benjamin were numbered at that time out of the cities, &c.] All that they could muſter up, and gather together out of their ſeveral cities, were no more than 26,000 men that drew the ſword; able-bodied men fit for war, and expert in it: beſide the inhabitants of Gibeah, which were numbered 700 choſen men; young, ſtout and ſtrong, and in all but 26,700; and what are theſe to an army of 400,000 men, or however 360,000 that came up againſt Gibeah, whilſt 40,000 were employed in getting proviſions for them? Joſephus [g] makes the number of the Benjaminites ſtill leſs, no more than 25,600, led thereunto by an after-account, that 25,000 Benjaminites were ſlain in the third and laſt battle, and only 600 eſcaped to a rock for ſafety, not conſidering that 1000 men may well be ſuppoſed to be loſt in the two firſt battles; for it would be ſtrange indeed, that they ſhould loſe none in two engagements with ſo large an army; the ſame error is committed in the Vulgate Latin verſion, which makes them no more than 25,000; with which agrees the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint verſion; though that, according to the Vatican exemplar, has but 23,000. The numbers in the Hebrew text are no doubt the right.

℣. 16. Among all this people there were 700 choſen men left-handed, &c.] According to Ben Gerſom, theſe were the 700 men of Gibeah; but this does not appear from the text, but on the contrary, that theſe were among all the people; or there were ſo many to be ſelected out of them all, who were left-handed men; nor is it likely that all the inhabitants of one place ſhould be ſuch. Benjamin ſignifies a ſon of the right-hand, yet this tribe had a great number of left-handed men in it, ſee ch. iii. 15. Joſephus [h] wrongly reduces the number to 500: every one could ſling ſtones at an hair's breadth, and not miſs; the mark they ſlung the ſtone at, ſo very expert were they at it; and perhaps their having ſuch a number of ſkilful men in this art, made them more confident of ſucceſs, and emboldened them in this daring undertaking, to point to which this circumſtance ſeems to be mentioned. There were a people that inhabited the iſlands, now called Majorca and Minorca, anciently Baleares, from their ſkilfulneſs in ſlinging ſtones, to which they were brought up from their childhood, as it is related by various writers, Strabo [i], Diodorus Siculus [k], Florus [l], and others [m]; that their mothers uſed to ſet their breakfaſt on a beam or poſt, or ſome ſuch thing, at a diſtance, which they were not to have, unleſs they could ſtrike it off; and the firſt of theſe writers ſays, that they exerciſed this art from the time that the Phœnicians held theſe iſlands; and, according to Pliny [n], the Phœnicians, the old inhabitants of Canaan, were the firſt inventers of ſlings, and from theſe the Benjaminites might learn it. The Indians are ſaid [o] to be very expert in ſlinging ſtones to an hair's breadth.

℣. 17. And the men of Iſrael, beſide Benjamin, &c.] Who did not join them in this affair, but oppoſed them, were numbered 400,000 men that drew ſword; ſee ℣. 2. all theſe were men of war; inured to it, ſkilful and courageous.

℣. 18. And the children of Iſrael aroſe, &c.] From Mizpeh, where they were aſſembled, having heard that the Benjaminites were gathered together to defend the men of Gibeah: and went up to the houſe of God; to the tabernacle which was in Shiloh, ch. xviii. 31. ſee Joſh. xviii. 1. though the Targum takes Bethel for the name of a place ſo called; and ſo do Ben Gerſom and Joſephus [p], which was near Shiloh, for Shiloh is ſaid to be on the northſide of Bethel, ch. xxi. 19. but as there is no reaſon to believe the tabernacle was now removed from Shiloh thither, ſo it is not likely they would go to any other place but where the tabernacle, ark, and high-prieſt were: and aſked counſel of God; before

[f] Antiq. l. 5. c. 2. §. 9.
[g] Ibid. §. 10.
[h] Ibid.
[i] Geograph. l. 3. p. 116.
[k] Bibliothec. l. 5. p. 298.
[l] Roman. Geſt. l. 3. c. 8.
[m] Vid. Barthii Animadv. ad Claudian. in 3 Conſul. Honor. ℣. 50.
[n] Nat. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 56.
[o] Philoſtrat. Vit. Apollon. l. 2. c. 12.
[p] Ut ſupra.

before Phinehas the high-prieſt, according to the judgment of Urim and Thummim, ℣. 28. and ſaid, which of us ſhall go up firſt to the battle againſt the children of Benjamin? there being no ſupreme magiſtrate, judge, or general to lead them; they did not aſk, whether they ſhould go to war or no with their brethren; they made no doubt of that, taking it for granted they had ſufficient reaſon for ſo doing, and that it was according to the will of God; nor did they enquire whether they ſhould be victorious or no, they made no doubt of being victorious, both from their ſuperior numbers, and the juſtneſs of their cauſe, they only enquire who ſhould lead them on, having no general; and this they might do, to prevent any contentions among them about precedency: and the Lord ſaid, Judah ſhall go up firſt; which tribe pitched their ſtandard firſt about the tabernacle, and marched firſt in their journies in the wilderneſs, and was ordered to go up firſt and fight the Canaanites, being a powerful and warlike tribe.

℣. 19. And the children of Iſrael roſe up in the morning, &c.] After they had had counſel at Shiloh, and which perhaps was by a deputation ſent thither: and encamped againſt Gibeah; formed a camp near Gibeah of 360,000 men, enough to have ſtormed and taken that city at once, one would think.

℣. 20. And the men of Iſrael went out to battle againſt Benjamin, &c.] From the place where they were encamped: and the men of Iſrael put themſelves in array to fight againſt them at Gibeah; not only againſt the inhabitants of Gibeah, but the children of Benjamin, that came to the defence of them; they formed themſelves in a line of battle, and prepared for an action.

℣. 21. And the children of Benjamin came forth out of Gibeah, &c.] Which was their place of rendezvous, and which they came to defend; and in and about which they had ſtationed their whole army of 26,000 men: and deſtroyed down to the ground; killed dead upon the ſpot: of the Iſraelites that day 22,000 men; wanting but 4000 of their whole number, excepting the men of Gibeah, which was ſuch a rebuff the Iſraelites did not expect, being engaged in ſo juſt a cauſe, and having ſuch a numerous army. Several Jewiſh writes [9] think, this was on account of their idolatry, that though they were very zealous to revenge corporal adultery in the caſe of the Levite's concubine, and to remove ſuch iniquity from Iſrael; yet were not zealous to revenge and put away ſpiritual adultery or idolatry in the caſe of the Danites, who had ſet up the image of Micah, and ſo had ſpread idolatry not only in their own tribe, but throughout Iſrael; and therefore God took this opportunity to avenge his own quarrel, and rebuke them for their ſin; and now did Benjamin raven as a wolf, according to Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. 27.

℣. 22. And the people, the men of Iſrael, encouraged themſelves, &c.] That though they had loſt a great number of men, yet ſtill their forces were large and greatly ſuperior to thoſe of Benjamin, and above all their cauſe was good: and ſet their battle again in array; formed a line of battle again facing their enemy, inviting to another battle, and bidding defiance: and in the place where they put themſelves in array the firſt day; by which it ſeems they kept the field of battle; though they loſt ſo many men they did not flee before the children of Benjamin, but ſtood their ground; nor were they ſo ſuperſtitious as to fancy the place unlucky; nor was it a bad ſituation they were in, to which their want of ſucceſs was owing, for then they would have changed it.

℣. 23. And the children of Iſrael went up and wept before the Lord until even, &c.] The evening of the day in which the battle was fought; not that the whole army went up to Shiloh to the houſe of God there, but a deputation of them, who lamented their defeat, and the loſs of ſo many lives, but not their ſins and tranſgreſſions, and particularly the idolatry they had been guilty of: and aſked counſel of the Lord, ſaying, ſhall we go up again to battle againſt the children of Benjamin my brother? they ſeemed to have ſome doubt by the loſs they ſuſtained, whether they were right in going to war with Benjamin, eſpecially as he was their brother; and therefore the queſtion now is, not who ſhould go up firſt, which was already determined, but whether they ſhould go at all; and ſtill they don't aſk any help of God in battle, nor ſucceſs, but were depending on their numbers, and the juſtneſs of their cauſe, and therefore neither is promiſed to them, only they have an anſwer to their queſtion: and the Lord ſaid, go up againſt him; for Benjamin was certainly in the wrong, and therefore the Iſraelites are directed to go againſt him, and they alſo were not ſufficiently chaſtized, nor thoroughly humbled.

℣. 24. And the children of Iſrael came near, &c.] To the city of Gibeah, drew nigh to battle: againſt the children of Benjamin the ſecond day; for the two battles were fought two days ſucceſſively.

℣. 25. And Benjamin went forth againſt them out of Gibeah the ſecond day, &c.] Flushed with the victory they had obtained the day before: and deſtroyed down to the ground of the children of Iſrael again 18,000 men, all theſe drew the ſword; were armed men; this with the 22,000 ſlain the day preceding, made 40,000; the ſame number ſingled out from among them by lot to provide food for them, and is thought by ſome to be the caſe Deborah refers to, ch. v. 8. and is what is certainly intended in Hoſ. x. 9.

℣. 26. Then all the children of Iſrael and all the people went up, and came unto the houſe of God, &c.] This looks as if the whole body of the army, with other people from parts adjacent, went up to the tabernacle of God in Shiloh: and wept and ſat there before the Lord; not only wept, but continued weeping, and that not merely for their defeat, but for their ſins, ſince it follows: and faſted that day until even; afflicted their bodies with faſting, which was a token of the humiliation of their ſouls for their ſins: and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the Lord; to make atonement for their ſins, and to implore ſucceſs on their arms.

℣. 27. And the children of Iſrael enquired of the Lord, &c.] By the Word of the Lord, as the Targum, and which has the ſame expreſſion in ℣. 18, 23. for the ark of the covenant of God was there in thoſe days; in Shiloh, where the tabernacle was.

℣. 28. And Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron, ſtood before it in thoſe days, &c.] Before the ark, miniſtring before the Lord, which ſhews that this affair was long before the times of Samſon, though placed after them; or otherwiſe Phinehas muſt have been more than 300 years of age, which which is not probable [r]. Phinehas's ſtanding before the ark was the poſture of the prieſt, when he enquired of the Lord for any by Urim and Thummim; the perſon that enquired ſtood before him that was enquired of, as Kimchi obſerves, and he that was enquired of ſtood before the Shekinah, or the preſence of the divine majeſty, of which the ark was a ſymbol: ſaying, ſhall I yet again go out to battle againſt the children of Benjamin my brother, or ſhall I ceaſe? in which the queſtion is put in ſomewhat different manner than before, not only deſiring to know whether it was the will of God they ſhould renew the battle or not, ſince Benjamin was their brother, but whether they ſhould have ſucceſs or not; intimating, that if the Lord would bleſs and ſucceed them, they were willing to go up, but if not they choſe to deſiſt; for they were fully convinced now they were wrong in depending on their numbers, or the juſtneſs of their cauſe; whereas ſucceſs depended wholly on the will and pleaſure of God, to which they deſired to ſubmit: and the Lord ſaid, go up, for to-morrow I will deliver them into thine hand; now they are not only directed to go up to the battle, but are promiſed victory.

[9] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 103. 2. Pirke Eliezer, c. 28. Jarchi & Kimchi in loc.

℣. 29. And Iſrael ſet liers in wait round about Gibeah.] For though they were aſſured of ſucceſs and victory, yet they thought proper to make uſe of means; and though their numbers were very great, they had recourſe to art and ſtratagem, and ſet an ambuſh in divers places, much in like manner as Iſrael did for the men of Ai; the two caſes being pretty much ſimilar; this ambuſh was ſet in the night, as Joſephus ſays [s].

℣. 30. And the children of Iſrael went up againſt the children of Benjamin on the third day, &c.] Not the day following the ſecond battle, ſince it would take more time to go to Shiloh, and faſt and offer ſacrifices there, but on the third day from the ſecond battle: and put themſelves in array againſt Gibeah, as at other times; as they had done on the firſt and ſecond days of battle.

℣. 31. And the children of Benjamin went out againſt the people, &c.] Sallied out of Gibeah upon them, where they had put themſelves in array againſt them: and were drawn away from the city; the Iſraelites retreating, and diſſembling a flight, which drew the Benjaminites to purſue after them, by which means they were drawn off to a greater diſtance from the city of Gibeah: and they began to ſmite of the people, and kill as at other times; at the other two battles: in the highways; where it ſeems two ways met: of which one goeth up to the houſe of God; to Bethel, as the Targum [t]; or rather to Shiloh, where the houſe or tabernacle of God was, and was two miles from Gibeah, as Bunting [u] ſays: and the other to Gibeah in the field; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from the other Gibeah ſituated on an hill: about thirty men of Iſrael; which were killed in this running fight; and it ſeems as if one part of the army of Iſrael took one road, and the other the other road, and ſo divided the army of the Benjaminites that purſued after them.

℣. 32. And the children of Benjamin ſaid, they are ſmitten down before us, as at firſt, &c.] At the firſt battle, which gave them great ſpirit, and they concluded they ſhould have victory, as before: but the children Iſrael ſaid, let us flee, and draw them from the city unto the highways; pretending to be afraid of them, and not able to face them, and therefore made as if they fled through fear and cowardice, which inſpired the Benjaminites with freſh ardour to purſue them cloſely, and ſo were drawn from the city to the highways, as expreſſed in the preceding verſe.

℣. 33. And all the men of Iſrael roſe up out of their place, &c.] The main body of the army, which fled before Benjamin, when they were come to a proper place, ſtopped, and roſe up out of it, and ſtood in their own defence: and put themſelves in array at Baal-tamar; drew up in a line of battle at that place, facing their enemies, in order to engage with them: this place the Targum calls the plains of Jericho, that being the city of palm-trees, which Tamar ſignifies; and ſo Jarchi interprets it; but theſe are too far off, it muſt be ſome place near Gibeah. Jerom [w] ſpeaks of a little village in his time in thoſe parts, called Bethamari, and may be thought to be this ſame place; perhaps in the times of the old Canaanites here was a grove of palm-trees, in which Baal was worſhipped, from whence it had its name: and the liers in wait of Iſrael came forth out of their places, even out of the meadows of Gibeah; or plain of Gileah, as the Targum; for as the city was built on a hill, at the bottom of it were a plain and fine meadows of graſs, and here an ambuſh was placed at ſome little diſtance from the city; and when the army of the Benjaminites were drawn off from it, in purſuit of Iſrael, theſe came forth and placed themſelves between them and the city.

℣. 34. And there came againſt Gibeah 10,000 choſen men out of all Iſrael, &c.] Which, according to Ben Gerſom, were the liers in wait; and came from the ſouth, as the Targum ſays: and the battle was ſore; not between thoſe liers in wait, and the Benjaminites, but between thoſe at Baal-tamar, and them who ſet themſelves in battle-array againſt them, and they fought ſtoutly on both ſides: but they knew not that evil was near them; that there was an ambuſh laid, by which they were in great danger; they knew nothing of the 10,000 men that were now come out againſt Gibeah, and were between them and that.

℣. 35. And the Lord ſmote Benjamin before Iſrael, &c.] Gave Iſrael the victory over them at Baal-tamar; for notwithſtanding all the art and ſtratagem they uſed, their numbers and their valour, victory was of the Lord, and to him it is aſcribed; for until now Benjamin, though fewer in number, had been always victorious: and the children of Iſrael deſtroyed of the Benjaminites that day 25,100; which is the total ſum of all that were ſlain of them that day, the particulars of which are afterwards given: all theſe drew the ſword; were armed men.

℣. 36. So the children of Benjamin ſaw that they were ſmitten, &c.] Their forces broken and worſted, many being killed: for the men of Iſrael gave place to the Benjaminites; at firſt, and made as if they were afraid of them, and ſo fled before them, which was only to decoy them to a greater diſtance from the city of Gibeah: becauſe they truſted unto the liers in wait, which they had ſet beſide Gibeah; that theſe would not only enter the city, and burn it, but meet the Benjaminites fleeing back to it, when they ſhould turn upon them and ſmite them, and ſo cut off all that remained of them.

℣. 37. And the liers in wait haſted, &c.] When the time was come agreed upon for them to riſe out

[r] Vid. Rainold. de lib. Apocryph. Prælect. 149, 150. p. 345, 353, 354.
[s] Ut ſupra, §. 11.
[t] So the Septuagint, and Noldius, p. 69. No. 345.
[u] Travels, &c. p. 121.
[w] De loc. Heb. fol. 89. I.

out of their ambuſh: and ruſhed upon Gibeah; at unawares, with great force and violence entered the city, and took poſſeſſion of it; or extended [x], or ſpread themſelves unto it; before they lay cloſe in a narrow compaſs, but now they put themſelves in a regular order, and marched rank and file, and reached from the meadows in which they were, ℣. 33. to the city: and the liers in wait drew themſelves along; along the city, in every part of it, ſpread themſelves all over it, and made themſelves maſters of every corner of it; or made a long ſound [y] with a trumpet, protracted that to a great length, which was done to terrify the inhabitants, or to let the Iſraelites know they were poſſeſſed of the city: and ſmote all the city with the edge of the ſword; old men, women and children, who were not able to bear arms.

℣. 38. Now there was an appointed ſign between the men of Iſrael, and the liers in wait, &c.] Or an appointed time [z], as the Targum; ſo Kimchi and Abarbinel. There was a time fixed, at which the men of Iſrael propoſed to be at Baal-tamar, exactly when the Benjaminites would be drawn at a proper diſtance from the city, and then the liers in wait were to break forth, and ruſh upon it, and enter it: and that they ſhould make a great flame with ſmoke to riſe up out of the city; ſet it on fire, and cauſe the fire to burn fiercely, that there might be a large aſcent of flame and ſmoke to be ſeen afar off; which, when the men of Iſrael ſaw, they would know the city was taken.

℣. 39. And when the men of Iſrael retired in the battle, &c.] Which is before expreſſed by their fleeing, and giving place to the Benjaminites, and was only an artifice of theirs to draw them off from the city: Benjamin began to ſmite, and kill of the men of Iſrael about thirty perſons; which was done in the highways leading to Shiloh and Gibeah in the field, ℣. 31. for they ſaid, ſurely they are ſmitten down before us as in the firſt battle; when the greater number of the Iſraelites were ſlain by them.

℣. 40. But when the flame began to ariſe up out of the city with a pillar of ſmoke, &c.] Fire being ſet to it by the liers in wait, who had entered it, and who made a large fire, which cauſed a vaſt pillar of flame and ſmoke to ariſe, which might be ſeen a great way off: the Benjaminites looked behind them; perhaps at hearing the blowing of the trumpet, and the long ſound of that: and behold, the flame of the city aſcended up to heaven; went upwards, and reached to a great height.

℣. 41. And when the men of Iſrael turned again, &c.] Turned their faces to the Benjaminites, on whom they had turned their backs; and which they did on hearing the ſound of the trumpet, or ſeeing the flame of the city, or both, and that in order to fight the Benjaminites, and ſmite them, as now was their opportunity: the men of Benjamin were amazed; at this ſtrange and ſudden change of things, at the ſight of the flame of their city behind them, and at the Iſraelites turning back to fight them, when they thought themſelves ſure of victory, as at other times: for they ſaw that evil was named upon them; that they were in the utmoſt danger, between two fires, as we uſually ſay, liers in wait behind them, which had ſeized their city and burnt it, and the army of Iſrael turning upon them with great ſpirit and reſolution.

℣. 42. Therefore they turned their backs before the men of Iſrael, &c.] And fled from them: unto the way of the wilderneſs; what wilderneſs is not certain, perhaps the wilderneſs of Judah; they did not turn directly back towards Gibeah, perceiving that was taken, and in the hands of a body of men that would meet them, and therefore they turned on one ſide towards the wilderneſs, if happily they could make their eſcape thither, and ſhelter themſelves: but the battle overtook them; that is, they that made war, as the Targum, the Iſraelites that were engaged in battle with them, purſued them, and overtook them: and them which came out of the cities they deſtroyed in the midſt of them; either the Iſraelites that came out of their cities to aſſiſt their brethren, deſtroyed the Benjaminites as they fled, or the Benjaminites who came out of other cities to Gibeah, theſe were deſtroyed in the midſt of it, with the inhabitants, by the liers in wait, when they entered it.

℣. 43. Thus they encloſed the Benjaminites round about, &c.] Surrounded them on all ſides, the army of Iſrael being poſted in different places, and people coming out of all the cities to their aſſiſtance. Joſephus [a] ſays, they were forced into, and cooped up, in a hollow place in a valley, ſo that they could not eſcape: and chaſed them; or cauſed to purſue [b]; calling after them a purſuit, crying to one another as they went along, ſaying, purſue them, purſue them; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi; which cry, as it inſpired the purſuers with zeal, ſo the purſued with terror: and trod them down with eaſe; they making no reſiſtance, being quite diſpirited; the Targum is, "from the houſe of their reſt," where they took up their reſt, and deſigned to reſt that night, but could not, being ſo cloſely purſued, and diligently ſought after. Some take menuchah, rendered eaſe, to be the name of a place, from or unto which they were purſued and trodden down, ſee 1 Chron. ii. 52. and ſo the Septuagint ſeems to take it for the name of a place, rendering it, from Noua: over-againſt Gibeah, towards the ſun riſing; that is, as Jarchi interprets it, to the eaſt of Gibeah, there was this overthrow and ſlaughter made.

℣. 44. And there fell of Benjamin 18,000 men, &c.] Juſt the number they had ſlain of Iſrael in the ſecond battle. This is the number of them that were ſlain when Iſrael turned upon them, and by that time they got to the eaſt of Gibeah; afterwards 5000 more were ſlain on the high ways, and 2000 near Gidom, as after related: all theſe were men of valour; as appears by three times facing and engaging with the army of Iſrael, ſo vaſtly ſuperior to them, and twice beating them.

℣. 45. And they turned and fled toward the wilderneſs unto the rock of Rimmon, &c.] Which ſignifies a pomegranate; perhaps it was in the form of one, and may be the ſame as in 1 Sam. xiv. 2. where Saul is ſaid to be under a pomegranate tree, or under Rimmon, the rock Rimmon, for that is ſaid to be near Gibeah, as this was. There was a village in the times of Jerom called Remmon, 15 miles from Jeruſalem to the north [c], but could not be near this rock to have its name from thence; hither the reſt of the army fled for ſhelter: and they gleaned of them in the highways 5000 men; who were ſcattered one from another, and as they were found in the highways, and picked up, they were [x] יתמתחו extenderunt ſe, Tigurine verſion.

[y] ימשך pertraxerunt buccinæ ſonitum, Pagninus; ſo Jarchi
[z] המועד tempus conſtitutum, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[a] Ut
[b] הרדיפהו perſequi fecerunt eum, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; vel eos, Vatablus.
[c] De
fol. 94. B.

were ſlain one after another, juſt as ears of corn are gleaned one by one, after the harveſt is got in, or as grapes in ſingle berries, after the vintage is over: and purſued hard after them unto Gidom; which perhaps had its name from the cutting off of the Benjaminites there: and ſlew 2000 men of them; that is, 2000 more beſides the 5000 before mentioned.

℣. 46. So that all which fell that day of Benjamin were 25,000 men, &c.] it is before ſaid 25,100, ℣. 35. here the 100 are omitted, and the round number of thouſands given, which is no unuſual way of ſpeaking and writing: the whole army of Benjamin conſiſted of 26,700, of which 18,000 were ſlain the field of battle, 5000 in the highways, and 2000 at Gidom, in all 25,000; and we may ſuppoſe 100 as they were ſtraggling in the road, or found in bye places, or are not mentioned with either of the thouſands for the ſake of a round number, and 600 fled to the rock Rimmon; as for the other 1000, it is highly probable they fell in the two firſt battles, as Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel rightly ſuppoſe; for it is not credible, that though they got ſuch amazing victories, it was without the loſs of men, and theſe are as few as well can be imagined. Jarchi thinks theſe thouſand fled to the cities of Benjamin, and were ſlain when the Iſraelites entered them, as after related, ℣. 48. which is much more probable than a tradition they have, that they went into the land of Romania, and dwelt there. Now all thoſe that were ſlain, were men that drew the ſword; ſoldiers, not huſbandmen, artificers, &c. but armed men: all theſe were men of valour; even thoſe that fled, who choſe rather to loſe their lives than aſk for quarter.

℣. 47. But 600 men, &c.] Who were all that were left of 26,700: turned and fled to the wilderneſs; turned out of the highway or common road, and being ſwift of foot, got to a wilderneſs, what wilderneſs is not certain; unto the rock Rimmon, and abode in the rock Rimmon four months; very probably in a cave of that rock, which might be large enough to hold ſuch a number; Saul is ſaid to have juſt the ſame number under it, and David had alſo a like number in a cave at Engedi, 1 Sam. xiv. 2. and xxiii. 13. and xxiv. 3. and from hence theſe men might ſend out of their number to fetch in proviſion for them from parts adjacent, after the heat of the action was over, and the rage and fury of the Iſraelites ſubſided.

℣. 48. And the men of Iſrael turned again upon the children of Benjamin, &c.] After they had deſtroyed their army, the city of Gibeah, and the inhabitants of it: not content with this, in their wrath and fury, turned and went, and ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, as well the men of every city; even men, women and children, in every city of Benjamin, at leaſt all that lay in their way; and which they might do to be avenged on them, for ſending out their militia againſt them, which had made ſuch a ſlaughter among them to the loſs of 40,000 men, or to fulfil their oath, that ſuch who came not to Mizpeh ſhould be put to death; for which reaſon alſo the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead, as well as of the cities of Benjamin, were put to death, men, women and children, dealing in the ſame ſeverity with them, as with the Canaaniti/h nations, or as with a city given to idolatry: as the beaſt, and all that came to hand; ſpared no living creature, herds and flocks: alſo they ſet on fire all the cities that they came unto; which belonged to the tribe of Benjamin, ſo exceedingly wroth were they with them, for protecting ſuch that had been the authors of ſuch abominable wickedneſs, and for the loſs of the lives ſo many valuable men.

CHAP. XXI.

THIS chapter relates how that when the Iſraelites came to be cool, and ſeriouſly to reflect on what had paſſed, they were ſore grieved, and much lamented the caſe of Benjamin, and were particularly concerned what they ſhould do for wives for thoſe few men that remained, that the tribe might be built up again, ℣. 1—7. and for theſe they provided wives, partly out of Jabeſh-gilead, the inhabitants of which came not up to the convention at Mizpeh, and therefore they ſmote them, men, women and children, only reſerved 400 virgins, whom they gave to the men of Benjamin, ℣. 8—15. and partly from among the daughters of Shiloh, taken at a yearly feaſt there, the taking of whom was connived at, the other number not being ſufficient, ℣. 16—25.

℣. 1. Now the men of Iſrael had ſworn in Mizpeh, &c.] Where they were there convened, before the war began; after they had heard the account the Levite gave of the affair, which brought them thither; and after they had ſent meſſengers to Benjamin to deliver up the men of Gibeah, that had committed the wickedneſs; and after they perceived that Benjamin did not hearken to their demand, but prepared to make war with them; then, as they reſolved on the deſtruction of Gibeah, and of all the cities that ſent out men againſt them, even all the inhabitants of them, men, women and children, entered into an oath, that they would not uſe thoſe men that remained as heathens, and not intermarry with them, as follows: ſaying, there ſhall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife; ſeeing thoſe that uſed the wife of the Levite in ſuch a baſe manner, and thoſe that protected and defended them, deſerved to have no wives.

℣. 2. And the people came to the houſe of God, &c.] Not to the city Bethel, as the Targum, Septuagint, and other verſions, but to Shiloh, where were the tabernacle and ark; and this is to be underſtood of the army after they had utterly deſtroyed the Benjaminites: hence we read of the camp in Shiloh, ℣. 12. here they came not ſo much to rejoice, and be glad, and to return thanks for the victory they had at laſt obtained, as to lament the unhappy caſe of the tribe of Benjamin, and to have counſel and advice, and conſider of ways and means to repair their loſs: and abode there till even before God; faſting and praying, inſtead of feaſting and rejoicing: and lift up their voices, and wept ſore; not ſo much, or at leaſt not only for the 40,000 Iſraelites that were ſlain, but for the tribe of Benjamin, in danger of being loſt, as follows.

℣. 3. And ſaid, O Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] Jehovah, the only living and true God, the Being of beings, eternal, immutable, omnipotent and omnipreſent, the God of all Iſrael, of the twelve tribes of Iſrael, their Covenant-God and Father; who had ſhown favour to them in ſuch a peculiar and gracious gracious manner, as he had not to other nations, and therefore hoped he would ſtill have a kind regard unto them, and ſuffer them to expoſtulate with him in the following manner: why is this come to paſs in Iſrael; expreſſing, as Abarbinel thinks, a concern for the 40,000 men of Iſrael which fell in the two firſt battles; but it manifeſtly refers to the caſe in the next words: that there ſhould be to-day one tribe lacking in Iſrael; meaning the tribe of Benjamin, which was all deſtroyed, excepting ſix hundred men, and theſe had no wives to propagate the tribe; and therefore unleſs ſome proviſion could be made for that, it muſt in a ſhort time be totally extinct; for which they expreſs great concern, it not being their intention when they made the above oath to extirpate them; but ſuch were now the circumſtances of things in providence, that it muſt periſh unleſs ſome way could be found to relieve it, and which their oath ſeemed to preclude; and this threw them into great perplexity.

℣. 4. And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the people roſe early, &c.] The day after their faſting and prayer, and a ſenſe of their preſent caſe and circumſtances being deeply impreſſed upon their minds, they roſe early in the morning to acts of devotion, and exerciſes of religion, hoping that being in the way of their duty, the difficulties with which they were perplexed would be removed, and built there an altar; if this place was Bethel, as Kimchi reaſons, there Jacob had built an altar; but that in ſuch a courſe of years might have been demoliſhed: and if it was Shiloh, there was the tabernacle, and ſo the altar of the Lord there; wherefore this either ſignifies the repairing of that, being in ruins, which is not likely, ſince it was but lately uſed, ch. xx. 26. or the building of a new one, which to do in the tabernacle was not unlawful, eſpecially when the number of ſacrifices required it, which it is highly probable was the caſe now, as it was at the dedication of the temple, 1 Kings viii. 64. though the above-mentioned writer thinks, that building an altar ſignifies, as in many places, only ſeeking the Lord; but the uſe for which it was built is expreſſed: and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings; both to atone for the ſins they had been guilty of in the proſecution of the war, and to return thanks for victory given, and to implore freſh favours to be beſtowed upon them.

℣. 5. And the children of Iſrael ſaid, &c.] One to another, after they had offered their ſacrifices, and whilſt they were together in Shiloh: who is there among all the tribes of Iſrael, that came not up with the congregation unto the Lord? when they were ſummoned to come to Mizpeh, to conſult together about the affair of the Levite's concubine, as appears by what follows: for they had made a great oath; in a very awful and ſolemn manner, with a curſe annexed to it, as that about not giving a wife to Benjamin, ℣. 18. concerning him that came not up to the Lord to Mizpeh; not about him, who did not go out to battle againſt Benjamin, nor about every individual that did not come to conſult about it; but every city that did not ſend their proper repreſentatives or quota to aſſiſt in that affair: he ſhall ſurely be put to death; this was ſent along with the [illegible]ions, in order to quicken their attention to [illegible]

℣. 6. And the children of Iſrael repented them for Benjamin their brother, &c.] Not that they went to war with them, as if their cauſe was not good; but for the ſeverity they had exerciſed towards them, eſpecially in deſtroying their women and children, and for the fatal conſequences like to follow hereon, particularly the diſſolution of the whole tribe: and ſaid, there is one tribe cut off from Iſrael this day; that is, there is a likelihood or great danger of it.

℣. 7. How ſhall we do for wives for them that remain, &c.] By which it ſeems, as well as by what is after related, that they knew of the ſix hundred men hid in the rock Rimmon: ſeeing we have ſworn by the Lord; by the Word of the Lord, as the Targum; and ſuch an oath with them was a ſacred thing, and to be kept inviolable, even to their own hurt: that we will not give them of our daughters to wives; as in ℣. 1. and therefore they muſt either marry among the heathens, which was forbidden, or they muſt make void their oath, or the tribe in a little time would be extinct; theſe were difficulties they knew not how to ſurmount, and this was the object of their enquiry.

℣. 8. And they ſaid, what one is there of the tribes of Iſrael that came not up to Mizpeh to the Lord, &c.] This is aſked not only to bring them to juſtice, and put them to death, according to their oath, who ſhould be found guilty, ℣. 5. but as an expedient to find wives for the ſurviving Benjaminites; ſince theſe, as they came not to Mizpeh, ſo conſequently ſwore not that they would not give their daughters to Benjaminites; wherefore from among them wives might be given to them, without the violation of an oath: and behold, there came none to the camp from Jabeſh-gilead to the aſſembly; this was obſerved by ſome upon the queſtion put, which cauſed an enquiry to be made as after related. This city was in the land of Gilead, from whence it had its name, on the other ſide Jordan, and is placed by Adrichomius [a] in the half tribe of Manaſſeh; and Jerom [b] ſays it was a village in his time 6 miles from the city Pella, upon a mountain, as you go to Geraſa.

℣. 9. For the people were numbered, &c.] To know who did come up, and who did not, and particularly to know whether the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead did or not, againſt whom an information was brought: and behold there were none of the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead there; for as yet none that came had returned home; all came to Shiloh firſt, to pay their devotion to the Lord; and as none were found among the living, it did not appear they were among the ſlain; and very probably the muſter-roll was taken before they went to battle, and they were not on that.

℣. 10. And the congregation ſent thither 12000 men of the valianteſt, &c.] That were in their army; in the Vulgate Latin verſion it is only 10,000; but the Targum, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and Joſephus [c], agree with the Hebrew text. This place, according to Bunting, to which this army was ſent, was 52 miles from Shiloh [d]: and commanded them, ſaying; theſe were the orders they gave them, when they marched out: go and ſmite the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead with the edge of the ſword, with the women and the children; which it ſeems was according to the oath they had made, ℣. 5.

℣. 11.

[a] [illegible]m Terræ S. p. 90. &c. p. 121.

[b] De loc. Heb. fol. 88. K. & fol. 93. L.

[c] Ut ſupra.

℣. 11. And this is the thing that ye ſhall do, &c.] Which they gave them in charge to execute: ye ſhall utterly deſtroy every male; without any reſerve, young or old, married or unmarried: and every woman that hath lien by man; whether lawfully or unlawfully, in a married or unmarried ſtate.

℣. 12. And they found among the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead 400 young virgins, &c.] Or damſel virgins[c]; damſels that were virgins: that had known no man by lying with any male; which was judged of by their age, and by their unmarried ſtate, and by common report, unleſs it can be thought they were examined by matrons; but how it was that they were not obliged, or did not think themſelves obliged by their oath to put theſe to death, as well as others, is not eaſy to ſay; whether they thought the neceſſity of the caſe would excuſe it, or they had a diſpenſation from the Lord for it, on conſulting him; however ſo it was: and they brought them unto the camp to Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan; this is obſerved becauſe that Jabeſh-Gilead was not in the land of Canaan, from whence they were brought, but in the land of Og king of Baſhan; only what was on this ſide Jordan was the land of Canaan, and in that Shiloh was, to which they were brought; and this ſhews that not the city Bethel, but Shiloh, was the place whither the people or army of Iſrael came to offer ſacrifice after the war was ended.

℣. 13. And the whole congregation ſent ſome to ſpeak to the children of Benjamin, &c.] Sent ſome meſſengers to them, to call them, and deſire them to come to them: that were in the rock Rimmon; the 600 men who had hid themſelves in a cave in it, of which the people of Iſrael were informed: and to call peaceably unto them; to proclaim peace to them, and aſſure them of it, and to let them know that they had no ill deſign againſt them, that they might come ſafely to them, and would be kindly received and protected by them.

℣. 14. And Benjamin came again at that time, &c.] The 600 Benjaminites returned with the meſſengers at the ſame time to the people of Iſrael, putting confidence in the aſſurances they had given them of peace and ſafety: and they gave them wives which they had ſaved alive of the women of Jabeſh-Gilead; in doing which they ſuppoſed they had not violated their oath, ſince though they had ſworn that they would not give their own daughters, they had not ſworn they would not give the daughters of others; and beſides as the men of Jabeſh-Gilead were not at Mizpeh when the oaths were made, they had taken none, and ſo their daughters might be given in marriage to the Benjaminites, notwithſtanding that oath: and yet ſo they ſufficed them not; there were not wives enough for them all; for they were 600 men, whereas the daughters of the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead were but 400, ſo that there were 200 more wanting. Abarbinel interprets the word we render ſo in a different manner by right, as in Numb. xxvii. 7. and gives the ſenſe thus, that it was not a point of juſtice and judgment to do this to the daughters of Jabeſh-Gilead, namely, to ſave and give them in marriage; but they did this becauſe the people repented for Benjamin, as follows.

℣. 15. And the people repented them for Benjamin, &c.] That they had deſtroyed all their women, and that they had ſaved no more of the daughters of Jabeſh-Gilead, not a ſufficient number to be wives to the Benjaminites: becauſe the Lord had made a breach in the tribes of Iſrael; by almoſt deſtroying one of them; for though this was done by the Iſraelites, yet by the permiſſion and according to the will of God, and through his over-ruling providence.

℣. 16. Then the elders of the congregation ſaid, &c.] This being the caſe, that there were not wives enough for them, they were obliged to conſult again, and conſider of another expedient to provide for them; and this motion came from the elders of the people, not only in years, but in office: how ſhall we do for wives for them that remain; the other 200 who had none: ſeeing the women are deſtroyed out of Benjamin? and ſo no wives to be had there; and as for the Iſraelites which came to Mizpeh, who were of all the tribes of Iſrael, they had ſolemnly ſworn that they would not give any of their daughters to them, and therefore it was a very difficult thing to provide wives for them.

℣. 17. And they ſaid, there muſt be an inheritance for them that be eſcaped of Benjamin, &c.] The eſcaped are the 600 men in the rock Rimmon; four hundred of them were ſupplied with wives, the other two wanted; and as there was an inheritance divided by lot to the tribe of Benjamin, to that tribe and to that only it belonged, and they muſt have it and no other; it now of right devolved on theſe 600 men, and them only, and therefore proviſion muſt be made to increaſe their number, that they may occupy the inheritance they have a right to, rebuild their cities, till their land, cultivate their vineyards and olive-yards, and enjoy all the advantages of their poſſeſſions: that a tribe be not deſtroyed out of Iſrael; but the full number of the tribes be preſerved, and their inheritances belonging to them, according to the predictions of Jacob and Moſes, and the aſſignment of them by lot unto them by Joſhua.

℣. 18. Howbeit we may not give them wives of our daughters, &c.] Though their caſe was ſo very neceſſitous and deſperate: for the children of Iſrael have ſworn, ſaying, curſed be he that giveth a wife to Benjamin, ℣. 1. and therefore without the violation of their oath could not give any of their daughters in marriage to them; wherefore ſome other way muſt be deviſed to help them.

℣. 19. Then they ſaid, &c.] Some of the elders that ſat in council, debating this matter, and conſidering of ways and means to aſſiſt their brethren the Benjaminites, and preſerve their tribe from being loſt: behold there is a feaſt of the Lord in Shiloh yearly; where the tabernacle then was, and before which the males of Iſrael were obliged to appear three times of the year; and this was one of them, as is clear by its being called a feaſt of the Lord; and therefore cannot deſign any civil feſtival, or fair kept for trade and commerce. Some have thought of the feaſt of the paſſover, but it is moſt likely to be the feaſt of tabernacles, as Abarbinel takes it to be; which in Jewiſh writings is emphatically called the feaſt; and the time of year when that was kept was a time of great rejoicing, on account of the fruits of the earth being gathered in, and the reading of the law, and eſpecially at the time of drawing of water at this feaſt; inſomuch that it is ſaid[f], that he who never ſaw the rejoicing at drawing of water, never ſaw rejoicing in his life, which was attended with piping, and

[c] נערה בתולה puellam virginem, Montanus; puellas virgines, Pagninus, Tigurine verſion, Druſius, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

[f] Miſn. Succah, c. 5. §. 1, 4. Vid. Maimon Hilchot Lulab, c. 8. §. 13.

and dancing, and ſinging. It is pretty ſtrange what Kimchi notes, that this may be either one of the above feaſts, or the day of atonement, at which he ſays the daughters of Iſrael uſed to go and dance in the vineyards, according to the words of the Rabbins; when though that is reckoned among the feaſts, Lev. xxiii. it was properly a faſt, as it is called Acts xxvii. 9. and all tokens of feſtivity and joy were forbidden on it; and where theſe words of their Rabbins are to be met with he ſays not: in a place which is on the north ſide of Bethel; we rightly ſupply in a place; for the intention is not to deſcribe the ſituation of Shiloh, which was well known, but a place not far from it, where at this feſtival the daughters of Shiloh uſed to dance: on the caſt-ſide of the highway that goeth up from Bethel to Shechem; this place lay to the eaſt of a public road, that led from Bethel to Shechem: and on the ſouth of Lebonah; which Mr. Maundrell [f] takes to be a place now called Kane Leban, which ſtands on the eaſt-ſide of a delicious vale, having a village of the ſame name ſtanding oppoſite to it on the other ſide of the vale; one of theſe places, either that Kane or the village is ſuppoſed to be the Lebonah mentioned Judg. xxi. 19. to which both the name and ſituation ſeem to agree.

℣. 20. Therefore they commanded the children of Benjamin, &c.] The 200 men of the tribe that wanted wives; they ordered them as follows, and which they ſpake with authority, being the elders of the congregation, ℣. 16. ſaying, go and lie in wait in the vineyards; which might belong to Shiloh, or it may be to Lebonah, which perhaps is the ſame with Beth-Laban, famous for its wine with the Miſnic writers; who ſay [g] the ſecond places for wine are Beth-rimah and Beth-laban; and I ſuſpect that Beth-rimah is the ſame with Beth-rimmon, near which was the rock Rimmon theſe men were in; now this being the time of year when the vintage was juſt over, the vines were full of branches and leaves, under which the men might the better hide themſelves; and the grapes being gathered, there were no men in the vineyards, and ſo might lie in wait ſafely, and under cover.

℣. 21. And ſee and behold, if the daughters of Shiloh come out to dance in dances, &c.] As they uſed to do at this feſtival, not along with men, but by themſelves; and ſo might the more eaſily be taken and carried off; and though only males were obliged to appear from all parts at this feaſt, yet females might come if they would; and no doubt from neighbouring places at leaſt many did; however the daughters of Shiloh, who dwelt where the tabernacle was, theſe always attended the feaſt with demonſtrations of joy, and among the reſt with dancing, and that as expreſſive of ſpiritual and religious joy, as in the caſe of Miriam, and the Iſraelitiſh woman, Exod. xv. 20. and as in latter times the moſt religious men uſed to expreſs their joy at this feaſt: now the 200 men in the vineyards, which lay near the field where theſe virgins uſed to dance at this time, were to watch and obſerve when they came out of the city thither, and were engaged in ſuch an exerciſe: then come ye out of the vineyards, and catch you every man his wife of the daughters of Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin; they are directed to ruſh out at once upon them, as they were dancing, ſecure as they thought from moleſtation and danger; and they were to take every one one, not more, and go off directly with them to their own tribe.

℣. 22. And it ſhall be when their fathers or their brethren come unto us to complain, &c.] Of this rape of their daughters or ſiſters, or to bring an action againſt them, and deſire they might be ſummoned before them, the elders of the people, and be tried and judged according to law for what they had done; or to put them upon going to war with them again for ſuch treatment of them: that we will ſay unto them, be favourable unto them for our ſakes; for the ſake of the elders, who adviſed them to do what they did; or for the ſake of us Iſraelites, your ſake and ours, who were too ſevere upon them, and proſecuted the war with too much vigour, which made what they have done neceſſary, or otherwiſe a tribe muſt have been loſt in Iſrael: becauſe we reſerved not to each man his wife in the war; either in the war with Benjamin, which they carried on with ſuch wrath and fury as to deſtroy all the women, ſo that there were no wives left for the men that remained, which they now repented of; or in the war with Jabeſh-Gilead, they did not reſerve enough of the women taken, only 400 virgins, whereas there were 600 men; but the firſt ſeems beſt: for ye did not give unto them at this time that you ſhould be guilty; the meaning is, that if they had any uneaſineſs upon their minds about the oath which they had taken, not to give any of their daughters in marriage to Benjamin, they need not be diſturbed at that, ſince they did not give them to them, but theſe took them by force; which was the ſcheme theſe elders contrived to ſecure from the violation of the oath. This they propoſed to ſay to quiet them, and make them eaſy, to which other things might have been added; as that theſe were their brethren, and not ſtrangers they were married to, and not to mean men, but to men of large eſtates, having the whole inheritance of the tribe of Benjamin devolved upon them; and their daughters would be the original mothers of the poſterity of that tribe in ſucceeding ages.

℣. 23. And the children of Benjamin did ſo, &c.] Went and laid wait in the vineyards, and when the daughters of Shiloh came out to dance, they ruſhed upon them: and took them wives according to their number; two hundred of them, each man a wife, and no more; for though polygamy was in uſe in thoſe times, and if at any time neceſſary, and could be excuſed, it might ſeem now; yet it was not indulged to, neither by the elders, nor by the children of Benjamin: of them that danced whom they caught; the rape of the Sabine virgins by Romulus, at the cirque plays and ſhows, mentioned by various authors [h]; and the carrying off of 15 Spartan virgins from the dances by Ariſtomenes the Meſſenian [i], are ſometimes obſerved as parallel caſes to this, and juſtified by it, particularly that of Romulus [k]: and they went and returned unto their inheritance; the 600 Benjaminites, with their wives, returned to their own tribe, which was their inheritance by lot; and theſe being the only ſurvivors, had a right to the whole: and repaired the cities and dwelt in them; in proceſs of time they rebuilt the cities the Iſraelites had burnt in the late war, and repeopled them as their poſterity increaſed. And the Jewiſh writers ſay, that in after times they were allowed to marry with other tribes as before, ſince

[f] ney from Aleppo, p. 63.
[g] Miſn. Menachot, c. 8. §. 6.
[h] Liv. Hiſt. l. 1. p. 7, 8. Rom. l. 1. c. 1. Aurel. Victor. de vir. illuſtr. c. 2. Valer. Maxim. l. 1. c. 4.
[i] Hieron. adv. Jo- l. fol. 17. B, C.
[k] Vid. Albericum Gentil. de armis Roman. l. 2. p. 114.

ſince the oath only bound thoſe preſent at Mizpeh; for they obſerve, that it ran only, there ſhall not any of us, &c. not, not any of our ſons; they might give wives to Benjamin, and ſo in time they became numerous again.

℣. 24. And the children of Iſrael departed thence at that time, every man to his tribe and to his family, &c.] The war being ended, and things ſettled as well as circumſtances would admit of, for the preſervation of the tribe of Benjamin, who were the cauſe of it, and had ſuffered ſo much in it; the Iſraelites that had met at Mizpeh, and who had not fallen in the war, returned to their reſpective countries, to their wives and children, and the buſineſs of their callings: and they went out from thence every man to his inheritance; divided by lot to them, to their eſtates and poſſeſſions, which each had a right unto.

℣. 25. In thoſe days there was no king in Iſrael, &c.] No ſupreme magiſtrate, Joſhua being dead, and as yet no judge in Iſrael had riſen up; for all related in the five laſt chapters of this book, were done between the death of Joſhua, and the time of the judges: every man did that which was right in his own eyes; there being none to reſtrain him from it, or puniſh him for it; and this accounts for the many evil things related, as the idolatry of Micah and the Danites, the baſe uſage of the Levite's concubine, the extreme rigour and ſeverity with which the Iſraelites treated their brethren the Benjaminites, the ſlaughter of the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead, and the rape of the daughters of Shilah.

The R U T H.

THIS book is called Ruth, not becauſe ſhe was the author of it, but becauſe ſhe is the principal ſubject of it. In the Syriac and Arabic verſions, it is called the book of Ruth the Moabiteſs, which deſcribes her by the country of which ſhe was. Her name, according to Hillerus [l] ſignifies beautiful, of a good aſpect, the ſame with Calliope in Greek. As to the author of this book, ſome attribute it to Eli the prieſt, who ſeems to have been too ſoon to give an account of the birth of David; others to Gad or Nathan; ſome to Hezekiah, and others to Ezra; but what the Talmudiſts aſſert, which is moſt generally received, and moſt probable, is, that it was written by Samuel; ſo they ſay Samuel [m] wrote his own book, Judges, and Ruth; and it is commonly ſaid that this book is an appendix to that of the judges, and an introduction to Samuel, and is fitly placed between them both. According to Euſebius [n], with the Hebrews, Judges and Ruth make one book they call Shophetim or Judges; the prineipal deſign of it is to give the genealogy of David, whom Samuel had anointed to be king of Iſrael, and from whom the Meſſiah was to come, and who therefore may be ſaid to be the aim and ſcope of it, as he is of all ſcripture; and whereby it appears that he ſprung both from Jews and Gentiles, and is the ſaviour of both, and there is a good foundation for both to hope in him; and the call and converſion of Ruth the Moabiteſs, may be conſidered as a ſhadow, emblem, and pledge of the converſion of the Gentiles. Many things beſides may be learnt from this little book, as the different circumſtances of good people in this life, and the particular providence of God reſpecting them. It furniſhes out examples of bearing afflictions patiently, of induſtry, courteouſneſs, kindneſs to ſtrangers, and young converts; and none can doubt of the divine authority of this book, that conſiders the uſe made of it in the genealogies of Chriſt by the evangeliſts Matthew and Luke.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter treats of a family that removed from the land of Canaan to the land of Moab on account of a famine, where the father of it and his two ſons died, and each of them left a widow, ℣. 1—5. the mother-in-law propoſed to return to her own country, and ſet forward with her two daughters in law, whom, when they had gone a little way with her, ſhe intreated to go back, and expoſtulated with them about it, ℣. 6—13. upon which one of them did, but the other, Ruth, the ſubject of this book, reſolved to go the journey with her, ℣. 14—18. and they both came to Bethlehem, the former reſidence of her mother-in-law Naomi, who was greatly taken notice of by her old friends and acquaintance, to whom ſhe related her preſent circumſtances, ℣. 19—22.

℣. 1. Now it came to paſs, in the days when the judges ruled, &c.] So that it appears that this hiſtory is of time and things after the affair of Micah, and of the concubine of the Levite, and of the war between Iſrael and Benjamin; for in thoſe times there was no king nor judge in Iſrael; but to what time of the judges, and which government of theirs it belongs to, is not agreed on. Joſephus [o] places it in the government of Eli, but that is too late for Boaz, the grandfather of Jeſſe, the father of David, to live. Some Jewiſh writers, as Jarchi, ſay it was in the times of Ibzan, who they ſay [p] is the ſame with Boaz, but without proof, and which times are too late alſo for this hiſtory. The Jewiſh chronology [q] comes nearer the truth, which carries it up as high as the times of Eglon, king of Moab, when Ehud was judge; and with which Dr. Lightfoot [r] pretty much agrees, who puts this hiſtory between the third and fourth chapters of Judges, and ſo muſt belong to the times of Ehud or Shamgar. Junius refers it to the times of Deborah and Barak; and others [s] on account of the famine, think it began in the times when the Midianites oppreſſed Iſrael, and carried off the fruits of the earth, which cauſed it, when Gideon was raiſed up to be their judge; Alting [t] places it in the times of Jephthah; ſuch is the uncertainty about the time referred to: that there was a famine in the land; the land of Canaan, that very fruitful country. The Targum ſays this was the ſixth famine that had been in the world, and

[l] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 211.
[m] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 15. 2.
[n] Eccl. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 25.
[o] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 9. §. 1.
[p] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 91. 1. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 8. 2. Jarchi & Abendana in loc
[q] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 12. p. 33.
[r] Works, vol. I. p. 48.
[s] Rambachius in loc. & Majus in ib. ſo Bp. Patrick. Lampe Hiſt. Eccl l. 1. c. 5. p. 22.
[t] Theolog Hiſt. loc. 2. p. 84.

and it was in the days of Boaz, who is called Ibzan the juſt, and who was of Bethlehem-Judah; but it is more probable that it was in the days of Gideon, as before obſerved, than in the days of Ibzan: and a certain man of Bethlehem-Judah; ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from another Bethlehem in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 15. which had its name from the fruitfulneſs of the place, and the plenty of bread in it, and yet the famine was here; hence this man with his family removed from it: and went to ſojourn in the country of Moab; where there was plenty; not to dwell there, but to ſojourn for a time, until the famine was over: he and his wife, and his two ſons; the names of each of them are next given.

℣. 2. And the name of the man was Elimelech, &c.] Which ſignifies my God is king, as he was king over Iſrael. In the times of the judges, the government was a theocracy; the judges were raiſed up immediately by the Lord, and ruled under him; the Targum calls him a great man, and ſo Jarchi; and it is very likely he was, eſpecially if it be true what is ſaid in the Jewiſh chronology [u], that he was the brother of Salmon, prince of the tribe of Judah; and it is certain that Boaz the ſon of Salmon was a kinſman of his, ch. ii. 1. and the name of his wife Naomi; which ſignifies ſweet, pleaſant, very likely a comely perſon, and of a ſweet diſpoſition; a name of the ſame ſignification with Naamah, the ſiſter of Tubal Cain, Gen. iv. 22. and according to the Talmudiſts ſhe was Elimelech's brother's daughter; for they ſay [w], that Elimelech, Salmon, and the kinſman, (ſpoken of in this book) and the father of Naomi, were all of them the ſons of Nahſhon, prince of the tribe of Judah; the ſame Jarchi obſerves on ℣. 22. and the name of his two ſons Mahlon and Chilion; which ſeem to have their names from weakneſs and conſumption, being perhaps weakly and conſumptive perſons; and it appears they both died young. It is a tradition of the Jews, mentioned by Aben Ezra, that theſe are the ſame with Joaſh and Saraph, who are ſaid to have dominion in Moab, 1 Chron. iv. 22. which is not likely: Ephrathites of Bethlehem-Judah; Jarchi interprets Ephrathites by men of worth and eſteem; and the Targum is, Ephrathites, great men of Bethlehem-Judah; but no doubt they were called ſo, becauſe Ephratah was one of the names of Bethlehem, Gen. xxxv. 19. Mic. v. 2. ſo called from its fruitfulneſs; though Aben Ezra thinks it had its name from Ephratah the wife of Caleb; but it was ſo called in the time of Moſes, as in the paſſage referred to: and they came into the country of Moab, and continued there; unto their death; all excepting Naomi, who returned when ſhe heard the famine was over.

℣. 3. And Elimelech Naomi's huſband died, &c.] According to Joſephus [x], after he had dwelt in the land ten years, and had married his two ſons to Moabitiſh women; but, as Alſhech obſerves, the text ſhews that whilſt he was living they were not married to them, but after his death; and it is ſaid of them only that they dwelt there about ten years; ſo that it is moſt probable that their father died quickly after he came into the land of Moab: and ſhe was left and her two ſons; in a ſtrange land, ſhe without a huſband, and they without a father.

℣. 4. And they took them wives of the women of Moab, &c.] Not before they were proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, as Aben Ezra thinks, and which ſeems plainly to be the caſe of Ruth; at leaſt ſhe was ſo afterwards, if not before; and alſo of Orpah, as the ſame writer concludes from ℣. 15. though others are of a different opinion, and ſome excuſe their marriage, and others condemn it as unlawful, among whom is the Targumiſt, who paraphraſes the words, "and they tranſgreſſed the decree of the Word of the Lord, and took to them ſtrange wives of the daughters of Moab;" however it was ſo permitted by the Lord, and ordered in providence, that from one of them the Meſſiah might ſpring: and the name of the one was Orpah; ſhe was married to Chilion; and Alſhech gathers from hence, that the youngeſt was married firſt before his brother: and the name of the other Ruth; the Targum adds, "the daughter of Eglon, king of Moab;" and that ſhe was his daughter, or the daughter of his ſon, is a notion commonly received with the Jews [y], though without any juſt foundation; ſhe was married to Mahlon, ch. iv. 10. one Philo [z] aſſerts theſe two women to be own ſiſters, for what reaſon does not appear; and a Jewiſh writer [a] ſays they were both daughters of Eglon, king of Moab: and they dwelt there about ten years; that is, Mahlon and Chilion, who married theſe women; which is to be reckoned either from the time they came into the land, or from the time of their marriage; the latter ſeems to be the caſe from the connexion of the words.

℣. 5. And Mahlon and Chilion died alſo both of them, &c.] As well as their father in the land of Moab, after they had lived with their wives in it about ten years; the Targum is, "becauſe they tranſgreſſed the decree of the Word of the Lord, and joined in affinity with ſtrange people, their days were cut off;" or ſhortened: and the woman was left of her two ſons and her huſband; deprived both of her huſband and her ſons, which was a great affliction, aggravated by her being in a ſtrange country; many are the afflictions of the righteous.

℣. 6. Then ſhe aroſe with her daughters-in-law that ſhe might return from the country of Moab, &c.] After the death of her two ſons, and having heard of the ceaſing of the famine in Iſrael, ſhe had a deſire to go into her own country, where ſhe would have better opportunities of ſerving the Lord; and having no heart to ſtay in Moab, an idolatrous country, where ſhe had loſt her huſband, and her two ſons; and therefore prepared for her journey, and ſet forward, and her two daughters-in-law with her, to accompany her ſome part of the way; for it does not appear to be their intention, at leaſt at firſt ſetting out, to go with her into the land of Canaan; and therefore it is only ſaid, that they aroſe that ſhe might return, &c. for ſhe had heard in the country of Moab; which was near the land of Iſrael, the borders of it reaching to the ſalt-ſea; the Targum ſays, ſhe heard it by the mouth of an angel, but it is highly probable it was by common fame: that the Lord had viſited his people in giving them bread; that he had been kind and gracious to the people of Iſrael, by granting them plenty of proviſions; which might be their happy caſe after Gideon had vanquiſhed the Midianites,

4

[u] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 12. p. 34. Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 8. 1.
[w] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 91. 1.
[x] Ut ſupra.
[y] T. Bab. Nazir, fol. 23. 2. Sotah, fol. 47. 1. Sanhedrin, fol 105. 2. Horayot, fol. 10. 2. Zohar in Deut. fol. 109. 2.
[z] Apud Druſium in loc.
[a] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 8. 1.

Midianites, who came yearly, and deſtroyed and carried off the fruits of the earth, which had cauſed a famine; ſee Judg. vi. 3, 4, 5, 6. and viii. 28. It ſeems as if the famine had continued 10 years, ſee ℣. 4. nor need this be thought incredible, ſince there was a famine in Lydia, which laſted 18 years [b].

℣. 7. Wherefore ſhe went forth out of the place where ſhe was, &c.] What part of Moab ſhe had dwelt in, and now removed from, is not ſaid; it is called the country or field of Moab, ſhe returned from; hence ſome have thought, that ſhe and her huſband, and her ſons, did not live in any of the cities of Moab, but in a field; either becauſe the Moabites would not ſuffer them to dwell in their cities, only allowed them to pitch their tents in their fields; or they choſe to dwell there, that they might as much as poſſible avoid converſation with them, and be preſerved from their idolatry, and other corruptions: and her two daughters-in-law with her; who out of reſpect to her, accompanied her ſome part of the way, as relations and friends uſually did: and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah; they went along with her to the border of the land of Judah, in her return thither; for returning can only be ſaid of her with any propriety, becauſe her two daughters had never been there; that was not the country from whence they came, and therefore could not be ſaid to return thither.

℣. 8. And Naomi ſaid to her two daughters-in-law, &c.] When they were come, as it is very probable, to the utmoſt limits of the land of Moab, and to the borders of the land of Iſrael: go return each unto her mother's houſe; the mother's houſe is mentioned, and not the father's, not becauſe they had no father living; for it is certain Ruth had a father as well as a mother, ch. ii. 11. but becauſe mothers are moſt affectionate to their daughters, and they moſt converſant together; and becauſe women in thoſe times had apartments to themſelves, and who uſed to take their daughters to them when become widows; though ſuch was the ſtrong love of thoſe young widows to their mother-in-law, that they choſe rather to dwell with her, whilſt ſhe lived in Moab, than with their own mothers: the Lord deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me; that is, with their huſbands, who were dead; as the Targum is, that they refuſed to marry men after their death; or rather it reſpects their affectionate care of their huſbands, and behaviour towards them when living, as well as the reſpect they ſhewed to their memory, at and ſince their death; and alſo their filial duty to her, both before and ſince; and particularly, as the Targum expreſſes it, in that they had fed and ſupported her.

℣. 9. The Lord grant you, &c.] Some make a ſupplement here, the Targum a perfect reward, Aben Ezra an huſband; and ſo Joſephus ſays [c], ſhe wiſhed them happier marriages, than they had with her ſons, who were ſo ſoon taken from them; but a ſupplement ſeems needleſs, for what follows is connected with the wiſh, and contains the ſum of it: that you may find reſt; each of you: in the houſe of her huſband; that is, that they might each of them be bleſſed with a good huſband, with whom they might live free from brawls and contentions, as well as from the diſtreſſing cares of life, having huſbands to provide all things neceſſary for them, and ſo from all the ſorrows and diſtreſſes of a widowhood-eſtate: then ſhe kiſſed them; in token of her affection for them, and in order to part with them; it being uſual then as now for relations and friends to kiſs at parting: and they lift up their voice and wept; to think they muſt part, and never ſee one another more; their paſſions worked vehemently, and broke out in ſobs, and ſighs, and tears, and loud crying.

℣. 10. And they ſaid unto her, &c.] When they had vented themſelves in cries and tears, and had recovered their ſpeech: ſurely we will return with thee unto thy people; to be proſelyted, as the Targum; not only to dwell with them, but to worſhip with them.

℣. 11. And Naomi ſaid, turn again my daughters, &c.] Suppoſing this reſolution of theirs only aroſe from a natural affection, and not from any love to the God or people of Iſrael; at leaſt doubting whether it was ſo or no, and willing to try whether any one, or both of them, were really from a principle of religion inclined to go with her; and deſirous that they would thoroughly conſider what they did, leſt they ſhould repent and apoſtatize, and bring a reproach upon the true religion: why will ye go with me? what reaſon can you give? this ſhe ſaid in order to get out of them, if there was any real inclination in them to the true worſhip and ſervice of God; though ſhe keeps out that from her own queſtions put to them as follows, that it might come purely from themſelves: are there yet any more ſons in my womb, that they may be your huſbands? is there any likelihood that I ſhould ever have any ſons to be inſtead of huſbands, or really huſbands to you? can it be thought that at my age, ſuppoſing I had an huſband, or an huſband's brother to marry me, that there is in me a natural power of conceiving and bearing children? this therefore can ſurely be no inducement to you to go along with me; for ſome, as Jarchi, think ſhe refers to the law of a huſband's brother marrying his widow, and raiſing up ſeed to him, which was known among the Gentiles before it was given to Iſrael; ſee Gen. xxxviii. 8. Deut. xxv. 5. to which Aben Ezra rightly objects, that that law reſpects a brother by the father's ſide, and not by the mother's only; to which may be added, that this law was not binding on a brother unborn, but on one that was living before the death of his brother; beſides if this law had been in her mind, it would rather have furniſhed out an encouraging reaſon for them to go with her, ſince there were kinſmen of her ſons, to whom they might be married, as one of them afterwards was.

℣. 12. Turn again my daughters, go your way, &c.] This ſhe repeated ſtill to try their affections to her, and eſpecially whether there was any real love to the God of Iſrael, his people, and worſhip, but ſtill proceeds upon the ſame topick: for I am too old to have an huſband; and can never think of marrying again on account of age, nor can you ſurely ever think I ſhould, at theſe years I am now arrived to: if I ſhould ſay I have hope; of marrying, and bearing children; ſuppoſe that: if I ſhould have a huſband alſo to-night; be married to a man directly, ſuppoſe that: and ſhould alſo bear ſons; conceive and bear, not female but male children, allow that; all which are mere ſuppoſitions, and could they be admitted, would not furniſh out any reaſon why you ſhould be deſirous of going with me.

℣. 13. Would you tarry for them till they were grown?

[b] Herodot. Clio, ſive, l. 1. c. 94.

[c] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 9. §. 1.

grown? &c.] It is not to be thought that they would tarry till ſhe was married and had children, and then till theſe infants were grown up to mens eſtate, and be marriageable; for though Tamar tarried for Shelah, yet he was born, and of ſome years of age, tho' not a grown man, Gen. xxxviii. 11, 14. would ye ſtay for them from having huſbands? they were young widows, and it was fit they ſhould marry again; and it could not be imagined, that they would deny themſelves having huſbands, in expectation of any ſons of her's: nay, my daughters; I am well ſatisfied you will never tarry for them, nor deprive yourſelves of ſuch a benefit; it is unreaſonable to ſuppoſe it: for it grieveth me much for your ſakes; that ſhe could be of no manner of ſervice to them, either to give them huſbands, or to ſupport and maintain them, ſhould they go with her; or I have exceedingly more bitterneſs than you [d]; her condition and circumſtances were much worſe than theirs; for though they had loſt their huſbands, ſhe had loſt both huſband and children: or it was more bitter and grievous to her to be ſeparated from them, than it was for them to be ſeparated from her; her affection to them was as ſtrong, or ſtronger than theirs to her; or they had friends in their own country that would be kind to them, but as for her, ſhe was in deep poverty and diſtreſs, and when ſhe came into her own country, knew not that ſhe had any friends left to take any notice of her: that the hand of the Lord is gone out againſt me; in taking away her huſband and children, and reducing her to a low eſtate, pennyleſs and friendleſs; ſo poor, as it appears, that her daughter-in-law, when come to the land of Canaan, was obliged to glean for the livelihood of them both, as in the next chapter.

℣. 14. And they lift up their voice, and wept again, &c.] Not being able to bear the thought of parting, or that they muſt be obliged to it: and Orpah kiſſed her mother-in-law; gave her the parting kiſs, as the Jews [e] call it; and which was uſed by other people [f]; but not without affection to her, and took her leave of her, as her kiſs teſtified, ſince it muſt be ſo; and being moved by her reaſons, and having a greater inclination to her own country than Ruth had; of the kiſs at parting, ſee Gen. xxxi. 28. 1 Kings xix. 20. but Ruth clave unto her; hung about her, would not part from her, but cleaved unto her in body and mind; forſaking her own people, and her father's houſe; neither the thought of them, nor of her native country, nor of not having an huſband, or any likelihood of it, nor of poverty and diſtreſs, had any manner of influence upon her, but determined ſhe was to go and abide with her.

℣. 15. And ſhe ſaid, &c.] That is, Naomi to Ruth, after Orpah was gone: behold, thy ſiſter-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her gods; meaning Orpah, who was the wife of her huſband's brother, as the word uſed ſignifies; ſhe was not only on the road turning back to her own country and people, but to the gods thereof, Baal peor or Priapus, and Chemoſh, Numb. xxi. 29. and xxv. 3. from whence Aben Ezra concludes, that ſhe had been a proſelyte to the true religion, and had renounced the gods of her nation, and retained the ſame profeſſion whilſt her huſband lived, and unto this time, and now apoſtatized, ſince ſhe is ſaid to go back to her gods; and in this he is followed by ſome chriſtian interpreters [g], and not without reaſon: return thou after thy ſiſter-in-law; this ſhe ſaid, not that in good earneſt ſhe deſired her to return, at leaſt to her former religion, only relates, though not as approving of, the conduct of her ſiſter, rather as upbraiding it; but to try her ſincerity and ſtedfaſtneſs, when ſuch an inſtance and example was before her.

℣. 16. And Ruth ſaid, intreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee, &c.] Don't make uſe of any arguments to perſuade me to go back: or do not meet me, or be againſt me [h]; don't meet me with objections, or be in my way, or an hindrance to me, in going along with thee; don't be againſt it, for to be againſt that was to be againſt her inclination, deſires and reſolutions, and againſt her intereſt: for whither thou goeſt I will go; let the country ſhe was going to, be what it would, though unknown to her, and though ſhe ſhould never ſee her own country any more: and where thou lodgeſt, I will lodge; though in ever ſo mean a cottage, or under the open air: thy people ſhall be my people; whom I ſhall chuſe to dwell among, and converſe with; whoſe religion, laws and cuſtoms ſhe ſhould readily comply with, having heard much of them, their wiſdom, goodneſs and piety, of which ſhe had a ſpecimen and an example in Naomi, and by whom ſhe judged of the reſt: and thy God my God; not Chemoſh, nor Baal-peor, nor other gods of the Moabites, be they what they will, but Jehovah, the God of Naomi, and of the people of Iſrael. So a ſoul that is truly brought to Chriſt affectionately loves him, and heartily cleaves unto him, reſolves in the ſtrength of divine grace to follow him, the Lamb, whitherſoever he goes or directs; and is deſirous to have communion with none but him, and that he alſo would not be as a wayfaring man, that tarries but a night; his people are the excellent of the earth, whom to converſe with is all his delight and pleaſure; and Chriſt's God is his God, and his Father is his father: and, in a word, he determines to have no other Saviour but him, and to walk in all his commands and ordinances.

℣. 17. Where thou dieſt, will I die, and there will I be buried, &c.] She was determined to abide with her unto death, and not only was deſirous to die as ſhe did, but where ſhe ſhould die; in the ſame country, cottage and bed, and be laid in the ſame grave, in hope of riſing together at the reſurrection of the juſt; having no regard at all to the ſepulchres of her fathers, which people in all ages and countries have been fond of being laid in, as an honour and happineſs. So with the Greeks and Romans, not only relations, but intimate friends, and ſuch as had a ſtrong affection for each other, were ſometimes buried in the ſame grave, as Crates and Polemon [i], Paris and Œnome [k], and others [l]; ſee Gal. ii. 20. Col. ii. 12. and iii. 1. the Lord do ſo to me, and more alſo, if ought but death part thee and me; this is the form of oath ſhe uſed for confirmation of what ſhe had ſaid, and to put an end to the debate on this ſubject; what ſhe imprecates upon herſelf is not expreſſed, ſhould ſhe otherwiſe do than what ſhe ſwears to; leaving Naomi [d] מר לי מאד מכם amaritudo mihi (eſt) valde præ nobis, Montanus, Rambachius; ſo Pagninus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius.

[e] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 70. fol. 62. 4. Shemot, §. 5. fol. 94. 4.

[f] ——— diſcedens oſcula nulla dedi. Ovid. ep. 3. ℣. 14.

[g] Clericus & Rambachius.

[h] אל תפגעי בי ne occurras mihi, Vatablus, Rambachius; ne obſtes me, Tigurine verſion; ne adverſeris mihi, V. L. Druſius; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

[i] Laërt. in vita Cratet.

[k] Strabo. Geograph. l. 13. p. 410.

[l] Vid. Kirchman. de funer. Roman. l. 3. c. 14. p. 433.

Naomi to ſupply it in her own mind, and as being what was not fit to be named, and the greateſt evil that could be thought to befal a perjured perſon.

℣. 18. When ſhe ſaw that ſhe was ſtedfaſtly minded to go with her, &c.] That ſhe was ſtrong in her reſolutions, and ſtedfaſt in her determinations not to go back to her own country, but to go forward with her; and nothing could move her from the firm purpoſe of her mind, which was what Naomi wanted to make trial of: then ſhe left ſpeaking unto her; that is, upon that head of returning home; otherwiſe, no doubt upon this a cloſe, comfortable, religious converſation enſued, which made their journey the more pleaſant and agreeable.

℣. 19. So they two went until they came to Bethlehem, &c.] Went on their way directly till they came to it, without lingering or ſtaying by the way, at leaſt not unneceſſarily, and not for any time; and they kept together, though Ruth was a younger woman, and could have gone faſter, yet ſhe kept company with her ancient mother, and was no doubt very much edified and inſtructed by her pious converſation; and it ſeems that they were alone, only they two; for as they had no camels nor aſſes to ride on, but were obliged to travel on foot, ſo they had no ſervants to wait upon them, and aſſiſt them in their journey, ſuch were their mean circumſtances: and it came to paſs, when they were come to Bethlehem; had entered the city, and were ſeen by ſome that formerly had known Naomi, or at leaſt to whom ſhe made herſelf known: that all the city was moved about them; the news of their arrival was ſoon ſpread throughout the place, and the whole city rang of it; ſo the Septuagint verſion, all the city ſounded; it was all the talk every where, it was in every body's mouth, that Naomi, who had been ſo long out of the land, and thought to be dead, and it was not expected ſhe would ever return more, was now come; and this drew a great concourſe of people in a tumultuous manner, as the word ſignifies, to ſee her; and as it may denote a corporal motion of them, ſo the inward moving and working of their paſſions about her; ſome having pity and compaſſion on her to ſee ſuch a change in her perſon and circumſtances; others treating her with ſcorn and contempr, and upbraiding her for leaving her native place, and not content to ſhare the common affliction of her people, intimating that ſhe was rightly treated for going out of the land at ſuch a time into a ſtrange country; and others were glad to ſee their old neighbour again, who had always behaved well among them; ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions, all the city rejoiced; many no doubt knew her not, and would be aſking queſtions about her, and others anſwering them, which is commonly the caſe of a croud of people on ſuch an occaſion: and they ſaid, is this Naomi? that is, the women of the place ſaid ſo, for the word is feminine; and perhaps they were chiefly women that gathered about her, and put this queſtion in a way of admiration; is this Naomi that was ſo beautiful, and uſed to look ſo pleaſant and comely, and now ſo wrinkled and ſorrowful! who uſed to dreſs ſo well, and now in ſo mean an habit! that uſed to be attended with maidens to wait on her, and now alone! for, as Aben Ezra obſerves, this ſhews that Elimelech and Naomi were great perſonages in Bethlehem formerly, people of rank and figure, or otherwiſe there would not have been ſuch a concourſe of people upon her coming, and ſuch enquiries made and queſtions put, had ſhe been formerly a poor woman.

℣. 20. And ſhe ſaid, call me not Naomi, call me Mara, &c.] The one ſignifying proſperity, according to Joſephus [m], and the other grief; but he is not always happy in his interpretation of Hebrew words, or to be depended on; by this indeed her different ſtates are well enough expreſſed, and he rightly obſerves, that ſhe might more juſtly be called the one than the other; but the words ſignify, the one ſweet and pleaſant, and the other bitter, ſee Exod. xv. 23. and the reaſon ſhe gives confirms it: for the almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me; had wrote bitter things againſt her, brought bitter afflictions on her, which were very diſagreeable to the fleſh, as the loſs of her huſband, her children, and her ſubſtance; ſee Lam. iii. 15, 19.

℣. 21. I went out full, &c.] Of my huſband and children, as the Targum; of children and riches, as Aben Ezra and Jarchi; wherefore ſome Jewiſh writers blame her and her huſband for going abroad at ſuch a time, and aſcribe it to a covetous diſpoſition, and an unwillingneſs to relieve the poor that came to them in their diſtreſs, and therefore got out of the way of them, on account of which they were puniſhed, ſo Jarchi on ℣. 1. ſee Judg. ii. 15. but this is ſaid without any juſt cauſe or reaſon that appears: and the Lord hath brought me home again empty; deprived of her huſband, children and ſubſtance; ſhe acknowledges the hand of God in it, and ſeems not to murmur at it, but to ſubmit to it quietly, and bear it patiently: why then call ye me Naomi; when there is nothing pleaſant and agreeable in me, nor in my circumſtances: ſeeing the Almighty hath teſtified againſt me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me? had bore witneſs that that was not a name ſuitable for her; or that ſhe had ſinned, and had not done what was well-pleaſing in his ſight, as appeared by his afflicting her; ſhe ſeemed therefore to be humbled under a ſenſe of ſin, and to conſider afflictions as coming from the Lord on account of it, and ſubmitted to his ſovereign will; the affliction ſhe means, was the loſs of her huſband, children and ſubſtance; ſee Job x. 17. and xvi. 8.

℣. 22. So Naomi returned, &c.] Aben Ezra thinks, this is to be underſtood of her returning at another time; but it is only an obſervation of the writer of this hiſtory, to excite the attention of the reader to this remarkable event, and particularly to what follows: and Ruth the Moabiteſs her daughter-in-law with her, which returned out of the country of Moab; to Bethlehem, the birth-place of the Meſſiah, and who was to ſpring from her a Gentile; and which, that it might be the more carefully remarked, ſhe is called a Moabiteſs, and ſaid to return out of the country of Moab: and they came to Bethlehem in the beginning of barley-harveſt; which began on the ſecond day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, on the ſixteenth of Niſan, which anſwers to part of our March, and part of April, when they offered the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits to the Lord, and then, and not till then, might they begin their harveſt, ſee Lev. xxiii. 10, 14. and the notes there: hence the Targum here is, "they came to Bethlehem at the beginning of the day of the paſſover, and on that day the children of of Iſrael began to reap the wave-ſheaf, which was of barley." So the Egyptians and Phœnicians, near neighbours of the Jews, went about cutting down their barley, as ſoon as the cuckow was heard, which was the ſame time of the year; hence the comedian [n] calls that bird the king of Egypt and Phœnicia. This circumſtance is obſerved for the ſake of the following account in the next chapter.

[m] Antiq. l. 5. c. 9. §. 2.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter we have an account of Ruth's gleaning corn in the fields of Boaz, a relation of Naomi, ℣. 1—3. and of Boaz coming to his reapers, whom he ſaluted in a very kind manner; and obſerving a woman gleaning after them, enquired of them who ſhe was, and they informed him, ℣. 4—9. upon which he addreſſed himſelf to her, and gave her leave to glean in his field, and deſired her to go no where elſe, and bid her eat and drink with his ſervants, ℣. 8—14. and gave directions to his ſervants to let her glean, and to let fall ſome of the handfuls on purpoſe, that ſhe might gather them up, ℣. 15—17. and then an account is given of her returning to her mother-in-law with her gleanings, to whom ſhe related where ſhe had gleaned, who was owner of the field, and what he had ſaid to her, upon which Naomi gave her her advice, ℣. 18—23.

℣. 1. And Naomi had a kinſman of her huſband's, &c.] That was her kinſman by her huſband's ſide, who now lived at Bethlehem; and yet it does not appear, that Naomi made any application to him for aſſiſtance in her circumſtances, tho' well known to her, as the word uſed ſignifies; which might ariſe from her modeſty, and being loth to be troubleſome to him, eſpecially as he was a relation, not of her own family, but of her huſband's; but what is more ſtrange, that this kinſman had taken no notice of her, nor ſent to her, who yet was a very generous and liberal man, and had knowledge of her coming, for he had heard of the character of Ruth, ℣. 11, 12. but perhaps he was not acquainted with their indigent circumſtances: a mighty man of wealth; a man of great wealth and riches, and of great power and authority, which riches give and raiſe a man to, and alſo of great virtue and honour, all which the word for wealth ſignifies; to which may be added the paraphraſe the Targumiſt gives, that he was mighty in the law; in the ſcriptures, in the word of God, a truly religious man, which completes his character: of the family of Elimelech; the huſband of Naomi; ſome ſay that his father was Elimelech's brother, ſee the note on ℣. 2. and his name was Boaz; which ſignifies, in him is ſtrength, ſtrength of riches, power, virtue and grace; it is the name of one of the pillars in Solomon's temple, ſo called from its ſtrength. This man is commonly ſaid by the Jews to be the ſame with Ibzan, a judge of Iſrael, Judg. xii. 8. ſee the note on ℣. 1. he was the grandſon of Nahſhon, prince of the tribe of Judah, who firſt offered at the dedication of the altar, Numb. vii. 12. his father's name was Salmon, and his mother was Rahab, the harlot of Jericho, Matt. i. 5. A particular account is given of this man, becauſe he, with Ruth, makes the principal part of the following hiſtory.

℣. 2. And Ruth the Moabiteſs ſaid to Naomi, &c.] After they had been ſome little time at Bethlehem, and not long; for they came at the beginning of barley-harveſt, and as yet it was not over, nor perhaps for ſome time after this; and knowing and conſidering the circumſtances they were in, and unwilling to live an idle life, and ready to do any thing for the ſupport of her life, and of her ancient mother-in-law; which was very commendable, and ſhewed her to be an induſtrious, virtuous woman: ſhe addreſſed her, and ſaid: let me now go to the field; ſhe did not chuſe to go any where, nor do any thing without her advice and conſent; ſo dutiful and obedient was ſhe to her, and ſo high an opinion had ſhe of her wiſdom and goodneſs; ſhe deſired to go to the field which belonged to Bethlehem, which ſeems to have been an open field, not enclоſed, where each inhabitant had his part, as Boaz, ℣. 3. though Jarchi interprets it of one of the fields of the men of the city; hither ſhe aſked leave to go, not with any ill intent, nor was ſhe in any danger of being expoſed, ſince it being harveſt-time the field was full of people: her end in going thither is expreſſed in the next clauſe, and glean ears of corn after him, in whoſe ſight I ſhall find grace; or in or among the ears of corn [o]; between the ears of corn bound up into ſheaves, and there pick up the looſe ears that were dropt and left. This ſhe propoſed to do with the leave of the owner of the field, or of the reapers, whom ſhe followed; ſhe might be ignorant that it was allowed by the law of God, that widows and ſtrangers might glean in the field, Lev. xix. 9, 10. Deut. xxiv. 19. or if ſhe had been acquainted with it by Naomi, which is not improbable, ſuch was her modeſty and humility, that ſhe did not chuſe to make uſe of this privilege without leave; leſt, as Jarchi ſays, ſhe ſhould be chid or reproved, and it is certain ſhe did intreat the favour to glean, ℣. 7. and ſhe ſaid unto her, go, my daughter; which ſhews the neceſſitous circumſtances Naomi was in; though perhaps ſhe might give this leave and direction under an impulſe of the Spirit of God, in order to bring about an event of the greateſt moment and importance, whereby ſhe became the anceſtor of our bleſſed Lord.

℣. 3. And ſhe went, and came, &c.] That is, ſhe went out of the houſe where ſhe was, and out of the city, and came into the field; though, according to the Midraſh [p], ſhe marked the ways as ſhe went, before ſhe entered into the field, and then came back to the city to obſerve the marks and ſigns ſhe made, that ſhe might not miſtake the way, and might know how to come back again: and gleaned in the field after the reapers; when they had cut down and bound up the corn, what fell and was left, ſhe picked up, having firſt aſked leave ſo to do: and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech; the providence of God ſo ordering and directing it; for though it was hap and chance to her, and what ſome people call good-luck, it was according to the purpoſe, and by the providence and direction of God, that ſhe came to [n] Ariſtoph. in Avibus, p. 565. inter ſpicas, De Dieu, Rambachius.

[o] בשבלים ἐν τοῖς σταχυσι, Sept. in ſpicis, Montanus, Druſius, Piſcator; [p] Midraſh Ruth, fol. 31. 4. Vid. Jarchi & Alſhech in loc.

to the reapers in that part of the field, Boaz, a near kinſman of her father-in-law was owner of, and aſked leave of them to glean and follow them.

℣. 4. And behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem, &c.] Into the field, to ſee how his workmen went on, and performed their ſervice, and to encourage them in it by his preſence, and by his courteous language and behaviour, and to ſee what proviſions were wanting, that he might take care and give orders for the ſending of them, it being now near noon, as it may be ſuppoſed; and though he was a man of great wealth, he did not think it below him to go into his field, and look after his ſervants, which was highly commendable in him, and which ſhowed his diligence and induſtry, as well as his humility. So a king in Homer [q] is repreſented as among his reapers, with his ſceptre in his hand, and chearful. Pliny [r] relates it, as a ſaying of the ancients, that the eye of the maſter is the moſt fruitful thing in the field; and Ariſtotle [s] reports, that a Perſian being aſked what fattened a horſe moſt? replied, the eye of the maſter; and an African being aſked, what was the beſt dung for land? anſwered, the ſteps of his maſter: and ſaid unto the reapers, the Lord be with you; to give them health, and ſtrength, and induſtry in their work; the Targum is, "may the Word of the Lord be your help:" and they anſwered him, the Lord bleſs you; with a good harveſt, and good weather to gather it in; and though theſe ſalutations were of a civil kind, yet they breathe the true ſpirit of ſincere and undiſſembled piety, and ſhew the ſenſe that both maſter and ſervants had of the providence of God attending the civil affairs of life, without whoſe help, aſſiſtance, and bleſſing, nothing ſucceeds well.

℣. 5. Then ſaid Boaz unto his ſervant that was ſet over the reapers, &c.] To direct them their work, what part each was to do, and to ſee that they did it well; to take care for proviſions for them, and to pay them their wages when their work was done. Joſephus [t] calls him ἀγροκομος, that had the care of the field, and all things relative to it; the Jews [u] ſay, he was ſet over two and forty perſons, whom he had the command of: whoſe damſel is this? to whom does ſhe belong? of what family is ſhe? whoſe daughter is ſhe? or whoſe wife? for he thought, as Aben Ezra notes, that ſhe was another man's wife; the Targum is, of what nation is ſhe? perhaps her dreſs might be ſomewhat different from that of the Iſraelitiſh women.

℣. 6. And the ſervant that was ſet over the reapers, anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Who had taken a great deal of notice of Ruth, and had converſed with her, and ſo was capable of giving anſwers to his maſter's queſtion: it is the Moabitiſh damſel that came back with Naomi, out of the country of Moab; perhaps he had not got knowledge of her name, and therefore only deſcribes her by the country from whence ſhe came; and by her coming from thence along with Naomi, when ſhe returned from Moab, with whoſe name Boaz was well acquainted, and of whoſe return he had been informed; and perhaps had ſeen her in perſon, and even Ruth alſo, tho' he might have forgot her; the Targum makes the ſervant to add, that ſhe was become a proſelyteſs.

℣. 7. And ſhe ſaid, &c.] Theſe are the words of the ſervant continued, who goes on with the account of Ruth, and her conduct, ſince ſhe had been in the field: I pray you, let me glean, and gather after the reapers among the ſheaves; for though by the law of Iſrael ſhe had a right, as a poor widow and ſtranger to glean, yet as the owner of the field, and his ſervants, by his appointment, under him, might have power of fixing the time when ſuch might glean, and of judging who were the proper perſons to be admitted, Ruth in her great modeſty and meekneſs did not chuſe to enter on this work without leave: ſo ſhe came; into the field and gleaned, having obtained leave: and hath continued even from the morning until now; had been very diligent and induſtrious in gathering up the looſe ears of corn among the ſheaves, as ſhe followed the reapers cutting down and binding up the corn in ſheaves; ſhe began pretty early in the morning, and had ſtuck cloſe to it till that time, which may be ſuppoſed to be about noon, or pretty near it, for as yet it was not meal-time, ℣. 14. The Septuagint verſion is therefore very wrong, which reads "from the morning until the evening," for that was not yet come, ſee ℣. 17. but ſhe tarried a little in the houſe; not that ſhe went home to the city, and ſtayed a little in the houſe of Naomi her mother, and then returned again, for ſhe went not home until the evening, ℣. 17, 18. but the meaning of the ſervant is, that ſhe had been conſtant and diligent in gleaning all the morning, only a very little time that ſhe was in the houſe, which was in the field; either a farm-houſe of Boaz adjoining to the field; or rather a cottage or booth, as Aben Ezra interprets it, which was in the field, whither the reapers betook themſelves when they ate their meals; or to ſhelter themſelves under the ſhade of it, as Abendana, from the heat of the ſun at noon-day; and here Ruth ſet herſelf down a while for a little reſt, and eaſe, and refreſhment; and ſome think ſhe was here when Boaz came, and therefore took the more notice of her.

℣. 8. Then ſaid Boaz unto Ruth, &c.] Having heard what the ſervant ſaid concerning her, he turned himſelf to her, and addreſſed her in the following manner: hearеſt thou not, my daughter? meaning not what the ſervant had ſaid, but hereby exciting her to hearken to what he was about to ſay to her. Noldius [w] takes the particle to ſignify beſeeching and intreating, and renders the words, hear, I pray thee, my daughter. Some from hence conclude, that Boaz was a man in years, and Ruth much younger than he, and therefore calls her his daughter: go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence; which ſhe might be inclined to, leſt ſhe ſhould be thought to be too troubleſome to be always in one man's field; but Boaz taking a liking to her, and willing to do her ſome favour, choſe ſhe ſhould not go elſewhere: but abide here faſt by my maidens; not maidens that gleaned alſo as ſhe did, poor maidens he permitted to glean; or that gleaned for the poor, and much leſs that gleaned for him; a perſon ſo rich and liberal as he was, would never employ ſuch for his advantage, and to the detriment of the poor; nor would it be admitted of, it being contrary to the law as it ſhould ſeem, and certain it is to the later traditions of the elders; for it is ſaid [x], "a man may not hire a workman on this condition, that his ſon ſhould glean after him; he who does not ſuffer the poor to glean, or who ſuffers one and not another, or who helps any one of them, robs the poor."

[q] Iliad. 18. ℣. 556, 557.
[r] Nat. Hiſt. l. 18. c. 6.
[s] De adminiſtrat. domeſtic. l. 1. c. 6.
[t] Antiq. l. 5. c. 9. §. 2.
[u] Midraſh Ruth, fol. 32. 1.
[w] Ebr. Concord. part. p. 257. No. 1150.
[x] Miſnah, Peah, c. 5. §. 6.

poor." But theſe maidens were ſuch, who either gathered the handfuls, cut and laid down by the reapers, and bound them up in ſheaves, or elſe they alſo reaped, as it ſeems from the following verſe; and it was very probably cuſtomary in thoſe times for women to reap, as it is now with us.

℣. 9. Let thine eyes be upon the field that they do reap, and go thou after them, &c.] And gather up the looſe ears of corn dropt and left by them: have I not charged the young men, that they ſhall not touch thee? do her no hurt, or offer any incivility or rudeneſs to her, or even play any wanton tricks with her, as is too common with young perſons in the fields at harveſt-time. This charge he now gave in her hearing, or however ſuggeſts that he would, and therefore ſhe might depend upon it ſhe ſhould have no moleſtation nor any affront given her: and when thou art athirſt; as at ſuch a ſeaſon of the year, and in the field at ſuch work, and in thoſe hot countries was frequently the caſe: go unto the veſſels and drink of that which the young men have drawn; which they had fetched from wells and fountains in or near the city, and had put into bottles, pitchers, &c. for the uſe of the reapers and gatherers; we read of the well of Bethlehem, 2 Sam. xxiii. 15. now ſhe is ordered to go to theſe veſſels, and drink when ſhe pleaſed, without aſking leave of any; and Boaz no doubt gave it in charge to his young men, not to hinder her.

℣. 10. Then ſhe fell on her face, and bowed herſelf to the ground, &c.] In great humility, and under a deep ſenſe of the favour done her, and as ſhewing the greateſt reſpect, in a civil manner, ſhe was capable of: and ſaid unto him, why have I found grace in thine eyes; how is it that one ſo mean and unworthy, ſhould have ſuch favour ſhown? that thou ſhouldeſt take knowledge of me; take ſuch notice of her, ſhew ſuch affection to her, and beſtow ſuch kindneſs on her: ſeeing I am a ſtranger? not a citizen of Bethlehem, nor indeed one of the commonwealth of Iſrael; but, as the Targum, "of a ſtrange people, of the daughters of Moab, and of a people who were not fit and worthy to enter into the congregation of the Lord."

℣. 11. And Boaz anſwered and ſaid unto her, &c.] Alſhech thinks, that he lift up his voice that all that ſtood by might hear: it hath fully been ſhewed me; either by Naomi, or rather by ſome perſons of Boaz's acquaintance, that had converſed with Naomi, and related to Boaz what paſſed between them, by which he was fully informed of the following things mentioned by him; though the above writer ſuppoſes, that it was ſhewed him by the Holy Ghoſt: all that thou haſt done to thy mother-in-law ſince the death of thine huſband; how that inſtead of going home to her father and mother, ſhe continued with her; how tenderly ſhe uſed her; what ſtrong expreſſions of love ſhe had made unto her; what care ſhe had taken of her, and how ſhe had fed and nouriſhed her, as the Targum, and now was gleaning for her ſupport, as well as her own: and how thou haſt left thy father and mother; in a literal ſenſe, to go along with her mother-in-law, to aſſiſt her in her journey, and ſee her ſafe to the end of it; and in a figurative ſenſe her idol-gods, as in Jer. ii. 27. ſo the Midraſh[y]: and the land of thy nativity; the land of Moab, where ſhe was born, and where her kindred, relations and friends lived, dear and engaging to her: and art come unto a people which thou knoweſt not heretofore; but by hearſay, and what ſhe learned of them from her huſband and mother-in-law, even the people of Iſrael; to whom ſhe was come to be a proſelyte, and dwell among them, as the Targum.

℣. 12. The Lord recompenſe thy work, &c.] The Targum adds, in this world; meaning the kind offices ſhe had performed, and the good ſervice ſhe had done to her mother-in-law; nor is God unrighteous to forget the work and labour of love, which is ſhewn by children to their parents; and though ſuch works are not in themſelves meritorious of any bleſſing from God here or hereafter, yet he is pleaſed of his own grace to recompenſe them, and return the good into their boſom manifold, it being acceptable in his ſight: and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Iſrael; the Targum adds, in the world to come; which is called the reward of the inheritance, Col. iii. 24. a reward not of debt, but of grace; and that will be a full one indeed, fulneſs of joy, peace and happineſs, an abundance of good things not to conceived of, ſee 2 John 8. under whoſe wings thou art come to truſt; whom ſhe profeſſed to be her God, and whom ſhe determined to ſerve and worſhip; whoſe grace and favour ſhe expected, and to whoſe care and protection ſhe committed herſelf: the alluſion is either to fowls, which cover their young with their wings, and thereby keep them warm and comfortable, and ſhelter and protect them, ſee Pſ. xxxvi. 7. and lvii. 1. or to the wings of the cherubim overſhadowing the mercy-ſeat, Exod. xxv. 20. and the phraſe is now adopted by the Jews to expreſs proſelytiſm; and ſo the Targum here, "thou art come to be proſelyted, and to be hid under the wings of the Shekinah of his glory," or his glorious Shekinah.

℣. 13. Then ſhe ſaid, let me find favour in thy ſight, my lord, &c.] Or rather, ſince ſhe had found favour in his ſight already: the words are to be conſidered, not as a wiſh for it, but as acknowledging it, and expreſſing her faith and confidence, that ſhe ſhould for time to come find favour in his ſight, and have other inſtances of it; for ſo the words may be rendered, I ſhall find favour[z], for which ſhe gives the following reaſons: for that thou haſt comforted me, and for that thou haſt ſpoken friendly unto thine handmaid; had ſpoke in her commendation, and wiſhed her all happineſs here and hereafter; ſaid kind and comfortable words to her, to her very heart, as in Iſ. xl. 2. which were chearing, refreſhing, and reviving to her: though I be not like unto one of thine handmaidens; not worthy to be one of them, or to be ranked with them, being meaner than the meaneſt of them, a poor widow, and a Moabitiſh woman: the Septuagint and Syriac verſions leave out the negative particle, and read, I ſhall be as one of thine handmaids.

℣. 14. And Boaz ſaid, at meal-time come thou hither, &c.] This looks as if ſhe was now in the booth, or houſe in the field, where the reapers uſed to retire to eat their food, or reſt themſelves, or take ſhelter from the heat of the ſun. This meal was very likely dinner, the time of which was not yet come, but would ſoon, and to which Boaz invited Ruth: and eat of the bread; his ſervants did, that is, partake of the proviſions they ſhould have; bread being put for all. So Homer[a] ſpeaks of a large ox ſlain for ſuch a meal for the reapers, beſides the polenta afterwards mentioned, which the women women prepared, and who uſes the ſame word for it the Septuagint does here: to dip thy morſel in the vinegar; which was uſed becauſe of the heat of the ſeaſon, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra remark, for cooling and refreſhment; and ſuch virtues Pliny [z] aſcribes to vinegar, as being refreſhing to the ſpirits, binding and bracing the nerves, and very corroborating and ſtrengthening; and it is at this day uſed in Italy, it is ſaid, in harveſt-time, when it is hot; where they alſo uſe wine mixed with vinegar and water, as Lavater ſays [a]; and who from a learned phyſician [b] obſerves, that reapers, inſtead of wine, uſe vinegar mixed with a great deal of water, which they call houſhold-wine, allayed with water; to which if oil and bread be put, it makes a cooling meal, good for workmen and travellers in the heat of the ſun; and the Targum calls it pottage boiled in vinegar. The Romans had an embamma, or ſauce, made of vinegar, in which they dipped their food [c]; and Theocritus [d] makes mention of vinegar as uſed by reapers: in the Syriac verſion it is bread dipped in milk; and in the Arabic verſion milk poured upon it. The Midraſh [e] gives an allegorical ſenſe of theſe words, and applies them to the Meſſiah and his kingdom, and interprets the bread of the bread of the kingdom, and the vinegar of the chaſtiſements and afflictions of the Meſſiah, as it is ſaid, he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, &c. Iſ. liii. 5. which, by the way, is a conceſſion that the prophecy in that chapter relates to him: and ſhe ſat beſide the reapers; the women-reapers; ſhe did not ſit along with them, or in the midſt of them, in the row with them, as ranking with them, but on one ſide of them, which was an inſtance of her great modeſty: and he reached her parched corn; either Boaz himſelf, or he that was ſet over the reapers. This parched corn ſeems to be the new barley they were reaping, which they fried in a pan and ate. Galen ſays [f], the parched corn which is beſt, is made of new barley moderately dried and parched; and that it was the cuſtom of ſome to drink the ſame with new ſweet wine, or wine mixed with honey, in the ſummer-time, before they went into the bath, who ſay they feel themſelves by this drink freed from thirſt. But this ſeems to be a kind of food, what is ſometimes called polenta, which is barley-flour dried at the fire, and fried after it hath been ſoaking in water one night; ſo Lavater ſays, they dry the barley, having been ſoaked one night in water, the next day they dry it, and then grind it in mills; ſome dreſs new barley beaten out of green ears, and make it whilſt moiſt into balls, and being cleanſed, grind it; and thus dreſſed with twenty pound of barley, they put three pound of lintſeed, half a pound of coriander ſeed, and of ſalt, all being dried before, are mingled in a mill; and if to be kept, are put into new earthern veſſels with the meal and bran: but a later writer [g] takes this kali, rendered parched corn, not to be any one certain ſpecies, but ſomething made of corn and pulſe, as lentiles, beans, &c. and eſpecially fried or parched vetches, of all which together was this kali or pulſe; and he refutes the notion of ſome, who take it to be coffee, ſince that has only been in uſe ſince the beginning of the 16th century, and at firſt in Arabia; and is not of the kind of pulſe, but is the fruit of a certain tree, of which a liquor is made, ſomething to drink; whereas this was food, and was ate, as follows, ſee 2 Sam. xvii. 28. and ſhe did eat, and was ſufficed, and left; ſhe had ſuch a plentiful ſhare given her, that ſhe had more than ſhe could eat, and was obliged to leave ſome, and which it ſeems ſhe carried home to her mother-in-law, ℣. 18.

[y] Midraſh Ruth, fol. 32. 3. [z] אמצא חן inveniam gratiam, Pagninus, Montanus. [a] Iliad 18. ℣. 559, 560.

℣. 15. And when ſhe was riſen up to glean, &c.] After ſhe had ate ſufficiently, and refreſhed herſelf, ſhe roſe up from her ſeat to go into the field and glean again; which ſhows her induſtry: Boaz commanded his young men; the reapers, or who gathered the handfuls, and bound them up in ſheaves: ſaying, let her glean even among the ſheaves; this ſhe had requeſted of the reapers when ſhe firſt came into the field, and it was granted her, ℣. 7. but this, as it was granted by Boaz himſelf, ſo was ſtill a greater favour; and there is ſome difference in the expreſſion, for it may be rendered here, among thoſe ſheaves [h], pointing to a particular ſpot where might be the beſt ears of corn, and where more of them had fallen: and reproach her not; as, not with her being a poor woman, a widow, a Moabitiſh woman, ſo neither with being a thief, or taking ſuch corn ſhe ſhould not, or gleaning where ſhe ought not.

℣. 16. And let fall ſome of the handfuls on purpoſe for her, &c.] That is, when they had reaped an handful, inſtead of laying it in its proper order, to be taken up by thoſe that gathered after them, or by themſelves, in order to be bound up in ſheaves, ſcatter it about, or let it fall where they reaped it: and leave them, that ſhe may glean them, and rebuke her not; for taking them, as if ſhe did a wrong thing.

℣. 17. So ſhe gleaned in the field until even, &c.] An inſtance of her great diligence and induſtry attending to this mean employment conſtantly from morning to night: and beat out that ſhe had gleaned; ſhe did not bind up her gleanings in a bundle, and carry it home on her head, as gleaners with us do, but ſhe beat it out with a ſtaff in the field, where ſhe gleaned it, and winnowed it, very probably in the threſhing-floor of Boaz; by which means, what ſhe had gleaned was brought into a leſſer compaſs, and was a lighter burden to carry home: and it was an ephah of barley; or three ſeahs of barley, as the Targum; which, according to biſhop Cumberland [i], was ſix gallons, and three pints, and three ſolid inches: an omer is ſaid to be the tenth part of an ephah, and made into bread, was as much as a man could eat in one day, Exod. xvi. 16, 36. ſo that Ruth got enough in one day for herſelf, and her mother-in-law, which would laſt five days at leaſt. This was a great deal for one woman to pick up, ear by ear, in one day; and muſt be accounted for, not only by her diligence and induſtry, but by the favour ſhown her by the reapers, under the direction of Boaz, who ſuffered her to glean among the ſheaves, and let fall handfuls for her to pick up.

℣. 18. And ſhe took it up, &c.] The ephah of barley, into her arms, or on her ſhoulders: and went into the city; the city of Bethlehem: and her mother-in-law ſaw what ſhe had gleaned; ſhe ſet it down before her, and ſhe looked at it with admiration, that ſhe ſhould glean ſo much in one day: and [z] Nat. Hiſt. l. 23. c. 1.

[a] In loc.
[b] Chriſtophor. a Vega de arte Medendi, l. 3. apud ib.
[c] Salmuth. in Pancirol. par. 2. tit. 2. p. 83.
[d] Idyll. 10. ℣. 13.
[e] Midraſh Ruth, fol. 33. 2.
[f] De aliment. facult. l. 1. apud Lavater. in loc.
[g] Neumann. apud Rambachium in loc
[h] בין העמרים inter ipſos manipulos, Tigurine verſion, Rambachius.
[i] Of Scripture-weights and meaſures, ch. 3. p. 64.

and she brought forth; not Naomi, as Josephus[k] represents it, who understood it, as if she brought forth some food, her neighbours had brought her, part of which she kept for Ruth, though he takes it in the other sense also; but the meaning is, that Ruth brought forth out of a scrip, as the Targum adds; besides the ephah of barley she set before her, she brought some victuals out of a bag: and gave to her, that she had reserved after she was sufficed; not that she eat of the barley, and her mother-in-law also; and then she gave her the rest to lay up against another time, as some interpret it; but the remainder of the food which Boaz gave her at dinner-time, which she could not eat, ℣. 14. she reserved for her mother, and now gave it to her; an instance of that piety commended by the apostle, 1 Tim. v. 4.

℣. 19. And her mother-in-law said unto her, where hast thou gleaned to-day? &c.] In what part of the field of Bethlehem? or on whose land, that she had gleaned so much? not that she suspected that she had got it in an illicit manner, but supposed she had been directed by the providence of God to a spot of ground where there was good gleaning; or that she had met with some hand, that had dropped ears of corn plentifully in her favour: and where wroughtest thou? which is the same question repeated in other words, and shews that gleaning is a work, and a hard work too, closely followed, to be stooping and picking up ears of corn a whole day together: blessed be he that did take knowledge of thee; she knew by the quantity of corn she brought home, that she must have had kindness shewn her by some body; and especially she knew it by the food she brought home, and therefore pronounced the man blessed, or wished him happiness, before she knew who he was; tho' perhaps she might guess at him, or conjecture in her mind who it was that had taken notice of her: and she shewed her mother-in-law with whom she had wrought; that is, with whose reapers, men and maidens she had wrought, whom she followed in gleaning, they working in one sort of work, and she in another, yet in the same field: the man's name with whom I wrought to-day is Boaz; that is, in whose field, and with whose servants, she wrought; for Boaz wrought not himself, unless this can be understood of her eating and drinking with him; but the other sense is best.

℣. 20. And Naomi said unto her daughter-in law, blessed be he of the Lord, &c.] Or the Lord bless him with all kind of blessings, temporal and spiritual; and as he has blessed him already, may he be blessed more and more: who hath not left off his kindness to the living and to the dead; he had been kind to Elimelech and to his sons, who were now dead, and he continued his kindness to the relicts of them, Naomi and Ruth, who were living, and was kind to them for the sake of the dead; and shewing kindness to them, expressed his respect to the memory of the dead: and Naomi said unto her; continued her speech to her, and added to what she had said: the man is near of kin unto us; a near relation of ours, meaning by her husband's side: yea, one of our next kinsmen; the nearest we have, there was but one nearer than he: the word for kinsman here is Goel, a redeemer; for to such who were in the degree of kindred, as Boaz was, and he that was nearer still than he to them, belonged the right of redemption, and therefore were called by the name of Goel, a redeemer, as Ben Melech observes; they had a right to avenge the blood of the slain, to redeem their houses and possessions, if sold or mortgaged, and their persons by marrying them, and raising up seed to a deceased brother, or kinsman.

℣. 21. And Ruth the Moabitess said, he said unto me also, &c.] Besides the favours he has shown me already, he has given me reason to expect more, for he has given me this strict order: thou shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have ended all my harvest; both barley-harvest and wheat-harvest; his will was, that she kept following them, and gleaned after them, as long as both harvests lasted. The Septuagint version is, with my maidens, and which agrees with ℣. 8. where the order of Boaz is expressed, and with the instructions of Naomi in the next verse, who so understood it; but if we understand it of young men here, there is no contradiction; for both young men and maidens wrought together in the same field, either in reaping or binding up; so that if she kept fast by the one, she also would do the same by the other.

℣. 22. And Naomi said unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, &c.] Observing the charge Boaz had given her, she thought fit to advise her upon it: it is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens; that is, go out in the morning with them, set out from Bethlehem when they went to work, and so continue with them all the day: that they meet thee not in any other field; the meaning is, either that men might not meet her in another field alone, or rush upon her at once and unawares, and reproach her, or beat her, or indeed force her; or else that the servants of Boaz might not meet her, or see her in another field, and report it to their master, who would be offended at her, and take it as a slight of his kindness to her; which latter seems rather to be the sense.

℣. 23. So she kept fast by the maidens of Boaz to glean, &c.] Accepting the kindness of Boaz, and attending to the advice of her mother-in-law, as well as using all diligence to get a livelihood for her mother and herself; in which she was a wonderful instance of dutiful affection, humility and industry: and so she continued unto the end of barley-harvest, and of wheat-harvest; which latter began at pentecost, as the former did at the passover; and, according to the Midrash[l], from the beginning of the one, to the end of the other, were three months; tho' it may be, they were gathered in sooner: indeed from the passover to pentecost were seven weeks, which was the difference between the beginning of one harvest, and the beginning of the other: and dwelt with her mother-in-law; which is to be understood either of her coming home at night, after she had been gleaning all day, and lodging with her mother-in-law, which was her constant custom during both harvests; or that after the harvests were ended, she continued to dwell with her mother-in-law; which seems to be added for the sake of carrying on the history in the following chapter.

[k] Antiq. l. 5. c. 9. §. 2.

[l] Midrash Ruth, fol. 33. so Alshech in loc.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter we have a propoſal of Naomi to Ruth, with advice and directions to get Boaz for her huſband, ℣. 1—5. Ruth's obedience to the inſtructions ſhe gave her, ℣. 5—7. the notice Boaz took of her, and the converſation that paſſed between them, ℣. 8—13. the diſmiſſion of her in the morning to her mother-in-law with a gift, to whom ſhe returned, and acquainted her with what had paſſed, ℣. 14—18.

℣. 1. Then Naomi her mother-in-law ſaid unto her, &c.] After the harveſts were over, and ſo gleaning likewiſe; when Naomi and Ruth were together alone in their apartment, the mother addreſſed the daughter after this manner: my daughter, ſhall I not ſeek for thee, that it may be well with thee? that is, in the houſe of an huſband, as in ch. i. 9. her meaning is, to ſeek out for an huſband for her, that ſhe might have an houſe of her own to reſt in, and a huſband to provide for her; that ſo ſhe might be free from ſuch toil and labour ſhe had been lately exerciſed in, and enjoy much eaſe and comfort, and all outward happineſs and proſperity in a marriage ſtate with a good huſband. This interrogation carries in it the force of a ſtrong affirmation, may ſuggeſt that ſhe judged it to be her duty, and that ſhe was determined to ſeek out ſuch a reſt for her; and the Targum makes her way of ſpeaking ſtronger ſtill, for that is, "by an oath I will not reſt, until the time that I have ſought a reſt for thee."

℣. 2. And now is not Boaz of our kindred, with whoſe maidens thou waſt? &c.] He was, and her queſtion ſuppoſes and concludes it, and which ſhe obſerves, that Ruth might take notice of it, and encouragement from it; and the rather, ſince ſhe had been admitted into the company and converſation of his maidens; and which was more, tho' not mentioned, into the company and converſation of himſelf, and whom Ruth knew full well; and who being, as Naomi thought, the next near kinſman, and obliged by the law in Deut. xxv. 5 to marry Ruth, with which view his relation is mentioned: behold, he winnoweth barley to-night in the threſhing-floor; which afforded a fit opportunity of meeting with him, being at night, and out of the city, from his own houſe, and alone, and after a feaſt for his reapers and threſhers of corn, as ſeems from ℣. 7. as it was uſual to have threſhing-floors in an open place without the city, ſo to winnow at them, whereby the chaff was more eaſily ſeparated from the corn, and that in the evening, when in thoſe countries there were the ſtrongeſt breezes of wind to carry it off; hence the Targum here has it, "behold, he is winnowing the barley-floor with the wind, which is in the night." For before the invention and uſe of fans in winnowing, it was only done by the wind carrying off the chaff, as the oxen trod the corn, for it was done in the threſhing-floor, as here: hence Heſiod [m] adviſes, that the threſhing-floors ſhould be χωρῳ εν ευαει, in a place expoſed to wind; and ſo Varro [n] obſerves, the floor ſhould be in the higher part of the field, that the wind might blow through it; to this manner of winnowing Virgil [o] has reſpect. Nor was it unuſual for great perſonages, owners of farms and fields, to attend and overlook ſuch ſervice. Pliny [p] reports, that Sextus Pomponius, father of the prætor, and prince of the hither Spain, preſided over the winnowing of his reapers; ſo Gideon, another judge of Iſrael, was found threſhing wheat, Judg. vi. 11.

℣. 3. Waſh thyſelf therefore, &c.] Thy fleſh, as Ben Melech, that ſhe might appear clean and neat, and free from all ſpots, and every thing that might occaſion a diſagreeable aſpect, or an ill ſcent, and ſo be acceptable to the man propoſed: and anoint thee; not with aromatic ointments, as great perſonages, both men and women uſed, as Aben Ezra notes, but with common oil, Ruth being a poor widow, that ſhe might look ſleek and ſmooth: and put thy raiment upon thee; that is, her beſt raiment; for it can't be ſuppoſed that ſhe was now without clothes; or elſe her ornaments, as the Targum; her mother-in-law adviſes her to put off her widow's weed, the time of mourning for her huſband being perhaps at an end, and put on her ornamental dreſs ſhe uſed to wear in her own country, and in her huſband's life-time. Jarchi interprets it of her ſabbath-day clothes: and get thee down to the floor; to the threſhing-floor where Boaz was winnowing, and which it ſeems lay lower than the city of Bethlehem: but make not thyſelf known unto the man; ſome underſtand it, that ſhe ſhould not make herſelf known to any man, not to any of the ſervants of Boaz; who, though they knew her before, when in the habit of a gleaner, would not know her now in her beſt and fineſt clothes, unleſs ſhe made herſelf known to them; but rather Boaz is meant, to whom it was not adviſeable to make herſelf known; and who alſo, for the ſame reaſon, though he might ſee her at ſupper-time, might not know her, becauſe of her different dreſs: and the rather he is particularly intended, ſince it follows, until he ſhall have done eating and drinking; when Naomi thought it would be the fitteſt time to make herſelf known unto him, in order to gain the point in view, marriage with him.

℣. 4. And it ſhall be when he lieth down, &c.] On the threſhing-floor, under the open air, in order to get ſleep, and take reſt: that thou ſhall mark the place where he ſhall lie; the ſpot he ſhall lie on, and the direction in which he ſhall lie, whether eaſt, weſt, &c. that when the light ſhall be taken away, and the darkneſs of the night come on, ſhe might pretty eaſily find the place where he lay: and thou ſhalt go in and uncover his feet, and lay thee down; go into the threſhing-floor, or to the place where he lay down, and gently lay aſide the covering upon his feet, whether a blanket, or rug, or his own long clothes, with which his feet were wrapt, and then lay herſelf down at his feet; this ſeems to be adviſed to, in order to give him a hint, that there was ſomebody at his feet. This may ſeem to us to be ſtrange advice, and not conſiſtent with the character of pious and virtuous women, which they both bore, and with that modeſty they otherwiſe ſeem to be poſſeſſed of; to clear this, let it be obſerved, that this man was, as Naomi thought, the next next kinſman, and ſo in right of the law in Deut. xxv. 5. was the huſband of Ruth, and therefore might take ſuch a freedom with him as ſhe did; and it ſeems by the ſame law, as if the woman was to make the demand of marriage, which may ſerve to reconcile the carriage of Ruth to her character: beſides, what things in one age, and in one nation, are reckoned immodeſt, are not ſo accounted in another age, and in another nation; add to this the age and gravity of Boaz, and the well-known virtue of Ruth to Naomi, ſhe might think herſelf quite ſafe in the advice ſhe gave; and yet after all, it muſt be owned, it is ſomewhat difficult to account for her ſimplicity and wiſdom in it; ſince ſhe could not be ſure that ſin and folly would not be committed, conſidering the infirmity of human nature; or that ſuch a behaviour in Ruth would not alienate the affection of Boaz from her, and cauſe him to conſider her as a light and looſe woman, and unfit to be his wife: and he will tell thee what thou ſhalt do; being a judge of Iſrael, and expert in the law, he would inform her whether he was the next kinſman, and had the right of redemption or not, and what methods muſt be taken, and what rites uſed in order to her marriage with him, or another perſon.

[m] Opera & Dies, l. 2. ℣. 221. [n] De re Ruſtica, l. 1. c. 41. [o] Cum graviter tunſis, &c. Georgic. l. 3. Vid. Homer. Iliad. 5. ℣. 499. & Iliad. 13. ℣. 588, &c. [p] Nat. Hiſt. l. 22. c. 25.

ver. 5. And ſhe ſaid unto her, &c.] Having the higheſt opinion of her piety and prudence, and being confident ſhe would never adviſe her to what was contrary to true religion and virtue: all that thou ſayeſt unto me I will do; obſerve every inſtruction and direction ſhe gave her, and attend ſtrictly to every circumſtance pointed out to her, as ſhe did; the word for unto me, is one of thoſe inſtances the Maſora obſerves, is not written but read; the letters of the word are not in the text, only the vowel points, the reaſon of which cannot well be ſaid; what the Midraſh [s] gives, can never ſatisfy.

ver. 6. And ſhe went down unto the floor, &c.] From the city of Bethlehem, from her mother-in-law's houſe there, to the threſhing-floor of Boaz, which was at ſome diſtance from it, and lower: and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her; both before ſhe went, and after; ſhe waſhed and anointed herſelf, and put on her beſt clothes before ſhe went down, and when ſhe was there took care not to make herſelf known to any, eſpecially to Boaz, and marked the place where he lay down after he had ſupped.

ver. 7. And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, &c.] Having eat and drank freely, though not to exceſs; and innocent mirth was always allowed in the time of harveſt, and of the vintage, and of gathering the fruits of the earth, ſee Judg. ix. 27. Iſ. ix. 3. or his heart was good; he was in a good frame and diſpoſition of mind, praiſing God for his goodneſs to him, and to his people; ſo the Targum, "and his heart was good, and he bleſſed the name of the Lord who had received his prayer, and removed the famine from the land of Iſrael:" he went to lie down at the heap of corn; in the threſhing-floor, which had either been threſhed out, or lay in ſheaves to be threſhed out: however, it ſeems probable, that he had laid himſelf down on ſome of the ſtraw of the corn threſhed out, with his clothes on, covering his feet with the lower part of his garment; it being uſual in thoſe countries to wear long garments, which ſerved to ſleep in by nights, as well as to cover them by day; nor was it thought mean and unworthy of perſons of note to ſleep in ſuch a place, and in ſuch a manner as this [t]. And it might be choſen for coolneſs in thoſe hot countries. Jarchi thinks it was to preſerve his corn from thieves; though it might be, becauſe it was late ere the feſtival was over, and too late to go home, and beſides he was ready for his buſineſs the next morning: and ſhe came ſoftly; with ſtilneſs and quietneſs, as Jarchi, making as little noiſe as poſſible; or ſecretly, as the Targum, that no one might ſee her, and have knowledge of what ſhe did: and uncovered his feet; turned up the ſkirt of the garment that was upon his feet, or removed whatever covering was laid on them: and laid her down; not on the ſide of him, which would have ſeemed immodeſt, but at his feet, perhaps acroſs them.

ver. 8. And it came to paſs at midnight, &c.] So long Boaz ſlept without knowledge of any perſon being at his feet, and ſo long Ruth had lain there; but awaking, and perceiving ſomething at his feet, which preſſed them, it made him look about and feel, and ſo affected him, that the man was afraid; though a man, and a man of ſpirit, he was afraid, a panic ſeized him, not knowing but it might be a ſpectre, a ſpirit, or a dæmon, as Jarchi; and ſuch an inſtance we have in hiſtory [u] of an apparition, which ſeemed to put off clothes, and place itſelf in a bed where a man lay, &c. and turned himſelf; to ſee who it was: and behold, a woman lay at his feet; which he knew by putting his hand upon her head, as Jarchi thinks, and ſo knew her by her head-dreſs or vail; or rather by her voice, as Aben Ezra, and who ſuppoſes the moon might ſhine, and he might be able to diſcern ſhe had no beard, as well as alſo diſcover her by her clothes.

ver. 9. And he ſaid, who art thou? &c.] He ſpoke quick and ſhort, as one diſpleaſed, or however ſurprized and frightened, juſt coming out of ſleep, and in the night: and ſhe anſwered, I am Ruth thine handmaid; that had gleaned in his fields with his maidens, and with whom he had converſed there, and knew her by name: ſpread therefore thy ſkirt over thy handmaid; which ſeems to account for the reaſon of her uncovering his feet, or turning up the ſkirt of his garment that was upon them; not through wantonneſs and immodeſty, but to direct him, when opportunity offered, to ſpread it over her as a token of his taking her in marriage, and of her being under his care and protection, and of her ſubjection to him; ſo the Targum, "let thy name be called upon me to take me for a wife." Whether the cuſtom now uſed with the Jews at marriage, for a man to caſt the ſkirt of his Talith, or outward garment, over the head of his ſpouſe, and cover it, was in uſe ſo early, is queſtionable; and yet ſomething like it ſeems to have been done, as this phraſe intimates, and to which there is an alluſion in Ezek. xvi. 8. So Jarchi, "ſpread the ſkirt of thy garments to cover me with thy Talith, and this is expreſſive of marriage;" and Aben Ezra ſays, it intimates taking her to him for wife; though as the word ſignifies a wing, the alluſion may be to the wings of birds ſpread over their young, to cheriſh and protect them, which are acts to be done by a man to his wife: for thou art a near kinſman; as ſhe had been informed by Naomi, to whom the right of redemption of her huſband's eſtate belonged, ed, and on whom it lay to marry her, and raiſe up ſeed to his kinſman, her former huſband.

[s] Midraſh Ruth, ut ſupra. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 9.

[t] Nec pudor in ſtipula, &c. Ovid. Faſt. l. 1.

[u] Alex. ab Alex.

℣. 10. And he ſaid, bleſſed be thou of the Lord, my daughter, &c.] Inſtead of calling her an immodeſt woman for laying herſelf down at his feet, and a bold impudent woman, ſhe being poor, to aſk marriage of him; and inſtead of being angry with her, and chiding and reproving her for diſturbing and frightening him in the night, he bleſſes her, and prays to God to bleſs her, and proſper her in what ſhe had engaged, and in a kind and loving manner calls her his daughter[t]: for thou haſt ſhewed more kindneſs in the latter end, than at the beginning; that is, to her huſband's family; ſhe had ſhown much love to her huſband living and dying, and to her mother-in-law, in leaving her country and kindred to come with her into a ſtrange country, and in labour to ſupport her, as ſhe had done, all which was great kindneſs; to which the Targum adds, her being proſelyted; but the kindneſs ſhe now ſhewed, exceeded all the former, in that ſhe was deſirous, according to the law of God, to build up her huſband's family, to marry the next near kinſman, even though an old man, to raiſe up ſeed to the name and memory of her huſband: inaſmuch as thou followedſt not the young men, whether poor or rich; the phraſe of following young men is not to be underſtood of committing fornication with them, as the Targum explains it, but of marriage to them; ſhe ſhunned their company and converſation, and did not put herſelf in the way of being careſſed and addreſſed by them, and refuſed every thing of that ſort; and did not chuſe to follow any young man, rich or poor, as a bride follows her huſband when married to him. Now Boaz mentions this as an inſtance of her virtue, and of her great reſpect to her huſband's family, that a woman of ſuch amiable qualities, virtuous, young and beautiful, who doubtleſs might have been married to a young man in her own country, or in Iſrael, but choſe to marry the neareſt of kin in her huſband's family, to perpetuate his name and memory; the Jews ſay[u], Boaz was now 80 years of age, and Ruth 40.

℣. 11. And now, my daughter, fear not, &c.] Either of being forced and defiled, to which ſhe had expoſed herſelf by lying down at a man's feet, or of being reproached as an immodeſt woman for ſo doing, or of being deſpiſed as a poor woman, and of not ſucceeding in her ſuit and enterprize: and I will do to thee all that thou requireſt; which could be done according to the law of God, and without injury to another perſon after mentioned: for all the city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman; or righteous, as the Targum; a good woman poſſeſſed of grace and virtue, having every agreeable qualification to recommend to the marriage-ſtate; and therefore ſhould they come to the knowledge of the ſtep taken to obtain it, will never reproach thee for it, nor blame me for marrying a perſon, though poor, of ſuch an excellent character, which by her conduct and behaviour was univerſally eſtabliſhed. It is in the original text, all the gate of my people[w]; meaning either all the people that paſs through the gate of the city, that is, all the inhabitants of it, or the whole court of judicature, the elders of the city that ſit in judgment there, as was uſual in gates of cities, ſee ch. iv. 1, 9. So the Targum, "it is manifeſt before all that ſit in the gate of the great Sanhedrim of my people, that thou art a righteous woman."

℣. 12. And now it is true, that I am thy near kinſman, &c.] Her huſband and he being brothers ſons, ſo own couſins: howbeit, there is a kinſman nearer than I; who was, the Jews ſay[x], the brother of her huſband's father, and ſo his uncle, which was a nearer relation than an own couſin.

℣. 13. Tarry this day, &c.] Or lodge here to-night, where ſhe was; this he ſaid not from any ill deſign upon her, but for her own ſafety and honour, that ſhe might not be expoſed to danger or diſgrace, by returning home at ſuch an unſeaſonable time of night. The firſt letter in the word for tarry is larger than uſual in the Hebrew text; which may be done to raiſe the attention of the reader, to obſerve it as a thing very ſingular, that a widow ſhould lodge with a man without any diminution of her chaſtity; ſo Buxtorf[x] ſays, that hereby attention is noted, even the honeſty of Boaz ordering Ruth to lodge without a man, and wait until a nearer kinſman, according to the law, ſhould come, and promiſing that on failure thereof he would be the lawful redeemer; but Dr. Lightfoot[y] obſerves, that as there is a ſpecial mark over a word in the ſtory of Lot's eldeſt daughter lying with her father, Gen. xix. 34. and a ſpecial mark on this word here, in the ſtory of Ruth going to Boaz his bed, ſeems to relate one to the other, and both together to point at the great providence of God in bringing light out of darkneſs, Ruth, a mother of Chriſt, out of the inceſt of Lot: and it ſhall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinſman, well, let him do the kinſman's part; by marrying Ruth, and redeeming her huſband's eſtate, which if he did, it would be all very well and right according to law; and it would be very well for Ruth, as Aben Ezra and Abendana interpret it; ſeeing, as they obſerve, that kinſman was a very reſpectable man, a man of great eſteem and worth, a man of wealth and authority, and ſhe would be well matched to him. Some think, as the ſame writers obſerve, that the word Tob, tranſlated well, is the name of the kinſman, the ſame with Tobias; ſo R. Joſhuah ſays[z], that Salmon (who was the father of Boaz), and Elimelech (the father of Ruth's huſband), and Tob (this near kinſman) were brethren: but if he will not do the part of a kinſman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinſman to thee, as the Lord liveth; that is, he ſwore he would marry her, and redeem the inheritance, if the other would not; for the phraſe, as the Lord liveth, is the form of an oath, it is ſwearing by the living God; ſo the Targum, "I ſay with an oath before the Lord, that as I have ſpoken unto thee, ſo will I do:" lie down until the morning; and take ſome ſleep and reſt, and be at eaſe in mind, depending upon the performance of what I have promiſed.

℣. 14. And ſhe lay at his feet until the morning, &c.] In the ſame place where ſhe firſt laid herſelf down: and ſhe roſe up before one could know another; becauſe of the darkneſs, as the Targum, it not being yet break of day: and he ſaid, let it not be known that a woman came into the floor; to whom he ſpoke theſe words is not ſaid, perhaps to Ruth, whom whom he might call to arise so early as she did, before one could know another, and distinguish a man from a woman; and so sent her away, and bid her be cautious as much as in her lay, that it might not be known she had been there; for though they were both conscious of their purity and chastity, yet it became them to be careful of their good name, and to prevent scandal upon them, or hinder the nearer kinsman from doing his part, who might refuse upon hearing that Boaz and Ruth had been together; or this was said to his young men, as the Targum adds, charging them to let no one know of it; which is not so likely: it is the sense of some Jewish writers [a], that Boaz said this in this heart, in an ejaculatory prayer to God, entreating that affair might be a secret, that it might not be known that a woman had been in the floor that night, lest the name of God should be blasphemed, and he and Ruth be wrongfully reproached.

[t] Midraſh Ruth, fol. 31. 4. & 34. 2. [u] Tigurine verſion. [w] Midraſh Ruth, ut ſupra. Jarchi in loc. [x] In Midraſh Ruth. ut ſupra. כל־שער עמי tota porta populi mei, Montanus; ſo Vatablus, [x] Tiberias, c. 14. p. 38. [y] Works, vol. ii. p. 46.

ver. 15. Also he said, &c.] Which seems to confirm the first sense, that what he had said before was to Ruth, beside which he also said to her what follows: bring the vail which thou hast upon thee, and hold it; by which it appears that he rose also thus early, since he ordered her to bring her vail to him, and hold it with both her hands, whilst he filled it from the heap of corn: this vail was either what she wore on her head, as women used to do, or a coverlet she brought with her to cover herself with, when she lay down; the Septuagint renders it a girdle, that is, an apron she tied or girt about her; which is as likely as any thing: and when she held it, he measured six measures of barley; what these measures were, is not expressed; the Targum is six seahs or bushels, as the Vulgate Latin version; but that is too much, and more than a woman could carry; unless we suppose, with the Targum, that she had strength from the Lord to carry it, and was extraordinarily assisted by him in it, which is not very probable; rather six omers, an omer being the tenth part of an ephah, and so was a quantity she might be able to carry: and laid it upon her; upon her shoulder, or put it on her head, it being no doubt as much as she could well bear, and which required some assistance to help her up with it: and she went into the city; of Bethlehem, with her burden; or rather he went [b]; for the word is masculine, and to be understood of Boaz, who accompanied her to the city, lest she should meet with any that should abuse her; and so the Targum expresses it, "Boaz went into the city."

ver. 16. And when she came to her mother-in-law, To Naomi, in Bethlehem: she said, who art thou, my daughter; it being duskish, she could not discern her, or perhaps she put the question before she opened the door and saw her; tho' one would think, if Ruth had called to her, she would have known her voice: rather therefore the particle may be rendered, what or how [c], instead of who; and the sense be, what had befallen her? what success had she had? how had things gone with her? was she married or no? or rather, had she got a promise of it? or was it likely that she should be married? with which the answer agrees: and she told her all that the man had done to her; what kindness he had shown her, what promises he had made to her, that either he, or a nearer kinsman, would marry her, and redeem her husband's estate.

ver. 17. And she said, these six measures of barley gave he me, &c.] Which she laid down before her, which was a proof of his kindness to her, that she was acceptable to him, and had well sped; of these six measures, see ver. 15. which by some are allegorically interpreted of six blessings that should be bestowed upon her, as the spirit of wisdom, understanding, &c. as Isa. xi. 2. so Jarchi; or of six persons that should spring from her, as David, Daniel, and his companions, and the king Messiah, as the Targum: for he said unto me, go not empty unto thy mother-in-law; which, as it expressed a regard to Naomi, and a compassionate concern for her support, so would give her assurance of the success Ruth met with, she would relate to her.

ver. 18. Then said she, sit still, my daughter, &c.] Keep at home, say nothing of this affair to any person, be easy about it, take no other steps in it, wait the issue of it: until thou know how the matter will fall; not that she thought it was a chance matter, a fortuitous and contingent event with respect to God; for all decrees come from heaven, as Aben Ezra on the text says, and particularly marriages are decreed in heaven, and come about according to such decrees; so the Targum, "sit, my daughter, with me in the house, until the time thou shall know how it is decreed from heaven:" for the man will not be at rest, until he have finished the thing this day; which she concluded, partly from his known integrity and faithfulness, diligence and industry, and partly from his affection to Ruth, and her interest in it; for she perceived she had got his heart, both by what he had said to her, and by the present he had sent by her, and she was satisfied he would not be easy until he knew whether he should have her or no.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter relates, how an offer was made to the the nearest kinsman of Ruth to redeem her, and the field her husband left, which he refused to do, ver. 1—8. upon which Boaz redeemed both, and married Ruth before the elders of the city as witnesses, and who congratulated him and her on that occasion, ver. 9—12. to whom a son was born, called Obed by the neighbours, ver. 13—17. and the chapter is concluded with the genealogy of David, who sprung from him, ver. 18—22.

ver. 1. Then went Boaz up to the gate, &c.] In the middle of the day, as Josephus [d] says, to the gate of the city, where people were continually passing and repassing to and from the country, and where he was most likely to meet with the person he wanted to see and converse with, and where courts of judicature were usually held, and where it was proper to call one to determine the affair he had in hand; so the Targum, "and Boaz went up to the gate of the house of judgment of the Sanhedrim:" and and ſet him down there; waiting for the perſon or perſons paſſing by, with whom he choſe to ſpeak: and behold, the kinſman of whom Boaz ſpake, came by; the kinſman that was nearer than he, of whom he had ſpoke to Ruth, that if he would not redeem her, he would; a behold is prefixed to this, to obſerve the providence of God that ordered it ſo, that he ſhould come that way juſt at the time Boaz was ſitting there, and waiting for him; who perhaps was going into his field to look after his threſhers and winnowers, as Boaz had been: unto whom he ſaid, ho, ſuch an one; calling him by his name, though it is not expreſſed; which the writer of this hiſtory might not know, or if he did, thought it not material to give it: ſome have been of opinion, that it is purpoſely concealed, as a juſt retaliation to him, that as he choſe not to raiſe up ſeed to his kinſman, to perpetuate his name, ſo his own is buried in oblivion; though it might be done in his favour, that his name might not be known, and lie under diſgrace, for refuſing to act the part he ought according to the law to have done; hence the plucking off the ſhoe, and ſpitting in his face, were done to ſuch an one by way of contempt and reproach. The words are peloni almoni, words uſed by the Hebrews of perſons and places, whoſe names they either could not, or did not chuſe to mention, which two words are contracted into palmoni in Dan. viii. 13. The name of this man was Tob or Tobias, according to ſome Jewiſh writers, ſee the note on ch. iii. 13. to him Boaz ſaid, turn aſide, and ſit down here; and he turned aſide, and ſat down; inſtead of going right forward, as he intended, about his buſineſs, he turned on one ſide as he was deſired, and ſat down by Boaz.

[a] Midrash Ruth, fol. 34. 14. so some in Abendana in Miclol Yophi in loc. [b] ויבא & ingressus est. Tigurine version, Drusius, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. [c] מי את quid egisti? V. L. quid tibi? Tigurine version; so R. Jonah in Aben Ezra, & Abendana in loc. quomodo tu filia mea? Nold. p. 602. N°. 1626. [d] Antiq. l. 5. c. 9. §. 4.

℣. 2. And he took ten men of the elders of the city, &c.] Who were ſuch, not merely in age but in office, who were the heads of thouſands, fifties and tens; ten of whom were a quorum to do buſineſs in judiciary affairs, to determine ſuch matters as Boaz had to propoſe, as to whom the right of redemption of a brother and kinſman's widow, and her eſtate, belonged, and who were the proper witneſſes of the refuſal of the one to do it, and of the other's doing it; and from hence the Jews [c] gather, that the bleſſing of the bride and bridegroom at their marriage, is not to be done by leſs than ten perſons: and ſaid, ſit ye down here, and they ſat down; and ſo made a full court.

℣. 3. And he ſaid unto the kinſman, &c.] That is, Boaz ſaid to the kinſman he called to, and who ſat down by him before the ten elders that were preſent: Naomi, that is come again out of the land of Moab, ſelleth a parcel of land; meaning, that ſhe was determined upon it, and was about to do it, and would do it quickly, and he had it in commiſſion to propoſe it to a purchaſer: which was our brother Elimelech's; not in a ſtrict ſenſe, but being akin to the kinſman and himſelf, and having been a neighbour of them all, and an inhabitant of the place, he is called their brother; though ſome Jewiſh writers [d] ſay, that he was in a ſtrict ſenſe a brother of Boaz and this kinſman, and that Tob, Elimelech and Boaz were brethren, and ſo Tob was reckoned the neareſt kinſman, and had the firſt right to redeem, becauſe he was the elder brother; but this does not ſeem likely; ſee the note on ch. iii. 13.

℣. 4. And I thought to advertiſe thee, &c.] To give him notice of it; or I ſaid [e]; he ſaid in his heart and mind, purpoſing to do it; or he ſaid it to Ruth, promiſing her that he would do it: ſaying, buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people; or before thoſe that ſat there, even the elders, as witneſſes of the purchaſe: if thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; for it was redeemable by a near kinſman according to the law, even when ſold to another, in Lev. xxv. 25. but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me that I may know; what to do in this affair, whether to redeem it or not: for there is none to redeem it beſides thee, and I am after thee; he was the firſt, and Boaz was the next near kinſman, to whom the right of redemption belonged: and he ſaid, I will redeem it; he choſe to make the purchaſe, he liked the land, which he probably full well knew, and it might lie near his own, and make a good addition to it; and as the widow was determined, and under a neceſſity to ſell, he might expect to have it at a cheap rate; all which might induce him at once to agree to be the purchaſer.

℣. 5. Then ſaid Boaz, &c.] In order to try the kinſman, whether he would abide by his reſolution he acquaints him with what he had as yet concealed: what day thou buyeſt the field of Naomi, thou muſt buy it alſo of Ruth the Moabiteſs, the wife of the dead; the wife of Mahlon who was dead, the eldeſt ſon of Naomi, and ſo his widow, Ruth the Moabiteſs, had the reverſion of the eſtate; wherefore the purchaſe muſt be made of her as well as of Naomi, and the purchaſe could not be made of her without marrying her; which though no law obliged to, yet it ſeems to be a condition of the purchaſe annexed to it by Naomi, that ſhe would ſell it to no man, unleſs he would conſent to marry Ruth, for whoſe ſettlement ſhe had a great concern, having been very dutiful and affectionate to her; which is clearly intimated in the next clauſe: to raiſe up the name of the dead upon his inheritance; and ſo Naomi had another end to anſwer thereby, not only to provide a good huſband for her daughter-in-law, but to perpetuate the name of her ſon, agreeable to the deſign of the law in Deut. xxv. 5.

℣. 6. And the kinſman ſaid, I cannot redeem it for myſelf, &c.] On ſuch a condition, becauſe he had a wife, as the Targum ſuggeſts; and to take another, would, as that intimates, tend to introduce contention into his family, and make him uncomfortable; ſo Joſephus ſays [h], he had a wife and children, for that reaſon it was not convenient for him to take the purchaſe on ſuch a condition: leſt I mar my own inheritance; he conſidered, that as he had a wife and children already, and as he might have more by marrying Ruth, his family-expences would be increaſed, and his eſtate diminiſhed; and what would remain muſt be divided among many, and this eſtate in particular go to Ruth's firſtborn, whereby his own inheritance would be ſcattered and crumbled, and come to little or nothing; add to all which, he might ſuppoſe that her ancient mother Naomi would be upon his hands to maintain alſo: redeem thou my right for thyſelf; which I am ready to give up to thee, for thou haſt no wife, as the Targum expreſſes it: for I cannot redeem it; in the circumſtances I am, and upon the condition annexed to the purchaſe.

℣. 7. Now this was the manner in former time in Iſrael concerning redeeming, &c.] It is a cuſtom, and and not a law, that ſeems here referred to, when an eſtate was bought and ſold; not the law in Lev. xxv. 25. for though that reſpects the redemption of an eſtate by a near kinſman, yet no ſuch manner was enjoined, as here practiſed afterwards, made mention of; nor the law in Deut. xxv. 5. which does not concern the redemption of eſtates, nor a kinſman's marrying the widow of a deceaſed kinſman, but a brother's marrying the widow of a deceaſed brother, and the rites and ceremonies there enjoined upon refuſal, are different from thoſe here uſed; though Joſephus [i] is expreſs for it, that the law is here referred to; but this is not only concerning purchaſe of eſtates, but concerning changing alſo, one field for another, as Aben Ezra interprets it: for to confirm all things; the following cuſtom was obſerved for the confirmation of any bargain whatever, whether by ſale or barter, and where there was no marriage in the caſe: a man plucked off his ſhoe, and gave it to his neighbour; ſignifying thereby, that he yielded his right to him in the thing ſold or bartered; the Targum ſays, he plucked off the glove of his right-hand, which perhaps was then in uſe, when the Targumiſt wrote, and anſwered the ſame purpoſe; and, according to Jarchi, it was a linen cloth, veil or handerchief that was uſed, and delivered by the one to the other; and of this way of buying, writes Elias [k]; at this day, ſays he, we purchaſe by a linen cloth or handkerchief, called ſudar, which is a garment; and this two witneſſes take and explain before them the words of their agreement, and each of the witneſſes ſtretches out the ſkirt of the garment, and thoſe that take upon them to confirm every matter, touch the ſkirt of their garments; and this is called purchaſing by ſudar, or the linen cloth: and this was a teſtimony in Iſrael; a witneſs to, or a confirmation of the bargain made; but who gave the ſhoe, whether the kinſman or Boaz, is not certain from the text; and about which the Jewiſh writers are divided, as Jarchi obſerves.

[a] Mishnah, Megillah, c. 4. §. 3. T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 7. 1. Midraſh. Ruth, fol. 35. 1. [b] Midraſh Ruth, fol. 34. 2. [c] ואני אמרתי & ego dixi, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [d] Antiq. l. 5. c. 9. §. 4.

℣. 8. And therefore the kinſman ſaid unto Boaz, buy it for me, &c.] Which is repeated to ſhew he gave his full conſent to it, that he ſhould make the purchaſe of it if he pleaſed, and which he confirmed by the following rite: ſo he drew off his ſhoe; thereby ſignifying that he relinquiſhed his right to the purchaſe of the eſtate, and ceded it to him; the Targum has it, "and Boaz drew off the glove off his right-hand, and bought it of him;" and ſo Aben Ezra, "and Boaz drew off his ſhoe, and gave it to his kinſman," as if this was ſome acknowledgment for yielding his right unto him; and about this there is a great diſſenſion among the Jewiſh writers [l]; one ſays it was the ſhoe of Boaz that was plucked off; another ſays it was the ſhoe of the kinſman; which latter ſeems righteſt: and it may be obſerved, that this cuſtom is different from what is enjoined, Deut. xxv. there the woman was to pluck off the ſhoe of him that refuſed to marry her, but here the man plucked off his own ſhoe who choſe not to redeem; nor is there mention of ſpitting in his face; nor does it appear that Ruth did the one or the other; though Joſephus [m] affirms it, and ſays, that ſhe both plucked off his ſhoe, and ſpit in his face; neither of which are mentioned.

℣. 9. And Boaz ſaid unto the elders, and unto all the people, &c.] Who were preſent at the gate of the city, or in court: ye are witneſſes this day that I have bought all that was Elimelech's; all the land which belonged to him, who was the huſband of Naomi, and the father of Ruth's huſband, whoſe eſtate Boaz now bought, paying the value for it to Naomi: and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's; the two ſons of Elimelech; who, had they been living, would have enjoyed their father's eſtate; but they being dead, it devolved on the mother, and after her on the widows, who muſt therefore agree to the ſale of the eſtate, as Ruth did, ſee ℣. 5. Of Orpah no notice is taken, becauſe ſhe returned to her own land; and beſides Mahlon, the huſband of Ruth, was the elder brother, and therefore had the firſt right to the inheritance; but as it was in the hands of Naomi now, the purchaſe was made of her principally, and therefore Boaz is ſaid to purchaſe it of the hand of Naomi; to whom the money was paid, and who delivered the eſtate to him.

℣. 10. Moreover, Ruth the Moabiteſs, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchaſed to be my wife, &c.] Which was the condition on which the purchaſe of the land was, that whoever bought that ſhould take her for his wife; nor did Boaz do evil in marrying her, though a Moabiteſs. Moab was not one of the nations with whom marriage was forbidden; and though it was a heatheniſh and idolatrous nation, and ſo on that account it was not fit and proper to marry with ſuch, yet Ruth was become a proſelyteſs; nor was this contrary to the law in Deut. xxiii. 3. ſince, according to the ſenſe the Jews give of it, it reſpects men, and not women, and ſuch men who otherwiſe were capable of bearing offices in the congregation; "an Ammonite, and a Moabite, they ſay [n], are forbidden, and their prohibition is a perpetual one, but their women are free immediately:" to raiſe up the name of the dead, upon his inheritance; the name of Mahlon, Ruth's former huſband, to whom the inheritance would have come had he lived; the raiſing up of his name is not upon a ſon of her's by Boaz, for her firſt-born was called Obed, and not Mahlon, and is always ſpoken of as the ſon of Boaz, and not of Mahlon, but upon his inheritance, having bought his wife along with it, which the regiſter of the purchaſe would ſhew, and ſo cauſe his name to be remembered; and, as Jarchi ſays, when Ruth went in and out upon the eſtate or inheritance, they would ſay this was the wife of Mahlon, and ſo thro' her his name would be made mention of: that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of this place; might not be quite forgotten both in the city and in the court, and be remembered no more: ye are witneſſes this day; this is repeated, that they might anſwer to it, as they do in the next verſe.

℣. 11. And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, ſaid, we are witneſſes, &c.] Both of the purchaſe of the eſtate by Boaz, being legally made, and of the marriage of Ruth to him, the condition of the bargain: the Lord make the woman that is come into thine houſe; not into his houſe ſtrictly and literally taken, the place of his habitation; for both he and ſhe were now at the gate of the city, and as yet ſhe was not introduced into his houſe; but by his marriage of her ſhe was brought into his family, and was become a principal part of it, being his wife. This is a wiſh, prayer or benediction of the elders, of one in the name of the reſt, congratulating the married couple,

[i] Antiq. l. 5. c. 9. §. 4.
[k] Tiſhbi, p. 207. See Leo Modena's Hiſtory of the Rites, &c. of the preſent Jews, part 2. c. 6. c. 8. §. 3.
[l] Midraſh Ruth, fol. 35. 2.
[m] Ut ſupra.
[n] Miſn. Yebamot, 3

ple, and wiſhing them well: and particularly that the woman, Boaz had married before them as witneſſes, might be like Rachel and like Leah, which two did build the houſe of Iſrael; the two wives of Jacob; the Targum adds, with twelve tribes; for though ſome of the tribes ſprung from their maids, which they gave to Jacob, yet the children born of them were reckoned theirs by a moral eſtimation, as ſome expreſs it. Rachel is ſet before Leah, though the youngeſt, and had the feweſt children, becauſe ſhe was his firſt wife in his intention, and according to the covenant made with her father, though impoſed upon and deceived; and ſhe was his more lawful wife, and his moſt beloved one. By the children of theſe two, and their maidens, the houſe or family of Iſrael was built up, and became a great nation, conſiſting of twelve tribes, very numerous: and do thou worthily in Ephratah, and be famous in Bethlehem; two names of one and the ſame place, Gen. xxxv. 19. Mic. v. 2. Theſe words ſeem to be directed to Boaz, particularly praying, that he might cotinue to do worthy and virtuous actions, as well as increaſe in wealth and riches, power and authority, and retain his name and fame, and grow in credit and reputation among his fellow-citizens.

℣. 12. And let thy houſe be like the houſe of Pharez, whom Tamar bare unto Judah, &c.] Of whoſe tribe the Bethlehemites were, and were alſo of the houſe or family of Pharez, as appears from ℣. 18, &c. who was born to Judah of Tamar, one of another nation, as Ruth was, and from whom ſprung a very numerous family, one of the five families of Judah; and they wiſh that the family of Boaz, by Ruth, might be as numerous; and if Boaz was the ſame with Ibzan, as the Jews ſay, though that wants proof, he had a very numerous offspring, thirty ſons and thirty daughters, Judg. xii. 8, 9. of the ſeed which the Lord ſhall give thee of this young woman; by which it is plain Ruth was preſent, for they do, as it were, point to her, and that ſhe was a young woman, though a widow: the Jews ſay, ſhe was forty years of age, as obſerved in ch. iii. 10. and the elders wiſh and pray, he might have a numerous family of the children the Lord would give him by her; and this might be the rather expected of her, as being a young woman, yet only as the gift of God, as children are, Pſ. cxxvii. 3.

℣. 13. So Boaz took Ruth, and ſhe was his wife, &c.] Without any other rites or ceremonies than what are here expreſſed; for as yet the rites and ceremonies, now in uſe with the Jews [o], in marriages, had not obtained: and when he went in unto her; which is a modeſt expreſſion of the conjugal duty performed by him: the Lord gave her conception; for this is of God, let the circumſtance of the perſon, as to age, be as it may: and ſhe bare a ſon; at the year's end, as Joſephus [p] relates.

℣. 14. And the women ſaid unto Naomi, &c.] The inhabitants of Bethlehem, as they fell into her company; or perhaps theſe were the women that were called to the labour of Ruth, and attended the birth of the child: bleſſed be the Lord, which hath not left thee this day without a kinſman; a grand-child born to her that day. In Moab ſhe was bereaved of her huſband and of two ſons; but now ſhe is not left without a relation, a kinſman, and a redeemer, for which the women bleſſed God, and ſtirred her up to do the ſame. Alſhech obſerves, that the women ſaid, bleſſed be the Lord, becauſe from him would ſpring the Meſſiah of the Lord, as did. Some refer this to Boaz, to whom the name of kinſman, or redeemer, more properly belonged; and who appeared to have done the office and duty of ſuch an one, by redeeming the eſtate of his kinſman, and marrying his widow, the effect of which was, that a ſon was born, who would be heir of the eſtate; but the text ſpeaks of what was done that day, and what is after ſaid in the next verſe, all relates to the child born: that his name may be famous in Iſrael; ſome refer this to the name of God, by whoſe providence this was brought about; others, to Boaz, who was well ſpoken of for his charity, integrity, and humility ſhewn, in redeeming the eſtate, and taking Ruth to wife; or rather it refers to the new-born child, of whom they expreſs their hope and confidence, that when he came to man's eſtate would be very famous and honourable in Iſrael, being a worthy and virtuous man himſelf, and the progenitor of ſuch illuſtrious perſons, as Jeſſe, David, &c. and even of the Meſſiah.

℣. 15. And he ſhall be unto thee a reſtorer of thy life, &c.] Of the joys, pleaſures and comforts of it, which ſhe had been deprived of through the death of her huſband and her two ſons, ever ſince which ſhe had lived a ſorrowful life; all the comfort ſhe had was from her daughter-in-law, and now a grand-child being born to her of her, would be a means of reſtoring comfort to her mourning, ſorrowful ſpirit, and give her pleaſure in thoſe years in which ſhe did not expect any: and a nouriſher of thine old age; that would when grown up feed her, ſupport her, and ſupply her with all neceſſaries of life, being heir to a large and rich eſtate: for thy daughter-in-law which loveth thee; Ruth, the wife of Boaz, who had ſhown her love, in leaving her own country and kindred, to come along with her into a ſtrange land, and who had laboured for her ſupport in it, and ſtill retained the ſame affection for her: which is better to thee than ſeven ſons, hath borne him; either which had been ſo in the time of her widowhood, as the Targum; or rather, which was ſo now, being the wife of ſo rich a perſon, and having now brought forth a ſon, heir to the eſtate, who would be more capable of doing for her, than if ſhe had ſeven ſons living, having no other than their paternal eſtate.

℣. 16. And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her boſom, &c.] As a token of her moſt tender love and affection for it; this it is probable ſhe did quickly after the birth of it: and became a nurſe unto it; that is, after the mother had ſuckled and weaned it, then ſhe took it from her, and brought it up.

℣. 17. And the women her neighbours gave it a name, &c.] Joſephus ſays [q], Naomi gave it by the advice of her neighbours; very probably on the eighth day when he was circumciſed, and the neighbours were invited on that occaſion, at which time it ſeems it was uſual to give names to children, ſee Luke i. 59. The Romans gave names to females on the 8th day, to the males on the 9th, hence the goddeſs Nundina had her name [r]; the Greeks generally on the 10th, ſometimes on the 7th [s]: it was commonly the province of the father to give the nam-, name, and ſometimes his neighbours and neareſt friends were called, and in their preſence the name was given, and by any of them he ſhould chuſe in his ſtead [t]: ſaying, there is a ſon born to Naomi; to her family, and even to herſelf, being born of her who had been wife to her eldeſt ſon; and this was to her as inſtead of him, and was as he to her; ſo Aben Ezra compares this with Exod. ii. 10. and moreover, this child was born, as the neighbours preſaged, for the great comfort and advantage of Naomi, to be her ſupporter and nouriſher in her old age, ℣. 15. and they called his name Obed; which ſignifies ſerving, as Joſephus [u] rightly obſerves, though he does not always give the true ſenſe of Hebrew words: this name was given, not in remembrance of the ſervice his mother was obliged to, before marriage with Boaz; but rather on the account of the ſervice that he would be of to Naomi, as they hoped and believed; though the reaſon of it, as given by the Targum, is not to be overlooked, which interprets it, "who ſerved the Lord of the world with a perfect heart;" and ſo they might have ſome reſpect to his being hereafter a ſervant of the Lord: he is the father of Jeſſe, and the father of David; ſo Jeſſe is called the Bethlehemite, 1 Sam. xvi. 1. being of the city of Bethlehem, of which city Boaz was when his ſon Obed was born, who was the father of Jeſſe; of whom was David king of Iſrael, and from whom ſprung the Meſſiah, for whoſe ſake this book was written, that his genealogy might clearly appear; and of which uſe it is made by the evangeliſts Matthew and Luke.

[o] Vid. Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 39. Leo Modena's Hiſtory of the Rites of the preſent Jews, part 4. c. 3. [p] Ut ſupra. [q] Ibid. [r] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 25. [s] Harpocration & Suidas in voce Εβδομαγοφανια, Scholiaſt. in Ariſtoph. Aves, p. 565. & Euripid. & Ariſtot in Ib.

℣. 18. Now theſe are the generations of Pharez, &c.] The ſon of Judah, by Tamar before-mentioned, ℣. 12. ſee Gen. xxxviii. 29. for the intention of this genealogy is to confirm the truth of Jacob's prophecy, of Shilob the Meſſiah coming from the tribe of Judah, Gen. xlix. 10. and therefore it begins with Pharez, well known to be the ſon of Judah, and ends with David, whoſe ſon the Meſſiah was to be, as is owned by all Jews and Gentiles that believe the divine revelation: Pharez begat Hezron; who was one of thoſe that went down with Jacob into Egypt, being born in the land of Canaan, Gen. xlvi. 12. called Eſrom in Matt. i. 3. Luke iii. 33.

℣. 19. And Hezron begat Ram, &c.] Called Aram by the Septuagint, and ſo in Matt. i. 3. Luke iii. 33. and Ram begat Amminadab; in whoſe name there is no variation, neither in the book of Chronicles nor in the Evangeliſts; both theſe, as well as the next, were born in Egypt.

℣. 20. And Amminadab begat Naſhhon, &c.] The prince of the tribe of Judah, as the Targum adds; and ſo he was when the Iſraelites were come out of Egypt, and were in the wilderneſs at the time of the dedication of the altar, Numb. vii. 12. called Naaſſon, Matt. i. 4. Luke iii. 32. and Nahſhon begat Salmon; or, as in the Hebrew text, Salmah, and in 1 Chron. ii. 11. Salma; and yet in the verſe following Salmon, as we read it.

℣. 21. And Salmon begat Boaz, &c.] Of Rahab the harlot, whom he married, Matt. i. 5. the very ſame perſon that makes a principal part of this book, and whom the Targum here takes to be the judge Ibzan, as in ch. i. 1. ſee the note there: and Boaz begat Obed; of Ruth; of whom ſee the preceding verſes.

℣. 22. And Obed begat Jeſſe, &c.] The Bethlehemite, the father of David: and Jeſſe begat David; the Targum adds, the king of Iſrael; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions add, the king; from whence it is by ſome concluded, that this book was written by Samuel, not only after the birth of David, but after he had been anointed king by him: here being but four generations mentioned, from the coming of the Iſraelites into Canaan, to the birth of David, which was 360 years, each of the four perſons, Salmon, Boaz, Obed and Jeſſe, muſt beget a ſon when 100 years old and upwards; and which is not at all incredible, as appears by inſtances in later times, and therefore not at all improbable, that in thoſe ancient times men of ſobriety and good conſtitutions ſhould have children at ſuch an age.

[t] Vid. Sperling. de baptiſm. Ethnic. c. 14, & 15. [u] Ib.

The

The First Book of SAMUEL, otherwise called the First Book of KINGS.

THIS Book in the Hebrew copies is commonly called Samuel, or the book of Samuel; in the Syriac version, the book of Samuel the prophet; and in the Arabic version, the book of Samuel the prophet, which is the first book of the kings; and in the Septuagint version, the book of the kingdom: it has the name of Samuel, because it contains an history of his life and times; and the Jews say [a] it was written by him; and as it may well enough be thought to be to the end of the 24th chapter; and the rest might be written by Nathan and Gad, as may be gathered from 1 Chron. xxix. 29. as also the following book that bears his name; and both may be called the books of kings, because they give an account of the rise of the kings in Israel, and of the two first of them; though some think they were written by Jeremiah, as Abarbinel; and others ascribe them to Ezra: however, there is no doubt to be made of it, that this book was written by divine inspiration, when we consider the series of its history, its connection and harmony with other parts of scripture; the several things borrowed from it, or alluded to in the book of Psalms, particularly what is observed in Ps. cxiii. 7, 8. seems to be taken out of 1 Sam. ii. 8. and the sanction which the Lord gives to it, by referring to a fact in it, whereby he stopped the mouths of the Scribes and Pharisees cavilling at his disciples, Matt. xii. 3, 4. compared with 1 Sam. xxi. 3, 4, 5, 6. yea, even as Huetius [b] observes, some heathen writers have by their testimonies confirmed some passages in these books, which they seem to have been acquainted with, as Nicolaus of Damascus [c], and Eupolemus [d]; it contains an history of the government of Eli, and of the birth of Samuel, and his education under him; of the succession of Samuel in it, and the resignation of it to Saul, when he was chosen king; of his administration of his office, and of things done in the time of it, both before and after his rejection, and of the persecution of David by Saul, and is concluded with his death.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter gives an account of the parents of Samuel, of the trouble his mother met with from her rival, and comfort from her husband, ℣. 1—8. of her prayer to God for a son, and of her vow to him, should one be given her, ℣. 9—10. of the notice Eli took of her, and of his censure on her, which he afterwards retracted, and comforted her, ℣. 12—18. of her conception and the birth of her son, the nursing and weaning of him, ℣. 19—23. and of the presentation of him to the Lord, with a sacrifice, ℣. 24—28.

℣. 1. Now there was a man of Ramathaim-zophim, of mount Ephraim, &c.] Ramathaim is a word of the dual number, and signifies two Ramahs; the city consisted of two parts, being built perhaps on two hills, and were called Zophim; because, as the Rabbins say, they looked one to another; or rather because situated on eminences, there were watch-towers in them, where watchmen were placed; or because they were inhabited by prophets, who were sometimes called watchmen; Ezek. iii. 17. and here is thought to be a school of the prophets, see ch. xix. 19—24. and which seems to be countenanced by the Targum, in which the words are paraphrased thus, "and there was one man of Ramatha, of the disciples of the prophets;" or, as others think, the sense is this, this man was one of the Ramathites, the inhabitants of Ramah, and of the family of Zuph, or the Zuphites, which gave the name to the land of Zuph, and the grand ancestor of Elkanah is in this verse called Zuph, see ch. ix. 5. According to Jerom [e], this is the same with Arimathea, of which Joseph was, Matt. xxvii. 57. for thus he writes, "Armatha Sophim, the city of Helcanah and Samuel, in the Thamnitic region near Diospolis (or Lydda) from whence was Joseph, who in the Gospels is said to be of Arimathea;" but but Reland [z] thinks it cannot be the ſame that was about Lydda, which was all a champaign country; whereas this was in the mountains of Ephraim, which muſt be ſought for to the north of Jeruſalem, and not the weſt, and ſo it follows: of mount Ephraim; which is added to diſtinguiſh it from other Ramahs in ſeveral tribes, as in Benjamin, Naphtali, &c. though this may refer not to the ſituation of Ramathaim, but to the country of this man, who was originally of mount Ephraim, as was the Levite in Judg. xix. 1. who was the cauſe of much evil to Iſrael, as this was of great good, as Kimchi obſerves: and his name was Elkanah; which ſignifies, God hath poſſeſſed; that is, poſſeſſed him, or he was in poſſeſſion of God; he had an anceſtor of the ſame name, 1 Chron. vi. 23. This man was a Levite, one of the Kohathites, and a deſcendant of Korah; ſo that the famous prophet Samuel was of the ſons of Korah: the ſon of Jeroham, the ſon of Elihu, the ſon of Tohu, the ſon of Zuph; the three laſt of theſe names are ſomewhat differently read in 1 Chron. vi. 26, 27. where they are Eliab, Nahath, Zophai; and in ℣. 34, 35. Eliel, Toah, Zuph: an Ephrathite; which appellation is to be connected, according to Kimchi, not with Elkanah, but with Zuph; though neither of them were ſo called from Bethlehem-Judah, the inhabitants of which were indeed called Ephrathites from Ephratah, another name of it; ſo Elimelech and his ſons Mahlon and Chilion, being of that city, were ſo called Ruth i. 2. not from their being of the tribe of Ephraim, as Jeroboam of that tribe is called an Ephrathite, 1 Kings xi. 26. ſee Judg. xii. 5. for theſe were Levites, the deſcendants of Kohath, in the line of Korah; but becauſe they ſojourned in mount Ephraim, or dwelt there, as Elkanah did; and it is well known that the Kohathites had cities given them in the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. xxi. 5. 21. 22.

[a] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 14. 2. [b] Demonstrat. Evangel. Prop. 4. p. 199. [c] Apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. 5. §. 2. [d] Apud Euseb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 30. [e] De loc. Heb. fol. 88. K.

℣. 2. And he had two wives, &c.] Which tho' connived at in thoſe times, was contrary to the original law of marriage; and for which, though a good man, he was chaſtized, and had a great deal of vexation and trouble, the two wives not agreeing with each other; perhaps not having children by the one, ſo ſoon as he hoped and wiſhed for, he took another: the name of the one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah; the firſt name ſignifies grace or gracious, and ſhe was a woman who had the grace of God, and very probably was alſo very comely, beautiful, and acceptable, as ſhe was in the ſight of her huſband; the other ſignifies a cornered gem, a precious ſtone or jewel, as the pearl, ruby, amethyſt, &c. Very likely Hannah was his firſt wife, and having no children by her he took Peninnah, who proved to be a rough diamond: and Peninnah had children, but Hannah had no children; how many Peninnah had is not ſaid, perhaps ten; ſee ℣. 8. and that Hannah had none was not becauſe ſhe was naturally barren, but becauſe the Lord had ſhut up her womb, or reſtrained her from bearing children, to put her upon praying for one, and that the birth of Samuel might be the more remarkable; ſee ℣. 5.

℣. 3. This man went up out of his city yearly, &c.] From year to year; or as the Targum, from the time of the ſolemn appointed feaſt to the ſolemn appointed feaſt, from one to another; there were three of them in the year, at which all the males in Iſrael were to appear at the tabernacle; and being a Levite, this man was the more careful to obſerve this rule. He is ſaid to go up out of his city, which was Ramathaim or Ramah; for though it was built on an eminence, from whence it had its name, yet Shiloh whither he went was higher; that being, as Adrichomius ſays [a], on the higheſt mountain of all round about Jeruſalem, and overtopped all the mountains of the holy land. So that as he firſt went down the hill from Ramah, he went up an high aſcent to Shiloh, which is the place he went up to as follows: to worſhip and to ſacrifice unto the Lord of hoſts in Shiloh; where the tabernacle was, the place of worſhip, and the altar of burnt-offerings, on which ſacrifices were offered. This place, according to Bunting [b], was 12 miles from Ramah, though others ſay it was not more than 7 miles from it; hither he went to worſhip, or bow before the Lord; to pray unto him, as it is commonly interpreted; and being put before ſacrifice, is ſaid to be preferable to that, and more acceptable to God, and more eligible to be done in the tabernacle or temple than at home; ſee Luke xviii. 10. and though he is ſaid to go up to ſacrifice, it is not to be underſtood of his performing it himſelf, but by others, by the prieſt; for he himſelf was a Levite, and could not offer ſacrifices. This is the firſt time that mention is made of this title of Jehovah, Lord of hoſts, of all the hoſts and armies in heaven and in earth, the Lord of Sabaoth, as in Jam. v. 4. from צבא, an hoſt, or army; and from hence the heathens called ſome of their deities by the name of Sabazius, as Jupiter Sabazius [c]; and the Phrygians and Thracians uſed to call Bacchus, Sabazius, and other Grecians following them did the ſame [d]: and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phineas the prieſts of the Lord were there; Eli was the next judge of Iſrael after Samſon, and who alſo was the high-prieſt, as is generally ſuppoſed; but when and how the high-prieſthood came into his family is no where ſaid, who was a deſcendent of Ithamar, the younger ſon of Aaron, in whoſe line it continued to the time of Solomon; and Joſephus [e] places three between Phinehas and Eli, who were all of the line of Eleazar, whom he calls Abiezer, Bouci, and Ozis; but their ſcripture-names are Abiſhua, Bukki, and Uzzi, 1 Chron. vi. 50, 51. And according to him, after Uzzi came Eli to be high-prieſt, and therefore muſt be the firſt of the line of Ithamar that was in that office. His two ſons are mentioned as officiating as prieſts in Shiloh, at the time Elkanah uſed to go yearly thither to worſhip and ſacrifice; who were very wicked men, as appears by an after-account of them; and it is generally thought, that this is obſerved here to ſhew, that the wickedneſs of theſe prieſts did not hinder this good man from doing his duty; nor did he make uſe of it as an excuſe for not attending the worſhip of the ſanctuary.

℣. 4. And when the time was that Elkanah offered, &c.] That is, brought his offering to the prieſt, to offer it for him, which was at one of the three feſtivals. According to R. Joſhua Ben Levi [f], this was at the time of Pentecoſt; but Abarbinel thinks it was at the time of the ingathering of the fruits of the earth, which was a time of rejoicing, even [z] Paleſtin. Illuſtrat. tom. 2. p. 581.

[a] Theatrum terræ ſanct. p. 30. So Sandy's Travels, l. 3. p. 157.
[b] Travels of Patriarchs, &c. p. 122.
[c] Valer. Maxim. l. 1. c. 3. Vid. D. Herbert de Cherbury de relig. Gent c. 3. p. 22.
[d] Diodor. Sicul. Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 212. Harpocration in voce σαβοι, Lucian. Concil. deor §. 4. Cicero de legibus, l. 2. Ariſtophan. veſpæ, v. 9, 10. Aves, p. 582. & Scholia in ib. Lyſiſtrate, p. 800. & Scholia in ib.
[e] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 11. §. 5.
[f] Apud Kimchium in loc.

2

even the feaſt of tabernacles, and which is moſt likely: he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her ſons and her daughters portions; parts of the offering, every one a part, or portion; by which it appears, that this was a peace-offering he offered, the greater part of which belonged to the owner, and which he made a feaſt of for his family and friends; ſee Deut. xii. 5, 6, 7. and xvi. 10—15. Jerom [g] interprets theſe portions of garments.

℣. 5. But unto Hannah he gave a worthy portion, &c.] Or, one choice portion, as the Targum; the beſt part or portion in the peace-offering, of what the prieſt had not; he had the breaſt and the right ſhoulder, the next beſt piece he gave to Hannah; and the word being of the dual number, ſome render it a double portion; others, one part of two faces [h]; which Jerom interprets, which might be received with a chearful countenance, it was ſo good and excellent in its kind; others interpret it that he gave it with a ſorrowful [i] and diſpleaſed countenance, becauſe of the reaſon following, that ſhe had no children; but Ben Gerſom underſtands it of a part or portion of meat that had two faces or appearances; that he gave her one of the pieces, one part of which was very fat, and the other had no fat on it, ſo that ſhe might chuſe what ſhe liked beſt: for he loved Hannah; loved her beſt, and therefore did every thing to pleaſe her, and make her comfortable under her affliction for want of children, and to expreſs his tender affection for her: but the Lord had ſhut up her womb; reſtrained her from conception, and bearing children; ſee Gen. xx. 18. or though the Lord had ſhut up her womb [k]; this did not abate his love to her.

℣. 6. And her adverſary alſo provoked her ſore, &c.] That is, Peninnah, the other wife of Elkanah; for when a man had more wives, two or more, they were uſually at ennity to one another, as the two wives of Socrates were, being always jealous leſt one ſhould have more love and reſpect than the other from the huſband; and this woman provoked Hannah one time after another, and continually, by upbraiding her with her barrenneſs; and this was another reaſon why Elkanah did all he could to comfort her, not only becauſe the Lord had reſtrained her from bearing children, but becauſe alſo ſhe that envied and emulated her, ſadly provoked her: for to make her fret; and be uneaſy, and murmur at, and complain of her unhappy circumſtances: ſome render it, becauſe ſhe thundered [l] againſt her; that is, Peninnah was exceeding loud and clamorous with her reproaches and ſcoffs, which were grievouſly provoking to Hannah. So ſaid Socrates, when Xantippe firſt ſcolded at him, and then poured foul water on him: did not I ſay, ſays he, that Xantippe firſt thunders, and then rains [m]? becauſe the Lord had ſhut up her womb; it was this Peninnah upbraided her with, and at which Hannah fretted and grieved.

℣. 7. And as he did ſo year by year, &c.] Elkanah went up every year to Shiloh, and offered ſacrifices, taking his family with him, and gave to Peninnah and her children their portion, and to Hannah a double portion, or if but one yet the beſt: when ſhe went up to the houſe of the Lord; that is, Peninnah, along with her huſband, with whom ſhe went every year to the tabernacle at Shiloh: ſo ſhe provoked her; her rival Hannah, upbraiding her with her barrenneſs; to which ſhe was ſtirred up by ſeeing her huſband on theſe feſtivals take ſo much notice of her, and ſhew ſo much love and reſpect for her, as always to give her the beſt portion. Abarbinel thinks, that Peninnah and Hannah lived at two ſeparate places, the one at Ramah and the other at Ramatha, which both together are called Ramathaim; and that they only met with and ſaw one another at theſe feſtivals, and then it was that the one was ſo very inſulting and provoking to the other: therefore ſhe wept and did not eat; that is, Hannah wept at the inſults, reproaches, and ſcoffs, caſt at her by her antagoniſt; inſomuch that ſhe could not eat of the peace-offerings, though her huſband always gave her the beſt part and portion of them; but her grief took away her ſtomach and appetite, that ſhe could not eat; ſee Pſ. xlii. 3.

℣. 8. Then ſaid Elkanah her huſband to her, Hannah, why weepeſt thou?] Since it was a time of rejoicing, as every feſtival was, eſpecially at the ingathering of the fruits of the earth: and why eateſt thou not? ſince they were at a feaſt, and ſhe had the beſt part and portion of the proviſion: and why is thy heart grieved? to ſuch a degree that ſhe could neither eat nor drink: am not I better to thee than ten ſons? which, as Jarchi ſays, Peninnah had borne to him; his meaning is, that the ſhare ſhe had in his love and affections, ought to have been eſteemed by her more, than if ſhe had ten or many children by him; and it ſuggeſts that Peninnah would have been glad to have had ſuch a ſhare in his affections as Hannah had; and it would have been more eligible to her, than to have borne him ſo many children as ſhe had.

℣. 9. So Hannah roſe up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drank, &c.] After dinner, after Elkanah and Peninnah, and their children, had eaten heartily, and drank freely, and made a comfortable meal, and even a feaſt of it, at the place where the tabernacle and altar were, and their peace-offerings were offered up, part of which they had been regaling themſelves with. The Targum is, "after ſhe had eaten in Shiloh, and after ſhe had drank;" for upon the intreaty of her huſband, and to make him eaſy, ſhe might be prevailed upon to eat ſomewhat, though it might be but little; and to drink, though it was but water; for as for wine and ſtrong drink, ſhe declares afterwards ſhe had not drank, ℣. 15. now Eli the prieſt ſat upon a ſeat by a poſt of the temple of the Lord; for ſo the tabernacle was called, and ſometimes the temple is called a tabernacle, Jer. x. 20. Now at the door-poſts and ſide of the threſhold of the temple of the Lord, as the Targum; at the entrance of the great court of the Iſraelites, Eli had a ſeat placed, on which he ſat; this muſt be at the gate of the court of the tabernacles, by the pillars of it; for in the court itſelf, none afterwards might ſit but kings of the family of David [n]; here Eli ſat as an high-prieſt and judge, to give advice in difficult caſes, and to try and judge all cauſes that were brought before him; ſome ſay [o] that he was on

[g] Trad. Heb in lib. Reg. fol 74. H.
[h] מנה אחת אפים unam portionem duarum facierum, Sanctius Belga. propterea quod intonabat contra eam, Piſcator.
[i] Sic Stockius, p. 79.
[k] ויהוה quanquam Jehovah, Piſcator.
[l] בעבור הרעמה
[m] Laert. in vit. Socrat. p. 112.
[n] Maimon. Bechora in Miſn. Yoma, c. 7. §. 1.
[o] Shoched Tob apud Yalkut, par. 2. fol. 12. 4.

on this day conſtituted an high-prieſt, and others ſay [q] he was now made a judge; but no doubt he was both high prieſt and judge before this time.

℣. 10. And ſhe was in bitterneſs of ſoul, &c.] Becauſe of her barrenneſs, and the taunts and reflections ſhe had met with on that account; her life was bitter to her, ſhe could take no pleaſure in any of the comforts of it: and prayed unto the Lord, and wept ſore; her prayer was with ſtrong crying and tears; it was very fervent and affectionate; ſhe prayed moſt vehemently, and wept bitterly. This perhaps was about the time of the evening-ſacrifice, about three or four o'clock in the afternoon; ſeeing it was after dinner that ſhe aroſe up and went to prayer in the houſe of God, at the door of the tabernacle, or near it, as it ſhould ſeem by the notice Eli took of her, who ſat there.

℣. 11. And ſhe vowed a vow, &c.] Which might be confirmed by her huſband; otherwiſe the vow of a woman, if diſapproved of by her huſband, was not valid, Numb. xxx. 8. and Elkanah might make the ſame vow his wife did, and ſo it ſtood; for as this was a vow of Nazariteſhip, it is a tradition of the Jews [r], that a man may vow his ſon to be a Nazarite, but a woman may not; but as this inſtance contradicts the tradition, they endeavour to explain away this vow, as it may reſpect a Nazarite, as will be obſerved hereafter: and ſaid, O Lord of hoſts; this is properly the firſt time this title was uſed by any that we know of; for though it is expreſſed in ℣. 3. there it is uſed as the words of the writer of this hiſtory, and ſo, long after this prayer was put up; ſee the note there; and it is an obſervation in the Talmud [s], that from the day God created the world, no man called him the Lord of hoſts, till Hannah came and called him ſo: if thou wilt indeed look upon the affliction of thine handmaid; the ſorrow of heart ſhe had, the reproach ſhe met with, on account of her having no children: and remember me, and not forget thine handmaid; which petitions are the ſame in other words, and are repeated to denote her vehemence and importunity in prayer, and may allude to uſages among men, that will look upon a perſon in diſtreſs, and turn away and forget them, and never think of them more; which ſhe deprecates may not be her caſe with God: but wilt give unto thine handmaid a man-child; or, a ſeed of men [t]; a ſon in the midſt of men, as the Targum; ſuch as is deſireable by men, as a male-child for the moſt part is; though ſome Jewiſh writers interpret it of the ſeed of righteous, wiſe, and underſtanding men, ſuch as be fit to ſerve the Lord, which ſeems to be a ſenſe foreign to the text; a man-child ſhe aſks, becauſe no other could ſerve the Lord in the temple; and that ſhe meant by this phraſe ſuch an one is clear, becauſe ſhe vowed that a raſor ſhould not come on its head, which is never ſaid of females, as Kimchi obſerves: then will I give him unto the Lord all the days of his life; to ſerve him, and miniſter unto him in the ſanctuary; being born a Levite, it was incumbent on him to ſerve the Lord, and he had a right to his ſervice; but then a common Levite did not enter on it until 25 or 30 years of age, and was not always ſerving, but was diſmiſſed from it at 50; but the child ſhe vows, if the Lord would give her ſuch an one, ſhould be trained up in his ſervice from its infancy, and continue in it all the days of its life; and was to be alſo a perpetual Nazarite, as Samſon was, as follows: and there ſhall no raſor come upon his head; as was not to come upon a Nazarite, during his Nazariteſhip, Numb. vi. 5. and as ſuch a vow made by a woman contradicts the tradition of the Jews before mentioned, they give another ſenſe of this clauſe; as the Targum, which paraphraſes it, "and the fear of man ſhall not be upon him;" but about this there is a diviſion [u]; but that Samuel was a Nazarite, and a perpetual one, is the ſenſe of their beſt interpreters.

℣. 12. And it came to paſs, as ſhe continued praying before the Lord, &c.] Being very earneſt and importunate with him to grant her requeſt, and therefore repeated her petition, and prolonged her prayer, being unwilling to let the Lord go, until ſhe had a promiſe, or ſome ſatisfaction, that ſhe ſhould have the thing ſhe aſked; ſome think ſhe continued an hour in prayer: that Eli marked her mouth; obſerved the motion of her lips, and no doubt her diſtorted countenance, and liſt-up eyes and hands, but chiefly the former; not knowing what the woman was at, and what could be the meaning of ſuch motions.

℣. 13. Now Hannah, ſhe ſpoke in her heart, &c.] It was mental prayer ſhe uſed, ſome ejaculations of her mind ſhe ſent up to God, which ſhe was ſenſible were well known to him, and ſhe needed not to expreſs vocally: only her lips moved; as her heart endited, and ſent up her petitions, as if ſhe had uſed words and phraſes in form: but her voice was not heard; that ſhe might not ſeem to be oſtentatious in her prayer, and that ſhe might not interrupt others in their devotions; and ſhe knew that her voice was not neceſſary with reſpect to God: therefore Eli thought ſhe had been drunken; by the motions ſhe made, and geſtures ſhe uſed, as if ſhe was muttering ſomething to herſelf, and by her long continuance therein, and it being after a feaſt ſhe had been at with her huſband, and the reſt of the family; from all which Eli concluded this muſt be her caſe.

℣. 14. And Eli ſaid unto her, how long wilt thou be drunken? &c.] What every day drunk? what continually in this wicked practice? when will it be left off? for Eli might have obſerved on other days, and at other times, odd looks, and a ſtrange behaviour in her, which he took for the effects of drinking too much wine: or how long will this drunken fit laſt? ſhe had been a conſiderable time as he thought in it, and it was not gone off yet: the Targum is, "how long wilt thou behave like a fool, or a mad woman;" as drunken people generally do act, as if they were fools, or mad: put away thy wine from thee; not as if ſhe had any with her there to drink of, but he adviſes her, ſince it had ſuch an effect upon her, to abſtain from it, and wholly diſuſe it, and ſo break off ſuch an habit and cuſtom ſhe had got into; or he would have her go home and ſleep it out, and wait till ſhe had digeſted it, and the ſtrength of it was gone off, before ſhe came to ſuch a place of devotion and worſhip; from hence the Jews ſay [w] it may be learnt, that a drunken perſon ought not to pray.

℣. 15. And Hannah anſwered and ſaid, no, my lord, &c.] That is not my caſe, you have greatly miſtaken it; ſhe anſwered with great mildneſs and meekneſs, without falling into a paſſion at ſuch a ſcandalous imputation upon her, and with great reſpect and reverence to Eli, ſuitable to his office; ſo in after times the high-prieſt uſed to be addreſſed after

[q] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 13. p. 37.
[r] Miſn. Sotah, c. 3. §. 8.
[s] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 31. 2.
[t] זרע אנשים ſemen virorum Montanus.
[u] Miſn. Nazir, c. 9. §. 5.
[w] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 31. 1.

after this manner, particularly on the day of atonement, Lord high-prieſt, do ſo and ſo [x]; indeed theſe words of Hannah are interpreted as not ſo very reſpectful, as if the ſenſe was, not, a Lord, art thou in this matter; nor does the Holy Ghoſt dwell upon thee [y]; which thou haſt ſufficiently ſhewn, or thou wouldſt never have ſuſpected me of drunkenneſs: I am a woman of a ſorrowful ſpirit; depreſſed with trouble and grief on account of afflictions; if ſhe was drunk, it was not with wine, but with ſorrow: or a woman of a hard ſpirit [z]; which is ſometimes taken in an ill ſenſe, and according to Abarbinel is here denied by her, who connects this clauſe with the preceding thus; not, my lord, am I a woman of a hard ſpirit, or ſuch a hardened wretch, and ſuch an impudent woman, as I muſt be, were it ſo, to come drunk into the houſe of God, and pretend to pray unto him: I have drank neither wine, nor ſtrong drink; not any ſort of intoxicating liquors that day, neither wine new or old, as the Targum: but have poured out my ſoul before the Lord; the affliction of it, as the ſame paraphraſe; the grievances and diſtreſſes, the complaints of her ſoul, which were many, and which ſhe had poured out before the Lord freely and plentifully, and which had taken up ſome time to do it; ſee Pſ. lxii. 8. and the title of Pſ. cii. where phraſes ſimilar to this are uſed, and which ſeem to be taken from hence.

v. 16. Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial, &c.] A yokeleſs, a lawleſs, impudent, and abandoned creature; one of the wickedeſt, vileſt, and moſt profligate wretches; as ſhe muſt be to come drunk into the ſanctuary of God; ſee 1 Sam. xxv. 17, 25. Drunkenneſs in man is an abominable crime, but much more in a woman. The Romans [a] forbad wine to women, and drunkenneſs in them was a capital crime, as adultery, or any other; and indeed a drunken woman is liable to all manner of ſin: for out of the abundance of my complaint and grief have I ſpoken hitherto; out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will ſpeak, whether it is matter of trouble or of joy; the heart of Hannah was full of grief, and her mouth full of complaints, on which ſhe long dwelt, in order to give vent thereunto, and eaſe herſelf.

v. 17. Then Eli anſwered and ſaid, go in peace, &c.] He found he was miſtaken in her, and that her diſcourſe was not only ſober and rational, but religious and ſpiritual; and therefore diſmiſſes her in peace, and bids her not diſtreſs herſelf with what he had ſaid to her, nor with any thing ſhe had met with from others, or from the Lord; but expect peace and proſperity, and particularly ſucceſs in what ſhe had been engaged, and had been ſolicitous for: and the God of Iſrael grant thee thy petition that thou haſt aſked of him; which may be conſidered either as a prayer for her, he joining with her in a requeſt to the Lord, that what ſhe had aſked might be granted; or as a prophecy that ſo it would be, it being revealed to him by the Holy Ghoſt, as the high-prieſt of the Lord; or impreſſed by an impulſe upon his ſpirit, that the favour aſked would be given; and therefore ſhe might go home in peace, and with ſatisfaction of mind.

v. 18. And ſhe ſaid, let thine handmaid find grace in thy ſight, &c.] She had found favour in his ſight ſhe perceived, and ſhe deſires it might be continued and increaſed; and that as he had prayed for her, he would ſtill uſe his intereſt at the throne of grace for her: ſo the woman went her way; took her leave of Eli, and went from the tabernacle to her huſband: and did eat; what remained of the peace-offerings, which were to be eaten that night, and not left till the morning; and though ſhe would not eat her dinner, her heart was ſo full of grief, yet ſhe could now make a good ſupper, being eaſed and relieved in her mind: and her countenance was no more ſad; ſorrowful and dejected, but chearful, briſk, and lively; believing that her prayers, and thoſe of the high-prieſt, would be anſwered.

v. 19. And they roſe up in the morning early, &c.] Partly for devotion, and partly for the ſake of their journey: and worſhipped before the Lord; went up to the tabernacle, and prayed with their faces towards that part of it, the weſtern part, where ſtood the ark of the Lord, the ſymbol of the divine preſence; and when they no doubt gave thanks for all the favours they had received there, and prayed for a ſafe and proſperous journey home, committing themſelves to the care of divine providence: and returned, and came to their houſe to Ramah; or Ramatha, the ſame with Ramathaim, v. 1. Abarbinel thinks that Elkanah had two houſes, one at Ramah for Peninnah, and another at Ramatha for Hannah; and that this was Hannah's houſe, to which they returned and came: and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; cohabited with her as a man with his wife; it is a modeſt expreſſion of the conjugal act; ſee Gen. iv. 1. and is obſerved to ſhew, that the conception and birth of Samuel, were not in a ſupernatural way, but in the ordinary way and manner of generation: and the Lord remembered her; the prayer ſhe had made to him, opened her womb, as he had before ſhut it, and gave her power to conceive.

v. 20. Wherefore it came to paſs, when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, &c.] Or, at the revolutions of days [b]; at the end of a year, of a compleat year, as Ben Melech, from their return from Shiloh; for it might be ſome time after their return that ſhe conceived; or rather the ſenſe is, that at nine month's end, the uſual time of a woman's going with child from her conception, which is the date here given: that ſhe bare a ſon; was brought to bed of a ſon: and called his name Samuel, ſaying, becauſe I have aſked him of the Lord; one would think rather his name ſhould have been Saul, for the reaſon given; but as Ben Gerſom obſerves, givers of names are not always grammatically ſtrict and critical in them, or in the etymology of them, as in the names of Reuben and Noah, in which he inſtances; and this may be the rather overlooked in a woman, than in a man of learning. According to Kimchi, it is as if it was Saul-meel; that is, aſked of God, and by contraction Samuel; but Hillerus [c] gives a better account of this name, and takes it to be compoſed of Saul-mul-el, aſked before God, in the ſight of God, before the ark of God. This name Hannah gave her ſon (for ſometimes the father, and ſometimes the mother gave the name) in memory of the wonderful favour and goodneſs of God in granting her requeſt; and to impreſs her own mind with a ſenſe of the obligation ſhe lay under, to perform her vow, and to engage her ſon the more readily to give up himſelf

2

[x] Miſn Yoma, c. 1. §. 3, 5, 7.

[y] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 31. 2. Jarchi in loc.

[z] קשית רוח dura ſpiritu, Pagninus, Montanus.

[a] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 14 c. 13.

[b] לתקופות הימים in revolutionibus dierum, Montanus; ſo Piſcator.

[c] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 418, 419, 487.

himself to the service of God, when he reflected on his name, and the reason of it.

℣. 21. And the man Elkanah, and all his house, &c.] All his family, excepting Hannah, and her son Samuel; or all the men of his house, as the Targum; for only the males were obliged to appear at the three festivals: went up to Shiloh; to the house of God there: to offer unto the Lord the yearly sacrifice; either the passover, to which men commonly went up with their families; see Luke ii. 41, 42. or rather it may be what was offered at the feast of Tabernacles, as Abarbinel thinks, the time of the in-gathering the fruits of the earth, when men went up with their families to offer sacrifice, and express their joy on that account, Deut. xvi. 10—15. and his vow; which he had made between feast and feast; for whatever vows men made at home on any account, they paid them at the yearly festivals; and this vow might be on the account of the birth of his son, by way of thanksgiving for that.

℣. 22. But Hannah went not up, &c.] For women, though they might go if they pleased to the yearly feasts, yet they were not obliged to it; whether she went up at the time for her purification, and for the presenting and redemption of the firstborn, is not certain; some say the Levites were not obliged by that law, the perquisites of it falling to them, and so did not go up; others that she did, though it is not expressed, the scriptures not relating all facts that were done; though by what follows, it looks as if she did not: for she said unto her husband, I will not go up, until the child be weaned; which, according to Jarchi, was at the end of 22 months; but others say at the end of 24 months, or 2 years, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; and sometimes a child was three years old before it was weaned, and sometimes longer, which very probably was the case here; see the note on Gen. xxi. 8. Comestor[d] observes, there was a threefold weaning of children in old times; the first from their mother's milk, when three years old; the second from their tender age, and care of a dry nurse when seven years old; the third from childish manners, when at twelve years of age; and that it is this last and metaphorical weaning which is here meant, when Samuel was 12 years of age, and fit to serve in the temple; but the proper sense is best, since she is said to bring him when weaned: her reason for it seems to be this, because had she went up with her sucking child, she must have brought him back again, since he would not be fit to be left behind, and would be entirely uncapable of any kind of service in the sanctuary; and according to the nature of her vow, she could not think of bringing him back again, after she had once entered him there: and then I will bring him that he may appear before the Lord; and minister in the service of the sanctuary in what might be suitable to his age; there and then she would present him, and give him up to the Lord, as she had promised she would: and there abide for ever; that is, as long as he lived; for her vow was that he should be a Nazarite all the days of his life, and be separated to the service of God, as long as he had a being in the world.

℣. 23. And Elkanah her husband said unto her, do what seemeth thee good, &c.] He spake like a kind and indulgent husband, knowing that she would not thereby break any law of God; and it might be more for her own health, and the health of the child, to stay longer: tarry till thou have weaned him; when he would be more fit for the journey, and to be left behind: only the Lord establish his word; which some understand of the prophecy of Eli, that God would grant her request, which being delivered under the direction of the Spirit of God, is called his word; but this was already fulfilled and established by Hannah's bearing a son: or the word his refers not to the Lord, but to Samuel, and so may respect the word which his mother spake concerning him; either when she made her vow, as Abendana, that he should be a perpetual Nazarite, and the Lord's as long as he lived; and so Elkanah wishes that he might have health and grow strong, and be fit for the service of the Lord, and live many years to perform it; or what she had just now said, as Abarbinel, that he should abide in the house of God for ever, or as long as he lived: so the woman abode; at home, whilst Elkanah and his family went up to Shiloh: and gave her son suck until she weaned him; did not put him out to a wet or dry nurse, but suckled him herself with what nature had provided for his nourishment, as becomes women to do, if their circumstances of health, and the provisions of nature will admit of it.

℣. 24. And when she had weaned him, &c.] At the usual time of weaning children; see the note on the preceding verse; some refer this not only to the milk of the breast, from which he was weaned, but to such food as was common to children, and so supposes him grown up to nine or ten years of age: she took him up with her; to the tabernacle at Shiloh, at a yearly festival: with three bullocks; for three sorts of offerings, burnt-offering, sin-offering, and peace-offering; or since one only is spoken of as slain, that is, for sacrifice, the other two might be for food to entertain her family and friends with whilst there; or as a present to the high-priest, to whose care she committed her son: and one ephah of flour; if the bullocks were all sacrificed, three tenth deals, or three tenth parts of the ephah, went for a meat-offering to each bullock, which made nine parts out of ten, and the tenth part she had to dispose of at pleasure; see Numb. xv 9. though that seems to be restrained to a burnt-offering only: and a bottle of wine; part of which might be for the drink-offering which always attended a meat-offering, and the rest for her own use, and that of her friends: and brought him unto the house of the Lord in Shiloh; the tabernacle there, and delivered him up to the care of the high-priest, to be trained up in the service of God: and the child was young; a very child, very young in years, a little infant; not a sucking child, as the Targum, because weaned, otherwise of a very tender age; though some think this expresses that he was a well-grown lad, and was sharp and acute, and could well distinguish between good and evil.

℣. 25. And they slew a bullock, &c.] One of the three Hannah brought, unless the singular is put for the plural, and so all three were slain, some for sacrifice, and some for food perhaps; or if only one was slain, it might be offered as a sacrifice previous to the presentation of Samuel; or else was made a present of to Eli, at the introduction of Samuel to him, as follows: and brought the child to Eli; to be under his care, to be instructed and trained up by him in the service of the tabernacle; from hence it appears, that Elkanah the husband of Hannah came along with her at this time.

℣. 26.

[d] Apud Weemse's Observ. Nat. c 18. p. 76.

℣. 26. And she said, O my lord, &c.] According to the Targum, it is a supplication or request, I beseech thee, my lord; that is, to look upon her son, and take him under his care as his disciple or scholar, to instruct him in the law of God, and enter him into his service; to which Eli might be very backward and indifferent, and even treat it with some degree of contempt, that such a young Levite should be brought to him, when the soonest the Levites were admitted was at 25 years of age: as thy soul liveth, my lord; which Ben Gersom takes for the form of an oath, as if she swore to the truth of what follows by the life of the high-priest; but as it was forbidden to swear by any but by the living God, by his life, it can't be thought so good a woman as Hannah would be guilty of such a sinful and heathenish practice; this rather is a wish or prayer for his life and health, and the continuance thereof, to bring up her son in the exercise of true religion: I am the woman that stood by thee here, praying unto the Lord; by which it appears, that Eli was now at the tabernacle, and in the same place he was, ℣. 9. when she was some years ago praying near him, at the distance of 4 cubits, as the Jews say: she takes no notice of his mistaking her for a drunken woman, nor of his censure on her, and the reproof he gave her; but puts him in mind only of her praying to the Lord standing near to him, which made him take the more notice of her; standing is a prayer-posture; the Jews say there is no standing but what is prayer, or prayer is meant by it; see the note on Matt. vi. 5.

℣. 27. For this child I prayed, &c.] Which she now had in her hand, and was presenting to Eli: and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of him; and which he also desired might be granted her, or foretold that it would be, ℣. 17. tho' perhaps he knew not then particularly what it was she asked; nor did she acquaint him with it at parting as she now did, having obtained of the Lord what she was so solicitous for, and now makes mention of with thankfulness.

℣. 28. Therefore also I have lent him to the Lord, &c.] To be employed in his service, not for a few days, months, or years, but for his whole life. The Targum is, "I have delivered him that he may minister before the Lord;" as she had received him from him as an answer of prayer, she gave him up to him again according to her vow: as long as he liveth he shall be lent unto the Lord; or as the Targum, "all the days that he lives he shall be ministring before the Lord;" or all the days he shall be asked (or required) by or for the Lord[c]; that is, he shall be lent unto him, and serve him as long as it is desired: and he worshipped the Lord there; in the tabernacle at the same time; either Elkanah, who with Hannah brought the child to Eli, and now gave thanks to God for giving them the child, and prayed unto him that he might be received into the service of the sanctuary; or else Eli, to whom the child was brought for admittance, who when he heard that Hannah's request was granted, which he had intreated also might be, or had declared it would be, bowed his head, and gave thanks to God for it; or rather the child Samuel, as he was taught and trained up, bowed himself before the Lord, and worshipped him in the tabernacle as soon as he was brought into it, though a child; for he only is spoken of in this and the preceding verse; and by some interpreters[f] the name Samuel is supplied; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic versions read in the plural number, and they worshipped the Lord there; that is, Elkanah and his wife; so Mr. Weemse[g] translates and interprets it.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the song of Hannah is recorded, ℣. 1—10. and an account is given of the return of Elkanah and Hannah to their own home, and of the care she took yearly to provide a coat for Samuel, and of her being blessed with many other children, and of the growth and ministry of Samuel before the Lord, ℣. 11, 18—21, 26. and of the wickedness of the sons of Eli, ℣. 12—17. and of Eli's too gentle treatment of them when he reproved them for it, ℣. 22—25. and of a sharp message sent him from the Lord on that account, threatening destruction to his house, of which the death of his two sons would be a sign, ℣. 27—36.

℣. 1. And Hannah prayed and said, &c.] She had prayed before, but that was mental, this vocal; she had prayed and was answered, and had what she prayed for, and now she gives thanks for it; and thanksgiving is one kind of prayer, or a part of it; see 1 Tim. ii. 1. Phil. iv. 6. wherefore though what follows is a song, it was expressed in prayer; and therefore it is said she prayed, and that by a spirit of prophecy, as the Targum; hence she is by the Jews[h] reckoned one of the seven prophetesses; and indeed in this song she not only relates the gracious experiences of divine goodness she had been favoured with, and celebrates the divine perfections, and treats of the dealings of God with men, both in a way of providence and grace; but prophesies of things that should be done hereafter in Israel, and particularly of the Messiah and of his kingdom. There is a great likeness in this song to the song of the virgin Mary; compare ℣. 1. with Luke i. 46, 47. and ℣. 2. with ℣. 49. and ℣. 4, 8. with ℣. 51, 53. my heart rejoiceth in the Lord; not in her son the Lord had given her, but in the goodness and kindness of the Lord in bestowing him on her, as an answer of prayer; which shewed great condescension to her, the notice he took of her, the love he had to her, and his well-pleasedness in her, and his acceptance of her prayer through Christ; she rejoiced not in her husband, nor in the wealth and riches they were possessed of, nor in any creature-enjoyments, but in the Lord, the giver of all; nor in her religious services and sacrifices, but in the Lord Christ, thro' whom her duties were acceptable to God, and who was the antitype of the sacrifices offered; and it is in the person, offices, and grace of Christ, that we should alone rejoice; see Phil. iv. 4. and iii. 3. this joy of Hannah's was not worldly, but spiritual; not outward, but inward; not hypocritical, but real real and hearty: mine horn is exalted in the Lord; which ſuppoſes that ſhe had been in a low eſtate, was creſt-fallen, and her horn was defiled in the duſt, as Job ſays was his caſe, ch. xvi. 15. when God had ſhut up her womb, and her adverſary upbraided her with it, and provoked and fretted her; and when ſhe was ſo full of grief, that ſhe could not eat her food, and prayed in the bitterneſs of her ſoul; but now ſhe could lift up her horn and her head, as horned creatures, to whom the alluſion is, do, when they are lively and ſtrong; now ſhe could look pleaſant and chearful, and even triumph, being raiſed to an high eſtate, and greatly favoured of the Lord, to whom ſhe aſcribes this change of her ſtate and circumſtances: it was owing to his power and grace that ſhe was thus ſtrengthened and exalted; as it is owing to the ſame, that the people of God, who are in a low eſtate by nature, are raiſed out of it in converſion, and brought into an open ſtate of grace and favour with God, and put into the poſſeſſion of rich bleſſings and mercies, and have hope of eternal glory, on account of which they can exult and triumph: my mouth is enlarged over mine enemies; meaning Peninnah, and thoſe that provoked her, and upbraided her with her barrenneſs, to whom ſhe was not able to make any reply; but now her mouth was opened, and ſhe could ſpeak largely, and did; not in a way of reproach and reviling, in retaliation for what ſhe had met with from others; but in prayer to God, to whom ſhe could come with open mouth, and uſe freedom and boldneſs, and plead with importunity, fervency, and in faith, and in praiſe and thankſgiving to him for the great and good things he had done for her, and would now freely and largely ſpeak of them to others; to ſome, her friends, to their joy and pleaſure; and to others, her enemies, to their grief and confuſion: becauſe I rejoice in thy ſalvation; not only in temporal ſalvation wrought by the Lord for her, whereby ſhe was delivered from the reproach of barrenneſs, thro' a ſon being given unto her; but in ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, through the Meſſiah, ſhe had knowledge of, and faith in, as appears from ℣. 10. as all believers in him do, as it is contrived by the wiſdom of God, wrought out by Chriſt, and applied by his Spirit; it being ſo great, ſo ſuitable, ſo perfect and complete, entirely free, and of an everlaſting duration: ſee Pſ. xx. 5. Iſ. xxv. 9.

[c] Quamdiu שְׁאוּל, h. e. expetitus aut requisitur, Peter Martyr; quoties a Jehova postulatur, Piscator. [f] Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. [g] Observat. Nat. c. 18. p. 77. [h] T. Megillah, fol. 14. 1.

℣. 2. There is none holy as the Lord, &c.] From the conſideration of what the Lord had done for her, which had filled her heart and mouth with joy and praiſe, ſhe is led to celebrate the perfections of God, and begins with his holineſs, in which he is glorious, and which appears in all his ways and works; he is eſſentially, originally, independently, perfectly, and immutably holy, as others are not. Angels are holy, but not of themſelves; their holineſs is from the Lord; nor is it perfect in compariſon of his, and therefore they cover their faces while they celebrate that perfection of his; nor immutable, at leaſt not naturally ſo, as the loſs of it in thoſe that fell, demonſtrates. Of men, ſome under the legal diſpenſation were holy, not truly, but in a typical and ceremonial ſenſe; ſome are only outwardly and hypocritically holy, and only ſo in the ſight of men, not in the ſight of God; and thoſe that are truly holy, being called to holineſs, and have the principle of it implanted in them, and live holy lives and converſations; yet though there is a likeneſs of the holineſs of God in them, being made partakers of the divine nature; it is far from an equality to it; for the holineſs of the beſt of men is imperfect; they are not without ſin in them, nor without ſin committed by them, and perfection is diſclaimed by them all; but the Lord is without iniquity, juſt and true is he; none in his nature, nor in any of his works, not the leaſt ſhadow thereof: for there is none beſides thee; there is no God beſides him; no being but what is of him, and none is holy but by him; the holineſs of angels is from him; the holineſs of Adam in innocence was of him; and all the holineſs of his choſen ones comes from him, to which they are choſen by him, and which is ſecured in that choice unto them, and are ſanctified by God the Father, in Chriſt, and through the Spirit: neither is there any rock like our God; the word rock is uſed for deity, and ſometimes for a falſe one, Deut. xxxii. 31. and ſo it may here, and the ſenſe be, there is no god like to our God; there is indeed none beſides him; there are fictitious gods, and nominal ones, as the idols of the Gentiles, and who are ſo in an improper and figurative ſenſe, as magiſtrates; but there is but one true and living God; nor is there any like him for the perfections of his nature, and the bleſſings of his goodneſs, whether in providence or grace. Under this metaphor of a rock, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is often ſignified; he is the rock of Iſrael, the rock of refuge, and of ſalvation; and there is no rock can do what he does, hide and ſhelter from the juſtice of God; there is no rock like him for ſtrength and duration; none like him for a foundation to build upon, or for ſafety and protection from the wrath of God, and the rage of men, ſee Pſ. xviii. 31.

℣. 3. Talk no more ſo exceeding proudly, &c.] At ſuch an high rate, in ſuch an over-bearing manner, as if above every one; this may have reſpect to Peninnah, and all that joined with her to provoke Hannah to anger, and make her fret, inſulting and triumphing over her, becauſe ſhe had not children, as they had; but now their mouths would be ſtopped, and their talk over, and not give themſelves the haughty airs they had done, at leaſt there would be no occaſion for them: let not arrogancy come out of your mouth; arrogating to themſelves, and to their merits, what they enjoyed, as children, riches, &c. when all come from the Lord; or what is hard [i], intolerable, which bears ſo hard on thoſe to whom it is ſaid, that it can't be bore with; or what is old [k], and trite, old ſayings concerning barren women, as if of no uſe in the world, and diſagreeable to God, and as having no ſhare in his favour. The Targum renders the word by reproaches, or blaſphemies: for the Lord is a God of knowledge; or knowledges [l]; of perfect knowledge; he knows all perſons and things; he knows himſelf, his perfections, purpoſes, thoughts, words and works; he knows all his creatures, animate and inanimate, rational and irrational, angels and men; the hearts of all men; all that they ſay, all their hard ſayings, all their proud, haughty, over-bearing expreſſions, calumnies and reproaches, as well as all they think, and all they do, good or bad; and God will ſooner or later convince them of, and puniſh them for their hard ſpeeches againſt his people: and he is the author of all knowledge, natural, ral, civil, ſpiritual and evangelical: and by him actions are weighed; his own actions; his works ad intra; his purpoſes and decrees, the counſels of his will, and the thoughts of his heart, the things his mind is ſet upon; all his appointments and deſigns, his whole will and pleaſure; all are pondered by him, and are formed with the utmoſt wiſdom, and for the beſt ends and purpoſes: and all his actions and works without, whether of creation, providence and grace; all are weighed and done according to infinite wiſdom, unerring juſtice and truth; all reſpecting things temporal or ſpiritual, what relate to the outward eſtate of men, or to their everlaſting happineſs: all the actions of men, as they are known unto him, they are weighed and examined by him, whether they proceed from a right principle to a right end or no; upon which, many actions, thought to be good, are not found to be ſo, and others, though good, yet not found perfect before God; ſo that there is no juſtification nor ſalvation by the beſt: or the ſenſe is, ſuch actions as are done well, they are directed to him [m]; as they are ordained by him that men ſhould walk in them, they are for his uſe, and are done with a view to his glory. There is a double reading of theſe words; the marginal, which we follow, is to or by him actions are directed or weighed; but the textual reading is a negative, actions are not weighed [n], or numbered; the works of God can't be comprehended, or the actions of men are not diſpoſed and ordered without his will and pleaſure, or can't be performed unleſs he wills or permits; and all are diſpoſed of, over-ruled and directed to anſwer his own ends and purpoſes.

[i] עתק durum, Vatablus, Druſius, Piſcator; ſo R. Iſaiah.
[k] Vetera, V. L. vetus, Pagninus, Montanus.
[l] אל דעות Deus ſcientiarum, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Druſius.

v. 4. The bows of the mighty men are broken, &c.] Hannah, from relating gracious experiences, and celebrating the divine perfections of holineſs, omniſcience and ſovereignty, paſſes on to take notice of the dealings of God with men in providence and grace; bow are here put for all military arms, which men of might and war make uſe of, and which God can eaſily break in pieces, and ſo make war to ceaſe in the earth, and hinder warlike men from doing what they deſign and attempt; they are enfeebled and weakened by him, and their hands cannot perform their enterprizes: ſo the bows of ſatan, and his principalities and powers, are broken, and his fiery darts are quenched, and the people of the Lord enabled to ſtand againſt him, and wreſtle with him and them, being ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, as it follows: and they that ſtumbled are girt with ſtrength; who through weakneſs are ready to ſtumble at every thing they meet with in the way; yet being girded with ſtrength by the Lord, are able to do great exploits, as David did, that being his caſe, Pſ. xviii. 29, 32. ſo ſuch as are weak in grace, in faith, in knowledge, and ready to ſtumble at every trial and exerciſe, let it come from what quarter it will; yet being girded by the Lord with ſtrength, are able to exerciſe grace, perform duty, go through every ſervice they are called to, wherher in a way of doing or ſuffering, to bear the yoke and croſs of Chriſt, to oppoſe every enemy, to walk on in the ways of God, and to perſevere in faith and holineſs to the end.

v. 5. They that are full have hired out themſelves for bread, &c.] Such as have been full of the good things of this life, have been ſtripped of all, and reduced to ſuch circumſtances as to be obliged to hire themſelves out to perſons to labour under them for their bread. Hannah has either reſpect to ſome inſtances ſhe had known, or propheſies of what would be hereafter, and was fulfilled in the Iſraelites, when in the hands of the Egyptians and Aſſyrians, Lam. iv. 6 and may be exemplified in the caſe of the prodigal ſon, Luke xv. 13—16. and is true of ſuch who have large gifts but not grace, and which they exerciſe for lucre-ſake, and are mere hirelings; and of ſelf-righteous perſons who are full of themſelves, of their goodneſs and righteouſneſs, purity and power; are quite mercenary, do all they do for gain, work for life, and labour for periſhing meat, and for that which is not bread, and is unſatisfying: and they that were hungry ceaſed; that is, from being hungry, being filled with good things, having a large and ſufficient ſupply to ſatisfy their craving deſires, Luke i. 53. Such are the changes ſometimes in providence, that thoſe who have lived in great plenty and fulneſs, are obliged to work for their bread; and, on the other hand, ſuch as have been ſtarving, and in famiſhing circumſtances, have been brought into very plentiful and affluent ones. The hungry, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, are ſuch who hunger and thirſt after Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs, for juſtification before God; after him and his blood for the remiſſion of their ſins, and the cleanſing of their ſouls; after him, and ſalvation by him, in whom alone it is to be had; after a view of intereſt in him, and a greater degree of knowledge of him; and after more communion with him in his word and ordinances; and after the enjoyment of them for that purpoſe: now when they enjoy what they are craving after, they ceaſe to hire out themſelves for bread, as others do; they don't ceaſe from working, but from dependence on their works, on which they can't feed and live, having found and got other and better bread to feed upon; they ceaſe to be hungry, for they are filled and ſatisfied with the love of God, with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, with the bleſſings of grace, and ſalvation by him, with the goodneſs of his houſe, and with all the fulneſs of God and Chriſt; and ſo having what ſatisfies them, they deſire no other food, ſhall have no more want, or be in a ſtarving condition any more, eſpecially this will be the caſe hereafter: ſo that the barren hath born ſeven; meaning herſelf, who had born many, even five children beſides Samuel, v. 20, 21. which either was the caſe before this ſong was delivered; or rather what ſhe believed would be the caſe after Eli had bleſſed her, and prayed for the children by her; ſeven being a number put for many, Prov. xxiv. 16. Iſ. iv. 1. and ſhe that hath many children is waxed feeble; and uncapable of bearing more, and ſtripped of what ſhe had; this may be underſtood of Peninnah, concerning whom the Jews have this tradition [o], which Jarchi relates, that when Hannah bore one child, Peninnah buried two; and whereas Hannah had five, Peninnah loſt all her ten children. This may be applied to the caſe of the Gentile and Jewiſh churches, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, when more were the children of the deſolate or barren, the Gentiles, then of the married wife, the Jews, Iſ. liv. 1.

v. 6. The Lord killeth, and maketh alive, &c.] Which is true of different perſons; ſome he takes away by death, and others he preſerves and continues in life; and of the ſame perſons, whom God re-removes by death, and reſtores them to life again, of which there are inſtances both in the Old and New Teſtament; and be they which they will, both are of God, he is the great diſpoſer of life and death. Death is of him; it is by his appointment; it is ſent by his order; and when it has a commiſſion from him, there is no reſiſting it; and let it be brought about by what means it will, ſtill it is of God: and life is of him; it is firſt given by him, and it is preſerved by him; and though taken away, it ſhall be reſtored at the reſurrection of the dead; of which ſome interpret this clauſe, as Kimchi and Ben Gerſom obſerve: and what is here ſaid is true, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; the Lord kills by the law, or ſhews men that they are dead in ſin, and in a law-ſenſe; and he makes alive by his Spirit, thro' the Goſpel, quickening ſuch who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; which is his own work, and the effect of divine power and grace; ſee the note on Deut. xxxii. 39. he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up; he bringeth ſome very near to the grave, to the very brink of it; ſo that in their own apprehenſions, and in the opinion of their friends, they are juſt dropping into it, and no hope of recovery left; when he ſays to them return, and brings them back from the pit, and delivers them from going into it, Job xxxiii. 22, 28, 30. Pſ. xc. 3. and even when they are laid in it, he brings up out of it again, as in the caſe of Lazarus, and which will be the caſe in the reſurrection, John v. 28, 29.

[m] ולא נתכנן ipſi directa ſunt. Pagninus. [n] Non diſponuntur. Junius & Tremellius; non numerantur, ſo ſome in Vatablus; non perficiuntur, ſo ſome in Munſter, fol. 34. K. [o] Vid. Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg.

℣. 7. The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich, &c.] Which is true in a natural ſenſe of the ſame perſons, as might be exemplified in the caſe of Job, and of different perſons, as in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus; for both poverty and riches are of God, ſee Prov. xxii. 2. and xxx. 8. Poverty is of God; for though it is ſometimes owing to a man's own conduct, yet that there is ſuch a difference among men in general, that ſome ſhould be poor, and others rich, is owing to the wiſe providence of God, that men may be dependent on one another. Riches are of God, and are the gifts of his bountiful providence; for though they are oftentimes the fruits of induſtry and diligence, as means, yet not always; and whenever they are, they are to be aſcribed to the bleſſing of God attending the diligent hand. This is alſo true in a ſpiritual ſenſe; for though ſpiritual poverty is owing to the fall of Adam, and to the actual ſins and tranſgreſſions of men, whereby they become poor and miſerable, yet all this is not without the knowledge and will of God; and it is he that makes men ſenſible of their poverty, and then makes them rich in ſpiritual things, with his own grace, and the bleſſings of it, with the riches of grace here, and of glory hereafter; all which flow from the good-will of God, who has laid up much for his people, beſtowed much on them, and entitles them to more; and which come to them through the poverty of Chriſt, who, though he was rich, became poor, that they through his poverty might be made rich, 2 Cor. viii. 9. he bringeth low, and lifteth up; which has been verified in the ſame perſons, as in Job, Nebuchadnezzar, &c. and in different perſons, for he puts down one, and raiſes up another; ſo he rejected Saul from being king, and took David from the ſheepfold, debaſed Haman, and raiſed Mordecai to great dignity: and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, the Lord ſhews men the low eſtate and condition they are brought into by ſin, humbles them under a ſenſe of it, brings down their proud ſpirits to ſit at the feet of Jeſus, and to ſubmit to him, and to his righteouſneſs; and he lifts them up by his ſon out of their fallen captive and miſerable eſtate, and by his ſpirit and grace brings them out of the horrible pit of nature, into the ſtate of grace; ſets them upon the rock Chriſt, and makes their mountain to ſtand ſtrong by the diſcoveries of his love, and will at laſt lift them up to glory, and place them on the ſame throne with Chriſt.

℣. 8. He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, &c.] This is but a farther illuſtration of what is before expreſſed. Literally; ſuch poor as are beggars, are thoſe that are extremely poor, that ſit in the duſt and beg, and have nothing but a dunghill to lie on; yet God is able to raiſe and lift up perſons in ſuch an extremely low condition to a very high one: ſpiritually; ſuch are the poor, who are poor in ſpirit, and ſpiritually poor, and are ſenſible of it, and they, and they only, are beggars. For all that are poor, as they are not ſenſible of their poverty, ſo they beg not; but ſome are and beg; they knock at the door of grace and mercy; their language is petitionary, they intreat the grace and mercy of God; their poſture is ſtanding, and waiting till they have an anſwer; they are importunate, and will not eaſily take a denial; and they obſerve all opportunities to get relief, and are thankful for every thing that is given them. Their condition, in which they are, is repreſented by the duſt and dunghill; which in general denotes, that they are in a mean eſtate, in a ſinful one, and in a very polluted and loathſome one; in this condition the Lord finds them, when he calls them by his grace; and from this he raiſes and lifts them up by his Spirit and grace, out of which they could never have raiſed themſelves; and in which ſtate of ſin and miſery they muſt have lain, had he not exerted his powerful efficacious grace, in bringing them into a glorious one, next deſcribed: to ſet them among princes; the people of God called by grace, who are the ſons of the King of kings by adoption, manifeſted in their regeneration and faith; have a princely ſpirit, the ſpirit of adoption, a free, generous and bountiful one; live and look like princes, are well fed and clothed, and attended; have the riches of princes, and are heirs of a kingdom: and to be ſet among them, is to be made one, and ranked as ſuch; to have a place and a name in the church, and among the people of God; to ſit down with them at the table of the Lord, and have communion with them: and to make them inherit the throne of glory; eternal glory and happineſs, which as it is ſignified by a kingdom and crown, ſo by a throne, and is the ſame with Chriſt's, Rev. iii. 21. and therefore muſt be a glorious one: and this is had by way of inheritance; not obtained by induſtry, nor purchaſed with money; but comes by adoption-grace, and belongs only to children, is a bequeſt of our heavenly Father, and comes thro' the death of Chriſt the teſtator; and this phraſe denotes not barely the right unto, but the poſſeſſion of this happineſs and glory: for the pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and he hath ſet the world upon them; the earth has its foundations on which it is laid, and its pillars by which it is ſupported; but theſe are no other than the power and providence of God; otherwiſe the earth is hung upon nothing, in the open, circumambient air: and that God can and does do this, may well be thought, and to do all the above things in providence and grace, related in the preceding verſes; in the ſupport, and for the proof of which this is obſerved. Figuratively, the pillars of the earth, earth may design the princes of the world, the supreme rulers of it, and civil magistrates, who are sometimes called corner-stones, and the shields of the earth, Zech. x. 4. Ps. xlvii. 9. and so pillars, because they are the means of cementing, supporting and protecting the people of the earth, and of preserving their peace and property. Likewise good men may be meant in a figurative sense, who as they are salt of the earth, are the pillars of it, for whose sake it was made, and is supported, and continued in being: the church is the pillar and ground of truth; and every good man is a pillar in the house of God, and especially ministers of the Gospel; see Rev. iii. 12. 1 Tim. iii. 15. Gal. ii. 9. Prov. ix. 1.

℣. 9. He will keep the feet of his saints, &c.] Now follow promises and prophecies of future things respecting the Israel of God, either in a literal or spiritual sense. By his saints are meant not angels, though they are his holy ones, but men, and a body of them; who though unholy in themselves, nor can they make themselves holy, yet are made so by the grace of God, in consequence of electing grace, by which they are chosen to be holy, from Christ the source and spring of all holiness, by the Holy Spirit of God, as the efficient cause, and which is done in effectual vocation; hence they live holy lives and conversations, though not altogether without sin in the present state. The word also signifies such to whom God has been kind and gracious, and on whom he has bestowed blessings of goodness, and who are bountiful and beneficent to others. These are the Lord's, whom he has set apart for himself, and has sanctified in Christ, and by his Spirit; and of these he is keeper, not angels, nor ministers of the word, nor themselves, but the Lord himself is the keeper of them; and who is an able, faithful, tender and compassionate, constant and everlasting keeper of them; and particularly he keeps their feet: he indeed keeps their whole persons, their bodies and souls; the members of their bodies, and the powers of their souls, their head, their heart, their affections, from turning aside from him; he guides, directs and orders all their actions and goings; he keeps their feet in his own ways, where he has guided them; he keeps them in Christ the way, and in all the paths of faith, truth, righteousness and holiness, and in the way everlasting: he keeps them from falling; for tho' they are liable to fall into sin, and by temptation, and from a lively exercise of grace, yet not totally and finally; they are secured from it by his love to them; the promises he has made them; his power exerted on their behalf; their being in the hands of Christ, and the glory of all the three persons concerned herein: and the wicked shall be silent in darkness; sin has spread darkness over all human nature; every man is born and brought up in darkness and walks in it: a state of unregeneracy is a state of darkness, in which wicked men continue; and they are in the dark about God, the perfections of his nature, his mind and will, word and worship; about Christ, and the way of life, peace and salvation by him; about their own state and condition by nature, and the danger they are in; about the nature and necessity of regeneration; and about the scriptures, and the doctrines of the gospel; and living and dying in such a state, darkness, blackness of darkness is their portion for ever: so the Targum, "the wicked in hell in darkness shall be judged:" and it is said they shall be silent in it; they are quiet, easy and content in the state of natural darkness, in which they are; they neither do, nor will understand; they don't care to come to the light, but shun the means of light and knowledge; they have nothing to say of God, of Christ, of the Spirit of God, or of divine things; they can talk enough of evil things, and pour them out in great plenty, but not of any good; and when their evils are charged upon them by the law, their mouths are stopped, and they pronounced guilty, and have nothing to say why justice and judgment should not take place; and so they will be silent and speechless at the great day of judgment. Some interpret it, they shall be cut off in darkness; so Kimchi and Ben Melech; that is, by death, by the hand of God, by the sword of justice: for by strength shall no man prevail; which is a reason both why God will keep his saints, and why the wicked shall be silent, or cut off and perish: with respect to good men, they are not saved, kept and preserved by their own strength; they are not saved without a righteousness, without regeneration, without repentance towards God, and faith in Christ; neither of which they can perform in their own strength: nor can a saint keep himself from, or prevail over his spiritual enemies of himself, not over sin, nor satan, nor the world; but it is by the power of God that he is kept through faith unto salvation: and with respect to wicked men, these shall not prevail by their strength over good men, or the church, who are built upon a rock, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail; nor can the wicked so prevail by their strength as to hinder their being cut off, and cast into outer darkness; they have no power over the spirit to retain it in the day of death; and whether they will or no, they shall be cast into hell, and go into everlasting punishment.

℣. 10. The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken to pieces, &c.] Or Jehovah, Father, Son and Spirit, shall break in pieces those that contend with him; with the Lord, or with his people, or with Samuel particularly; for this may be considered as a prophecy of Hannah concerning her son, what God would do for him against his enemies, that should rise up, contend, and fight with him, as the Philistines; of whom Ben Gersom interprets it, whom the Lord discomfited and broke to pieces; see the literal fulfilment of this prophecy in ch. 7. in a spiritual sense all wicked men are the enemies of God, and of his people, and sooner or later shall be broken to pieces. Some, in a good sense; when they are smitten with the words of his mouth, cut to the heart, and made contrite; are humbled and brought into subjection to him, and their enmity slain and abolished, and they filled with love to him; and are so broken to pieces, that they have nothing to depend upon, or trust in for life or salvation, but apply to Christ alone for it. Others, in an ill sense; and the meaning is, that the wicked shall be utterly destroyed by the Lord, with an everlasting destruction, with an incurable and irreparable one; shall be broken in pieces like a potter's vessel, which can never be put together again, see Ps. ii. 9. Rev. ii. 27. out of heaven shall he thunder upon them; as the Lord did upon the Philistines in the times of Samuel, when Israel were engaged in war with them, ch. vii. 10. And the last vial of the wrath of God, poured out upon his adversaries the antichristian states, will be attended with thunders and lightenings, Rev. xvi. 17, 18. it denotes the terrible manner in which God will destroy his adversaries; the Septuagint version is, the Lord ascended to heaven and thundered; hence Procopius Gazæus, following this verſion, ſays, Hannah propheſied of the taking up of the Saviour, and of the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and of the preaching of the apoſtles, and of the ſecond coming of Chriſt, as follows: the Lord ſhall judge the ends of the earth; not of the land of Iſrael by Samuel, as ſome interpret it, ſee ch. vii. 15—17. but of the whole world, and may refer to the government of it in general by the Lord, or to the judgment of it by his Son; for he judges none, but has committed all judgment to him; who at his firſt coming judged the world, by the miniſtry of the word in Judea and in the Gentile world, by ſetting up ordinances, and by qualifying and conſtituting perſons to act in the government of his church under him; and at his ſpiritual coming he will take to himſelf his great power and reign, and judge the whore of Babylon; and at his laſt or ſecond coming he will judge the whole world, quick and dead, righteous and wicked: and he ſhall give ſtrength unto his king; either who was made king in the times of Samuel, Saul, who was the firſt of the kings of Iſrael, or David, whom Samuel anointed; and it is true of them both, that the Lord gave them ſtrength to fight with and conquer their enemies; or rather the king Meſſiah, who in the next clauſe is called the Lord's anointed, or Meſſiah: and exalt the horn of his anointed; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes the words, "he ſhall give ſtrength to his king, and enlarge the kingdom of his Meſſiah;" with which Kimchi agrees, and ſays, the thing is doubled or repeated, for the king is the Meſſiah; and to him the words are applied by other Jewiſh writers [p], ancient and modern. Chriſt is king over all, angels and men, particularly he is king of ſaints; he is Jehovah's king, ſet up and anointed by him from everlaſting; was in time promiſed as ſuch, and in the fulneſs of time came in that character, and at his aſcenſion to heaven was made and declared Lord and Chriſt; and thro' the ſucceſs of his goſpel in the world has appeared yet more ſo, and will be ſtill more manifeſt in the latter day, when he ſhall be king over all the earth, and eſpecially in his perſonal reign. Now when ſtrength is ſaid to be given him, this muſt be underſtood either of ſtrength given to him in human nature, to perform the great work of our redemption and ſalvation, which required great ſtrength; as a divine perſon he needed none, as man he did; or of that ſtrength communicated to him as mediator, to give unto his people, in whom they have both righteouſneſs and ſtrength; or rather of that power and dominion given him as king particularly; all power in heaven and in earth were given him at his reſurrection, and will appear more fully hereafter, when his kingdom will be from ſea to ſea, and his dominion from the river to the ends of the earth, ſee Dan. vii. 13, 14. And the ſame thing is meant by horn, which is an emblem of ſtrength, power, dominion and glory; hence he himſelf is called the horn of David, and the horn of ſalvation; it is a name and title given to kings, Dan. vii. 24. Rev. xvii. 12. in alluſion to the horns of beaſts, in which their ſtrength lies to defend themſelves, and annoy their enemies; and the exaltation of him propheſied of, may reſpect and include his reſurrection from the dead, aſcenſion to heaven, ſeſſion at the right-hand of God, the judgment of all committed to him, and the glorious exerciſe of his kingly office in the ſpiritual and perſonal reigns. This is the firſt time we meet with the word Meſſiah, or anointed, as aſcribed to a divine perſon, the Son of God; who has this name or title from his being anointed, not with material oil, but with the oil of gladneſs, with the Holy Ghoſt, and his gifts and graces without meaſure; and who is called the Lord's anointed, becauſe he was anointed by his Father to be prophet, prieſt and king, or inveſted by him with thoſe offices even from eternity, ſee Pſ. ii. 6. Prov. viii. 22, 23. and which was more manifeſtly declared at his birth, his baptiſm, and aſcenſion to heaven; ſee Luke ii. 40, 52. Acts x. 37, 38. and ii. 36.

℣. 11. And Elkanah went to Ramah to his houſe, &c.] Of which ſee ch. i. 19. This was after he had offered the ſacrifices at the feaſt, worſhipped the Lord, and Hannah had delivered her prayer or ſong of praiſe, and both had committed Samuel to the care of Eli, and left him with him: and the child did miniſter unto the Lord before Eli the prieſt; he not only read in the book of the law, but learned to ſing the praiſes of God vocally, and to play upon an inſtrument of muſic uſed in the ſervice of God in thoſe times, and to light the lamps in the tabernacle, and open and ſhut the doors of it, and the like; which were ſuitable to his age, and which might not be quite ſo tender as ſome have thought; or this may reſpect ſome ſmall beginnings in the miniſtry of the ſanctuary, in which he gradually increaſed under the inſpection, guidance and inſtruction of Eli, which is meant by miniſtring before him; the Targum is, "in the life of Eli the prieſt;" he began his miniſtration before his death.

℣. 12. Now the ſons of Eli were ſons of Belial, &c.] Not that Eli their father was Belial, a wicked man; but though they had ſo good a father, they were very wicked men, unprofitable, abandoned wretches, that caſt off the yoke of the law of God, and gave themſelves up to all manner of wickedneſs: they knew not the Lord; not that they had no knowledge of God in theory, or were real atheiſts, but they were ſo practically; they denied him in works, they had no love to him, nor fear of him, and departed from his ways and worſhip, as much as if they were intirely ignorant of him; ſo the Targum, "they did not know to fear before the Lord," or ſerve him; or, as Kimchi, "they did not know the way of the Lord," that is, practically.

℣. 13. And the prieſts cuſtom with the people was, &c.] Not what was according to the will and law of God, but which the ſons of Eli had introduced; and in which they were followed by the reſt of the prieſts, and ſo it became an eſtabliſhed cuſtom, and had the force of a law, ſtatute, or judgment, as the word ſignifies: that when any man offered ſacrifice; not any ſort of ſacrifice, for if it was a burnt-offering, it was wholly conſumed by fire, and in that the following cuſtom could not take place; and if it was a ſin-offering, that was eaten by the prieſts, and ſo there was no need of taking ſuch a method, as after related; but a peace-offering, part of which belonged to the Lord, the fat that was burnt, and the breaſt and ſhoulder to the prieſt, and the reſt to the owner, who made a feaſt of it for his family and friends: the prieſt's ſervant came while the fleſh was in ſeething; that is, while thoſe parts were boiling for the owner and his family; which was done in ſome part of the tabernacle, as afterwards in the temple: with a fleſh-hook of three teeth in his hand; with a three-forked forked inſtrument, with which he was ſent by order of the prieſt that ſlew the ſacrifice, and offered it, to whom belonged the parts before-mentioned, allowed him by the law; but not content with theſe, he ſent his ſervant, while the reſt were boiling, with ſuch an inſtrument as here deſcribed, to draw up more out of the boiling-pot.

[p] Zohar in Gen. fol. 58. 4. Midraſh Echa Rabbati, fol. 53. 3. R. Saadiah Gaon, Comment. in Dan. vii. 13.

℣. 14. And he ſtrook it into the pan, or kettle, or cauldron, or pot, &c.] Whatever veſſel was made uſe of, larger or leſſer, according to the quantity of fleſh the owner boiled for himſelf and friends, the trident the prieſt's ſervant brought with him, he ſtruck into the boiler to the bottom of it: all that the fleſh-hook brought up, the prieſt took for himſelf; as his own property; whereas no part of it at all belonged to him, he having had the breaſt and ſhoulder delivered to him in the firſt place; and yet by this method, all that he could drag up with this three-forked inſtrument he claimas his own; which might be much, that would hang upon three teeth of it, or in which they were faſtened; and, according to Abarbinel, each of them would bring up a pound of fleſh, and perhaps more: ſo they did in Shiloh, unto all the Iſraelites that came thither; to offer their ſacrifices, which was the proper place for them, the tabernacle and altar being there; and men of all ranks and degrees were treated alike, princes and people, rich and poor; the cuſtom univerſally obtained, and all ſorts of men met with the ſame uſage.

℣. 15. Alſo before they burnt the fat, &c.] Which belonged to the Lord, and was to be offered to him by fire, in the firſt place, as it ought to be; and the order of ſacrificing required, that he ſhould have his part firſt before the prieſt or the owner: but ſo impious were the prieſts become, that the prieſt's ſervant came, and ſaid to the man that ſacrificed; not to the prieſt that offered, but to the man that brought his ſacrifice to be offered by the prieſt: give fleſh to roaſt for the prieſt; meaning, not what was his by law, as the breaſt and ſhoulder, though for theſe he ought to have ſtayed until the fat was offered to the Lord; but other parts of the peace-offering, which he had no right unto, for roaſting or boiling, and yet in an imperious manner demanded it by his ſervant: for he will not have ſodden fleſh of thee, but raw; tho' this was not the only reaſon of this demand, becauſe he liked roaſt meat better than boiled; but becauſe the three-forked fleſh-hook did not always bring up the beſt pieces out of the boiling-pot; and therefore he reſolved to have fleſh raw, that he might have the beſt, as well as dreſs it to his own liking.

℣. 16. And if any man ſaid unto him, let them not fail to burn the fat preſently, &c.] Or ſtay till they have offered the fat, as the Targum; let that be done in the firſt place, which may be quickly done, in a very little time, and let as much haſte be made as can be to do it: and then take as much as thy ſoul deſireth; by which it appears that the men that brought the ſacrifice, had more religion at heart, and were more concerned for the honour and glory of God than the prieſt; being willing to ſuffer in their property, but could not bear that the Lord ſhould be diſhonoured, and ſo rudely treated; they were willing the prieſts ſhould take what they pleaſed of theirs, though they had no right to any; only they deſired the Lord might be ſerved firſt, which was but reaſonable: then he would anſwer him, nay, but thou ſhalt give it me now, and if not, I will take it by force; ſignifying, he would not ſtay till the fat was burnt, and the Lord had his portion, but he would have it directly; and if he would not give it him freely, he would take it whether he would or no; to ſuch a height of inſolence and impiety were the prieſts arrived, as to put it in the power of their ſervants to make ſuch wicked demands, and treat God, and thoſe that brought their ſacrifices to him, in ſuch a contemptuous manner.

℣. 17. Wherefore the ſin of the young men was very great before the Lord, &c.] That is, the ſons of Eli; for they were the ring-leaders who ſet theſe bad examples, which other prieſts followed, and therefore the ſin is aſcribed to them; and which was ſadly aggravated by taking what was not their own, and by taking it in a forcible manner, and before the Lord had his part in the offering, and all this done in the tabernacle, in the preſence of God; which plainly ſhowed, that they had not the fear of God before their eyes, nor any ſenſe of his omniſcience and omnipreſence, any more than of his holineſs and juſtice: for men abhorred the offering of the Lord; it was irkſome and diſagreeble to them to bring their ſacrifices, when they ſaw the law of God was not attended to, and the rules of ſacrificing were not obſerved; ſuch contempt of God, ſuch abuſe of ſacrifices, ſuch injury done to the ſacrificers, and ſuch covetouſneſs and ſenſuality in the prieſts, that it even ſet the people againſt ſacrifices, and made them loath them, and neglect to bring them. And this aggravated the ſin of the young men, though the ſacrificers were not excuſed hereby, ℣. 24.

℣. 18. But Samuel miniſtred before the Lord, &c.] The miniſtration of Samuel, though a child, is obſerved both before and after the account of the ill behaviour and wickedneſs of Eli's ſons; partly to the ſhame and diſgrace of them, and as ſerving to aggravate their ſin, and make it appear the more black and heinous; and partly to his honour and reputation, that he was not corrupted and turned aſide from God by their evil practices. The phraſe here uſed is different from that in ℣. 11. there he is ſaid to miniſter before Eli, under his direction and guidance, but here before the Lord; being now engaged in higher ſervices, and which he could perform without the aſſiſtance of Eli, as in the preſence of God more immediately; it ſeems to have reſpect to him, when more grown in age, ſtature, knowledge, and experience, though here related: yet ſtill being a child; not got out of his childhood, or arrived to manhood: girded with a linen ephod; ſuch as prieſts uſed to wear, but not Levites in common, nor extraordinary perſons on extraordinary occaſions, ſee 1 Sam. xxii. 18. 2 Sam. vi. 14. This ſeems to be a peculiar favour, and a ſpecial honour which Eli granted to Samuel when ſo very young, on account of the grace of God beſtowed on him in a wonderful manner; and becauſe brought up in the tabernacle as a holy perſon, and a Nazarite; and becauſe his birth was foretold, and he aſked of God, as his name ſignified, as Procopius Gazæus obſerves.

℣. 19. Moreover, his mother made him a little coat, &c.] Suitable to his ſtature; this was an outer coat to wear over others, and this alſo was ſuch an one as the prieſts wore; it is the ſame word that is uſed for the prieſt's robe, Exod. xxviii. 4. and this it is very likely was altogether of her own ſpinning, and weaving, and making up; which were works women did in thoſe times: and this Hannah did partly out of her great love to her ſon Samuel, and partly to leſſen the expence that

Eli, or the congregation, were at in the maintenance of him; and the Talmudiſts [q] obſerve, that a prieſt might wear a garment, and miniſter in it, if his mother made it; and they give inſtances of prieſts, Iſhmael and Eleazar, for whom their mothers made garments: and brought it to him from year to year; for it ſeems this was only to be worn at feſtivals, and not on common days; and therefore ſhe did not leave it with him, but took it home with her, and brought it again at the returning feſtival: when ſhe came up with her huſband to offer the yearly ſacrifice; whether at the paſſover, or at pentecoſt, or at the feaſt of tabernacles; and it is very probable ſhe came with her huſband at them all, yearly; for though ſhe was not by the law obliged thereunto, yet her religious zeal and devotion, and her great deſire to ſee her ſon as often as ſhe could, induced her to come.

℣. 20. And Eli bleſſed Elkanah and his wife, &c.] Not only the firſt time they brought Samuel to him, and left him with him; but every year they came to worſhip, as the Jewiſh commentators moſtly interpret it: and ſaid, the Lord give thee ſeed of this woman; children by her, year after year: for the loan which is lent to the Lord; inſtead of Samuel, who was aſked of the Lord, and given to him again; and as they were thereby in ſome meaſure deprived of him, and could not always enjoy him, and be delighted with him, Eli prayed for them, and gave them his benediction as a prieſt, that they might be favoured with other children, who might be of delight and ſervice to them when in old age: and they went unto their own home; at Ramah, as in ℣. 11. or to his place [r], Elkanah's; hence Kimchi concludes, that Hannah was of another city originally; but the Targum is, "to their place;" and indeed, what was now the place or home of the one, was of the other.

℣. 21. And the Lord viſited Hannah, &c.] In a way of mercy, approving and confirming the bleſſing of Eli; or rather granting the bleſſing he prayed for, by giving her power to conceive, bear, and bring forth children, as the following words explain it: ſo that ſhe conceived and bare three ſons and two daughters; whereby the prophecy of Hannah was fulfilled, ℣. 5. and was no doubt matter of great joy to her; though of theſe children we no where elſe read, nor even of their names. Joſephus [s] ſays, Elkanah had other ſons by Hannah, and three daughters; which agrees not with the text: and the child Samuel grew before the Lord; in age and ſtature, in grace and goodneſs, and improved much in the worſhip and ſervice of God, both in the theory and practice of it; or became great with him, high in his eſteem and favour, and was bleſſed with much of his preſence, and with large gifts of his grace.

℣. 22. Now Eli was very old, &c.] It is very probable he was now about 90 years of age, ſince when he died he was 98, ch. iv. 15. which is obſerved to ſhew his incapacity for the diſcharge of his office, and inſpection into public affairs; which gave his ſons an opportunity of acting the wicked part they did without reproof, and with impunity, Eli knowing nothing of it; and accounts in ſome meaſure for the gentle reproof he gave them, when he did know of it; for being old, he was not ſo full of ſpirit and vigour, and more propenſe to tenderneſs and mercy; beſides, his ſons were grown up and married, and he had leſs authority over them; though he ought to have conſidered himſelf not as a father only, but as an high-prieſt and judge of Iſrael, and performed his office as ſuch; however, it muſt be a great affliction to him in his old age, and added to the weight of it, that his ſons ſhould behave ſo unworthily as they did: and heard all that his ſons had done unto Iſrael; who beſides what was by the law allowed them, took fleſh out of the pot as it was boiling, and demanded raw fleſh to roaſt before the fat was offered to the Lord; and in this manner they uſed all without diſtinction, that came with their ſacrifices: and how they lay with the women that aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; not that they lay with them at the door in a public beaſtly manner; but the women that came thither they decoyed into their own apartments, or into ſome of the courts of the tabernacle, and there debauched them: who theſe women were, and what their buſineſs at the tabernacle, is not eaſy to ſay; ſome think, they came about buſineſs which belonged to women to do there, as to waſh and clean the rooms, to ſow and ſpin, and the like; but one would think, that theſe latter works ſhould be done, not at the door of the tabernacle, but in ſome apartment in it, or rather at their own houſes, for the uſe of it: the Targum is, that they there aſſembled to pray, which is more likely, and that they were devout women; who came there in large numbers, for the word uſed has the ſignification of armies; to perform religious exerciſes in faſting, and praying, and bringing ſacrifices to be offered for them; though they don't ſeem to be ſuch, as was Anna the propheteſs, Luke ii. 37. who made their abode in the tabernacle, and ſerved God night and day with faſtings and prayers, ſince theſe were only at the door of the tabernacle; nor were there in the tabernacle conveniences for ſuch perſons as afterwards in the temple. The Jews, for the moſt part, by theſe underſtand lying-in-women, who came with their offerings for purification, attended with many other women, their relations, friends, and neighbours, and which eſpecially, when ſeveral met together on ſuch an occaſion, made a croud at the door of the tabernacle; and ſome are of opinion, that theſe men did not lie with them, or debauch them, according to the literal ſenſe of the word; but that they delayed the offering of their neſts of doves they brought, ſo that they were forced to ſtay all night, and could not return home; and becauſe by this means they were reſtrained from their huſbands, it is reckoned as if theſe men had lain with them [t]; and which they think is confirmed, in that the man of God ſent to Eli, after mentioned, takes no notice of this leudneſs of theirs, only of their ill behaviour as to ſacrifices; but the text is ſo expreſs for their debauchery, that it cannot be denied.

℣. 23. And he ſaid unto them, why do ye ſuch things? &c.] As to impoſe upon the people, that bring their offerings, by taking more than is due, and in a very indecent and imperious manner; and eſpecially to defile the women when they came to worſhip: theſe were very ſcandalous ſins, and deſerved a more ſevere reprimand, and indeed a greater chaſtiſement than by mere words; Eli ſhould have rebuked them more ſharply, and laid open the evil of their doings, and as a judge puniſhed them for them: for I hear of your evil doings by all this people; the inhabitants of Shiloh, or who came thither

[q] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 25. 1.
[r] למקומו in locum ſuum, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius, &c.
[s] Antiq. l. 5. c. 10. §. 3.
[t] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 55. 2. Ben Gerſom & Abarbinel in loc.

thither to worſhip, who were continually making their complaints to Eli; which ſtill ſhows his backwardneſs to reprove them in the manner he did, until he was obliged to it by the continual remonſtrances of the people againſt the practices of his ſons; he did not attend to the information he had from a few perſons, until it became general.

℣. 24. Nay, my ſons, &c.] This ſeems to be too ſoft and ſmooth an appellation, too kind and endearing, conſidering the offence they were guilty of, and were now reproving for; rather they deſerved to be called ſons of Belial, the children of the devil, than ſons of Eli, or brutes and ſhameleſs wretches, and ſuch like hard names: for it is no good report that I hear; a very bad one; far from being good, ſcarce any thing worſe could have been ſaid of them; to rob perſons of the fleſh of their offerings, when there was a ſufficient allowance made for them by law, and to be ſo impious as to require what was not their due, and even before the Lord had his; and to debauch the women that came to religious worſhip, and that in the ſacred place of worſhip, they alſo being prieſts of the Lord, and married men; ſins very ſhocking, and ſadly aggravated, and yet Eli treats them in this gentle manner: ye make the Lord's people to tranſgreſs; by cauſing them to forbear to bring their ſacrifices, becauſe uſed in ſuch an injurious and over-bearing way; and by decoying the women into uncleanneſs, and by ſetting examples to others: or to cry out, as in the margin of our bibles, to exclaim againſt them for their exorbitant and leud practices; ſo the Targum, "the people of the Lord murmur becauſe ſo ill uſed by them:" this clauſe may be read in connexion with the former, it is no good report that I hear, which ye cauſe to paſs through the Lord's people; ye occaſion the people to ſpeak ill of you every where, in the camp of Iſrael, throughout the whole nation; the report as it is bad, it is general, is in every one's mouth; ſo Maimonides [u] interprets it; with which Jarchi and others agree [w].

℣. 25. If one man ſin againſt another, the judge ſhall judge him, &c.] When one man does an injury to another in his perſon and property, the caſe is brought before the judge, he hears it, examines into it, and determines upon it, and does juſtice, orders that the injured perſon have ſatisfaction made him, and ſo the matter is ended: but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who ſhall intreat for him? all ſin is in ſome ſenſe againſt God, as it is contrary to his nature, and a breach of his law, and eſpecially bold, daring, preſumptuous ſins; but there are ſome ſins that are more immediately and particularly againſt God, as ſins againſt the firſt table of the law, which relate to the worſhip of God, and ſuch were the ſins of Eli's ſons in the affair of ſacrifices; all ſin againſt God is aggravated by the perfections of his nature, and made tremendous, as being againſt a God of ſtrict juſtice, of unſpotted purity and holineſs, and who is omniſcient, omnipreſent, and omnipotent; and by the relation and connexion there is between God and men, he is their creator and preſerver, the God of their lives and mercies, and of all the bleſſings they enjoy, and yet ſin againſt him! who will intreat the favour of God for ſuch perſons, aſk pardon for them, and beſeech the Lord to be propitious and merciful to them? who on earth will do it? ſuch perſons are ſcarce and rare, few care to ſtand up in the gap between God and ſinners; in ſome caſes they ought not, in others they cannot. Eli ſuggeſts by this queſtion, that he could not, even for his own ſons; and who in heaven can or will do it? not ſaints departed, who know nothing of what is done below, nor angels, only the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; he is the only mediator between God and men, who has engaged his heart to approach unto God, and interpoſe between him and ſinful men, and has made peace and reconciliation by his blood, and is become the propitiation for ſin, and ever lives to make interceſſion for tranſgreſſors, and is always prevalent and ſucceſsful in his mediation and interceſſion; excepting him, there is none to intreat for thoſe that have ſinned againſt the Lord, ſee 1 John ii. 1, 2. In anſwer to this queſtion, who ſhall intreat for him? the Jews ſay [x], repentance and good works; but theſe are inſufficient advocates for a ſinner, without the atoning ſacrifice of Chriſt, who is the only propitiation for ſin, and upon which a plea for pardon can only be founded: notwithſtanding they hearkened not unto the voice of their father; to his reproofs and counſels, his reaſonings and expoſtulations; though his rebukes were ſo gentle, and this laſt reaſoning of his ſo cloſe and ſtrong, ſo nervous and ſtriking: becauſe the Lord would ſlay them; it was his purpoſe and decree, his will and pleaſure, to cut them off for their wickedneſs; wherefore he gave them up to a judicial blindneſs, and hardneſs of heart, as he did Pharaoh, ſo that they were proof againſt all advice, admonitions, and arguments uſed with them: ſome chuſe to read the words, therefore the Lord would ſlay them [y], becauſe they were diſobedient to the voice of their father; but the former ſenſe is beſt; for his will to deſtroy them was not ſo much for their diſregard to the reproofs of their father, in which he himſelf was culpable, as for their breach of his laws.

℣. 26. And the child Samuel grew up, &c.] Increaſed in ſtature and in grace, grew more and more in all reſpects, and better and better, whilſt Eli's ſons grew worſe and worſe; the contraſt between theſe make the one to ſhine and appear illuſtrious, and the other to look the blacker: or he went on, and grew, and was good [z]; as he proceeded on in years, and grew in ſtature, he appeared more and more to be a good man, a virtuous, holy and gracious perſon: and was in favour both with the Lord, and alſo with men; the Lord was pleaſed to give him ſome tokens of his favour, that he delighted in him, that he was well-pleaſing in his ſight, and that his perſon and ſervices were acceptable to him; and the more Eli's ſons diſguſted the people by their ill lives and conduct, the greater eſteem among them did Samuel obtain, by his becoming life and converſation; all admired him, ſpoke well of him, and thanked God that in ſuch bad times he was raiſing up one among them, of whom they had the moſt hopeful proſpect of uſefulneſs to them.

℣. 27. And there came a man of God unto Eli, &c.] A prophet, as the Targum; he had gifts and graces beſtowed on him by the Lord, qualifying him

[u] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 21.
[w] Vid. T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 55. 2. & præfat. Ben Chayim. ad Bib. Heb. Bomberg. & Buxtorf.
[x] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 87. 1.
[y] כי ideo, Noldius, p. 395. No. 1. Idcirco vel quapropter, Quiſtorp. ſo Patrick. Montanus; ſo Vatablus & Druſius.
[z] הלך וגדל וטוב ambulans, & grandeſcens, & bonus, him for that office; he came from God, and ſpoke in his name, as prophets uſed to do: who this was is not ſaid, nor can it be known with certainty; many conjectures are made; ſome think he might be Phinehas, as Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel [a], which is not at all likely; it is not probable that he was living, for if he had been alive, Eli would not have been high-prieſt: the more ancient Jews ſay [b], he was Elkanah, the father of Samuel; and ſo Jarchi; and he is ſaid in the Targum on ch. i. 1. to be one of the diſciples of the prophets, and was reckoned by them among the 200 prophets that propheſied in Iſrael [c]; but of his prophecy we no where read in ſcripture, or that he was one: others [d] think he was Samuel himſelf, who through modeſty conceals his name; but he was now a child, as in the preceding verſe; indeed, ſome are of opinion, that what follows is recorded in this chapter by way of anticipation, and properly belongs to, and is a part of the meſſage ſent from the Lord by Samuel to Eli, in the following chapter: and ſaid unto him, thus ſaith the Lord; uſing the language prophets in after-times did, who ſpake not of themſelves, but in the name of the Lord; and from whence it appears that this was not a divine perſon, the Son of God in human form, ſince he never uſed to ſpeak in this manner when he appeared: did I plainly appear to the houſe of thy father, when they were in Egypt in Pharaoh's houſe? he did; this was evident and certain, and a wonderful inſtance of condeſcending goodneſs: the houſe of his father, is the houſe of Aaron, who, and all his ſons, were born in Egypt, from whoſe youngeſt ſon Ithamar, Eli deſcended; and to whom the Lord appeared when in Egypt, and ſent him to meet Moſes, whoſe ſpokeſman he appointed him to be; and who propheſied in Egypt, and reproved the Iſraelites, which is recorded in Ezekiel, ch. xx. as ſay the Jews [e].

℣. 28. And did I chuſe him out of all the tribes of Iſrael to be my prieſt, &c.] He did; of all the tribes of Iſrael the Lord choſe the tribe of Levi to place the prieſthood in, and of all the families of that tribe he choſe the houſe of Aaron, Eli's anceſtor, to miniſter in the prieſt's office, ſee Exod. xxviii. 1. to offer upon mine altar; burnt-offerings, ſin-offerings and peace-offerings; this is the altar of burnt-offering, which ſtood in the court of the tabernacle: to burn incenſe; on the altar of incenſe, which was in the holy place, and on which incenſe was burnt morning and evening: to wear an ephod before me? in which was the breaſt-plate, with the Urim and Thummim, with which the high-prieſt went into the moſt holy place, where was the ark, the ſymbol of the divine preſence, and where he enquired of the Lord by the above things: and did I give unto the houſe of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Iſrael? he did; the prieſts who were of the houſe of Aaron had not only the ſin-offerings, and part of the peace-offerings, but even of the offerings made by fire, the burnt-offerings; the ſkin of them was the prieſt's, and the meat-offerings that went along with them, ſee Lev. vi. 25, 26. and vii. 8, 9, 10, 33, 34, 35. Numb. xviii. 8, 9, 10. which were given them for their maintenance. Now theſe inſtances of God's goodneſs to the family of Aaron, are mentioned to aggravate the ſins of Eli and his ſons.

℣. 29. Wherefore kick ye at my ſacrifice, and at mine offering, which I have commanded in my habitation, &c.] To be offered in the tabernacle, where the Lord had his dwelling; which they might be ſaid to kick and ſpurn at, deſpiſing them, as if there were not enough of them, nor the beſt of them given to them for their maintenance; a metaphor taken from cattle well fed and fat, which kick and ſpurn with their feet at even the owners and feeders of them. The Targum is, "why do ye uſe force with the holy offerings?" that is, take them away by force, when there was ſuch a ſufficient quantity allowed them for their ſupport. Some underſtand this of their driving away ſuch, that before uſed to bring their ſacrifices to be offered, but being ſo ill treated, refrained from bringing them: and honoureſt thy ſons above me; by ſuffering them to take their part of the ſacrifices, and even what did not belong to them, before God had his part, or before the fat was burnt; and by continuing them in their office, to the diſhonour of God, his name and worſhip, when they ought to have been turned out by him and puniſhed; but by this he preferred the honour of his ſons before the honour of God, and choſe rather that he ſhould be diſhonoured, than that they ſhould be cenſured: to make yourſelves fat with the chiefeſt of all the offerings of Iſrael my people; they took the beſt pieces of the peace-offerings from them by force, having no right unto them; and this they did to indulge their luxury and ſenſuality, which Eli connived at; and it is highly probable took part of the roaſted meat his ſons provided for themſelves, out of the choiceſt pieces of the offerings of the people; ſince he himſelf is included in this clauſe, to make yourſelves fat, as his ſons might be, and it is certain he himſelf was, ch. iv. 18.

℣. 30. Wherefore the Lord God of Iſrael ſaith, &c.] This being the caſe, ſo much contempt caſt upon his ſacrifices, and diſhonour on himſelf: I ſaid indeed, that thy houſe, and the houſe of thy father ſhould walk before me for ever; or miniſter in the prieſt's office before him: if the houſe of Aaron in general is meant, it did continue ſo to do in one branch or another of it, as long as the Moſaic diſpenſation laſted, which is meant by the phraſe for ever; but ſince it is afterwards denied that it ſhould, rather the houſe of Ithamar, or of the immediate parent of Eli, is meant, and this ſaid when the prieſthood was tranſlated from the family of Eleazar to the family of Ithamar; when, and on what account that was done, we no where read. It is a tradition [f], that it was in the time of the Levite's concubine; and becauſe Phinehas, and the other prieſts, did not go from city to city, and reprove the Iſraelites for the many ſins they were fallen into, that the prieſthood was taken away out of the family of Eleazar, and tranſlated to that of Ithamar: but now the Lord ſaith, be it far from me; to continue the prieſthood in the line of Ithamar; which argues no change in the purpoſes or promiſes of God, this being not a decree of his, but a declaration of his will; that if the houſe of Ithamar behaved well in the diſcharge of the office of the high-prieſt, it ſhould continue with them to the end of the Moſaic diſpenſation, but if not, it ſhould be taken from them, and reſtored to the family of Eleazar; as it was in Solomon's time: for them that honour me, I will honour; as Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar did at Shittim, where he ſhewed his zeal for the Lord of hoſts, and had the promiſe of the everlaſting prieſthood; and which continued tinued in his family until the Babyloniſh captivity, excepting the interval in which it was in the family of Ithamar, and for what reaſon is not known: and they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly eſteemed; as the poſterity of Eli, whoſe ſons deſpiſed the Lord, and his offerings, as appeared by their conduct; and theſe were killed in battle in one day, and in the times of Solomon, Abiathar, of the poſterity of Eli, was thruſt out of the prieſthood, and Zadok, of the line of Eleazar, was put in his room, 1 Kings ii. 27, 35.

[a] Judæi apud Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 75. A. & Ben Gerſom in loc. [b] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 20. p. 53. [c] Jarchi [d] See Weemſe's Chriſt. Synagog. l. 2. c. 3. p. 250. [e] T. Bab. Megillah, fol. 14. 1. [f] Midraſh Samuel, apud Jarch. & Kimch. in loc.

℣. 31. Behold, the days come, &c.] Or are coming [g]; and will quickly come, in a very little time the things, after threatened, began to take place, even in the days of Eli's ſons, and the whole was accompliſhed in about 80 years after: that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's houſe; that is, the ſtrength of him, and them, as the Targum, the ſtrength of a man for doing buſineſs lying in his arm; meaning by it not long life, as Kimchi, who concludes this ſenſe from what follows; but rather power and authority, or the exerciſe of the office of high-prieſt, which gave him and his family great eſteem and power; or it may be beſt of all, his children, which are the ſtrength of a man, and the ſupport of his family, ſee Gen. xlix. 3. that there ſhall not be an old man in thine houſe; as there were none when he died, and his two ſons, the ſame day; and the children they left were very young, and Ahitub, who was one of them, could not die an old man, ſince Abimelech his ſon was prieſt in the time of Saul, who with 85 prieſts were ſlain by his order; and Abiathar his ſon was deprived of the prieſthood in the time of Solomon; though ſome underſtand this not of an elder in years, but in office; and that the ſenſe is, that there ſhould be none of his family a ſenator, or a member of the great Sanhedrim, or court of judicature; and ſo it is interpreted in the Talmud [h]; with which agree Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel.

℣. 32. And thou ſhalt ſee an enemy in my habitation, &c.] Either the Philiſtines in the land of Iſrael, where God choſe to dwell, who quickly after made war againſt Iſrael, and pitched in Aphek, ch. iv. 1. or, as in the margin of our bibles, and other verſions [i], thou ſhalt ſee the affliction of the tabernacle; as he did when the ark of God was taken, at the news of which he died, ch. iv. 17, 18. and ſo the Targum underſtands it of affliction and calamity, yet not of the houſe of God, but of his own houſe; paraphraſing the words thus, "and thou ſhalt ſee the calamity that ſhall come upon the men of thine houſe, for the ſins which they have committed before me in the houſe of my ſanctuary:" but it ſeems beſt to interpret it of a rival, which not he in his own perſon ſhould ſee, but whom his poſterity ſhould ſee high-prieſt in the temple; as they did in Solomon's time, when Abiathar, of the family of Eli, was thruſt out, and Zadok, of the family of Eleazar, was put in; for, as Kimchi obſerves, when a man has two wives, they are rivals or adverſaries to one another, jealous and emulous of each other, as Elkanah's two wives were, and of one of them, the ſame word is uſed as here, ch. i. 6. ſo when one high-prieſt was put out, and another taken in, the one was the rival or adverſary of the other, as in the caſe referred to: in all the wealth which God ſhall give Iſrael; which points exactly at the time when this ſhould be, even when God did well to Iſrael, gave them great proſperity, wealth and riches, quietneſs and ſafety, a famous temple built for the worſhip of God, and every thing in a flouriſhing condition, both with reſpect to temporals and ſpirituals, as was in the days of Solomon, ſee 1 Kings iv. 20, 25. and x. 27. and then it was amidſt all that plenty and proſperity, and when the high prieſthood was moſt honourable and profitable, that Eli's family was turned out of it, and another put into it: and there ſhall not be an old man in thine houſe for ever; ſee the note on the preceding verſe; this is repeated for confirmation, and with this addition, that this would be the caſe for ever.

℣. 33. And the man of thine, &c.] Of his family, which ſhould ſpring from him: whom I ſhall not cut off from mine altar; from ſerving there: who though he ſhall not be an high-prieſt, but a common prieſt, as all the deſcendents of Aaron were, ſhall be to conſume thine eyes, and to grieve thine heart; that is, the eyes and heart of his poſterity; who though they ſhould ſee of their family miniſtring in the prieſt's office, yet ſhould make ſo poor a figure on account of their outward meanneſs and poverty, or becauſe of their want of wiſdom, and intellectual endowments, or becauſe of their ſcandalous lives, that it would fill their hearts with grief and ſorrow, and their eyes with tears, ſo that their eyes would fail, and be conſumed, and their hearts be broken: and all the increaſe of thine houſe ſhall die in the flower of their age; or die men [k]; grown men, not children, when it would not be ſo great an affliction to part with them; but when at mans eſtate, in the prime of their days, perhaps about thirty years of age, the time when the prieſts entered upon their office to do all the work of it; the Targum is, "ſhall be killed young men:" it is more than once ſaid in the Talmud [l], that there was a family in Jeruſalem, the men of which died at eighteen years of age; they came and informed Juchanan ben Zaccai of it; he ſaid to them, perhaps of the family of Eli are ye, as it is ſaid, 1 Sam. ii. 33.

℣. 34. This ſhall be a ſign unto thee, &c.] A confirming one, that all which had been now ſaid would be fulfilled: that ſhall come upon thy two ſons, Hophni and Phinehas; which Eli would live to ſee fulfilled on them; and when it was, he might be aſſured the reſt would be moſt certainly accompliſhed, and it was this: in one day they ſhall die both of them; as they did in battle with the Philiſtines, ch. iv. 11.

℣. 35. And I will raiſe up a faithful prieſt, &c.] Not Samuel, as ſome, for he was not of the ſeed of Aaron, and of the prieſtly race; nor had he a ſure houſe, for his ſons declined from the ways of truth and juſtice; but Zadok, as it is commonly interpreted, who was put into the office of the high-prieſt by Solomon when he came to the throne, in the room of Abiathar, of the line of Eli; who was an upright man, and faithfully diſcharged his office, and anſwered to his name, which ſignifies righteous, ſee Ezek. xliv. 15. that ſhall do according to that which is in my heart, and in my mind; according to the ſecret will and pleaſure of God, as revealed in his word; do every thing relating to the office of an high-prieſt, according to the laws of God reſpecting it; ſo the Targum, "that ſhall ſhall do according to my word, and according to my will:" and I will build him a ſure houſe; which ſome underſtand of a numerous family and poſterity he ſhould have to ſucceed him, ſo that there ſhould never be wanting one of his ſeed to fill up that high office; or rather, it may deſign the eſtabliſhment of the high prieſthood in his family, which was an everlaſting one, as promiſed to Phinehas his anceſtor, and which continued unto the times of the Meſſiah, who put an end to it, by fulfilling it; unleſs it can be thought that this may refer to the temple built by Solomon, which was a firm houſe, in compariſon of the tabernacle, which was a moveable one; it was built for Zadok and his poſterity, who was the firſt that officiated in it as a legal prieſt. There is one writer, who ſays [m], "this agrees with no man, only with our Lord Jeſus, who is called our high-prieſt, that offered up a ſacrifice to the Father for us — therefore to Chriſt properly this prophecy belongs; but, according to the hiſtory, to Zadok:" and Chriſt is ſaid indeed to be a faithful, as well as a merciful high-prieſt, faithful to him that appointed him, and faithful to thoſe for whom he officiated; he always did the things which pleaſed his Father, was obedient to his will and commands in all reſpects; and a ſure houſe is built by him, his church, againſt which the gates of hell can never prevail: however, the next clauſe is by others interpreted of him, and he ſhall walk before mine anointed for ever; or before my Meſſiah, as the high-prieſts did; they were types of Chriſt, and repreſented him, and acted under him, and in his ſtead, and prefigured and pointed at what he was to do, when he came in the fleſh, and now does in the moſt holy place in heaven. Though it is more commonly underſtood of Zadok and his poſterity, walking or miniſtring, as the Targum, before Solomon the Lord's anointed, and before the kings of the houſe of David, as they did until the Babyloniſh captivity.

[g] בָּאִים venientes, Montanus. [h] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 14. 1. [i] צֵר מָעוֹן θλιψιν κατοικησεως, Symmachus; anguſtiam tabernaculi, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [k] יָמוּתוּ אֲנָשִׁים morientur viri, Montanus, Tigurine verſion; morientur virile ætate, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo V. L. [l] T. Bab. Roſh-hashanah, fol. 18. 1. & Yebamot, fol. 105. 1.

℣. 36. And it came to paſs, that every one that is left in thine houſe, &c.] That is not cut off by death, the few remains of Eli's poſterity in ſucceeding times, after the high prieſthood was removed out of his family into another; ſo that they were reduced at beſt to common prieſts, and theſe, as it ſhould ſeem, degraded from that office for their male adminiſtration of it, or ſcandalous lives: ſhall come and crouch to him for a piece of ſilver, and a morſel of bread; which Grotius interprets of their coming to God, and bowing themſelves before him, and praying to him for the ſmalleſt piece of money to caſt into the treaſury, and for a morſel of bread to be accepted as an offering, inſtead of a bullock, ſheep, lamb, or even a bird, which they were not able to bring; but the meaning is, that ſuch ſhould be the low eſtate of Eli's family, when another, even Zadok, was made high-prieſt, that they ſhould come and humble themſelves before him, as the Targum expreſſes it, beſeeching him to give them a piece of ſilver; even the ſmalleſt piece that is, as the word ſignifies, a gerah or meah, about a penny or three halfpence of our money, the 20th part of a ſhekel, Ezek. xlv. 12. and a piece of bread, not a whole loaf, but a ſlice of it, to ſuch extremity would they be brought: and ſhall ſay, put me, I pray thee, into one of the prieſt's offices, that I may eat a piece of bread; or into one of the wards of the prieſts; their cuſtodies or courſes, as the Targum; with which the Jewiſh commentators generally agree, and of which there were 24; ſee 1 Chron xxiv. 4—19. and there are ſome traces of them in the New Teſtament, ſee Luke i. 5, 8. but theſe were regular prieſts, who were in thoſe courſes, and had a ſufficient maintenance for them, and had not barely a piece of bread to live on, or juſt enough to keep them from ſtarving, as the phraſe denotes; wherefore this muſt be underſtood, as before hinted, of prieſts degraded from their office, on ſome account or another, and reduced to poverty and want; and therefore, that they might be kept from ſtarving, would ſolicit the high-prieſt in thoſe days, and beg that he would put them in ſome inferior poſt under the prieſts, to do the meaneſt offices for them, ſlay the ſacrifices for them, waſh their pots, open and ſhut up doors, and the like, that ſo they might have a living, though a poor one; and this may reaſonably be thought to be the caſe of Eli's poſterity, in proceſs of time, after Abiathar was depoſed from the high-prieſt's office, and was ordered to go and live upon his fields and farm at Anathoth, 1 Kings ii. 26. with which compare Ezek. xliv. 10—14. This, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, was a fit puniſhment, and a righteous retaliation on Eli's poſterity, that they ſhould be brought to crouch to others, and be glad of a morſel of bread, who had behaved ſo imperiouſly towards the Lord's people, and had taken away their fleſh from them by force; and not content with their allowance, took the beſt pieces of the ſacrifices, to make themſelves fat with them.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter gives an account of the Lord's calling to Samuel in the night-ſeaſon, which he firſt took for the voice of Eli, but being inſtructed by him, made anſwer to the voice, ℣. 1—10. and of a meſſage ſent from him by Samuel to Eli, foretelling the deſtruction of his family, ℣. 11—14. and of the delivery of it to him, which Samuel was firſt fearful of doing, but encouraged by Eli, he delivered it to him, to which he patiently ſubmitted, ℣. 15—18. and the chapter is cloſed with the eſtabliſhment of Samuel as a prophet of the Lord, who continued to appear and reveal himſelf to him, ℣. 19—21.

℣. 1. And the child Samuel miniſtred unto the Lord before Eli, &c.] Under his direction and inſtruction; the Targum is, in the life of Eli, and in ſuch parts of ſervice relating to the tabernacle of the Lord, as he was capable of, ſuch as opening and ſhutting the doors of it, lighting the lamps, ſinging the praiſes of God, &c. according to Joſephus [n], and others, he was now about 12 years of age: and the word of the Lord was precious in thoſe days; that is, a word from the Lord in a dream or viſion, directing, informing, inſtructing or reproving, this was very rarely had; of late there had been but very few inſtances; and which accounts for for it, why not only the child Samuel knew not that it was the voice of the Lord that called to him, but Eli himſelf thought nothing of it until he had called a third time, ſo rare and ſcarce was any inſtance of this kind; for which reaſon theſe words are premiſed in the following narration: and as every thing that is ſcarce and rare, is generally precious, ſo the word of God in this way alſo was; and ſo it is as conſidered in every view of it; as the written word of God; when there was but little of it penned, as at this time, and few or none to teach and inſtruct in it, Eli being old, and his ſons ſo vile; or when it is forbidden to be read, and the copies of it deſtroyed, and become ſcarce, as in the times of Dioclefian; or when there are but very few faithful, evangelical miniſters of the word; which, tho' it is always precious to them that have precious faith in it, the promiſes of it being exceeding great and precious, and the truths of it more precious than fine gold, and the grand ſubject of it a precious Saviour, who is ſo in his perſon, offices, blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice; yet is generally more precious when there is a ſcarcity of it, when God makes a man, a goſpel-miniſter, more precious than fine gold, even than the golden wedge of Ophir, ſee Iſ. xiii. 12. where the word is uſed in the ſame ſenſe as here: there was no open viſion; or prophecy, as the Targum; no public, known prophet raiſed up, to whom the people could apply for counſel, direction and inſtruction in divine things; in all the times of the Judges we read only of Deborah the propheteſs, and one prophet more, Judg. iv. 14. and vi. 8. excepting the man of God lately ſent to Eli, ch. ii. 27. and this want of prophecy ſerved to ſet off with greater foil the glory of Samuel as a prophet of the Lord, when he was an eſtabliſhed one; there having been none of that character in the memory of man, and therefore he he is ſpoken of as at the head of the prophets, Acts iii. 24. for though there might be ſome private viſions to particular perſons, or God might appear in viſion to private perſons for their own ſpecial uſe and inſtruction; yet there was no public viſion, or what was for public good and general uſe: ſome render it, no broken-up viſion [o]; it lay hid, concealed out of ſight, as if it was immured and ſhut up within walls, or like water pent up, that can't break through its fences, and ſpread itſelf; or not multiplied, as R. Iſaiah, not frequent and repeated, the inſtances of it few and rare; the ſenſe of this clauſe is much the ſame as the former.

[m] Procopius Gazæus in loc.

[n] Antiq. l. 5. c. 10. §. 4.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs at that time, &c.] When the word of the Lord was ſcarce and precious, and there was no open viſion; or, as Ben Gerſom, the ſame day the man of God came to Eli at night, the following affair happened: when Eli was laid down in his place; on his bed to ſleep, in one of the chambers or apartments of the tabernacle; for as there were ſuch in the temple for the prieſts, ſo in that: and his eyes began to wax dim, that he could not ſee; to help himſelf to any thing he might want when in bed; which ſeems to be the reaſon Samuel lay near him, and why, when he heard his voice, he immediately ran to him, ſuppoſing he needed his aſſiſtance. Some, as Kimchi, and others, underſtand this not of the eyes of his body, but of his mind; and that the holy Spirit, as a ſpirit of prophecy, was departing from him, becauſe of his connivance at the ſins of his ſons; and ſo the following prophecy came not to him, but to Samuel.

℣. 3. And ere the lamp of God went out in the temple of the Lord, &c.] The tabernacle ſo called; lamp is put for the lamps in the candleſtick in the tabernacle, which were lighted every evening, and burnt till morning; by which time ſome of them at leaſt uſually went out, only it is ſaid the weſtern lamp never went out. Now the reaſon why this is obſerved, is to ſhew that it was in the night, before morning, that the following tranſaction was: ſome by this lamp underſtand the lamp of prophecy, that before that was quite extinct in Eli, only began to depart, as his eyes are ſaid to begin to wax dim, the ſpirit of prophecy came to Samuel; ſo that, as the Jews expreſs it, before one ſun was ſet, another aroſe; thus before the ſun of Moſes ſet, the ſun of Joſhua aroſe; and before the ſun of Eli ſet, the ſun of Samuel aroſe: where the ark of God was; that is, in the temple or tabernacle; not in that part of it where the lamps were burning in the candleſtick, that was in the holy place; but the ark was in the holy of holies, where the Lord dwelt, and was the ſymbol of his preſence; and which is obſerved to point out the place from whence the voice came, after mentioned; and which the Targum expreſſes here, "and a voice was heard out of the temple of the Lord, where the ark of the Lord was:" and Samuel was laid down to ſleep; after Eli was in bed, and Samuel had done all his buſineſs, he laid himſelf down to ſleep in his place; in the court of the Levites, as the Targum, with which the Jewiſh commentators in general agree: it muſt be ſome where near to Eli, ſo that he could quickly come at him, when he needed his aſſiſtance; though, according to the Miſnah [p], the prieſts ſhut the doors of the court within, and the Levites ſlept without. It is highly probable that Samuel's apartment was near to Eli, or he could not have ſo readily come to him, as it is plain he did. This circumſtance is alſo obſerved, to ſhew that it was in the night, and before morning, that the following viſion was; and, as Kimchi thinks, about cock-crowing; and it may be from hence Strabo [q] had the notion, that Moſes ordered ſuch to ſleep (in the temple) for themſelves, and others, who were fit to receive good dreams, and who might expect from God a good gift, who lived ſoberly and righteouſly; and becauſe the tabernacle was covered with ſkins, hence might ſpring the notion of others to ſleep in temples, for the above reaſon, under the ſkins of the ſacrifices, ſee the note on Amos ii. 8. tho' they ſeem rather to have ſlept upon them, for the above purpoſes, namely, to converſe with their deities, and get knowledge from them [r].

℣. 4. That the Lord called Samuel, &c.] By a voice which came forth from the moſt holy place, from between the cherubim, the ſeat of the divine majeſty: and he anſwered, here am I; which was not intended to declare the place where he was, but to expreſs his readineſs and chearfulneſs to do any thing that was required of him.

℣. 5. And he ran unto Eli, and ſaid, here am I, &c.] He got out of his bed as faſt as he could, and put on his clothes, and ran with all haſte to the apart-apartment where Eli lay, ſuppoſing he wanted ſome immediate aſſiſtance, which he was there ready to give him to the utmoſt of his ability; and he made the more haſte, as knowing his age and infirmities, and being deſirous out of affection to him, to help him as ſoon as poſſible: for thou calledſt me; he took it to be the voice of Eli, partly becauſe there was no other man in the tabernacle, it being in the middle of the night, or early in the morning, before the doors were opened, or any of the prieſts were come in to miniſter, and partly becauſe the voice might be very much like Eli's, and which was done to direct him to him: and he ſaid, I called not, lie down again; he ſignified he wanted nothing, and ſo had no occaſion to call him, nor had he, but bid him go to bed again, and ſleep quietly: and he went and lay down; and very probably fell aſleep again.

[o] perrupta, Piſcator; fracta vel rupta, Druſius. [p] Middot, c. 1. §. 8. [q] Geograph. l. 16. p. 523. [r] Vid. Virgil. Æneid. 7. huc dona Sacerdos, &c. ℣. 86—95.

℣. 6. And the Lord called yet again, Samuel, &c.] Called him a ſecond time by his name, with a like audible voice as before: and Samuel aroſe and went to Eli; did not run as before, being perhaps more thoughtful of this affair, that he ſhould be called a ſecond time, and careful not to awake Eli, ſhould he be miſtaken again, and find him aſleep: and ſaid, here am I, for thou didſt call me; perceiving that he was awake, he deſired to know what he wanted, and he was ready to help him; for he was now certain of it that he did call him: and he anſwered, I called not, my ſon, lie down again; by this appellation, my ſon, he expreſſes his affection to him, and ſignifies he took it kindly that he ſhould ſhew ſuch readineſs to do any thing for him, and would not have him be diſcouraged and abaſhed, becauſe he was miſtaken, but return to his bed and reſt again.

℣. 7. Now Samuel did not yet know the Lord, &c.] He knew that Jehovah, the God of Iſrael, was the true God; he had ſpiritual knowledge of him, and knew ſomewhat of his word and worſhip, ways and ordinances, in which he had been inſtructed by Eli; wherefore, though the Targum is, "Samuel had not yet learned to know doctrine from the Lord;" it can only be underſtood, that he had not learnt it perfectly; ſomewhat he knew of it, but in an imperfect manner, being a child: but the ſenſe of the word is, that as yet he was ignorant that God had uſed to ſpeak with an ordinary and familiar voice to men, as Maimonides ſays[*]; he perhaps had never heard of any ſuch thing, and much leſs was experimentally acquainted with it, that God ever did ſpeak after ſuch a manner to men, and could not diſtinguiſh between the voice of God, and the voice of Eli: neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed unto him; what of the written word that was in being he had, and read, as the law of Moſes; but the meaning is, that no word of prophecy of the Lord was revealed unto him, as the Targum; he never had propheſied as yet, and knew not the form and manner of prophecy, as the above writer obſerves, or what methods God took to reveal himſelf, his mind and will to men, at leaſt not this by an audible voice.

℣. 8. And the Lord called Samuel again the third time, &c.] In the ſame manner he had done before, expreſſing his name no doubt: and he aroſe, and went to Eli, and ſaid, here am I, for thou didſt call me; as if he ſhould ſay, it muſt certainly be ſo, I cannot be miſtaken a third time: and Eli perceived that the Lord had called the child; he was ſatisfied now that Samuel muſt have heard a voice, and he knew there was no man in the tabernacle but himſelf, and therefore it muſt be the voice of the Lord out of the moſt holy place; and he had formerly been acquainted with ſuch voices, and uſed to them, and now called them to mind; and beſides, as Aben Ezra obſerves, he was the rather confirmed in this, that the Lord called Samuel, becauſe Samuel heard the voice, and not Eli, tho' Eli lay nearer the moſt holy place than Samuel did; which ſhewed that this muſt be the voice of prophecy the Lord makes whom he pleaſes to hear; and that Eli might be fully perſuaded of this before the matter of the prophecy was delivered to him, Samuel was ſo often directed to him.

℣. 9. Therefore Eli ſaid unto Samuel, go lie down, &c.] Once more; and it ſhall be, if he call thee; the voice, or the Lord by it: that thou ſhalt ſay, ſpeak, Lord, for thy ſervant heareth; his meaning is, that he ſhould not riſe and come to him, as he had done, but continue on his bed, on hearing the voice again, but deſire the Lord to ſpeak to him what he had to ſay, to which he was ready to attend: ſo Samuel went and lay down in his place; which, as commonly underſtood, was in the court of the Levites, ſee the note on ℣. 3.

℣. 10. And the Lord came and ſtood, &c.] At the place where Samuel lay; either there was, as Kimchi, a form before his eyes in the viſion of prophecy, ſome viſible corporeal ſhape aſſumed; or a bright ſplendor, an illuſtrious appearance of the glory of God; or it may be rather the voice, which before ſeemed to be at ſome diſtance whereabout Eli lay; it now ſeemed nearer, and was as the voice of one juſt by him, that ſounded in his ears: and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel; repeating his name, in order the more to excite his attention: then Samuel anſwered, ſpeak, for thy ſervant heareth; he leaves out the word Lord, which Eli bid him uſe; for he might be afraid as yet to make mention of the name of the Lord in the viſion of prophecy, as Kimchi ſpeaks; or leſt it ſhould be the voice of another, as Jarchi; as yet he might not be quite certain whether it was the voice of the Lord, or the voice of a man; for that he ſhould have any miſtruſt of its being the voice of a dæmon or ſpectre, there is no reaſon to believe.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſaid to Samuel, &c.] The voice of the Lord continued ſpeaking to him: behold, I will do a thing in Iſrael; which may be particularly interpreted of the taking of the ark, and the ſlaying of the two ſons of Eli; and which is elſewhere repreſented as the Lord's doing, for the ſins of Eli's family, Pſ. lxxviii. 61, 62. at which both the ears of every one that heareth it ſhall tingle; be ſtruck with horror and amazement, and quite ſtunned, and know not what to think or ſay, like perſons ſurprized with a violent clap of thunder, which ſtrikes their ears ſo ſtrongly, that the noiſe of it is not ſoon gone from them; this was verified in Eli, and in his daughter-in-law particularly, who, at the news of the above things, the one fell backwards and broke his neck, and the other fell into labour and died; and all Iſrael were ſtruck with aſtoniſhment at theſe things.

℣. 12. In that day I will perform againſt Eli all things which I have ſpoken concerning his houſe, &c.] Or family, that is, by the man of God, ch. ii. 27, as that he would cut off the ſtrength of it, that there ſhould not be an old man in it; and ſuch as remained ſhould be reduced to the utmoſt poverty and meanneſs; this ſhows, that that prophecy was antecedent to this, contrary to the ſenſe of ſome: when when I begin, I will also make an end; not immediately, and at once, but by degrees; he began in the death of Hophni and Phinehas, and went on in the slaughter of Abimelech, and the 85 priests at Nob, in the times of Saul, and finished in the thrusting out of Abiathar from the priesthood, in the times of Solomon, whereby that family was brought to disgrace and poverty.

[*] Morch Nevochim, par. 2. c 44.

℣. 13. For I have told him, that I will judge his house for ever, &c.] That is, bring his judgments upon them, which should continue on them to their utter destruction; this, as to the substance, he said before by the man of God: for the iniquity which he knoweth; for the iniquity of his sons, which he was thoroughly informed of, and fully acquainted with by others; and somewhat of which he must have been sensible of, and seen with his own eyes, and therefore was inexcusable: because his sons made themselves vile; mean and contemptible in the sight of men, abhorred and accursed in the sight of God, by taking the flesh of the sacrifices of the people, which did not belong to them, who came to sacrifice, and by debauching the women that came to the door of the tabernacle for religious service. It is said, this clause was originally written, because his sons made light of me; or cursed the Lord, and is one of the eighteen places called the correction of the Scribes, who corrected it as we have it; and it may be observed, the Septuagint version is, because his sons spake ill of God, or cursed him; however, this they did, they preferred their lusts, and the indulging of them, to the honour and glory of God: this Eli knew, and he restrained them not; from their evil practices; he did not make use of his authority, neither as a father, and especially not as high-priest, and the judge of Israel, who ought not only to have sharply reproved them, which he did not, but to have censured or punished them, and turned them out of their office: or did not frown upon them[1], as in the margin of our bibles; he did not knit his brows, or wrinkle up his face, and by his countenance shew his displeasure at their proceedings, but in an easy, smooth, gentle manner expostulated with them about them.

℣. 14. And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, &c.] Either had done this before, which was signified to him by the man of God, or did sware now for the confirmation of his threatenings, and to assure the certain performance of them: that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever; not even typically, which was all that legal sacrifice could do; and not so that the priesthood should ever return to the family again, as the office of high priesthood never did; or, as Abarbinel interprets it, because of sacrifice and offering, that the iniquity Eli's sons were guilty of in taking the flesh of the sacrifices and offerings, which did not belong to them, and before the Lord had his part, should never be expiated.

℣. 15. And Samuel lay until the morning, &c.] It is not said he slept; it can hardly be thought he should, when it is considered what a new, strange and uncommon thing had befallen him; what honour had been conferred on him a child, that the Lord should vouchsafe to speak and communicate his mind to him, and what dreadful things were said of Eli's family; all which must greatly affect his mind, and keep him waking: however, he lay musing thereon until morning, and then arose, and opened the doors of the house of the Lord; as he had used to do, and which was the business of the Levites; though he had been so highly honoured, he was not elated with it, nor thought himself above so low and mean an employment in the house of God; nor did he run to Eli or others, boasting of what he had met with that night, but modestly and carefully attended to what was his common and constant employment every morning: and Samuel feared to shew Eli the vision; the vision of prophecy, as the Targum; what God had foretold should befal him and his family, lest he should be grieved on more accounts than one; partly because he, an old man, an high priest, and judge of Israel, was overlooked and neglected, and the prophecy was delivered to a child, and not to him; and partly because of the sad things that should come upon his family.

℣. 16. Then Eli called Samuel, &c.] Perceiving he was risen by the opening of the doors of the tabernacle, which he might hear; and observing he did not come to him as usual, to know whether he wanted any thing, and being impatient to hear what was said to him of the Lord: and he said, Samuel, my son; called him by his name, and in a very tender and affectionate manner, the more to engage him to hasten to him, and thereby also putting him in mind of his filial duty to obey him: and he answered, here am I; ready to attend and perform any service enjoined him.

℣. 17. And he said, what is the thing that the Lord hath said unto thee? &c.] The word Lord is not in the text, but it is that it hath said; the voice that had so often called him in the night, and which yet Eli knew was the voice of the Lord; and as it was, he was sensible there was something of importance said, and he had great reason to believe it respected him and his family; and the rather he might conclude this, by what the man of God had lately said to him, whose words perhaps he had too much slighted, questioning his authority; and therefore the Lord took this way and method to assure him, that what was said came from him; for hereby Eli was fully convinced, that this voice Samuel heard was of the Lord, and so what was said must be from him, and this he was impatient to know: I pray thee, hide it not from me; and he not only beseeched and intreated him, but adjured him, as in the next clause: God do so to thee, and more also, if thou hide any thing from me, of all the things that he said unto thee; it is the form of an oath or curse, wishing that God would do some great evil to him, and more than he chose to express, if he concealed any thing from him that had been told him. So Kimchi and Abarbinel take it to be an oath; and Josephus[u] and Procopius Gazæus on the place say, that Eli obliged Samuel by oaths and curses to declare what had been said to him.

℣. 18. And Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him, &c.] And so approved himself to be a faithful prophet of God, and man of God, as he is afterwards called; the whole counsel of God is to be declared by his servants the prophets, and the ministers of his word; nothing is to be concealed, which it is the will of God should be made known, whether it be pleasing or displeasing to man: and he said, it is the Lord; that has said it, and there is nothing to be said against it, and that will do it; and there is no resisting him: or the Lord

[1] ולא כחדה בהם & non contraxit frontem, Osiander; non contraxit rugas, Belg. De Dieu.

[u] Antiq. l. 5. c. 10. §. 4.

Lord is he [w]; who has a ſovereign right to all his creatures, and may diſpoſe of them as he pleaſes; he is all-wiſe, and does all things well; he is holy and righteous in all his ways and works, and there is no unrighteouſneſs in him; he is faithful to his word, whether in a way of promiſe or threatening; and all he does to his people is in love, mercy and kindneſs: let him do what ſeemeth him good; not what ſeems good to men, or is ſo in their eſteem, but what ſeems good to the Lord, who knows what is beſt for his people, and can do nothing but what is good; all is good he does; there is nothing but goodneſs in him, and nothing but goodneſs comes from him; he does good, and nothing elſe, and even when he afflicts his people; all he does is well done in creation, providence and grace: and Eli's deſire is, that he would fulfil the good pleaſure of his will; he appears to be in an excellent temper, not ſurly and moroſe, taking it ill that ſuch a meſſage ſhould be ſent him by a child; nor was he unaffected with the caſe of his family, but humbly ſubmitted to the will of God, and acquieſces in it as good, and neither arraigns his juſtice, nor murmurs at his providences.

℣. 19. And Samuel grew, &c.] Not only in years and ſtature, but in grace and goodneſs, in wiſdom, knowledge and underſtanding, both with reſpect to things natural and ſpiritual, and in eſteem, credit and reputation among men: and the Lord was with him; he was not only in favour with men, but with God; and had freſh and repeated tokens of the grace and good-will of God towards him; he indulged him with his preſence, and aſſiſted him in his ſervice, and proſpered and ſucceeded him in all things in which he was engaged. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was his help;" the eſſential Word of God the Meſſiah: and did let none of his words fall to the ground [x]; in alluſion either to water that falls to the ground, and becomes uſeleſs, or to an arrow falling out of the bow, and to the ground, before it reaches the mark, and ſo unſucceſsful [y]; or to any weapon of war, ſword or ſpear falling out of the hand of the ſoldier, whereby he is diſarmed and rendered unſerviceable: and theſe words, according to Kimchi, and in which he is followed by Abarbinel, are to be underſtood, not only of the words which he ſpake by the Holy Ghoſt under a ſpirit of prophecy, and had their exact accompliſhment; but his common words, which were ſpoken by weight and meaſure, as the laſt expreſſes it, and which were delivered out according to the rules of juſtice, probity and truth; and ſo he failed not of performing that which he had ſaid, or of doing what was right, whereby Iſrael knew he was fit, prepared, and deſigned to be a prophet of the Lord, as in the following verſe; but it ſeems rather to have reſpect to the things predicted by him under a ſpirit of prophecy concerning Eli and his houſe, which ſoon began to be fulfilled.

℣. 20. And all Iſrael, from Dan even unto Beerſheba, &c.] That is, from the moſt northern border of the land of Iſrael, on which Dan lay, to the utmoſt border of it ſouthward, where Beerſheba was, the fame of Samuel for his piety, prudence and prophecy was ſpread abroad; ſo that all knew that Samuel was eſtabliſhed to be a prophet of the Lord; or that he was faithful [z] to God and man, to be credited in what he ſaid; and ſo a fit man to be a prophet of the Lord, being eminently qualified with gifts by him for that office; the Targum is, "that Samuel was faithful in the words of the prophecy of the Lord," in relating them.

℣. 21. And the Lord appeared again in Shiloh, &c.] In the tabernacle there; he had appeared before to Samuel, when he called him, and declared to him what he deſigned and reſolved to do to Eli and his family, and now appeared again to him in the ſame place before the battle of the Iſraelites with the Philiſtines, of which there is an account in the following chapter. Such appearances had not been uſual in Shiloh for a long time, but were now renewed and repeated: for the Lord revealed himſelf to Samuel by the Word of the Lord; by Chriſt, the Word of the Lord, who appeared to him, it is probable, in an human form, as he was wont to do to the patriarchs and prophets, and by whom the Lord revealed his mind and will unto them, being the angel of his preſence, and the meſſenger of his covenant; or by giving him a word of command to be delivered by him to the children of Iſrael, and which is expreſſed and delivered in the next chapter.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter is a narrative of a war between Iſrael and the Philiſtines, in the time of Samuel, and of the conſequences of it. In the firſt battle, the Philiſtines had the better of the Iſraelites, which cauſed the latter to enquire into the reaſon of it, and who propoſed to fetch the ark of the Lord, and did, to repair their loſs, and prepare for a ſecond battle, in which they hoped to ſucceed, and which ſtruck a panic into their enemies, ℣. 1—7. who yet encouraged and ſtirred up one another to behave in a courageous manner, and victory a ſecond time was on their ſide, a great number of the Iſraelites were ſlain, among whom were Hophni and Phinehas, the two ſons of Eli, and the ark of God was taken, ℣. 8—11. the news of which being brought to Eli, he fell back and died, ℣. 12—18. and to his daughter-in-law, who upon it fell into labour, and died alſo, ℣. 19—22.

℣. 1. And the word of Samuel came to all Iſrael, &c.] Or was known, as the Targum, the word of prophecy by him, which related to what befel Eli and his family; this was ſpread throughout the land, and every one almoſt had knowledge of it, and which began to be fulfilled in the war between Iſrael and the Philiſtines, after related; or the doctrine, inſtructions and exhortations of Samuel to the people of Iſrael, were by the means of others conveyed throughout the land; and yet they went into meaſures which proved fatal and ruinous to them; or the word of Samuel, which was from the Lord, came to Iſrael, to ſtir them up to go to war with the Philiſtines, whereby the puniſhment threatened to Eli's family would begin to have its accompliſhment: now Iſrael went out againſt the Philiſtines to battle; according to the word of Samuel, or of the Lord by him; tho' Ben Gerſom thinks, they

2

[w] יהוה הוא κυριος αυτος, Sept. Dominus ipſe, Montanus.
[x] נאמן fidelis, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion.
[y] Vid. Homer. Iliad. 17. ℣. 633.
[z] Χαμαιπετης επος, Pindar. Pythia, ode 6.

they did this of themſelves, which was their ſin, and did not aſk counſel of the Lord, nor of Samuel his prophet; but it ſeems as if the Philiſtines were the aggreſſors, and firſt came forth to war againſt them, and they went out to meet them [a], as the word is, and defend themſelves, as it became them: this was forty years after the death of Samſon, and at the end of Eli's government, who judged Iſrael ſo many years, when they had recruited themſelves, and recovered their loſſes they ſuſtained by Samſon; and when they perceived a new judge was raiſed up among the Iſraelites, who was likely to be of great ſervice to them, and to prevent their authority over them, and therefore thought to begin with them betimes: and pitched beſide Eben-ezer; a place ſo called by anticipation, and had its name from an after victory obtained, when Samuel ſet up a ſtone between Mizpeh and Shen, and called it by this name, ch. vii. 12. it ſignifies a ſtone of help: and the Philiſtines pitched in Aphek; a city in the tribe of Judah bordering on the Philiſtines, Joſh. xv. 53. ſee the note on Joſh. xii. 18.

℣. 2. And the Philiſtines put themſelves in array againſt Iſrael, &c.] Prepared for battle, and put themſelves in a poſture for it; formed themſelves in a line of battle, and ſo invited and challenged the Iſraelites to fight them: and when they joined battle; engaged with each other, the Iſraelites doing the ſame, putting themſelves in a proper form and poſture for fighting; or the battle was ſpread, or ſpread itſelf [b]; that is, as the Targum, they that made war were ſpread; the ſoldiers were placed in order for battle, to the right and left, which took up on both ſides a large ſpace; though Abarbinel underſtands this in a very different ſenſe, and takes the word to have the ſame ſignification as in Pſ. lxxviii. 60. where it has the ſenſe of forſaking; and ſo here the Iſraelites forſook the battle, and fled, which brought on their deſtruction, flight being, as the Jews ſay [c], the beginning of fall or ruin, as it follows: Iſrael was ſmitten before the Philiſtines; they had the worſt of it, and were beaten: and they ſlew of the army in the field about 4000 men; ſo many fell upon the ſpot, in the field.

℣. 3. And when the people came into the camp, &c.] At Eben ezer, where they pitched their tents, and from whence they went out to battle, and whither they returned after their defeat: the elders of Iſrael ſaid, wherefore hath the Lord ſmitten us to-day before the Philiſtines? they were right in aſcribing it to the Lord, who had ſuffered them to be defeated by their enemies, but it is ſtrange they ſhould be ſo inſenſible of the cauſe of it; there was a reaſon ready at hand, their ſins and iniquities were the cauſe of it, the corruption of manners among them, their neglect of bringing their offerings to the Lord, and the idolatry that many of them were guilty of, at leaſt ſecretly, ch. ii. 24. and vii. 3. to puniſh them for which, they were brought into this war, and ſmitten in it; and yet they wonder at it, that ſo it ſhould be, that they the people of God ſhould be ſmitten before heathens and uncircumciſed Philiſtines; and the rather, ſince they went to battle with them according to the word of the Lord by Samuel; not conſidering that they went into this war without humiliation for their ſins, and without praying to God for ſucceſs, and that it was intended as a correction of them for their offences againſt God: let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of Shiloh unto us; in which the law was, ſometimes called the covenant between God and them; and which was a ſymbol of the divine preſence, for want of which they ſuppoſed they had not the preſence of God with them, and ſo had not ſucceſs; and the rather, they were encouraged to take this ſtep and method, becauſe that formerly Iſrael had ſucceſs againſt their enemies when the ark was with them, Numb. xxxi. 6. Joſh. vi. 6. though no doubt in this there was an over-ruling providence of God, by which they were led to take ſuch a ſtep as this, in order to bring the two ſons of Eli into the camp, that they might be ſlain in one day, according to the divine prediction: that when it cometh among us, it may ſave us out of the hand of our enemies; fooliſhly placing their confidence in an external ſymbol, and not in the Lord himſelf; aſcribing ſalvation to that which only belongs to him, whether of a temporal or ſpiritual kind: and ſuch folly and vanity are men guilty of, when they ſeek to, make uſe of, and truſt in any thing ſhort of Chriſt for ſalvation; as in carnal deſcent; in the rituals of the law; in the ordinances of the goſpel; in any religious exerciſes, private or publick; or in any works of righteouſneſs done by them: in Chriſt alone is ſalvation from ſpiritual enemies; and indeed from the Lord only is ſalvation and deliverance from temporal enemies.

℣. 4. So the people ſent to Shiloh, &c.] They liked the propoſal of the elders, took their advice, and joined with them in a meſſage to Eli the high-prieſt at Shiloh: that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the Lord of hoſts, which dwelleth between the cherubim; which over-ſhadowed the mercy-ſeat that was upon the ark, and was the reſidence of the divine majeſty; wherefore, having this with them, they concluded they ſhould have the preſence of God with them, and ſo ſucceſs, ſee Pſ. lxxx. 1. and xcix. 1. and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinchas, were there with the ark of the covenant of God; theſe either with, or without the leave of Eli, took the ark out of the tabernacle and carried it on their ſhoulders to the camp, or however attended it there, being borne by other prieſts or Levites; and by this means they were brought into the camp, and ſo to battle, to meet their doom there; according to Bunting [d], it was carried by them 42 miles.

℣. 5. And when the ark of the covenant of the Lord came into the camp, &c.] Being brought thither by the men that carried it: all Iſrael ſhouted with a great ſhout, ſo that the earth rang again; this they did as now ſure of victory, becauſe of the ark, and to give ſpirit and courage to each other to go forth to battle, and to ſtrike a panic into their enemies.

℣. 6. And when the Philiſtines heard the noiſe of the ſhout, &c.] For it being ſo loud as to make the earth ring, it was heard in the camp of the Philiſtines, which might not be at any great diſtance from the camp of Iſrael; how far from each other were Aphek and Eben-ezer, is not certain: they ſaid, what meaneth the noiſe of this great ſhout in the camp of the Hebrews? they could not conceive what ſhould ſhould be the reaſon of it, ſeeing they had no occaſion to ſhout for joy, having been lately defeated; and a ſhout is made generally juſt before a battle is begun, and the onſet made, or when victory is obtained; neither of which was the caſe now: and they underſtood that the ark of the Lord was come into the camp; this they underſtood by ſpies, which they ſent to find out the meaning of the ſhout; which is more probable than that they came to the knowledge of it by deſerters; ſeeing it is not very likely that any Iſraelites would deſert to the Philiſtines.

[a] לקראת in occurſum, Pagninus, Montanus. [b] וחטש המלחמה & diffuſum eſt prælium, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius. [c] Miſn. Sotah, c. 8. §. 6. [d] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 123.

ver. 7. And the Philiſtines were afraid, &c.] When the ſpies returned, and reported to them the reaſon of the ſhouting: for they ſaid, God is come into the camp; into the camp of Iſrael, becauſe the ark repreſented him, and was the ſymbol of his preſence; and theſe heathens might take the ark itſelf for an idol of the Iſraelites; the Targum is, "the ark of God is come:" and they ſaid, wo unto us; it is all over with us, deſtruction and ruin will be our caſe, victory will go on their ſide now their God is among them: for there hath not been ſuch a thing heretofore; if by this they meant that the ark had never been in the camp of Iſrael before, they were miſtaken; and it is no great wonder they ſhould, being not ſo well acquainted with the affairs of Iſrael, and their cuſtoms; or rather, it was not ſo yeſterday, or three days ago, when they were defeated; there was no ſhouting then: or the ſtate of the war is altered; before we fought with the men of Iſrael, but now we muſt fight with the God of Iſrael alſo.

ver. 8. Wo unto us, who ſhall deliver us out of the hand of theſe mighty Gods? &c.] Of whom they ſpake in an ironical and ſneering manner; or if ſeriouſly and through fear, they uſe their own heatheniſh language, as if the Iſraelites had many gods, as they had, though mightier than theirs; though the Syriac and Arabic verſions read in the ſingular, out of the hand of God, or the moſt ſtrong God; and ſo the Targum, out of the hand of the Word of the Lord: theſe are the gods that ſmote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderneſs; the ten plagues were inflicted on the Egyptians in the land of Egypt, and not in the wilderneſs; wherefore the Philiſtines may be ſuppoſed to be miſtaken in this circumſtance; which is not to be wondered at, ſince many hiſtorians who have written of the affairs of the Jews have been miſtaken in them, as Juſtin, Tacitus, and others; nay even Joſephus himſelf in ſome things: but perhaps reſpect is had to the drowning of Pharaoh and his hoſt in the red ſea, which had the wilderneſs of Etham on both ſides of it; and this ſtroke was the finiſhing one of the plagues on the Egyptians. R. Joſeph Kimchi ſuppoſes the word for wilderneſs has the ſignification of ſpeech, as in Cant. iv. 3. and that the ſenſe of the Philiſtines is, that God ſmote the Egyptians with all the plagues he did by his word, his orders, and commands; but now he was come in perſon, and would ſmite them by himſelf; this ſenſe Abarbinel calls a beautiful one.

ver. 9. Be ſtrong, and quit yourſelves like men, O ye Philiſtines, &c.] Since this was all they had to depend upon, their manly courage; if they did not exert that it was all over with them; and ſeeing their caſe was deſperate, having gods as well as men to fight with, it became them to exert themſelves to the uttermoſt; which did they, there was poſſibility ſtill of gaining victory, and ſo immortal honour to themſelves; theſe words ſeem to be ſpoken by the generals and officers of the army of the Philiſtines to the common ſoldiers: that ye be not ſervants to the Hebrews, as they have been to you; that is, before and in the times of Samſon; but it appears from hence, that at this time neither the Philiſtines ruled over the Iſraelites, nor the Iſraelites over them; but as there was danger of their becoming ſubject to Iſrael, they had better die glorioufly in the field of battle, than to be in the baſe ſtate of ſervitude: quit yourſelves like men, and fight; this is repeated to animate them to battle, which they ſuppoſed was not far off by the ſhoutings of the Iſraelites, and which they muſt prepare for.

ver. 10. And the Philiſtines fought, &c.] With great ardor and ſpirit, quitted themſelves like men of valour and courage, their caſe being deſperate as they imagined, ſince God was in the camp of Iſrael: and Iſrael was ſmitten; were routed and beaten: and they fled every man into his tent; ſuch of them as eſcaped the ſword of the Philiſtines, fled to their own houſes in the ſeveral cities from whence they came; ſo the Targum, "every man to his city;" ſo that their army was quite broken up: and there was a very great ſlaughter; far greater than in the firſt battle: for there fell of Iſrael 30,000 footmen; their army chiefly, if not altogether conſiſting of footmen, there being few horſes in Iſrael; and if any cavalry now, theſe may be ſuppoſed to flee; before they loſt only 4000, now 30,000; ſo that the ark was no ſecurity to them, which was ſuffered, to ſhew their vain truſt and confidence in it.

ver. 11. And the ark of God was taken, &c.] By the Philiſtines; which was ſuffered partly as a puniſhment to the Iſraelites, for fetching it from the tabernacle without the will of God, and for their vain confidence in it; and partly that the Philiſtines might have an experiment of the power and might of God, as Procopius Gazæus obſerves, by what they would ſuffer through having it among them; ſome have thought that this was an emblem of Chriſt being delivered into the hands of the Gentiles, and of the goſpel being tranſlated from the Jews to them: and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were ſlain; which fulfilled the prophecy of the man of God, that they ſhould both die in one day, ch. ii. 34. It is very probable they ſtood faſt by the ark, and choſe rather to die than to give it up freely; having received a charge from their father, that if the ark was taken, not to deſire life, nor ever dare to come into his preſence more, as Joſephus [a] relates.

ver. 12. And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, &c.] Out of the rank in which he was, before the whole army was quite broken up. This was a young man, as Joſephus [b] ſays, which is highly probable; though not at all to be depended on is what the Jews [c] ſay, that this was Saul, after king of Iſrael: and came to Shiloh the ſame day; which, according to Bunting [d], was 42 miles from Eben-ezer, near to which the battle was fought; and that it was a long way, is pretty plain by the remark made, that this meſſenger came the ſame day the battle was fought; though not at ſuch a diſtance as ſome Jewiſh writers ſay, ſome 60, ſome 120 miles [e]; which is not at all probable: with his

[a] Antiqu. l. 5. c. 11. §. 2. [b] Ibid. §. 3.
[c] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 8. 1. Jarchi in loc. [d] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 123.
[e] Midraſh Schemuel apud Abarbinel in loc.

his clothes rent, and earth upon his head; which were both tokens of diſtreſs and mourning, and ſhewed that he was a meſſenger of bad tidings from the army; ſee the note on Joſh. vii. 6.

℣. 13. And when he came, &c.] To Shiloh; he either paſſed by Eli, who being blind could not ſee him, ℣. 15. or he came in at another gate of the city on the other ſide of it, as Abarbinel thinks; though the former ſeems more likely by what follows, he not chooſing to deliver the bad news to Eli firſt, whom he knew it would very much grieve, and therefore ſlipped by him into the city: lo, Eli ſat upon a ſeat by the way-ſide watching; by the hand of the way, as the marginal reading, and which we follow; it ſeems to be a place where two ways or more met, and where was a way-poſt erected, with an hand directing what places they led to. The text is, he, or it ſmote, as if his heart ſmote him for letting the ark go; ſo Kimchi[f]; here Eli had a ſeat placed, which, as the Targum ſays, was at the aſcent of the way to the gate; and ſo the Septuagint has it, at the gate; and Joſephus[g] ſays it was at one of the gates; either of his own houſe, or of the tabernacle, or rather of the city; here he was watching for news, to hear what he could, and as ſoon as he could, how it fared with the army, with his ſons, and eſpecially with the ark: for his heart trembled for the ark of God; not ſo much for his ſons, whoſe death he might expect from the divine prediction, but for the ark about which he was doubtful; fearing leſt it ſhould fall into the hands of the uncircumciſed Philiſtines, who would triumph upon it, and which would make ſad the heart of every true Iſraelite, and reflect much diſhonour on the God of Iſrael; and very probably he might tremble the more when he reflected on his own ſin and folly in ſuffering his ſons to take it with them. Eli here may repreſent a good man in pain for the church of God, and the intereſt of religion in declining times, both with reſpect to miniſters of the word, and members of churches: as when goſpel-miniſters are removed by death, few raiſed up in their ſtead, and thoſe that do appear in the miniſtry, either unregenerate, as it may be feared; or have not gifts and abilities qualifying them for it; or are of immoral lives and converſations, or propagate falſe doctrines, errors, and hereſies: and alſo when among profeſſors of religion, and members of churches, there is a great decay of powerful godlineſs; and they are got into a drowſy ſleepy frame of ſpirit, are become lukewarm and indifferent to ſpiritual exerciſes, want zeal for the goſpel and cauſe of Chriſt; are careleſs about the honour and intereſt of religion, unſtable and inconſtant in doctrine and worſhip, and in their affections to one another, and the miniſters of the word; and their converſation not as becomes their profeſſion: and when the man came into the city, and told it; how that the army of Iſrael was beaten, what a number of men was killed, among whom were the two ſons of the high-prieſt, and the ark was taken: all the city cried out; that is, all the inhabitants of the city, having moſt of them perhaps relations and friends in the army, for whom they were concerned, fearing their lives were loſt; but eſpecially the loſs of the ark was inſupportable by them, it being of ſo much advantage to that city particularly, both with reſpect to things temporal and ſpiritual; wherefore upon hearing this bad news, there was a general ſhriek and cry throughout the whole city.

℣. 14. And when Eli heard the noiſe of the crying, &c.] The ſhrieks of the men and women, which were very clamorous and terrible. Eli had his hearing, though not his ſight; he could not ſee the diſtreſs in their countenances, but he heard the lamentations they made: and ſaid, what meaneth the noiſe of this tumult? it ſeems the people ran about, wringing their hands, and making doleful ſhrieks; the noiſe of which Eli heard, and the meaning of which he enquired after, or what ſhould be the cauſe of it: and the man came in haſtily, and told Eli; or made haſte, and came to him, and related all that is after expreſſed; for Eli was not in any houſe, but on a ſeat by the way-ſide, and therefore could not be ſaid to come in to him; but he came to him, where he was, being brought by ſome of the citizens Eli had enquired of what ſhould be the meaning of this noiſe; and therefore without delay the man was haſtened to give the whole account unto him, as it was highly proper he ſhould, being the ſupreme magiſtrate.

℣. 15. Now Eli was 98 years old, &c.] Which is very properly obſerved, he being now come to the end of his days, and which alſo accounts for his blindneſs after mentioned: and his eyes were dim, that he could not ſee: could not ſee the meſſenger, and read in his countenance, and perceive by his clothes rent, and earth on his head, that he was a bringer of bad tidings; or his eyes each of them ſtood[h]; were fixed and immoveable, as the eyes of blind men be. In ch. iii. 2. it is ſaid, his eyes began to wax dim; but here that they were become dim; and there might be ſome years between that time and this, for Samuel then was very young, but now more grown up; though Procopius Gazæus thinks that Eli was then 98 years of age, and that the affair there related was juſt before his death; but it rather appears to be ſome time before.

℣. 16. And the man ſaid unto Eli, I am he that came out of the army, &c.] It is very probable, that the people Eli enquired of, told him there was a meſſenger come from the army, though they did not chuſe to relate to him the news he brought: and I fled to day out of the army; ſo that as he was an eye-witneſs of what was done in the army; the account he brought was the earlieſt that could be had, in bringing which he had made great diſpatch, having ran perhaps all the way: and he ſaid, what is there done, my ſon? has a battle been fought? on which ſide is the victory? is Iſrael beaten, or have they conquered? how do things go? he uſes the kind and tender appellation, my ſon, to engage him to tell him all freely and openly.

℣. 17. And the meſſenger anſwered and ſaid, &c.] He delivered his account gradually, beginning with generals, and then proceeding to particulars, and with what he thought Eli could better bear the news of, and ſo prepared him for the worſt; in which he acted a wiſe part: Iſrael is fled before the Philiſtines; they have given way and retreated, and which might poſſibly be done without great loſs, and which though it was bad news, might not be ſo very bad: and there hath alſo been a great ſlaughter among the people; this is worſe news ſtill; however the number of the ſlain is not given, nor any mention of particular perſons that were killed; ſo that

[f] Vid. David de Pomis, Lexic. fol. 47. 1. Tigurine verſion.

[g] Ut ſupra.

[h] קמה ſtetit, Montanus; ſtabant, that for any thing yet ſaid, his own ſons might be ſafe; but then it follows, and thy two ſons alſo Hophni and Phinehas are dead; the news of which muſt be very affecting to him, and ſtrike him cloſely; though he might expect and be prepared for it by what both the man of God, and Samuel from the Lord had related to him: and the ark of God is taken; the thing he feared, and his heart trembled before for it; this was the cloſing and cutting part of the account; the meſſenger foreſaw that this would the moſt affect him, and therefore referred it to the laſt.

℣. 18. And it came to paſs, when he made mention of the ark of God, &c.] Of the taking of that, it ſtruck him to the heart, and killed him; the reſt he bore tolerably well, the flight of Iſrael before the Philiſtines, the great ſlaughter made of them, the death of his two ſons; but the taking of the ark was ſo dreadful to him, that he could not ſupport under it: that he fell from off the ſeat backward, by the ſide of the gate; which confirms the ſenſe of ℣. 13. though whether it was the gate of his own houſe, or of the tabernacle, or of the city, is not certain; the latter is moſt probable; it ſeems the ſeat on which he ſat had no back to it, and might be placed only for preſent convenience: and his neck brake; the back part of it, the vertebræ of it, which has its name in Hebrew from the ſeveral joints in it: and he died; not through the breaking of his neck, for it is very probable he died directly upon hearing the ark was taken, and which was the reaſon of his falling backward, and that brake his neck: for he was an old man, and heavy; full of fleſh, a very fat man, and ſo fell heavy, which occaſioned the breaking of his neck: and he had judged Iſrael 40 years; had governed them in the capacity both of an high-prieſt and judge, ſo that he muſt enter on his government when 58 years of age; the Septuagint verſion has it very wrongly 20 years. According to the Jews [i], he died on the 10th of Ijar, anſwering to part of April and May, and his two ſons and the ark taken; for which a faſt was kept on it.

℣. 19. And his daughter-in-law Phinehas's wife was with child, near to be delivered, &c.] Was near her time, as it is commonly expreſſed. Ben Gerſom derives the word from a root, which ſignifies to compleat and finiſh [k]; denoting that her time to bring forth was compleated and filled up; though Joſephus [l] ſays that it was a ſeven months birth, ſo that ſhe came two months before her time; the margin of our bibles is, to cry out [m]; and ſo Moſes Kimchi, as his brother relates, derives the word from a root which ſignifies to howl and lament, and ſo is expreſſive of a woman's crying out when her pains come upon her: and when ſhe heard the tidings that the ark of God was taken; which is mentioned firſt, as being the moſt diſtreſſing to her: and that her father-in-law, and her huſband were dead; her father-in-law Eli is put firſt, being the high-prieſt of God, and ſo his death gave her the greateſt concern, as the death of an high-prieſt was always matter of grief to the Iſraelites; and next the death of her huſband, who ſhould have ſucceeded him in the prieſthood; for though he was a bad man, yet not ſo bad as Hophni, as Ben Gerſom obſerves; and therefore the prieſthood was continued in his line unto the reign of Solomon; and no notice is taken by her of the death of her brother-in-law: ſhe bowed herſelf, and travailed; put herſelf in a poſture for travailing; perceiving ſhe was coming to it, ſhe fell upon her knees, as the word uſed ſignifies; and we are told [n], that the Ethiopian women, when they bring forth, fall upon their knees, and bear their young, rarely making uſe of a midwife, and ſo it ſeems it was the way of the Hebrew women: for her pains came upon her; ſooner it is very probable than otherwiſe they would, which is ſometimes the caſe, when frights ſeize a perſon in ſuch circumſtances: or were turned upon her [o]; they ceaſed, ſo that ſhe could not make the neceſſary evacuations after the birth, which iſſued in her death; ſome render it, her doors were turned [p], or changed; the doors of her womb, as in Job iii. 10. though theſe had been opened for the bringing forth of her child, yet were reverſed, changed, and altered, ſo as to prevent the after birth coming away, which cauſed her death, as follows.

℣. 20. And about the time of her death, &c.] Which quickly came on after ſhe was brought to bed: the women that ſtood by her; who was called to her labour, and aſſiſted at it: ſaid unto her, fear not, for thou haſt born a ſon; perceiving that ſhe was very low-ſpirited, endeavoured to chear and comfort her, by obſerving to her that the worſt was over; and beſides, ſhe had brought forth a man-child, which was uſually matter of joy to a family, and particularly to the woman that bears it, which cauſes her to forget the ſorrows and pains ſhe has gone through in bearing it, John xvi. 21. but ſhe anſwered not, neither did ſhe regard it; ſaid not one word in anſwer to them, nor was the leaſt affected with joy and pleaſure at what they related to her; being not only a dying woman, on the borders of another world, and ſo had no reliſh for temporal enjoyments, but alſo over-preſſed with grief with what had happened, not only to her family, but more eſpecially to the ark of God.

℣. 21. And ſhe named the child Ichabod, &c.] Which ſome render, where is the glory? as in the margin of our bibles; but it ſignifies no glory, as Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it; her huſband being dead, ſhe gives her child its name; the reaſon for which name follows: ſaying, the glory is departed from Iſrael; the God of glory, or the glorious Lord, was departed from Iſrael; the ark, the ſymbol of his preſence, being taken from them, and carried captive by the enemy; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 61. becauſe the ark of God was taken, and becauſe of her father-in-law, and her huſband; who were dead; theſe are the words, either of the writer of this book, or, as Abarbinel thinks, of the women that aſſiſted at her labour; who interpreted the name of the child, and ſuggeſted what were her intentions in giving this name, which ſhe had only expreſſed in general terms; the particulars of which they thought fit to give, agreeable to her meaning, as they ſuppoſed; which were the taking of the ark, and the death of her father-in-law, and of her huſband; but according to the ſame writer ſhe before her death corrected the ſenſe they put upon her intention in thus naming the child; ſhewing that it was not on the account of the death of her father and huſband, that ſhe ſuppoſed the glory to be

[i] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 580. §. 2. [k] כלה abſolvere, conſummare, perficere. Buxtorf. [l] Ut ſupra, §. 4. [m] ללת ad ululandum, Montanus; ſo ſome in Munſter; ad ejulandum, as ſome in Vatablus. [n] Ludolph. Hiſt. Æthiop. l. 1. c. 14. [o] נהפכו verſæ erant, Pagninus, Montanus. [p] Quoniam inverſi ſunt ſuper eam cardines ejus, Munſter; ſo Jarchi; vid. T. Bab. Becorot, fol. 45. 1.

b' departed, and therefore named her child Ichabod; but ſolely and alone becauſe the ark was taken, as in the next verſe.

℣. 22. And ſhe ſaid, &c.] Repeating what ſhe had ſaid before for the confirmation of it, or as correcting what the women had ſaid; and ſo may be rendered, but ſhe ſaid; giving her own, and only reaſon for the name of the child: the glory is departed from Iſrael, for the ark of God is taken; ſo when the word, worſhip, and ordinances of God are removed from a people, the glory is gone from them; the God of glory is no more ſeen among them, who is ſo glorious in his nature, perfections, and works; and Chriſt, the Lord of life and glory, is no more held forth unto them in the glories of his perſon, offices, and grace; and the glorious goſpel of Chriſt is no more preached unto them, ſo full of glorious doctrines and promiſes; and the glorious ordinances of it no more adminiſtered: and when this is the caſe, the glory is departed from a people; and which is owing to their formality, lukewarmneſs, unfruitfulneſs, negligent attendance on the worſhip of God, contempt of the word and ordinances, and an unbecoming walk and converſation.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter relates how that the ark being brought by the Philiſtines to Aſhdod, and placed in the temple of their idol, that fell down before it, ℣. 1—5. that the hand of the Lord was upon the men of Aſhdod, and ſmote them with emerods, ℣. 6, 7. and being carried to Gath, the men of Gath were ſmitten likewiſe with the ſame, ℣. 8, 9. and after that the men of Ekron, whither it alſo was carried, ℣. 10, 11, 12.

℣. 1. And the Philiſtines took the ark of God, &c.] Which fell into their hands, Iſrael being beaten, and cauſed to flee, and the prieſts that had the care of the ark ſlain; and when poſſeſſed of it, they did not deſtroy it, nor take out of it what was in it, only took it up: and brought it from Eben-ezer unto Aſhdod; Eben-ezer was the place where the camp of Iſrael was pitched, ch. iv. 1. and near to which the battle was fought. Aſhdod was one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines, the ſame with Azotus, Acts viii. 40. The diſtance between theſe two places, according to Bunting [q], was 160 miles; though one would think the diſtance from each other was not ſo great: why it was carried to Aſhdod, is not plain; perhaps it might be the neareſt place of note in their country; and certain it is that it was one of their moſt famous cities, if not the moſt famous; ſee the note on Iſ. xx. 1. and had a famous idol-temple in it.

℣. 2. When the Philiſtines took the ark of God, &c.] And had brought it to Aſhdod: they brought it into the houſe of Dagon; a temple dedicated to that idol, and in which his image ſtood; of which ſee the note on Judg. xvi. 23. and ſet it by Dagon; by the ſide of him, either in honour to the ark, as Aben Ezra [r]; deſigning to give it homage and adoration, as to their own deity; for though the Gentiles did not chuſe to change their gods, yet they would add the gods of other nations to them; and ſuch the Philiſtines might take the ark to be: or elſe, as Procopius Gazæus, they brought it into their idol's temple, as a trophy of victory, and as a ſpoil taken from their enemies, and which they dedicated to their idol. Laniado [r] obſerves, that the word here uſed ſignifies ſervitude, as in Gen. xxxiii. 15. and that the ark was ſet here to miniſter to, or ſerve their god Dagon. The temple of Dagon at Aſhdod or Azotus, was in being in the times of the Maccabees, and was burnt by Jonathan, 1 Maccab. x. 83, 84.

℣. 3. And when they of Aſhdod aroſe early on the morrow, &c.] Either the people, the inhabitants of the place, who came early to pay their devotions to their idol, before they went on their buſineſs; or the prieſts of the idol, who came to ſacrifice in the morning: and behold Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth before the ark of the Lord; as if he was ſubject to it, and giving adoration to it, and owning it was above him, and had ſuperior power over him: and they took Dagon, and ſet him in his place again; having no notion that it was owing to the ark of God, or to the God of Iſrael, that he was fallen, but that it was a matter of chance.

℣. 4. And when they aroſe early on the morrow morning, &c.] For the ſame purpoſe as before; unleſs they had any curioſity to indulge, to ſee whether the ark and Dagon agreed better together, if they had any ſuſpicion that the former miſchance was to be attributed to ſome variance and diſagreement between them: behold Dagon was fallen upon his face to the ground before the ark of the Lord; again, and in a worſe condition than before: and the head of Dagon, and both the palms of his hands were cut off upon the threſhold; of the temple, upon which he fell with ſuch force, that the threſhold cut off his head, and both his hands; which ſignified he had neither wiſdom to contrive for his own ſafety, nor ſtrength and power to defend himſelf; and therefore of what advantage could he be to his votaries? This may be an emblem of the fall of idolatry in the Gentile world, before the preaching of Chriſt and his goſpel in it; or of the idol of man's righteouſneſs, which is ſet up, though it cannot ſtand, againſt the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and of man's renouncing that when convinced of the weakneſs and inſufficiency of it, and ſubmitting to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: only the ſtump of Dagon was left to him; his body, as the Targum, his head and hands being cut off; or, as it is in the Hebrew text, only Dagon was left; that is, the fiſhy part of this idol; for Dag ſignifies a fiſh; and, as Kimchi relates, this idol from the navel upwards, had the form of a man, and from thence downwards the form of a fiſh; and it was the lower part that was left; ſee the note on Judg. xvi. 23.

℣. 5. Therefore neither the prieſts of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's houſe, &c.] Neither the prieſts that continually attended the worſhip and ſervice of Dagon, nor the people that came there to pay their devotions to him: tread on the threſhold of Dagon in Aſhdod unto this day; but uſed to leap over over it, either reckoning it sacred because touched by their idol, which fell upon it; or rather, as it should seem, in a way of detestation, because it had been the means of cutting off the head and hands of their idol; and this custom not only continued to the latter days of Samuel, the writer of this book; but even among the Philistines in one place or another to the times of Zephaniah, who seems to allude to it, ch. i. 9. In after times there was another deity worshipped at Ashdod; according to Masius [s], the Philistine Venus, or Astarte, was worshipped in this place; though perhaps she may be no other than Atergatis, or Adergatis, which with Selden 'is only a corruption of Addir-dag, the magnificent fish, in which form Dagon is supposed to be; so the Phœnician goddess Derceto worshipped at Ascalon had the face of a woman, and the other part was all fish; though Ben Gersom says Dagon was in the form of a man, and which is confirmed by the Complutensian edition of the Septuagint, which on ver. 4. reads, the soles of his feet were cut off; which is a much better reading than the common one, the soles of his hands, which is not sense; by which it appears, that he had head, hands, and feet; wherefore it seems most likely that he had his name from Dagon, signifying corn; see the note on Judg. xvi. 23.

[q] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 123.

[r] Cli Yaker, fol. 162. 4.

ver. 6. But the hand of the Lord was heavy on them of Ashdod, &c.] Not only on their idol, but on themselves; it had crushed him to pieces, and now it fell heavy on them to their destruction: and he destroyed them; either by the disease after mentioned they were smitten with, or rather with some other, since that seems not to be mortal, though painful; it may be with the pestilence: and smote them with emerods; more properly hæmorrhoids, which, as Kimchi says, was the name of a disease, but he says not what; Ben Gersom calls it a very painful disease, from whence comes a great quantity of blood. Josephus [t] takes it to be the dysentery or bloody flux; it seems to be what we commonly call the piles, and has its name in Hebrew from the height of them, rising up sometimes into high large tumours: even Ashdod and the coasts thereof; not only the inhabitants of the city were afflicted with this disease, but those of the villages round about.

ver. 7. And when the men of Ashdod saw that it was so, &c.] That many of their inhabitants were taken away by death, and others afflicted with a painful disease; all which they imputed to the ark being among them: they said, the ark of the God of Israel shall not abide with us; like the Gergasenes, who besought Christ to depart their coasts, having more regard for their swine than for him: for his hand is sore upon us, and upon Dagon our God; not the hand of the ark, unless they took it for a god, but the hand of the God of Israel; in this they were right, and seem to have understood the case better than the other lords they after consulted; his hand was upon Dagon, as appeared by his fall before the ark, and upon them by smiting them with the hemorrhoids, the memory of which abode with the Philistines for ages afterwards; for we are told [w], that the Scythians, having plundered the temple of Venus at Ascalon, one of their five principalities, the goddess inflicted upon them the female disease, or the hemorrhoids; which shews that it was thought to be a disease inflicted by way of punishment for sacrilege, and that it was still remembered what the Philistines suffered for a crime of the like nature.

ver. 8. They sent therefore and gathered all the lords of the Philistines unto them, &c.] The other four lords, for there were five with this; see Josh. xiii. 3. and said, what shall we do with the ark of the God of Israel? they no doubt told them what they and their idol had suffered on account of it, and the resolution they were come to that it should be no longer with them; and therefore desire to know what must be done with it, whether they should return it to the people of Israel, or dispose of it somewhere else: it is probable some might be for the former, but the greater part were not, and were for keeping it in their possession somewhere or another: and they answered, let the ark of the God of Israel be carried about unto Gath; which was another of the five principalities of the Philistines, and not far from Ashdod; according to Jerom [x], it is included in the remnant of Ashdod, Jer. xxv. 20. and according to Bunting [y] but four miles from it. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions make this to be the answer of the men of Gath, the one reading it, "and they of Gath said, let the ark of God come to us;" and the other, "they of Gath answered, let the ark of the God of Israel be carried about;" for they suspected, as Procopius Gazæus observes, that the destruction did not come from God, but was a disease arising from some pestilential cause. They perhaps imagined it was in the air in and about Ashdod, or that tho' the situation of the ark was not liked, in another place it might be otherwise, and more agreeable: and they carried the ark of the God of Israel about thither; they seem not to carry it directly to the place, but carried it in a round-about way, as if they had a mind to give it an airing, before they fixed it any where.

ver. 9. And it was so that after they had carried it about, &c.] And at last placed it in the city of Gath: the hand of the Lord was against the city with a very great destruction; greater than that at Ashdod, more persons were destroyed; the distemper sent among them was more epidemical and mortal: and he smote the men of the city, both small and great; high and low, persons of every class, rank, and station, young and old, men, women, and children: and they had emerods in their secret parts; and so had the men of Ashdod; and the design of this expression is, not to point at the place where they were, which it is well known they are always in those parts, but the different nature of them; the emerods or piles of the men of Ashdod were more outward, these more inward, and so more painful, and not so easy to come at, and more difficult of cure; for the words may be rendered, and the emerods were hidden unto them [z]; were inward, and out of sight; and perhaps this disease as inflicted on them might be more grievous than it commonly is now. Josephus [a] wrongly makes these to be the Ascalonites, when they were the men of Gath.

ver. 10. Therefore they sent the ark of God to Ekron, &c.] Another of the five principalities of the Philistines, about 10 miles from Gath, where Baalzebub, or the God of the fly, was worshipped: and it came to pass, that as the ark of God came to Ekron; and had been there some little time: that the Ekronites cried out; when they perceived the hand hand of God was upon them, as upon the other cities; theſe were the chief magiſtrates of the city with the lord of them, as appears by what follows: ſaying, they have brought about the ark of the God of Iſrael to us; from one city to another, and at length to us: to ſlay us and our people; not that this was their intention, but ſo it was eventually.

[s] Comment. in Jos. xv. 47. [t] De Dis. Syr. Syntagu. l. 2. c. 3. p. 267. [u] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 1. §. 1. [w] Herodot. Clio, sive, l. 1. c. 105. [x] Comment. in Hierem. c 25. fol. 151. B. [y] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 123. [z] וישתרן להם עפלים et absconditi erant, Montanus; so Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius. [a] Ut supra.

℣. 11. So they ſent and gathered together all the lords of the Philiſtines, &c.] As the men of Aſhdod had done before on the ſame account, ℣. 8. and ſaid, ſend away the ark of the God of Iſrael; as theſe lords were united in their government, and made one common cauſe of it againſt Iſrael, one could not diſpoſe of this capture without the conſent of the reſt; otherwiſe the lord of Ekron, with his princes, were clearly in it that it was right and beſt to ſend it away out of any of their principalities: and let it go again to its own place; to the land of Iſrael and Shiloh; there, though to that it never returned more: that it ſlay us not and our people; that is, all of them, for great numbers had been ſlain already, as follows: for there was a deadly deſtruction throughout all the city; a mortal diſeaſe went through the whole city, and ſwept away a multitude of people: the hand of God was very heavy there; it ſeems by the expreſſion to have been heavier on the inhabitants of this city, than upon thoſe of Aſhdod and Gath, which made them the more preſſing to get rid of the ark.

℣. 12. And the men that died not were ſmitten with the emerods, &c.] As the inhabitants of Aſhdod and Gath had been; this ſhews that thoſe that died did not die of that diſeaſe, but of ſome other; very likely the peſtilence: and the cry of the city went up to heaven; not that it was heard and regarded there, but the phraſe is uſed to denote the greatneſs of it, how exceeding loud and clamorous it was; partly on the account of the death of ſo many of the inhabitants, their relations and friends; and partly becauſe of the intolerable pain they endured through the emerods. There is ſomething of this hiſtory preſerved in a ſtory wrongly told by Herodotus [b], who relates that the Scythians returning from Egypt paſſed through Aſcalon, a city of Syria, (one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines) and that ſome of them robbed the temple of Venus there; for which the goddeſs ſent on them and their poſterity the diſeaſe of emerods, and that the Scythians themſelves acknowledged that they were troubled with it on that account.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter we are told, the Philiſtines adviſed with their prieſts what to do with the ark, and wherewith to ſend it home, ℣. 1, 2. whoſe advice was to ſend with it a treſpaſs-offering, golden images of emerods and mice, and to put it on a new cart, and the images in a coffer on the ſide of the ark, and draw it with two milch-kine, ℣. 3—8. and gave them a token whereby they might know whether they had been ſmitten by the God of Iſrael or not, ℣. 9. which advice they took, and acted in all things according to it; and the lords of the Philiſtines accompanied the ark to the border of Beth-ſhemeſh, ℣. 10, 11, 12. where they of Beth-ſhemeſh received it with joy, and offered the kine for a burnt-offering to the Lord, and the Levites took care of the ark and preſents in it, and the lords of the Philiſtines returned home, ℣. 13—18. but they of Bethſhemeſh looking into the ark were ſmitten of God, upon which they ſent to the men of Kirjath-jearim to fetch it from them, ℣. 19, 20, 21.

℣. 1. And the ark of the Lord was in the country of the Philiſtines 7 months;] Or in the field [c] of the Philiſtines; hence Procopius Gazæus obſerves, that none of the cities daring to receive the ark, they left it without under the open air, ſo thinking they ſhould be delivered from their calamity. But the word is often uſed for country, and is generally ſo underſtood here; the Targum is, "in the cities of the Philiſtines;" in one or other of them, firſt for a while in Aſhdod, and then for ſome time in Gath, and laſt in Ekron, and in all 7 months from the time of its being taken; and it being in wheat-harveſt when it was returned, ℣. 13. theſe ſeven months will carry us back to the beginning of winter, or towards the end of autumn, when the battles between Iſrael and the Philiſtines were fought, and the ark was taken. Joſephus [d] ſays it was with the Philiſtines 4 months only, contrary to the text.

℣. 2. And the Philiſtines called for the prieſts and for the diviners, &c.] The one were ſkilled in the rites and ceremonies of religion, not only of their own, but of other nations, particularly of Iſrael; and that they were not ſtrangers to the hiſtory and affairs of that people is plain from ℣. 6. and the other were ſkilled in judicial aſtrology, and knowledge of future events, at leaſt as they pretended to; and therefore were both thought fit perſons to adviſe with on the occaſion of the ark, and the circumſtances they were in through that: ſaying, what ſhall we do to the ark of the Lord? ſhall we ſend it back to its own land, or not? the Ekronites had moved it might be ſent back, and the five lords ſent for the prieſts and diviners to have their advice upon it, whether it was right or no, and what they ſhould do to it, or with it; for if it was adviſeable to ſend it back, then another queſtion follows: tell us wherewith we ſhall ſend it to his place; whether on men's ſhoulders, or on horſes or aſſes, or on a carriage; and whether juſt as it was taken, or with ſome preſents with it.

℣. 3. And they ſaid, if ye ſend away the ark of the God of Iſrael, ſend it not empty, &c.] As they perceived they had either reſolved upon, or at leaſt were inclined to do; and which they alſo thought adviſeable, and therefore would have them by no means ſend it away as it was, but with ſome preſents along with it; for the meaning of this word empty, is not that they ſhould take care that all that were in it when taken ſhould go with it, and nothing be taken out of it, or it be ſtripped of its contents; but that ſome gifts and offerings ſhould be ſent along with it: perhaps they might have ſome notion of, or reſpect unto a law in Iſrael, Exod. xxiii. 15. or might ſay this from a common principle received among heathens, that deities were to be be appeased by gifts [e]: but in any wise return him a trespass offering; here again they seem to have some notion of the sorts and kinds of sacrifice among the Israelites; and advise to a trespass-offering, to make satisfaction and atonement for the offence they had committed in taking away the ark; and that they should make restoration not only by returning the ark, but by sending an expiatory offering along with it: then ye shall be healed; of the disease with which they were smitten; for it seems it still continued on them, at least on many: and it shall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you; which was because the ark was detained by them; but when that should be sent home, and they be healed upon it, then it would be a plain case that the reason why the disease was inflicted and continued was because of that.

[b] Clio ſive, l. 1. c. 105.

[c] בשדה in agro, Sept. in agro, Pagninus, Montanus.

[d] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 1. ſect. 4.

℣. 4. Then said they, what shall be the trespass-offering which we shall return to him? &c.] They paid a great deference to their priests and diviners, and were willing to be directed in all things by them; being ignorant of what was most proper in this case, and might be acceptable to the God of Israel: they answered, five golden emerods, and five golden mice; images of these made of gold, as appears from the next verse; the reason of the former is easy, from the above account of the disease they were afflicted with; but of the latter no hint is given before: indeed in the Vulgate Latin and Septuagint versions of ch. v. 6. is inserted a clause, that "mice sprung up in the midst of their country;" which is not in the Hebrew text, nor in the Chaldee paraphrase; yet appears to be a fact from the following verse, that at the same time their bodies were smitten with emerods, their fields were over-run with mice, which destroyed the increase of them; wherefore five golden mice were also ordered as a part of the trespass-offering, and five of each were pitched upon: according to the number of the lords of the Philistines; who were five, and so the principalities under them; see Josh. xiii. 3. for one plague was on you all, and on your lords; the lords and common people were equally smitten with the emerods, and the several principalities were alike distressed and destroyed with the mice; and therefore the trespass-offering, which was a vicarious one for them, was to be according to the number of their princes and their principalities; five emerods for the five princes and their people smitten with emerods, and five mice on account of the five cities and fields adjacent being marred by mice.

℣. 5. Wherefore ye shall make images of your emerods, &c.] Which some take to be images of the five cities; others of a man at large with the disease in his back parts; others of that part of the body of a man only, in a circular form, in which the disease was, and expressing that; but the text is plain for the disease only, as high large tumours: though Maimonides [f] says of these images, that the word is attributed to them, not because of their external form, but because of their spiritual virtue and influence; whereby the damage or disease of the emerods in the hinder-parts were removed: he seems to take them to be a sort of Talismans, which were images of a disease or noxious creature a country was infected with, made under some celestial influence to remove it; and Tavernier [g] relates, as Bp. Patrick observes, that it is a practice with the Indians to this day, that when any pilgrim goes to a Pagod for the cure of any disease, he brings the figure of the member affected, made either of gold, silver, or copper, according to his quality, which he offers to his god. There is a tradition among the heathens, which seems to be borrowed from this history, and serves to establish the credit of it; the Athenians not receiving Bacchus and his rites with due honour, he was angry with them, and smote them with a disease in their private parts, which was incurable; on which they consulted the oracle, which advised them in order to be rid of the disease to receive the god with all honour and respect; which order the Athenians obeyed, and made images of the several parts, privately and publickly, and with these honoured the god in memory of the disease [h]; both the disease and cure are here plainly pointed at: and images of your mice that mar the land; that devoured the fruits of it, as these creatures in many instances have been known to do; and particularly in Palestine, the country of the Philistines, where in some places their fields were sometimes almost deserted because of the abundance of them; and were it not for a sort of birds that devoured them, the inhabitants could not sow their seed [i]: the Boeotians sacrificed to Apollo Pornopion, (which signifies a mouse) to save their country from them [k]; Aristotle [l] reports of field-mice, that they sometimes increase to such incredible numbers, that scarce any of the corn of the field is left by them; and so soon consumed, that some husbandmen, having appointed their labourerers to cut down their corn on one day, coming to it the next day, in order to cut it down, have found it all consumed; Pliny [m] speaks of field-mice destroying the harvest; Aelianus [n] relates such an incursion of field-mice into some parts of Italy, as obliged the inhabitants to leave the country, and which destroyed the corn-fields and plants, as if they had been consumed by heat or cold, or any unseasonable weather; and not only seeds were gnawn, but roots cut up; so the Abderites [o] were obliged to quit their country because of mice and frogs: and ye shall give glory to the God of Israel; by sending these images as monuments of their shameful and painful disease, and of the ruin of their fields; owning that it was the hand of the Lord that smote their bodies with emerods, and filled their fields with mice which devoured them; seeking and asking pardon of him by the trespass-offering they sent him: peradventure he will lighten his hand from you; abate the violence of the disease, and at length entirely remove it: and from off your gods; not Dagon only, but others seem to have suffered, wherever the ark came; for the Philistines had other deities; besides Dagon at Ashdod, there were Baal-zebub at Ekron, and Marnas at Gaza, and Derceto at Ascalon; and perhaps another at Gath, though unknown; and besides the gods suffered, or however their priests, by the number of men that died, and by the fruits of the earth being destroyed;

[e] Munera crede mihi, &c. Ovid. de arte amandi, l. 3.
[f] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 1.
[g] Travels, p. 92.
[h] Scholia in Aristoph. Acharnen. Act ii. Scen. 1. p. 383, 384. Edit. Genev. 1607.
[i] Magini Geograph. par. 2. fol. 241.
[k] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 1. c. 13.
[l] Hist. Animal. l. 6. c. 37. —— sæpe exiguus mus, &c. Virgil. Georg. l. 1. v. 181, 182.
[m] Nat. Hist. l. 10. c. 65.
[n] De Animal. l. 17. c. 41.
[o] Justin, l. 15. c. 2.

ſtroyed; which muſt in courſe leſſen their revenues: and from off your land; the fruits of which were deſtroyed by mice.

℣. 6. Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts, as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? &c.] And would not let Iſrael go, when their diſmiſſion was demanded by Moſes and Aaron in the name of the Lord; but was refuſed from time to time, being given up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart: and it ſeems by this, that tho' it was propoſed by ſome to ſend back the ark, and which the prieſts and diviners approved of; yet there were ſome that were againſt it, who notwithſtanding the plagues inflicted on them, like Pharaoh and the Egyptians hardened their hearts; which ſtory theſe prieſts were acquainted with, by the tradition of their anceſtors, this being a fact then generally known in the world; or by the relation of the Iſraelites, over whom they had ruled many years, and were converſant with them: when he had wrought wonderfully among them; that is, the God of Iſrael, though they mention not his name, who had wrought wonders in the land of Egypt; the ten plagues he inflicted on them are referred to: did they not let the people go, and they departed? who were convinced by theſe plagues that they ought to let Iſrael go, and by them were prevailed upon to diſmiſs them, and the people did go out of their land; and therefore ſhould not we let the ark go likewiſe, on whom plagues have been inflicted for detaining it? and may we not expect more and greater, ſhould we refuſe to diſmiſs it?

℣. 7. Now therefore make a new cart, &c.] For there were no Levites, nor prieſts of the Lord to carry it upon their ſhoulders, as it was wont to be when carried, and therefore they ordered a cart to be made; and they might know the Levites were allowed waggons to carry ſome of their ſacred things on, Numb. vii. and a new one for the honour of the ark, as David afterwards did, 2 Sam. v. 3. and take two milch kine, on which there hath come no yoke; which alſo might be deſigned for the honour of the ark; but there was a farther view in it, at leaſt in the providence of God; ſince two ſuch creatures, who had young, would be apt, if left to themſelves, as theſe were, to return home to them, and not to proceed on a journey; and being unaccuſtomed to a yoke, would draw one one way, and another another, in different ways; and not go on in a direct road, as ſuch that are uſed to the yoke do: and tie the kine to the cart; in order to draw it: and bring their calves home from them; that they might not cry after them, which would cauſe them to turn back.

℣. 8. And take the ark of the Lord, and lay it upon the cart, &c.] Which was diſpenſed with in theſe uncircumciſed Philiſtines, there being no other to do this ſervice: and put the jewels of gold; or rather, veſſels of gold [p]; the five golden emerods, and the five golden mice: which ye return him for a treſpaſs-offering, in a coffer by the ſide thereof; in a baſket, as the Syriac verſion; in a ſcrip, as the Arabic; in a purſe, or bag, as Joſephus [q]; which latter is probable enough: and ſend it away, that it may go; that is, ſet it a-going, without any driver or guide; but leave it to take its courſe of itſelf to the land of Iſrael. Joſephus [r] ſays it was ſet in a place where three ways met, that it might take which it might; and the taking of the right way muſt be a ſtrong evidence of its being under the direction of God.

℣. 9. And ſee if it goeth up by the way of its own coaſt to Beth-ſhemeſh, &c.] The neareſt city to the land of the Philiſtines, which lay on their borders, and the borders of the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 10. ſee the note there. Now the lords of the Philiſtines are directed by their prieſts to obſerve, whether theſe kine that drew the cart on which the ark was, took the direct road to the borders of the land of Iſrael, and to Beth-ſhemeſh the neareſt city that lay on that coaſt: if ſo, they might conclude then, he hath done us this great evil; that is, the God of Iſrael, whoſe ark this was; he had inflicted the diſeaſe of the emerods on them, and ſent ſuch numbers of mice into their fields, that had deſtroyed the increaſe of them: but if not, then we ſhall know that it is not his hand that hath ſmote us; but that there is ſome other cauſe of it: it was a chance that happened to us; and ſo might have been the caſe, if the ark had never been taken or detained, and to be imputed to fate, or to the ſtars, or ſome ſecret cauſes they knew not of.

℣. 10. And the men did ſo, &c.] Made a new cart, not the lords of the Philiſtines, but workmen by their orders: and took two milch kine, and tied them to the cart; with the gear that horſes, aſſes, or oxen, were uſually faſtened to a carriage they drew: and ſhut up their calves at home; or, in the houſe [s]; the cow-houſe or ſtable where they uſed to be put; this they did to reſtrain them from following the cows, which would diſturb them in drawing the cart.

℣. 11. And they laid the ark of the Lord upon the cart, &c.] Perhaps the ſame men that made the cart; however they were the Philiſtines, yet were not puniſhed for touching it, as Uzzah was, though an Iſraelite, 2 Sam. v. 6, 7. and the coffer with the mice of gold, and the images of their emerods; which coffer was placed in a purſe or bag hung at the ſide of the ark, with the golden mice and emerods in it.

℣. 12. And the kine took the ſtrait way to the way of Beth-ſhemeſh, &c.] Though they had none to drive, lead, or guide them, yet they ſteered their courſe to the road that led to Beth-ſhemeſh, though there were other ways they might have taken; which ſhews they were under the direction of God himſelf: and went along the highway; or, in one highway, or poſt [t]; though they had never been uſed to a yoke, they drew together in one path; and did not draw one one way, and another another, as oxen unaccuſtomed to a yoke do: lowing as they went; on account of their calves, which ſhewed their ſenſe of them, and their natural affection for them; and yet went on, did not attempt to go back to them; by which it was plain they were under a ſupernatural influence: and turned not aſide to the right or to the left; when other ways preſented, on the right hand or on the left; they kept going ſtraight on in the road that led to the place they were deſtined for; all which can be reckoned nothing leſs than a miracle: and the lords of the Philiſtines went after them unto the border of

[p] כלי זהב vaſa aurea, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, &c.
[q] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 1. §. 2.
[r] Ibid.
[s] בביתו in domo, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. Tigurine verſion; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[t] במסלה אחת in via clata una, Montanus; eadem ſemita.

of Beth-ſhemeſh; not before them to guide them, or on the ſide of the ark to take care of it, but behind; and not at all out of reſpect and reverence to it, but to ſee what would be the iſſue of things, whether it would turn out an impoſture or not; and that they might be able to make a true judgment of what had befallen them, as their prieſts and diviners had directed them to; they followed it until it was out of their territories, and in the hands of the Iſraelites. This place Beth ſhemeſh is thought by ſome, as R. Iſaiah obſerves, to be the ſame with Timnath-heres, where Joſhua was buried, in Judg. ii. 9. which ſignifies the figure of the ſun, as this does the houſe of the ſun; and where perhaps, when inhabited by the Canaanites, was a temple of the ſun; and it was, according to Bunting [u], 12 miles from Ekron, from whence the ark came; and ſo far it was followed by the Philiſtines. This was a city given to the Levites, and ſo a proper place for the ark to come to be taken care of; hence mention is made of Levites that took it down from the cart, ℣. 15 ſee Joſh. xxi. 16. and the note there.

℣. 13. And they of Beth-ſhemeſh were reaping their wheat-harveſt in the valley, &c.] Which began at Pentecoſt, in the month Sivan, about our May; ſo that there were many people in the fields, who were eye-witneſſes of this wonderful event: and they liſted up their eyes, and ſaw the ark, and rejoiced to ſee it; for though the ark while in the tabernacle was only ſeen by the high-prieſt, when he went into the holy of holies; yet this having been brought out from thence, and expoſed in the camp of Iſrael; ſome of this place very probably were there at that time, and had ſeen it, and knew it again by its form and ſplendor; and which gave them great pleaſure to behold, which had been taken, and had been ſo long in the hand of the enemy, and the people of Iſrael deprived of it; which was the ſymbol of the divine preſence among them, and now reſtored to them again; and in this wonderful way, without ſeeking for it, without going to war on account of it, without paying a ranſom for it; and was brought to them in a cart drawn by cattle without a driver, the lords of the Philiſtines with a large retinue following it. This is to be underſtood not of their looking into it, as they afterwards did, and were puniſhed, as Kimchi; but of their looking on it.

℣. 14. And the cart came into the field of Joſhua a Beth-ſhemite, &c.] In that part of the valley where they were reaping wheat which belonged to him, of whom we no where elſe read; whether a prieſt or Levite, which is not improbable, ſince this was a city of the Levites, or a common Iſraelite, is not certain: and ſtood there where there was a great ſtone; afterwards called the great ſtone of Abel, ℣. 18. By the providence of God it was ſo ordered, that the kine made a ſtop juſt at this place; and proceeded no farther, as if ſenſible they were come to their journey's end, and had brought the ark into the hands of its friends, and to a proper place for them to expreſs their thankfulneſs for it; for this ſtone ſeemed deſigned to be, as it was, the altar on which the burnt-offering by way of thankſgiving for the return of the ark, was to be offered; the Jews ſay [w] this ſtone was the altar built by Abraham: and they clave the wood of the cart, and offered the kine a burnt-offering unto the Lord; the cart they cut in pieces, and laid the wood of it in order upon the ſtone, and ſlew the two cows, and laid their pieces on the wood, and ſet fire to it, and burnt them with it, as expreſſive of joy and thankfulneſs that the ark was returned. This was done, not by the lords of the Philiſtines, as ſome of the antient Jews thought, as Kimchi relates, in which they are followed by ſome Chriſtian interpreters; but by the men of Beth ſhemeſh, as Kimchi, by the prieſts there; for though this was not the proper and uſual place for ſacrifice, nor were cows offered in ſacrifice; yet this being an extraordinary caſe, and thank-offerings were neceſſary as ſoon as the ark was returned, theſe things were diſpenſed with; and the rather, ſince Shiloh where the tabernacle was, was deſtroyed; and beſides, the ark of the Lord was here preſent, which ſanctified the place, as it did the tabernacle, and made it fit for ſuch ſervice; and as for theſe cows, they had been employed in ſacred ſervice, and the Lord had a right unto them, and claim upon them; and it ſeemed not fitting that they ſhould be after employed to any other uſe and ſervice than his own; nor were the men of Beth-ſhemeſh blamed or puniſhed for this, though they afterwards were for looking into the ark.

℣. 15. And the Levites took down the ark of the Lord, &c.] Or, had took it down [x]; for this tho' here related, was done as ſoon as the ark came into the field, or quickly after, and before the burnt-offering could be made, which was burnt with the wood of the cart; and though the perſons that took it down are called Levites, they were prieſts, who were of the tribe of Levi; for it was the work of the prieſts to take it down, though the Levites then might carry it; and it is remarkable, that Beth-ſhemeſh was given to the Kohathite Levites, whoſe buſineſs it was to carry the ark on their ſhoulders; ſee Joſh. xxi. 10. Numb. iv. 15. and the coffer that was with it, wherein the jewels of gold were; the purſe or bag in which were the five golden mice, and the five golden emerods: and put them on the great ſtone; both the ark and the coffer, by which the cart ſtood, and on which the ſacrifice of burnt-offering was probably offered: and the men of Beth-ſhemeſh offered burnt-offerings, and ſacrificed ſacrifices the ſame day unto the Lord; beſides the burnt-offering of the two milch-kine, they offered others to teſtify their thankfulneſs for the return of the ark; and alſo peace-offerings on which they feaſted with one another, to expreſs their greater joy.

℣. 16. And when the five lords of the Philiſtines had ſeen it, &c.] Obſerved all that was done, how the kine performed their journey, drew the cart in which the ark was, ſtrait to Beth-ſhemeſh, ſtopped in a field near it, where it was received joyfully by the people, and ſacrifices offered on account of it: they returned to Ekron the ſame day; as they might very well, ſince it was but 12 miles from Beth-ſhemeſh.

℣. 17. And theſe are the golden emerods, which the Philiſtines returned for a treſpaſs-offering unto the Lord, &c.] Along with the ark: for Aſhdod one, for Gaza one, for Aſkelon one, for Gath one, for Ekron one; which were the five principalities of the Philiſtines that belonged to the five lords before mentioned; and each of theſe were at the expence of a golden emerod, and ſent it along with the ark to make atonement for the offence they had been guilty of in taking and detaining it.

℣. 18.

[u] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 123.

[x] הוריחו depoſuerant, Mendoza; ſo Pool.

[w] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 75. D.

℣. 18. And the golden mice according to the number of all the cities of the Philiſtines, belonging to the five lords, &c.] That is, as many golden mice as there were cities under the juriſdiction of the five lords, which are the ſame before mentioned: both of fenced cities, and of country villages; walled and unwalled towns; it ſeems by this, as it was but reaſonable it ſhould be, that the ſeveral villages adjacent and belonging to the five principal cities, contributed their part towards the expence of the five golden emerods, and five golden mice, ſince they were afflicted both in their perſons, and eſpecially in their fields, as well as thoſe in the cities; though Kimchi and others think, that the country villages ſent each of them a golden emerod, and a golden mouſe, fearing the preſents of the five cities would not ſerve for them; and therefore tho' the prieſts and diviners only ordered five of each according to the number of the principal cities, yet they of themſelves ſent more: all the country villages that reached even unto the great ſtone of Abel; the Targum is, "unto the great ſtone;" and ſo the Septuagint verſion, reading Eben inſtead of Ebal; or Lamed is put for Nun, as Nun for Lamed, Neh xiii. 7, 8. The Vulgate Latin verſion is unto great Abel, taking it for a city, as does Procopius Gazæus, who calls it the great city Abel, through which they carried the ark of the Lord; ſo Jerom [r], who takes it to be the ſame with Beth-ſhemeſh, called Abel becauſe of the mourning in it for the men of Beth-ſhemeſh after ſlain; or to diſtinguiſh it from another Abel is called great, 2 Sam. xx. 15. but it ſeems plainly to be the ſame with the great ſtone, ℣. 14, 15. there called Eben Gedolah. here Abel Gedolah, by the change of a letter, having its latter name by anticipation from the great mourning hereafter made, next mentioned: whereon they ſet down the ark of the Lord; when it was taken out of the cart, as alſo the coffer in which were the preſents, ℣. 15. which ſtone remaineth unto this day in the field of Joſhua the Beth-ſhemite; the ſupplement, which ſtone remaineth, ſeems neceſſary leſt it ſhould be thought the ark remained there unto the time of the writing this book, which was not true, for it was ſoon after this fetched to Kirjath-jearim; but the ſtone remained, and might be ſeen; and poſterity in following times were told that was the ſtone on which the ark was put when it returned to Iſrael.

℣. 19. And he ſmote the men of Beth-ſhemeſh, &c.] That is, God ſmote them, though they had received the ark with ſuch expreſſions of joy, and had offered ſacrifices on account of it; yet ſinning in one particular after mentioned, which was highly reſented, they were ſmitten by him with a thunder-bolt, as Joſephus ſays [z]: becauſe they had looked into the ark of the Lord; which was forbidden the Levites, Numb. iv. 20. out of curioſity theſe men opened the ark, to ſee whether the Philiſtines had taken any thing out of it, or put any thing into it; and this when in the tabernacle, being only to be ſeen by the high-prieſt; and ſuppoſing they ſhould never have the like opportunity again, to look upon the tables of the law which were in it, took it; and the rather they might be emboldened to this action, ſince it had been in the hands of the uncircumciſed Philiſtines, who had prophaned it; and as yet not reſtored to its priſtine purity, holineſs, and place: even he ſmote of the people 50,000 and 70 men; but as Beth-ſhemeſh was but a ſmall place, a village, as Joſephus [a] calls it, and it ſeems not likely that there ſhould be ſuch a number of perſons in it, and eſpecially that ſhould look into the ark; or that God, who is good and merciful, ſhould deſtroy ſo large a number for this offence, however he might think fit to make an example of ſome, it is thought that the caſe was not as our verſion repreſents it. Some who think there were ſo many ſlain, yet diſtinguiſh them, 70 of the elders of the people, and 50,000 of the congregation, or common people, as the Targum; which accounts not for the difficulty at all: others think that only 70 of the men of Beth-ſhemeſh died, and that 50,000 were ſuch as flocked out of the country on this occaſion; but as this was on the ſame day the ark came into thoſe parts, it can hardly be thought that ſo great a number ſhould be got together ſo ſoon; and ſtill leſs that they ſhould all of them open the ark, and look into it. Abarbinel is of opinion, that only 70 men of Beth-ſhemeſh were ſlain, and that the other 50,000 were the Philiſtines that died on account of the ark while it was among them; and reads the words, with the men of Beth-ſhemeſh he ſmote—even he ſmote of the people 70; that is, of the men of Bethſhemeſh; 50,000, that is of the Philiſtines, and ſo this gives the ſum of all that died on account of the ark, both whilſt it was in the hands of the Philiſtines, and when returned to Bethſhemeſh, which is not an improbable ſenſe: but others, and perhaps more truly, think that only 70 perſons were ſmitten with death; for the order in which this account is given is different from all others in the Hebrew text, the leſſer number being put firſt with a conſiderable diſtinguiſhing accent upon it, whereas the greater number is always expreſſed firſt; it ſtands thus, of the people 70 men; 50,000 men: 5000 according to the Syriac and Arabic verſions. Joſephus [b] is expreſs for it that only 70 men were ſlain, and ſo ſome of the antient Jews [c]; who ſay that theſe 70 were equal to 50,000, becauſe of their ſuperior excellency and dignity, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, being the prieſts of the Lord, or the ſanhedrim; but Bochart's [d] ſenſe ſeems to be preferable to all others, that there is a defect of the particle מ out of; and ſo to be read, either ſeventy men out of fifty thouſand; that out of the 50,000 that flocked on this occaſion from divers parts, 70 were ſmitten for the reaſon before given; or rather 70 men, 50 out of 1000 men; that is, a 20th part of the number of them, ſo that out of 1400, 70 men were ſtruck with death for their curioſity [e]. Something of this ſtory ſeems to be retained by tradition among the heathens; we are told [f], that when Troy was taken an ark was found, in which was the image of Bacchus; which being opened by Eurypylus, he was ſtruck with madneſs as ſoon as he ſaw the image: and the people lamented, becauſe the Lord had ſmitten many of the people with a great ſlaughter; I ſee no occaſion for the ſupplement many; it was a great ſlaughter, if we conſider the awful manner in which it was made, by thunder and lightening, as may be ſuppoſed; however by an immediate ſtroke from heaven; and the perſons on whom it was made, men of a ſacred character, prieſts and Levites; and a great number, conſidering

[r] Apud Heb. ut ſupra. [z] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 1. §. 4. [a] Ib. §. 3. [b] Ibid.
[c] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 35. 2. T. Hieroſ. Sanhedrin, fol. 20. 2. Bemidbar Rabba, §. 5. fol. 186. 2. [d] Hieroz. l. 1. l. 2. c. 36. col. 370. [e] So Noldius, N°. 779. [f] Pauſan. Achaica, ſive, l. 7. p. 43[illegible]

ing it was but a ſmall city. Hence the place was called Abel, which ſignifies weeping, mourning, lamentation, ℣. 18.

℣. 20. And the men of Beth-ſhemeſh ſaid, who is able to ſtand before this holy Lord God? &c.] The Targum is, "before the ark of this holy Lord God;" which is ſaid either by way of complaint of the ſeverity of God, and the ſtrictneſs of his juſtice; or in reverence of his holineſs, acknowledging their imperfection, ſin, and guilt, by reaſon of which they could not ſtand before him; nor can any, but on account of the mercy-ſeat over the ark, or through Chriſt his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice: and to whom ſhall he go up from us? that is, the ark, the ſymbol of God's preſence, which they ſeem to be deſirous of parting with; being unworthy of it, and conſcious of their impurity in compariſon of God that dwelt in it; and of their weakneſs to give the honour and reverence that was due unto it; and yet they knew not who were fit for it, or would chuſe to receive it, becauſe of the danger they were liable to through every inadvertency in them, and irreverence of that.

℣. 21. And they ſent meſſengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, &c.] Which was a city farther on in the tribe of Judah, and lay among ſome woods, from whence it had its name, and was formerly called Kirjath-baal, from Baal's being worſhipped there; of which ſee Joſh. xv. 9. they might chuſe to ſend hither to fetch the ark from them, becauſe it was at a greater diſtance from the Philiſtines, their city Beth-ſhemeſh being on the borders of them; and becauſe it might be a place of greater eminence and ſtrength, and beſides lay in the way to Shiloh, whereby they might ſuppoſe it was intended to be had; unleſs Shiloh was before this time deſtroyed: ſaying, the Philiſtines have brought again the ark of the Lord; which they doubted not would be good news to them: come ye down, and fetch it up to you; but ſay not one word of the reaſon of this requeſt, leſt it ſhould diſcourage them; but rather repreſent it as a favour to them, and an honour done them, as indeed it was. Kirjath-jearim ſeems to have ſtood on an eminence in compariſon of Beth-ſhemeſh, and therefore it is ſaid to come down from the one, and go up to the other. That Beth-ſhemeſh was in a valley, ſee ℣. 13. and this on a hill, ch. vii. 1.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the ark being brought to Kirjath-jearim, where it continued 20 years, ℣. 1, 2. of the exhortation of Samuel to the people of Iſrael to reform from idolatry, and which had its deſired effect, ℣. 3, 4. of Samuel's praying for the people, and offering ſacrifices for them, and of the ſucceſs thereof, victory over their enemies, ℣. 5—14. and of his adminiſtration of juſtice to them, and conſtancy in it, ℣. 15, 16, 17.

℣. 1. And the men of Kirjath-jearim came and fetched up the ark of the Lord, &c.] From Beth-ſhemeſh, which was near unto them, as Joſephus[g] ſays; they made no difficulty of fetching it, but gladly received it; for if they knew of what happened to the men of Beth-ſhemeſh, they knew it was not owing to the preſence of the ark among them, but to their irreverent behaviour to it; and though Kirjath-jearim was not a Levite city, and ſo the men of it could not bear the ark themſelves, yet they might have proper perſons from Beth-ſhemeſh to do this ſervice: and brought it into the houſe of Abinadab in the hill; which hill was within the city of Kirjath-jearim, and is mentioned either to diſtinguiſh this Abinadab that dwelt on it from another of the ſame name in the city, as Kimchi obſerves; or elſe to remark the propriety of the place, and the reaſon of the choice of it for the ark to be placed in; hills and high-places being in thoſe times accounted fitteſt for ſacred ſervices to be performed in, as well as places of ſafety; who this man was is not certain. Joſephus[h] ſays he was a Levite, but if ſo he could only be a ſojourner in this place; however he might be, as he ſuggeſts he was, a man of great eſteem for religion and righteouſneſs: and ſanctified Eleazar his ſon to keep the ark of the Lord; not only to watch it that it might not be taken away, but to keep perſons from it, from touching it, or uſing it irreverently; and ſuch as were not allowed to come nigh it; as well as to keep the place clean where it was put; and for this he was appointed by the prieſts, or the elders of the city; and was ſet apart for this ſervice, and prepared for it by waſhings and ſacrifices; and the rather he and not his father was inveſted with this office, becauſe he was a young man, and his father might be old and decrepit; and this his ſon alſo a holy good man, wiſe, and prudent, and active and zealous for God, and true religion; and on all accounts a fit perſon for this poſt.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs, that while the ark abode in Kirjath-jearim, that the time was long, &c.] it could not be leſs than between 40 and 50 years, for it remained here until the times of David, who removed it from hence after he was made king over all Iſrael, and when he had reigned over Judah 7 years; and from the death of Eli to that time, which included the government of Samuel and Saul, it could not be leſs than what has been hinted: for it was twenty years; not that this was all the time the ark was at Kirjath jearim, but it was ſo long there before it was much taken notice of, and ſought unto, and the Lord by it; there was a great neglect of God, and his worſhip, which through the means of Samuel began to revive about this time, as it follows: and all the houſe of Iſrael lamented after the Lord; became ſenſible of their evil doings, and repented of them, and ſought the Lord with faſting, and prayer, and tears; bewailed their backſlidings and revoltings from him, and cried after a departing God.

℣. 3. And Samuel ſpake unto all the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] When they aſſembled at one of their three yearly feaſts, or as he went from place to place, exhorting them to repentance and reformation; and perceiving they began to be awakened to a ſenſe of their ſins, and ſeemed deſirous of returning to God, and reſtoring his worſhip: ſaying, if ye do return unto the Lord with all your hearts; truly and ſincerely; for he might fear there was hypocriſy and diſſimulation at leaſt in ſome of them: then

I

[g] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 1. §. 4.

[h] Ibid.

then put away the ſtrange gods; as all but the true God are; or the gods of another people, as the Philiſtines, Canaanites, &c. Baalim ſeem chiefly intended, as appears from the following verſe: and Aſhtaroth from among you; ſhe-deities, ſuch as with other nations went by the name of Juno, Venus, &c. ſo the Arabic verſion, "the idols of the women ye ſecretly worſhip." Aquila renders it, the images of Aſtarte; ſo they call Venus, as Procopius Gazæus obſerves, from Aſter, a ſtar; but the word ſignifies flocks of ſheep, and theſe deities are ſuppoſed by ſome to be in the form of them; but be they what they may, they were to be put away out of their houſes, and out of their hearts: and prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and ſerve him only; that is, direct your hearts to him while in his ſervice; let it proceed from the heart, and let it be done to him only, and not to another with him; or to him in and by another, as may be pretended, and commonly is by idolaters: and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philiſtines; under whoſe dominion they had been for many years; for though their power over them was weakened by Samſon, yet they were not compleatly delivered by him; ſo all the time of Eli they were not wholly free from them; and eſpecially ſince their laſt defeat by them, when the ark was taken, they had been under oppreſſion by them; now Samuel promiſes them deliverance from it, in caſe they relinquiſhed their idols, and ſerved the Lord ſolely and heartily.

℣. 4. Then the children of Iſrael did put away Baalim and Aſhtaroth, &c.] Both their he and ſhe-deities, of which ſee Judg. ii. 13. and iii. 7. and ſerved the Lord only; Dr. Lightfoot [i] obſerves, that a ſpirit of repentance and converſion came generally upon all the people; a matter and a time as remarkable as almoſt any we read of in ſcripture, one only parallel to it; and that is in Acts ii. and iii. at the great converſion there.

℣. 5. And Samuel ſaid, gather all Iſrael to Mizpeh, &c.] Not Mizpeh in Gilead, on the other ſide Jordan, but a city which lay on the borders of Judah and Benjamin, where the tribes met on the account of the Levite's concubine, Judg. xx. 1. This order Samuel gave by meſſengers ſent to the ſeveral tribes, or the heads of them, to meet him at this place: and I will pray for you unto the Lord; no doubt he prayed for them privately, that the reformation begun might be carried on, and appear to be ſincere, and hearty, and general, and univerſal; but he was deſirous that they might appear in a body, and join with him in public prayer for their ſpiritual and temporal welfare; that they might have true repentance for their ſins, reform from them, and have remiſſion of them, and be delivered out of the hands of their enemies.

℣. 6. And they gathered together to Mizpeh, &c.] Even all Iſrael, at leaſt the heads of the people, and repreſentatives of them: and drew water, and poured it out before the Lord; drew it from ſome fountain near at hand, and poured it out as in the preſence of God, who was where his people were met together. Jerom [k] relates it as a tradition of the Jews, that curſes were caſt into this water, as in the water of jealouſy, and that idolaters were tried by it; and that whatever idolater, who denied he worſhipped idols, and taſted of it, his lips ſo ſtuck together, that they could not be ſeparated, and by this means was known and put to death; and therefore it is ſaid Samuel judged now at this place: but it ſhould be obſerved, this water was not drank, but poured out; and that as a token of their humiliation, as Jarchi, that they were before the Lord, as water poured out; and of the ſincerity of their repentance, as the Targum, which is, "they poured out their heart in repentance, as water;" and of the atonement and expiation of their ſins, which paſſed away as water to be remembered no more, as Kimchi; or rather ſignifying hereby that they thoroughly renounced idolatry, that nothing of it ſhould remain; as water entirely poured out, there remains not ſo much as any ſmell of it in the caſk, as does of honey or oil, or ſuch kind of liquor; for what a learned writer [l] ſays, that this was in token of joy, like that at the feaſt of tabernacles, when they drew water out of the fountain of Siloah, ſeems not ſo agreeable, ſince this was a day of humiliation, faſting, and prayer, as follows: and faſted on that day, and ſaid there, we have ſinned againſt the Lord; Samuel prayed in public for them, with whom they joined; and they faſted in a literal ſenſe, abſtaining from food, and made a confeſſion of their ſins; this was the work of that day: and Samuel judged the children of Iſrael in Mizpeh; not that he now began to judge them, but went on in a more public and vigorous manner to judge them; he ſat, and heard, and tried cauſes that came before him; explained the laws of God to them, and enforced the obedience of them; reformed abuſes that were among them, and puniſhed idolaters.

℣. 7. And when the Philiſtines heard that the children of Iſrael were gathered together to Mizpeh, &c.] Not knowing it was upon a religious account; but ſuppoſing they met to concert ſchemes and meaſures to caſt off their yoke, and deliver themſelves out of their hands; and were preparing to take up arms, and fall upon them: the lords of the Philiſtines went up againſt Iſrael; with forces out of their ſeveral principalities united to fight with them; judging it adviſeable to loſe no time, but attack them before they were well prepared and provided to defend themſelves: and when the children of Iſrael heard it, they were afraid of the Philiſtines; becauſe they were unarmed, and not at all prepared for war, and having no expectation of it.

℣. 8. And the children of Iſrael ſaid to Samuel, &c.] To whom they applied, not as the general of their forces, but as the prophet of the Lord; believing his prayers for them would be of more avail to them than an army of men ever ſo numerous, or ſo well accoutred: ceaſe not to cry unto the Lord our God for us; he had been praying for them that day, and they deſired he would continue praying for them, well knowing that the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man avails much; they knew their ſalvation was of the Lord, and that he only could ſave them, and that he muſt be ſought unto for it; and as Samuel had an intereſt in him, they beg he would continue to make uſe of it on their behalf; in which they expreſſed their truſt in God, their regard to means, the duty of prayer, and the high eſteem they had of the prophet of the Lord, whom they intreat to pray for them: that he will ſave us out of the hands of the Philiſtines; who were now coming up againſt them, them, and who had for a long time tyrannised over them.

[i] Works, Vol. I. p. 54. [k] Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 75. F. [l] L'Empereur, annot. in Miſn. Middot, c. 5. N°. 7.

℣. 9. And Samuel took a suckling lamb, &c.] Which it might be, and yet more than eight days old, for under that it might not be sacrificed, Exod xxii. 30. and offered it for a burnt-offering wholly unto the Lord; the whole of it was burnt, skin and all, whereas the skin was the priest's in other burnt-offerings; and this is remarked [m], as one of the three things in which it differed from other offerings; the word being feminine, the Jews gather from hence, as Jarchi notes, that females might be offered at a private altar: and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel; not only offered a sacrifice for them, but prayed for them: and the Lord heard him; and answered him, either by causing fire to come down on the sacrifice, by which it was consumed, or by the voice of thunder, which frighted and discomfited the Philistines; and the event of things manifestly shewed it.

℣. 10. And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, &c.] Which he might do by a priest, as Ben Gersom suggests, he being only a Levite; tho' he being a prophet, and an extraordinary person, and this an extraordinary case, he might do it himself, as Gideon and others, as well as offer it in another place than where the tabernacle was; Shiloh being now destroyed, persons and places for sacrifice were now dispensed with: and before Samuel had made an end of offering the sacrifice, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel; and were come as far almost as Mizpeh, where Israel were, and Samuel was sacrificing: but the Lord thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines; which fulfilled Hannah's prophecy, ch. ii. 10. and this, as Josephus [n] says, was attended with lightening, which flashed in their faces, and shook their weapons out of their hands, so that they fled disarmed; and also with an earthquake, which caused gaps in the earth, into which they fell: and discomfited them; disturbed, affrighted them, and threw them into confusion and disorder, as well as destroyed many of them: and they were smitten before Israel; the meaning of which is not that they fled before them, and were killed by them; but that before Israel could come out against them, and fight with them, they were smitten and destroyed, many of them by the thunder and lightening, and by the earth opening upon them, and devouring them; for this phrase, before Israel, denotes time, as Abarbinel observes, and not place.

℣. 11. And the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, &c.] To which they were encouraged by hearing or perceiving that the army of the Philistines was discomfited by the thunder, and lightening, and earthquake: and pursued the Philistines; who, when they came out, were fleeing from the opening earth, and affrighted with thunder and lightening, and many were killed, and all put in disorder; so that they stayed not to engage in battle with Israel, and who had nothing to do but to pursue their enemy: and smote them; with what weapons of war they could get at Mizpeh, and with what some might have with them for private use, and in common wear; but more especially with the weapons of the Philistines, which they in their confusion and fright had thrown away: until they came under Beth-car; a place so called, car signifies a lamb; here might be formerly a temple dedicated to the lamb, unless it had its name in memory of the lamb Samuel now offered, which was followed with such success. Josephus [o] calls this place Corræa; and in the Targum it is Beth-saron, which signifies a fruitful field or champaign country.

℣. 12. And Samuel took a stone, and set it, &c.] Not for worship, but as a monument of the victory obtained by the help of God: and this he placed between Mizpeh and Shen; which latter signifies a tooth, and designs the precipice or a rock which jets out, and hangs over in the form of one: and called the name of it Eben-ezer; which signifies the stone of help; and is the same place which by anticipation has this name, ch. iv. 1. so that in the self-same place where the Israelites were twice beaten by the Philistines, and the ark taken, was this salvation wrought for them: saying, hitherto hath the Lord helped us; this was but the beginning of their deliverance from the Philistines, and which was owing to the help of the Lord; and as he had begun to help them, they might hope and encourage themselves, that he would go on to help them until their deliverance was compleated: however, they with Samuel thought it their duty, which was right, to acknowledge what the Lord had done for them, and perpetuate the memory of it, though they could not be sure what he would do for them hereafter; yet as they were sensible of, and thankful for this instance of his goodness, they hoped for more, and had their dependence on him for future success against their enemies.

℣. 13. So the Philistines were subdued, &c.] Not that their country was conquered, or they made subject and become tributaries to Israel; but they were so humbled, as not to attempt to give the people of Israel any further trouble, and distress, who were now delivered from their oppression and tyranny: and came no more into the coast of Israel; at this time they did not gather together their forces dispersed, nor raise and bring a new army into the land of Israel; they contented themselves with placing garrisons on the coast, but did not attempt to enter and invade them any more; that is, for a long time, even until Samuel was grown old, and the people would have a king, and had one, which offended the Lord, and then he suffered them to be distressed by them again; but whilst Samuel was alone governor they came no more, tho' they did quickly after Saul was made king, as it follows: the hand of the Lord was against the Philistines all the days of Samuel; not all the days of his life, but all the days of his sole government, which restrained them from making incursions into the land of Israel; and indeed in after-times, when they did come forth to make war with them, the battle was against them during the times of Samuel.

℣. 14. And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel were restored to Israel, &c.] We no where read that the Israelites went out to war with them, and took these cities from them by besieging and assaulting them; but they made a demand of them after the above victory obtained, by which the Philistines were so intimidated, that they quietly surrendered them to them: from Ekron even unto Gath, and the coasts thereof, did Israel deliver out of the hands of the Philistines; not by dint of sword, but by demand, to which they submitted; and tho' Ekron, if not Gath, fell to the tribe of Judah by lot, yet were never in their possession; and so are to be understood exclusively here, here, that not they, but the cities and towns that lay between them and the coasts thereof, which the Philistines had seized upon, these they were obliged to deliver up again to Israel; and if Ekron and Gath were delivered, they were not long held by them, for we soon read of them as in the hands of others: and there was peace between Israel and the Amorites; who were a principal nation of the Canaanites, and are put for the whole of them that remained; and so Josephus [p] calls them the remnant of the Canaanites; these finding the Philistines were subdued, were quiet and peaceable, and gave Israel no more trouble.

[m] Midrash Schemuel apud Abarbinel in loc. [n] Antiq. l. 6. c. 2. §. 2. [o] Ibid.

℣. 15. And Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life.] Not only before Saul was made king, but afterwards; for though he had not the exercise of the supreme government of the nation, yet he might act as a judge under Saul, and hear and try causes brought before him, and execute justice and judgment; and as a prophet he taught and instructed the people, and reformed abuses among them; and besides, he held and exercised his extraordinary office, to which he was raised up of God, and even took upon him to reprove Saul himself, and to kill Agag. The Jews say [q], he judged Israel 13 years only, 11 by himself, and two with Saul; but his government must be much larger, his with Saul is reckoned 40 years, Acts xiii. 21.

℣. 16. And he went from year to year in circuit, &c.] As judges do; or from the year in the year [r], from the time of the year in the year, as the Targum, from the middle of it, that is, every half year; and so Josephus says [s], that he went twice a year in circuit: and the places he went to, and where he held his courts of judicature, were Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh; by Bethel is not meant Shiloh, as Abarbinel, for that was now destroyed; nor Kirjath-jearim, where the ark was, for it would have been called by its name; but the same Bethel that was near to Ai, and not far from Shiloh, and was in the tribe of Benjamin, as all those places were. Gilgal was where the tabernacle, ark and camp of Israel were first pitched, when they came over Jordan, and Mizpeh, where the people used to be assembled on occasion, see ℣. 5, 6. and judged Israel in all those places; who came from all parts hither with their causes, and for advice and counsel in all cases, at the returning periods.

℣. 17. And his return was to Ramah, &c.] When he had gone his circuit, he came back to this city, which was his native place, and where his father and mother had dwelt, see ch. i. for there was his house; and his father's house before him, and perhaps the same, ch. i. 19. and there he judged Israel, here was his fixed residence, and here he was always to be met with, except when on his circuit; and hither the people of Israel might repair from all parts, to have justice done them between man and man, or receive information in matters of difficulty and importance: and there he built an altar unto the Lord; to offer his own sacrifices, and the sacrifices of the people, either by himself, or by a priest, when the people came to have justice administred to them; or to desire him to pray for them, teach and instruct them, or to give them advice. Shiloh being destroyed, and no place appointed for the tabernacle and altar, the Jews say, high places for a private altar were lawful, and even for one that was not a priest to offer; these things, though settled by law, yet were for a time dispensed with, until things could be fixed in their proper place and order.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter relates, how that Samuel being old, and his sons behaving ill, the people desired to have a king set over them, ℣. 1—5. which case Samuel laid before the Lord, and he was directed by him to yield to the peoples desire, but at the same time to set before them all the disadvantages and ill consequences that would arise from thence, which he did, ℣. 6—18. but they insisting upon it, nevertheless, he gave them reason to expect that their request would be granted, ℣. 19—22.

℣. 1. And it came to pass when Samuel was old, &c.] The common notion of the Jews is, that he lived but 52 years [t]; when a man is not usually called an old man, unless the infirmities of old age came upon him sooner than they commonly do, thro' his indefatigable labours from his childhood, and the cares and burdens of government, he had long bore; though some think he was about 60 years of age; and Abarbinel is of opinion, that he was more than 70. It is a rule with the Jews [u], that a man is called an old man at 60, and a grey-headed man at 70: that he made his sons judges over Israel, under himself, not being able through old age to go the circuits he used; he sent them, and appointed them to hear and try causes in his room, or settled them in some particular places in the land, and, as it seems by what follows, at Beersheba; though whether that was under his direction, or was their own choice, is not certain.

℣. 2. Now the name of his first-born was Joel, &c.] In 1 Chron. vi. 28. he is called Vashni; see the note there. This was not Joel the prophet, as some have thought, neither his parentage, nor his office, nor his times will agree with this: and the name of his second, Abiah; which two sons seem to be all he had: they were judges in Beersheba; in the utmost border of the land, to the south, as Ramah, where Samuel dwelt and judged, was more to the north; where they were placed by their father, for the greater convenience of the people of Israel that lived southward, to bring their causes to them, as those lived more northward might bring them to him: according to Josephus [w], they were placed by their father, the one in Bethel, one of the places Samuel used to go to in his circuit and judge, and the other at Beersheba. But some, as Junius, and others, think, it should be rendered, unto Beersheba; and so takes in its opposite Dan, which lay at the utmost border of the land northward, hence the phrase, from Dan to Beersheba; and that the one was settled at Dan for the sake of the northern part of the land, and the other at Beersheba for the sake of the southern: or rather these sons of Samuel placed themselves at Beersheba; which was an ill-judged thing, to be both in one place, and which muſt give the people of Iſrael a great deal of trouble, and put them to a large expence to come from all quarters thither, to have their cauſes tried; but that is not the worſt.

[p] Ut supra. [q] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 13. p. 35. Midrash Tillim apud Abarbinel in loc. Kimchi in loc. מדי שנה בשנה ex anno in anno. [r] Antiq. l. 6. c. 3. §. 1. [s] Seder Olam Rabba, ut supra. [t] Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 21. [u] Ut supra, §. 2.

℣. 3. And his ſons walked not in his ways, &c.] The meaning of which is not, that they did not go the circuit he did, which is too low a ſenſe of the words ſome Jewiſh writers give; but they did not walk in the fear of God, in the paths of religion and righteouſneſs, truth and holineſs; they neither ſerved God, nor did juſtice to men, as Samuel had done: but turned aſide after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment; indulged to covetouſneſs, ſought to get riches at any rate, took bribes, which blind the eyes of judges; and ſo paſſed wrong judgment, and gave the cauſe to thoſe that gave the largeſt gifts, right or wrong.

℣. 4. Then all the elders of Iſrael gathered themſelves together, &c.] At ſome place of rendezvous appointed; theſe were the heads of the tribes, and fathers of the houſes and families of Iſrael, the principal perſons of age and authority: and came to Samuel unto Ramah; the place of his nativity and abode, and where he now dwelt, and judged Iſrael; they went in a very reſpectable body with an addreſs to him.

℣. 5. And ſaid unto him, behold, thou art old, &c.] See ℣. 1. his age was no reproach to him, nor was it becoming them to upbraid him with it; nor was it a reaſon why he ſhould be removed from his office, for it did not diſqualify him for it; but rather having gained by age experience, was more fit for it, though he might not be able to ride his circuits as formerly: and thy ſons walk not in thy ways; whom he had made judges; this is a better reaſon than the former for what is after requeſted; and had they only beſought him to remove them from their places, and reſted content with that, it would have been well enough; but what they were ſolicitous for, and always had an inclination to, and now thought a proper opportunity offered of obtaining it, was what follows: now make us a king to judge us like all the nations; to rule over them as ſole monarch; to go before them in battle as their general, as well as to adminiſter juſtice to them, by hearing and trying cauſes as their judge; which only they mention to cover their views, and make their motion more acceptable to Samuel; what they were deſirous of, was to have a king appearing in pomp and ſplendor, wearing a crown of gold, clothed in royal apparel, with a ſcepter in his hand, dwelling in a ſtately palace, keeping a ſplendid court, and attended with a grand retinue, as the reſt of the nations about them had had for a long time. The firſt kings we read of were in the times of Abraham, but after it became common for nations to have kings over them, and particularly the neighbours of Iſrael, as Edom, Moab, Ammon, &c. and Cicero ſays [x], all the ancient nations had their kings, to whom they were obedient: Iſrael had God for their king in a peculiar manner other nations had not, and ſtood in no need of any other; and happy it would have been for them, if they had been content therewith, and not ſought after another: however, they were ſo modeſt, and paid ſuch deference to Samuel, as to deſire him to make or appoint one for them.

℣. 6. But the thing diſpleaſed Samuel, &c.] Not that they called him an old man, and ſuggeſted that he was incapacitated for his office, nor for obſerving the unbecoming walk of his ſons, but for what follows: when they ſaid, give us a king to judge us; what diſpleaſed him was, that they were for changing their form of government, not only to remove it from him, and his ſons, but from the Lord himſelf, who was king over them; the ill conſequences of which, many of them at leaſt, he eaſily foreſaw, and which gave him great uneaſineſs, both on account of the glory of God, and their own good; inſomuch, as Joſephus [y] ſays, he could neither eat nor ſleep, but watched all night, and ſpent it in prayer, as follows: and Samuel prayed unto the Lord; to know his mind and will, and what anſwer he ſhould return unto them.

℣. 7. And the Lord ſaid unto Samuel, &c.] He appeared to him in a viſion or dream, and by an articulate voice delivered to him what follows: hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they ſay unto thee; not as approving of what they ſaid, but permitting and allowing what they aſked, as a puniſhment of them for their diſloyalty and ingratitude, and as reſenting their ill behaviour to him; for it was in anger he aſſented to their requeſt, Hoſ. xiii. 11. for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me that I ſhould not reign over them; moſt interpreters ſupply the word only, as if the ſenſe was, that they had not only rejected Samuel from judging them, but the Lord alſo from reigning over them; and which is ſpoken to comfort Samuel, and to alleviate the preſſure on his mind for the ill treatment he had met with; for ſince they had ſerved the Lord after this manner, it was no wonder he ſhould be ill uſed, and might bear it with greater patience: but I ſee no reaſon why the words may not be taken abſolutely, that they had not rejected Samuel from all ſhare in the government, at leaſt from judging the people; for ſo he continued all the days of his life, even after they had a king over them; but they entirely rejected the ſole and peculiar government of God over them.

℣. 8. According to all the works which they have done ſince the day that I brought them out of Egypt, &c.] This was no new thing; all that they had done ſince they were wonderfully favoured of God, as to be brought out of Egyptian bondage was all of a piece with this; one continued ſeries of ingratitude, of rebellion againſt God, and againſt his ſervants, that he employed under him, as Moſes, Aaron, &c. even unto this day, wherewith they have forſaken me, and ſerved other gods; this is what this people were always addicted to, to caſt off the worſhip and ſervice of God, and go into idolatry: ſo do they alſo unto thee; acted the like ungrateful part to him for all the ſervice he had done them, from his childhood to that time; wherefore, as the diſciple is not above his maſter, nor the ſervant above his lord, if ſuch things as before obſerved were done to Jehovah himſelf, Samuel could not expect to meet with better treatment, or other than he had, ſee Matt. x. 24, 25.

℣. 9. Now therefore hearken unto their voice, &c.] And appoint them a king as they deſire: howbeit, yet proteſt ſolemnly unto them; not againſt the thing itſelf, which was permitted, but againſt the evil of their requeſt, as to the unſeaſonable time, ill manner, and unjuſtifiable reaſon, in and for which it was made; the Lord would have Samuel lay before them their evil in requeſting it, and the evils that would follow upon it to them, and faithfully repreſent them to them, that they might be left without excuſe, and have none to blame but themſelves when they ſhould come upon them: and ſhew them the

[x] De Legibus, l. 3.

[y] Ut ſupra, §. 3.

the manner of the king that ſhall reign over them; or the right or judgment [z]; not a legal right or form of government, but an aſſumed, arbitrary and deſpotic power, ſuch as the kings of the eaſt exerciſed over their ſubjects, a king like whom the Iſraelites deſired to have; namely, what unbounded liberties he would take with them, what ſlaves he would make of them, and what of their property he would take to himſelf at pleaſure, as is after related. The word ſignifies, not a divine law, according to which the king ſhould govern, but a cuſtom, or a cuſtom he would introduce, as the word is rendered, ch. ii. 13. and is different from that in ch. x. 25.

℣. 10. And Samuel told all the words of the Lord unto them, &c.] How he conſidered this requeſt of theirs as a rejection of him as their king, and that it was acting the ſame ungrateful part they had always done; and ſince they were ſo importunate to have it granted, it ſhould be done; but that he was ordered to lay before them all the inconveniences that would attend it, and the evils that would follow upon it unto them: that aſked of him a king; which is obſerved, not to diſtinguiſh a part of them from the reſt; for this was a united requeſt of the people.

℣. 11. And he ſaid, this will be the manner of the king that ſhall reign over you, &c.] Not in which he ought to proceed, but what he will do; and this not the manner of one king, or of the firſt only, but of all of them, more or leſs; of kings in general, who are commonly inclined to arbitrary power. So Ariſtotle [a], in oppoſition to theocracy, deſcribes a full and abſolute kingdom, as he calls it, when a king does all things according to his will; and obſerves, that he that would have the mind or reaſon preſide, would have God and the laws rule; but he that would have a man to reign, adds alſo a luſt, or one led by his own luſt: ſo it follows, he will take your ſons, and appoint them for himſelf; for his own uſe and ſervice, to wait upon him, to be his pages, or grooms, or guards: for his chariots; to take care of them, and drive them, though not without paying them for it; yet this being but a mean and ſervile employment, and what they ſhould be obliged to, whether they would or no, is obſerved to ſhew the tyranny and bondage to which they would be ſubject, when their ſons otherwiſe might be free men, and poſſeſſed of eſtates and carriages of their own: and to be his horſemen; or rather for his horſes, to take care of them, and go out along with him, and attend his perſon, whether when going to war, or on pleaſure: and ſome ſhall run before his chariots; be his running-footmen, being ſwift of foot, and trained up for that ſervice; ſome are naturally ſwift, as Aſahel was. Pliny [b] ſpeaks of ſome ſwifter than horſes; and of the ſwiftneſs of ſome he elſewhere gives [c] many ſurprizing inſtances. It ſeems as if it was uſual to have 50 ſuch men to run before them, ſee 2 Sam. xv. 1. 1 Kings i. 6.

℣. 12. And he will appoint him captains over thouſands, and captains over fifties, &c.] Which though poſts of honour, yet when they are not matter of choice, and eſpecially being precarious, and depending on the arbitrary will of a prince, are not eligible, and leſs ſo to perſons that chuſe another ſort of life: and will ſet them to ear his ground; to plow it; not the ſame perſons made captains of thouſands and fifties, but others, whom he will employ in tilling and manuring his fields, and oblige them to it: and to reap his harveſt; when it is ripe, and gather it in, and bring it home into his barns and garners: and to make his inſtruments of war; as ſwords, ſpears, bows and arrows, moſt commonly uſed in thoſe times: and inſtruments of chariots; which ſeem to deſign chariots of war, and the iron ſpikes and ſcythes which were joined to them, to cut down the foot-ſoldiers, when driven among them in battle, which are commonly called chariots of iron; ſee Joſh. xvii. 16. Judg. iv. 3.

℣. 13. And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, &c.] Such as deal in ſpices, and mix them, and make them up in various forms very agreeable to the taſte. Men are commonly in our countries and times employed in ſuch arts, but it ſeems this was the buſineſs of women in thoſe times and places. Some verſions [d] render it unguentariæ, makers or ſellers of ointments, and ſuch there were in ſome nations [e], ſuch was Lydia in Juvenal [f]: and to be cooks; to dreſs all ſorts of food, eſpecially what were boiled, as the word ſignifies: and to be bakers; to make and bake bread, which though with us is the work of men, yet in the eaſtern countries was uſually done by women; ſee the note on Lev. xxvi. 26.

℣. 14. And he will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive-yards, &c.] Which includes the whole increaſe of their land, their corn, and wine, and oil; and it is theſe, the fruits of their fields, vineyards, and olive-yards, which are here meant; for otherwiſe kings might not, and did not by their abſolute authority, take away thoſe from their ſubjects; otherwiſe Ahab would have taken away Naboth's vineyard at once, nor would Jezebel have needed to have taken ſuch a method ſhe did, to put Ahab into the poſſeſſion of it: even the beſt of them, and give them to his ſervants; for their ſervice; and which ſome reſtrain to times of war, when neceſſity obliged to uſe ſuch methods.

℣. 15. And he will take the tenth of your ſeed, &c.] When grown up and ripe, as their wheat and barley: and of your vineyards; the tenth of the grapes they ſhould produce: and to give to his officers, and to his ſervants; for the ſupport and maintenance of them; and to pay this, beſides the tithes of the prieſts and Levites, would make it very burdenſome to them; and this was no other than what kings of other nations uſually had, the like to whom they were deſirous of having, and therefore muſt expect that they would inſiſt upon the privileges and revenues that others had. In Babylon, as Ariſtotle [g] relates, there was an ancient law which required the tenth of whatever was imported for the publick revenue, which was revived in the times of Alexander by Antimenes the Rhodian. In Arabia Felix was an iſland abounding with frankincenſe and myrrhe, and various ſpices, the tenth of the fruits of which the king always had, as Diodorus Siculus [h] reports, ſee 1 Maccab. xi. 35.

℣. 16.

[z] משפט המלך jus regis, V. L. Tigurine verſion, Munſter; judicium regis, Vatablus, Druſius. [a] In Politicis, l. 3. c. 16. [b] Nat. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 2. [c] Ibid. c. 20. [d] So V. L. and Tigurine. [e] Vid. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 5. [f] Satyr. 2. ℣. 141. Vid. Turnebi Adverſar. l. 15. c. 17. [g] Oeconomic. l. 2. p. 288. [h] Bibliothec. l. 5. p. 317.

℣. 16. And he will take your man-ſervants, and your maid-ſervants, &c.] Into his own family, for his own uſe and ſervice, if he wants them, or likes them better than what he has: and your goodlieſt young men; that are tall and luſty, comely and beautiful, of a proper ſtature and good aſpect; and ſuch in all countries uſed to be choſen for officers in courts, or attendants there; and ſo the Turks to this day pitch upon young men to attend on great perſonages, who are of a comely form, have admirable features, and are well-ſhaped, ſee the note on Dan. i. 4. and your aſſes, and put them to his work; employ them in plowing his fields, drawing his carriages, or bearing his burdens; and ſo any other cattle that would ſerve the ſame purpoſes as oxen, camels, &c.

℣. 17. He will take the tenth of your ſheep, &c.] As well as of their ſeed and vineyards; and not the tithe of their flocks only, but of their herds alſo, which are here included, as Kimchi obſerves: and ye ſhall be his ſervants; made ſlaves of by him, even as the Canaanitiſh ſervants were, according to Abarbinel; though others interpret it more mildly of their being obliged to pay tribute and taxes, for the ſupport of his government.

℣. 18. And ye ſhall cry out in that day becauſe of your king, &c.] His power and pride, his oppreſſion and tyranny, his heavy exactions, and intolerable yoke, and yet not be able to free themſelves from them; all that they could do would be only to cry out under them as grievouſly diſtreſſed, and not knowing how to help themſelves; and which would be the more aggravated, becauſe they brought all this upon themſelves, as it follows: which ye ſhall have choſen you; for though the choice of a king for them, at a proper time, God had reſerved to himſelf, yet in after-times, as is here ſuggeſted, they would chuſe for themſelves, and did, ſee Hoſ. viii. 4. beſides, to have a king in general was at firſt their own choice, though the particular perſon was by the deſignation of the Lord: and the Lord will not hear you in that day; will not regard them, have no compaſſion on them, ſuffer them to remain under their oppreſſions, and not deliver them out of them; becauſe they rejected him from being their king, and put themſelves out of his protection, into the hands of another, and therefore it was juſt to leave them to their own choice.

℣. 19. Neverthelefs, the people refuſed to obey the voice of Samuel, &c.] The advice he gave not to think of a king, but be content with the government under which they were; but to this they would not hearken, notwithſtanding all the inconveniences that would attend ſuch a change: and they ſaid nay, but we will have a king over us; they would not believe what Samuel ſaid concerning a king, even though they were the words of the Lord he delivered to them; and though they knew Samuel was a prophet, and ſpoke by a ſpirit of prophecy, and none of his words had ever fallen to the ground: but ſuch was their ſtubbornneſs and obſtinacy, and ſo ſet upon having a king, that one they would have, let them ſuffer what hardſhips, or be at what expences they might; at all events, and againſt all remonſtrances, they were determined to have one.

℣. 20. That we alſo may be like all the nations, &c.] Even though they were ſlaves, like them; a king they would have, as they had, ſuch was their ſtupidity. It was their greateſt honour and glory, as well as happineſs, not to be like other nations; as in their religion, laws and liberties, ſo in their form of government; God being their king in ſuch a peculiar ſenſe, as he was not of others, but with this they could not be content: and that our king may judge us; hear their cauſes, adminiſter juſtice and judgment to them, protect their perſons and properties, and rule them according to the civil laws that were given them: and go out before us, and fight our battles; which Samuel their preſent judge did not, and to which perhaps they may have ſome reſpect; but then he gained more for them by his prayers, than a king or general would by his military ſkill or prowels, ſee ch. vii. 10. and it is very remarkable, and what is obſerved by ſome, that their firſt king died in a battle. What made them ſo preſſing and importunate to have a king at this time, and not defer it to another, it is very probable was, that they underſtood that Nahaſh, king of the children of Ammon, was preparing to attack them, and therefore they were deſirous to have a king alſo to go out before them, and meet him, and give him battle, ch. xii. 12.

℣. 21. And Samuel heard all the words of the people, &c.] Patiently, and without interruption; attentively heard them, took notice of them, laid them up in his memory; but gave no anſwer to them, but reported them to the Lord, as in the next clauſe: and he rehearſed them in the ears of the Lord; privately, in a free and familiar manner, with great exactneſs, as they were expreſſed; this he did, not before the people publickly, but in ſecret prayer, ſeeking for direction what he ſhould farther do, or what anſwer he ſhould return to them.

℣. 22. And the Lord ſaid to Samuel, &c.] By an audible voice, or by an impulſe upon his mind: hearken unto their voice, and make them a king; ſince they will have a king, let them have one, and let them know that they ſhall have one: and Samuel ſaid unto the men of Iſrael; the elders of the people that addreſſed him on this occaſion, ℣. 4. go ye every man unto his city; ſignifying, they might return in peace, and be aſſured their requeſt would be granted, and a king would be appointed in a ſhort time, and which they might report to their fellow-citizens; and they might expect to hear from him quickly, as ſoon as he had inſtructions from the Lord, who ſhould be their king, which right he had reſerved to himſelf; and therefore in the mean while they might reſt contented, that they would have one in a little time.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter gives an account of Saul, the perſon the Lord had appointed to be king of Iſrael; it relates his deſcent, and deſcribes his perſon, ℣. 1, 2. and how ſeeking his father's aſſes, which were loſt, he providentially came to the place where Samuel dwelt, ℣. 3—5. and being adviſed by his ſervant, and approving of his advice, he concluded to go to him, and enquire the way he ſhould go, ℣. 6—10. and being directed by ſome young maidens, they found him preſently in the ſtreet going to a feaſt, ℣. 11—14. and Samuel having ſome previous notice from the Lord of ſuch a perſon's coming to him that day, when he met him invited him to dine with him, and obliged him to ſtay with him that day, ℣. 15—19. ſatisfied him about his aſſes, and gave him a hint of the grandeur he was to be raiſed to, to which Saul made a modeſt reply, ℣. 20, 21. and Samuel treated him at the feaſt in a very reſpectable manner, ℣. 22, 23, 24. and privately communed with him of things preparatory to what he was about to make known unto him, ℣. 25—27.

℣. 1. Now there was a man of Benjamin, &c.] Of the tribe of Benjamin, which had its name from the youngeſt ſon of Jacob, and one of this tribe was the firſt king of Iſrael: whoſe name was Kiſh; whom the apoſtle calls Cis, Acts xiii. 21. and Joſephus [i], Ciſes; his name, according to Hillerus [k], ſignifies enſnared; for what reaſon it was given him, is not certain: the ſon of Abiel; in 1 Chron. viii. 33. and ix. 39. he is called Ner that begat Kiſh; and in this book, ch. xiv. 50, 51. Ner and Kiſh are repreſented as brethren, the ſons of Abiel: to reconcile this, it may be obſerved, that Ner being the elder brother, on the death of his father Abiel, had the care and bringing up of his younger brother Kiſh; and therefore when he is ſaid to beget him, the meaning is, not that he was the parent of him, but the bringer up of him; or rather, as Kimchi thinks, Abiel had two ſons, one of which was Ner; and that he had two ſons, one that was called after his own name Ner, who was the father of Abner; and the other Kiſh, the father of Saul: the ſon of Zeror, the ſon of Bechorath, the ſon of Aphiah, a Benjamite; of theſe perſons we no where elſe read: a mighty man of power; not a man of riches, or of authority, neither a wealthy man, nor a magiſtrate, for his family was mean and contemptible, ℣. 21. and ch. x. 27. but a man of great ſtrength, an able-bodied man, and of great natural fortitude, and courage of mind.

℣. 2. And he had a ſon whoſe name was Saul, &c.] Of this name was the great apoſtle of the Gentiles before his converſion, and was of the ſame tribe alſo, but very different in ſtature; he was a little man, this a large tall man, like his father perhaps; a choice young man, and a goodly; ch. ii. of a goodly aſpect, a comely man, tall and well-ſhaped, in the prime of his age, a very agreeable perſon, one among a thouſand: and there was not among the children of Iſrael a goodlier perſon than he; meaning not for the endowments of his mind, or his moral character and behaviour. There might be as good, or better men than he, on ſuch accounts, but for his outward appearance, his bodily ſhape, and the dignity of his perſon: from his ſhoulders and upwards he was higher than any of the people; this deſcription of him is enlarged upon and explained, to ſhew that he was juſt ſuch a perſon the people was deſirous of having king over them, ſuch an one as the nations about them had; and it was uſual with the eaſtern people, and ſo with the Greeks and Romans, to chuſe perſons to the higheſt offices of magiſtracy, that made a perſonable appearance ſuperior to others, and is what they often take notice of, as a recommendation of them as princes. Herodotus [l] reports of the Ethiopians, that they judged the largeſt of the people, and him who had ſtrength according to his bigneſs, moſt worthy to be king. And the ſame writer obſerves [m], that among the many thouſands of men of the army of Xerxes, there was not one, who for comelineſs and largeneſs was ſo worthy of the empire, as Xerxes himſelf; ſo Ulyſſes, becauſe of his tallneſs, was the more acceptable to the people of Corfu [n]; ſo Alexander's captains, 'tis ſaid [o], might be thought to be kings for their beautiful form, tallneſs of body, and greatneſs of ſtrength and wiſdom. Julius Cæſar is ſaid to be of high ſtature; and ſo Domitian [p]; Virgil [q] repreſents Turnus, as in body more excellent than others, and by the entire head above them; and Anchiſes, as walking ſtatelier and higher than the reſt [r]; among the many encomiums Pliny [s] gives of Trajan, as to his outward form and appearance; this is one, proceritas corporis, tallneſs of body, being higher than others; the Gentiles had a notion, that ſuch men came nearer to the deities, and looked more like them; ſo Diana is deſcribed as taller than any of the nymphs and goddeſſes [t]. Solomon, according to Joſephus [u], choſe ſuch young men to ride horſes, and attend his perſon, when he himſelf rode, who were conſpicuous for their height, and greatly above others.

℣. 3. And the aſſes of Kiſh, Saul's father, were loſt, &c.] Had got out of the ſtables or fields, in which they were kept, and ſtrayed from thence: and Kiſh ſaid to Saul his ſon, take now one of the ſervants with thee, and ariſe, go ſeek the aſſes; he choſe not to ſend his ſervants only, who might not be ſo careful and diligent in ſearching for them, but his ſon, and not him alone, but a ſervant with him to wait upon him, and aſſiſt him. And it was quite agreeable to the ſimplicity of thoſe times, for perſons of equal or greater ſubſtance to be employed in ſuch an affair; aſſes made a conſiderable part of the wealth and riches of men, were rode upon by perſons of quality, and were fed and taken care of by the ſons of dukes and princes; ſee Job i. 3. Judg. v. 10. Gen. xxxvi. 24. The Jews [w] have a tradition, that this ſervant was Doeg the Edomite.

℣. 4. And they paſſed through mount Ephraim, &c.] The mountainous part of that tribe, which lay contiguous to the tribe of Benjamin, where it might

[i] Antiq. l. 6. c. 4 §. 1.
[k] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 405.
[l] Thalia, ſive, l. 3. c. 20.
[m] Polymnia, ſive, l. 7. c 187.
[n] Homer. Odyſſ. 8. ℣. 20, 21.
[o] Juſtin. e Trogo, l. 13. c. 1.
[p] Sueton. Vit. Cæſar. c. 45. Domitian. c. 18.
[q] Æneid. l. 7. ℣. 783. 784. & 9. ℣. 29.
[r] Ib. l. 8. ℣. 162.
[s] Panegyr. c. 4, 22.
[t] Tamen altior illis ipſa Dea eſt. Ovid. Metam. l. 3. fab. 2. ℣. 180, 181.
[u] Antiq. l. 8. c. 7. § 3.
[w] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in Paralip. fol. 83. A.

might be ſuppoſed the aſſes had ſtrayed to: and paſſed through the land of Shaliſha; a tract in the tribe of Benjamin, ſo called from ſome illuſtrious perſon, prince and duke of it; in it very probably was the place called Baal-ſhaliſha, 2 Kings iv. 42. and which perhaps is the ſame Jerom calls [x] Beth ſhaliſha, and ſays, there was a village of this name in the borders of Dioſpolis, almoſt 15 miles diſtance from it to the north, in the Tamnitic country; tho' Bunting [y] ſays, it was ſituated in mount Ephraim, eight miles from Jeruſalem to the north-weſt: but they found them not; the aſſes, neither in mount Ephraim, nor in the land of Shaliſha: then they paſſed through the land of Shalim; which ſome take to be the ſame with Salim, where John was baptizing, John iii. 23. but Jerom ſays [z], it was a village on the borders of Eleutheropolis, to the weſt, ſeven miles diſtant from it: and there they were not; the aſſes could not be found there: and he paſſed through the land of the Benjamites; or rather of Jemini, which was in Benjamin, ſo called from a famous man of that name; for it cannot be thought they ſhould paſs through the whole tribe of Benjamin in one day. And, according to Bunting [a], from Gibeah, the native place of Saul, through the mountain of Ephraim, and the land of Shaliſha, to the borders of Shalim, were 16 miles; and from thence to Jemini, in the tribe of Benjamin, 16 more: but they found them not; the aſſes.

ver. 5. And when they were come to the land of Zuph, &c.] In which was Ramathaim zophim, the native place of Samuel, ch. i. 1. and ſo the Targum here, "the land in which was the prophet:" Saul ſaid to the ſervant that was with him, come, and let us return; home, deſpairing of finding the aſſes after ſo long a ſearch in divers places: leſt my father leave caring for the aſſes, and take thought for us; fearing ſome evil ſhould have befallen his ſon and his ſervant, in compariſon of whom, and eſpecially his ſon, the aſſes would be of no account, and ſo give himſelf no concern for them, but be in great care and uneaſineſs for his ſon and ſervant; wherefore Saul thought it moſt adviſeable to return home as ſoon as poſſible, leſt his father ſhould be over-whelmed with grief and trouble.

ver. 6. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, the ſervant of Saul: behold now, there is in this city a man of God; a prophet of the Lord, as the Targum; ſuch were called men of God, becauſe not only partakers of the grace of God, but of extraordinary gifts, which qualified them for the office of prophets. The city near to which they now were was Ramah, the place where Samuel lived, and he is the man of God here meant: and he is an honourable man; of great eſteem among men for his wiſdom and knowledge, integrity and faithfulneſs, and particularly for his gift of prophecy, being a true prophet of the Lord; ſo the Targum, "and he is a man that propheſies truth," and that made him honourable, and gave him great credit: all that he ſaith cometh ſurely to paſs; as his prophecies concerning Eli's family, and other things, which were well known to have had their accompliſhment, and this had gained him univerſal eſteem, ſee ch. iii. 19. now let us go thither; being very near it, within ſight of it, inſomuch that the ſervant could point at it, and ſay this city, as in the preceding part of the verſe: peradventure he can ſhew us our way, that we ſhould go; to find the aſſes; he was not certain he could or would, but thought it poſſible and probable he might.

ver. 7. Then Saul ſaid to his ſervant, but behold, if we go, &c.] The Targum is, "if he receives money," which it ſeems Saul was not clear in; ſome ſort of perſons that ſet up for prophets, and a ſort of diviners and fortune-tellers did; but he could not tell whether ſo eminent and honourable a perſon as Samuel was did; it is much he was not better known by him, who had been ſo many years a judge in Iſrael: what ſhall we bring the man? it being uſual when perſons addreſſed great men for a favour, to carry a preſent with them; or a man of God, a prophet of the Lord, to enquire of the Lord by him concerning any thing, ſee 1 Kings xiv. 2, 3. 2 Kings iv. 42. for the bread is ſpent in our veſſels; the food they brought with them in their bags or ſcrips for their journey, this was all exhauſted; not that he meant by it, that if they had had any quantity, they might preſent it to the man of God, though yet ſometimes ſuch things were done, as the inſtances before referred to ſhew; but that ſince their ſtock of bread was gone, what money they had, if they had any, muſt be ſpent in recruiting themſelves, and therefore could have none to ſpare to give to the man: and there is not a preſent to bring to the man of God; neither bread nor money, without which he ſeems to intimate it would be to no purpoſe to go to him: what have we? Saul knew he had none, he had ſpent what he brought out with him for the journey, and he put this queſtion to try what his ſervant had; unleſs it can be ſuppoſed it was the cuſtom now, as afterwards among the Romans [b], for ſervants to carry the purſe, and as it was with the Jews in Chriſt's time, John xii. 6. though this may have reſpect not to a price of divination, but to the common cuſtom in eaſtern countries, and which continues to this day with the Turks, who reckon it uncivil to viſit any perſon, whether in authority, or an inferior perſon without a preſent; and even the latter are ſeldom viſited without preſenting a flower, or an orange, and ſome token of reſpect to the perſon viſited [c].

ver. 8. And the ſervant anſwered Saul again, and ſaid, &c.] As he had anſwered him before, when Saul propoſed to return home, by telling him there was an honourable man of God in the city near at hand, that might poſſibly be able to direct them which way they ſhould go to find the aſſes; ſo he anſwers him again with reſpect to the preſent it was proper to carry with them, and what he had in his hands to make: behold, I have here at hand the fourth part of a ſhekel of ſilver; a zuze of ſilver, as the Targum, four of which made a ſhekel, about ſeven pence half-penny of our money, and ſcarce ſo much: that will I give to the man of God to tell us our way; that they ſhould go to find the aſſes; which he would give him very freely for that purpoſe: both Saul and his ſervants muſt entertain a mean opinion of prophets, and men of God, and eſpecially of ſo great a man as Samuel, that he ſhould be employed at any time in directing perſons in ſuch caſes, and take money for ſo doing, and ſo ſmall a gratuity as this before mentioned; though it ſeems as if, at ſome times, ſomething of this kind was done by prophets, and men of God, which might be permitted to keep the people from going to diviners and ſoothſayers.

ver. 9.

[x] De locis Heb. fol. 89. K.
[y] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 129.
[z] De locis Heb. fol. 94. L.
[a] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 126.
[b] A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 20. c. 1.
[c] Maundrel's Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 26, 27.

℣. 9. (Before time in Iſrael, when a man went to enquire of God, &c.] To aſk doctrine of him, as the Targum, to be taught by him, to have his mind and will in any affair of moment and importance; which was uſually done by app'ying to ſome man of God, eminent for grace and piety, and a ſpirit of prophecy: thus he ſpake, come, and let us go to the ſeer; a man uſed to ſay to his friend, when he wanted ſome inſtruction or direction, let us go together to ſuch an one, the ſeer, and aſk counſel of him what is proper to be done in ſuch an affair: for he that is now called a prophet, was before called a ſeer; for though theſe names are uſed promiſcuouſly of the ſame perſons, both before and after this time; yet now the more common appellation which obtained was that of a prophet; cuſtom, and the uſe of language varied at different times, though the ſame was meant by the one and the other; ſuch men were called ſeers, becauſe of the viſion of prophecy, becauſe they ſaw or foreſaw things to come; and they were called prophets, becauſe they foretold what they ſaw, or delivered out their predictions by word of mouth. This verſe is put in a parentheſis, and is commonly ſuppoſed to be the words of the writer of this book: hence ſome draw an argument againſt Samuel being the writer of it, as Abarbinel does, who concludes from hence, that it was written by Jeremiah, or ſome other perſon long after Samuel, or that this verſe was added by Ezra; but as this book might be written by Samuel in the latter part of his life, he might with propriety obſerve this, that in his younger time, and quite down to the anointing of Saul king, both when there was no open viſion, and afterwards when there was ſcarce any that had it but himſelf, he was uſed to be called the ſeer; but in his latter days, when there were many that had the viſion of prophecy, and there were ſchools ſet up, it was more common to call them prophets; tho' perhaps theſe are the words of Saul's ſervant, ſpoken to encourage Saul to go to the man of God, and enquire of him, ſince in former times, as he could remember, being perhaps an old ſervant, or he had heard his parents ſo ſay, that ſuch men uſed to be called ſeers, becauſe they ſaw what others did not, and declared and made others to ſee what they did; and therefore there was a probability that this man of God, who was a ſeer, might ſhew them the way they ſhould go to find the aſſes.

℣. 10. Then ſaid Saul to his ſervant, well ſaid, &c.] Or good is thy word[d], thou haſt well ſpoken; it is a good propoſal thou haſt made, and thou art very generous to give all thou haſt to the man; and very promiſing it is, that ſince he is a ſeer he may inform us where the aſſes are, or which way we muſt take to find them. Things look feaſable enough: come, let us go; to the city, and to the man of God there, and hear what he will ſay to us, and what information he will give us: ſo they went unto the city where the man of God was; to Ramah, where Samuel dwelt.

℣. 11. And as they went up the hill to the city, &c.] For the city was built upon an hill, from whence it had the name of Ramah, which ſignifies high and lifted up: they found young maidens going out to draw water; going out of the city, to a fountain which was at the bottom of the hill; and this was the uſual buſineſs of maidens in thoſe countries to fetch water for the ſervice of the family, ſee Gen. xxiv. 11, 15, 16. and the notes there. R Akiba[e] makes this obſervation, that whenever a man meets maidens coming out of a city before he goes into it, it is a token of proſperity to him; and inſtances in the caſes of Abraham's ſervant, of Jacob, and of Moſes, and here of Saul, who was informed of a kingdom, and anointed for it, ſee Gen. xxiv. 14, 21. and xxix. 10, 11. Exod. ii. 16. and ſaid unto them, is the ſeer here? meaning, is he in the city? or is he at home? or is he in the country?

℣. 12. And they anſwered them, and ſaid, he is, &c.] That is, he is in the city, at home, and to be ſpoken with: behold, he is before you; his houſe is ſtraight before you as you go along, you can't miſs of it. Some Jewiſh writers ſay[f], they gave a token to know it by, that there was a cloud at the door, and when they ſaw that, they might know it was the ſeer's houſe: haſte now, for he came to-day to the city; from the ſuburbs to it, or from his country-houſe, or from the other Ramah, for there were two of them, one over-againſt the other, ſee ch. i. 1. for that he was juſt now come off a circuit, is not ſo probable, ſince he was now old, and paſt riding his circuits; and indeed the meaning may be no more than as it may be rendered, to-day he comes into the city[g]; that is, he comes out of his own houſe into the city, and was then juſt coming out; ſo that if they made haſte, they might meet him in the ſtreet before he got to the place of ſacrifice and feaſting: for there is a ſacrifice of the people to-day in the high place; whether it was the new moon, or ſome feſtival they obſerved, though the tabernacle was not there, is not certain; at which, beſides the offerings required, free-will-offerings and peace-offerings were brought by the people, on part of which they feaſted with their friends; and very probably, as Samuel was acquainted by the Lord, that he who was to be king of Iſrael would be with him that day, he might add to the ſacrifices of the people, to make the entertainment the more grand and liberal; ſince he had a principal concern in ordering the gueſts, and dividing the portions, as well as bleſſing the food, which indeed he might take upon him, as being judge, prieſt and prophet: this was an high place where this ſacrifice or feaſt was; for Shiloh being deſtroyed, and the tabernacle removed elſewhere, and that being in one place, and the ark in another, and they not together, no diſtinction of places was made, none being yet choſen, all were fit; and particularly high places, which were always reckoned the moſt proper for divine ſervice and ſacrifice.

℣. 13. As ſoon as ye come into the city, ye ſhall ſtraightway find him, &c.] By which it ſeems that the houſe of Samuel was at that end of it, at which they entered; and with which agrees what is obſerved in the preceding verſe, that he was before them, his houſe was in ſight of them: before he go up to the high place to eat; intimating they would, if they made haſte, come up to him before he got thither to ſit down and eat with the people; for if they did not, they would not be able to ſee him, and ſpeak with him for ſome time, if on that day: for the people will not eat until he come; partly out of affection and veneration for him, being their chief magimagiſtrate, as well as ſeer or prophet, and partly for the reaſon following: becauſe he doth bleſs the ſacrifice; aſk a bleſſing upon it, upon the meat of the peace-offerings before it was eaten; for as this was uſually done at every common meal, then much more at ſuch a ſolemn feſtival as this. Jarchi gives us the form of bleſſing uſed on ſuch an occaſion, "bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, who hath ſanctified us by his commandments, and hath commanded us to eat the ſacrifice:" and afterwards they eat that be bidden; for when a man offered his peace-offerings, he not only had his family with him, but invited his friends, and the poor, and the fatherleſs, the ſtrangers, and the Levites, to partake with him, ſee Deut. xii. 18. and xiv. 29. and xvi. 11. the number of the gueſts at this time, ſee in ℣. 22. Now therefore get ye up; aſcend the hill as faſt as ye can: for about this time ye ſhall find him; that is, by the time they could get up the hill into the city, they would find him coming out of his houſe to go to the ſacrifice: or as this day [h]; ſo ſure as the day is, ſo ſure ſhall ye find him.

[d] טוב דברך bonum verbum tuum, Pagninus, Montanus. Midraſh Schemuel & Peſikta apud Abarbinel in loc.

[e] In Pirke Eliezer, c. 36. fol. 39. 1. 2.

[f] בא venit, Pagninus, Montanus.

℣. 14. And they went up into the city, &c.] Saul and his ſervant went up the hill to the city of Ramah: and when they were come into the city; were within it, within the walls of it: behold, Samuel came out againſt them; came out of a door of his houſe upon them, juſt as they came up: or to meet them [i]; his way to the high place lay where they were coming; unleſs it can be thought he went out purpoſely to meet them, having, as in the following verſe, an intimation, that about that time one from the tribe of Benjamin, who ſhould be king, would come to him, and ſo made this his way, knowing that one coming from that tribe muſt come that way; but it ſeems moſt likely that this was his readieſt way: for to go up to the high place; or place of ſitting down, or feaſting, as the Targum, and ſo on ℣. 12. ſee the note there.

℣. 15. Now the Lord had told Samuel in his ear, &c.] In a private manner, whiſpering in his ear, telling him in a free, familiar, friendly way, as a ſecret: a day before Saul came; that he might prepare for the entertainment of him, and not be ſurprized at his coming, as well as hereby be aſſured he was the perſon deſigned to be king of Iſrael, when he ſhould come: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 16. To-morrow about this time I will ſend thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, &c.] Who without any thought or deſign of his own, but merely directed by the providence of God, ſhould come to him, not expecting a kingdom; at moſt only to hear of his father's aſſes, and which way he ſhould take to find them; miſſing the finding of which would and did bring him thither: and thou ſhalt anoint him to be captain over my people Iſrael; the leader, ruler and governor of them; to which high office he was to be appointed by pouring oil upon him, and was the firſt king on whom this ceremony was performed, and from whence he was called the Lord's anointed: that he may ſave my people out of the hands of the Philiſtines; who ſince Samuel was grown old, made incroachments upon them, built garriſons on their borders, and made, it is very probable, incurſions upon them, and ravages and oppreſſions of them: for I have looked upon my people; with an eye of pity and compaſſion: becauſe their cry is come unto me; by reaſon of the oppreſſions of the Philiſtines, and the war they were threatened with by the Ammonites; though Abarbinel thinks this refers to their importunate cry, ſupplication and requeſt to have a king ſet over them.

℣. 17. And when Samuel ſaw Saul, &c.] he could not but take notice of him for his height, and which might give him a ſuſpicion he was the man the Lord had ſpoken of to him; and the rather, becauſe this was the exact time in which he was to be ſent to him, and therefore he fixed his eyes upon him: and that he might be aſſured it was he, and be left at no uncertainty about it, the Lord ſaid unto him; by a ſtill ſmall voice, or by an impulſe upon his mind: behold, the man whom I ſpake to thee of; yeſterday, this is he: this ſame ſhall reign over my people; be their king, as they have deſired: or ſhall reſtrain [k] them, keep them in due bounds, in the diſcharge of their duty to God and man; and keep them from doing that which is evil, or walking in evil ways, which is the buſineſs of a good king; or who ſhall reſtrain them from having their own will, but ſhall rule over them in an abſolute manner, according to his own arbitrary will and pleaſure.

℣. 18. Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, &c.] Either at the door of his own houſe, juſt as he was coming out of it, or within the gate of the city; as Saul entered that, Samuel came to it, in order to go through it to the high place, which it is probable was without the city; wherefore it is very properly ſaid, that Samuel came out to meet them, ℣. 14. and ſaid, tell me, I pray thee, where the ſeer's houſe is; one knows not which to wonder at moſt, the ſimplicity and humility of Samuel to be in ſo plain an habit, unattended by ſervants, and yet going to a publick feſtival, ſo that he ſeemed to be no other than a common man to be enquired of, whereabout his houſe was; or the ignorance of Saul, who had lived ſo long in the world, and ſo near Samuel, and yet had never ſeen, and knew not the chief magiſtrate in the nation, ſo famous both for his civil and religious character.

℣. 19. And Samuel anſwered Saul, and ſaid, I am the ſeer, &c.] For he ſuppoſed by enquiring for his houſe, that his buſineſs was with him; wherefore this he ſaid, not as boaſting of his character and office, or in the pride and vanity of his mind, but merely for information-ſake: go up before me into the high place; inſtead of returning home with him, he invited him to go to the place of feaſting, as the Targum, whither he was going to partake of the entertainment there; and he bids him go before him, either becauſe he was an old man, and could not go his pace, or he had buſineſs to do by the way, or this was in honour to Saul, whom he knew was to be king of Iſrael: for ye ſhall eat with me to-day; he and his ſervant, at the public feaſt; he inſiſted upon his dining, or it may be rather ſupping with him: and to-morrow I will let thee go; for it being in the evening when this feaſt was, he could not depart that night, but muſt ſtay till morning, and then he promiſed to diſmiſs him: and will tell thee all that is in thine heart; anſwer all queſtions he had in his mind to aſk him, for which he came into the city, and enquired for his houſe. The Jews [l] have a tradition, that it was in the heart of Saul that he ſhould be a king, having in a viſion ſeen himſelf placed on the top of a palm-palm-tree, which was a ſign of royalty, and this Samuel told him.

[h] כהיום invenietis eum tam certo quam certum eſt hunc diem eſſe, Druſius; ſo Jarchi. [i] לקראתם in occurſum eorum, Pagninus, Montanus; eis obviam, V. L. Tigurine verſion. [k] יעצר cohibebit, Montanus; continebit, Tigurine verſion; retinebit, Druſius; i. e. coercebit, Piſcator. [l] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 75. G.

℣. 20. And as for thine aſſes that were loſt three days ago, &c.] Which, according to Kimchi, is to be underſtood not of the time from whence they were loſt, but to be reckoned from the time that Saul had been ſeeking of them; ſo the Targum, "as to the buſineſs of the aſſes, which are loſt to thee, and thou art come to ſeek them to-day, theſe three days:" though it is probable enough that the ſame day they were loſt, Saul ſet out to ſeek them. Now Samuel telling him of the aſſes that were loſt, and of the time of their being loſt, or of his ſeeking them, ſo exactly, before ever he ſaid a word to him about them, muſt at once convince him that he was a true prophet, and which muſt prepare him to give credit to all that he ſhould hereafter ſay to him: ſet not thy mind on them, for they are found; of the truth of which he could not doubt, after he had ſaid the above words; and which he ſaid to make his mind eaſy, that he might the more chearfully attend the feaſt, and be the more willing to ſtay all night: and on whom is all the deſire of Iſrael? which was to have a king; in this they were unanimous, and who ſo fit and proper as Saul it is intimated, whom Samuel knew God had choſen and appointed to be king over them? is it not on thee, and on all thy father's houſe? not that the Iſraelites had their eye on Saul, and their deſire after him to be their king, though he was ſuch an one as they wiſhed for; but that as this deſire of theirs was granted, it would iſſue and terminate in him and his family; he ſhould be advanced to the throne, which would be attended with the promotion of his father's houſe, as Abner particularly, who was his uncle's ſon, and was made the general of the army.

℣. 21. And Saul anſwered and ſaid, am not I a Benjamite, &c.] Or the ſon of Jemini, the name of one of his anceſtors, ſee ℣. 1. or rather, as the Targum, a ſon of the tribe of Benjamin: of the ſmalleſt of the tribes of Iſrael? having been greatly reduced, even to the number of 600 men, by the fatal war between that tribe and the reſt, on account of the Levite's concubine, and is called little Benjamin, Pſ. lxviii. 27. and my family the leaſt of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? the ſmalleſt in number, had the leaſt ſhare of authority in the tribe, and of land and cattle, wealth and ſubſtance: wherefore then ſpeakeſt thou ſo to me? Saul preſently underſtood Samuel's meaning, that he ſhould be choſen king of Iſrael, the affair of a king being at this time in every one's mind and mouth; but could not believe that one of ſo ſmall a tribe, and which ſprung from the youngeſt ſon of Jacob, and of ſo mean a family, would be raiſed to ſuch dignity, but that a perſon of great figure and character would be pitched upon; and therefore he took Samuel to be in joke, as Joſephus[m] ſays, and not in earneſt.

℣. 22. And Samuel took Saul, and his ſervant, and brought them into the parlour, &c.] The dining-room of the houſe, which belonged to the high place: and made them ſit in the chiefeſt place among them that were bidden; and who very probably were the principal perſons in the city; and yet Saul was placed at the head of them by Samuel, to convince him that what he had ſaid to him was in earneſt, and to do him honour before all the people; and for the ſake of him, and to ſhew his reſpect to him, he placed his ſervant, his miniſter, alſo in the chief place with him; what was reckoned the higheſt and moſt honourable places at table, ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 6. The gueſts were placed by the maſter of the feaſt according to their rank; and the dignity of the perſon, as Jarchi obſerves, was known by his manners and place of ſitting: which were about 30 perſons; more or leſs; Joſephus[n] ſays 70, diſagreeing with the text, the Targum, Syriac and Arabic verſion, but agreeing with the Septuagint.

℣. 23. And Samuel ſaid unto the cook, &c.] That dreſſed and prepared the food for the entertainment of the gueſts: bring the portion which I gave thee; to dreſs; for part of the proviſions of the feaſt was Samuel's, and the other part the peoples that brought the peace-offerings: of which I ſaid unto thee, ſet it by thee; don't bring it in with the reſt, but keep it in the cook-room till called for.

℣. 24. And the cook took up the ſhoulder, and that which was upon it, &c.] Meaning either, as ſome think, ſome ſauce that was poured on it, or garniſh about it; or the thigh, as the Targum, and ſo Jarchi, Kimchi, and others; or rather the breaſt, as a more ancient Jew[o]; ſince this joined to the ſhoulder before ſeparated, and in ſacrifices went along with it; though moſt think this was the left-ſhoulder and breaſt, becauſe the right-ſhoulder and breaſt of the peace-offerings were given to the prieſt, to be eaten by him and his ſons, Lev. vii. 34. but in thoſe unſettled times, with reſpect to ſacrifices, many things were diſpenſed with; and Samuel, though a Levite, might officiate as a prieſt, and ſo the right-ſhoulder and breaſt belonged to him as ſuch; and this beſt accounts for his having the diſpoſal of it; and upon this extraordinary occaſion Saul, though not the ſon of a prieſt, might be admitted to eat of it, it being the choiceſt part, and fit to be ſet before one deſigned to be king; and to ſhew that he was to live in friendſhip with the prieſts of the Lord, and to take care of and protect the miniſterial function: and ſet it before Saul; by the direction of Samuel no doubt, as a token of honour and reſpect unto him; it being uſual in other countries to commend the beſt diſhes, or beſt pieces of fleſh to the more excellent and worthy perſons at table[p]; and this was, as Joſephus[q] calls it, a royal portion: the arm or ſhoulder, eſpecially the right-arm, being a ſymbol of ſtrength, may denote that ſtrength which was neceſſary for him to bear the burden of government, to protect his people, and fight in defence of them; and the breaſt being the ſeat of wiſdom and prudence, of affection and love, may ſignify how neceſſary ſuch qualities were for kingly government, to know how to go in and out before the people, and be heartily concerned for their good: and Samuel ſaid, behold, that which is left; not by the gueſts, and what they could not eat; for till Samuel came they did not begin to eat; and as for this part, it was but juſt brought in, and was never ſet before the gueſts, but it was left by Samuel in the hands of the cook, and reſerved for the uſe of Saul: ſet it before thee, and eat; it was already ſet before him, but he would have him keep it by him, and eat of it, and make his meal of it, it being the beſt diſh at the table: for unto this time hath it been kept for thee; by which he gave him to underſtand, that he knew of his coming beforehand,

[m] Antiq. l. 6. c. 4. §. 1.
[n] Ibid.
[o] R. Eliezer in T. Bab. Avodah Zarah, fol. 25. 1.
[p] Vid. Diodor. Sicul. l. 5. p. 306.
[q] Ut ſupra.

hand, and therefore had made this proviſion for him; and which might ſerve to perſuade him of the truth and certainty of what he had hinted to him: ſince I ſaid I have invited the people; not the thirty perſons before-mentioned, for it does not appear that they were invited by Samuel, but rather by thoſe who brought the peace-offerings, who had a right to invite any of their friends they thought fit; but by the people are meant Saul and his ſervant; for in the eaſtern languages two or three perſons, and even one, are called a people; and this Samuel had ſaid to his cook, when he bid him ſet by the ſhoulder, and what was on it, becauſe he had invited ſome, for whom he had deſigned it: ſo Saul did eat with Samuel that day; they dined together.

℣. 25. And when they came down from the high place into the city, &c.] After the feaſt was ended; and though Ramah itſelf was ſituated on an eminence, yet it ſeems this high place was higher than that, being without the city upon an hill, and therefore they are ſaid to come down from the one to the other; or they came down from the high place, and then aſcended the hill to the city: Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the houſe; of Samuel's houſe; when they were come thither, Samuel took Saul up to the roof of his houſe, which was flat, as the roofs of houſes in this country were; ſee Deut. xxii. 8. on which they could walk to and fro and converſe together; hence you read of preaching and praying on houſe-tops, Matt. x. 27. Acts x. 9. what they communed about is not ſaid, but may be gueſſed at, that it was about Saul's being made king; of the certainty of it, by divine deſignation; of the manner of executing that office wiſely and juſtly; about the objections Saul had made of the ſmallneſs of his tribe and family; and of Samuel's willingneſs to reſign the government to him, with other things of the like kind.

℣. 26. And they aroſe early, &c.] Neither of them being able to ſleep, as Abarbinel ſuppoſes; not Samuel for thinking what he was to do the next morning, anoint Saul king over Iſrael; nor Saul for what Samuel had hinted to him about the deſire of all Iſrael being upon him, and for the honour done him at the feaſt, and becauſe of the converſation they had together afterwards: and it came to paſs about the ſpring of the day; or the aſcents of the morning [x], when day was about to break, before the ſun was up: that Samuel called Saul to the top of the houſe; where they had converſed together the evening before: ſaying, up, that I may ſend thee away; meaning not riſe up from his bed, for he was riſen; but that he would prepare to ſet out on his journey, that Samuel might take his leave of him for the preſent, when he had accompanied him ſome part of his way, as he intended; and he was the more urgent upon him, becauſe there was ſomething to be done before people were ſtirring: and Saul aroſe, and went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad; out of Samuel's houſe, without doors, into the ſtreet.

℣. 27. And as they were going down to the end of the city, &c.] That end of it that led the way to the place where Saul was going. As this city was built on an hill, going to the end of it was a declivity, a deſcent: Samuel ſaid to Saul, bid the ſervant paſs on before us; being another man's ſervant, he did not chuſe of himſelf to bid him go on, but deſired his maſter to order him to go before them, that he might not hear what Samuel had to ſay to Saul, or ſee what he did unto him; for as the choice of Saul to be king was to be declared by lot, as coming from the Lord, all thoſe precautions were taken of riſing early, and going abroad, and ſending the ſervant before them, that it might not be thought that Samuel did this of himſelf: and he paſſed on; his maſter bidding him: but ſtand thou ſtill a while; that he might hear the better, and more attentively than in walking; ſuch a poſture was moſt fitting alſo for what was to be done, anointing him with oil: that I may ſhew thee the word of God; tell him more of the mind of God concerning his being king, and declare more fully the word, will and decree of God about that matter, by an action which would put it out of all doubt, that he was the man God deſigned to be king, as in the following chapter.

CHAP. X.

IN this chapter we read of Saul's being anointed king by Samuel, ℣. 1. and of certain ſigns given as confirming the ſame, which ſhould come to paſs, and did, before Saul got to his father's houſe, ℣. 2—13. of his arrival at his father's houſe, and of what paſſed between him and his uncle there, ℣. 14—16. of Samuel's calling all Iſrael together at Mizpeh, and of the election of Saul by lot to be king, and of his being declared ſuch, ℣. 17—25. and of his return to his city, being reſpected by ſome, and deſpiſed by others, ℣. 26, 27.

℣. 1. Then Samuel took a vial of oil, &c.] Out of his pocket very probably, which he brought along with him on purpoſe for the uſe he made of it: this, as the Jews [y] ſay, was not the anointing oil that was in the tabernacle, which was at another and diſtant place, and with which only the kings of the houſe of David were anointed; but common oil, or, as they ſay, oil of balſam; and this was not an horn but a vial, which held a ſmall quantity, and was brittle; and they obſerve, that Saul and Jehu who were anointed with a vial, their reigns were ſhort, whereas David and Solomon who were anointed with a horn, their reigns were long; and as oil is a ſymbol of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, it may denote a ſmaller meaſure conferred on Saul than on David and Solomon: and kiſſed him; congratulating him on the dignity he was raiſed to, and in reverence and reſpect to him, becauſe of the high office he was arrived to; and as a token of ſubjection and homage, and to teſtify his well-pleaſedneſs in his being king, and that he readily, willingly, and with pleaſure reſigned the government to him: and ſaid, is it not becauſe the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance? the people of Iſrael ſo called, Deut. xxxii. 9. and which is obſerved here to ſhew, that though Saul was anointed king over them, they were the Lord's poſſeſſion ſtill, and he was accountable able to him for his government and uſage of them, over whom he was to be a captain, leader and commander, to go before them, and fight their battles for them, of which his being anointed with oil was a token; and therefore it is ſaid, is it not, or doſt thou not ſee by this? or knoweſt thou not, as R. Iſaiah ſupplies it, that this is of the Lord? for it was the Lord that anointed him, or Samuel by his orders; and ſuch queſtions as theſe, as Kimchi obſerves, are for the greater confirmation of what is ſpoken; and if Saul had any doubt upon his mind, as perhaps he might, becauſe of his meanneſs, and the high honour deſigned hereby, not only this queſtion is put, but three following ſigns are given him, whereby he might be aſſured of the truth of it.

[x] בעלות השחר circa aſcendere auroram, Montanus; quum aſcenderet aurora, Junius & Tremellius, Bab. Horayot, fol. 11. 2. & 12. 1.

[y] T.

℣. 2. When thou art departed from me to-day, &c.] Not as ſoon as he was departed, for he had ſome few miles to go from Ramah to Rachel's grave near Bethlehem: thou ſhalt find two men by Rachel's ſepulchre, in the border of Benjamin, at Zelzah; the Jews move a difficulty here, that Rachel's ſepulchre ſhould be ſaid to be in the border of Benjamin, when it was by Bethlehem-ephrath, in the tribe of Judah, Gen. xxxv. 19. Mic. v. 2. and which they ſolve by obſerving, that theſe men were now, at the time Samuel was ſpeaking, by the grave of Rachel, but as they were coming on he would meet them at Zelzah, in the border of Benjamin [z]; but there is no need of this, Rachel's grave was not at Bethlehem, but in the way to it; and beſides, as theſe two tribes were contiguous, and this city being on the borders of both, it might be ſaid at one time to be in the border of Benjamin, and at another in the border of Judah, or in Judah, without any contradiction. Of Zelzah we no where elſe read, but it is plain it was near the ſepulchre of Rachel, and perhaps nearer than Bethlehem. The Arabic geographer [a] ſpeaks of Rachel's grave, as in the mid-way between Jeruſalem and Bethlehem; and ſays, there were 12 ſtones upon it, and a ſtone-arched vault over it; and the ſame is affirmed by Benjamin of Tudela [b], who makes it to be but half a mile from Bethlehem. Jarchi would have Zelzah to be the ſame with Jeruſalem, which is not probable: and they will ſay unto thee, the aſſes which thou wenteſt to ſeek are found; as Samuel had before told Saul they were, ch. ix. 20. and lo, thy father hath left the care of the aſſes; or had left all thoughts about them, and concern for them, not minding whether he heard of them or no, and this before they were found; or otherwiſe it would have been no ſtrange thing to drop all thoughts about them, when they were found: and ſorroweth for you; for Saul, and his ſervant; ſuch was the anxiety and diſtreſs of his mind leſt any evil ſhould befal them, having been gone ſo long in queſt of the aſſes, that he had as it were forgot them, and loſt all care and concern about them, in compariſon of his ſon and ſervant; but eſpecially his ſorrow roſe high for his ſon, as follows: ſaying, what ſhall I do for my ſon? though he was concerned for his ſervant, yet moſt for his ſon; he might have another ſervant, and not another ſon, and Saul ſeems to be his only one, which made his grief for him the greater, ſee 1 Chron. viii. 33. and ix. 39. Now as theſe were contingent events here foretold, as meeting with two men at a certain place deſcribed, the words related expreſsly they ſhould ſay to him when he met them, and theſe exactly coming to paſs, would moſt clearly prove Samuel to be a true prophet, and confirm Saul in the belief of what he had ſaid and done to him concerning the kingdom. Another ſign follows.

℣. 3. Then ſhalt thou go on forward from thence, &c.] From Zelzah and Rachel's ſepulchre there: and thou ſhalt come to the plain of Tabor; not that which lay at the bottom of the famous and well-known mountain Tabor; for that was in the tribe of Zebulun, at a great diſtance from hence; but a plain, ſo called perhaps from the name of the owner of it: and there ſhall meet thee three men going up to God to Bethel; the ſame with Luz, where Jacob built an altar, and called upon God; and ſo Elohim-Beth-el here, is the ſame with El-Beth-el, Gen. xxxv. 6, 7. Here was an high place as at Ramah, whither in thoſe times, when there was no fixed place for worſhip, the tabernacle at one place, and the ark at another, the people went up to worſhip; and they might the rather chuſe this, becauſe it was a place devoted to the worſhip and ſervice of God by their father Jacob; ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "going up to worſhip God in Bethel;" ſo Joſephus [c], they were going thither to pray, and as it ſeems by what follows, to ſacrifice: one carrying three kids; which were uſed in ſacrifice, and were a pretty heavy load if carried far; though, according to Joſephus [d], it was but one kid: and another carrying three loaves of bread; for the minchah, the meat-offering, or rather bread-offering, Lev. ii. 4. and another carrying a bottle of wine; for the drink-offering, the fourth part of an hin of wine being required for each kid, Numb. xv. 5, 11. This bottle, Ben Melech ſays, was a bottle made of ſkin, a leathern bottle or bag, or a potter's veſſel or pitcher; the Targum renders it, a flagon of wine.

℣. 4. And they will ſalute thee, &c.] Not as king, of which they knew nothing, but in a common way; and though a ſtranger and unknown to them, yet finding their hearts diſpoſed and affected towards him, would enquire of his welfare, and wiſh him all happineſs, peace and proſperity: and give thee two loaves of bread; which was pretty much that they ſhould give him two out of three, and leave but one for themſelves, and eſpecially if they were going to ſacrifice; but perhaps they knew they could buy more bread at Bethel, and ſo were diſpoſed to give two of their loaves to Saul, one for himſelf, and another for his ſervant; tho' Kimchi thinks, that theſe are not the ſame before called loaves; and indeed the word loaves is not in the text, but cakes of bread, which were leſſer than loaves, and which they carried for their own uſe, beſides three loaves of bread: which thou ſhalt receive of their hands; being ſent out by Samuel early that morning without eating any food, and having travelled ſome miles, might become weary and faint, and which the three men might diſcern, and ſo had compaſſion on them, and relieved them; and Saul was not to refuſe the offer of them, but take them at their hands, though he was anointed to be king; and this was to teach him humility, and to be kind to the poor and needy, and relieve them when he was in more elevated circumſtances. All theſe actions alſo were concontingent, and when they came to pass, as they did, must be still more confirming than the former sign.

[z] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 82. fol. 71. 4. R. Iſaiah, Jarchi Kimchi, Abarbinel, & Abendana in loc. [a] Climat. 3. par. 5. [b] Itinerar. p. 47. [c] Antiq. l. 6. c. 4. §. 2. [d] Ibid.

℣. 5. After that thou shalt come to the hill of God, &c.] The Targum is, the hill in which was the ark of the Lord, and that was in the house of Abinadab, on a hill in the city of Kirjath-jearim, ch. vii. 1. and so the Jewish commentators generally interpret this hill of God of Kirjath-jearim; but rather it was Geba, a city of Benjamin, partly because by this time he must have got out of the tribe of Judah into the tribe of Benjamin, and even almost to the end of his journey, and among those that were his relations, ℣. 11, 14. and partly because it is certain there was a garrison of the Philistines at Geba, ch. xiii. 3. as there was at this place, as follows: where is the garrison of the Philistines; which they were allowed by the terms of peace made between Israel and them; or which through their growing power over them in the latter days of Samuel they placed there, and which yet they kept, without giving the people any molestation in their worship and service: and it shall come to pass when thou art come thither to the city; to the city Geba, or near it: that thou shalt meet a company of prophets; of Scribes, as the Targum; which were, as Kimchi observes, disciples; for the disciples of the wisemen were called Scribes, and these were the disciples of prophets, the same with the sons of the prophets; and the prophets that were at this time, as he says, from Eli to David, were Elkanah, Samuel, Gad, Nathan, Asaph, Heman and Jeduthun; here was a school or college of young prophets, where they were trained up under the care and tuition of one or other of the above prophets, in the knowledge of the word of God, in psalmody, and other religious exercises; for though the word of the Lord was scarce and precious in the beginning of Samuel's time, yet through his industry, influence and encouragement divine knowledge was greatly promoted, and many were trained up and qualified to instruct the people; who, though they had not the gift of foretelling future events, or of the vision of prophecy, yet had gifts qualifying for the edification of the people; and out of these schools and colleges God sometimes raised up prophets in the highest sense, who foretold things to come, and to whom the Lord appeared in dreams and visions. And this company Saul would meet coming down from the high place; where they had been to worship, to sacrifice, or to pray, for here was an high place for such service, as well as at Ramah: with a psaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them; which were several instruments of music used in singing praises to God in those times: and they shall prophesy; or praise, as the Targum, sing praises at the same time they played on their instruments of music; and singing praises is one sort of prophesying, see 1 Chron. xxv. 1, 2, 3. and in which sense it seems to be used in 1 Cor. xi. 4, 5.

℣. 6. And the spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, &c.] As a spirit of prophecy, so the Targum; whereby he would be enabled at once to compose psalms and hymns of praise, and sing them in a proper manner, though he had not been trained up in this exercise in the school of the prophets; which made it more wonderful to those that knew him: and thou shalt prophesy with them; or praise with them, as the same Targum; join with them in singing praises, and perform this service in an orderly manner, as if he had been instructed in it, and used to it: and shalt be turned into another man; for the Spirit of God would not only operate on him in that way, as to fit him for composing and singing psalms and hymns, but inspire him with wisdom, and prudence, and greatness of mind, and with every qualification necessary for a king; so that he would appear quite another man than he was before, in his outward behaviour, as well as in the endowments of his mind; and from a rustic, an husbandman, a farmer's son, would appear with the air of a prince, and in the majesty of a king; and, as Procopius Gazæus, have a royal mind or heart given him.

℣. 7. And let it be when these signs are come unto thee, &c.] And are all fulfilled, especially the last: that thou do as occasion shall serve thee; as his circumstances would require, and as he in his great wisdom and prudence, with which he should now be furnished, would see necessary to prepare for his taking upon him the kingdom he was anointed to, and would be in a little time openly chosen to, and invested with. Some understand this of royal ornaments befitting a king, or of preparing arms for the defence of the kingdom: for God is with thee; or the Word of the Lord is thy help, as the Targum, and therefore he need not fear engaging in any enterprize that might be for the glory of God, and good of the kingdom.

℣. 8. And thou shalt go down before me to Gilgal, &c.] Not immediately; for the first summons of the people, and of Saul, and the first meeting of them by Samuel were at Mizpeh, where Saul was chosen by lot; nor the first time of Saul's being at Gilgal, when the kingdom was renewed; for Saul had no need to wait seven days there, since he and Samuel went together, ch. xi. 14. rather at the second time of his being there, where not staying the time quite up, was reproved for it, which was two years after this, ch. xiii. 1, 8, 13. though it may be this was a general rule to be observed by Saul, that whenever any thing turned up of importance to the children of Israel, and was a difficulty with him, he should go to Gilgal, and there wait seven days for Samuel, from the time he gave him notice of it, who would come at the appointed time, and would give him what advice and instructions were necessary; and this place was the rather appointed, because it was the place where the Israelites first pitched their camp when they came over Jordan, and where the tabernacle first was; and where prayer and sacrifices were wont to be made; and where the kingdom of Saul was renewed; and which lay convenient for all the tribes, both on the one and the other side of Jordan: and behold, I will come down to thee to offer burnt-offerings, and to sacrifice sacrifices of peace-offerings; so he did when the kingdom was renewed, and Saul was confirmed in it, ch. xi. 15. but two years after, Saul not staying the full time, he offered them himself by another, for which he was reproved, ch. xiii. 9—13. seven days shalt thou tarry, till I come to thee; either from the time of the notice he should give to Samuel of his going thither, or from the time of his arrival there; for it can by no means be understood as from the time of his present departure from him, for the reasons before given: and shew thee what thou shalt do; in the then present emergency or difficulty on his hands; and this he said to encourage him under the weight and burden of government laid upon him.

℣. 9. And it was so, that when he had turned his back to go from Samuel, &c.] When he had taken his leave of him, and set forward on his journey: God gave him another heart; not in a moral or spiritual ritual ſenſe, not a new heart, and new a ſpirit, as in converſion, but in a civil ſenſe, a right heart, a heart fit for government; filled with wiſdom and prudence to rule a people; with courage and magnanimity to protect and defend them againſt their enemies, and fight for them; a heart not taken up with the affairs of huſbandry, with care for his father's aſſes, and looking after his herds, but filled with concern for the civil welfare of Iſrael, and with ſchemes and contrivances for their good, and with warm reſolutions to deliver them out of the hands of their enemies: and all theſe ſigns came to paſs that day; the two firſt which are not particularly mentioned as fulfilled, being more private, as finding two men at Rachel's ſepulchre, and meeting with three others going to Bethel, which came to paſs juſt as they were deſcribed; and the third, which was more public, and gave Saul more reverence and reſpect among the people, is next particularly obſerved.

℣. 10. When they came thither to the hill, &c.] Or to Gibeah, as the Targum, and ſo Joſephus [e]: behold, a company of prophets met him; as foretold, ℣. 5. and the ſpirit of the Lord came upon him, and he propheſied among them; the ſpirit of prophecy, as the Targum, and he ſung praiſes among them; he joined with them in their pſalmody, and performed it as regularly as if he had been brought up with them. The Jews ſay [f], he propheſied of the world to come, of Gog and Magog, and of the rewards of the righteous, and of the puniſhment of the wicked.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs, that when all that knew him before time, &c.] As there muſt be many that perſonally knew him, and were acquainted with him, ſince Gibeah, the place he was near to, was his native place: ſaw, that behold, he propheſied among the prophets; or praiſed among them, as the Targum, ſung pſalms and hymns with them: what is this that is come unto the ſon of Kiſh? a ruſtic, a plebeian, that never was in the ſchool of the prophets, or learned muſic, and yet is as dextrous at it as any of them: is Saul alſo among the prophets? an huſbandman, an herdſman that looked after his father's farms, fields and cattle, and now among the prophets of the Lord, bearing his part with them, and performing it as well as any of them: this was matter of wonder to thoſe who knew his perſon, family and education; and ſo it was equally matter of admiration that Saul the perſecutor, one of the ſame tribe, ſhould be among the preachers of the goſpel, Acts ix. 21.

℣. 12. And one of the ſame place anſwered, and ſaid, &c.] One of the ſame city, and in the ſame company, that expreſſed their admiration at what was come to Saul, and at what he did, and wondering how he came into ſuch company, and to have ſuch a gift, who was of ſo mean an education: but who is their father? the father of the prophets; their fathers were not prophets, no more than Saul's was; their father that taught them is the Lord, and he was able to teach Saul, and beſtow on him the gift of prophecy, as well as on them; and ſo the Targum, who is their maſter? or teacher; for though they might have an under-maſter or teacher, as Samuel, or another prophet, yet their chief teacher was God; who could and did give men the gift of prophecy, and even in the higheſt ſenſe, who had neither prophets for their fathers, nor were indeed trained up in any of the ſchools of the prophets, which was the caſe of Amos: therefore it became a proverb, is Saul alſo among the prophets? that when a perſon of a mean parentage, and of a low life and education, was raiſed up to any degree of dignity in ſacred and civil things, they uſed to apply this proverbial expreſſion to him, or ſpeak of him in this manner, is Saul among the prophets?

℣. 13. And when he had made an end of propheſying, &c.] For, as Procopius Gazæus obſerves, he had not the gift of prophecy always; it did not continue with him, but like that of the ſeventy elders in the times of Moſes, it was deſigned to make him reſpectable among the people, and to be taken notice of as a perſon that God had honoured with a peculiar gift, that ſo when he ſhould be choſen king, they would the more readily receive him: he came to the high place; to return thanks to God for the gift beſtowed on him, and for that high honour and dignity he was raiſed unto, of which he had private knowledge; and to pray to God to fit him more and more for government, and to aſſiſt him in it, and help him to diſcharge his office in a wiſe and faithful manner.

℣. 14. And Saul's uncle ſaid unto him, and to his ſervant, whither went ye? &c.] Since they had been abſent ſo long a time. This was his father's brother, as the Targum, and ſo Aquila; whoſe name was Ner, the father of Abner, ch. xiv. 50, 51. who met with him at the high place, or found him in the city, in his father's houſe it may be. Joſephus [g] ſays, Saul went into the houſe of his kinſman Abner, whom he loved above all his relations, and that it was he that diſcourſed with Saul, and aſked him the queſtions before and after related: and he ſaid, to ſeek the aſſes; he firſt obſerves the end of their going, the buſineſs they went upon, in which not ſucceeding, then he anſwers more directly to the queſtion: and when we ſaw that they were no where; could not ſee them, nor find them any where, or hear of them where they went; we came to Samuel; at Ramah, to enquire of him, if he could direct us which way to go, and what methods to take, to find the aſſes.

℣. 15. And Saul's uncle ſaid, &c.] On hearing he had been with Samuel, and perceiving ſo great an alteration in Saul, perhaps he began to ſuſpect ſomething about the kingdom; it being what every one was talking of, and ſuſpecting every day to hear from Samuel who ſhould be king, according to the Lord's appointment: tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel ſaid unto you; the earneſtneſs with which he put this queſtion ſeems to confirm the above conjecture.

℣. 16. And Saul ſaid unto his uncle, &c.] In anſwer to his queſtion: he told us plainly the aſſes were found; or in telling told us [h]; not only plainly in ſo many words, but he affirmed it with the greateſt certainty that the aſſes were found, and we need not give ourſelves farther trouble about them: but of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel ſpake, he told him not; he ſaid not one word about that, which is commonly aſcribed to his modeſty; or he might conceal it, as Joſephus [i] obſerves, becauſe he thought it would not be believed by his relations, or might create in them envy to him; and beſides, he knew it was the pleaſure of Samuel that it ſhould be kept a ſecret until the election by lot was over, leſt it ſhould be thought to proceed from Samuel himſelf; and Saul choſe it ſhould remain ſo, that it might not be thought to be

[e] Ut ſupra.
[f] Hieron. Trad. Heb. fol. 75. H.
[g] Ut ſupra, §. 3.
[h] הגד הגיד in-licando indicavit, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.
[i] Ut ſupra.

be of his own ſeeking; and by keeping it from his relations and friends, it would be a clear caſe, that he did not make intereſt for it.

℣. 17. And Samuel called the people together unto the Lord at Mizpeh.] Not that in Gilead, but in the tribe of Benjamin, where the people had been before convened on a certain occaſion, ch. vii. 5. and the people called together could not be every individual of the nation, but the heads and elders of the people, their repreſentatives, and who were ſummoned by the orders of Samuel; perhaps by an herald making proclamation and cry of the ſame, as the word ſignifies; and theſe were gathered together to the Lord, to have the following affair tranſacted before him, and under his guidance and direction; the prieſt perhaps being here with the Urim and Thummim, as Kimchi thinks, and who alſo conjectures, that the ark might be brought hither at this time, the ſymbol of the divine preſence; though where-ever the church and people of God were gathered together in his name, in a ſolemn manner, there the Lord was.

℣. 18. And ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] In the name of the Lord uſing the phraſe which the prophets uſed when they ſpoke in the name of the Lord: thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael; the great Jehovah, the Being of beings, the Covenant-God of his people Iſrael: I brought up Iſrael out of Egypt; when in bondage there, with a mighty hand and ſtretched-out arm, by means of ſigns and wonders done by the hands of Moſes and Aaron; the Lord working mightily with them, and thereby enclining Pharaoh and his people to let them go: and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians; at the Red ſea, drowning them in it, when they threatened Iſrael with an utter deſtruction: and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppreſſed you; as the Arabic writers, the kingdoms of Og and Baſhan in their way to Canaan, and the Meſopotamians, Moabites, Canaanites, Midianites, Ammonites and Philiſtines, in the times of the judges; all which is obſerved to ſhew their ingratitude, and aggravate their guilt.

℣. 19. And ye have this day rejected your God, &c.] As their king, by deſiring another to be ſet over them: who himſelf ſaved you out of all your adverſities and your tribulations; that they had been in at any time in Egypt, in their paſſage thro' the wilderneſs to Canaan, and after they were ſettled there: ye have ſaid unto him, nay, but ſet a king over us; they did as good as ſay God ſhould not be their king, but they would have one ſet over them like the kings of the nations about them; Samuel reminds them of this their requeſt and reſolution to have a king, which they had expreſſed ſome time ago, that it might appear to them that this was wholly of their own ſeeking; the motion came from themſelves, and not from the Lord, nor from Samuel, and therefore whatever ill conſequences might follow upon it, they had none to blame but themſelves: now therefore preſent yourſelves before the Lord by your tribes, and by your thouſands; by the heads of their tribes, and by the rulers of the thouſands into which their tribes were divided, that it might be known either by Urim and Thummim, or rather by caſting lots, out of which tribe, and out of which thouſand, houſe and family in it, their king was to be choſen; which method, as it would clearly appear to be a choice directed by the Lord, ſo it would prevent all contention and diſcord among themſelves.

℣. 20. And when Samuel had cauſed all the tribes to come near, &c.] The heads and repreſentatives of them, to the place where the lots were caſt: the tribe of Benjamin was taken; the lot fell upon that tribe for the choice of a king out of it; not the tribe of Reuben, who was the firſt-born, nor the tribe of Judah, to whom the kingdom was promiſed, but the tribe of Benjamin, the leaſt of all the tribes, and which ſprung from the youngeſt ſon of Jacob, contrary, as it were probable, to the expectation of all.

℣. 21. And when he had cauſed the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, &c.] By the heads of them, to have lots caſt for them, out of which of the families the king ſhould be choſen: the family of Matri was taken; that is, by lot; the lot fell upon that family for the choice of a king out of them: in the account of the families of the tribe of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. no mention is made of this family, nor any where elſe, and yet no doubt there was ſuch a family, and Saul was of it; it ſeems to have its name from the butt or mark arrows were ſhot at; ſome of the Benjaminites being famous for their ſkill in darting and flinging, and perhaps this family might be ſo: and Saul the ſon of Kiſh was taken; the lot being caſt upon the men in the family of Matri, though it is not expreſſed, fell upon Saul; for though he was not there, as Jarchi obſerves, the lot fell upon him; for their names were written on a piece of paper, and put into a box, and the prophet put in his hand and took out one, and on that was the name of Saul, and this was the manner of the lot: and when they ſought him, he could not be found; becauſe he had hid himſelf, as in the next verſe; it is very probable, and indeed plain, that he was in this aſſembly at the firſt opening of it; and knowing what Samuel had ſaid and done to him, and perceiving in what way the lot was going concerning the ſame, the tribe of Benjamin being taken; he concluded how it would iſſue, and therefore left the aſſembly, and hid himſelf, as follows.

℣. 22. Therefore they enquired of the Lord farther, &c.] Or again, by lot, by which they knew who the perſon was that was choſen king, but they did not know where he was, and therefore enquire farther how they muſt come at him; and this enquiry was made either before the high-prieſt by Urim and Thummim, or by Samuel the prophet of the Lord: and the enquiry was, if the man ſhould yet come thither; whether he was already come, or would come there, and if not, what methods they muſt take to find him: and the Lord anſwered, behold, he hath hid himſelf among the ſtuff; the word ſignifies houſhold-ſtuff, veſſels, utenſils, arms, &c. which the people had brought along with them for their uſe, and were laid up in ſome one place; and among theſe baggages Saul hid himſelf, hoping that if he was not found they would proceed to another choice, ſo free from ambition was he, and ſuch was his modeſty; nor does this ſeem to be affected and diſſembled, but real; though afterwards, when he was ſettled in the kingdom, he did not care to part with it, and ſought to kill David, whom he looked upon as his rival: there were many things which now concurred, that made him uneaſy and unwilling to aſſume the government of the people; partly the envy and ill will of ſome of them, which he muſt expect; chiefly the ſenſe he had of his own unfitneſs for ſuch an office, being of a mean family, and having had ſo mean an education, and ſo little knowledge of the maxims of government; and beſides, muſt at once, as ſoon as on the throne, enter into a war with the Am-

Ammonites; but what might moſt of all diſtreſs him, he perceived by Samuel's ſpeech to the people, that the affair of a king was diſpleaſing to the Lord, though he condeſcended to grant the peoples requeſt; and therefore what comfort and happineſs could he expect in ſuch a ſituation?

v. 23. And they ran and fetched him thence, &c.] Being in haſte to ſee their king elect, and proclaim him: and when he ſtood among the people; being brought among them, and preſented to them: he was higher than any of the people, from the ſhoulders, and upwards; which made him look very graceful and majeſtic; height of ſtature, and a comely form, as Kimchi obſerves, recommend to royal dignity; and make the people ſtand more in awe of a prince, and have always been reckoned among all other nations to make a prince venerable, ſee the note on ch. ix. 2.

v. 24. And Samuel ſaid to all the people, ſee ye him whom the Lord hath choſen, &c.] For the choice being made by lot, the diſpoſal of which is of the Lord, it is properly attributed to him, and the people could not object to it, but muſt allow it was the Lord's doing. Eupolemus [k], an heathen writer, ſays, that Saul was made king by Samuel by the counſel or will of God; and Samuel appeals to their eyes for the goodneſs of the choice, a better could not have been made: that there is none like him among the people; ſo graceful, ſo ſtately, ſo prince-like and majeſtic; they wanted to have a king like ſuch the nations had; and Saul was ſuch an one, had all the outward appearance of grandeur that could be wiſhed for, and which in other nations recommended perſons to the imperial dignity: and all the people ſhouted; made a general huzza: and ſaid, God ſave the king; or let the king live [l]; they owned and ſaluted him as their king, and prayed he might live long to reign over them; the Targum is, "let the king proſper;" let his reign be proſperous and glorious, and let him enjoy all health and happineſs, peace and proſperity.

v. 25 Then Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom, &c.] According to Ben Gerſom, he laid before them the power a king had over his people, and the puniſhment he might inflict upon them, if they rebelled againſt him; and ſome think this is the ſame he delivered in ch. viii. concerning the arbitrary power of their kings, and how they would be uſed by them; and which he here repeated, and then wrote it, that it might be a teſtimony againſt them hereafter; with which what Joſephus [m] ſays pretty much agrees, that in the hearing of the king he foretold what would befal them, and then wrote it, and laid it up, that it might be a witneſs of his predictions; but that in ch. viii. Samuel ſaid, was the manner of their king, or how he would uſe them, but this the manner of the kingdom, and how the government of it was to be managed and ſubmitted to, what was the office of a king, and what the duties of the ſubject; and yet was different from, at leaſt not the ſame with that in Deut. xvii. 15, 16, 17. for that had been written and laid up already: and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the Lord; in the ark of the Lord, as Kimchi; or rather by the ark of the Lord, on one ſide of it, as Ben Gerſom; or beſt of all, as Joſephus [n], in the tabernacle of the Lord, where recourſe might be had to it, at any time, at leaſt by a prieſt, and where it would be ſafe, and be preſerved to future times: and Samuel ſent all the people away, every man to his houſe; for though Saul was choſen king, he did not take upon him the exerciſe of government directly, but left it to Samuel to diſmiſs the people, who had been for many years their chief magiſtrate.

v. 26. And Saul alſo went home to Gibeah, &c.] His native place, where was his father's houſe, to which he retired; where were no royal palace, or princely court, nor any of the enſigns of kingly majeſty; and whither it does not appear that he was followed by the nobility or princes of the tribes, only accompanied by a few men, as next obſerved: and there went with him a band of men; an army, or part of one; they ſeem to be military men, at leaſt men of ſtrength, valour and courage; gallant men, who, in honour to their king elect, freely offered themſelves to be his body-guard, however, until he was come to his houſe at Gibeah; the Targum is only, "ſome of the people:" whoſe heart God had touched; and inclined to ſhew honour and reſpect to their king; the Targum deſcribes them, "men that feared to ſin, and in whoſe hearts the fear of God was put."

v. 27. But the children of Belial ſaid, &c.] Wicked, diſſolute, lawleſs perſons; men without a yoke, as the word ſignifies, who did not care to be under the yoke of government, at leaſt not under the yoke of Saul; and theſe might be men of wealth, and of larger tribes, and better families than Saul was of, and therefore envied him, and thought themſelves fitter for government than he was; and in a jeering ſcornful manner ſaid, how ſhall this man ſave us? whoſe family is ſo mean, and whoſe tribe is ſo ſmall, that they can give but little aſſiſtance to deliver us out of the hands of our enemies, the Philiſtines and Ammonites; intimating, that a king ought to have been of a rich family, and a large tribe, and a prince in it, whoſe intereſt and influence were great, not only in his own tribe, but in others, which would enable him to engage in war with an enemy, and protect the people; but what, as if they ſhould ſay, can be expected from this man? this mean contemptible man, of no birth nor fortune, brought up in an obſcure manner, and altogether inexpert in things civil and military? and they deſpiſed him; on account of the above things, not only in their hearts, but ſpared not to ſpeak out, and uſe opprobrious language, and with which their actions and conduct agreed: and brought him no preſents; as others did, and as it was uſual when a king came to the throne; nor were any viſits made unto him, in token of their ſubjection to him, and complacency in him, and by way of congratulation of him, ſee 1 Kings iv. 21. 2 Chron. xvii. 5. the Targum is, they did not ſalute him, or aſk of his welfare: but he held his peace; or was as one that is deaf and dumb [o]; took no notice of what they ſaid, as if he was deaf and heard it not, and was as ſilent as if he had been a dumb man, which ſhewed his wiſdom and prudence; for had he taken notice of them, he muſt have puniſhed them, and he judged it more adviſeable to uſe lenity and mildneſs, and not begin his reign with contention and bloodſhed.

CHAP.

[k] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 30. p. 447.
[l] Antiq. l. 6. c. 4. §. 6. [m] Ibid.
[n] יחי המלך vivat rex, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [o] ויהי כמחריש & fuit veluti ſurdus, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; fuit quaſi obmuteſcens, Druſius; veluti tacens aut ſilens, ſo ſome in Vatablus; ſo the Targum.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter relates the diſtreſs the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead were in on account of the Ammonites, ℣. 1—3. upon which they ſent meſſengers to Saul, whoſe ſpirit was immediately ſtirred up to help them, ℣. 4—6. and prepared for it, and came up ſoon enough for their relief, and ſlew their enemies, ℣. 7—11. which gained him much honour and reputation among the people, and occaſioned the renewal of the kingdom to him, ℣. 12—15.

℣. 1. Then Nahaſh the Ammonite came up, and encamped againſt Jabeſh-gilead, &c.] A month after, as in the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, that is, a month after Saul was choſen king; ſo Joſephus [p]: this prince was preparing for war againſt Iſrael before, which they hearing of, requeſted they might have a king to go before them in battle, ch. xii. 12. but now he actually marched from his own country, and beſieged Jabeſh gilead, a city in the land of Gilead, from whence it had its name, and lay in the half tribe of Manaſſeh, on the other ſide Jordan, ſee Judg xxi. 8. It lay near to the Ammonites, and was part of the country they laid claim to in the times of Jephthah, which they now renewed, and attempted to gain it by force. This Nahaſh was king of the Ammonites, as he is called in the Targum, and by Joſephus [q], and ſo in the Arabic verſion, ſee ch. xii. 12. and all the men of Jabeſh-gilead ſaid unto Nahaſh, make a covenant with us; they deſired to be his allies and confederates, live in peace and friendſhip with him, and enjoy their religion and liberties on certain conditions they were willing to come into; and this was the ſenſe of them all, or at leaſt the greateſt part, which ſhewed a mean and abject ſpirit in them, to make no defence of themſelves, but as ſoon as beſieged to move for a capitulation This doubtleſs aroſe from a ſenſe of their weakneſs, not being able to hold it out long, and from an apprehenſion that their brethren the Iſraelites, on the other ſide Jordan, could give them no aſſiſtance, being in an unſettled condition, having choſen a king, and he ſcarce on the throne, and the Philiſtines having great power over them: and we will ſerve thee; not as ſlaves, but as tributaries; they were willing to pay a yearly tax to him.

℣. 2. And Nahaſh the Ammonite anſwered them, &c.] In a very haughty and ſcornful manner: on this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thruſt out all your right eyes; ſome Jewiſh writers go into a myſtical and allegorical ſenſe of theſe words, as that Nahaſh ordered the book of the law to be brought, which was their right eye, that he might eraſe out of it theſe words, an Ammonite or Moabite ſhall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; others underſtand it of the Sanhedrim, which were the eyes of Iſrael; and others, which come a little nearer to the ſenſe, of the ſlingers and archers, the deſire of the eyes of Iſrael; and who, by having their right eyes thruſt out, would be in a great meaſure ſpoiled for taking aim; for the words are to be underſtood literally; the intention of Nahaſh was to diſable them for war, and that they might become quite unfit for it, as Joſephus obſerves [q]; the left eye being under the ſhield, as it uſually was in war, and the right eye plucked out, they would be as blind men; he did not chuſe to have both their eyes thruſt out, for then they could have been of no uſe and ſervice to him as ſlaves or tributaries: and lay it for a reproach upon all Iſrael; that they did not come up to the relief of their brethren, and defend them, and ſignifying that they muſt all expect the ſame treatment from him.

℣. 3. And the elders of Jabeſh ſaid, &c.] The magiſtrates and principal men of the city: give us ſeven days reſpite, that we may ſend meſſengers to all the coaſts of Iſrael; that is, ceaſe from beſieging them, from throwing in darts into the city, or any other miſſive weapons, and from attempting to break open the gates, or break down the walls of it, and ſtorm it; ſuch a ſpace of time they deſire, which was as little as could be granted, to go and return in, and without this it would not be a reproach to all Iſrael, if they were ill uſed by them, ſince they had no knowledge of their caſe, nor time to come up to their aſſiſtance: and then if there be no man to ſave us, we will come out to thee; and ſubmit to be uſed at thy pleaſure. And it ſeems that this was granted by Nahaſh out of a bravado, and to reproach and inſult all Iſrael, and bid them defiance; with whom he ſought to quarrel, having a deſign upon their land, and knowing very well their condition, being awed by the Philiſtines; and having juſt choſen a king, and he an unexperienced man in the affairs of war, and had no army; nor was it likely that one could be aſſembled in ſo ſhort a time, and come to the relief of this people, and therefore he thought himſelf ſafe enough in granting their requeſt.

℣. 4. Then came the meſſengers to Gibeah of Saul, &c.] Where he was born, and brought up, and now dwelt; and he being elected king, it brought an honour to the place; and from hence had this name, to diſtinguiſh it from the others, and this is the firſt time it was ſo called. Now the meſſengers from Jabeſh came hither directly, becauſe they knew that Saul, the choſen king, dwelt here, and the Benjaminites, of all the tribes, had great reaſon to ſhew regard to them, ſince it was from thence they had 400 wives, when they were reduced to 600 men only, in order to raiſe up their tribe: and told the tidings in the ears of the people; Saul being not at home in the city, but in the fields, they reported to them the hardſhips their city was under, being beſieged by the Ammonites, and threatened that if not relieved in ſuch a time, all their right eyes would be plucked out: and all the people lift up their voices, and wept; moved with ſympathy to their brethren, and who by their intermarriage with them were nearly related to them; and who might fear they would not ſtop there, but having taken that place, would march forward, and come to them, and uſe them in like manner; the thought of which was very diſtreſſing to them.

℣. 5. And behold, Saul came after the herd out of the field, &c.] Where he had been to look after them, and take care of them, and ſee what condition they were in, and followed them on their return home; for though he was elected king, he was not inaugurated, and did not take upon him any ſtate; and being deſpiſed by ſome, and no pro-provision as yet made for his support and maintenance as a king, and no business as such for him to do, Samuel still acting in his office, he returned to his father's house, and employed himself in rustic affairs, as he used to do: though some think this was casual, that he had been in the field to recreate himself, or to meditate on the affairs of government, and happened to return just as the herd came out of the field, and so followed them; thus Jarchi interprets it not of his coming after the herd, but of his coming after the fixed and usual time of the herd's coming out of the field; but Josephus [r] is clear for it, that he had been about some rustic business, some part of husbandry in the field, and returned to the city; nor has it been unusual for emperors and kings, and persons in high offices among Greeks and Romans, and other nations, in times of peace, to employ themselves in husbandry; so did the judges of Israel, as Shamgar, and Gideon, and Boaz, Judg. iii. 31. and vi. 11. Ruth iii. 2. so Quinctius Cincinnatus being taken from the plough and made dictator, after he had conquered his enemies, returned to his husbandry [s]: and Saul said, what aileth the people that they weep? he supposed some evil had befallen them, and desired to know what it was, that if it lay in his power to help them, he might: and they told him the tidings of the men of Jabesh; the message they brought, and the account they gave of the distressed case of their city.

[p] Antiq. l. 6. c. 5. §. 1.

[q] Ibid.

℣. 6. And the spirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, &c.] And filled him with pity and compassion to the inhabitants of Jabesh, and with wisdom and prudence, and set his thoughts at work to contrive ways and means for their relief, and with fortitude, courage and resolution to attempt their deliverance; so the Targum, "the Spirit of fortitude from the Lord dwelt on Saul:" and his anger was kindled greatly; against Nahash the Ammonite for insulting Israel, and threatening to use the inhabitants of Jabesh in such a cruel manner.

℣. 7. And he took a yoke of oxen, &c.] Of his own or his father's, which he had just followed out of the field, and for which chiefly that circumstance is mentioned: and hewed them in pieces; as the Levite did his concubine, Judg. xix. 29. and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers; some carrying a piece one way, and some another, throughout all the tribes; for to them all the government of Saul extended, and which by this he let them know it did: saying, whosoever cometh not after Saul and after Samuel; he names both, because he himself, though chosen king, was not inaugurated into his office, nor was Samuel put out of his; and because he knew he was despised by some, who would not object to and refuse the authority of Samuel, and therefore if they would not follow him, they would follow Samuel; and he mentions himself first, because of his superior dignity: so shall it be done unto his oxen; be cut to pieces as these were; he does not threaten to cut them in pieces, but their oxen, lest he should seem to exercise too much severity at his first coming to the throne: and the fear of the Lord fell on the people; they feared, should they be disobedient, the Lord would cut them to pieces, or in some way destroy them, as well as Saul would cut their oxen to pieces; for their minds were impressed with a sense of this affair being of the Lord: and they came out with one consent; or as one man [t], as if they had consulted together; being under a divine impulse, they set out from different parts about much the same time, and met at a place of rendezvous next mentioned.

℣. 8. And when he numbered them at Bezek, &c.] Which was the place appointed to meet at, the same with that in Judg. i. 4. see the note there; though some take the word to be an appellative, and not the proper name of a place, and render it, with a stone; with which he numbered, taking a stone from each, and laying them on a heap, and then telling them [u]; so Bizekion signifies little stones [w], with the Greeks: or with a fragment; either of an earthern vessel, or of a stone, or of the branch of a tree they carried in their hands, and so the king's servants numbered not the men but the branches [x]: and the children of Israel were 300,000 men; who came together on this occasion; these were of the eight tribes and a half on this side Jordan: and the men of Judah 30,000; which tribe is mentioned distinctly, because a noble and warlike tribe, which usually first went up to battle; and though the number of them at this time assembled may seem comparatively small, yet this may easily be accounted for; because they bordered upon the Philistines, who watched every opportunity to take an advantage on them, and therefore could not leave their tribe destitute, but reserved a sufficient number to guard their coasts, and yet were desirous to testify their obedience to Saul, though chosen king out of another tribe, when they might have expected from prophecy that the dominion belonged to them. Josephus [y] has made a gross mistake in the numbers here, he makes the men of Israel to be 700,000, and the men of Judah 70,000, contrary to the text, the Targum, Syriac and Arabic versions; but the Septuagint comes pretty near him, which has 600,000 of the men of Israel, 70,000 of the men of Judah.

℣. 9. And they said unto the messengers that came, &c.] From Jabesh-gilead, that is, Saul and Samuel said to them, as follows: thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-gilead; when they returned unto them, as they were now upon the departure: to-morrow by that time the sun be hot; when it smites with the greatest heat, as at noon: this morrow seems not to be the next from their return home, or going from Saul, but the morrow after they were got home, and should deliver the message to those that sent them, ℣. 10. and so Josephus [z] says, it was on the third day the assistance was promised them: ye shall have help; Saul with his army by that time would come and raise the siege: and the messengers came and shewed it to the men of Jabesh; what Saul had promised, and what a numerous army he had raised, and had now upon the march for their relief, and to-morrow would be with them: and they were glad; it was good news and glad tidings to them, it cheared their hearts, and gave them spirit.

℣. 10. Therefore the men of Jabesh said, &c.] To Nahash the Ammonite: to-morrow we will come out unto you; meaning if they had no help, which they were well assured they should have; but this condition they expressed not, which they were not obliged to, but left him to conclude they had no hope of any, the messengers being returned, and the

2

[r] Ut supra, §. 2. [s] Flor. Hist. Roman. l. 1. c. 11. Aurel. Victor. de Vir. illustr. c. 20. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 3. c. 11. [t] כאיש אחד tanquam vir unus, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [u] Vid. T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 22. 2. & Gloss. in ib. [w] Suidas in voce Βιζακιων. [x] Vid. Sheringham. in Misn. Yoma, c. 2. §. 1. p. 14. [y] Ut supra, §. 3. [z] Ibid.

the next being the laſt of the ſeven days reſpite; and by this artifice the Ammonites were ſecure, and not at all upon their guard againſt an approaching enemy: and ye ſhall do with us all that ſeemeth good unto you; make ſhows of them, pluck out their eyes, or put them to death, or do what they would with them.

℣. 11. And it was ſo on the morrow, &c.] After the meſſengers were returned, and delivered their meſſage, and the men of Jabeſh gilead had given the Ammonites reaſon to expect that they would come out to them according to their agreement: that Saul put the people into three companies; or heads [a], under ſo many commanders, aſſigning to each their number, if equally, 110,000 in each, as Gideon divided his 300 into three companies, 100 in each, Judg. vii. 16. and Abimelech, Judg. ix. 43. it ſeems to have been their way of fighting in thoſe days: and they came unto the midſt of the hoſt; that is, of the Ammonites: in the morning-watch; the third and laſt watch of the night, by break of day, or before, however before the ſun was up; ſo quick was Saul and his men in their march, though on foot. Bunting [b] computes the diſtance from Gibeah to Bezek 40 miles, and from thence to Jabeſh 16; it is commonly reckoned that it was about 60 miles from Gibeah to Jabeſh. Joſephus [c] ſays it was 10 ſchæni, each of which contained five or ſix miles: and ſlew the Ammonites until the heat of the day; that is, till noon, ſo that from the morning-watch till noon he was making ſlaughter of them: and it came to paſs, that they which remained were ſcattered; thoſe that were not cut off by the ſword of Saul, were broken and diſperſed, they could not ſtand their ground againſt him: ſo that two of them were not left together; to flee together, but every one ſhifted for himſelf, and fled alone

℣. 12. And the people ſaid unto Samuel, &c.] By which it ſeems that Samuel accompanied Saul in this expedition; though it is ſomewhat difficult to account for it, that a man of his years ſhould be able to attend ſo quick a march that Saul made; it may be therefore, that he might follow after him gently, and meet him quickly after the battle was fought, when the people made the following ſpeech to him: who is he that ſaid, ſhall Saul reign over us? is ſuch a mean unexperienced man fit to rule over us? who can bear his government, and ſubmit to it? what can be expected from him, that he ſhould deliver and ſave us out of the hands of our enemies? in this they had reſpect to the ſons of Belial, and what they ſaid, ch. x. 27. but now it appeared he was ſufficiently qualified, and God had made him an inſtrument of ſalvation, and was a proper perſon to be king over them: bring the men, that we may put them to death; ſo tranſported were they with affection to Saul, and indignation againſt thoſe men.

℣. 13. And Saul ſaid, &c.] Preventing Samuel from giving an anſwer, being ready to forgive injuries; as it was in his power as a king, and him only, to pardon thoſe perſons that treated him in ſo ill a manner, and it was policy ſo to do, eſpecially in the beginning of his reign; and it plainly appears, that this temper did not always continue with him; though there is no reaſon to believe otherwiſe, that this was now owing to his lenity as well as his prudence: there ſhall not be a man put to death this day; who by their appearance to the ſummons had teſtified their obedience, and by their courage and valour had ſhewed their attachment to him, and to the intereſt of their country. Ben Gerſom take the ſenſe to be, that it might be right after, but not on this day to put them to death; or that this was an artifice of Saul to deliver thoſe men out of the hands of the Iſraelites, ſuggeſting as if it was his intention hereafter to put them to death, though not now, for the following reaſon: for to-day the Lord hath wrought ſalvation in Iſrael; he does not aſcribe the victory to the quick diſpatch he made, to his wiſdom and prudence in forming the ſcheme he did, and to his valour and courage, and that of his troops, but to the power and goodneſs of God.

℣. 14. Then ſaid Samuel to the people, &c.] Agreeing to what Saul had ſaid, and in order to put them off from demanding the lives of the offenders, and willing to take them whilſt they were in a good diſpoſition: come, and let us go to Gilgal; which was the neareſt place to them, on the other ſide Jordan, from which they now were, and where the children of Iſrael firſt encamped when they paſſed over Jordan, where the tabernacle and ark firſt were, and an altar was built, and where meetings uſed to be held on certain occaſions; all which might be reaſons why Samuel propoſed to go to this place. According to Bunting [d], this place was 36 miles from Jabeſh-gilead: and renew the kingdom there; that is, recognize Saul, own and declare him king of Iſrael.

℣. 15. And all the people went to Gilgal, &c.] Agreed to the motion, and marched along with Saul and Samuel thither: and there they made Saul king before the Lord in Gilgal; that is, they declared him to be king there; he was inaugurated into, and inveſted with his office, otherwiſe it was God only that made him king, who only had the power of making one, ſee Acts ii. 36. Joſephus ſays [e], that Samuel anointed him with the holy oil; and ſo the Septuagint verſion here renders it, "and Samuel anointed Saul there to be king;" and it is not improbable, that as he privately anointed him, he did it publickly alſo; if not at the election of him, then at this time; and it is obſervable, that in the next chapter, and not before, he is called the Lord's anointed. Now this was before the Lord, in this place; this being, as Abarbinel obſerves, a ſanctified place, where the tabernacle and ark of God had been; and he ſuppoſes it probable, that the ark was brought hither; but it was enough that the people and congregation of the Lord were here, and who, when aſſembled in his name, his preſence was with them: and there they ſacrificed ſacrifices of peace-offerings before the Lord; where an altar was built, and on which they offered theſe peace-offerings by way of thankſgiving, partly for the victory obtained over the Ammonites, and partly for the renewal of the kingdom to Saul, and their unanimity in it, as well as to implore and obtain future peace and proſperity: and there Saul, and all the people of Iſrael rejoiced greatly; they in their king, and he in the good-will of his people, and both in the great ſalvation God had wrought for them.

[a] ראשים capita, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [b] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 126. [c] Ut ſupra. [d] Ut ſupra. [e] Ut ſupra, §. 4.

CHAP.

CHAP. XII.

IN this chapter Samuel, reſigning the government to Saul, aſſerts the integrity with which he had performed his office, and calls upon the people of Iſrael to atteſt it, who did, ℣. 1—5. he then reminds them of the great and good things the Lord had done for them in times paſt, ℣. 6—11. and whereas they had deſired a king, and one was given them, it was their intereſt to fear and ſerve the Lord, if not, his hand would be againſt them, ℣. 12—15. he terrifies them by calling for thunder in an unuſual time, ℣. 16—19. and then comforts and encourages them, that in doing their duty God would be with them, and not forſake them, otherwiſe they might expect nothing but ruin and deſtruction, ℣. 20—25.

℣. 1. And Samuel ſaid unto all Iſrael, &c.] When aſſembled at Gilgal, after they had recognized Saul as their king, and he was eſtabliſhed in the kingdom, and while in the midſt of their mirth and joy: behold, I have hearkened unto your voice in all that ye have ſaid unto me; reſpecting the affair of a king, to which it muſt be limited, as appears by what follows; otherwiſe it is poſſible in ſome things they might apply to him about, he did not think fit to hearken to them, and grant their requeſt, or ſpeak for them: and have made a king over you; that is, had by the direction and appointment of God choſen one by lot, anointed and declared him king; for it was the Lord alone, that, properly ſpeaking, made him a king.

℣. 2. And now behold, the king walketh before you, &c.] He is inveſted with his office, and in the exerciſe of it, and goes in and out as the captain, commander and leader of the people; it is expreſſive of his being in the full poſſeſſion of regal power and authority, and therefore Samuel might ſpeak the more freely, as he could not be thought to have any hope and expectation of being re inſtated in his government, or to have parted with it with any regret; and he wiſely took this opportunity of reproving the people for their ſin of deſiring a king, when Saul was ſettled and eſtabliſhed in his kingdom, and when they were in the midſt of all their mirth and jollity, who might from the ſucceſs that had attended this firſt adventure of their king, conclude that they had done a right and good thing in requeſting to have one: and I am old, and grey-headed; and ſo unfit for government, and very willing to be eaſed of the burden of it: he muſt ſurely be more than 52 years of age, as the Jews generally ſay he was, ſince it is not uſual at ſuch an age to be grey-headed, ſee the note on ch. viii. 1. however, on this account he merited reverence and reſpect, and demanded attention: and behold, my ſons are with you; as private perſons in the condition of ſubjects, making no pretenſion to government; and if they had committed any thing criminal, they were open to the law, and might be charged, and tried, and treated acccording to their deſerts; and there they were, and might be aſked what queſtions they thought proper with reſpect to what they knew of his conduct; and to be hoſtages or bail for him, if they could prove any thing againſt him; or to be taken to make ſatisfaction for any injuries committed by him: and I have walked before you from my childhood unto this day; his manner of life and converſation from his infancy to this time was well known to them, and he had ſpent all his days in the ſervice of God, and for the good of Iſrael.

℣. 3. Behold, here I am, &c.] No longer the ſupreme governor, but a ſubject, and accountable for any miſdemeanour charged upon me, and to which I am ready to give anſwer, being now at your bar to be tried and judged before you: witneſs againſt me before the Lord, and before his anointed; ſignifying, that if they had any thing to lay to his charge, that they would produce it, and give proof and evidence of it in the preſence of God, in whoſe name they met, and of Saul anointed king, and ſupreme judge and ruler of the nation: whoſe ox have I taken? by force, to employ in his own ſervice in ploughing his ground, or treading out his corn: or whoſe aſs have I taken? to ride about on in his circuit, or to carry any burden for him: or whom have I defrauded? of their money or goods by any artifice, circumventing and cheating them: whom have I oppreſſed? ſtruck, beaten,* broken, or cauſed to be ſo uſed wrongfully; to whoſe perſon have I been injurious any more than to their property? Some derive the word from a root which ſignifies favour and goodwill, and interpret it as ſome of the Rabbins do, of his not taking money of perſons with their good-will; or rather, that he had done nothing as a judge for favour and affection, but had acted the upright part, without regard to rich or poor, friends or foes: or of whoſe hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? his meaning is, that he had never taken a gift or preſent from any perſon to favour his cauſe, that was to be brought before him, and give it for him right or wrong; to connive at any injury he had done, or to turn away his eyes from ſeeing where the juſtice of the cauſe lay; or that he had not received money to ſpare the life of a criminal that deſerved to die; for the word uſed for a bribe, ſignifies a ranſom-price, ſee Deut. xvi. 19. and I will reſtore it to you; the ox or aſs, money or goods, gifts and preſents, or bribes taken, or make compenſation for any injury done to the perſons or eſtates of men. Some render it, I will anſwer you [f], or give in an anſwer to any ſuch charges when exhibited.

℣. 4. And they ſaid, &c.] One in the name of the reſt, or they all cried out as one man: thou haſt not defrauded us, nor oppreſſed us; had done them no wrong, neither privately nor publickly, by fraud or by force: neither haſt thou taken ought of any man's hands; as a gift, preſent or bribe, to favour his cauſe. Some would infer hence, that he took nothing of them for his ſupport and maintenance, and that he lived upon his own ſubſtance; but that is not likely or reaſonable; it was but juſt that they ſhould ſupport him and his family ſuitable to his character as a judge, whoſe whole life was ſpent in their ſervice.

℣. 5. And he ſaid unto them, the Lord is witneſs againſt you, and his anointed is witneſs this day, &c.] Should they hereafter reproach and vilify him, and charge charge him with any acts of corruption, injustice, and violence: that ye have not found ought in my hand; that they had nothing to accuse him of and charge him with throughout his whole administration, but had asserted his innocence and integrity, had honourably acquitted him, and given him a fair character: and they answered, he is witness; the omniscient God is a witness against us, should we depart from this testimony, and Saul, the Lord's anointed, is a witness that we have fully cleared thee from any imputations of mal-administration. The word is singular, he said or answered[g], that is, Israel said, the whole body of the people, they all replied as one man: the reason why Samuel made such a speech at this time, when he resigned his government to Saul, was not only to secure his own character, but to suggest to Saul how he should rule and govern according to his example; and that having established his own character, he could the more freely, and with the better grace, reprove the people for their sin, as in some following verses.

[f] אשיב לכם reſpondebo vobis, Munſter.

℣. 6. And Samuel said unto the people, &c.] Having cleared and established his own character, he proceeds to lay before the people some of the great things God had done for them formerly, and quite down to the present time, the more to aggravate their ingratitude in rejecting God as their king: it is the Lord that advanced Moses and Aaron; raised them from a low estate, the one in a foreign country in Midian, the other in bondage in Egypt, to be deliverers, guides and governors of his people Israel. Kimchi thinks this refers to what goes before, and that the sense is, that God that raised Moses and Aaron to great honour and dignity, was a witness between him and the people; in which he is followed by some christian interpreters. Ben Gersom makes mention of the same, but rather approves of the connexion of the words with what follows, as does Abarbinel, and is doubtless rightest; the Targum is, "who hath done mighty things by the hands of Moses and Aaron:" and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt; when they were in bondage there, and that by the means of Moses and Aaron, by whose hands he wrought signs and wonders, and inflicted plagues on the Egyptians, which made them willing at last to let Israel go.

℣. 7. Now therefore stand still, &c.] Keep your place, and don't as yet break up the assembly, but wait a little longer patiently, and with reverence and attention hearken to what I have farther to say: that I may reason with you before the Lord; as in his presence; and which he observes to command the greater awe upon their mind, and the greater regard to the subject of his discourse and resolutions; which would be, of all the righteous acts of the Lord, which he did to you and to your fathers; not only in a way of judgment delivering them into the hands of their enemies, when they sinned against him, but rather in a way of mercy and kindness in delivering them out of their hands.

℣. 8. When Jacob was come into Egypt, &c.] With his family to see his son Joseph, and dwelt there; or rather the posterity of Jacob are meant, who settled in Egypt, and continued there many years, and at length were oppressed by the Egyptians, and brought into hard bondage: and your fathers cried unto the Lord; by reason of their bondage, for help and deliverance: then the Lord sent Moses and Aaron, which brought forth your fathers out of Egypt; after various messages carried by them from the Lord to Pharaoh king of Egypt, and after many signs and wonders wrought by them, by which the heart of that king was at last brought to consent to their dismission: and made them dwell in this place; the land of Canaan; they conducted them through the Red-sea, guided them through the wilderness, and accompanied them, especially Moses, to the borders of the land of Canaan; for neither of them went into it, but died before the peoples entrance there. Joshua, the successor of Moses, of whom Samuel makes no mention, introduced Israel into it, conquered the land for them, and settled them in it; tho' Moses and Aaron, as they were the instruments of bringing them out of Egypt, were the cause, by conducting them through the wilderness, and by their prayers, counsels and instructions, of their entrance into and settlement in it: besides, Moses appointed Joshua in his stead, and ordered him to lead the people there, and directed to the division of the land among them, yea two tribes and an half were settled by him on the other side Jordan; the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic versions read in the singular number, he made them dwell, that is, the Lord.

℣. 9. And when they forgat the Lord their God, &c.] The worship of the Lord their God, as the Targum; that is, they fell into idolatry, which is a plain instance and proof of forgetfulness of God; for such that neglect his worship, and serve idols, may be truly said to forget him: he sold them into the hand of Sisera, captain of the host of Hazor; who was general of the army of Jabin king of Canaan, who reigned in Hazor, Judg. iv. 2. where they are said to be sold into the hands of Jabin, here into the hands of Sisera; because it is highly probable he was sent against them by Jabin, and subdued them, as he afterwards was sent by him, when they rebelled against him, and were delivered out of his hand: and into the hand of the Philistines; as they were in and before the times of Samson, Judg. xiii. 1. and into the hand of the king of Moab; as in the times of Ehud, Judg. iii. 14, 15. the exact order of these things is not observed: and they fought against them; the king of Moab, Sisera, and the Philistines, and overcame them, and so they fell into their hands.

℣. 10. And they cried unto the Lord, &c.] When in the hands of their enemies, and in bondage to them, and cruelly oppressed by them: and said, we have sinned; the word for said is in the Cetib, or written text, singular, and in the Keri, or marginal reading, plural; and may signify, that every one of them had a sense of their sin, and made acknowledgment of it; their confession was universal as their sin was: because we have forsaken the Lord; the Word of the Lord, as the Targum: and have served Baalim and Ashtaroth; see the notes on Judg. ii. 11, 13. but now deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will serve thee; they did not ask for a king to go before them, and fight their battles, as they did now, but applied to the Lord for deliverance, promising to serve him as their king and their God.

℣. 11. And the Lord sent Jerubbaal, &c.] Or Gideon, as the Targum, for Jerubbaal was the name given to Gideon, when he first became a judge, Judg. vi. 23. and Bedan; if this was one of the judges, he must have two names, or is one that is not mentioned in the book of Judges; the Targum interprets it of Samson; so Jerom[h], for the word may be rendered in Dan; one in Dan, who was of the tribe tribe of Dan, as Samson was; and it was in the camp of Dan the Spirit of God first came upon him; and Kimchi observes, that it is the same as Ben-dan, the son of Dan, that is, a Danite; and though he was after Jephthah, yet is set before him, because he was a greater man than he; and this way go the generality of Jewish writers [i]; but a man of this name being among the posterity of Manasseh, 1 Chron. vii. 17. Junius, and who is followed by others, thinks, that Jair is meant, and is so called to distinguish him from a more ancient Jair, the son of Manasseh, and with whom the order of the judges better agrees, see Numb. xxxii. 41. Judg. x. 3, 4. but the Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic versions read Barac; and he may the rather be thought to be meant, because he was the instrument of delivering Israel out of the hand of Sisera, the captain of the host of Hazor before mentioned, ℣. 9. and agrees with the words of the apostle, Heb. xi. 32. who mentions those judges much in the same order: and Jephthah, and Samuel; meaning himself, who was the last of the judges, and who speaks of himself as of a third person, as Lamech does, Gen. iv. 23. and this he did not out of ostentation, but to observe that God had made him an instrument of delivering them out of the hand of the Philistines, which must be fresh in their memory, as he had made use of others before him, when he sent judges, and not kings, and therefore they had no need to ask a king. The Syriac and Arabic versions read Samson instead of Samuel, and which also agrees best with Heb. xi. 32. and delivered you out of the hands of your enemies on every side; not the judges, but the Lord; for the word for delivered is of the singular number: and ye dwelled safe; in the greatest security and confidence, without any fear of enemies, having God their king in the midst of them, and stood in no need of any other king to protect and defend them.

[g] ויאמר & dixit, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Drusius.

[h] Heb. Trad. in lib. Reg. fol. 75. K.

℣. 12. And when ye saw that Nahash the king of the children of Ammon came against you, &c.] Or but yet [k]; however, notwithstanding though the Lord had been so kind and gracious to them, as to raise up judges one after another to deliver them, when they cried unto him, yet when they perceived that Nahash the Ammonite was preparing to make war with them, instead of applying to the Lord for his protection, they desired to have a king to go before them, and fight their battles, as follows: nay, but a king shall reign over us; tho' Samuel told them they had no need of one: when the Lord your God was your king; and would protect and defend them, if they applied to him, and would put their trust in him; and he himself Samuel was their judge, and would be their general and commander, and they had experience of success under him to the utter destruction of their enemies, ch. vii. 10. and yet notwithstanding all this, they insisted upon it to have a king. According to Abarbinel, this preparation of Nahash to war with them, was after they had asked for a king, and was a punishment of them for their request; and yet they repented not of it, but in effect said, though Nahash, and all the enemies in the world come against us, we'll not go back from our request, but insist on it, that we have a king to reign over us; such was their obstinacy and perverseness.

℣. 13. Now therefore behold the king whom ye have chosen, and whom ye have desired, &c.] For though God chose their king for them, it was at their request; they chose to have a king, and desired one, and they approved of and consented to, and confirmed the choice he had made, and so it was in effect their own: and behold, the Lord hath set a king over you; he gratified them in their desires, though he did not suffer them to make themselves a king, he suffered them to have one, and he gave them one; this power he reserved to himself of setting up and pulling down kings at his pleasure.

℣. 14. If ye will fear the Lord, and serve him, and obey his voice, &c.] All worship and service of God, and obedience to his word and ordinances, should spring from fear and reverence of him; and therefore the whole of worship, both external and internal, is sometimes expressed by the fear of the Lord: and not rebel against the commandment of the Lord; break it, and thereby exasperate him, and provoke him to wrath and bitterness: then shall both ye, and also the king that reigneth over you, continue following the Lord your God; the Targum is, "after the worship of the Lord your God;" which was their duty to do, and is expressed in the preceding clauses; and this therefore is rather a promise of some benefit and privilege to their duty, and to encourage them to it, since it stands opposed to the threatening of punishment in the next verse; and the words in the original are, then shall ye, &c. be after the Lord your God [l]; that is, though they had in effect rejected the Lord from being their king, by asking and having one; yet notwithstanding, if they and their king were obedient to the commands of the Lord, he would not cast them off, but they should follow him as their guide, leader and director, and he would protect and defend them as a shepherd does his sheep that follow after him; so Jarchi takes it to be a promise of long life and happiness to them and their king, "ye shall be established to length of days, both ye and the king."

℣. 15. But if ye will not obey the voice of the Lord, but rebel against the commandment of the Lord, &c.] They and their king, by sinning, disregarding his precepts, both affirmative and negative: then shall the hand of the Lord be against you; by sending some judgments upon them, as famine, sword, or pestilence, particularly captivity and subjection to their enemies: as it was against your fathers; who had no king; and it is suggested that their case, who had one, would be no better than theirs; their king would not be able to save them from the hand of God: the words in the original are, and against your fathers [m]; which is interpreted in the Talmud [n] of their fathers dead, and in their graves, and of their enemies, digging them up, and taking them out in contempt; but much better by Kimchi, of their kings, who are, or should be fathers of their subjects, as Augustus Cæsar was called the father of his; and so the Septuagint version renders it, and upon their king; signifying that both they and their king should feel the weight of the hand of the Lord, if they rebelled against him.

℣. 16. Now therefore stand, &c.] Which does not so much respect the position of their bodies, as the fixed attention of their minds: and see this great thing which the Lord will do before your eyes; meaning the storm of thunder and rain which presently ſently followed; which coming at a time when ſuch things were not uſual, and on a day when there was no appearance or likelihood of any thing of this kind, and ſuddenly, at once, upon the prayer of Samuel, it was no leſs than a miracle, and might be called a great thing, new and unheard-of, and the pure effect of almighty power.

[i] So in T. Bab. Roshhashanah, fol. 25. 1. Vatablus, Piscator. [k] וְרְאוֹ videntes autem, V. L. sed, Tigurine version; & tamen, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine version, Piscator. [l] תִּהְיוּ־אַחַר יְהוָה eritis post Dominum, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine version, Piscator. [m] וּבַאֲבוֹתֵיכֶם & contra patres vestros, Pagninus, Tigurine version. [n] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 63. 2.

℣. 17. Is it not wheat-harveſt to-day? &c] Of the time of wheat-harveſt, ſee ch. vi. 13. Rain uſually fell in Judea only twice a year, called the former and the latter rain; and from the 17th of Niſan or March, to the 16th of Marcheſvan or October, it was not uſual for rain to fall, and ſo not in harveſt, at that time eſpecially, ſee Prov. xxvi. 1. Amos iv. 7. R. Joſeph Kimchi ſays, in the land of Iſrael rain never fell all the days of harveſt; and this is confirmed by Jerom, who lived long in thoſe parts, ; who ſays [o], at the end of the month of June, and in the month of July, we never ſaw rain in thoſe provinces, eſpecially in Judea. And Samuel not only by putting this queſtion, would have them obſerve, that it was the time of wheat-harveſt in general; but on that day in particular the men were at work in the fields reaping the wheat, &c. and ſo was not cloudy, and inclining to rain, but all ſerene and clear, or otherwiſe they would not have been employed in cutting down the corn; all which made the following caſe the more remarkable: I will call unto the Lord, and he ſhall ſend thunder and rain; in a miraculous and preternatural way, there being nothing in nature preparatory thereunto, and this purely at the prayer of Samuel: that ye may perceive and ſee that your wickedneſs is great, which ye have done in the ſight of the Lord, in aſking you a king; was attended with aggravated circumſtances, and highly offenſive to God, though he had gratified them in it, of which this violent ſtorm would be an indication, and might ſerve to convince them of their folly, as well as of their wickedneſs, and that they had no need of a king, ſince Samuel their judge could do as much or more by his prayers, than a king could do by his ſword; and of which they had had ſufficient proof before this, and that in the ſame way, ch. vii. 10.

℣. 18. So Samuel called unto the Lord, &c.] Not in an authoritative way, or by way of command, but by prayer; ſo the Targum renders the clauſe in the preceding verſe, "I will pray before the Lord:" and the Lord ſent thunder and rain that day; immediately, though there was no appearance of it; it was harveſt-time, and a fine harveſt-day. Joſephus ſays [p], he ſent thunder, lightening and hail, a terrible ſtorm and tempeſt it was: and all the people greatly feared the Lord and Samuel; the Lord that ſent this tempeſt, and Samuel who had ſuch power with God in prayer. Clement of Alexandria [q] thinks, that from hence the Greeks borrowed their fable concerning Æacus invoking God, when there was a drought in Greece; and as ſoon as he prayed, immediately there was thunder, and the whole air was covered with clouds; but perhaps they rather framed it from the inſtance of Elijah praying for rain [r], at whoſe requeſt it came, 1 Kings xviii. 42.

℣. 19. And all the people ſaid unto Samuel, &c.] During the tempeſt, and in the midſt of it; it was the general cry of the people, they were unanimous in it: pray for thy ſervants unto the Lord thy God, that we die not; though they had rejected him as their judge and ſupreme governor in deſiring a king, now they were his humble ſervants, at leaſt feignedly; and knowing what intereſt he had with God in prayer, they intreat him to make uſe of it on their behalf, who having ſinned ſo greatly, had not the aſſurance to call the Lord their God, tho' they had no doubt of his being the God of Samuel, whoſe prayers he had heard, of which this tempeſt was a full proof; and was ſo violent, that if it continued, they were afraid they ſhould be deſtroyed by the thunder and lightening, or they and their cattle, with the fruits of the earth, be waſhed away with the prodigious rain: for we have added unto all our ſins this evil, to aſk us a king; though Samuel had laid before them the evils and inconveniences of having a king, and had in the name of the Lord charged them with rejecting God as their king; yet nothing convinced them of their evil till this ſtorm came, and then all their ſins came freſh to their minds; and this added to the weight of them, and lay heavieſt on them, that they had rejected the Lord, and ſlighted his prophets, and, notwithſtanding all remonſtrances, reſolved on having a king.

℣. 20. And Samuel ſaid unto the people, fear not, &c.] Being deſtroyed by the tempeſt: ye have done all this wickedneſs; in aſking a king; that is, though they were guilty of ſo heinous a ſin, yet there were grace and mercy with God, and they ſhould not deſpair of it, ſo be it, that they did not depart from him, but cordially ſerved him; the Targum is, "ye have been the cauſe of all this evil;" the ſtorm of thunder and rain; and though they had, he would not have them deſpond or indulge ſlaviſh fear: yet turn not aſide from following the Lord; the worſhip of the Lord, as the Targum; provided they did not depart from the Lord, and forſake his worſhip, word and ordinances, they need not fear utter ruin and deſtruction, though they had been guilty of this ſin: but ſerve the Lord with all your heart; if their ſervice of God was kept up, and was hearty and ſincere, they might ſtill expect things would go well with them.

℣. 21. And turn ye not aſide, &c.] From his worſhip: for then; if they turned aſide from that: ſhould ye go after vain things; idols which are vanity, and leſs than vanity; which cannot profit nor deliver; neither beſtow good things on their votaries, nor deliver them from evils, or from the hands of their enemies: for they are vain; empty, uſeleſs, and unprofitable; an idol is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. viii. 4.

℣. 22. For the Lord will not forſake his people for his great name-ſake.] For the ſake of himſelf, his honour and glory; ſhould he forſake his people, and ſuffer them to come to ruin, his name would be blaſphemed among the heathens; he would be charged either with want of power to help them, or with want of faithfulneſs to his promiſe to them, and with inconſtancy to himſelf, or want of kindneſs and affection for them; all which would reflect upon his honour and glory: becauſe it hath pleaſed the Lord to make you his people; it was not owing to any worth or worthineſs in them that they became his people, but to his own ſovereign good-will and pleaſure; and therefore, as it was nothing in them that was the cauſe of their being taken by him for his people, ſo nothing in them could be the cauſe of their being rejected by him him as ſuch; it was of free grace and favour that they were taken into covenant with him, and by the ſame would be retained: the Vulgate Latin verſion is, "the Lord hath ſworn to make you a people for himſelf;" ſo Jarchi interprets it, he ſwore, and takes it to have the ſame ſenſe as in ch. xiv. 24.

[o] Comment in Amos iv. 7. [p] Antiq. l. 6. c. 5. §. 6. [q] Stromat. l. 6. p. 630. [r] Vid. Schmid. in Pindar. Nemea, Ode 5. p. 110.

℣. 23. Moreover, as for me, &c.] As he had given them reaſon to believe, that God would forgive their ſin, by which they had offended him, in rejecting him as their king, ſo he likewiſe forgave their offence againſt him in rejecting him as their governor under him, and ſo neither need fear the Lord nor him with a ſervile fear; and as God would ſtill be gracious to them, if they abode by his ſervice, ſo he, Samuel, would do all the good offices for them that lay in his power: God forbid that I ſhould ſin againſt the Lord, in ceaſing to pray for you; for ſince they had returned to the Lord, and acknowledged their ſin, it would have been an evil in him not to pray for them, that they might ſhare in the pardoning grace and mercy of God, and have all good things beſtowed upon them they ſtood in need of; this he judged to be his duty to do, and therefore abhorred the thought of being indifferent to it, negligent of it, or of dropping it: but I will teach you the good and the right way; would not only pray for them, but inſtruct them in the way of their duty; a way that was a good one, agreeable to the will and word of God, and in walking in which good things were enjoyed, and which being a good way, muſt needs be a right way; though Samuel ceaſed to be a judge and chief magiſtrate among them, he ſhould not ceaſe to act the part of a prophet to them, both by his prayers and by his inſtructions.

℣. 24. Only fear the Lord, and ſerve him in truth with all your heart, &c.] Fear him not with a ſervile fear, which is before dehorted from, but with a filial fear, a reverential affection for God; and includes the whole of religious worſhip, internal and external; explained farther by ſerving him according to the truth of his word, and in a cordial, ſincere and affectionate manner; and if this was wanting in them, he ſuggeſts, that his prayers and inſtructions would be of little avail, and not to be depended on: for conſider how great things he hath done for you; in bringing them out of Egypt; ſettling them in the land of Canaan; giving them his laws, ſtatutes, commands and ordinances; ſending prophets unto them, and raiſing up judges for them, and beſtowing all good things on them, in nature, providence and grace; though ſome reſtrain this to the great thing he had done that day, to convince them of their ſin, and by which they were returned to the Lord, namely, the violent ſtorm of thunder; which wonderful inſtance of the power of God, and token of his diſpleaſure againſt them, they were to lay up in their minds, and not forget, that it might be a means of preſerving them from ſin for the future.

℣. 25. But if ye ſhall ſtill do wickedly, &c.] Continue to rebel againſt God, revolt from him, and depart from his worſhip, and deſpiſe his prophets, and ſerve idols: ye ſhall be conſumed, both ye and your king; their king would be ſo far from protecting, that he ſhould periſh with them, be killed by the ſword, as Saul their firſt king was, or go into captivity, as others of their kings did.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter relates how Saul diſpoſed of his army, ℣. 1, 2. that Jonathan his ſon ſmote a garriſon of Philiſtines, which provoked them to come out with a large army againſt them, to the great terror of the Iſraelites, many of whom fled to ſecret places, and to diſtant parts, ℣. 3—7. that Saul tarried at Gilgal waiting for Samuel, but he not coming ſo ſoon as expected, offered ſacrifice himſelf, ℣. 8—10. for which Samuel, when he came, reproved him, and told him the kingdom ſhould not continue with him, but be given to another man, ℣. 11—14. on which Saul departed to Gibeah, where he continued, the Philiſtines being encamped at Michmaſh, ℣. 15, 16. from whence went out ſpoilers, in three companies, into the land of Iſrael, where they met with no oppoſition; for there were no weapons in the hands of any but Saul and Jonathan, the Philiſtines having taken care that there ſhould be no ſmith in the land of Iſrael to make them any, ſo that they were defenceleſs, ℣. 17—23.

℣. 1. Saul reigned one year, &c.] Or the ſon of a year in his reigning[a]: various are the ſenſes given of theſe words; ſome interpret them, Saul had a ſon of a year old when he began to reign, Iſh-boſheth, and who was forty years of age when his father died, 2 Sam. ii. 10. others, who underſtand the words of Saul himſelf, think there is an ellipſis or defect of the number, and that it may be ſupplied, that Saul was the ſon of thirty or forty years, or whatſoever age he may be ſuppoſed to be at when he began his reign; others take the words in a figurative ſenſe, that he was like a child of a year old, for purity and innocence; ſo the Targum, "as the ſon of a year, in whom there are no faults, ſo was Saul when he reigned;" or he was but a year old, reckoning from the time he was turned into another man, and had another heart, which was immediately after he was anointed king at Ramah by Samuel; or he was but a year old with reſpect to his kingdom: the inauguration of a king is natalis imperii, the birth-day of his kingdom, and therefore the words are well enough rendered by us, Saul reigned one year; which is to be reckoned either from his unction at Ramah, or rather from his election at Mizpeh, to the renewal of the kingdom at Gilgal: and when he had reigned two years over Iſrael; which the Jewiſh chronologers[b] make to be the whole of his reign, which is not probable, conſidering the many things done in his reign, the many battles he fought with all his his enemies on every ſide of him, and his long perſecution of David; and there were no leſs than three high-prieſts in his reign; Joſephus ſays [q] he reigned 18 years in the life-time of Samuel, and 22 years after his death, in all 40; which agrees with Acts xiii. 21. Some interpret it he reigned two years well, and the reſt in a tyrannical way; or that at the end of two years, when David was anointed, the kingdom was not reckoned to him, but to David; and to this purpoſe Dr. Lightfoot writes, that he had been king one year from his firſt anointing by Samuel at Ramah, to his ſecond anointing by him at Gibeah; (Gilgal I ſuppoſe he means); and he reigned after this two years more, before the Lord caſt him off, and anointed David; and the time he ruled after that, was not a rule, but a tyranny and perſecution [r]; but the ſenſe Ben Gerſom gives is beſt of all, that one year had paſſed from the time of his being anointed, to the time of the renewal of the kingdom at Gilgal; and when he had reigned two years over Iſrael, then he did what follows, choſe 3000 men, &c. In the firſt year of his reign was done all that is recorded in the preceding chapter, and when he had reigned two years, not two years more, but two years in all, then he did what is related in this chapter.

[a] בן שנה שאול במלכו filius anni Saul in regnando ipſum, Montanus. [b] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 13. p. 35. Juchaſin, fol. 11. 1.

℣. 2. Saul choſe him 3000 men of Iſrael, &c.] Out of the 300,000 that went with him to fight the Ammonites, and returned with him to Gilgal, where he now was, and had ſtayed as may be ſuppoſed about a year, ſince now he had reigned two years. Theſe 3000 men ſome of them doubtleſs were appointed as a guard about his perſon, and the reſt were a ſtanding army to preſerve the peace of the nation, to protect them from their enemies, to watch the motions of the Philiſtines, and to be ready on any ſudden invaſion: whereof 2000 were with Saul in Michmaſh, and in mount Beth-el; Michmaſh, according to Bunting [s], was 4 miles from Gilgal. Jerom [t] ſays, in his time it was ſhewn a large village on the borders of Ælia, or Jeruſalem, retaining its ancient name, 9 miles diſtant from it, near the village Rama. Adrichomius [u] ſays it is now called Byra, and Mr. Maundrel [w] obſerves, that it is ſuppoſed by ſome to be the ſame with Beer, whither Jotham fled after he had delivered his parable, Judg. ix. 21. Michmaſh is in the Miſnah [x] celebrated for the beſt wheat being brought from it, and near to it, as appears from hence, was Bethel, and the mount of that name; and ſo Jerom [y] ſpeaks of Bethel, as over againſt Michmaſh; and this mount very probably is the ſame ſaid to be on the eaſt of Bethel, where Abraham built an altar, Gen. xii. 8. for Michmaſh lay to the eaſt of Bethel: and 1000 were with Jonathan in Gibeah of Benjamin; the native place of Saul, and this Jonathan was the ſon of Saul, ℣. 16. According to Bunting [z] Gibeah where Jonathan was ſtationed was 8 miles from Michmaſh: and the reſt of the people he ſent every man to his tent; to their own houſes; or, as the Targum, to their cities; theſe were they that came at his ſummons, and were numbered at Bezek, and went with him to the relief of Jabeſh-gilead, and had been with him ever ſince, and now diſmiſſed.

℣. 3. And Jonathan ſmote the garriſon of the Philiſtines that was in Geba, &c.] Not the ſame with Gibeah of Benjamin, as Jarchi; for it can hardly be thought that Jonathan ſhould place himſelf with his thouſand men where the Philiſtines had a garriſon; or that if this was the ſame with that in the preceding verſe, that it ſhould be called by another name in this; but Gibeah and Geba were two places, as Kimchi obſerves, both indeed in the tribe of Benjamin, and it is very probable not far from one another; ſee Joſh. xviii. 24, 28. This ſeems to be the ſame with the hill of God, where was a garriſon of the Philiſtines, ch. x. 5. who after their defeat by Samuel contented themſelves with ſome ſtrong holds and garriſons in ſome parts of the land to keep Iſrael in awe; the Targum underſtands this of a ſingle perſon, a governor of the Philiſtines in this place, whom Jonathan ſlew, and ſo Jarchi; and according to R. Iſaiah he was one that was appointed to gather the tax for them: and the Philiſtines heard of it; which alarmed them, and made them prepare for war: and Saul blew the trumpet throughout all the land; not he in perſon, for he was at Gilgal, as the next verſe ſhews; but he ordered it to be blown, being aware of the preparations the Philiſtines were making to attack him: ſaying, let the Hebrews hear; both what his ſon had done, and what the Philiſtines were doing.

℣. 4. And all Iſrael heard ſay that Saul had ſmitten a garriſon of the Philiſtines, &c.] For though it was ſmitten by Jonathan, yet it was by the order of Saul, and ſo aſcribed to him; it ſeems to be a concerted thing to fall upon the garriſons of the Philiſtines, and get them out of their hands, and ſo deliver Iſrael entirely from them; but it was impolitic in Saul, if he had ſuch a ſcheme in his head, to diſband his large army, as he had lately done: and that Iſrael alſo was had in abomination with the Philiſtines; who were highly incenſed againſt them by this action, and vowed revenge; the name of an Iſraelite was abhorred by them; and perhaps this action might be attended with much craft and cruelty; and if theſe garriſons were held by agreement, they might charge them with perfidy, with breach of articles, and ſo their name was made to ſtink among them, as the word ſignifies: and the people were called together after Saul to Gilgal; by ſound of trumpet.

℣. 5. And the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together to fight with Iſrael, &c.] To prevent their further encroachments on them, and deſigns againſt them; for they perceived they intended to caſt off their yoke, and free themſelves entirely from them: 30,000 chariots, and 6000 horſemen; it may ſeem incredible, that ſo ſmall a people as the Philiſtines were, who only were poſſeſſed of five cities, or lordſhips, with the villages belonging to them, except what they had taken from Iſrael; and even if aſſiſted by the Tyrians, as the author of Eccleſiaſticus ſays, ch. xlvi. 20. though he ſeems to have reſpect not to this time, but when Samuel diſcomfited them, ch. vii. 10. I ſay it may ſeem incredible, that they ſhould bring ſuch a number of chariots into the field; wherefore this muſt either be underſtood of 30,000 men that fought in chariots, as Lyra interprets it, and in which ſenſe it is plain and certain the word chariots is ſometimes uſed, as in 2 Sam. x. 18. 1 Kings xx. 21. 1 Chron. xix. 18. or elſe of ſome ſort of carriages, not chariots of war, at leaſt not all of them; but what were brought to to carry the baggage of their infantry, which was very large, and to carry away the goods and substance of the Israelites; some have thought that there is a mistake of the copier, who instead of שלש three, read שלשים thirty; so Capellus; and the rather because in the Arabic and Syriac versions it is only three thousand; but even this is too great a number, understood of chariots of war; for never any people in the world was known to have so many chariots of war; Pharaoh in his large host had but 600, Exod. xiv. 7. Jabin king of Canaan had indeed 900, Judg. iv. 3. and David took from the king of Zobah 1000 chariots; but whether they were all chariots of war is not certain, 2 Sam. viii. 4. Solomon indeed had 1400 chariots, but they don't appear to be chariots of war, but some for use, and some for state and grandeur. Wherefore if a mistake in the copy is admitted of, and this can be confirmed by some MSS. yet we must recur to one or other of the above senses; some of them must be understood of other sort of carriages, or of men that fought in these chariots; and allowing ten men to a chariot, which seems to be the usual number by comparing 2 Sam. x. 18 with 1 Chron. xix. 18. then 3000 men would fill 300 chariots, which are as many as it can well be thought the Philistines had. Zerah the Ethiopian, who brought into the field an army of 1,000,00 men, had no more than 300 chariots, 2 Chron. xiv. 9. and no more had Antiochus Eupator in his army, 2 Maccab. xiii. 2. Darius in his vast army had but 200 [a], and in the very large one which Mithridates brought against the Romans, there was but 100; and now 3000 men in 300 chariots were but a proportion to 6000 horsemen, which in those times and countries was a large cavalry: and the people as the sand which is on the sea-shore in multitude; the infantry was so large as not to be numbered; however the phrase denotes a great multitude of them; Josephus says [b] there were 300,000 foot: and they came up, and pitched in Michmash, eastward from Bethaven; where Saul, before he went to Gilgal, had his quarters, ℣. 2. Bethaven was a place near Bethel, on the east of it, Josh. vii 2. though Bethel itself was afterwards so called when Jeroboam had set up the worship of the calves there, Hos. iv. 15. it signifying the house of vanity or iniquity.

[q] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 14. §. 9. [r] Works, vol. I. p. 55. [s] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 126. [t] De loc. Heb. fol. 93. F. [u] Theatrum terræ S. p. 28. [w] Journey from Aleppo, p. 64. [x] Menachot, c. 8. §. 1. [y] Ut ſupra, fol. 89. G. [z] Ut ſupra, p. 127.

℣. 6. When the men of Israel saw they were in a strait, for the people were distressed, &c.] By reason of the vast army that the Philistines brought into the field, greatly superior to theirs, and were likely to be encompassed by them on every side; so that nothing but destruction was expected, which gave them the utmost anxiety and uneasiness; though Abarbinel refers this last clause, not to the people of Israel, but to the people of the Philistines, and takes it in this sense, for the people drew nigh; the army of the Philistines was approaching, and got near to them; and so they were in great danger of being quickly attacked by them, and destroyed, their numbers being so great: then the people did hide themselves in caves; of which there were many in the land of Judea, capable of receiving a large number, as the cave of Adullam, the cave of Engedi, &c. and such as the Israelites made to hide themselves when oppressed by the Midianites, Judg. vi. 2. and in thickets; woods and forests, or among thorns, as Jarchi; where there was a very great number of brambles and thorn-bushes; some, as Kimchi, interpret the word, of munitions, garrisons, and fortified places, to which they betook themselves: in rocks, and in high places, and in pits; in the holes of rocks and mountains, particularly in mount Ephraim; see ch. xiv. 22. and where there were any pits or ditches, high or deep places, where they might be out of sight, and be sheltered from their enemies

℣. 7. And some of the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead, &c.] As far off as they could from the Philistines, who lay on the west of the land of Israel, and these countries were to the east. Kimchi observes, that the land of Reuben is not mentioned, which was on the other side Jordan also; because that was nearer to it than what was inhabited by Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh; and therefore they chose to go farther, thinking themselves there safer: as for Saul, he was yet in Gilgal; where he stayed till Samuel should come to him, as directed, ch. x. 8. to have his advice and counsel: and all the people followed him trembling; all that were with him, the army as distinct from the common people; they abode by him, and were at his command, and were ready to go where he should direct them; but with trembling hearts when they saw the panic of the people, fleeing into holes and corners, and considered what a huge host the Philistines were coming upon them with, and Samuel their prophet not with them to encourage and counsel them.

℣. 8. And he tarried seven days according to the set time that Samuel had appointed, &c.] He tarried to the seventh day, but not to the end of it, or towards the close of it, as he should have done: but Samuel came not to Gilgal; so soon as Saul expected: and the people were scattered from him; many deserted him, the Philistines drawing nigh, and Samuel not coming, as Saul expected, and had given the people reason to expect.

℣. 9. And Saul said, &c.] Being impatient, and seeing the people deserting him apace, and unwilling to engage in a battle without first sacrificing to God, and imploring his help and assistance: bring hither a burnt-offering to me; that is, a creature for a burnt-offering, a bullock, sheep, goat, or lamb: and peace-offerings; which also were either of the herd, or of the flock: and he offered the burnt-offering; either he himself, or by a priest. In this unsettled time, while the tabernacle, altar, and ark, were at different places, and not yet fixed, it is thought that such who were not priests, might offer, and that in high-places, and where the tabernacle and altar were not.

℣. 10. And it came to pass, that as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, &c.] And before he could offer the peace-offerings: behold Samuel came; and it was told Saul that he was come: and Saul went out to meet him; left off sacrificing, and would proceed no farther, leaving the rest for Samuel; and out of respect to him, and to prevent a chiding of him, he went forth to meet him: that he might salute him; or bless him [c]; congratulate him on his coming, ask of his health and welfare, and wish him all peace and prosperity.

℣. 11. And Samuel said, what hast thou done? &c.] This question he put to bring him to a confession of what he had done, otherwise he guessed at it by his countenance; or rather by the prophetic spirit he was endowed with, he knew it certainly that he had offered the sacrifices without waiting for him: and Saul said, because I saw the people were were ſcattered from me; they were deſerting, and he feared if he ſtaid any longer, they would all leave him; this was one reaſon of doing what he did: and that thou cameſt not within the days appointed; ſeven days were appointed, and becauſe the ſeventh day was come, though it was not gone, he concluded Samuel would not come at all; and that was another reaſon why he did what he did; and by this would have laid the blame on Samuel, as if he did not keep his time; whereas it was Saul's impatience that hurried him to this action: and that the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together to Michmaſh; where his ſtation before was, and from thence he might quickly expect them at Gilgal; and this was another reaſon why he haſtened the ſacrifice.

[a] Curtius, l. 4. c. 9. [b] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 6. §. 1. [c] לברכו ad benedicendum ei, Montanus.

℣. 12. Therefore ſaid I, &c.] That is, within himſelf: the Philiſtines will come down now upon me to Gilgal; on a ſudden unprepared for them, eſpecially in a religious way: and I have not made ſupplication to the Lord; for his direction and aſſiſtance, and for ſucceſs in the war; which it ſeems went along with ſacrifices, or was implied in them: I forced myſelf therefore, and offered a burnt-offering; it was reluctant to him, it was againſt his will, as well as the command of Samuel, to offer before he came, he ſuggeſts; but ſuch were the circumſtances he was in, that he was obliged to it; theſe are the reaſons or excuſes he made, and ſome of them have a ſpecious appearance in them.

℣. 13. And Samuel ſaid to Saul, thou haſt done fooliſhly, &c.] Not by intruding himſelf into the prieſts office, with that he is not charged, but not waiting the full time till Samuel came; which ſhewed his impatience, diſregard to Samuel, and diſtruſt of God; and though he thought he had acted wiſely, and taken the proper precautions in his circumſtances, yet he acted fooliſhly; and though a king, Samuel being a prophet of the Lord, and in his name, ſpared not to tell him ſo: thou haſt not kept the commandment of the Lord thy God, which he commanded thee; by his prophet, that he ſhould wait ſeven days for his coming, who would then offer ſacrifices, and tell him what he ſhould do; and not to keep the commandment of God, was acting a fooliſh part: for now would the Lord have eſtabliſhed thy kingdom upon Iſrael for ever; that is, for a long time, on his ſon, and ſon's ſon; and then, according to promiſe and prophecy, it would come to one of the tribe of Judah; but now ſeeing he had acted ſuch a part, it ſhould not continue long in his family, no longer than his own life, and quickly come into other hands.

℣. 14. But now thy kingdom ſhall not continue, &c.] That is, in his family, nor in his tribe, but be removed to another: the Lord hath ſought him a man after his own heart; who was David; tho' as yet Samuel knew him not, he knew by divine revelation that there was one pitched upon, to whom the kingdom would be given; a man every way agreeable to the will of God, and who would fulfil his will, though he knew not particularly who he was: and the Lord hath commanded him to be captain over his people; that is, had appointed him to be king over Iſrael. God's decrees have the force of a law in them, and muſt be fulfilled; and can't be reſiſted ſo as to be fruſtrated: becauſe thou haſt not kept that which the Lord hath commanded thee; it matters not whether the thing commanded is greater or leſs, it is diſobedience to the command that is the ſin, and is reſented: this might ſeem a ſmall thing, ſince to offer the ſacrifice was not criminal; but doing it before the time, a little before it ſhould have been done, not waiting long enough for the prophet; yet it being againſt the command of God, or in neglect of it, it was ſinful, and ſeverely chaſtized; and the rather, that it might be an example to all ſucceeding kings how they offended, or broke the leaſt of God's commandments; and this being the firſt king of Iſrael, he was made an example of to the reſt.

℣. 15. And Samuel aroſe, &c.] Seemingly in wrath and diſpleaſure, not ſtaying to offer up the peace-offerings which remained; and though no mention is made of Saul's going with him, yet it ſeems as if he did, or at leaſt quickly followed him, as appears from the next verſe: and got him up from Gilgal unto Gibeah of Benjamin; the native place of Saul, thereby directing Saul where he ſhould go, and which might be a ſtronger place than Gilgal; or however where he might expect to be joined by more perſons of his own tribe, as well as in the firſt place protect and defend that; and it looks by Samuel's going thither, though he was diſpleaſed with Saul, yet that he did not intend to forſake him directly and entirely: and Saul numbered the people that were preſent with him, about 600 men; which was done either before he left Gilgal, or as ſoon as he came to Gibeah; ſo great a deſertion was there from him, that of the 3000 firſt choſen by him, and of the people after called and gathered to him at Gilgal, only 600 remained with him; a ſmall number indeed to encounter ſo large an army the Philiſtines had brought into the field, and which therefore Saul could not face.

℣. 16. And Saul and Jonathan his ſon, &c.] Who were now joined to their men, on Saul's coming to Gibeah: and the people that were preſent with them; the 600 men before numbered: abode in Gibeah of Benjamin; being perhaps a ſtrong fortified place, not chooſing to go forth to meet the army of the Philiſtines, ſo vaſtly ſuperior to them: but the Philiſtines encamped at Michmaſh; the old quarters of Saul before he went to Gilgal, ℣. 2.

℣. 17. And the ſpoilers came out of the camp of the Philiſtines in three companies, &c.] Saul not daring to come out to fight them, and there being none throughout the land to oppoſe them, they ſent out three companies of ſoldiers to ravage and ſpoil the country; of ſo little uſe and ſervice was a king to Iſrael, they were ſo extremely deſirous of; and this was ſuffered to convince them of their vain confidence in him, and that their truſt ought to be in the Lord their God; never was their country more expoſed to rapine and violence than now: one company turned unto the way that leadeth to Ophrah; a city in the land of Benjamin, of which ſee Joſh. xviii. 23. and lay ſouth-weſt from Michmaſh, where the army of the Philiſtines were: unto the land of Shual; which the Targum paraphraſes "the land of the ſouth;" it ſeems to have had its name from the multitude of foxes in it, Shual ſignifying a fox.

℣. 18. And another company turned the way to Bethoron, &c.] Of which name there were two cities, the upper and nether, and both in the tribe of Ephraim, of which ſee Joſh. xvi. 3, 5. this lay north-weſt from the camp of the Philiſtines at Michmaſh; 8 miles from it, according to Bunting [d]: and another company turned to the way of the border, that looketh towards the valley of Zeboim, toward toward the wilderneſs; ſome take this to be the Zeboim which was deſtroyed with Sodom and Gomorrah; and the wilderneſs, the wilderneſs of Jordan; but as that, ſo the valley in which it ſtood was turned into a bituminous lake; this ſeems to be a city in the land of Benjamin, Neh. xi. 34. near to which was a valley, and this towards the wilderneſs of Jericho, and ſo lay eaſtward; the Targum calls it the valley of vipers, perhaps from its being infeſted with many; and ſo David de Pomis [e] ſays it is the name of a place where plenty of ſerpents were found, and which he ſays were called ſo becauſe of the variety of colours in them; with which agrees Kimchi's note on the place; they ſeem to mean ſerpents ſpotted [f], as if they were painted and dyed of various colours, as the Hebrew word which is thus paraphraſed ſignifies: according to Bunting [g], it was eight miles from Michmaſh.

[d] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 133.

℣. 19. Now there was no ſmith found throughout all the land of Iſrael, &c.] The Philiſtines when they ruled over them, having removed them into their own country, and forbid any to learn or exerciſe that trade in Iſrael: for the Philiſtines ſaid, leſt the Hebrews make ſwords or ſpears; this they did to prevent their having arms, and the uſe of them, that they might not rebel againſt them, and fight with them, and overcome them; it was a piece of policy to keep them ſubject to them; ſo Nebuchadnezzar, when he conquered the Jews, and carried them captive, took care particularly to carry away their ſmiths, and left none but the pooreſt ſort of people in the land, 2 Kings xxiv. 14. Jer. xxiv. 1. and Porſena, king of the Etruſci, when he made a covenant with the Romans, upon the expulſion of their kings, made this a condition of peace with them, that they ſhould uſe no iron but in huſbandry [h]. When this courſe was taken by the Philiſtines with the Iſraelites, and how long it had continued, is not certain; it is probable it might be in the ſpace of forty years they ruled over Iſrael, in which Samſon was born, for we never read of any ſword or ſpear that he made uſe of; and though there were two battles in the times of Eli, in both which Iſrael were beaten, they might make uſe only of bows and arrows, ſlings, and ſtones, clubs, &c. as alſo in the battle of Saul with the Ammonites; and as for the defeat of the Philiſtines in the time of Samuel, it was by thunder; and though the Philiſtines were then ſubdued, yet as Samuel grew old, they regained their power in a good meaſure, and the Iſraelites had not ſpirit enough to oppoſe them, nor diligence and induſtry to learn and revive the trade of ſmiths among them; not even for what was neceſſary to huſbandry, as the following verſe ſhews.

℣. 20. But all the Iſraelites went down to the Philiſtines, &c.] Were obliged to go into Paleſtine, into ſome one or other of the cities of the Philiſtines, or to their garriſons, where the trade of a ſmith was exerciſed: to ſharpen every man his ſhare and his coulter; which are the parts of the plough made of iron, with which the earth is cut and thrown up: and his ax and his mattock; or pick-ax; with the one wood is felled and cut, and with the other ſtones are dug; and each of theſe for their ſeveral uſes needed ſharpening; and when they did, they were obliged to go to the Philiſtines to have them done, they having no ſmiths among them.

℣. 21. Yet they had a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, &c.] Thoſe that would not go to the Philiſtines, or were not able, or thought it too much trouble, theſe kept files by them to ſharpen thoſe ſeveral inſtruments with upon occaſion; though the words are by ſome rendered in connexion with the preceding, to this ſenſe, that they went to the Philiſtines to ſharpen them, when the mouths, or edges, of the mattocks, coulters, &c. were dull; or blunt [i]; and ſo needed ſharpening: and even to ſharpen the goads; with which they pricked and puſhed on the oxen in ploughing, when ſluggiſh and remiſs.

℣. 22. So it came to paſs in the day of battle, &c.] When that drew near, and they were called to it, and obliged to fight or flee, or ſurrender: that there were neither ſword nor ſpear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan; which was not owing to their leaving them behind in the camp, or caſting them away from them through fear, as they followed Saul with trembling, but to the cauſe now mentioned. In what manner ſome preceding battles were fought with the Philiſtines and Ammonites notwithſtanding, have been accounted for on ℣. 19. but it is ſtrange that the Iſraelites did not furniſh themſelves with the arms of the Philiſtines at the defeat of them in Eben-Ezer, ch. vii. 10, 11. and with the arms of the Ammonites at Jabeſh Gilead, ch. xi. 11. and that ſuch a warlike prince as Saul appeared at his firſt ſetting out to be, ſhould not in the firſt place take care to provide armour for his men by ſome means or another; for that thoſe that left him ſhould have arms, and not thoſe that abode with him, does not ſeem reaſonable. It may be the Benjaminites, being expert in ſlinging, were indifferent to and neglected the uſe of any other weapon, or method of fighting: but with Saul and with Jonathan his ſon was there found; ſwords and ſpears, and with them only.

℣. 23. And the garriſon of the Philiſtines went out to the paſſage of Michmaſh;] According to Jarchi theſe two places, Michmaſh where the Philiſtines were, and Gibeah where Saul and Jonathan were, lay on two hills over againſt each other, and there was a valley between them; and the garriſon of the Philiſtines drew nigh to the paſſage of Michmaſh, which led to the ſide of Gibeah, to the valley between them, either with an intention to beſiege Gibeah, or to dare Iſrael to come out and fight them: but rather it ſeems to be ſome ſtrong paſs between the rocks near Michmaſh, where the garriſon placed themſelves to guard and keep againſt any ſudden ſurprize; ſee ch. xiv. 4. The Targum is, "the governor of the Philiſtines went out to the ford or paſſage of Michmaſh;" and Kimchi interprets it of the princes or generals of the army; theſe might go to mark out a camp, and pitch upon a proper place to draw up in a line of battle.

CHAP.

[e] Machmach David, fol. 13. 2. & 153. 1.
[f] αιολον οφιν, Homer. Iliad. 12. ver. 208. notis maculoſus grandibus, Virg. Georgic. l. 3. v. 427.
[g] Ut ſupra.
[h] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 31. c. 14.
[i] וחיתה הפצירות retuſæ itaque erant acies vomerum, V. L. quandoquidem acies cultrorum aratri, &c. obtuſæ erant, Targum, or verſion.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter gives an account of an adventure of Jonathan and his armour-bearer, ſmiting a garriſon of the Philiſtines, ℣. 1—14. which with other circumſtances ſtruck terror into the whole army; which being obſerved by Saul's ſpies, he and his men went out againſt them, and being joined by others, purſued them, and obtained a complete victory, ℣. 15—23. but what ſullied the glory of the day, was a raſh oath of Saul's, adjuring the people not to eat any food till evening, which Jonathan not hearing of ignorantly broke, ℣. 24—31. and which long faſting made the people ſo ravenous, that they ſlew their cattle, and eat them with the blood, contrary to the law of God, for which they were reproved by Saul, ℣. 32, 33, 34. upon which he built an altar, and enquired of the Lord whether he ſhould purſue the Philiſtines all that night till morning, but had no anſwer; which made him conclude ſin was committed, and which he enquired after, declaring that if it was his own ſon Jonathan that had committed it he ſhould ſurely die, ℣. 35—39. the people being ſilent, he caſt lots, and the lot fell upon Jonathan; who had it not been for the reſolution of the people that reſcued him out of his hands, becauſe of the great ſalvation he had wrought, muſt have died, ℣. 40—46. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of Saul's battles with the neighbouring nations in general, and of his family, ℣. 47—52.

℣. 1. Now it came to paſs upon a day, &c.] At a certain time, a little after the garriſon of the Philiſtines had made the movement, ch. xiii. 23. and it is not to be taken ſtrictly for the day-time; for it is probable it was in the night that the following propoſal was made, and began to be carried into execution; for Joſephus [k] ſays it was day-light when Jonathan and his armour-bearer came to the camp of the Philiſtines; he had formed his ſcheme perhaps the night before, and he and his man ſet out in the night-time, and by break of day came up to the garriſon as after related: that Jonathan the ſon of Saul ſaid unto the young man that bare his armour; as was uſual in thoſe times for generals of armies to have ſuch, and ſo in after times; ſuch were Automedon to Achilles, and Achates to Æneas, as Grotius obſerves: come and let us go over to the Philiſtines garriſon that is on the other ſide; that is, go over the valley which lay between Michmaſh and Gibeah, to the Philiſtines, that lay on the other ſide the valley beyond it; and ſo was not in it, but at a paſs on the hills, at the bottom of which this valley lay, and could be ſeen at a diſtance, and pointed at with the finger, as Jarchi notes: but he told not his father; leſt he ſhould diſapprove of his project, and hinder him from purſuing it; and had not his ſpirit been ſtirred up to this by the Lord, of which he was fully perſuaded, he would have acted not only a raſh part, but contrary to military diſcipline, in engaging in an enterprize without the knowledge and direction of his general; unleſs we can ſuppoſe he had an unlimited commiſſion from his father, to attack the enemy at diſcretion, at any time, and any-where.

℣. 2. And Saul tarried in the uttermoſt part of Gibeah, &c.] Not daring to go out againſt the Philiſtines, but remained in the furtheſt part of Gibeah, at the greateſt diſtance from the camp of the Philiſtines, in the ſtrongeſt part of the city, or deeply intrenched in the outer part of it in the field: under a pomegranate-tree; where were his head quarters; his tent or pavilion was erected under a large ſpreading pomegranate, which protected him from the heat of the ſun: or under Rimmon; the rock Rimmon; under the ſhelter of that, and in the caverns of it; where a like number of Benjaminites he now had with him, formerly hid themſelves, Judg. xx. 47. which is in Migron; a part of Gibeah, or rather of the field of Gibeah ſo called; for near it it certainly was; and is alſo mentioned along with Michmaſh, and as lying in the way of the march of Sennacherib, king of Aſſyria, to Jeruſalem, Iſ. x. 28. and the people that were with him were about 600 men; which is obſerved to ſhew that no addition was made to his little army; it was the ſame it was when he came thither, the people did not flock to his aſſiſtance, being in fear of the army of the Philiſtines, which was ſo powerful; ſee ch. xiii. 15.

℣. 3. And Ahiah the ſon of Ahitub, Ichabod's brother, &c.] Ichabod was the child that Phinehas's wife was brought to bed of, on hearing the news of the ark being taken, and of the death of her huſband and father-in-law, which name ſhe gave him on that account, and died; ſee ch. iv. 19—22. he, it ſeems, had an elder brother, called Ahitub, who died young, and this Ahiah was the ſon of him; for not he, but Ahitub, was Ichabod's brother: the ſon of Phinehas; ſo Ichabod was: the ſon of Eli; ſo Phinehas was: the Lord's prieſt in Shiloh; this refers not to Ahiah, for he was not prieſt in Shiloh, which was deſtroyed; and he, he was now in the camp of Saul; but to Eli who when living exerciſed the prieſt's office in Shiloh: wearing an ephod; as Ahiah now did; not ſuch as common prieſts wore, but the ephod the high-prieſt wore, which had the breaſt-plate of judgment, the Urim and Thummim in it, by which enquiry was made, ℣. 37. the meaning of all this is that the high-prieſt was now with Saul, and the ark alſo, which and the high-prieſt might be ſent for on this occaſion, ℣. 18. and the people knew not that Jonathan was gone; or they would have gone with him, namely, the military men that were particularly with him; he and Saul were in two different parts of Gibeah, with diſtinct bodies of men; whether the thouſand that Jonathan firſt had with him all continued is not certain; it ſeems probable they did not; it can hardly be thought he ſhould have more with him, than were with Saul; ſee ch. xiii. 2. though from ℣. 17. they ſeem now to have been together.

℣. 4. And between the paſſages by which Jonathan ſought to go over unto the Philiſtines garriſon, &c.] One of which is called the paſſage of Michmaſh, ch. xiii. 23. and was that by which they went from Gibeah to Michmaſh; the other, which might be called the paſſage of Gibeah, was that by which they went from Michmaſh to Gibeah, and in effect was but one; and this was ſeized by the garriſon of the Philiſtines, on that part of it which was towards Michmaſh; ſo that there was no way of acceſs ceſs to the camp of the Philiſtines, which Jonathan therefore propoſed to go over to and deſtroy, but his difficulties were very great: there was a ſharp rock on the one ſide, and a ſharp rock on the other ſide; not that there was on each ſide of the paſſage or paſſages to the right and left a cragged rock, between which men paſſed as they went from place to place; for the poſition of them in the next verſe ſhews the contrary; but there was the tooth of a rock [l], as it is in the original text; or a promontory or prominence on the one ſide towards Michmaſh, which ſtood out like a tooth; and another promontory or prominence on that towards Gibeah; ſo that both muſt be gone over to get to the camp, the only paſſage being guarded by the garriſon; and indeed it ſeems to me there was but one rock, and two precipices at the oppoſite parts of it, and which ſtood between the paſſages, which precipices muſt be climbed over: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh; which, according to the Targum, the one ſignifies lubrication, being ſmooth and ſlippery, and the other treading, being more trodden and beaten; but Hillerus [m] derives both from clay, which ſeems not ſo agreeable to a rock; though in another place [n] he makes the former to have its name from whiteneſs, which is the colour of ſome rocks and clifts; and one ſhould think the latter rather has its name from buſhes, brambles, and thorns, that might grow upon it.

[k] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 6. §. 2.

℣. 5. The fore-front of the one was ſituate northward, over-againſt Michmaſh, &c.] The northern precipice of this rock was towards Michmaſh, where the Philiſtines lay encamped, and where was the paſſage of Michmaſh the garriſon went into and poſſeſſed: and the other ſouthward over againſt Gibeah; the ſouthern precipice faced Gibeah, and both precipices were to be got over before he could get to the garriſon, theſe lying between the two paſſages; the one at one end called the paſſage of Michmaſh, the other at the other, which might be called the paſſage of Gibeah.

℣. 6. And Jonathan ſaid to the young man that bare his armour, &c.] A ſecond time, as Abarbinel thinks; the young man giving no anſwer to him the firſt time, perhaps through fear, he repeats it, and enlarges upon it for his encouragement: come and let us go over unto the garriſon of theſe uncircumciſed; as theſe Philiſtines were, whereas ſeveral of the other nations, though heathen, were circumciſed; as the Edomites, Arabians, and others; and this Jonathan obſerves to the young man, in hope that they being ſuch the Lord would deliver them into their hand: it may be that the Lord will work for us; a ſign, as the Targum, a miracle, as indeed he did; and of which Jonathan was perſuaded in his own mind, though he did not chuſe to expreſs himſelf in a confident way; not knowing in what manner, and whether at this time the Lord would appear, and work ſalvation and deliverance; and yet had a ſtrong impulſe upon his mind it would be wrought, and therefore was encouraged to try this expedient: for there is no reſtraint to the Lord, to ſave by many or by few; he is not limited to numbers, and can eaſily work ſalvation by a few as by many. It is no difficult thing to him to ſave by few, nor can any thing hinder him, let the difficulties be what they will, when he has determined to deliver his people.

℣. 7. And his armour-bearer ſaid unto him, &c.] Very readily and chearfully: do all that is in thine heart; whatever is thy pleaſure, that thou haſt a mind to do, that is upon thy heart, and thou art deſirous of, and ſtrongly inclined and affected to: turn thee; which way thou wilt, towards the garriſon of the Philiſtines, or elſewhere: behold, I am with thee, according to thy heart; I'll go with thee wherever thou goeſt, and do whatſoever thou wouldſt have me to do; I am at thy command, and according to thy wiſh and deſire, and in all things ſubject to thy will; I am as thine own heart.

℣. 8. Then ſaid Jonathan, behold we will paſs over to theſe men, &c.] Over the precipices to them, as ſteep and as cragged as they are: and we will diſcover ourſelves to them; preſent themſelves to them at day-light, and let them know plainly who they were, that they were Hebrews.

℣. 9. If they ſay thus unto us, &c.] By this and what follows, he gives his man a ſign by which both might know how they ſhould conduct themſelves in this expedition, and what would be the iſſue, whether they ſhould ſucceed or no: ſhould they ſay, tarry until we come to you; this, as it would expreſs boldneſs in the men of the garriſon, and ſhew that they were ready to come out and fight, would portend evil, and then what they had to do was to be upon the defenſive: then we will ſtand ſtill in our place; wait till they came to them, and make the beſt defence of themſelves as they could, ſhewing as little fear as poſſible, and not attempting to retreat and flee: and will not go up unto them; neither go backwards nor forwards; not backward, which would ſhew fear; nor forward, to expoſe themſelves to too much danger from the garriſon, they appearing to be bold and intrepid.

℣. 10. But if they ſay unto us, come up unto us, &c.] Which however ſpoken in contempt of them, yet would diſcover ſome fear, that they did not care to come out of their hold to them, and expoſe themſelves to any danger; and beſides being bid to come up, though it might be in a ſneering ironical way, as ſuppoſing it impracticable for them; yet this would lead them on to make the attempt; and whilſt the men were careleſs and ſecure, they might obtain their point: then we will go up; the precipice, which was ſuppoſed unpaſſable: for the Lord hath delivered them into our hands; they being afraid to come out, and ſcornful and ſelf-confident in their garriſon: and this ſhall be a ſign unto us; a direction how to behave, what ſteps to take, and a confirming ſign aſſuring of ſucceſs. Bp. Patrick and others obſerve, from Herodotus [o], ſomething ſimilar to this, of the Pæonians, who went to war with the Perinthians, directed by the oracle; and were ordered that if the Perinthians provoked them to fight, calling them by name, then they ſhould invade them; but if not, ſhould abſtain; and ſo they did, and overcame; for when they met, there were three ſingle combats; in the two firſt the Perinthians were conquerors, and began to triumph and inſult; upon which the Pæonians ſaid to one another, now is the oracle fulfilled, now is our buſineſs, and ſo fell upon them, and left few of them.

℣. 11. And both of them diſcovered themſelves unto the garriſon of the Philiſtines, &c.] They paſſed over the valley that lay between Michmaſh and Gibeah, and preſented themſelves at the bottom of the

[l] dens petræ, Pagninus, Montanus; ſcopulus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [m] Onomaſtic. ſ. 82. [n] Ibid. p. 43. [o] Terpſichore, ſive, l. 5. c. 1.

the hill or rock on which the garriſon was, to the open view of it; and who might eaſily diſcern who they were, that they were Hebrews, as they did, as follows: and the Philiſtines ſaid, behold the Hebrews come forth out of the holes where they had hid themſelves; being in want of proviſions, and almoſt ſtarved, and ſo obliged to come out to ſeek for ſu ſtenance; ſee ℣. 6.

℣. 12. And the men of the garriſon anſwered Jonathan and his armour-bearer, &c.] The guards that were ſet to watch the garriſon, who deſcrying them, called to them, and ſaid: come up to us, and we will ſhew you a thing; we have ſomething to ſay to you, a pretty thing to ſhew you, when you ſhall pay dear for your boldneſs and impudence, in daring to come ſo near; not imagining that they could come, or would dare to attempt to come any farther: and Jonathan ſaid unto his armour-bearer, come up after me; follow me, and never fear, but we will find a way to come up to them, however difficult it may be: for the Lord hath delivered them into the hand of Iſrael; he knew by their language that God had given them a ſpirit of fear, that they durſt not come out of their hold, and come down to them; and that he had caſt them into a ſpirit of ſecurity and vain confidence, that they could never come at them, and give them any trouble; and from hence he concluded deliverance was at hand for the people of Iſrael, he ſeeking not his own private intereſt and glory, but the public good; and which he was ready to aſcribe not to his own valour and courage, but to the power, kindneſs, and goodneſs of God.

℣. 13. And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, &c.] He did not attempt to go up the way or paſs the Philiſtines kept, but turned aſide and climbed up a precipice thought inacceſſible, and came upon them unſeen, and at an unawares; for had he attempted to come up in any part where he was ſeen, they could eaſily have beat him down, and prevented his aſcent; but tho' the place he climbed was ſo very ſteep and cragged, yet going on all four, as we ſay, he ſurmounted the difficulty; for he took this method of going on his hands and feet, not ſo much that he might not be ſeen; but becauſe otherwiſe he could not have got up, nor being able to ſtand on his feet; ſome think it was the precipice called Bozez he climbed, which according to the Targum had its name from its being lubricous and ſlippery: and his armour-bearer after him; who clambered up in the ſame manner in imitation of his maſter, and as taught and directed by him: and they fell before Jonathan, and his armour-bearer ſlew after him; Jonathan coming upon them at an unawares, knocked them down; or falling upon them, and laying about him with great diſpatch, wounded them, and laid them proſtrate to the ground; and his armour-bearer following him, put them to death, diſpatched them at once; and ſo between them both made quick riddance of them.

℣. 14. And the firſt ſlaughter which Jonathan and his armour-bearer made was about twenty men, &c.] Or the firſt blow they ſtruck, as the Targum, they killed about twenty men; that is, they did not leave off ſmiting, but followed their blows ſo quick, that in a very little time, as well as in a very ſmall ſpace of ground, ſo many were killed: even within as it were an half acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plough; that is, in one day; the word is uſed for a furrow, Pſ. cxxix. 3. and is ſuppoſed by ſome [p] to be the length of one furrow; but if ſo, it muſt be a circular furrow; ſo much ground was given to Horatius Cocles as could be ploughed round about in one day, for his brave oppoſition to Porſena, king of the Etruſcans, when he endeavoured to reſtore the family of the Tarquins [q]. This was a ſpace of ground which the Romans call actus, a meaſure of land 120 feet ſquare, which being doubled made an acre, called by them Jugerum, being as much as a yoke of oxen could plough in one day, as Pliny ſays [r]; ſo that an acre was 240 feet long, and 120 broad, and contained an area of 28800 fourſquare Roman feet; and this ſpace here mentioned, which was half an acre, contained 14400 Roman feet [s]; and within this ſpace of ground, without going any farther, 20 men were killed, which ſtruck a panic into the whole garriſon and hoſt, ſuppoſing there was a large army of men behind them coming on, as follows. The Septuagint verſion renders theſe words as repreſenting the ſlaughter made with darts, and the caſts of ſtones, and flints of the field [t].

℣. 15. And there was trembling in the hoſt in the field, &c.] Belonging to Michmaſh, where the army lay incamped: and among all the people; the inhabitants of Michmaſh, or that attended the army, and furniſhed them with proviſions, trafficking with them; the common people, as diſtinguiſhed from the ſoldiers: the garriſon; thoſe that were in it, who did not ſally out, but perceiving a great ſlaughter made of their out-ſcouts, were ſeized with a panic: and the ſpoilers they alſo trembled; who had been about the country, ravaging and plundering it, and were returned with their booty; ſee ch. xiii. 17. and the earth quaked; the inhabitants of it thereabout, or the earth itſelf literally; a real earthquake was cauſed at the ſame time, which increaſed the terror: ſo that it was a very great trembling; both with reſpect to the numbers that were affected with it throughout the camp and garriſon, and the cauſes of it; the terrible apprehenſion they had of a large army juſt ready to ruſh upon them; the earth quaking and opening in various places, threatening to ſwallow them up; and perhaps ſuſpicions of treachery among themſelves, they conſiſting of various nations, and ſome among them Hebrews; hence they fell upon and ſlew one another, ℣. 20, 21. or a trembling of God [u]; either in the ſame ſenſe to which we tranſlate it, as cedars of God, ſtone of God, &c. that is, large and great ones; or which came from God; it was he that ſent this trembling among them, ſtruck their minds with fear and dread, ſo that they were in the utmoſt conſternation, and knew not what to do, nor which way to take, and had no heart to oppoſe the enemy, and defend themſelves.

℣. 16. And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked, &c.] The city of Gibeah was built on an hill, from whence it had its name; and theſe watchmen or centinels of Saul, were ſet by him no doubt in the higheſt part of it, whereby they could overlook the army of the Philiſtines as they lay encamped, and could obſerve their motions, and give notice accordingly; and it being now broad day-light, could ſee the condition they were in: and behold the multitude melted away; like ſnow gradually, and yet apace; they could diſcern their numbers leſſening more and more, through the ſlaughter of many made among them by

[p] Vid. David. de Pomis Lexic. fol. 129. 1.
[q] Aurel. Victor. de vir. illuſtr. c. 14. Liv. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 10.
[r] Nat. Hiſt. l. 18. c. 3. Vid. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 20.
[s] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic Sacr. p. 487.
[t] See Dr. Kennicott's Diſſertat. 1. p. 453.
[u] להרדת אלהים in trepidationem Dei, Montanus, Druſius, Vatablus.

by one another, and the flight of others: and they went on beating down one another; they could perceive they fled with great precipitation, throwing one another down in running, tumbling over one another, and trampling on each other which were in their way.

℣. 17. Then said Saul unto the people that were with him, &c.] To some of the officers, particularly the muster-master: number now and see who is gone from us; for he concluded that this agitation and confusion in the host of the Philistines, were occasioned by an enterprize of some of his men, who by some stratagem or another had thrown them into this disorder: and when they had numbered; which was soon done, being but 600 men in all: behold, Jonathan and his armour-bearer were not there; from whence it might be inferred, that this commotion the Philistines were in was occasioned by an onset of theirs on the out-guards or centinels of their garrison or army, which had alarmed them.

℣. 18. And Saul said unto Ahiah, bring hither the ark of the Lord, &c.] That he, the high-priest, might put on the Ephod, with the Urim and Thummim, and enquire by them of the Lord before it, concerning the affair of Jonathan, what he had done, and the agitation that was in the host of the Philistines; so the Septuagint version, bring the Ephod, of which, with the Urim and Thummim, Kimchi interprets it; and ask, whether it was right for him to go out unto them, or continue where he was: for the ark of God was at that time with the children of Israel; and so it always was, except a few months it was in the hands of the Philistines; so it was at Kirjath-jearim, where it was last. Jarchi thinks a word is wanting, and to be supplied thus, "the ark of God was there at that time with the children of Israel," at Gibeah; perhaps it might be removed first to Gilgal, when Saul and Samuel were there, and when they came to Gibeah, it was brought along with them; but the last words may be considered as a distinct clause, and literally rendered are, and the children of Israel; which Abarbinel accounts for thus, and Saul said this, bring hither the ark of the Lord; and the children of Israel said so likewise, joined with him in it: though the ark had been with Saul, and the people, some time, and also the high-priest, yet we don't find that Saul in all his straits and difficulties consulted the Lord before; but perceiving something extraordinary was doing, and might turn to his advantage, he begins to enquire.

℣. 19. And it came to pass while Saul talked with the priest, &c.] With Ahiah about bringing the ark, and enquiring before it: that the noise that was in the host of the Philistines went on, and increased; the shrieks and cries of those that were beat down and trampled upon, and were bruised and wounded; and indeed the cry of the whole host, being alarmed with the enemy being upon them, or among them; and it seems that not only their motions could be seen, but the noise of them heard at this distance: and Saul said unto the priest, withdraw thine hand; from putting on the Ephod, or opening the breast-plate of Urim and Thummim, or placing the ark in a proper position, to enquire before it, or from lifting up both hands in prayer for direction. Saul by the noise he heard concluded the army of the Philistines was routed, and therefore there was no need to consult the Lord, and he had no leisure for it; no time was to be lost, the advantage was to be taken directly, and the enemy pursued to complete the victory. The Jews look upon this as a piece of prophaneness in Saul, as no doubt it was, and reckon it one of the sins for which his kingdom was not prolonged [o].

℣. 20. And Saul, and all the people that were with him, assembled themselves, &c.] The 600 men that were with him, unless we can suppose the 1000 that had been with Jonathan in Gibeah were here still, see ch. xiii. 2. and they came to the battle; to the field of battle, the place where the army of the Philistines had lain encamped: and behold, every man's sword was against his fellow; taking one another for Hebrews, or treacherous and disaffected persons; so that, though the Israelites had neither swords nor spears, they needed none, for the Philistines destroyed one another with their own swords: and there was a very great discomfiture; noise, tumult, confusion, slaughter and destruction.

℣. 21. Moreover, the Hebrews that were with the Philistines before that time, &c.] Who either were their servants and bondsmen they brought along with them, or such in whose cities they dwelt, or had taken as they came along, and forced into their army; or it may be some of them were renegado's from the Israelites, deserters, who for safety and subsistence betook themselves to them as the stronger party. The Greek version reads, "the servants that were with the Philistines:" which went up with them into the camp, from the country round about; either willingly or by force; the words, from the country, are not in the text; wherefore some observe, as Kimchi and Abarbinel, that this respects their being round about the camp, and that they were not within it, but without it, that if possible they might escape fighting against the Israelites: even they also turned to be with the Israelites that were with Saul and Jonathan; who were now joined; when they saw the dread and confusion in the camp of the Philistines, and them destroying one another, and the Israelites prevailing over them, victorious and pursuing, they took part with them, and assisted them in compleating the victory.

℣. 22. Likewise all the men of Israel which had hid themselves in mount Ephraim, &c.] In the caves and rocks, thickets and pits there, see ch. xiii. 6. when they heard that the Philistines fled; now being delivered from their fears, and thinking themselves safe, ventured out of their lurking places: even they also followed hard after them in the battle; they joined the pursuers who came their way, and stuck to them, and closely pursued the flying army of the Philistines. According to Josephus [p], the army of Saul was now increased to 10,000.

℣. 23. So the Lord saved Israel that day, &c.] And a wonderful salvation it was, that two men should throw such a vast army into confusion, which issued in the utter rout and destruction of them; this only could be of the Lord, to whom it is justly ascribed, and was the effect of his sovereign goodwill and pleasure, and of his unmerited goodness; a free favour bestowed on an undeserving prince, who had behaved ill to his prophet at Gilgal, and now to him and his high-priest at Gibeah: and the battle passed over unto Beth-aven; the men of battle or or war; thoſe that made war, as the Targum, theſe purſued and went as far as Beth-aven, or rather paſſed Beth-aven [q]; they not only went as far as that, but from it, as Ben Gerſom and Abarbinel interpret it; they paſſed that place, and went on from thence in purſuit of the Philiſtines; for their camp at Michmaſh was eaſtward from this place, and had it on the eaſt, ch. xiii. 5.

[o] Vajikra Rabba & Midrash Tillim apud Abarbinel in loc.

[p] Antiq. l. 6. c. 6. §. 3.

℣. 24. And the men of Iſrael were diſtreſſed that day, &c.] By reaſon of the following order Saul gave with an oath, forbidding any to taſte meat till evening, when the people were faint and weary, which is the common ſenſe of interpreters; but Jarchi interprets it, the men of Iſrael vere ready, forward, and haſty, and drew nigh to fight with the Philiſtines, and ſo refers it to the perſons before mentioned, who came out of their lurking places; and this ſenſe is approved of by Abarbinel: for, or, and Saul had adjured, or did adjure the people; or willed them, ſignified to them his will and pleaſure, which would not have been ſo much amiſs, had he not annexed a curſe to it, as follows: ſaying, curſed be the man that eateth any food until the evening; or bread, which comprehends all food, and among the reſt honey; the deſign of which was, that no time might be loſt, and that he might make the victory over the Philiſtines, and their deſtruction, as compleat as poſſible; though it may ſeem a little too hard, and ſevere upon the people, and too imperious in him, as well as imprudent; ſince a little refreſhment would have animated and enabled them to have purſued their enemies with more ardour and vigour; and yet by the lot afterwards made, it ſeems to have been countenanced by the Lord: that I may be avenged on mine enemies; who long tyrannized over the people of Iſrael, more or leſs for many years, and lately had ſadly ſpoiled and plundered them: ſo none of the people taſted any food; ſo obſervant were they of, and ſo obedient to the order of their king, and ſo much awed by the oath or imprecation annexed to it; though they were faint and hungry, and had an opportunity of refreſhing themſelves as follows, which was no ſmall temptation to diſobedience.

℣. 25. And all they of the land came to a wood, &c.] Which lay between Beth-aven and Aijalon; by whom are meant not all the inhabitants of the land of Iſrael, but all that came with Saul and Jonathan, and that joined them in the purſuit: and there was honey upon the ground; which dropped upon it, as in the following verſe, or where it was produced by bees; for Ariſtotle [r] reports, that bees in ſome places make their combs upon the ground; this was wild honey, which Diodorus Siculus [s] ſpeaks of as common in Arabia, and which perhaps John the Baptiſt eat of, Matt. iii. 4. Jarchi ſays, this was the honey of canes, or ſugar-canes, which grew in the land of Iſrael; and affirms from Nathan an Iſhmaelite, that in the Iſmaelitiſh or Arabic language, they call honey ſugar; but neither of theſe can be proved.

℣. 26. And when the people came into the wood, behold the honey dropped, &c.] Either from trees, which produced it; ſo Diodorus Siculus [t] ſpeaks of trees in ſome countries which produce honey; or from the ſugar-canes, as Jarchi; or rather from the honey-combs which were framed in trees by bees; ſo Heſiod [u] ſpeaks of bees making their neſts or combs in trees. Ben Gerſom thinks, that bee-hives were placed here in rows by the way-ſide, from whence the honey flowed; or went [w], or there was a going of it; perhaps the combs being preſſed by the Philiſtines as they fled: the land of Canaan was a land flowing with milk and honey: but no man put his hand to his mouth; that is, took not any of the honey and eat it, though it was ſo near at hand, and there was plenty of it: for the people feared the oath; Saul adjured them by, or the imprecation he made on the perſon that ſhould eat any food that day.

℣. 27. But Jonathan heard not when his father charged the people with the oath, &c.] Which charge was given, either before he came from Gibeah, before he came to Jonathan, or whilſt purſuing, when Jonathan was with another party either fighting or purſuing: wherefore he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand; the ſtaff with which he walked, or rather the ſpear which he carried in his hand, and fought his enemies with: and dipt it in an honey-comb; or ſugar-cane, as Jarchi; or in wood-honey, as the margin of our bibles; but beſt, in the honey-comb, as the word is rendered Cant. v. 1. and ſo the Targum, into the neſt of honey [x]: and he put his hand to his mouth; firſt he took the honey off of the top of his rod, and then put it to his mouth and eat it: and his eyes were enlightened; which before were dim and dull thro' want of food, which is a common caſe; but became briſk and lively on eating the honey, nouriſhment being preſently communicated, and he refreſhed with it, and his ſpirits revived; and which quickly appeared in the briſkneſs and ſparkling of his eyes: honey being of a ſubtle nature, gives immediate refreſhment and vigour; hence this phraſe is frequently uſed by Jewiſh writers [y] for refreſhment, after hunger, fatigue and wearineſs; and which virtue is aſcribed by them to fine bread, wine, oil, and particularly to honey.

℣. 28. Then anſwered one of the people, and ſaid, &c.] To Jonathan, who might direct and encourage the people to do as he had done, at leaſt ſo he did by his example, if not by words; the latter is not improbable: and therefore one of the men that came along with Saul, and had now joined Jonathan, and who heard what Saul had ſaid, replied, thy father ſtraitly charged the people with an oath; gave them a ſtrict charge with an oath, or imprecation annexed to it: ſaying, curſed be the man that eateth any food this day; that is, until the evening, as in ℣. 24. and the people were faint; which is either the obſervation of the writer of the book; or it may be the words of the man, imputing the faintneſs of the people to this adjuration of Saul reſtraining them from food; or as taking notice how ſtrictly the people obſerved it, though they were hungry, faint and weary.

℣. 29. Then ſaid Jonathan, my father hath troubled the land, &c.] The people of the land, as the Targum, the ſoldiers in his army; afflicted and diſtreſſed them, and made them uneaſy in their minds, like troubled waters; the Arabic verſion is, "my father hath ſinned againſt the people;" hath done them injury by forbidding them to eat. This was not wiſely ſaid by Jonathan; how much ſoever his father was to be blamed, it did not become him as a ſon thus to reflect upon him, and it

[q] עברו את בית און tranſiit Bethaven, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; vel, bellatores tranſierunt Bethaven, Pagninus, Vatablus, Druſius. [r] Hiſt. Animal. l. 5. c. 22. [s] Bibliothec. l. 19. p. 731. [t] Ibid. l. 17. p. 548. [u] Heſiod. Theogon. ℣. 230. Vid. Diodor. Sic. ut ſupra. [w] הילך דבש ambulatio mellis, Montanus; itio mellis, Druſius; ſo in Ovid. Metamorph. l. 1. fab. 3. ——— jam flumina nectaris ibant.
[x] Progeniem nidoſque fovent —— Virgil. Georgic. l. 4. ℣. 56. [y] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 42. 1, 2. Yoma, fol. 18 2. & 83. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Maacolot Aſurot, c. 14. §. 16.

it might have tended to mutiny and ſedition: ſee, I pray you, how mine eyes have been enlightened, becauſe I taſted a little of this honey; the benefit he received by it was very viſible; it might eaſily be diſcerned that he was greatly refreſhed with it, and his ſpirits invigorated by it; it was to be ſeen in the chearfulneſs of his countenance, and the briſkneſs of his eyes; and he ſuggeſts, it would have had the ſame effect upon the people, had they eaten of it, as he had done.

✡. 30. How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely to-day of the ſpoil of their enemies which they found? &c.] That is, had they been allowed to eat freely of the proviſions, of bread, wine, &c. they found in the enemy's camp, they would have been much more refreſhed and ſtrengthened than it could be ſuppoſed he was with eating a little honey; if that had had ſuch an effect upon him, of what ſervice would a full meal have been to the people? for had there not been now a much greater ſlaughter among the Philiſtines? the people would have had more ſtrength to ſmite them, and would have purſued them with greater ardour and ſwiftneſs, and ſo have made a greater ſlaughter among them than they had; he intimates, that Saul's end would have been better anſwered by ſuffering the people to eat, than by forbidding them.

✡. 31. And they ſmote the Philiſtines that day from Michmaſh to Aijalon, &c.] Michmaſh was the place where the camp of the Philiſtines was when Jonathan firſt attacked them, and from whence they fled, and they were purſued by the Iſraelites that day as far as Aijalon. There was a city of this name in the tribe of Dan, famous for the moon ſtanding ſtill in a valley adjoining to it, in the time of Joſhua, ch. x. 12. and xix. 42. and another in the tribe of Zebulun, Judg. xii. 12. but they both ſeem to be at too great a diſtance to be the place here meant, which rather ſeems to be Aijalon in the tribe of Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 10. according to Bunting [z], it was 12 miles from Michmaſh: and the people were very faint; as they might well be, with purſuing the enemy ſo many miles, and doing ſo much execution among them, without eating any food.

✡. 32. And the people flew upon the ſpoil, &c.] Like a ſwift and ravenous bird, as the eagle, and which ſeems to have its name in Greek from this word, ſee Iſ. xlvi. 11. When the evening was come, and they were free from the oath of Saul, and being extremely hungry, faint and weary, they were even ravenous for food, and with the greateſt haſte and eagerneſs laid hold on what came firſt to hand: and took ſheep, and oxen, and calves, and ſlew them on the ground; and there they lay in their blood, which in ſuch a poſition would not run out freely as when ſlain and hung up: and the people did eat them with the blood; they were ſo hungry they could not ſtay the dreſſing of them, but eat them raw with the blood in them, not being ſqueezed or drained out, at leaſt not half boiled or roaſted. Some of the Jewiſh Rabbins [a] are of opinion, that theſe were their peace-offerings; and that their fault was, that they eat of them before the blood was ſprinkled, whilſt it was in the baſon; but this was common food, which, being hungry, they were eager of, and could not wait the proper dreſſing of it, according to the law of God. The phraſe is by ſome rendered by, upon, or about the blood, and think it refers to an idolatrous cuſtom of the heathens, who ſacrificing to dæmons, ſat down round about the blood, and eat their food; ſee the notes on Lev. xix. 26. and Ezek. xxxiii. 25. to which may be added, that Homer [b] repreſents the infernal ſpirits as gathered together at a ditch where the blood of an animal was ſhed, to drink of it, that they might know and foretel things to come, as particularly Tireſias the Theban.

✡. 33. Then they told Saul, &c.] Some that were more conſcientious and religious, were more circumſpect, and ſtrictly attended to the laws forbidding the eating of blood, and were concerned at the indecent behaviour of others, and therefore thought fit to acquaint Saul with it to reſtrain it: behold, the people ſin againſt the Lord, in that they eat with the blood; by breaking the laws of God reſpecting the eating of blood in Gen. ix. 4. Lev. iii. 17. and vii. 26, 27. and xvii. 10, 11. eſpecially in Lev. xix. 26. and he ſaid, ye have tranſgreſſed; the above laws of God; that is, Saul ſaid to ſome perſons who were accuſed of the breach of them, and were ordered to come before him, and did come: roll a great ſtone unto me this day; pointing perhaps at one which lay at ſome diſtance from him, and which he ordered to be rolled to him; this was done, that the creatures might be ſlain on it, and their blood drawn out from them, or to offer ſacrifice upon, and indeed for both.

✡. 34. And Saul ſaid, diſperſe yourſelves among the people, &c.] In the camp, ſome one way, and ſome another, and make proclamation throughout it; this he ſaid to ſome of his officers, whom he ſent out as heralds, to publiſh his will and pleaſure: and ſay unto them, bring me hither every man his ox, and every man his ſheep, and ſlay them here; on the great ſtone he had ordered to roll to the place where he was: and eat them; in the ſame place, being rightly ſlain, and the blood let out; all this was to be done, the ſlaying of the beaſts, and eating them in the preſence of Saul, and under his inſpection, that every thing might be done decently, and in order, and according to the law of God: and ſin not againſt the Lord, in eating with the blood; as ſome of them had done, ✡. 32. and all the people brought every man his ox with him; and his ſheep alſo, though not expreſſed, yet to be ſupplied from the preceding clauſe: and theſe every man brought with him that night; the Jewiſh Rabbins [c] are divided about theſe creatures ſlain, whether for ſacrifices or common food; and thoſe that think ſacrifices are meant, diſpute whether it was lawful to ſlay them in the night, which ſome allow to be lawful, if on a ſmall and private altar, but not upon a large and public one; but theſe were ſlain no doubt for common food, which all agree might be ſlain in the night: and ſlew them there; before Saul, and on the great ſtone rolled unto him.

✡. 35. And Saul built an altar unto Lord, &c.] To offer peace-offerings upon, in thankfulneſs for the victory obtained over his enemies, or ſin-offerings to make atonement for the ſin of the people, perhaps both, however the former: the ſame was the firſt altar that he built unto the Lord; for tho' he had offered ſacrifice at Gilgal, there was an altar ready built for him: or he began to build; he laid the firſt ſtone of it, and the builders built upon it; ſo ſome others ſay, that he was the firſt of the kings that built an altar to the Lord [d]; others, the firſt of the judges that built one; though Gideon built

[z] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 127. 103.
[a] See Jarchi in loc.
[b] Odyſſ. 11. ✡. 35, 36, 102,
[c] T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 120. 1.
[d] See Kimchi in loc.

built one, it was for his own private uſe, not for all Iſrael, as this, ſo R. Iſaiah; but Ben Gerſom, and ſo Abarbinel, refer this to the great ſtone Saul ordered to be rolled to him, and take the ſenſe to be, that that began to be built an altar to the Lord; that was the beginning of one; for he did not now ſtay to finiſh it, being eager on his purſuit of the Philiſtines, as follows.

℣. 36. And Saul ſaid, &c.] To his ſon Jonathan, or to ſome of the principal officers of his army: let us go down after the Philiſtines by night; or to-night, that ſame night; which is another hardſhip he laid his troops under; as he had reſtrained them from eating all that day until evening, now he propoſed they ſhall take no ſleep that night, but proceed on in their purſuit of the Philiſtines, having eaten, and drank, and refreſhed themſelves. The Arabic verſion is, let us go down to the Philiſtines; and ſo Noldius [e] chuſes to render the words; which I pretty much wonder at, and eſpecially at what he obſerves in favour of it, and againſt the common rendering; that at this time the Philiſtines had not turned their backs, ſo that the Iſraelites could not be ſaid to go after them, but were in a camp oppoſite to them; but that they had fled, and were purſued, is moſt certain from ℣. 22, 23, 31. and ſpoil them until the morning-light; or kill of them, as the Targum, and ſo the Arabic verſion; for ſpoiling muſt be meant of killing; for as for the ſpoil of their proviſions, riches, &c. that had already fallen into their hands, ℣. 30. and this is confirmed by what follows: and let us not leave a man of them; great numbers had been ſlain already, partly by their falling upon one another, and partly by the ſwords of Jonathan and his armour-bearer at the firſt onſet, and by Saul and his men in the purſuit of them; and ſo intent was Saul in the utter deſtruction of them, that he was for following and cutting them off, that none of their prodigious army might return home: and they ſaid, do whatſoever ſeemeth good unto thee; they had religiouſly obſerved his oath, in refraining from food all the day, and now they were as willing to be obedient to his command in denying themſelves refreſhing reſt in ſleep: then ſaid the prieſt, let us draw near hither unto God; Ahiah the prieſt, Joſephus [f] calls him Ahitob, who was preſent with the ark, agreed to the propoſal of Saul, only moved, that before they ſet forward, they would ſeek the Lord; perhaps reflecting upon the abrupt manner in which Saul departed from Gibeah, juſt as he was conſulting the Lord, and not ſtaying for an anſwer from him; which the prieſt might fear would be reſented by him, and therefore propoſes firſt to draw nigh to God; not to the altar Saul had built, or had juſt begun to build, but to the ark with which the high-prieſt was, and was a ſymbol of the divine preſence; the Targum is, "let us draw near hither, and enquire by the Word of the Lord."

℣. 37. And Saul aſked counſel of God, &c.] He agreed to the motion of the high-prieſt, and aſked counſel by Urim and Thummim; the Targum is, as before, "enquired by the Word of the Lord:" ſhall I go down after the Philiſtines? purſue after them in their flight to their own country, which, lying to the ſea, was a deſcent: wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Iſrael? what remain of them, otherwiſe a victory over them was obtained: but he anſwered him not that day; no anſwer was returned by Urim and Thummim, ſo that he was left in ſuſpence whether he ſhould purſue or no; the Targum is, "he received not his prayer that day;" this was treating him in a righteous manner, ſince he would not ſtay for an anſwer from the Lord, ℣. 19. the Lord now will not give him any; tho' the principal view was, that he might take the ſtep he did.

℣. 38. And Saul ſaid, draw ye near hither all the chief of the people, &c.] Or the corners of the people [g]; the princes, as Jarchi interprets it; and ſo the Targum, the heads of the people, in alluſion to the corner ſtones in buildings, which are the ornament, ſtrength and cement of them, ſee Zech. x. 4. though Abarbinel thinks the tribes themſelves are meant, which lay encamped every one in a corner by themſelves, ſeparated from one another; and theſe he would have brought together; not the heads only, but every one, ſmall and great, that it might be ſeen and known where the ſin lay; but he ſhould have obſerved, that the tribes of Iſrael were not now preſent with Saul, but a ſmall number of them: and know and ſee wherein this ſin hath been this day; he concluded from having no anſwer from the Lord, that ſin had been committed, which was the cauſe of it; but never thought of his own raſh oath, which was the cauſe of the peoples ſinning, and had brought his ſon into danger; nor the ſin of the people in eating the fleſh with the blood; nothing ran in his mind but the breach of the oath with which he had adjured the people, and this he was determined to find out, if poſſible.

℣. 39. For as the Lord liveth, which ſaveth Iſrael, &c.] And had ſaved them that day with a great ſalvation, and had wrought a great deliverance for them in freeing them from the Philiſtines, who had threatened the ruin of the whole nation. This is the form of an oath: though it be in Jonathan my ſon, he ſhall ſurely die; that is, though the ſin ſhould be found in him, or he ſhould be found guilty of the breach of what he had charged them with an oath to obſerve, namely, to eat no food that day till evening: but there was not a man among all the people that anſwered him; who knew that Jonathan had taſted of honey, but they would not acquaint him with it; partly becauſe they knew he did it ignorantly, having no knowledge of his father's charge and oath, and partly becauſe of their great affection to him, who had been the inſtrument of their deliverance and ſalvation that day.

℣. 40. Then ſaid he unto all Iſrael, &c.] As many of them as were preſent; not the principal men only, but the common people; not the officers only, but the common ſoldiers in the army: be ye on one ſide, and I and Jonathan my ſon will be on the other ſide; ſo they divided to the right and left, one went one way, and the other the other; there were two boxes or urns, as Kimchi ſays, in one of which were the names of Saul and Jonathan, and in the other Iſrael; though Abarbinel obſerves, that ſuch a partition of them on one ſide, and the other, is not according to the manner of lots; and he ſuſpects that Saul knew that Jonathan had taſted of honey, being told it by the man that ſaw him eat it; and who ſaid to him then, thy father ſtraitly charged, &c. ℣. 27. but choſe this way to make it manifeſt to the people, and to ſhew what a ſtrict regard he had to juſtice: and the people ſaid unto Saul,

[e] Ebr. Concord. Part. p. 15. No. 92. Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

[f] Antiq. l. 6. c. 6. §. 4.

[g] פנות העם anguli populi,

Saul, do what ſeemeth good unto thee; they were very obſequious to him in every thing, ſee ℣. 36.

℣. 41. Therefore Saul ſaid to the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] After the diviſion was made between him and his ſon on one ſide, and the people of Iſrael on the other, and every thing was ready for the drawing of the lot; Saul put up to God the following petition, as knowing that though the lot is caſt into the lap, the diſpoſing of it is of the Lord: give a perfect lot; or man, let it fall upon the guilty perſon, and let the innocent go free; the Targum is, "cauſe it to come in truth;" let truth and righteouſneſs take place; let the right man be found out, and taken; the petition ſeems to be too arrogant and preſumptuous, and inſinuates as if the Lord did not always diſpoſe the lot aright: and Saul and Jonathan were taken; the lot being caſt, it fell upon them: but the people eſcaped; from the lot, and appeared to be innocent, clear of any blame; ſo that it was not the ſin they had been guilty of in eating fleſh with the blood, which was the cauſe that no anſwer was returned.

℣. 42. And Saul ſaid, caſt lots between me and Jonathan my ſon, &c.] Which ſhowed his regard to ſtrict juſtice, and that he had no conſciouſneſs of guilt in himſelf, and ſhould not ſpare his own ſon if found guilty: and Jonathan was taken; the lot fell upon him, which was ſo directed, that his ignorance of his father's charge and oath might appear; and that the affection of the people might be diſcovered; and that a regard is to be had to the orders and commands of princes, and obedience to be yielded to them in all things, in which conſcience is not concerned, though they may be grievous; and to bring Saul to a ſenſe of his raſhneſs in making ſuch an oath, which brought his own ſon into ſo much danger.

℣. 43. Then Saul ſaid to Jonathan, tell me what thou haſt done, &c.] What ſin he had committed, the lot having fallen on him, and found him out: and Jonathan told him; the whole of the matter, all the truth, without any reſerve: and ſaid, I did but take a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand; he ſpeaks of the fact as a trivial thing, as if it was not deſerving of death, though he was willing to ſubmit to it; yet it ſeems ſtrange he ſhould ſay nothing of his ignorance of the charge and oath of Saul, and plead that in excuſe of it; though Joſephus [h] makes him to take notice of it: and lo, I muſt die; am condemned to die, as the Targum; for which he was prepared and ready, being willing to teſtify an entire ſubjection to his father's authority and will. Joſephus [i] repreſents him ſpeaking with a generoſity and greatneſs of ſoul, after this manner, "death is moſt ſweet to me, which is for the ſake of maintaining thy piety and religion; and after ſo glorious a victory, it is the greateſt conſolation to me, to leave the Hebrews conquerors of the Philiſtines."

℣. 44. And Saul anſwered, God do ſo and more alſo, &c.] A form of an oath imprecating evils upon him, more and greater than he choſe to mention, ſee the like form in Ruth i. 17. though Abarbinel thinks, this is not the form of an oath, but an aſſeveration of a curſe that would befal him; as that God would not anſwer him when he enquired of him, and that he would add to do ſo again and again, if he died not: for thou ſhalt ſurely die, Jonathan; ſuch words from a father muſt be very ſtriking to a ſon, and argue a want of paternal affection in Saul, that could call his ſon by his name, and deliver ſuch a ſpeech unto him in ſo ſtrong a manner.

℣. 45. And the people ſaid unto Saul, &c.] Hearing ſuch words, and filled with grief, pity, and ſympathy for Jonathan, as Joſephus [k] obſerves: ſhall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great ſalvation in Iſrael? no, he ſhall not; what, ſuch a man as he die, who, under God, has been the inſtrument of ſo great deliverance, who firſt began it himſelf with one man only with him, and has proceeded in it to the finiſhing of it? God forbid; this ſhall not be ſo; they ſpeak of it with the utmoſt abhorrence and deteſtation, as a ſhocking piece of cruelty and ingratitude, unheard-of, and not to be paralleled: as the Lord liveth, there ſhall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; as Saul ſwore he ſhould die, they alſo ſwear he ſhould not, expreſſing their firm reſolution to ſtand by him, and preſerve his life; and ſo far ſhould it be from him to have his life taken away, that an hair of his head ſhould not be touched, or the leaſt injury done to his perſon; for though they had yielded a ready obedience to all the orders and commands of Saul, which were diſtreſſing to themſelves, they were determined to oppoſe him in this caſe of his ſon: for he hath wrought with God this day; God has been with him, aſſiſted him to do great things for Iſrael, and therefore ſhould not die for a thing ſo trivial; and it being not done in diſobedience to his father, nor in contempt of him, but through pure ignorance, as ſome of them well knew; ſo the Targum, "for it is known before the Lord, that in ignorance he did it this day:" ſo the people reſcued Jonathan that he died not; not by force, but by their reſolution and importunity; or redeemed him [l], by expoſing their own lives to danger in oppoſing their king, and by their petitions to him for him; and, as Joſephus ſays [m], by their prayers to God for him, that his fault might be forgiven.

℣. 46. Then Saul went up from following the Philiſtines, &c.] Returned home to his own city, finding that he could get no anſwer from the Lord, whether he ſhould purſue further or no, and loſing the time and opportunity of doing it, by examining into the affair of his ſon, and caſting lots to find it out: and the Philiſtines went to their own place; their country and cities, ſuch of them as remained, who were not cut off by their own and the ſword of the Iſraelites. Joſephus [n] ſays, Saul killed about 60,000 of them. It ſeems to be the will of God, that they ſhould not now be utterly deſtroyed, that they might be a rod of correction in his hand, to chaſtize the people of Iſrael hereafter.

℣. 47. So Saul took the kingdom over Iſrael, &c.] Which ſeemed to be almoſt taken from him when he was ſhut up in Gibeah, and the Philiſtines ravaged his country at pleaſure; but now having obtained a victory over them, he recovered his kingdom, and re-aſſumed his power and authority; or he was now ſtrengthened in it, as Kimchi interprets it; the people ſeeing that he ſucceeded in his wars with their enemies, they readily ſubmitted to his government without any heſitation, and and obeyed his commands; so the Targum, "Saul prospered in the kingdom over Israel;" and, according to Abarbinel, these words will admit of another sense, that whereas after he was anointed and made king, he followed the herd, and attended rustic affairs; but now after this victory over the Philistines, he took upon him the state and majesty of a king, and no more concerned himself with his farm and cattle, but betook himself wholly to regal and military affairs, as follows: and fought against all his enemies on every side; who invaded his kingdom from different quarters; he defended himself against them, and preserved his kingdom: against Moab, and against the children of Ammon; who lay to the east of him: and against Edom; which was on the southern border of his land: and against the king of Zobah; a part of Syria, which was to the north of the land of Israel, and was near Damascus, see 2 Sam. viii. 3, 5. and, according to Benjamin of Tudela [o], the same with Haleb, or Aleppo. There never were but two kings of it, Rehob and Hadadezer, who lived in the reigns of Saul and David, 2 Sam. viii. 3. and against the Philistines; who were on the western border of the land of Canaan: and whithersoever he turned himself, he vexed them; disturbed and disquieted them, and made them very uneasy; he terrified and distressed them; the Targum is, he condemned them, he treated them as wicked and ungodly persons, and punished them as such.

[h] Antiq. l. 6. c. 6. §. 4. [i] Ibid. [k] Ib. [l] פדון redemerunt, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [m] Ut ſupra, §. 5. [n] Ib.

℣. 48. And he gathered an host, &c.] A large army; for after the battle with the Ammonites he disbanded his army, and sent them home, retaining only 3000 men, and these deserted him to 600, which were all the men he had with him, when he fought last with the Philistines; but now finding he had enemies on every side of him, he gathered a numerous host to defend his country against them, and particularly to attack the people next mentioned: and he smote the Amalekites; a people that Israel, by the law of God, were bound to destroy, and blot out their name; a particular account of his expedition against them is given in the following chapter: and delivered Israel out of the hands of them that spoiled them; the nations before mentioned, Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Syrians and Philistines.

℣. 49. And the sons of Saul were Jonathan, &c.] Who seems to be his first-born, of whom, his valour and success, we read in this and the preceding chapter: and Ishui; the same with Abinadab, 1 Chron. viii. 33. and ix. 39. for he had two names: and Melchi-shua; and besides these three there was another, whose name was Ishbosheth, sometimes called Eshbaal, 2 Sam. ii. 8. 1 Chron. viii. 33. who succeeded him in the kingdom; for which reason Abarbinel thinks, he is not mentioned here, because he was a king; though it is generally supposed the reason why these only are named is, because they went out to war with him, and died with him, but this did not; he had other children by a concubine, or secondary wife, whose name was Rizpah, not mentioned here, 2 Sam. xxi. 8. and the names of his two daughters were these, the name of the first-born Merab; who was afterwards married to Adriel the Meholathite, ch. xviii. 19. and the name of the younger Michal; who became the wife of David, ch. xviii. 27.

℣. 50. And the name of Saul's wife was Ahinoam, the daughter of Ahimaaz, &c.] Who very probably was the mother of all the above children, and therefore taken notice of; and Abarbinel conjectures, that Ish-bosheth was not a son of hers, but the son of Saul by another wife, and which he takes to be another reason why he is not mentioned here; but tho' Saul had a concubine, we no where read of his having another wife: and the name of the captain of his host was Abner the son of Ner, Saul's uncle; not Abner, but Ner was Saul's uncle; for Kish the father of Saul, and Ner, were brothers, as Josephus [p] says, and as appears from the next verse; and Abner was cousin-german to Saul, whom he raised and advanced to be captain of his army, and a very valiant man he was; we hear of him again in this history, and in the beginning of David's reign.

℣. 51. And Kish was the father of Saul, &c.] See ch. ix. 1. And Ner the father of Abner was the son of Abiel; this Abiel was the father both of Kish and Ner, and the grand-father of Saul, see ch. ix. 1.

℣. 52. And there was sore war against the Philistines all the days of Saul, &c.] For notwithstanding the late victory over them, and slaughter made among them, they recovered themselves, and came out again to battle, and gave Saul a great deal of trouble, and he at last died in battle with them: and when Saul saw any strong man, or any valiant man, he took him unto him; to be his body-guard, as Josephus [q] says; or for soldiers and officers in his army, even such as the same writer observes, that exceeded others in comelineſs of person, and in largeness and tallness; such as were in some measure like himself, that were strong, able-bodied men, and of courage, and valour, and fortitude of mind.

CHAP. XV.

IN this chapter are recorded the order Saul had from the Lord to destroy Amalek utterly, ℣. 1, 2, 3. the preparation he made to put it in execution, and the success thereof, ℣. 4—9. the offence the Lord took at his not obeying his order thoroughly, with which Samuel was made acquainted, and which grieved him, ℣. 10, 11. upon which he went out to meet Saul, and reprove him; and a long discourse upon the subject passed between them, the issue of which was, that by an irrevocable decree he was rejected from being king, ℣. 12—31. and the chapter is concluded with an account of Samuel's hewing in pieces Agag king of Amalek, and of his final departure from Saul, ℣. 32—35.

℣. 1. Samuel also said unto Saul, &c.] When and where he said to him what follows, it is not easy to determine; perhaps at Gilgal, where they after met again: the Lord sent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Israel; that is, he gave him orders to anoint him king of Israel, otherwise Saul was in providence sent to Samuel to be anointed, and not Samuel to Saul: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the Lord; for so great a favour, and such high honour he had conferred on him, laid him under great obligation to obey the commands of the Lord; and whereas he had been deficient in one instance before, for which he had been reproved, he suggests, that now he he ſhould take care to obſerve and do, particularly and punctually, what ſhould be enjoined him.

[o] Itinerar. p. 59. [p] Ut supra. [q] Ibid.

℣. 2. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] Of the celeſtial hoſt of angels, and of the army of Iſrael, yea, of all the armies of the earth: this is premiſed to engage the attention of Saul: I remember that which Amalek did to Iſrael; four hundred years ago: how he laid wait for him in the way when he came up from Egypt; in the valley of Rephidim, juſt before they came to mount Sinai, and fell upon the rear of them, and ſmote the feeble, and faint, and weary, ſee Exod. xvii. 8. Deut. xxv. 17, 18, 19.

℣. 3. Now go and ſmite Amalek, &c.] This was one of the three things the Iſraelites were obliged to do when they came into the land of Canaan, as Kimchi obſerves; one was to appoint a king over them, another to build the houſe of the ſanctuary, and the third to blot out the name and memory of Amalek, ſee Deut. xxv. 19. and this work was reſerved for Saul, their firſt king: and utterly deſtroy all that they have, and ſpare them not; all were to be devoted to deſtruction, and nothing remain to be made uſe of in any way, to any profit and advantage; living creatures were to be put to death, and every thing elſe burnt and deſtroyed: but ſlay both men and women, infant and ſuckling; neither ſex nor age were to be regarded, no mercy and pity ſhown to any; they had ſhown none to Iſrael when weak and feeble, and by the law of retaliation none was to be exerciſed on them: ox and ſheep, camel and aſs; though uſeful creatures, yet not to be ſpared; as not men, women and children, thro' commiſeration, ſo neither theſe through covetouſneſs, and neither of them on any pretence whatſover. Children ſuffered for their parents, and cattle becauſe of their owners, and both were a puniſhment to their proprietors; an ox, or any other creature, might not be ſpared, leſt it ſhould be ſaid, as Kimchi obſerves, this was the ſpoil of Amalek, and ſo the name and memory of Amalek would not be blotted out.

℣. 4. And Saul gathered the people together, &c.] Or made them to hear [r], by the ſound of a trumpet; or by ſending heralds into all parts of the land to proclaim the above order of the Lord, and ſummon them to come to him, perhaps at Gilgal; ſo the Septuagint verſion, and Joſephus [s]: and numbered them in Telaim; thought to be the ſame with Telem, a place in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 24. the word ſignifies lambs; hence the Vulgate Latin verſion is, "he numbered them as lambs;" and the Jews [t] ſay, becauſe it was forbid to number the children of Iſrael, which was the ſin of David; therefore every man had a lamb given him, and ſo the lambs were numbered, by which it was known what was the number of the people; and the Targum ſays, this was done with the paſſover-lambs, it being now the time of the paſſover; but the numbering here made was not of the people of the land in general, and ſo there was no occaſion of ſuch a precaution, only a numbering and muſtering of the army when got together and rendezvouſed in one place: the ſum of which is here given, 200,000 footmen and 10,000 men of Judah; which laſt were reckoned ſeparately, as diſtinct from the other tribes of Iſrael, to ſhew their obedience to Saul, who was of another tribe, though the kingdom was promiſed to theirs; but R. Iſaiah obſerves, that the reaſon why ſo few of the men of Judah came, in compariſon of the other tribes, was, becauſe they envied the government being in one of the tribe of Benjamin, when they thought it ſhould have been in one of theirs; the number is greatly increaſed in the Septuagint verſion, which makes the whole to be 400,000, and 30,000 men of Judah; and ſo Joſephus [u].

℣. 5. And Saul came to a city of Amalek, &c.] With his army, perhaps the neareſt city of it to the land of Iſrael; though ſome think that Amalek was the name of the city, and was the metropolis of the nation, and had its name from thence: and laid wait in the valley; which was near the city, to intercept the inhabitants when they ſhould come out againſt him; or he contended [w], as ſome render it, he fought with them there; the Targum, "he ordered his army," ſet that in battle-array, or pitched his camp there.

℣. 6. And Saul ſaid unto the Kenites, &c.] Who were of the poſterity of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes, or related to him; why Joſephus [x] calls them the nation of the Sicimites, who dwelt in the midſt of the land of Midian, I know not: go, depart, get ye down from among the Amalekites; for though ſome of theſe people came with Iſrael into the land of Canaan, and were firſt at Jericho, and then came into the wilderneſs of Judah, Judg. i. 16. and were in other tribes alſo; yet as they removed from place to place, and from country to country, for the convenience of their flocks and herds, they dwelling in tents, might come into the country of Amalek and pitch there; and as they choſe to dwell in rocks, and the caverns of them, to be near their flocks and herds in the vallies, they are called upon to get down from thence, ſee Numb. xxiv. 21. leſt I deſtroy you with them; they dwelling among the Amalekites, might periſh with them; and eſpecially as the Amalekites, upon their being routed, would naturally flee to the rocks, hills and mountains, where theſe people had their tents, they would be in the greater danger of being deſtroyed with them, unleſs they removed: for ye ſhewed kindneſs to all the children of Iſrael when they came up out of Egypt; as Jethro, by the advice he gave to Moſes to appoint proper officers in Iſrael, and Hobab, by being eyes to the people, in conducting them through the wilderneſs, and accompanying them to the land of Canaan; ſo the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites; took the advice of Saul, and removed and pitched their tents elſewhere.

℣. 7. And Saul ſmote the Amalekites, &c.] Engaging in battle with them, he overcame them, and beat them, and ſlew great numbers of them: from Havilah, until thou comeſt to Shur, that is over-againſt Egypt; having routed them in the valley, or in whatſoever place the battle was fought, he purſued them from one end of their country to the other; from Havilah, which lay to the north-eaſt, to Shur, which lay to the ſouth-weſt, and deſtroyed all that came in his way between thoſe two points, ſee Gen. xxv. 18.

℣. 8. And he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, &c.] This name ſeems to be a common name of the kings of theſe people, as Pharaoh was of the Egyptians, ſee Numb. xxiv. 2. When this king fell into the hands of Saul, he did not put him to death, as he ſhould have done, but preſerved him; for what reaſons, ſee in the following verſe: and utterly deſtroyed all the people with the edge of the the ſword; that is, all that came in his way, or fell into his hands; all between Havilah and Shur; all excepting thoſe that made their eſcape, for we after read of Amalekites, and that in large bodies, ch xxvii. 8. and xxx. 1.

[r] וישמע audire fecit, Vatablus, Druſius. [s] Antiq. l. 6. c. 7. §. 2. [t] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 22. 2. Jarchi in loc. [u] Ut ſupra. [w] וירב & certavit Pagninus; ut contenderet cum eo, Junius & Tremellius. [x] Ut ſupra, §. 3.

℣. 9. And Saul and all the people ſpared Agag, &c.] Perhaps Saul made the motion to ſpare him, and the people agreed to it; it may be, out of reſpect to him as a king; or becauſe of the comelineſs of his perſon, the tallneſs of his ſtature, and the largeneſs of his body, as Joſephus [y] notes; or to carry him in triumph in a public ſhow, ſee ℣. 12. and the beſt of the ſheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings; or of the ſecond ſort, as in the margin, the ſecond beſt; or rather which ſhed their two long teeth, as ſheep at two years old did when reckoned at their full ſtrength, and fitteſt for ſacrifice [z]: and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly deſtroy them; as they were commanded, but kept them for their own private uſe and advantage, and this not only the beſt and fatteſt of the flocks and herds, but of their houſehold goods: but every thing that was vile and refuſe, that they deſtroyed utterly; ſuch of the cattle that were poor and lean, lame or blind, or had any defect in them, and houſhold goods that were mere rubbiſh and lumber; ſuch they entirely deſtroyed, killed the creatures, and burnt the goods; in doing which they thought they fulfilled the will of God.

℣. 10. Then came the word of the Lord unto Samuel, &c.] The word of prophecy, as the Targum; this came to him in a dream or viſion, or by an articulate voice: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 11. It repenteth me, that I have ſet up Saul to be king, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of any change of mind, counſel, purpoſe or decree in God, which is not conſiſtent with his unchangeable nature; but of a change of diſpenſation, and outward dealings, and is ſpoken after the manner of men, who when they repent of any thing, change the courſe of their conduct and behaviour; and ſo the Lord does without any change of his mind and will, which alters not; and tho' he changes the outward diſpenſations of his providence, yet he never changes and alters in the matters and methods of his grace; though he repented he made Saul king, he never repents of his making his ſaints kings and prieſts for himſelf; his outward gifts he ſometimes takes away, as an earthly crown and kingdom; but his gifts and calling, which are of ſpecial grace, are without repentance, Rom. xi. 29. ſee the note on Gen. vi. 6. for he is turned back from following me; from after my worſhip, as the Targum, from doing his will and work: and hath not performed my commandments; particularly in this affair relating to Amalek: and it grieved Samuel; that Saul ſhould ſo ſoon be rejected from being king, and that he ſhould do any thing to deſerve it; and whom Samuel had anointed king, and for whom he had a cordial reſpect, and to whom he wiſhed well, both for his own perſonal good, and for the good of the people of Iſrael; ſo far was he from rejoicing at his fall, who came in his ſtead, and to whom he gave way in the affair of government: and he cried unto the Lord all night; or prayed, as the Targum; either that the Lord would inform him of the particulars wherein Saul had done amiſs, or that he would forgive his ſin, and not reject him from the kingdom.

℣. 12. And when Samuel roſe early to meet Saul in the morning, &c.] Having had no ſleep ſince the revelation of the will of God was made unto him, and therefore roſe betimes, being in haſte, to converſe with Saul about it: it was told Samuel, ſaying, Saul came to Carmel; not to Carmel where Elijah offered ſacrifice, for that was very remote from hence; but to Carmel, a city in the tribe of Judah, which lay in the way of Saul's return from Amalek, Joſh. xv. 55. and behold, he ſet him up a place; to divide his ſpoil in, as the Targum; or to encamp in, as Kimchi; or to build an altar on, as Jarchi, who takes it to be the ſame that Eliſha after repaired; but, as before obſerved, this place was at a great diſtance from mount Carmel where Elijah ſacrificed. The word for a place ſignifies a hand; and, according to the Vulgate Latin verſion, it was a triumphal arch, and was perhaps an obeliſk or pillar, a trophy or monument erected in memory of the victory he had obtained over the Amalekites. So Jerom ſays [a], when a victory was obtained, they uſed to make an arch of myrtle, palm and olive branches, as a ſign of it; theſe trophies were ſometimes of braſs, ſometimes of marble; ſome were only heaps of ſtones, others a remarkable tree with the branches cut off [b]; ſo the pillar Abſalom erected is called his hand, 2 Sam. xviii. 18. and is gone about, and paſſed on, and gone down to Gilgal; he took a circuit, and moved in great pomp and parade, carrying the king of the Amalekites in triumph with him, and the ſpoil he had taken and reſerved. To Gilgal he went, expecting to meet Samuel there, and offer up peace-offerings to the Lord for the victory he had got.

℣. 13. And Samuel came to Saul, &c.] At Gilgal: and Saul ſaid unto him, bleſſed be thou of the Lord; ſignifying, that he had abundant reaſon to bleſs the Lord on his account, not only that he had anointed him king, but had ſent him on ſuch an errand, in which he had ſucceeded ſo well, and it was a pleaſure to him, that he might report it to him: I have performed the commandment of the Lord; either he was really ignorant that he had done amiſs; and thought, that his ſparing Agag, when he had deſtroyed all the reſt, and reſerving ſome of the beſt of the cattle for ſacrifice, could not be interpreted a breach of the orders given him; or if he was conſcious he had broken the commandment of the Lord, this he ſaid to prevent Samuel's reproof of him, and to ſooth him with flattering words.

℣. 14. And Samuel ſaid, what meaneth then this bleating of the ſheep in mine ears, &c.] For the orders were to deſtroy all living creatures belonging to the Amalekites, ℣. 3. if therefore Saul had performed the commandment of the Lord, as he ſaid he had, from whence were theſe ſheep Samuel heard bleating? and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? where do they come from? theſe queſtions he put to convict him of the falſhood he had delivered; the bleating and lowing of theſe creatures proved him a liar, and were witneſſes of his breach of the divine command; and one would think, every bleating and lowing of theſe muſt alarm his conſcience, unleſs dreadfully ſtupified.

℣. 15. And Saul ſaid, they have brought them from the Amalekites, &c.] That is, the people, laying [y] Ut ſupra, §. 2. Trad in lib. Reg. fol. 76. B.

[z] Bidentes, Virgil. Æneid. l. 6. ℣. 39. Vid. Servium in ib.

[a] Heb.

[b] Vid. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 1. c. 22.

laying the blame upon them, as Adam did on his wife, as if he had no concern at all in it, when it is clear from ℣. 9. he had a principal one; nor is it probable the people ſhould do this of themſelves, without his conſent and authority, which was ſo directly contrary to the expreſs order of God; and then to excuſe the people as well as he could, on whom he laid the blame, he obſerves this was not done for their own private profit and advantage, but for the ſervice and worſhip of God: for the people ſpared the beſt of the ſheep, and of the oxen, to ſacrifice unto the Lord thy God; by way of gratitude and thankfulneſs, for the victory they had obtained; and therefore, ſince they had ſo good an end and deſign in ſparing what they had, and thoſe the beſt and fitteſt for ſacrifice, he hoped they would eaſily be excuſed; and that the prophet would uſe his beſt intereſt with the Lord, who was his God, to whom they deſigned to do honour, that he would overlook what was amiſs in them: and the reſt we have utterly deſtroyed; as they were commanded; but then it was only the vile and the refuſe, the beſt they had reſerved for their own uſe; though he now coloured it with this ſpecious pretence of ſacrificing to God, when he found it was taken notice of, and was reſented.

℣. 16. Then Samuel ſaid unto Saul, ſtay, &c.] Stop a little, don't be in haſte to be gone, as he might ſeem to be, fearing a reproof, and that ſomething would be ſaid to him not very agreeable; or ſuffer [c] me, that is, to ſpeak, give me leave to ſay a few words; for Saul being a king, Samuel treats him as ſuch, and aſks audience of him, or leave of him, to deliver what he had to ſay to him: and I will tell thee what the Lord hath ſaid to me this night; and ſince it was not any thing from himſelf, but from the Lord he had to ſay, he might expect the rather to be heard, and eſpecially, ſince it was what had lately, even that very night, been told him: and he ſaid unto him, ſay on; he gave him leave, perhaps hoping he ſhould hear ſomething ſaid in his praiſe, commending him for what he had done in deſtroying the nation of Amalek, ſee Luke vii. 40. There is a double reading of this clauſe, the Cetib or textual reading is, and they ſaid unto him; meaning Saul, and the elders with him; the Keri, or marginal reading is, which we follow, and he ſaid unto him; meaning Saul, as Kimchi notes.

℣. 17. And Samuel ſaid, when thou waſt little in thine own ſight, &c.] Humble and lowly, and had a mean opinion of himſelf, his family and tribe, and judged himſelf unworthy of the kingdom; ſee ch. ix. 21. ſuggeſting, that now he was proud and haughty, and would have his own will and way: waſt thou not made the head of the tribes of Iſrael; not of his own tribe only, which was the leaſt, but of all the tribes, and ſo they were all ſubject to him, and at his command: and the Lord anointed thee king over Iſrael; all which is obſerved, partly to point out unto him the high honour he was raiſed unto, from a low eſtate, which laid him under obligation to ſerve the Lord, and obey him; and partly as an anſwer to him, excuſing himſelf, and laying the blame upon the people; whereas, ſeeing he was made king over them, his buſineſs was to rule and govern them, guide and direct them in the right way, and reſtrain them from that which was evil; and ſince he was anointed by the Lord, and not by the people, he ought to have obeyed him, and not regarded the pleaſure of them.

℣. 18. And the Lord ſent thee on a journey, &c.] And therefore he ought to have attended to the errand ſent upon, and executed the orders given; in vain therefore was it to lay the blame on the people: and ſaid, go, and utterly deſtroy the ſinners, the Amalekites; thoſe notorious ſinners, who deſerve no mercy at the hands of God or men; who had ſo highly offended the Lord, and had been ſo injurious to his people at their firſt coming out of Egypt. The orders were plain, not to be miſtaken, and full and ſtrong for the utter deſtruction of them without any exception, and therefore nothing could be pleaded in excuſe for the violation of them: and fight againſt them until they be conſumed; entirely; they were not to be left until an end was made of them; or until they had conſumed them [d], the people of Iſrael, or the ſoldiers with Saul.

℣. 19. Wherefore then didſt thou not obey the voice of the Lord, &c.] Who had made him king, and ſent him on this errand, and gave him ſuch plain directions, and ſuch ſtrong orders to make an entire conſumption of Amalek: but didſt fly upon the ſpoil; like a bird of prey, ſuch as an eagle or vulture, not to devote it to the Lord, by an entire deſtruction of it, but to ſeize it for his own uſe, as being greedily deſirous and covetous of it: and didſt evil in the ſight of the Lord? by diſobeying his commands, from whoſe ſight nothing can be hid.

℣. 20. And Saul ſaid to Samuel, yea, I have obeyed the voice of the Lord, &c.] Here Saul breaks in upon Samuel before he had declared all that the Lord had ſaid unto him; for having expoſtulated with him for not obeying the voice of the Lord, he could not forbear interrupting him, but with the utmoſt aſſurance affirms he had obeyed the voice of the Lord; but then it was very imperfectly, and poor proof does he give of it: and have gone the way which the Lord ſent me; it is very true he went into the country of Amalek, but he did not do there all the Lord commanded him: and have brought Agag the king of Amalek; took him alive, and brought him captive; whereas he ought to have deſtroyed him at once, and not have reſerved him for triumph; a ſad proof this of his obeying the voice of the Lord: and have utterly deſtroyed the Amalekites; all that came in his way, in which he did right; but then he had not deſtroyed the principal of them, their king.

℣. 21. But the people took the ſpoil, the ſheep and oxen, &c.] Still he continues to lay the blame on the people, when he, as king, ought to have reſtrained them: the chief of the things, which ſhould have been utterly deſtroyed; this betrays him, and is an evidence againſt him; he could not plead ignorance, he knew and he owns, that according to the command of God they were all devoted to deſtruction; and therefore he ought not to have ſuffered the people to have ſpared any on whatſoever pretence, but to have ſeen all deſtroyed; but he was as deeply in it as they, and therefore palliates the thing, and endeavours to excuſe them by obſerving, that their end was good, the ſervice and glory glory of God, which perhaps were never thought of till now: namely, to ſacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal; as peace-offerings, by way of thankſgiving for the victory obtained, ℣. 15.

[c] הרף permitte, Pagninus, Montanus; ſine me, V. L. ſo Abarbinel.

[d] עד כלותם אתם donec conſumant ipſi eos, Pagninus; ſo Vatablus.

℣. 22. And Samuel ſaid, &c.] In reply to Saul: hath the Lord as great delight in burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? no certainly, the one being merely ceremonial, the other moral; the one ſuppoſes ſin committed, for which ſacrifice is offered; the other moral, and is a compliance with the will of God, and is neither ſinful, nor ſuppoſes any thing ſinful, and therefore muſt be the more acceptable: behold, to obey is better than ſacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams; which always was claimed by the Lord as his right and due; or the fatteſt rams or beſt ſacrifices of whatever ſort, whether burnt-offerings, or ſin-offerings, or peace-offerings; for had man obeyed the will of God, and not ſinned, there would have been no need of ſacrifice; and that was only acceptable to God when offered with a heart truly ſenſible of ſin, and penitent for it, and in the faith of the great ſacrifice of Chriſt, of which all ſacrifices under the law were typical, and led unto.

℣. 23. For rebellion is as the ſin of witchcraft, &c.] Or divination[e], in whatſoever way it was exerciſed; for there were divers ſorts of it among the heathens, and all condemned by the law of God, Deut. xviii. 10. Now rebellion againſt God, or diſobeying his commands, though in things otherwiſe, were they not forbidden by him, lawful to be done, is as heinous a ſin as to be guilty of witchcraft, or any kind of divination forbidden by the law of God, and deſerves as ſore a puniſhment: and ſtubbornneſs is as iniquity and idolatry; for a man, when he has committed a ſin, to perſiſt in it obſtinately, or to vindicate himſelf in it, and inſiſt on his innocence, which was Saul's caſe, is as hateful to God as any iniquity whatever; yea, as bad as idolatry, or making uſe of the Teraphim, as is the word here; of which ſee Hoſ. iii. 4. than which nothing is more abominable to the Lord: becauſe thou haſt rejected the word of the Lord; diſregarded his command, treated it with contempt and abhorrence: he hath rejected thee from being king; not actually, for he continued to exerciſe kingly power and authority to his death, and was treated as a king by his ſubjects, and even by David, tho' anointed by the Lord; but ſententially, the ſentence of rejection was pronounced upon him, and the entail of government on his poſterity was cut off.

℣. 24. And Saul ſaid unto Samuel, I have ſinned, &c.] This confeſſion of his ſin does not appear to be ingenuous, cordial and ſincere, and was made chiefly for the ſake of getting the ſentence of rejecting him from being king reverſed: for I have tranſgreſſed the commandment of the Lord, and thy words; which laſt ſeems to be added to collogue with Samuel, and to ingratiate himſelf with him; and Abarbinel thinks, that Saul ſuſpected that Samuel had aggravated the matter of himſelf, and that he did not really tranſgreſs the words of the Lord, but as the words of Samuel; and therefore according to the words of Samuel he had ſinned, but not according to the words of the Lord only: becauſe I feared the people; Doeg the Edomite, who was reckoned as all of them, Jarchi ſays: this was a mere excuſe of Saul's, he ſtood in no fear of the people, he kept them in awe, and did as he would with them, as a ſovereign prince: and obeyed their voice; in ſparing the beſt of the cattle; ſo he pretended, when it was his own will, and the effect of his covetouſneſs.

℣. 25. Now therefore, I pray thee, pardon my ſin, &c.] It can hardly be thought that Saul was ſo ignorant as to imagine, that Samuel could pardon his ſin as committed againſt God, which none but God can do, but that he would forgive it, ſo far as he had offended him; or rather his meaning is, that as he was a prophet of the Lord, and had great intereſt in him, that he would make uſe of it on his behalf, and pray to God that his ſin might be forgiven him, and the ſentence reverſed concerning his rejection from the kingdom; which perhaps is the chief thing he means by the pardon of his ſin, which ſometimes means no more than averting a threatened judgment, or freedom from puniſhment: and turn again with me; to Gilgal, for he was come out from thence to meet Samuel, having heard that he was coming: that I may worſhip the Lord; by offering ſacrifice, either in thankfulneſs for the victory obtained, or to atone for his ſin, and ſeek pardon for it, or both; this he thought would be a motive and inducement to Samuel to go along with him.

℣. 26. And Samuel ſaid unto Saul, I will not return with thee, &c.] Not being ſatisfied with his repentance and confeſſion, he ſtill extenuating his ſin, and laying the blame of it on the people. This he ſaid by way of reſentment, and as expreſſing his indignation at him, though he afterwards did return with him on a change of his mind; which a good man may be allowed to make, without any imputation of falſhood, or a lie unto him: for thou haſt rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king over Iſrael; which is repeated from ℣. 23. for the confirmation of it, and to let Saul know, that his pretended confeſſion and repentance had made no alteration in the decree and ſentence of God reſpecting the kingdom.

℣. 27. And as Samuel turned about to go away, &c.] From Saul, a different way from Gilgal, perhaps towards his own city Ramah, with an intention to have nothing more to ſay to Saul, or to do with him, or to ſee his face no more; ſo diſpleaſed was he with him: he laid hold upon the ſkirt of his mantle; in order to detain him, and prevent his departure from him, and his going a different way: and it rent; Samuel twitching away from him with great vehemence and warmth. The Jewiſh[f] rabbins are divided about this, whoſe ſkirt was rent; ſome ſay it was Samuel that rent the ſkirt of Saul, and by this ſignified to him, that he that cut off the ſkirt of his garment ſhould reign in his ſtead; whereby Saul knew that David would be king when he cut off the ſkirt of his robe, ch. xxiv. 4, 20. others, that Samuel rent the ſkirt of his own mantle himſelf, which is the way of good men when things are not right; but the plain ſenſe is, that Saul rent the ſkirt of Samuel's mantle, which, when Samuel ſaw, he underſtood what that rent was a ſign of, as expreſſed in the followed verſe.

℣. 28. And Samuel ſaid unto him, the Lord hath rent the kingdom of Iſrael from thee this day, &c.] Seeing his mantle rent by Saul, he took occaſion from thence to predict, and no doubt it was impreſſed on his mind by the Spirit of God, that his kingdom ſhould be in a like manner rent from him, him, on account of his own evil conduct and behaviour; and from this day forward he might expect it; the sentence was gone forth from God, and it would not be reversed; and by a like sign was signified the rending of the ten tribes from the kingdom of Solomon in his son Reboboam, 1 Kings xi. 30, 31. and hath given it to a neighbour of thine that is better than thou; who was David, a man after God's own heart, that would fulfil his will, who was more holy, just, and wise than Saul; whose works were better and righter than his, as the Targum; who was an Israelite, of the same nation and religion as he, and so his neighbour; and though he was not of the same tribe, yet of a neighbouring tribe; Benjamin, and Judah, of which tribe David was, joining closely to one another. It is highly probable that at this time Samuel knew not personally who he was that was designed to be made king in his room, though under the direction of the Spirit of God he thus describes him; for after this he is bid to go to Jesse's family, from thence to anoint a king, and several passed before him ere the Lord pointed out the proper person to him.

[e] חטאת קסם peccatum divinationis, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; ariolandi, V. L. magiæ, Munſter, Tigurine verſion. [f] Midraſh Schemuel, §. 18. apud Jarchi, Kimchi & Abarbinel in loc.

℣. 29. And also the strength of Israel will not lie nor repent, &c.] Neither of the evil which he had threatened to Saul in taking away the kingdom from him; nor of the good which he had promised to David in giving it to him; nor of his purpose and promise to Israel to protect and defend them, save and deliver them from the Philistines, and continue them a nation and kingdom: and for the confirmation of all this, this title or character of the Lord is given, the strength of Israel; hence he cannot lie, which is the effect of weakness; nor repent or change his mind, as men do, when something unforeseen arises; which hinders the execution of their first design, and which through weakness they can't surmount; and hence God would support Israel as a nation, and strengthen them against their enemies, and work deliverance and salvation for them: or the victory of Israel [q]; the author of Israel's victories, and to whom they are to be ascribed, and who is able to give them more, and would; and as he did especially by David, to whom the kingdom is promised: or the eternity of Israel [r]; that gives firmness, permanency, and duration to them; all which is true of Israel in a spiritual sense; he gives them spiritual strength, victory over their enemies, sin, Satan, and the world, permanent duration, everlasting salvation, immortality, and eternal life: for he is not a man, that he should repent; men are weak and feeble, and can't perform what they purpose or promise, and therefore repent; but God, the strength of Israel, is able to perform whatever he has purposed or promised, and therefore repents not; men are changeable in their minds, and repent of their first thoughts and designs; but God is unchangeable, and never alters his counsels, breaks his covenant, reverses his blessings, repents of his gifts, nor changes his affections to his Israel. Abarbinel says this may be understood of Saul, and so be given as a reason why God would not repent of the evil he had threatened him with, because he was a man that repented not of his sin; but the first sense is best, and agrees with, and is confirmed by Numb. xxiii. 19.

℣. 30. Then he said, I have sinned, &c.] So he had said before, ℣. 24. but his confession there was attended with an extenuation of his sin, pleading in excuse of it that it was through fear of the people, but here it is without any; and yet by what follows it appears to be not ingenuous and sincere, but hypocritical: yet honour me now I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel; with his company; since should he be slighted openly by the Lord, and by his prophet, he would fall into contempt both with the principal men, and with the common people; wherefore he seemed more concerned for the loss of honour and reputation with the people, than for his sin against God; which is always the case of hypocrites: and turn again with me, and worship the Lord thy God; see the note on ℣. 25.

℣. 31. So Samuel turned again after Saul, &c.] Though he before said he would not, ℣. 26. yet he did, changing his mind, as he might without being chargeable with a lie; and he also might have an impulse from the Lord so to do, and which he did not in order to worship with Saul, which it does not appear he did, but rather the contrary; but that Saul might not be despised by the people, and his authority lessened, whilst he continued king; and that he might do what Saul had neglected to do, destroy Agag: and Saul worshipped the Lord; alone, by offering sacrifice to him.

℣. 32. Then said Samuel, bring you hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites, &c.] This he said very probably to some of Saul's officers, and in his presence, and before all the people met together for sacrifice: and Agag came unto him delicately; fat and plump, as the Vulgate Latin version, and yet trembling, as that and the Septuagint; well dressed, in the garb and habit of a king, and with the air and majesty of one; or with pleasure and joy, as Kimchi, chusing rather to die, than to be a captive, and live in such reproach as he did; though R. Isaiah and Ben Gersom give the sense of it, that he came bound in chains, and fetters of iron, according to the use of the word in Job xxxviii. 31. and Agag said, surely the bitterness of death is past; this he said, either as not expecting to die, that since he had been spared by Saul, the king of the nation, a fierce and warlike prince, he had nothing to fear from an ancient man and a prophet, and who now bore not the sword of justice; and especially when he came into his presence, and saw his form, which shewed him to be a man of clemency and mercy, as Ben Gersom observes: or as expecting it, and so Kimchi interprets it to this sense, the bitterness of death is come; and is near at hand, and will be soon over; or suggesting that that which was bitter, to others grievous and terrible, was to him sweet and desireable; but the former sense seems best by what follows.

℣. 33. And Samuel said, as thy sword hath made women childless, &c.] Or, bereaved [s] them, not of their children only, but of their husbands also, and so made them both childless and widows; by which it appears that he was a cruel prince, and justly died for his own barbarity and wickedness, as well as for the sins of his ancestors 400 years ago: so shall thy mother be childless among women; which was according to the law of retaliation, and what the Jews call measure for measure: and Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal; either before the ark of the Lord, the symbol of the the divine preſence; or before the altar, where Saul and the people had been ſacrificing; this he did either himſelf, though an old man, or by others to whom he gave the orders; and which he did not as being the chief magiſtrate, and by virtue of his office, but acting as on a ſpecial occaſion, at the command of God, and to ſhew his zeal for him, and indignation at ſuch a breach of his command. In what manner this was done, is not eaſy to ſay; he was not torn to pieces by the hand, without an inſtrument, as Bæbius by the Romans [t]; or ſawn aſunder, as ſome by Caligula [u]; and as Iſaiah the prophet is ſaid to be by Manaſſeh, king of Judah, to which it is thought the apoſtle alludes, Heb. xi. 37. According to Ben Gerſom, the word ſignifies he cleaved him, as wood is cleaved; or divided him into four parts, as Jarchi; perhaps he ſlew him with the ſword, and then quartered him; that is, ordered it to be done.

[q] נצח ישראל victoria Israel, Montanus, Vatablus, Piscator; victor Israelis, Tigurine version. [r] Æternitas Israelis, Junius & Tremellius. [s] שכלה orbavit, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, &c.

℣. 34. Then Samuel went to Ramah, &c.] His native place, and where was his uſual reſidence: and Saul went up to his houſe to Gibeah of Saul; which was alſo his birth-place, and where was his father's houſe, and where he had his palace, and kept his court; and took its name from him, to diſtinguiſh it from another Gibeah; and ſo Joſephus ſays it was called Gabathſaoule, and was about 30 furlongs from Jeruſalem [w].

℣. 35. And Samuel came no more to ſee Saul until the day of his death, &c.] Or added not to ſee him [x]; not that he ſaw him no more, he ſaw him afterwards, ch. xix. 24. but it was accidentally, he did not go to ſee him, but Saul came to him; and Abarbinel ſuppoſes he might not ſee him then, but hid his face from him; and he obſerves that it is ſaid, until the day of his death; which intimates, he thinks, that he ſaw him after his death, when raiſed up by the witch of Endor; but that Samuel was then really raiſed, and was ſeen, wants proof. The meaning of the expreſſion here is no more than this, that Samuel afterwards did not viſit Saul as he uſed to do; he did not go to him, to give him his advice and counſel, as he wonted: nevertheleſs Samuel mourned for Saul; becauſe of his ſin, his impenitence, and hypocriſy; and becauſe of the loſs of the kingdom to him, and to his poſterity; and he might be concerned alſo about his eternal welfare; for he appears to have a natural affection for him, and was far from envying him as his rival, and rejoicing at his fall: and the Lord repented that he made Saul king over Iſrael; nor was his mind altered, neither by the hypocritical confeſſion of Saul, nor by the cordial prayers and tears of Samuel; ſee ℣. 11.

CHAP. XVI.

IN this chapter Samuel is ordered to anoint a king among the ſons of Jeſſe of Bethlehem, ℣. 1—5. all whoſe ſons were made to paſs before him, excepting David, ℣. 6—10. who being then with his father's ſheep, was ſent for and was anointed, ℣. 11, 12, 13. after which the ſpirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and he became melancholy, and it was adviſed to ſeek out a muſician for him, and David was mentioned to him as a proper perſon, ℣. 14—18. upon which he was ſent for, and acted as a muſician to Saul, and alſo became his armour-bearer, which was the firſt riſe of him, ℣. 19—23.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Samuel, &c.] In a viſion or dream, or by an articulate voice: how long wilt thou mourn for Saul? he does not blame him for mourning, but for mourning ſo long; but how long that was cannot be ſaid; and though his affection for him might cauſe him to indulge to it, yet it was in vain, ſeeing the ſentence was irreverſible: ſeeing I have rejected him from reigning over Iſrael? that is, his poſterity; for he himſelf reigned as long as he lived, though in a very inglorious manner: fill thine horn with oil; with common oil; for that this was the holy anointing oil kept in the tabernacle, as the Jewiſh writers generally ſuppoſe, with which they ſay David and Solomon, and the kings of Judah, were anointed, there is no reaſon to believe; ſince the tabernacle where this oil was, was at a diſtance from Samuel, and which ſeems to have been only for the anointing of the prieſts. This was not a vial he was bid to take, as when he anointed Saul; but an horn, denoting the abundance of gifts beſtowed on David, and the firmneſs and duration of his kingdom: and go, and I will ſend thee to Jeſſe the Bethlehemite; the ſon of Obed, whom Boaz begat of Ruth the Moabiteſs, Ruth iv. 21, 22. for I have provided me a king among his ſons; but which he ſays not; this was reſerved for an after-diſcovery; however God had in his own mind pitched upon him whom he would hereafter make known; this was a king for himſelf, raiſed up to fulfil his will; Saul was choſen by him, but then it was at the requeſt of the people, and ſo he was rather their king than his; but this was not at their deſire, nor with their knowledge, but of his own good-will and pleaſure; the one was given in wrath, and the other in love; the one was to the rejection of God as king, the other to the rejection of Saul by the will of God.

℣. 2. And Samuel ſaid, how can I go? &c.] Which argues weakneſs of faith in Samuel, and fear of man, and a diffidence in and diſtruſt of divine power; for otherwiſe he that ſent him on ſuch an errand could protect him: if Saul hear it, he will kill me; ſhould hear that Samuel went and anointed another king, it would ſo enrage him, that he would either immediately lay hands on him, and put him to death, or order him to be put to death; and indeed were it not that this was done by the command of God, he would deſerve to die; it being an overt act of treaſon to anoint another king: and the Lord ſaid, take an heifer with thee, and ſay I am come to ſacrifice to the Lord; a peace-offering, which might be done any where in thoſe unſettled times, the ark being at one place, and the tabernacle at another; and might be offered upon a private altar, and by a private perſon; and as it ſeems Samuel uſed to ſacrifice at different places; ſee ch. vii. 9. and xi. 15. Ben Gerſom relates it as the ſenſe of one of their Rabbins in his age, that there was a perſon ſlain in thoſe parts, not known by whom he was ſlain; and ſo Samuel is ordered to take an heifer to fulfil the law in Deut. xxi and therefore therefore Saul would make no enquiry into his reason of going thither with an heifer, and this is commended both by him and Abarbinel.

3

[t] Flori Hiſt. l. 3. c. 21. [u] Sueton. in vita ejus, c. 27. [w] De bello Jud. l. 5. c. 2. §. 1.
[x] ולא יסף ־ לראות & non addidit ad videndum, Montanus.

℣. 3. And call Jesse to the sacrifice, &c.] His family, both him and his sons, to partake of the peace-offerings; as every offerer had a right to invite his friends, and whomsoever he pleased, to eat of those parts of them which belonged to him, as a feast before the Lord: and I will shew thee what thou shalt do; when Jesse and his family were with him: and thou shalt anoint unto me him whom I name unto thee; that is, anoint him to be king over Israel, whom he should point out so plainly to him, as if he called him by name.

℣. 4. And Samuel did that which the Lord spake, &c.] He filled a horn of oil, and took an heifer with him: and came to Bethlehem; where Jesse and his family lived, which, according to Bunting [y], was 16 miles from Ramah; though it could hardly be so much, since Ramah was 6 miles from Jerusalem on one side, as Bethlehem lay 6 miles from it on the other [z]: and the elders of the town trembled at his coming; for he being now an old man, and seldom went abroad, they concluded it must be something very extraordinary that brought him thither; and they might fear that as he was a prophet of the Lord, that he was come to reprove them, or denounce some judgment upon them for their sins. The Targum is, "the elders of the city gathered together to meet him;" out of respect and in honour to him, and to the same sense Jarchi's note is, "they hasted to go out to meet him;" see Hos. xi. 11. and said, comest thou peaceably? the word said is singular; one of the elders put this question, the chiefest of them, perhaps Jesse; and the meaning of it is, whether he came with ill news and bad tidings, or as displeased with them himself on some account or another; or with a message from God as displeased with them; or whether he came there for his own peace and safety, to be sheltered from Saul; and which, if that was the case, might not be for their peace and good; but would draw upon them the wrath and vengeance of Saul; for they doubtless knew that there was a variance, at least a shyness, between Saul and Samuel.

℣. 5. And he said, peaceably I am come to sacrifice unto the Lord, &c.] Which he could say with truth, it being one end of his coming, though not the only one for which he came, and which he was not obliged to tell: sanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice; prepare themselves for it, which was done by washing their garments, &c. and then attend with him, and assist him in the sacrifice: and he sanctified Jesse and his sons, and called them to the sacrifice; he ordered them to sanctify themselves; he distinguished them from the rest of the inhabitants, and invited them to partake of the feast, the remainder of the peace-offerings.

℣. 6. And it came to pass when they were come, &c.] Jesse and his sons, into the house where the entertainment was; and perhaps before they sat down, went into a private apartment by the direction of Samuel, where he acquainted Jesse with the business he came upon: that he looked on Eliab; who was Jesse's first-born, 1 Chron. ii. 13. called Elihu, 1 Chron. xxvii. 18. and said, surely the Lord's anointed is before him; or this is the person it is his pleasure should be anointed king.

℣. 7. But the Lord said to Samuel, &c.] By a secret impulse upon his mind, as if he had spoken with an articulate voice to him: look not on his countenance; which was comely and majestic: or on the height of his stature; which was like that of Saul's; and because the Lord had chosen him, who was superior to the people in this respect, Samuel thought he meant to have such an one now anointed king: because I have refused him; or it is not my pleasure that he should be king; though Ben Gersom thinks this refers to Saul, that the Lord had rejected him, though of an high stature, and therefore Samuel should not look out for such a person to be king; and Abarbinel refers it to the height of stature itself, that God had rejected that, and laid it aside as a qualification of a king, or as a rule to judge of a proper person to be a king; but no doubt it respected Eliab: for the Lord seeth not as man seeth; man only sees what is without, but the Lord sees what is within; only the outward visible form of the body is seen by man, but the inward qualifications and endowments of the mind are seen by the Lord: for man looketh on the outward appearance; the comeliness of a man's person, the majesty of his countenance, the tallness of his stature, and bigness of his body, things which recommended men to be kings among the nations of the world; see the note on ch. ix. 2. or to the eyes [a]; the liveliness, and briskness, and sharpness of them, thereby to judge of the sagacity and penetration of the mind, as Physiognomists do; who guess at the disposition of men by them, when they are small or great, watry or dry, of this or the other colour [b]: but the Lord looketh on the heart; and knows what is in that, what wisdom and prudence, justice and integrity, mercy and goodness, and other princely qualifications are in that. The Jewish writers conclude from hence, that the heart of Eliab was not right; it may be full of wrath, pride, envy, &c. which disqualified him for government.

℣. 8. Then Jesse called Abinadab, &c.] His second son, ch. xvii. 13. and made him pass before Samuel; that he might take a full view of him: and he said, neither hath the Lord chosen this; which he knew by a private suggestion from him.

℣. 9. Then Jesse made Shammah to pass by, &c.] His third son, ch. xvii. 13. sometimes called Shimma, and Shimeah, 1 Chron. ii. 13. 2 Sam. xiii. 3. and he said, neither hath the Lord chosen this; which he knew in the same way as before.

℣. 10. Again Jesse made seven of his sons pass before Samuel, &c.] Not 7 more, for he had but 8 sons in all with David, ch. xvii. 12. but four more, which with the other three made seven; three of these four are mentioned by name, Nathanael, Raddai, and Ozem, 1 Chron. ii. 14, 15. but the fourth we no where read of; perhaps he died quickly after this, was an obscure person, and of no fame and note, or might be by another woman: and Samuel said unto Jesse, the Lord hath not chosen these; not any one of them.

℣. 11. And Samuel said unto Jesse, are here all thy children? &c.] For neither of these being the person God would have anointed king, and yet it was one of Jesse's sons that was to be anointed, he concluded

[y] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 125.
[z] Vid. Hieron. de loc. Heb. fol. 89. F. & 94. B.
[a] לעינים ad oculos, Montanus.
[b] Vid. Schotti Thaumaturg. Physic. par. 4. l. 7. c. 8.

cluded he must have more, at least one more, and therefore puts this question to him: and he said, there remaineth yet the youngest; or, the little one [c]; not of a little diminutive stature; for he was a mighty man, a man of strength, courage, and valour, ℣. 18. or of a puerile age, for the Jews say [d] he was now 29 years of age; but that is not likely, he hardly exceeded more than 20, or was so much; thereabout he might be; but he is so called because he was the youngest son, as we render it: and behold, he keepeth the sheep; and from following them, he was taken and anointed king; see Ps. lxxviii. 70, 71. Some of the greatest of men have been taken from rustic employment, as Moses, Gideon, Saul, and others: and Samuel said unto Jesse, send and fetch him; out of the field by a messenger: for we will not sit down till he come hither; that is, at table, to eat of that part of the peace-offerings which belonged to the offerer Samuel, and which he had invited Jesse and his sons to partake of.

℣. 12. And he sent and brought him in, &c.] Sent messengers into the field and to the flock for him, and being come home Jesse introduced him into the room where Samuel was: now he was ruddy; which some understand not of the ruddiness of his complexion, or of his cheeks, but of the redness of his hair; the former seems best: and withal of a beautiful countenance; of comely features: or beautiful eyes [e]; bright, clear, and sparkling; eyes that are black or blue are reckoned beautiful: and goodly to look to; of a pleasant countenance, delightful to behold; he carried sweetness as well as majesty in his face; in this he was a type of Christ, Cant. v. 10, 16. A beautiful aspect, as well as shape and tallness, recommended persons for government, as with the Ethiopians, as Aristotle [f] relates; so Agamemnon is represented by Priamus [g] for his personable appearance, as like a king, and fit to be one: and the Lord said, arise, anoint him, for this is he; that he had spoken to him of, and who it was his pleasure should be anointed king; and therefore by a secret strong impulse upon his mind, was put upon doing it immediately, without any hesitation or delay.

℣. 13. Then Samuel took the horn of oil, &c.] Out of his pocket, which he brought along with him by the direction of God: and anointed him in the midst of his brethren; not in the presence of them, they sitting around, or standing by and seeing the ceremony performed; which is not consistent with the secrecy with which Samuel was directed to manage this affair, and which was necessary to observe, to keep it from the knowledge of Saul; and with Eliab's treatment of David afterwards, who would never have addressed him in the manner he did, had he known that he was anointed king, ch. xvii. 28. but the sense is, according to Kimchi and Abarbinel, that he was selected out of them, and separated from them, and privately anointed by Samuel, and at most only his father Jesse present; wherefore some observe, that the words may be rendered, anointed him from the midst of his brethren [h]; that is, he took him apart from them, and anointed him: and the Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward; not as a spirit of grace and holiness, which probably had come upon him before this time; but a spirit of prophecy, as did on Saul after his unction; and which particularly shewed itself in music and poetry, in which he immediately became very eminent, and he was taken notice of for it, and which was the means of bringing him into Saul's court; and a spirit of wisdom and prudence, in civil as well as in sacred things; and a spirit of fortitude, as the Targum, of strength of body, and courage and valour of mind; whereby he was enabled to encounter with the lion and bear, and get the mastery of them; which with all other gifts of the Spirit fitting him for government, he was now endowed with, and which continued with him: so Samuel rose up, and went to Ramah; his native place, and where he resided; that is, after the festival of the peace-offerings, to which Jesse and his sons were invited; for the anointing seems to be before that.

℣. 14. But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, &c.] As a spirit of prophecy as at first, as a spirit of wisdom and prudence in civil government, and as a spirit of fortitude and courage, as the Targum: and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him; the reverse of the former, which by the permission of God, and as a punishment to him for his sins, came upon him; he seemed to be a dæmoniac, as Josephus represents [i] him, as if possessed with the devil; by whom he was almost suffocated and strangled, as well as was distracted in his counsels, and became weak and foolish; lost all courage and greatness of mind, was timorous and fearful, and started at every thing, and was full of envy, suspicion, rage, and despair.

℣. 15. And Saul's servants said unto him, &c.] His courtiers, who observing him to act in a frantic manner, to be dull and melancholy, timorous, and irresolute, unsteady, divided and distressed; or his physicians, who were called in to assist him, and remove his disorder from him: behold, now an evil spirit from God troubleth thee; the disorder was not from any natural cause, or any bodily disease, and therefore out of the reach of physicians to do any service, but was from an evil spirit suffered of God to harrass and disturb him.

℣. 16. Let our lord now command thy servants, which are before thee, &c.] Meaning either themselves, or some of a more inferior rank, who were in some post and office at court, waiters there, such as yeomen of the guards: to seek out a man who is a cunning player on the harp; a musical instrument much in use in those days: and it shall come to pass when the evil spirit from God is upon thee; when in a melancholy mood, and Satan takes the advantage of it to distress and terrify, to spread the gloom, and stir up evil passions, and promote distraction and confusion: that he shall play with his hand: upon the harp, that being not an instrument of wind, but of hand-music: and thou shalt be well; music being a means of chearing the spirits, and removing melancholy and gloomy apprehensions of things, and so of restoring to better health of body and disposition of mind; and that music has such an effect on the bodies and minds of men is certain from observation and experience in all ages. Music has been found to be medicine to various diseases, not only for the curing of the bite of vipers, and of the Tarantula, but for easing the pains of the sciatica, and for helping persons labouring under the disorders of the phrenzy [k]; and Pythagoras used to compose the mind, and remove the perturbations of it, by the use of the harp [l], the thing here advised to.

℣. 17.

[c] הקטן parvulus, V. L. simul pulcher oculis, Montanus; cum pulchritudine oculorum, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. [d] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 13. p. 39. [e] עם יפה עינים [f] Politic. l. 4. c. 4. [g] Homer. Iliad. 3. v. 166. [h] So Pool, Patrick, &c. [i] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 8. §. 2. [k] A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 4. c. 13. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 17. Vid. Philostrat. vit. Apollon. Tyan. l. 5. c. 7. [l] Seneca de ira, l. 3. c. 9.

℣. 17. And Saul said unto his servants, &c.] Approving of, and pleased with the advice they gave: provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me; for being a sovereign prince, he could command whom he would to attend his person and service.

℣. 18. Then answered one of the servants, &c.] Which the Jews say [m] was Doeg the Edomite, who out of envy and ill-will to David spake of him, that Saul might have an opportunity of slaying him; but this is not at all likely; rather it was one of David's friends and acquaintance, that was desirous of promoting him at court, and no doubt was directed to that motion by the over-ruling providence of God: and said, behold, I have seen a son of Jesse the Bethlehemite; he does not mention the name of his son, but so describes him, that he might be easily known by those who knew any thing of the family of Jesse; besides it was sufficient that he was one of Jesse's sons, to find him out: that is cunning in playing; that is, on the harp; has good skill in music, and is expert in it: and a mighty valiant man; as appeared by his encountring with, and slaying the lion and the bear; an event now past, as very probable: and a man of war; some think this character of him was given after the affair of his fighting with Goliath and killing him, but here put by a prolepsis or anticipation; and indeed if David had been taken into Saul's court before that affair, it is difficult to account for Saul's ignorance of him, since he must be so near him, and so often with him, as his musician and armour-bearer; though that difficulty may be removed, as may be observed in its proper place: and prudent in matters; in his talk, and conversation, and conduct, and behaviour; knew how to carry himself, even in a prince's court: and a comely person; which always recommended to the courts of the eastern nations; see the note on Dan. i. 4. and the Lord is with him; prospering and succeeding him in whatsoever he is engaged; and seeing the Lord was with him, it might be expected the evil spirit would depart from Saul, when this person with whom the Lord was, was in his presence. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord is for his help;" all that is said of him shewed that he was fit to be in the palace of a king, and a proper person to be with Saul in his present circumstances.

℣. 19. Wherefore Saul sent messengers to Jesse, &c.] For David; not chusing to take him without his leave, though Samuel suggests that kings would do so, ch. viii. 11. and said, send me David thy son, which is with the sheep; he had learnt his name, and what was his employment; and which last he mentions not by way of contempt, it not being reckoned mean and despicable even in the sons of great personages, in those times and countries, to attend flocks and herds: so with the Arabs, as Philo [n] testifies, young men and maids of the most illustrious families fed cattle; and with the ancient Romans, the senator [o], fed his own sheep. Paris, son of Priamus, king of Troy, is said [p] to feed his father's oxen and sheep; and Saul himself had done the same; but to describe him particularly.

℣. 20. And Jesse took an ass laden with bread, &c.] Laden with a load of bread, as the Targum; with as much as it could carry, or was used to carry; the Septuagint version is, an omer of bread, which was as much as a man could eat in one day; and according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, it may be interpreted an heap of bread, agreeable to the use of the word in Judg. xv. 16. and a bottle of wine; or a skin of wine, a leather bag or sack, which held more than our bottles; the Targum is, a flagon of wine: and a kid; of the goats, as the same Targum: and sent them by David his son unto Saul; some think that Jesse suspected that Saul had got the secret of David's being anointed, and was fearful that he had a design upon his life, and therefore sent this present by his son to pacify him, and ingratiate him unto him; but rather he sent it as a token of respect and subjection to his sovereign, and according to the custom of those times, when men used to carry presents when they waited upon princes, and indeed in their common visits; and do in the eastern countries to this day; see the note on ch. ix. 7.

℣. 21. And David came to Saul, and stood before him, &c.] As a servant, and ministered to him in the way, and for the purpose for which he was sent: and he loved him greatly; being a comely person, and a well-behaved youth, and especially as he was serviceable to him with his music, in driving away melancholy from him: and he became his armour-bearer; that is, he appointed him to this office, though we never read that he exercised it; nor did he go with Saul in this capacity to the battle related in the following chapter: it may be literally rendered, and he was to him a bearer of vessels, or instruments [q]; and Abarbinel thinks this is to be understood not of instruments of war, but of instruments of music to play with; which he brought in and bare before him when he went in to the king.

℣. 22. And Saul sent to Jesse, saying, let David I pray thee, stand before me, &c.] Continue in his service; which was great condescension in him, and great respect shewn to Jesse, not to detain his son without his leave, and to ask it as a favour of him: for he hath found favour in my sight; was very acceptable to him, which must be very pleasing to Jesse to hear; especially if he was in any fear that Saul had an ill design upon him, when he first sent for him.

℣. 23. And it came to pass, when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, &c.] See ℣. 14, 15. tho' the word evil is not in the text here; wherefore Abarbinel thinks that this here was the Spirit of God, which stirred up in him thoughts of divine things, put him in mind of what God had said, that he had rejected him from being king, and had rent the kingdom from him; and this filled him with grief and trouble, and he became melancholy: that David took an harp, and played with his hands; upon it; and as Josephus [r] says, at the same time sung hymns and psalms; made use both of vocal and instrumental music: so Saul was refreshed, and was well; became chearful, his grief was removed, his black and gloomy apprehensions of things were dispersed, and he was cured of his melancholy disorder for the present: and the evil spirit departed from him; at least for a while; he had his fits and intervals; of the effects of music in a natural way, see the note on ℣. 16. though no doubt the music of David was more than natural, being attended with the power and blessing of God, in order to raise his fame and credit at court.

CHAP.

[m] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 93. 2. So in Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 76. C.
[n] De vita Mosis, l. 1. p. 610.
[o] Pascebatque suas, &c. Ovid. Fast. l. 1.
[p] Coluthi Raptus Helenæ, v. 71, 101.
[q] ויהי לו נשא כלים et fuit ei ferens vasa, Montanus; ferens instrumenta, Piscator.
[r] Ut supra.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter relates how the armies of Iſrael, and of the Philiſtines, prepared for battle, and where; ℣. 1, 2, 3. deſcribes a champion of the Philiſtines, who defied the armies of Iſrael, ℣. 4—11. and whilſt he was ſo doing, it informs us that David came into the camp, and heard his words, and ſignified to one and another his inclination to fight with him, ℣. 12—30. which being reported to Saul, David was ſent for by him, and much diſcourſe paſſed between them about it, ℣. 31—37. when we are told the manner in which he engaged with the Philiſtine, and the victory he obtained over him, ℣. 38—51. upon which the Philiſtines fled, and Iſrael purſued them; and on account of this action David was taken notice of by Saul, and brought to court again, as the following chapter ſhows, ℣. 52—58.

℣. 1. Now the Philiſtines gathered together their armies to battle, &c.] Joſephus [s] ſays this was not long after the things related in the preceding chapter were tranſacted; and very probably they had heard of the melancholy and diſtraction of Saul, and thought it a proper opportunity of avenging themſelves on Iſrael for their laſt ſlaughter of them, and for that purpoſe gathered together their diſperſed troops: and were gathered together at Shochoh, which belongeth to Judah; a city of the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 35. which ſhews that notwithſtanding their laſt defeat, they had great footing in the land of Iſrael, or however had penetrated far into it in this march of theirs: and pitched between Shochoh and Azekah; which were both in the ſame tribe, and near one another, of which ſee the notes on Joſh. x. 10. and xv. 35. in Ephes-dammim; which by an apocope of the firſt letter is called Pas-dammim, 1 Chron. xi. 13. which the Jews [t] ſay had this name becauſe there blood ceaſed.

℣. 2. And Saul, and the men of Iſrael were gathered together, &c.] He being cured, at leaſt being better of his diſorder, through the muſick of David, and alarmed and arouſed by the invaſion of the Philiſtines, which might ſerve to diſſipate any remains of it, or prevent its return, got together his forces: and pitched by the valley of Elah; which Jerom [u] ſays Aquila and Theodotion interpret the valley of the oak; but the Vulgate Latin verſion, the valley of Terebinth; which, according to our countryman Sandys [w], was four miles from Rama-ſophim, where Samuel dwelt; for he ſays, "after four miles riding, we deſcended into the valley of Terebinth, famous, though little, for the ſlaughter of Golias;" and in the Targum, this valley is called the valley of Butma, which in the Arabic language ſignifies a terebinth, or turpentine-tree; though ſome tranſlate it the oak; and according to ſome modern travellers [x], to this day it bears a name ſimilar to that; for they ſay it is "now called the vale of Bitumen, very famous all over thoſe parts for David's victory over Goliath:" and ſet the battle in array againſt the Philiſtines; prepared to give them battle.

℣. 3. And the Philiſtines ſtood on a mountain on the one ſide, and Iſrael ſtood on a mountain on the other ſide, &c.] Before the Iſraelites are ſaid to encamp in or by the valley; but here they are ſaid to take the higher ground, and face the Philiſtines, who were on a mountain or hill on the other ſide over-againſt them, which Kimchi reconciles thus; the whole or the grand army lay encamped in the valley, and they that were ſet in array, or the firſt ranks, the firſt battalion, aſcended the mountain to meet the Philiſtines. Vatablus takes it to be the ſame mountain, that on one part of it the Philiſtines formed their firſt battalion, and the reſt of the army was in the valley; and on the other part of the mountain the Iſraelites pitched their camp: and there was a valley between them; the ſame as in the preceding verſe.

℣. 4. And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philiſtines, &c.] Or a middle perſon, or a man between two [y]; meaning either one that went and ſtood between the two armies, of Iſrael, and the Philiſtines, as the Jewiſh writers generally interpret it: or a dueller [z], as others, with which our verſion agrees; one that propoſed to fight a duel, and have the war decided by two perſons, of which he would be one: named Goliath of Gath; which was one of the places where the Anakim or giants were driven, and left, in the times of Joſhua, and from whom this man deſcended, Joſh. xi. 22. whoſe height was ſix cubits and a ſpan; and taking a cubit after the calculation of Biſhop Cumberland [a] to be 21 inches, and more, and a ſpan to be half a cubit, the height of this man was 11 feet 4 inches, and ſomewhat more; which need not ſeem incredible, ſince the coffin of Oreſtes, the ſon of Agamemnon, is ſaid [b] to be 7 cubits long; and Elcazar, a Jew, who becauſe of his bigneſs was called the giant, and was preſented by Artabanus, king of the Parthians, to Tiberius Cæſar, is ſaid by Joſephus [c] to be 7 cubits high; and one Gabbara, of Arabia, in the times of Claudius Cæſar, meaſured 9 feet 9 inches, as Pliny [d] relates, and who elſewhere [e] ſpeaks of a people in Ethiopia, called Syrbotæ, who were 8 cubits high; the Septuagint verſion makes Goliath to be only four cubits and a ſpan high, and ſo Joſephus [f]; that is, about eight feet.

℣. 5. And he had an helmet of braſs upon his head, &c.] This was a piece of armour, which covered the head in the day of battle; theſe were uſually made of the ſkins of beaſts, of leather, and which were covered with plates of iron or braſs; and ſometimes made of all iron, or of braſs [g], as this ſeems to have been: and he was armed with a coat of mail; which reached from the neck to the middle, and conſiſted of various plates of braſs laid on one another, like the ſcales of fiſhes [h], ſo cloſe together that no dart or arrow could pierce between: and the weight of the coat was 5000 ſhekels of [s] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 9. §. 1. [t] Midraſh Ruth, fol. 48. 2. Kimchi in loc. [u] De loc. Heb. fol. 91. F. [w] Travels, p. 157. ed. 5. [x] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. I. p. 305.

[y] איש הבנים vir intermedius, Montanus; inter duo, Vatablus; vir medietatum, Noldius, p. 194. N°. 883.
[z] Quidam duellator, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[a] Of Scripture-Weights and Meaſures, c. 2. p. 57.
[b] Herodot. Clio, ſive, l. 1. c. 68. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 16. [c] Antiqu. l. 18. c. 5. §. 5. [d] Nat. Hiſt. ib.
[e] Ibid. l. 6. c. 30. [f] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 9. §. 1. [g] Vid. Lydium de re militari, l. 3. c. 5. p. 63.
[h] —— Rutilum thoraca indutus aënis
Horrebat ſquamis —— Virgil. Æneid. l. 11.

I

of brass; which made 156 pounds and a quarter, of zygostatic or averdupois weight; and therefore he must be a very strong man indeed to carry such a weight. So the armour of the ancient Romans were all of brass, as this man's; their helmets, shields, greaves, coats of mail, all of brass, as Livy says [h]; and so in the age of the Grecian heroes [i].

℣. 6. And he had greaves of brass upon his legs, &c.] Which were a sort of boots, or leg-harnesses, which covered the thighs and legs down to the heels; such as Iolaus [k], and the Grecians usually wore, as described by Homer; which are supposed to be double the weight of the helmet, reckoned at 15 pounds, so that these must weigh 30 pounds of averdupois weight: and a target of brass between his shoulders; the Targum is, "a spear or shield of brass, which came out of the helmet, and a weight of brass upon his shoulders." Jarchi says the same, and that it was in the form of a spear to defend the neck from the sword; it seems to be a corslet of brass, worn between the helmet and the coat of mail for the defence of the neck, supposed to weigh thirty pounds [l].

℣. 7. And the staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam, &c.] The wooden part of it held in the hand; this for thickness was like the beam in the weaver's loom, about which the warp, or else the web is rolled; and it is conjectured that in proportion to the stature of Goliath, his spear must be 26 feet long, since Hector's in Homer [m] was 11 cubits, or 16 feet and a half: and his spear's head weighed 600 shekels of iron; the iron part of the spear, the point of it, which has its name in Hebrew from a flame of fire, because when brandished it looks shining and flaming; and being the weight of 600 shekels, amounted to 18 pounds and three quarters of averdupois weight, and the whole spear is supposed to weigh 37 pounds and a half; and the whole of this man's armour is thought to weigh 272 pounds, 13 ounces [n]; which was a prodigious weight for a man to carry, and go into battle with; and one may well wonder how he could be able with such a weight about him to move and lay about in an engagement; though this is nothing in comparison of the weight some men have carried. Pliny [o] tells us that he saw one Athenatus come into the theatre clothed with a leaden breast-plate of 500 pounds weight, and shod with buskins of the same weight: and one bearing a shield went before him; which when engaged in battle he held in his own hand, and his sword in the other; the former was reckoned at 30 pounds, and the latter at four pounds one ounce; though one would think he had no occasion for a shield, being so well covered with armour all over; so that the carrying of it before him might be only a matter of form and state. His spear is the only piece of armour that was of iron, all the rest were of brass; and Hesiod [p] writing of the brazen age, says, their arms and their houses were all of brass, for then there was no iron; and so Lucretius [q] affirms, that the use of brass was before iron; but both are mentioned together, Gen. iv. 22. see the note; hence Mars is called Χαλχεος Αρης [r].

℣. 8. And he stood and cried unto the armies of Israel, &c.] He stood in the valley between the two armies, and cried with a loud voice that he might be heard; and as he was of such a monstrous stature, no doubt his voice was very strong and sonorous; and as the battalions of Israel designed by armies were posted on the mountain or hill, his voice would ascend, and be the more easily heard: and said unto them, why are ye come out to set your battle in aray? either as wondering at their boldness, to set themselves in battle-aray against the Philistines; or rather suggesting that it was needless, since the dispute between them might be issued by a single combat: am not I a Philistine, and you servants to Saul? a common Philistine, according to Jarchi; not a captain of a hundred, or of a thousand; and yet would fight any one of them, their general officers, or be they who they would; or rather, as Abarbinel, he was a prince among the Philistines, and king of Gath; and tho' he was, and it was usual with great persons to engage with their equals, yet he did not insist on that; but would engage with any man, though of an inferior rank, even with any of Saul's servants; and by calling the Israelites the servants of Saul, he might have some respect to Saul's arbitrary government over them; and since they must be servants and slaves, it was as well to be servants to the Philistines as to him: chuse you a man for you, and let him come down to me; according to Jarchi and the Targumist, the challenge first respects Saul their king; that if he was a man of fortitude and courage, let him come and engage with him; if not, chuse another, and send him down into the valley to fight with him. These same writers represent him as blustering and bragging that he killed the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, took the ark captive, and carried it into the temple of Dagon; that he had been used to go out with the armies of the Philistines, and had obtained victories, and slain many, and yet had never been made captain of a thousand among them; all which is improbable, and some of it notoriously false; for in every battle after the taking of the ark, the Philistines had been beaten.

℣. 9. If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants, &c.] For which it does not appear he had any commission or authority to say; nor did the Philistines think themselves obliged to abide by what he said, since when he was slain, they did not yield themselves servants to the Israelites: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us; to which terms also the Israelites did not consent; nor did David who engaged with him enter the list on such conditions.

℣. 10. And the Philistine said, I defy the armies of Israel this day, &c.] Or reproach [s] them; that is, should they not accept his challenge, and send down a man to fight with them, he should then upbraid them with cowardice; and now he disdained them, as if there was not a man among them that dared to encounter with him: give me a man that we may fight together; and so decide the controversy between us; such as were those duels fought between Paris

[h] Hist. l. 1. c. 22. of Mail of Brass. [i] Iliad. 18. [k] Hesiod. Scutum Herc. ℣. 122. [l] Pausan. Messenica, l. 3. p. 163. So Homer frequently describes the Grecians with a Coat [m] Iliad. 18. [n] Hostius, ut supra. [o] Nat. Hist. l. 7. c. 20. [p] Opera & Dies, l. 1. ℣. 147, 148. [q] De rerum natura, l. 5. & prior æris erat, &c. [r] Homer. Iliad. 5. ℣. 704, 859, 864. Pindar. Olymp. ode 10. [s] חרפתי exprobravi, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus; probro affeci, Tigurine version; probro affecere, Junius & Tremellius. [l] Vid. Hostii Monomach. David & Goliath, c. 5.

Paris and Menelaus in the Trojan war, and between the Lacedæmonians and the Argives in the times of Orthryades, and between the Athenians and Romans by the Horatii and Curiatii, as Grotius obſerves.

℣. 11. When Saul and all Iſrael heard theſe words of the Philiſtine, &c.] For they were delivered with ſuch a tone and ſtrength of voice, as to be heard very generally, at leaſt by many, and which ſoon was reported through the whole army: they were diſmayed, and greatly afraid; which may ſeem ſtrange, when there were ſo many valiant men among them, as Saul himſelf, who had behaved with ſo much courage againſt the Ammonites, Philiſtines and Amalekites; but now the Spirit of God was departed from him, and he was become timorous and fearful; and though he was much better than he had been, yet ſtill he was not the man of ſpirit and reſolution as before: there was alſo Abner the general of his army, a very valiant man, a great man in Iſrael, and yet appears not on this occaſion; and what is more wonderful, Jonathan the ſon of Saul was preſent, as appears from ch. xviii. 1. who had not only ſmitten a garriſon of the Philiſtines, but with one man more only had attacked another garriſon, and routed the whole army of the Philiſtines, and yet now ſhows not his head againſt a ſingle man: ſo it is when God cuts off the ſpirits of princes, or takes away their courage; victory over this man, and the glory of it, were reſerved for David; and all this fear and dread throughout the armies of Iſrael were ſuffered, that he might appear the more glorious.

℣. 12. Now David was the ſon of that Ephrathite of Bethlehem-judah, whoſe name was Jeſſe, &c.] Before made mention of, ch. xvi. 1. and he had eight ſons; ſeven only are mentioned, 1 Chron. ii. 13, 14, 15. one of them being, as is thought by ſome, a grandſon, perhaps Jonadab the ſon of Shammah; or was a ſon by another woman, or died without children, as Jarchi, and therefore not mentioned: and the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul; the phraſe, among men, either ſignifies, that he was ranked among old men, infirm and unfit for war, and ſo excuſed, and his ſons went in his room, ſo Kimchi; or he was reckoned among men of the firſt rank, men of eſteem, credit and reputation, ſo Jarchi, and R. Iſaiah, with which agrees the Targum; or whenever he went abroad, he was attended by many men, had a large retinue, which ſenſe Abarbinel mentions, and is that of Ben Gerſom, and agrees with the Talmud[t]; but the Syriac and Arabic verſions read ſtricken in years, which ſeems moſt agreeable.

℣. 13. And the three eldeſt ſons of Jeſſe went, and followed Saul to the battle, &c.] Either of their own accord, or rather at their father's motion, or however with his knowledge and conſent, who becauſe he could not go himſelf, willed them to go; and theſe were forward, and ſome of the foremoſt that followed Saul to the battle, being zealous and well diſpoſed to defend their king and country: and the names of the three ſons that went to the battle, were Eliab the firſt-born, and next unto him Abinadab, and the third Shammah; who are the three mentioned by name that paſſed before Samuel, when he came to anoint one of Jeſſe's ſons to be king, ch. xvi. 6, 8, 9.

℣. 14. And David was the youngeſt, &c.] For the ſake of whom this account is given of Jeſſe and his family, and who after this makes a conſiderable figure in the camp and court of Saul: the three eldeſt followed Saul; as before related, and which is repeated, that it might be obſerved that they only of Jeſſe's ſons followed Saul; not David particularly, but who was providentially ſent to the army at the time the Philiſtine was defying it.

℣. 15. But David went, and returned from Saul, &c.] Or from above Saul; Joſephus[u] ſays, the phyſicians of Saul adviſed to get a man to ſtand ὑπερ κεφαλης, over his head, and ſing pſalms and hymns to him; and Saul being recovered from his phrenſy and melancholy by means of David's muſic, he was diſmiſſed from him, or had leave to go home, or he returned upon Saul's taking the field; though one would think, if he was now his armour-bearer, he would have gone with him, ſee ch. xvi. 21. It ſeems, that when he was called to the court of Saul, that he did not continue there, but was going and coming, was there at certain times when Saul wanted him; and ſo when in the camp he might go and return as there was occaſion for it: to feed his father's ſheep at Bethlehem; for though he was anointed king, and was called to court, yet ſuch was his humility, that he condeſcended to attend this employment of keeping ſheep; and though Jeſſe knew all this, yet he kept him at home to this buſineſs, when it might be more reaſonably thought he would have lain in the way of preferment, had he followed Saul to the camp, and appeared in the army; but he choſe to leave things to the providence of God to work the way for him, and by which he was directed to take the following ſtep, though perhaps without any deſign to his ſon's future promotion.

℣. 16. And the Philiſtine drew near morning and evening, &c.] Twice a day, he came near the camp, within the hearing of it. The Jews[w] ſay, he took thoſe ſeaſons on purpoſe to diſturb them in reading their Shema, or hear, O Iſrael, &c. and ſaying their prayers morning and evening: and preſented himſelf 40 days; ſucceſſively, before the armies of Iſrael, daring them to ſend down a man to fight with him, and reproaching them for their cowardice in not doing it.

℣. 17. And Jeſſe ſaid unto David his ſon, &c.] His youngeſt ſon that was at home with him keeping ſheep; he had three more at home, and who were elder than David, and yet he is directed by the providence of God to pitch upon him, and ſend him on the following errand, there being work for him to do Jeſſe knew nothing of: take now for thy brethren an ephah of this parched corn; pointing to a quantity of it in a certain place; this was wheat or barley dried in a furnace or oven, and ground into meal, and being mixed with water, or milk, or butter, or honey, or oil, was eaten, and reckoned very delicious; and beſides this, there was another ſort of Kali, the word here uſed, which was parched pulſe, as beans, peaſe, &c. parched, and which to this day is by the Arabs called by this name[x]; of both which mention is made, 2 Sam. xvii. 28. Now an ephah was as much as ten men could eat in a day, it conſiſted of ten omers, Exod. xvi. 16, 36. and the number ten is often uſed of loaves and cheeſe: and theſe ten loaves of bread; or cakes of bread, as Kimchi interprets it; pieces or morſels of bread, as the Targum; which ſeems not ſo agreeable as loaves or cakes, which are not in the text, but to be ſupplied: and run to the camp

[t] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 58. 1.
[u] Antiq. l. 6. c. 8. §. 2.
[w] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 42. 2.
[x] Vid. Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 1. c. 7. col. 47.

camp to thy brethren; which, according to Buntingius[y], was four miles from Bethlehem; and whither it seems he went a foot, and is bid to make haste, and even to run, as his brethren might be in want of provision; and Jesse was very desirous of relieving them, and hearing from them as soon as possible; it is very likely he had a servant or servants to attend him, and assist in carrying this load of provision, which, with what follows, was too much for one man to run with.

℣. 18. And carry these ten cheeses unto the captain of their thousand, &c.] Their chiliarch or colonel, who had the command of a 1000 men, and under whom Jesse's sons fought; Jarchi thinks this was Jonathan, who had 1000 men with him at Gibeah, and so now, ch. xiii. 2. these cheeses were sent by Jesse to the captain, to be distributed among his men, or a present to himself, that he might use his sons well who were under his command: and look how thy brethren fare; whether in good health, in good spirits, and in safety: and take their pledge; that is, if they had been obliged for want of money to pawn any of their clothes, or what they had with them to buy food with, that he would redeem and take up the pledge, by paying the money for which they were pawned; for it is thought that soldiers at this time were not maintained at the expence of the king and government, but at their own, and the families to which they belonged: though some are of opinion, that this was some token which they had sent by a messenger to their father, by which he might know he came from them, so Ben Gersom; and which David was now to take with him, and return it; or a token that he was to bring from them, whereby he might be assured of their welfare; and so the Targum, "and bring their goodness," a token of their being in good health. The Jews[z] understand it of bills of divorce to be given to their wives, that if they should die in battle, or be taken captive, that their wives might marry after three years.

℣. 19. Now Saul, and they, &c.] That is, the sons of Jesse, and brethren of David: and all the men of Israel; the soldiers in the army: were in the valley of Elah; or by it, near unto it; for they were set in array on the mountain on the side of it: fighting with the Philistines; not actually engaged in battle, but drawn up for it; prepared and in readiness to engage whenever it was necessary, or they were obliged to it; and perhaps there might be now and then some skirmishes in the out-parts of the camp.

℣. 20. And David rose up early in the morning, &c.] Being very ready and eager to obey his father's orders, and visit his brethren: and left the sheep with a keeper; which shewed his care and faithfulness in the discharge of his office; he was not unmindful of his father's sheep, any more than of his commands: and took; the ephah of parched corn, the ten loaves, and the ten cheeses: and went, as Jesse had commanded him; went and carried them to the camp, according to his orders: and he came to the trench; foss or ditch, which was cast up all around the army, partly to prevent the enemy falling on them before, and partly to prevent deserters from them behind; or the word signifying a waggon or carriage, which is here used, this might be a fence around the camp made of waggons fastened to each other; though it may only signify the camp itself, which lay in a circular form, with proper guards about it to watch the enemy. Now David came up to it just as the host was going forth to the fight; preparing and getting every thing ready to the battle, and in motion, and upon the march to meet the enemy: and shouted for the battle; which was usually done when about to make the onset, to animate the soldiers, and strike the greater terror into the enemy; and this noise was sometimes made with the voice in a hideous and howling way, and was called barritus[a] by the Romans; with the Trojans it was like the noise of cranes in the air[b]; it was also attended with the clashing of shields and spears[c]; with the Persians, it was a rough, boisterous, and confused noise[d].

℣. 21. For Israel and all the Philistines had put the battle in array, &c.] Both sides prepared for it, and drew up in line of battle: army against army; rank against rank, battalion against battalion, the right wing of the one against the left of the other, &c.

℣. 22. And David left his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, &c.] That is, he left his load of provisions he brought with him, in the hand of the keeper of the bag and baggage of the army, their clothes, and such like things; not having an opportunity to deliver them to his brethren, who were just going to engage in battle: and ran into the army; which showed the valour and courage of David, who chose rather to expose himself in battle, than to abide with the keeper of the carriages: and came and saluted his brethren; asked them of their welfare, in his father's name and his own.

℣. 23. And as he talked with them, &c.] About their health, and the errand he came upon, and the message of his father to them, and how it was with him, who sent them his best wishes: there came up the champion, the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name; of whom see ℣. 4. he came out of the valley, and drew near to the mountain the Israelites were descending: out of the armies of the Philistines; from the plains where they were encamped, as Kimchi, though they seem to have been encamped on a mountain as the Israelites were; or from the ranks of the Philistines; according to the marginal reading, he came out of one of the battalions that were set in array: and spake according to the same words; which he had spoken time after time forty days successively, namely, what is expressed, ℣. 8, 9, 10: and David heard them; and observed them.

℣. 24. And all the men of Israel, when they saw the man, &c.] Even as it should seem before they heard him; knowing who he was, and what he was about to say, having seen and heard him forty days running: fled from him, and were sore afraid; it is pretty much a whole army should be afraid of one man, and flee from him; they must be greatly forsaken of God, and given up by him, see Deut. xxxii. 30. but perhaps they were not so much afraid of personal danger from him, as that they could not bear to hear his blasphemy.

℣. 25. And the men of Israel said, &c.] To one another: have ye seen this man that is come up? taken notice of him, and observed him? surely to defy Israel is he come up; to challenge them to fight with with him, and upbraid them with cowardice that they did not: and it ſhall be that the man who killeth him; this, and what follows, they ſaid to encourage any perſon to engage with him, though none of them cared to encounter him themſelves: the king will enrich him with great riches; give him a large gratuity, make a preſent of a great ſum of money to him: and will give him his daughter; to be his wife, in like manner as Caleb promiſed to give his daughter in marriage to the perſon that ſhould take Kirjath-ſepher, Judg. i. 12. and make his father's houſe free in Iſrael; from all tributes, taxes, levies, impoſitions, king's ſervice and duty; or, as the Targum, "make his father's houſe freemen, nobles;" raiſe it to the rank of nobility.

[y] Travels, &c. p. 135. [z] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 76. D. [a] Vid. Valtrinum de re militar. Roman. l. 5. c. 3. p. 315, 314. & A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 1. c. 11. [b] Homer. Iliad. 3. ℣. 1, 2, 3. [c] Vid. Lydium de re Militari, l. 4. c. 3. p. 158, 159. [d] Curt. Hist l. 3. c. 10. Vid. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 4. c. 7.

℣. 26. And David ſpake to the men that ſtood by him, &c.] Who were next to him looking upon the Philiſtine, and hearing what he ſaid, ſaying: what ſhall be done to the man that killeth this Philiſtine, and taketh away the reproach from Iſrael? which he aſked not for the ſake of the reward, but to obſerve the neceſſity there was of ſome man's engaging with him, and killing him, or otherwiſe it would be a reproach to Iſrael, and to ſignify that he had an inclination to attempt it: for who is this uncircumciſed Philiſtine, that he ſhould defy the armies of the living God? there were two things which provoked David, and raiſed indignation in him againſt this man; the one was, the character of the perſon that reproached, a Philiſtine, an uncircumciſed perſon, a prophane man, that had no true religion in him, an alien from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and a ſtranger to the covenants of promiſe; and the other was the perſons whom he reproached, the armies of the living God, of the King of kings, and Lord of lords; and which in effect was reproaching the Lord himſelf, and which David, filled with zeal for God, and for his people, could not bear; and the conſideration of theſe things animated him to engage with him, not doubting of ſucceſs.

℣. 27. And the people anſwered him after this manner, &c.] Told him what was propoſed to be done in honour to the man that ſhould attempt to kill him, and ſucceed: ſaying, ſo ſhall it be done to the man that killeth him; as before related, that he ſhould be enriched, marry the king's daughter, and his family be ennobled.

℣. 28. And Eliab his eldeſt brother heard when he ſpake unto the men, &c.] Heard the queſtions he put to them, by which he perceived his inclination: and Eliab's anger was kindled againſt David; becauſe what he had ſaid carried in it a tacit reproach of him, and others, that they had not the courage, and did not attempt to encounter with the Philiſtine; or the diſpleaſure he expreſſed was either out of affection to him, fearing, or being aſſured almoſt he would periſh in the enterprize; or rather out of envy to him, leſt ſucceeding in ſo bold an action, he ſhould gain ſuperior glory to him, and the reſt of his brethren, who yet was the youngeſt of them: and he ſaid, why comeſt thou down hither? for though David had talked with his brethren, or had begun to talk with them, yet he had not ſufficiently explained the reaſons of his coming: and with whom haſt thou left thoſe few ſheep in the wilderneſs? the wilderneſs of Judea, or ſome wilderneſs near Bethlehem; by this he would not only inſinuate a charge of unfaithfulneſs, in not taking care of his father's flock committed to him; but his view was to make him look little and mean in the eyes of the people, that in the family he belonged to he was thought to be fit for nothing but to keep ſheep, and thoſe but a ſmall flock, and in doing this was negligent and careleſs: I know thy pride, and the naughtineſs of thine heart; that he was too proud to keep ſheep, and wanted to advance himſelf in the army, and make a figure there, and thereby gratify his vanity and ambition; which was the reverſe of David's character; for ſuch was his humility, that though he was anointed king, and had been preferred in Saul's court, yet condeſcended with all readineſs to keep his father's ſheep; and what he now propoſed was not from any bad principle in his heart, but purely for the glory of God, and the honour of the people of Iſrael, who were both reproached: for thou art come down that thou mightſt ſee the battle; out of curioſity, and to take every advantage and opportunity of ſignalizing and making himſelf famous.

℣. 29. And David ſaid, what have I now done? &c.] That is criminal and blame-worthy; as if he ſhould ſay, I have only expreſſed an indignation againſt this uncircumciſed Philiſtine, and a concern for the glory of God, and the honour of the people of Iſrael: is there not a cauſe? either for his coming to the camp, being ſent by his father; or of his expreſſing himſelf with indignation at the Philiſtine's defiance of the armies of Iſrael. Some take the ſenſe to be, that he had done nothing, he had not committed any fact; it was mere words which he had ſaid, he had attempted nothing, and therefore there was no reaſon to bear ſo hard upon him; to this purpoſe is the Targum, "what have I done as yet? is it not a word only which I have ſpoken?" but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt.

℣. 30. And he turned from him towards another, &c.] From his brother Eliab, to another perſon right againſt him, and directed his diſcourſe to him: and ſpake after the ſame manner; as in ℣. 26. enquiring what encouragement would be given to a man that ſhould attempt to kill the Philiſtine, and expreſſing his concern to hear the armies of the living God defied by ſuch a wretch: and the people anſwered him again after the former manner; telling him what gratuities and honours would be conferred on ſuch a perſon, as in ℣. 25. and the deſign of his talking to one, and to another, was, that what he had ſaid might ſpread and reach to the ears of Saul, to whom in modeſty he did not chuſe to apply himſelf.

℣. 31. And when the words were heard which David ſpake, &c.] To one, and to another, and theſe reported to other perſons, and ſo they went from one to another through many hands: they rehearſed them before Saul; coming to the ears of ſome of his courtiers and counſellors, or officers about him, they told him what ſuch an one had ſaid: and he ſent for him; to his tent or pavilion where he was, to talk with him on this ſubject. From the 11th verſe, to the end of this, the whole is wanting in the Septuagint verſion, according to the Vatican exemplar; and theſe twenty verſes are thought, by ſome [c], to be an interpolation; and it muſt be owned, there are difficulties in them, and that the connexion of ℣. 11th with the following, is very clear and conſiſtent, as alſo is ℣. 50th left out in the ſame verſion; and likewiſe the four laſt verſes of the chapter, and five with which the next begins.

℣. 32.

[c] See Dr. Kennicott's Diſſert. 2. p. 418, &c.

℣. 32. And David ſaid to Saul, let no man's heart fail becauſe of him, &c.] The Philiſtine, tho' ſo gigantic, mighty and bluſtering; this he ſaid within himſelf, ſo Kimchi; as David perceived the hearts of moſt, if not all, did, ſince none dared to go out and fight him, but on the contrary fled from him: thy ſervant will go and fight with this Philiſtine; and therefore there need be no thought, care or concern to look out for another man.

℣. 33. And Saul ſaid to David, thou art not able to go againſt this Philiſtine to fight with him, &c.] Had neither ſtrength of body, nor ſkill in military affairs, to encounter with a man of his ſtature and warlike genius and practice: for thou art but a youth; ſome ſay about 14 or 16 years of age, but very probably about 20, and not more, and ſo not only weak, but inexpert in the art of fighting: and he a man of war from his youth; a gigantic man, trained up in, inured to, and expert in the affairs of war; ſo that David could not, on any account, be a competitor with him, and a match for him.

℣. 34. And David ſaid unto Saul, &c.] In anſwer to his objection of inability to encounter with one ſo ſuperior to him; and this anſwer is founded on experience and facts, and ſhews, that he was not ſo weak and inexpert as Saul took him to be: thy ſervant kept his father's ſheep; which he was not aſhamed to own, and eſpecially as it furniſhed him with an inſtance of his courage, bravery and ſucceſs, and which would be convincing to Saul: and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock; not that they came together; though Kimchi ſo interprets it, a lion with a bear; but theſe are creatures that don't uſe to go together; and beſides, both could not be ſaid with propriety to take one and the ſame lamb out of the flock: to which may be added, that David in the next verſe ſpeaks only of one, out of whoſe mouth he took the lamb; wherefore the words may be rendered, a lion or a bear [f]; and if the copulative and is retained, the meaning can only be, that at different times they would come and take a lamb, a lion at one time, and a bear at another.

℣. 35. And I went out after him, &c.] Whether a lion or a bear; but mention after being made of his beard, a lion rather is meant: and ſmote him; with his fiſt, or rather with his ſhepherd's ſtaff: and delivered it out of his mouth; ſnatched it out from thence, or obliged him to drop it, by beating him: and when he aroſe againſt me; after he had let go the lamb, threatening to tear him in pieces for attempting to diſturb him in his prey, and take it away from him: I caught him by his beard; ſuch as lions have; hence a lion is often called in Homer [g] λις πευσευειος, the well-bearded lion. Kimchi thinks, the beard with the nether jaw is meant, which David caught hold on: and ſmote him, and ſlew him; tore him to pieces, as Samſon did, or ſlew him with ſome weapon in his hand.

℣. 36. Thy ſervant ſlew both the lion and the bear, &c.] At different times, and ſeveral of them at one time or another, whenever any of them came into the flock, he uſed to lay hold on them and kill them, with all the eaſe imaginable. The Jews ſuppoſe this phraſe denotes many of them [h]. And this uncircumciſed Philiſtine ſhall be as one of them; as he was like them in nature, ſavage, cruel and unclean, ſo he would be in his end, killed as they; of this David was fully perſuaded and aſſured in mind, having an impulſe from the Spirit of God, by which he was certified of it: ſeeing he hath defied the armies of the living God; ſo that as he juſtly deſerved to die, he made no doubt of it, it would be his caſe.

℣. 37. And David ſaid moreover, &c.] For the farther confirmation of it, and as more ſtrongly expreſſing his faith of it; not as owing to any natural ſtrength or ſkill of his, but to the power of God, of whoſe aſſiſtance he made no queſtion: the Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear; for to him he aſcribes his deliverance from thoſe ſavage creatures, and his victory over them, and on him he relied for help and ſalvation in the preſent caſe: he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philiſtine; David did not go forth in his own name and ſtrength, but in the name and ſtrength of the Lord of hoſts: and Saul; ſeeing him ſo poſitive and fully aſſured of victory: ſaid unto David, go, and the Lord be with thee; to help and aſſiſt him, to deliver him out of the hand of the Philiſtine, and give him victory over him; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord be for thy help."

℣. 38. And Saul armed David with his armour, &c.] Not with what he wore himſelf; for it can't be thought he would ſtrip himſelf of his armour in the field of battle, and when juſt going to it; and beſides, what ſuited the one would not be fit for the other, their bulk and ſtature being different; but this was ſome armour Saul had brought with him, beſides what he himſelf wore, to furniſh any with that might want it: and he put an helmet of braſs upon his head; ſuch an one, though not ſo large as Goliath had, theſe being uſually made of braſs; ſee the note on ℣. 5. alſo he armed him with a coat of mail; which probably was of braſs alſo, and like that of Goliath's too, only leſſer, ℣. 5.

℣. 39. And David girded his ſword upon his armour, &c.] Which Saul alſo perhaps furniſhed him with: and he aſſayed to go; made an attempt, and had a mind to go thus accoutred; he at firſt ſhewed an inclination to go in ſuch an habit, but afterwards would not: for he had not proved it; as warriors were wont to do; ſo Achilles did [i]; he never made trial of ſuch armour before, he had not been uſed to it, and knew not how to behave in it, or walk with it on him; it was an incumbrance to him: Abarbinel renders it, but he had not proved it; he would have gone with it but for that reaſon; the Targum is, "becauſe there was no miracle in them;" becauſe if he had made uſe of this, there would have been no appearance of a miracle in getting the victory over the Philiſtine, as was by uſing only a ſling and ſtones: and David ſaid unto Saul, I cannot go with theſe, for I have not proved them; he thought fit to acquaint Saul with it that he could not go thus accoutred, and his reaſon for it, leſt he ſhould be offended with him: and David put them off him; took off the helmet from his head, ungirt the ſword upon his armour, and ſtripped himſelf of his coat of mail, and went forth entirely unarmed.

℣. 40. And he took his ſtaff in his hand, &c.] His ſhepherd's ſtaff which he uſed in keeping his father's ther's ſheep, and choſe rather to appear in the habit of a ſhepherd than of a ſoldier: and choſe him five ſmooth ſtones out of the brook; which ran in the valley, which became ſmooth by lying in the water running over them; and which being ſmooth were fitter for his purpoſe, being the more eaſily caſt out of the ſling; though De Dieu is of opinion, that theſe were parts or pieces of ſtones, cleft ones, which were rough and rugged, and which would more eaſily and firmly be fixed in the forehead of the Philiſtine: and put them in a ſhepherd's bag which he had, even in a ſcrip; in which he had been wont to put things he needed for the good of the flock, and was ſuch as travellers put their food in; and this might alſo be the uſe of it with ſhepherds; but, according to the Ethiopic interpreters [k], it was that piece of the leather in the midſt of the ſling, in which the ſlingers uſed to put the ſtones, that they might ſtick the more firmly: and his ſling was in his hand; which he intended to uſe in ſlinging the ſtone or ſtones he had in his ſcrip; and which was an exerciſe he had been accuſtomed to in all likelihood, and for which the Benjaminites his neighbours, of the next tribe, were very famous: and he drew near to the Philiſtine; marched towards him, thereby ſignifying that he accepted his challenge, and would enter the liſt with him.

[f] הארי: ואת הדרוב leo vel urſus, V. L. leo aut urſus, Junius & Tremellius, Bochart. Noldius, p. 271. [g] Iliad. 17. ℣ 109. & Iliad. 18. ℣. 318. [h] See Halicot Olam, p. 177. [i] Homer. Iliad. 19. ℣. 384, 385. ſo Theocrit. Idyll. 10. ℣. 61.

℣. 41. And the Philiſtine came on, and drew near unto David, &c.] By ſlow paces, becauſe of the weight of his armour, and bulk of his body, yet with a haughty air, and a proud gait: and the man that bare the ſhield went before him; ſee the note on ℣. 7.

℣. 42. And when the Philiſtine looked about and ſaw David, he diſdained him, &c.] He looked about for his antagoniſt to take a view of him, what ſort of a man he was, expecting to ſee one much like himſelf; but obſerving a puny young man, he deſpiſed him in his heart, and perhaps looked upon it as an affront to him to ſend ſuch a man to fight with him: for he was but a youth; his age was one reaſon why he deſpiſed him, being, as before obſerved, about 20 years of age, and not come to his full ſtrength, a ſtripling, as he is called, ℣. 56. another reaſon follows, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance; looked effeminate, had not the appearance of a ſoldier, of a weather-beaten veteran, expoſed to heat and cold, and inured to hardſhips.

℣. 43. And the Philiſtine ſaid unto David, am I a dog, &c.] Truly David did not think him much better, becauſe of his impudence, impurity, and barking blaſphemy againſt God, and the armies of Iſrael; the Targum is, "am I a deſpiſed dog?" verily he was by David: that thou comeſt to me with ſtaves? or with a ſtaff, the plural for the ſingular, to beat him with it as a dog is beaten, and as David uſed to beat his dog with, while keeping his father's ſheep, when the dog he had with him did not do his buſineſs as he ſhould; he ſays nothing of his ſling and ſtones, they being out of ſight: and the Philiſtine curſed David by his gods; by Dagon and others; he made an imprecation by them, and wiſhed the greateſt evils might befal him from them; he devoted him to them, and doubted not to make a ſacrifice of him.

℣. 44. And the Philiſtine ſaid to David, come to me, &c.] He ſeems to have ſtood ſtill diſdaining to take another ſtep towards ſuch a pitiful combatant, and therefore bids him come up to him, and he would ſoon diſpatch him; unleſs he ſaid this, becauſe David was light and nimble, and he heavy and unweildy becauſe of his bigneſs, and the burden of armour on him, and therefore could not make ſuch haſte as he wiſhed, to deſtroy his adverſary, of which he made no doubt: and I will give thy fleſh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beaſts of the field; the wild beaſts he means; tho' Jarchi thinks, he ſpoke improperly, ſince it is not the way of the beaſts of the field, as ſheep, oxen, &c. to devour a man, or even to eat any fleſh; and therefore he obſerves, when David comes, he uſes another word, which ſignifies the wild beaſts of the earth, and ſo we render it, ℣. 46. but Kimchi ſhows, that even theſe are comprehended in the word here uſed, ſee Iſ. xviii. 6.

℣. 45. Then ſaid David to the Philiſtine, &c.] In anſwer to the contempt he held him in, and to the threatening words he gave him: thou comeſt to me with a ſword, and with a ſpear, and with a ſhield; the word for ſhield is not the ſame with that ſo rendered, ℣. 41. which his armour-bearer carried before him, but with that tranſlated a target, which was between his ſhoulders, ℣. 6. however, they were all weapons of war, either defenſive or offenſive: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hoſts, the God of the armies of Iſrael, whom thou haſt defied; the Lord of all hoſts, in heaven and in earth in general, and in particular the God of the armies of Iſrael; which he was at the head of, led on, protected and defended, having a kind and merciful regard unto them, and which this Philiſtine had defied, reproached and blaſphemed; and now David was come by a commiſſion from this great Jehovah, to vindicate his honour, and to avenge his people on him: he had aſked for a man, and now the Lord of hoſts, as the Jews [l] obſerve, comes forth as a man of war, for the battle was his, as in a following verſe; and David was his meſſenger, and came in his name, and was the man into whoſe hands he ſhould be given.

℣. 46. This day will the Lord deliver thee into mine hands, &c.] Of which he was aſſured by divine inſpiration, by the impulſe of the Spirit of God upon him; or otherwiſe he could not have expreſſed himſelf with ſuch certainty, and have given the particulars of what he ſhould do, as in the following clauſes: and I will ſmite thee, and take thine head from thee; and yet he had no weapon in his hand to do it with, ℣. 50. but it was revealed to him that he ſhould do it, and he believed it; tho' the Philiſtine no doubt looked upon all this as romantic: and I will give the carcaſſes of the hoſt of Philiſtines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beaſts of the earth; not only this man's carcaſs, which ſhould fall and become a prey to fowls and wild beaſts, but the carcaſſes of the Philiſtine army, which fleeing upon the fall of their champion, and purſued by the Iſraelites as they were, would be cut off, and become the food of wild creatures, ſee ℣. 52. though ſome think the plural is put for the ſingular, and that it only means his carcaſs who was a Philiſtine; but the hoſt of the Philiſtines, carries it to the other ſenſe: and this would be done, that all the earth may know there is a God in Iſrael; not only the land of Canaan or Paleſtine, but the whole earth, and all the inhabitants of it, who ſhould hear of the fall of this giant by ſuch means, and of the rout of the Phi-

[k] Apud Ludolf. Lexic. Ethiop. p. 84.

[l] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 42. 2.

Philiſtine army upon it; the report of which no doubt was ſpread far and near.

℣. 47. And all this aſſembly ſhall know, &c.] The congregation of Iſrael, and church of the living God, great part of which were now gathered together, and were ſpectators of this wonderful event: that the Lord ſaveth not with ſword and ſpear; that is, by outward means and inſtruments, by arms and armed men; he does not ſave by them only, or by them always; he can ſave as well without them, as with them: for the battle is the Lord's; it is under his direction; the iſſue and event of it depend on his will, and are owing to him; or, as the Targum, "from the Lord is the victory of wars," it is he that gives it to whom he pleaſes: and he will give you into our hands; not only this Philiſtine into the hands of David, but the army of them into the hands of the Iſraelites; David knew, and was aſſured of this by the Lord, and it was on this he relied, and was what animated him to engage with this champion in the manner he did.

℣. 48. And it came to paſs when the Philiſtine aroſe, &c.] Or prepared for the encounter, and was in all probability in great wrath and fury at hearing what David ſaid, and which haſtened him to it: and came and drew nigh to meet David; as faſt as his unwieldy body, and heavy load of armour on him, would admit of: that David haſted and ran toward the army; the army of the Philiſtines, from whence this champion came: to meet the Philiſtine; to get up to him before he could draw his ſword, or put himſelf in a poſture to make uſe of any weapon to ſtrike at David with.

℣. 49. And David put his hand in his bag, &c.] The ſhepherd's ſcrip, in which he had put the five ſtones he took out of the brook: and took thence a ſtone; and put it into his ſling he had in his hand: and ſlang it, and ſmote the Philiſtine in his forehead; it is made a difficulty of, how he ſhould ſmite him on his forehead, when he had a helmet of braſs upon his head, ℣. 5. in anſwer to this Kimchi obſerves that ſome ſay, that when David ſaid he would give his fleſh to the fowls of the air, at the mention of that he looked upwards, and what was upon his forehead fell backwards, and then David ſlung and ſmote him; or he might put back his helmet to talk with David, and hear, and be heard the better; and having nothing to fear from an unarmed man, might neglect to put it forward again; or there might be ſome open ſpace left in the helmet for him to look through, in at which the ſtone might paſs; ſo the Targum renders it, he ſmote him in the houſe of his eyes, ſo the ſtone paſſed through the eye-hole into his brain: but after all, ſuppoſing his forehead ever ſo well covered, as the ſtone ſlung by David was under a divine direction, ſo as to hit a perſon in motion, it came with a divine power, which nothing could reſiſt; and ſuppoſing this, of which there need no doubt, it could as eaſily paſs through the helmet of braſs, as pierce into his forehead and ſink there; nor can this be thought the leaſt incredible, if what Diodorus Siculus[m] relates of the Baleares be true, that they were ſo dextrous at ſlinging, that they not only would fling ſtones bigger than others could, and were ſo directed, that they ſeldom miſſed their mark, being inured to it from their youth, but would even in battle break in pieces ſhields, helmets, and all kinds of armour, with which bodies were covered: that the ſtone ſunk into his forehead; and ſo into his brain, as a ſtone is immerſed and ſinks in water, when thrown into it; with ſuch force did it go, and with ſo much eaſe did it make its way, through the direction and power of God: and he fell upon his face to the earth; Jarchi obſerves, that it was moſt natural for him to have fallen backwards, being ſtruck upon his forehead; but ſo it was, that David might have no trouble to cut off his head, for by this means he fell nearer to him.

℣. 50. So David prevailed over the Philiſtine with a ſling, and with a ſtone, &c.] And with them only, without any other warlike weapon: and ſmote the Philiſtine, and ſlew him; ſmote him with the ſtone, which brought him to the ground, and then ſlew him with his own ſword, as afterwards related: but there was no ſword in the hand of David; when he engaged with the Philiſtine, and ſmote him, for he had put off all his armour, ℣. 39.

℣. 51. Therefore David ran and ſtood upon the Philiſtine, &c.] Upon his carcaſs, as it lay proſtrate on the ground, and trampled on him, in juſt contempt of him who had defied, reproached, and deſpiſed the armies of Iſrael: and took his ſword, and drew it out of the ſheath thereof; which no doubt was a very large one, and required a good deal of ſtrength to unſheath it, and uſe it; and therefore either David, though ſo very young, was naturally very ſtrong, or he had at this time a more than ordinary meaſure of ſtrength given him: and ſlew him; for it ſeems that by the blow of the ſtone he was only ſtunned, and fell to the ground, but ſtill had life in him, which David ſoon put an end to by his own ſword: and cut off his head therewith; by which it would appear to both armies looking on, that his buſineſs was done, and he was thoroughly diſpatched: and when the Philiſtines ſaw their champion was dead; of which the cutting off his head was a demonſtrative proof, and which they could diſcern at a diſtance: they fled; being ſtruck with a panic at this unexpected event, and no doubt by the Lord; for otherwiſe had they given themſelves the leaſt time to reflect on their own numbers and ſtrength, they had no juſt occaſion to flee; their ſafety not depending on a ſingle man, though ever ſo ſtrong: upon this occaſion David penned the ninth pſalm.

℣. 52. And the men of Iſrael and of Judah aroſe, &c.] From their encampment and entrenchment, or they prepared for a purſuit: and ſhouted, and purſued the Philiſtines; ſhouted when they firſt ſet out, and continued ſhouting as they purſued, to animate their own troops, and terrify the enemy: until thou come to the valley, and to the gates of Ekron; which was one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines; ſo that they purſued them to their own cities, and to the very gates of them: and the wounded of the Philiſtines fell down by the way to Shaaraim; a city in the tribe of Judah, and ſeems to be the ſame with Sharaim, Joſh. xv. 36. ſee the note there. Joſephus ſays [n], there were killed of the Philiſtines 30,000, and twice as many wounded: even unto Gath, and unto Ekron; Joſephus [o] has it, to the borders of Gath, and to the gates of Aſcalon, which were two other principalities of the Philiſtines; according to Bunting [p], the whole chaſe was this, to the valley and river Sorek four miles; from thence to Ekron eight miles; to Aſcalon 20 miles, and to Gath 24 miles; that is, from the place where Goliath was killed.

℣. 53.

[m] Bibliothec. l. 5. p. 298.
[n] Antiq. l. 6. c. 9, §. 5.
[o] Ibid.
[p] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 128.

℣. 53. And the children of Iſrael returned from chaſing after the Philiſtines, &c.] The remainder that eſcaped, having got into their fortified cities: and they ſpoiled their tents; which they left in their camp, all their armour, goods, money and proviſions they found there, they ſeized upon as their prey and booty; theſe they did not ſtay to meddle with as ſoon as the Philiſtines fled, but firſt purſued them, and ſlew as many of them as they could, and then returned to the ſpoil; which was wiſely done.

℣. 54. And David took the head of the Philiſtine, and brought it to Jeruſalem, &c.] After he had been introduced with it to Saul, and when he had paſſed through various cities in Iſrael, carrying the head in triumph; where he was congratulated by the women, who came out ſinging and dancing, and ſpeaking highly in his commendation and praiſe: why he carried it to Jeruſalem, is not eaſy to ſay, this not being a royal city, nor was it wholly in the hands of the Iſraelites; part of it indeed was in the poſſeſſion of Judah and Benjamin, but the ſtrong hold of Zion was poſſeſſed by the Jebuſites; and it is generally thought, that it was to the terror of them that the head of Goliath was carried there. R. Joſeph Kimchi thinks, that Nob, where the tabernacle was at this time, was ſurnamed Jeruſalem, but for what reaſon cannot be ſaid: but he put his armour in his tent; not where the army was encamped before the engagement; for David had not his tent there, and beſide the camp broke up upon this victory obtained; but rather in his tent or apartment at Bethlehem, when he returned thither, and where he laid up the armour he took from Goliath; though Abarbinel thinks, and ſo other Jews [q], that by his tent is meant, the tabernacle of the Lord, called David's, becauſe of his attachment to it; and certain it is, that the ſword of Goliath was either now, or at leaſt hereafter, laid up there, ſee ch. xxi. 9. where all that went to ſacrifice might ſee it, and call to mind this wonderful inſtance of the power and goodneſs of God, and praiſe him for it.

℣. 55. And when Saul ſaw David go forth againſt the Philiſtine, &c.] Set out to meet him, and engage with him, as he might from the ſide of the mountain, where he was encamped: he ſaid unto Abner the captain of the hoſt; his own couſin, whom he had raiſed to this high poſt in the army, ch. xiv. 50. Abner, whoſe ſon is this youth? it is thought ſtrange by many, that Saul ſhould not know who he was, when he had been often at his court, and ſerved him as a muſician, and had been very uſeful to him, and he loved him, and made him his armour-bearer, and even had juſt now converſed with him about encountring with the Philiſtine, and had clothed him with his own armour: to get rid of the former part of the objection, ſome have ſuppoſed, that this event happened before David was his muſician and armour-bearer, and is by anticipation ſpoken of in ch. xvi. but that, the connection with this, and the following chapter, will not admit of; and beſides, before this event, David is ſaid to return home from Saul, ℣. 15. ſo that it is certain he had been at Saul's court, and in his preſence before: but to remove this ſeeming difficulty, it may be obſerved, that Saul having laboured under a diſorder of body and mind, might eaſily forget David, and his ſerving him in the above capacity; and to which the multiplicity of buſineſs, and of perſons in a court, might greatly contribute; and what with the diſtance of time, and the different habits in which David appeared, ſometimes as a muſician, and ſometimes as a ſhepherd, and at other times as a ſoldier, and always as a ſervant, it is no wonder the king ſhould not know him again; tho' after all it is not about his perſon that he enquires, but whoſe ſon he was, what was his father's name, and from what family he ſprung; for though Saul was made acquainted with this in the time of his diſorder, and therefore ſent to his father Jeſſe for him, and afterwards deſired leave for his continuance; yet this might ſlip out of his memory in a courſe of time, he having had no perſonal knowledge of Jeſſe, nor any correſpondence with him, but juſt at that time; and it behoved him to know the pedigree of David, ſince if he was victorious, he was not only to be enriched by him, but to have his daughter for wife, and his family ennobled: and Abner ſaid, as thy ſoul liveth, O king, I cannot tell; he ſwore by the life of Saul, as Joſeph by the life of Pharaoh, that he knew nothing of him; which need not at all ſeem ſtrange, that a general of an army, always employed in military affairs, and often abroad, ſhould know nothing of a domeſtic ſervant of Saul's, under the character of a muſician, and not always at court neither; and ſtill leſs, that he ſhould be ignorant of his family, and know nothing of his father, who lived in obſcurity in Bethlehem, and was an old man in thoſe days.

℣. 56. And the king ſaid, enquire thou whoſe ſon the ſtripling is.] Still the queſtion is the ſame, being very deſirous of knowing of what family he was, for the reaſon before given.

℣. 57. And as David returned from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtine, &c.] Carrying his head in triumph, and no doubt accompanied with the acclamations of the people: Abner took him and brought him before Saul, with the head of the Philiſtine in his hand; to give an anſwer to the king's queſtion concerning him, who could beſt do it himſelf; and that Saul might have the opportunity of rewarding him, according to his merit, for ſo great a piece of ſervice he had done for Iſrael, of which the head in his hand was a ſufficient proof.

℣. 58. And Saul ſaid unto him, whoſe ſon art thou, thou young man? &c.] Still the queſtion was ſuch as did not neceſſarily imply ignorance of his perſon, but of his family: and David anſwered, I am the ſon of thy ſervant Jeſſe the Beth-lehemite; which doubtleſs refreſhed the memory of Saul, and he quickly called to mind who he was. This interview was very probably at Gibeah of Saul, which was the place of his birth and reſidence, and where he kept his court, and to which he returned after the above victory was obtained.

[q] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 76. E.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the reſpect ſhown to David by Saul and Jonathan, by the ſervants of Saul, and all the people, and of what was ſaid in his praiſe in the ſongs of the women, ℣. 1—7. which latter gave Saul a great offence, and upon which he envied him, and eyed him, and indeed ſought his life, and removed him from him; and yet ſtill he continued the darling of the people, behaving wiſely among them, which greatly embarraſſed Saul, that he knew not what to do, ℣. 8—16. he propoſed his eldeſt daughter to him in marriage, which he had a claim to by killing the Philiſtine, and then he baulked him by giving her to another, ℣. 17—19 and then he offered his youngeſt daughter to him, on condition that he would bring him 100 foreſkins of the Philiſtines, in the execution of which he thought his life would be expoſed to danger, which yet he performed, ℣. 20—27. and having the affection of his wife, and the good eſteem of the ſervants of Saul, Saul was more afraid of him, and became his enemy, ℣. 28—30.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when he had made an end of ſpeaking unto Saul, &c.] In anſwer to his queſtions about his deſcent and family, and doubtleſs more things were talked of than are recorded: that the ſoul of Jonathan was knit with the ſoul of David; he won his heart, made a conqueſt of his affections, theſe went out towards him, and cleaved unto him; ſuch were the comelineſs of his perſon, his graceful mein and deportment, his freedom and fluency of expreſſion, his courage and undauntedneſs, joined with prudence, modeſty and integrity, that they ſtrongly attached him to him: and Jonathan loved him as his own ſoul; not only according to the excellency of David's ſoul, and the greatneſs of it, as that deſerved reſpect and love, as Abarbinel ſuggeſts, but he loved him as he loved himſelf. There was a ſimilarity in their perſons, in their age, in the diſpoſitions of their minds, in their wiſdom, courage, modeſty, faithfulneſs and openneſs of ſoul, that attracted them to each other, that they became as another ſelf; as one ſoul, as Ariſtotle ſpeaks [r] of true friends: inſtances of very cordial friendſhip are given by Plutarch [s], as in Theſeus and Pirithous, Achilles and Patroclus, Oreſtes and Pylades, Pythias and Damon, Epaminondas and Pelopidas; but none equal to this.

℣. 2. And Saul took him that day, &c.] Not only into his favour, and into his ſervice, but into his court; even on that very day he ſlew the Philiſtine, or however as ſoon as it could be done: and would let him go no more home to his father's houſe; as he uſed to do before; when he only ſerved as a muſician to him, then he was only at court, when Saul was in a melancholy diſpoſition, and wanted him, and ſo was going and returning, and in the intervals kept his father's ſheep, ch. xvii. 15. but now he would not ſuffer him to attend ſuch buſineſs any longer, ſince he was not only to become a courtier, and be made a prince or noble, but to marry his daughter, according to the declaration he had made, with reſpect to any man that ſhould kill Goliath.

℣. 3. Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, &c.] A covenant of friendſhip; entered into a ſolemn agreement to keep up and maintain a cordial reſpect to each other, and to ſupport each other's intereſt both in life and after death, whoever was the ſurvivor; and in conſequence of this David had a friend at court, when Saul fell out with him, and who pleaded his cauſe, and diſcovered his father's plots, and was the means of preſerving David's life: becauſe he loved him as his own ſoul; ſo that this covenant was not founded in mere words, but in ſincere and cordial affection, and was laſting and inviolable.

℣. 4. And Jonathan ſtript himſelf of the robe that was upon him, &c.] As a token of his hearty love and true friendſhip. and that David might appear at court not in the habit of a ſhepherd, but in that of a prince: and gave it to David, and his garments; his other garments beſides his robe, and ſo clothed him from top to toe, and which fitted him; for as there was a ſimilarity in their ſouls, and the diſpoſition of them, ſo in the make and bulk of their bodies, and in the ſtature of them: even to his ſword, and to his bow, and to his girdle; theſe he gave him to accoutre himſelf with, that he might appear as a ſoldier, as well as like a prince, and as another Jonathan, or rather as the ſame; that they might ſeem as one, as alike in body, ſo in garb and habit.

℣. 5. And David went out whitherſoever Saul ſent him, &c.] About any buſineſs whatſoever, eſpecially about martial affairs, for which he was abundantly qualified: and behaved himſelf wiſely; in the management of them, uſing great prudence and diſcretion, and ſo failed not of ſucceſs, and of recommending himſelf; the Targum renders it proſpering; he was proſperous and ſucceſsful in whatſoever he engaged, for the Lord was with him, and bleſſed him: and Saul ſet him over the men of war; that is, of ſome of them, gave him the command of a troop; for Abner was captain or general of the army, and continued ſo: and he was accepted in the ſight of all the people; of all the people in the land in general, of all that knew or heard of him; being looked upon as a wiſe, valiant and ſucceſsful commander, and which gained him the eſteem and affection of the people: and alſo in the ſight of Saul's ſervants; which was very much, and a rare thing, for ſervants are too apt to envy ſuch as are riſing in their credit and reputation; though this muſt not be underſtood of all, without exception, but of the generality of them; nor is the word all uſed of them, as is of the people; for ſome of them took the part of Saul afterwards againſt David, and were ſecretly his enemies, ſee ℣. 22—26.

℣. 6. And it came to paſs as they came, &c.] The armies of Iſrael, with their commanders at the head of them: when David was returned from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtines; either from the ſlaughter of Goliath, with his head in his hand going to Jeruſalem, and Saul accompanying him; or rather from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtines at ſome other time, the ſingular being put for the plural; ſince, according cording to the order of the history, this seems to be done after David was brought to court, and had been made a captain, and had been sent out on military expeditions, and had been successful therein, and from one of which he now returned: that the women came out of all the cities of Israel; through which they passed, singing and dancing, as were usual after great victories obtained, and deliverances wrought, the female sex being generally greatly affected with such things; since when things go otherwise, they suffer much, and their fears rise high in time of battle; and when victory goes on their side, it gives them great joy, and which they used to express in this way: to meet king Saul; the commander in chief, with his other officers, and David among the rest: with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of music; with pipes or flutes, which they both blew with their mouths, and played on with their hands, and other musical instruments exciting joy; the last word is, by the Targum, rendered, "with cymbals;" and so the Septuagint version; it signifies a musical instrument of three cords, according to Kimchi; and others, as Ben Gersom, understand it of principal songs, in which, things wonderful, excellent and honourable were spoken of; see Exod. xv. 20. Judg. xi. 34. Such sort of women were among the Romans called Cymbalistriæ and Tympanistriæ[t], who shook the cymbals, and beat upon tabrets and drums at times of rejoicing.

[r] Ethic. l. 9. c. 4, 9. So Porphyr. de vita Pythagor.

[s] Apud Patrick in loc.

ẏ. 7. And the women answered one another as they played, &c.] They sung vocally to their instruments, and that by turns, one rehearsing one line or verse in the song, and then the other another: and said, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands; which, if to be referred to the battle in the preceding chapter, as it commonly is, must be understood thus, that though Saul, in pursuit of the Philistines, slew many thousands of them, and David but one, even Goliath; yet the slaying of him was the occasion of slaying ten thousands, and therefore it is ascribed to him: but it seems rather, that in some after battles David had been more prosperous and victorious than Saul, and therefore superior commendations are given him by the author of the song the women sung; which however just it might be to give them, was not wise, since it served to irritate their king, as follows.

ẏ. 8. And Saul was very wroth, and the saying displeased him, &c.] Partly because they called him plain Saul, and not king Saul; did not give him his royal title, which might serve to strengthen his suspicion, after suggested; and chiefly because they attributed a greater number of slain to David than to him, as follows: and he said, they have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they ascribed but thousands; and so had given more honour to an inferior officer than to the commander in chief, more to a subject than to a sovereign: and what can he have more but the kingdom? there is nothing left out of their song, and nothing remains to be given him but that; some think that Saul knew, by the prudent behaviour of David, and the favour he was in with God and men, and by these commendations of the women, that the kingdom would be his; and that the words of Samuel were true, and would be confirmed, that the kingdom would be rent from him, and given to his neighbour better than he. This clause, with the three following verses, are left out of the Greek version, according to the Vatican copy.

ẏ. 9. And Saul eyed David from that day and forward.] Instead of looking pleasantly, and with a smile, upon him, as a courtier and favourite, he was justly entitled to by his gallant behaviour, he looked at him with a sour, ill-natured look; he looked at him with an evil, spiteful, malicious and envious eye; or he diligently watched and observed all his motions and actions, whether they tended to disloyalty and treason, to dethrone him and take the kingdom to himself, which he was suspicious of; he laid wait for him, as the Targum, and laid snares too, as the following history shews.

ẏ. 10. And it came to pass on the morrow, &c.] After the women had met him with their music and dancing, and when returned home: that the evil spirit from God came upon Saul; thinking on the above things that had passed, he became melancholy: and he prophesied in the midst of the house; either really, delivering out divine songs, as the prophets did; according to Abarbinel, he foretold that David would be king, and the kingdom would be taken from him, and given to him; or he feigned himself a prophet, mimicking their motions and gestures; or, as the Targum, acted like a mad man, or a fool, uttering foolish words, and using ridiculous gestures, which seems most agreeable to the evil spirit in him: and David played with his hand as at other times; upon his harp, to remove the evil spirit, or melancholy disposition from Saul; for though he was now advanced at court, and an officer in the army, and high in the affections and applause of the people, yet he did not think it below him to act as a musician, to do service to his prince; of such an humble, kind and ingenuous disposition was he: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand; a kind of spear, or half pike, which he had taken into his hand on purpose to kill David whilst playing; for persons in such circumstances as his, as they are very mischievous, so very subtle at contriving.

ẏ. 11. And Saul cast the javelin, &c.] Out of his hand at David: for he said; in his heart, determining in his mind: I will smite David even to the wall with it; he determined to cast it with such force and violence, that it should pierce through David, and enter into the very wall, by the side of which David was: and David avoided out of his presence twice; to escape the javelin cast at him; either he went out at the first time of its being thrown, and then came in again, when he threw it a second time at him, upon which he also withdrew; or this was one of the times, and the other some time after, of which see ch. xix. 9. Abarbinel thinks, that David, whilst he was playing, his eyes were so fixed upon his own hands, that he was not aware of the javelin, and turned himself from Saul without intention both times, and so escaped without knowledge of it; such was the good providence of God towards him, and which, when Saul perceived, it wrought upon him, as follows.

ẏ. 12. And Saul was afraid of David, because the Lord was with him, &c.] Protecting and preserving him, prospering and succeeding him, giving him victory over his enemies, and favour among the people; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was for his help." Procopius Gazæus interprets it of the Holy Ghost, whose grace was vouchsafed unto him: he might be afraid in his melancholy fits, that as he had attempted to take away the life of David, that David would contrive and seek an opportunity, and take away his life, and seize ſeize the kingdom which God had given him, and his being with him ſtrengthened theſe fears: and was departed from Saul; ſo that he was deſtitute of courage, and greatneſs of mind, and of wiſdom and prudence, and became mean and abject, and expoſed himſelf to the contempt of his ſubjects.

[t] Vid. Pignorium de Servis, p. 166, 174.

℣ 13. Therefore Saul removed him from him, &c.] From court, partly that he might be out of his ſight, having ſuch an hatred of his perſon, that he could not bear to ſee him; and partly that he might be ſafer from any deſigns of his upon his life, which he might fear, becauſe of his treatment of him: and made him his captain over a thouſand; not out of reſpect to him, and in honour of him, but partly to cover his malice, and pleaſe the people, and partly in hope that he might be ſlain by the enemy at the head of his troop: and he went out and came in before the people; or at the head of them, as the Targum; he led them out to war, and returned with them in ſafety, with victory and in triumph, with great honour, and highly reſpected by them; quite contrary to the intention and hope of Saul.

℣ 14. And David behaved himſelf wiſely in all his ways, &c.] Both in the court, and in the camp, in whatſoever ſervice he was employed; or proſpered[a], as the word alſo ſignifies; for, generally ſpeaking, thoſe that behave wiſely ſucceed well; in this he was a type of Chriſt, Iſ. lii. 13. the reaſon of it follows, and the Lord was with him; from whom he had his wiſdom and ſucceſs; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was for his help."

℣. 15. Wherefore when Saul ſaw that he behaved himſelf very wiſely, &c.] So that he could get no advantage againſt him, and he ſucceeded and was proſperous in all his enterprizes, and was more and more in favour with the people: he was afraid of him; leſt the time was drawing near that the kingdom ſhould be rent from him, and given to David.

℣. 16. And all Iſrael and Judah loved David, &c.] The verb is ſingular, and denotes, that every one of them loved him in all the tribes of Iſrael, as well as in Judah his own tribe; in ſuch general eſteem was he, and ſo much had he got the hearts and affections of the people: becauſe he went out and came in before them; the people, as in ℣. 13. ſo the Septuagint verſion, in which, according to the Vatican copy, the three following verſes are wanting.

℣. 17. And Saul ſaid to David, &c.] Not in friendſhip and in good-will to him, but deſigning to lay a ſnare for him: behold, my eldeſt daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife; moſt interpreters underſtand it, that he was obliged to this by promiſe, on account of David's ſlaying Goliath, ch. xvii. 25. but Abarbinel is of another mind, and he rightly obſerves, that the words referred to are not the words of Saul, but of the men of Iſrael, who might ſuppoſe what the king would do; or if they heard any thing like it ſpoken by Saul, it was only in a hyperbolical way, ſignifying he did not care what he gave, and what he parted with, to the man that killed the Philiſtine, but was not ſtrictly bound to this particular thereby; nor did David ever claim ſuch promiſe, nor did Saul think himſelf bound to do it, but propoſes it as an inſtance of his great kindneſs and favour, as he pretended, and therefore expected great returns for it, as follows: only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles; he knew he was a valiant man, and ready enough to fight; but he expected that in conſideration of ſuch a favour, and ſuch high honour as this, that he would exert himſelf in an extraordinary manner, and engage in hazardous attempts, and ſhew himſelf worthy to be the ſon of a king, in the defence of him and of his country, and for the glory of the God of Iſrael; all this he ſuggeſts, when his view was, that he ſhould expoſe his life to ſuch danger, that it might be hoped it would be taken away: for Saul ſaid; not openly and verbally, but in his heart; he thought within himſelf, let not mine hand be upon him; he had attempted to lay hands on him, or to kill him with his own hands, but now he thought better, and conſulted his credit among the people: but let the hand of the Philiſtines be upon him; he hoped by theſe means that he would fall by their hands at the head of his troop, whilſt he was diſplaying his valour, and hazarding his life for the good of his king and country; what Saul contrived proved his own caſe, he died in battle with the Philiſtines, ch. xxxi. 4.

℣. 18. And David ſaid unto Saul, &c.] Surprized at the offer Saul made him, yet not refuſing it, but expreſſing himſelf with great modeſty and humility: who am I? as to his perſon, parentage and employment, mean and deſpicable, at leaſt in his own eyes, a type of the lowly Jeſus, Matt. xi. 29. and what is my life? keeping ſheep, for from thence was he taken and advanced; though ſome think his meaning is, that to hazard his life, as Saul propoſed, was not equivalent to ſuch an honour he meant to confer upon him, and that he was ready to do it at all times: or my father's family in Iſrael; though in an honourable tribe, and was an honourable family, yet it ſeems not to be very great, at leaſt was not in David's eſteem worthy of ſuch high advancement, as that one of it ſhould be ſo nearly related to the king; Ben Gerſom thinks David has reference to the original of his family, Ruth the Moabiteſs: that I ſhould be ſon in-law to the king? as he would be by marrying his daughter.

℣. 19. But it came to paſs at that time when Merab Saul's daughter ſhould have been given to David, &c.] Either when the giving of her to him was talked of, or when the time fixed for her marriage was come: that ſhe was given to Adriel the Meholathite to wife; Saul either having in reality never deſigned ſhe ſhould be given to David, only propoſed it to pleaſe the people, or to affront David, and expoſe him to ſhame and confuſion by the ſtep he meant to take, or however he ſoon changed his mind; though Abarbinel's notion is, that the young lady had diſpoſed of herſelf to this perſon without her father's knowledge, which ſeems not likely; the perſon ſhe was given to was the ſon of Barzillai the Meholathite, 2 Sam. xxi. 8. and ſome have obſerved, as the curſe of God on this match, that all her ſons were delivered to the Gibeonites, and hanged up, as related in the ſame place; for though theſe ſons are ſaid to be brought up by Michal, they were bore by Merab to him.

℣. 20. And Michal Saul's daughter loved David, &c.] His youngeſt daughter fell in love with him, becauſe of the comelineſs of his perſon, his gallant behaviour, his wiſe conduct, and the general eſteem and reputation he was had in, as may be ſup-ſuppoſed: and they told Saul, and the thing pleaſed him; not that his daughter loved David, or that he ſhould be his ſon-in-law, but that he ſhould have an opportunity, as he hoped, of deſtroying David, which he had loſt by giving his elder daughter to another; as alſo of retrieving his credit with the people, which was greatly ſunk by uſing David in the manner he did, who was become the darling of the people.

[a] מצליח proſpere admodum res gerebat, Vatablus; ſecundabatur, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo the Targum and Jarchi.

✡. 21. And Saul ſaid, I will give him her, that ſhe may be a ſnare to him, &c.] The cauſe and occaſion of his fall and ruin, by means of what he ſhould propoſe to him as the condition of marriage; but inſtead of proving a ſnare to him, as he hoped, ſhe was the means of his deliverance, when Saul ſent meſſengers to ſlay him, ch. xix. and that the hand of the Philiſtines may be againſt him; provoked by what he ſhould put him upon doing to them. The ſcheme he had in his head, after appears, and what he now ſaid was not openly ſaid before his ſervants and courtiers, whom he did not truſt with his ſecrets, but this he ſaid within himſelf, conceived and contrived it in his own mind: wherefore Saul ſaid to David; who was as yet at court, or whom he ſent for on this occaſion: thou ſhalt this day be my ſon-in-law, in the one of the twain; by marrying one of his two daughters; ſignifying, that he would not defer the marriage, or put it off to a longer time, as he had done before, but that he ſhould be married immediately to one or other of his daughters; and ſeeing he could not have the eldeſt, ſhe being diſpoſed of, he ſhould have the youngeſt, and ſo be equally his ſon-in-law. If we read the words without the ſupplement, ſhalt be my ſon in-law in the two, or in both, the ſenſe is, that he ſhould have them both; and ſo the Jews ſay [w], that he married them both, firſt Merab, and after her death Michal; or that he ſhould be his ſon-in-law on two accounts, one by betrothing Merab, though he was not married to her, and the other by being married to Michal, ſo that he would be doubly his ſon-in-law; but the ſenſe, according to the ſupplement, is beſt.

✡. 22. And Saul commanded his ſervants, ſaying, commune with David ſecretly, &c.] And perſuade him to marry Michal, and aſſure him of Saul's real regard to him, and good intention towards him; for it ſeems that David being ill uſed in the affair of his eldeſt daughter, did not liſten to the propoſals of Saul as to the youngeſt, and therefore Saul took this method to bring him into them: and ſay, behold, the king hath a delight in thee; bore a good will towards him, had an high opinion of him, and it would be a pleaſure to him that he ſhould be his ſon-in-law: and all his ſervants love thee; which might be true in general, excepting ſome few; which was no ſmall mortification to Saul, tho' he here pleads it, and puts his ſervants on making uſe of it to gain his preſent purpoſe: now therefore be the king's ſon-in-law; accept of the propoſal he has made, and marry his youngeſt daughter.

✡. 23. And Saul's ſervants ſpake theſe words in the ears of David, &c.] Thoſe before related, which Saul commanded them to ſpeak, which they delivered exactly according to their orders, with an audible voice, clearly, plainly and diſtinctly, ſo that David might hear and underſtand them: and David ſaid, ſeemeth it to you a light thing to be a king's ſon-in-law; a ſmall thing, a trifling matter, an eaſy thing to come into, and perform every thing requiſite to it: ſeeing that I am a poor man; and not able to give a dowry ſuitable to the daughter of a king; it being uſual in thoſe times for a man to give a dowry to, and not receive a portion with a wife; and which alſo was the cuſtom of the Germans, as Tacitus [x] relates; and this was to be according to the rank and quality of the perſon married, and which in this caſe David was not equal to: and lightly eſteemed; not by the people of Iſrael and Judah, who loved him, as he was loved even by the ſervants of Saul, at leaſt in profeſſion; but by Saul himſelf, who had ſlighted him in giving his elder daughter to another man, when he had promiſed her to him, which was diſcouraging to David, and reſented by him.

✡. 24. And the ſervants of Saul told him, ſaying, on this manner ſpake David.] Such and ſuch words were ſpoken by him, to this purpoſe; the ſum and ſubſtance of them were expreſſive of his unworthineſs to be a king's ſon-in-law, and of his inability to bring a dowry ſuitable to her quality.

✡. 25. And Saul ſaid, thus ſhall ye ſay to David, &c.] In anſwer to his objections, and in order to remove them, and eſpecially what concerned the dowry: the king deſireth not any dowry, but 100 foreſkins of the Philiſtines, to be avenged on the king's enemies; that is, he required or deſired no other dowry of David, but that he would ſlay 100 Philiſtines, and bring their foreſkins to him; by which he would be able to know that they were Philiſtines he ſlew, not Iſraelites who were circumciſed; though it can't well be thought that Saul ſhould have any ſuſpicion of that, or take ſuch a method to prevent it; but as thoſe were almoſt, if not altogether, the only uncircumciſed perſons that were their neighbours, ſince the Arabians, Edomites, Midianites, &c. received circumciſion from their anceſtors, it would be a clear caſe to him, that theſe were the men he ſlew; and whom he the rather pitched upon, becauſe they were his enemies, and the enemies of Iſrael, and abhorred of the Lord; which carried in it a ſhew of zeal for the glory of God, and the good of his people, and becauſe he hoped David would fall by them in the enterprize, or however render himſelf very odious to them, and they would bear him ill will, and ſeek his ruin. Strabo [y] reports of the people in Carmana, that no man among them marries a wife, before he cuts off the head of an enemy, and brings it to the king; and the king lays up the ſkulls in a treaſury, and he is the moſt famous that has the moſt heads brought unto him. Saul choſe not heads but foreſkins, for the reaſons before given: but Saul thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philiſtines; he hoped in the enterprize the Philiſtines would be too powerful for him, and kill him.

✡. 26. And when his ſervants told David theſe words, &c.] That the king deſired no other dowry than 100 foreſkins of the Philiſtines: it pleaſed David well to be the king's ſon-in-law; on ſuch conditions; partly becauſe of the honour of it, and partly becauſe of his love to Michal; and chiefly becauſe it would give him an opportunity of deſtroying the enemies of God, and of his people, as well as ſuch a match would lead the way, and be a ſtep in providence to aſcend the throne deſigned for him in due time: and the days were not expired; neither for the bringing in of the foreſkins, nor for the conſummation of the marriage.

✡. 27.

[w] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 19. 2. Vid. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. l. 1. c. 24.

[x] De Moribus German. c 18.

[y] Geograph. l. 15. p. 500.

℣. 27. Wherefore David arose and went, he and his men, and slew of the Philistines 200 men, &c.] This he did himself, for the verb is singular, and which were 100 more than required; this he did to shew his regard to the orders of Saul, and his obedience to him, and to testify the sincerity of his affections to his daughter, for whose sake he risqued his life in this expedition, as well as to express his zeal for God, and his country, against their avowed enemies; the Greek version has only one hundred men, see 2 Sam. iii. 14. and David brought their foreskins; along with him to Saul's court, having taken them off when slain. Josephus says [z], he cut off their heads, and brought them to him, and he makes the number to be 600; neither are according to the text, but to make his history more agreeable to the Gentiles, see ℣. 21. an Arabic writer [a] makes mention of a people, that cut off the genital parts of men, and gave them to their wives for their dowry: and they gave them in full tale to the king; the messengers David sent in with them, even the full tale of 200, which were as many more as were demanded: that he might be the king's son-in-law; being now as desirous of it, as the king was: and Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife; which he could not in honour refuse to do, seeing he had performed the condition he had required. David's marriage of the younger sister, when upon various considerations it might have been expected that he should have married the elder, may be an emblem of Christ's espousing the Gentile church, when the Jewish church, her elder sister, is neglected by him, she having rejected him.

℣. 28. And Saul saw and knew that the Lord was with David, &c.] This he perceived by the favour he gave him among men, by over-ruling all the steps Saul took to do him hurt, for his good, and in giving him success in all that he engaged in; the Targum is, "that the Word of the Lord was for the help of David:" and that Michal Saul's daughter loved him; and therefore could entertain no hope of making use of her as an instrument of his ruin, but, on the contrary, would out of her great affection to her husband, betray the designs of her father against him, and do all she could to preserve him.

℣. 29. And Saul was yet the more afraid of David, &c.] Because the Lord was with him, and his wife loved him; so that he feared he should never be able to accomplish his designs, and that this marriage, which he intended as the means of his ruin, would pave the way for his ascending the throne: and Saul became David's enemy continually; was every day giving fresh evidence of his enmity against him; before it was by fits, and at certain times, there were some intervals; but now enmity was rooted and habituated, and was constant and continually shewing itself.

℣. 30. Then the princes of the Philistines went forth, &c.] Out of their cities in troops, to revenge and spoil the land of Israel, being enraged at their defeat when Goliath their champion was slain, and at the injury and dishonour done them by David very lately in slaying 200 of them, and taking off their foreskins; and, as the Jews say [b], having heard of the marriage of David, and understanding the Israelites had a law, that a new-married man might not go to the war the first year, took this opportunity of invading and spoiling them; whereas David understood that law better than they, and knew it referred not to a voluntary war, but to that which was the command of God against the seven nations; and even in that case, as some think, it did not oblige such persons to remain at home, but left it to their choice to do as they pleased: and it came to pass after they went forth; and were met and opposed by the Israelites, by the troops of Saul, under different commanders: that David behaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul; shewed himself to be more expert in the art of war, and formed designs with great wisdom and prudence, and which he as wisely executed, as well as with great courage and valour, to the annoyance and defeat of the enemy, and to the advantage, defence and safety of the people of Israel; or he was more prosperous than they, as the Targum, and so others interpret it; he was more successful in his attacks on the Philistines, and in his skirmishes with them: so that his name was much set by; he was in high esteem with the people; his name was precious [c] to them, as the word signifies; they made mention of it, as Ben Gersom interprets it, with great honour and glory; so that Saul failed much, and was greatly disappointed in the scheme he had formed against him.

CHAP. XIX.

THIS chapter relates the dangers David was exposed unto through Saul's enmity at him, and his deliverance from them, as by the notice Jonathan gave him of his father's designs against him, and by his kind interposition on his behalf, ℣. 1—7. by David slipping out of Saul's presence, when he was about to cast a javelin at him, ℣. 8, 9, 10. by Michal's letting him down through a window, when Saul sent messengers to kill him, and by deceiving them with an image laid in his bed in the room of him, ℣. 11—17. and again by Samuel's protection of him at Naioth, whither David fled, and where Saul sent messengers after him, and at length came himself; and instead of laying hands on David, both he and the messengers were set a prophesying, ℣. 18—24.

℣. 1. And Saul spake to Jonathan his son, &c.] Who was heir to his crown; and though he knew he loved David, and was in strict friendship with him, yet he might hope, that as his succession to the kingdom was in danger, as he thought, and that David was his rival in it, his mind would be alienated from him; and that he would listen rather to a father than a friend, and would see where his true interest lay, and abandon David, yea seek his ruin, which Saul was intent upon: and to all his servants; who yet pretended to love David, and as he he himſelf ſaid they did, and ſome of them might; with theſe he might rather hope to ſucceed, as they were attached to him, and might be ſecretly enemies of David, and therefore to theſe, as well as to his ſon, he ſpake, and gave his orders: that they ſhould kill David; as if he was a traitor, and a uſurper of his throne, and one that had a deſign upon that, and upon his life; finding he could do nothing by the ſchemes, and ſnares, and ſtratagems, he uſed in a private manner; he grew outrageous and furious, and openly declared his views, and laid his injunctions on his ſon and ſervants, to take away David's life as a very dangerous perſon to his crown and government.

[z] Antiq. l. 6. c. 10. §. 3. [a] Alcamus apud Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 1. c. 19. col. 130. [b] Midrash Schemuel apud Abarbinel. in loc. [c] ויקר & in pretio esset vel erat, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.

℣. 2. But Jonathan Saul's ſon delighted much in David, &c.] In his company and converſation; he loved him with a love of complacency, and was conſtant and ſtedfaſt in it, and which was a kind providence to David; for by this means he came to the knowledge of Saul's deſigns upon him, and could the better guard againſt him: and Jonathan told David, ſaying, Saul my father ſeeketh to kill thee; to inform him of which was acting the part of a ſincere and faithful friend: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed of thyſelf until the morning; it ſeems it was now evening when he informed him of it; and as he knew not what emiſſaries Saul might have out that night in queſt of him, he adviſes him to take care of himſelf, and not expoſe himſelf to any danger, and to keep a ſtrict guard about him; and in the morning he would try to conciliate his father to him, when he might hope, having ſlept upon it, that he would be in a better temper, and more diſpoſed to hear what might be ſaid to him: and abide in a ſecret place, and hide thyſelf; he ſeems to ſuggeſt, as if it was not ſafe for him to be in his own houſe, and in his own bed-chamber that night, but that it was adviſeable to retire to ſome private place, where it might not be known, or ſuſpected that he was there. By what follows he means ſome field, and a private place in it.

℣. 3. And I will go out, &c.] In the morning, at the ſame time his father uſed to take his morning-walk: and ſtand beſide my father in the field where thou art; on that ſide of him next to David, that he might not ſee him, and yet be ſo near, that David might hear what paſſed between them: and I will commune with my father of thee; ſpeak in favour of him, and endeavour to diſſuade him from attempting to take away his life, which was of ſo much importance and uſefulneſs in the commonwealth of Iſrael: and what I ſee, that I will tell thee; what David could not well hear he would inform him of, and what he could perceive in the countenance of Saul, as well as conclude from his words, that he would make known to David, that ſo he might know better what he had to do, and provide for his ſafety.

℣. 4. And Jonathan ſpake good of David unto Saul his father, &c.] Obſerved to him what a good man he was, and what good things he had done, what wiſdom and prudence he had ſhown in the management of all his affairs, what valour and courage in all his expeditions, what faithfulneſs and integrity to his king and country in every inſtance: and ſaid unto him, let not the king ſin againſt his ſervant, againſt David; by taking away his life; which would have been a great ſin indeed, a ſin againſt the law of God, which forbids murder, and which would have been attended with ſad aggravations of cruelty and ingratitude: becauſe he hath not ſinned againſt thee; had not diſobeyed any of his orders, but faithfully ſerved him in every thing, and much leſs ever thought to take away his life, or ſeize his crown, as he might imagine: and becauſe his works have been to thee-ward very good; by ſlaying the Philiſtines, when he and his army were in the utmoſt terror; by driving away the evil ſpirit from him, through playing on his harp before him; as well as by commanding his troops, and leading them againſt the Philiſtines, and obtaining victory over them.

℣. 5. For he did put his life in his hand, &c.] Expoſed himſelf to the utmoſt danger, when no one in all the camp of Iſrael would do the like: and ſlew the Philiſtine; Goliath of Gath, who defied the armies of Iſrael; againſt him he went unarmed, only with his ſling and ſtones, and fought him, and ſlew him: and the Lord wrought a great ſalvation for all Iſrael; by his hand, ſo that they were delivered from their enemies, who fled before them, and they purſued them, and got a complete victory over them: thou ſaweſt it, and didſt rejoice; he was an eye-witneſs of David's going forth againſt the Philiſtine, and ſlaying him, and of all the happy effects of it, which then greatly affected him, and he could not forbear expreſſing great joy on that occaſion: wherefore then wilt thou ſin againſt innocent blood, to ſlay David without a cauſe? and ſo entail the guilt of it on himſelf and family.

℣. 6. And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan, &c.] Not only heard him out what he had to ſay, but was affected with it, and wrought upon by it, and was convicted for the preſent, that he was wrong in ſeeking the life of David, and therefore would deſiſt from it; the Lord working upon his mind by what Jonathan ſaid, and inclined him to liſten to it, and act accordingly: and Saul ſware, as the Lord liveth, he ſhall not be ſlain; this oath he added to what he ſaid to Jonathan, for the confirmation of it; and which was taken either with a real intention to keep it, though that intention did not long continue; or with a view to deceive Jonathan, that he might acquaint David with it, and ſo prevent his flight and eſcape, and that he might the more eaſily fall into his hands; but the former ſeems rather to be the caſe.

℣. 7. And Jonathan called David, &c.] Out of his lurking place in the field, after Saul was returned home: and Jonathan ſhewed him all theſe things; which had paſſed between him and his father, and particularly the oath he had made that he ſhould not be ſlain: and Jonathan brought David to Saul; introduced him at court again, and into the preſence-chamber of Saul; who, in appearance, received him courteouſly, and a reconciliation was ſeemingly made: and he was in his preſence as in times paſt; when he was firſt received at court, and in great eſteem both with Saul and his courtiers.

℣. 8. And there was war again, &c.] Between Iſrael and the Philiſtines; it does not appear that either of them ſent out their whole force, only ſome parties or detachments, between which there were ſkirmiſhes: and David went out and fought with the Philiſtines; he went out with his thouſand men, over which he was made captain, ch. xviii. 13. for he had not the command of the whole army; that belonged to Abner: and ſlew them with a great ſlaughter, and they fled from him; he killed many of them in his engagements with them, and the reſt fled, and he returned victorious; which ſtirred up the envy and increaſed the jealouſy of Saul, to obſerve which, this is related.

℣. 9. And the evil ſpirit from the Lord was upon Saul, &c.] His melancholy and frantic diſorder returned upon thoſe victories of David, and he grew envious, jealous, ſpiteful and malicious: as he ſate in his houſe with his javelin in his hand; which either deſcribes the poſture he was in when the evil ſpirit came upon him; or the effects of it, he became dull and melancholy, did not care to go abroad, but kept at home, and was ſuſpicious of every body; and therefore kept a javelin in his hand to defend himſelf; or it may be rather to diſpatch David with it, when an opportunity ſhould offer, which quickly did: and David played with his hand; on ſome inſtrument of muſic, particularly the harp, to drive away the evil ſpirit, the melancholy diſorder from Saul; which ſhewed his humility, that though he was an officer in the army, had a conſiderable poſt in it, yet deigned to act the part of a muſician to Saul, and his great kindneſs and affection for him his ſovereign, willing to ſerve him what he could to promote his health and comfort, and the truſt and confidence he put in his promiſe and oath, or rather in the providence of God for his protection in the way of his duty, though he knew how ſpiteful and injurious Saul had been to him.

℣. 10. And Saul ſought to ſmite David even to the wall with his javelin, &c.] To ſtrike it through him, and faſten him to the wall with it, as he had attempted before, ch. xviii. 11. but he ſlipt away out of Saul's preſence; he perceived his deſign, and being of great agility of body, moved out of his place before him very nimbly: and he ſmote the javelin into the wall; he threw it with ſuch force that it entered into the wall, and ſtuck there; ſo great was his reſolution to deſtroy David, and ſuch the rage and paſſion that he was in, and ſuch his ſtrength of body, and which, in perſons in his circumſtances, is ſtrangely exerted at times: and David fled, and eſcaped that night; it being towards night, or in the evening, very probably when this affair happened; upon which he departed from Saul's court, and went to his own houſe, and ſo eſcaped the danger he was expoſed to for the preſent.

℣. 11. And Saul ſent meſſengers unto David's houſe, &c.] Suppoſing that he was gone thither; where this was, is not ſaid, very likely in Gibeah, where Saul lived: to watch him; that he might not get out from thence in the night: and to ſlay him in the morning; the reaſon why he did not order them to break into the houſe, and ſlay him at once, but wait till morning, ſeems to be, leſt ſhould he be alarmed by their breaking in, he might take the advantage of the night, and eaſily eſcape, or another perſon through miſtake might be ſlain for him; and therefore that they might be ſure of him, they were to watch till it was broad day-light, when they could not well miſs of him. Joſephus [d] ſays, the orders to watch him until morning were, that he might be taken and brought to a court of judicature, and be condemned and put to death, which was uſually held in a morning; but Saul's orders to the meſſengers were to put him to death themſelves, and he had no notion of dealing with him according to a formal proceſs of judgment: and Michal David's wife told him, ſaying, if thou ſave not thy life to-night, to-morrow thou ſhalt be ſlain; meaning, if he did not take the benefit and advantage of the night to make his eſcape, he would not be able to do it in the morning; the houſe being ſo beſet, as ſhe perceived, by perſons whom ſhe might ſuſpect were ſent by Saul to deſtroy him, knowing the ill will her father bore to him; or a meſſenger at the ſame time might be diſpatched to her, either from her brother Jonathan, or from one of her friends at court, acquainting her with the deſign againſt David, and the danger he was in. Upon this occaſion David penned the 59th pſalm.

℣. 12. So Michal let David through a window, &c.] In like manner as Rahab let down the ſpies from her houſe in Jericho, when the king's meſſengers were in queſt of them; and as the diſciples let down the apoſtle Paul at Damaſcus, to preſerve him from the deſigns of the Jews upon him: and he went, and fled, and eſcaped; he departed from his houſe, and ran with all the haſte he could, and eſcaped the meſſengers that had beſet the houſe, and were waiting for him.

℣. 13. And Michal took an image, &c.] Or Teraphim, as the word is; which if the ſame with thoſe that Rachel ſtole from her father, they ſeem to be of the ſame ſort with the penates or houſehold gods of the heathens, which were privately kept by Michal; for had David known of them, he would not have ſuffered them to have been in his houſe. Aben Ezra ſuppoſes they were images made in the form of men under ſuch a conſtellation, a ſort of Taliſmans, to receive the heavenly influences, and which being conſulted, foretold things to come; and R. Iſaiah is of opinion, that Michal choſe and placed theſe in the bed, that her father might conclude, when he ſhould hear of them, that David had found them; and by this means knew that his intention was to kill him, and therefore fled; but to conſult ſuch images was very far from David, and without it he knew Saul's intention. Abarbinel makes mention of ſeveral ſorts of Teraphim, ſome for idolatry, ſome to draw down the heavenly influences, ſome to know the time of the day, a ſort of dials; ſome were made after the form of a man known, and like him in his form and features; and women, he ſays, uſed to have the forms or ſtatues of their huſbands, that they might have them continually before them, becauſe of the great love they had to them; and of this ſort he ſuppoſes were the Teraphim of Michal, and which is approved of by Abendana; and that this image had the likeneſs of an human face is very probable, or it could not have ſo well anſwered her purpoſe: and laid it in the bed; where David uſed to lie, that it might ſeem to be he himſelf: and put a pillow of goat's hair for his bolſter; ſhe took the fineſt of the goat's hair, which ſhe had in the houſe, women being uſed to ſpin in thoſe days, even great perſonages, and put it into a pillow, and made a bolſter of it, and put it under the head or block of the image, which would ſink it, being ſoft, and ſo look like a ſick man, whoſe face could not eaſily be diſcerned; though ſome think this goat's hair was put about the head of the image, to make it look the more like an human head; goat's hair being very much like human hair [e], and of different colours, and ſuch a colour might be choſen as was moſt like David's, ſee Cant. iv. 1. the Targum interprets it, a bottle of goat's ſkins, that is, a leathern bottle or bag made of goat's ſkins, ſuch as they uſed to put wine into; hence the conceit in the Midraſh [f], that a bottle of wine was put inſtead of David; but the pillow or bolſter had the form of a leathern bag or bottle; the Septuagint verſion is very odd, "and put the liver of goats at his head;" and ſo he himſelf ſaid they did, and ſome of them might; with theſe he might rather hope to ſucceed, as they were attached to him, and might be ſecretly enemies of David, and therefore to theſe, as well as to his ſon, he ſpake, and gave his orders: that they ſhould kill David; as if he was a traitor, and a uſurper of his throne, and one that had a deſign upon that, and upon his life; finding he could do nothing by the ſchemes, and ſnares, and ſtratagems, he uſed in a private manner; he grew outrageous and furious, and openly declared his views, and laid his injunctions on his ſon and ſervants, to take away David's life as a very dangerous perſon to his crown and government.

[d] Antiq. l. 6. c. 11. §. 4. [e] Vid. Stockium, p. 509. [f] Apud Kimchium & Abarbinel. in loc.

℣. 2. But Jonathan Saul's ſon delighted much in David, &c.] In his company and converſation; he loved him with a love of complacency, and was conſtant and ſtedfaſt in it, and which was a kind providence to David; for by this means he came to the knowledge of Saul's deſigns upon him, and could the better guard againſt him: and Jonathan told David, ſaying, Saul my father ſeeketh to kill thee; to inform him of which was acting the part of a ſincere and faithful friend: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed of thyſelf until the morning; it ſeems it was now evening when he informed him of it; and as he knew not what emiſſaries Saul might have out that night in queſt of him, he adviſes him to take care of himſelf, and not expoſe himſelf to any danger, and to keep a ſtrict guard about him; and in the morning he would try to conciliate his father to him, when he might hope, having ſlept upon it, that he would be in a better temper, and more diſpoſed to hear what might be ſaid to him: and abide in a ſecret place, and hide thyſelf; he ſeems to ſuggeſt, as if it was not ſafe for him to be in his own houſe, and in his own bed-chamber that night, but that it was adviſeable to retire to ſome private place, where it might not be known, or ſuſpected that he was there. By what follows he means ſome field, and a private place in it.

℣. 3. And I will go out, &c.] In the morning, at the ſame time his father uſed to take his morning-walk: and ſtand beſide my father in the field where thou art; on that ſide of him next to David, that he might not ſee him, and yet be ſo near, that David might hear what paſſed between them: and I will commune with my father of thee; ſpeak in favour of him, and endeavour to diſſuade him from attempting to take away his life, which was of ſo much importance and uſefulneſs in the commonwealth of Iſrael: and what I ſee, that I will tell thee; what David could not well hear he would inform him of, and what he could perceive in the countenance of Saul, as well as conclude from his words, that he would make known to David, that ſo he might know better what he had to do, and provide for his ſafety.

℣. 4. And Jonathan ſpake good of David unto Saul his father, &c.] Obſerved to him what a good man he was, and what good things he had done, what wiſdom and prudence he had ſhown in the management of all his affairs, what valour and courage in all his expeditions, what faithfulneſs and integrity to his king and country in every inſtance: and ſaid unto him, let not the king ſin againſt his ſervant, againſt David; by taking away his life; which would have been a great ſin indeed, a ſin againſt the law of God, which forbids murder, and which would have been attended with ſad aggravations of cruelty and ingratitude: becauſe he hath not ſinned againſt thee; had not diſobeyed any of his orders, but faithfully ſerved him in every thing, and much leſs ever thought to take away his life, or ſeize his crown, as he might imagine: and becauſe his works have been to thee-ward very good; by ſlaying the Philiſtines, when he and his army were in the utmoſt terror; by driving away the evil ſpirit from him, through playing on his harp before him; as well as by commanding his troops, and leading them againſt the Philiſtines, and obtaining victory over them.

℣. 5. For he did put his life in his hand, &c.] Expoſed himſelf to the utmoſt danger, when no one in all the camp of Iſrael would do the like: and ſlew the Philiſtine; Goliath of Gath, who defied the armies of Iſrael; againſt him he went unarmed, only with his ſling and ſtones, and fought him, and ſlew him: and the Lord wrought a great ſalvation for all Iſrael; by his hand, ſo that they were delivered from their enemies, who fled before them, and they purſued them, and got a complete victory over them: thou ſaweſt it, and didſt rejoice; he was an eye-witneſs of David's going forth againſt the Philiſtine, and ſlaying him, and of all the happy effects of it, which then greatly affected him, and he could not forbear expreſſing great joy on that occaſion: wherefore then wilt thou ſin againſt innocent blood, to ſlay David without a cauſe? and ſo entail the guilt of it on himſelf and family.

℣. 6. And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan, &c.] Not only heard him out what he had to ſay, but was affected with it, and wrought upon by it, and was convicted for the preſent, that he was wrong in ſeeking the life of David, and therefore would deſiſt from it; the Lord working upon his mind by what Jonathan ſaid, and inclined him to liſten to it, and act accordingly: and Saul ſware, as the Lord liveth, he ſhall not be ſlain; this oath he added to what he ſaid to Jonathan, for the confirmation of it; and which was taken either with a real intention to keep it, though that intention did not long continue; or with a view to deceive Jonathan, that he might acquaint David with it, and ſo prevent his flight and eſcape, and that he might the more eaſily fall into his hands; but the former ſeems rather to be the caſe.

℣. 7. And Jonathan called David, &c.] Out of his lurking place in the field, after Saul was returned home: and Jonathan ſhewed him all theſe things; which had paſſed between him and his father, and particularly the oath he had made that he ſhould not be ſlain: and Jonathan brought David to Saul; introduced him at court again, and into the preſence-chamber of Saul; who, in appearance, received him courteouſly, and a reconciliation was ſeemingly made: and he was in his preſence as in times paſt; when he was firſt received at court, and in great eſteem both with Saul and his courtiers.

℣. 8. And there was war again, &c.] Between Iſrael and the Philiſtines; it does not appear that either of them ſent out their whole force, only ſome parties or detachments, between which there were ſkirmiſhes: and David went out and fought with the Philiſtines; he went out with his thouſand men, over which he was made captain, ch. xviii. 13. for he had not the command of the whole army; that belonged to Abner: and ſlew them with a great ſlaughter, and they fled from him; he killed many of them in his engagements with them, and the reſt fled, and he returned victorious; which ſtirred up the envy and increaſed the jealouſy of Saul, to obſerve which, this is related.

℣. 9. And the evil ſpirit from the Lord was upon Saul, &c.] His melancholy and frantic diſorder returned upon those victories of David, and he grew envious, jealous, spiteful and malicious: as he sate in his house with his javelin in his hand; which either describes the posture he was in when the evil spirit came upon him; or the effects of it, he became dull and melancholy, did not care to go abroad, but kept at home, and was suspicious of every body; and therefore kept a javelin in his hand to defend himself; or it may be rather to dispatch David with it, when an opportunity should offer, which quickly did: and David played with his hand; on some instrument of music, particularly the harp, to drive away the evil spirit, the melancholy disorder from Saul; which shewed his humility, that though he was an officer in the army, had a considerable post in it, yet deigned to act the part of a musician to Saul, and his great kindness and affection for him his sovereign, willing to serve him what he could to promote his health and comfort, and the trust and confidence he put in his promise and oath, or rather in the providence of God for his protection in the way of his duty, though he knew how spiteful and injurious Saul had been to him.

℣. 10. And Saul sought to smite David even to the wall with his javelin, &c.] To strike it through him, and fasten him to the wall with it, as he had attempted before, ch. xviii. 11. but he slipt away out of Saul's presence; he perceived his design, and being of great agility of body, moved out of his place before him very nimbly: and he smote the javelin into the wall; he threw it with such force that it entered into the wall, and stuck there; so great was his resolution to destroy David, and such the rage and passion that he was in, and such his strength of body, and which, in persons in his circumstances, is strangely exerted at times: and David fled, and escaped that night; it being towards night, or in the evening, very probably when this affair happened; upon which he departed from Saul's court, and went to his own house, and so escaped the danger he was exposed to for the present.

℣. 11. And Saul sent messengers unto David's house, &c.] Supposing that he was gone thither; where this was, is not said, very likely in Gibeah, where Saul lived: to watch him; that he might not get out from thence in the night: and to slay him in the morning; the reason why he did not order them to break into the house, and slay him at once, but wait till morning, seems to be, lest should he be alarmed by their breaking in, he might take the advantage of the night, and easily escape, or another person through mistake might be slain for him; and therefore that they might be sure of him, they were to watch till it was broad day-light, when they could not well miss of him. Josephus[d] says, the orders to watch him until morning were, that he might be taken and brought to a court of judicature, and be condemned and put to death, which was usually held in a morning; but Saul's orders to the messengers were to put him to death themselves, and he had no notion of dealing with him according to a formal process of judgment: and Michal David's wife told him, saying, if thou save not thy life to-night, to-morrow thou shalt be slain; meaning, if he did not take the benefit and advantage of the night to make his escape, he would not be able to do it in the morning; the house being so beset, as she perceived, by persons whom she might suspect were sent by Saul to destroy him, knowing the ill will her father bore to him; or a messenger at the same time might be dispatched to her, either from her brother Jonathan, or from one of her friends at court, acquainting her with the design against David, and the danger he was in. Upon this occasion David penned the 59th psalm.

℣. 12. So Michal let David through a window, &c.] In like manner as Rahab let down the spies from her house in Jericho, when the king's messengers were in quest of them; and as the disciples let down the apostle Paul at Damascus, to preserve him from the designs of the Jews upon him: and he went, and fled, and escaped; he departed from his house, and ran with all the haste he could, and escaped the messengers that had beset the house, and were waiting for him.

℣. 13. And Michal took an image, &c.] Or Teraphim, as the word is; which if the same with those that Rachel stole from her father, they seem to be of the same sort with the penates or household gods of the heathens, which were privately kept by Michal; for had David known of them, he would not have suffered them to have been in his house. Aben Ezra supposes they were images made in the form of men under such a constellation, a sort of Talismans, to receive the heavenly influences, and which being consulted, foretold things to come; and R. Isaiah is of opinion, that Michal chose and placed these in the bed, that her father might conclude, when he should hear of them, that David had found them; and by this means knew that his intention was to kill him, and therefore fled; but to consult such images was very far from David, and without it he knew Saul's intention. Abarbinel makes mention of several sorts of Teraphim, some for idolatry, some to draw down the heavenly influences, some to know the time of the day, a sort of dials; some were made after the form of a man known, and like him in his form and features; and women, he says, used to have the forms or statues of their husbands, that they might have them continually before them, because of the great love they had to them; and of this sort he supposes were the Teraphim of Michal, and which is approved of by Abendana; and that this image had the likeness of an human face is very probable, or it could not have so well answered her purpose: and laid it in the bed; where David used to lie, that it might seem to be he himself: and put a pillow of goat's hair for his bolster; she took the finest of the goat's hair, which she had in the house, women being used to spin in those days, even great personages, and put it into a pillow, and made a bolster of it, and put it under the head or block of the image, which would sink it, being soft, and so look like a sick man, whose face could not easily be discerned; though some think this goat's hair was put about the head of the image, to make it look the more like an human head; goat's hair being very much like human hair[e], and of different colours, and such a colour might be chosen as was most like David's, see Cant. iv. 1. the Targum interprets it, a bottle of goat's skins, that is, a leathern bottle or bag made of goat's skins, such as they used to put wine into; hence the conceit in the Midrash[f], that a bottle of wine was put instead of David; but the pillow or bolster had the form of a leathern bag or bottle; the Septuagint version is very odd, "and put the liver of goats at his head;" and so ſo Joſephus ſays[g]; and it is obſerved[h], that the liver of a goat will move a long time after it is taken out, and ſo make a ſhew of the palpitation of the heart; but then this was put, not within the bed, but at the head of the image: and covered it with a cloth; to keep her ſick huſband warm, as ſhe would have it underſtood.

[d] Antiq. l. 6. c. 11. §. 4.

[e] Vid. Stockium, p. 509.

[f] Apud Kimchium & Abarbinel. in loc.

℣. 14. And when Saul ſent meſſengers to take David, &c.] Either the ſame, who in the morning enquired for David, or thoſe ſtaying longer than Saul expected, and fearing they were negligent or corrupted, he ſent others: to whom ſhe ſaid, he is ſick; and in bed, and can't be ſpoke with; this lie ſhe told through her affection to David, and to preſerve his life; and this ſtratagem ſhe deviſed to gain time, that whilſt ſhe was amuſing the meſſengers with this tale of hers, before they could diſcover the truth of the matter, David would be out of their reach; whereas, had ſhe denied his being at home, or ſignified that he had made his eſcape, they would have immediately purſued after him, and he would have been in danger of being taken by them.

℣. 15. And Saul ſent the meſſengers again to ſee David, &c.] Not to viſit him, or to ſee how he was, or enquire of his health in a kind manner, but to ſee his perſon, whether he was ſick or no, and whether he was there or no; for Saul might ſuſpect ſome deceit was uſed, becauſe the meſſengers took the report of Michal, and ſaw not David, nor attempted to ſee him; but now they have ſtrict orders to ſee him, and not take Michal's word as before; wherefore the ſupplement again may be left out: ſaying, bring him up to me in the bed; if ſo bad that he was not able to riſe, or not fit to be taken out of his bed, his orders were, that he ſhould be brought to him in it; reſolved he was to have him ſick or well: that I may ſlay him; not content that he ſhould die a natural death, or willing to wait for it, he is in haſte, being full of wrath and malice, to ſlay him himſelf.

℣. 16. And when the meſſengers were come in, &c.] To David's houſe, and into the room where he was ſuppoſed to lie: behold, there was an image in the bed; to their great ſurprize; they expected to ſee David, but inſtead of him the Teraphim, as in ℣. 13. if they had been in the room before, and thought they had ſeen David in the bed, they might be the more ſurprized to find, that it was only an image they ſaw: with a pillow of goat's hair for his bolſter; ſee the note on ℣. 13.

℣. 17. And Saul ſaid unto Michal, &c.] After the meſſengers returned and reported what they had ſeen, when Saul either came to her at her houſe, or ſent for her to his palace: why haſt thou deceived me ſo; for deceiving his meſſengers was deceiving him, by pretending David was ſick and in bed, when ſhe had placed an image there, and had let him down through a window, and he was gone: and ſent away mine enemy, that he is eſcaped? as if ſhe was more obliged to gratify the wicked paſſion of a father, than to provide for the ſafety of her huſband: and Michal anſwered Saul, he ſaid unto me, let me go, why ſhould I kill thee? though ſhe was concerned for the preſervation of her huſband, yet not for his honour and credit, nor for her own veracity; ſhe attempted not to vindicate her huſband from the charge of being an enemy to Saul, as ſhe might; but ſuggeſted that he was ſo deſperate a man, that if ſhe had offered to have detained him, he would have murdered her, and threatened if ſhe did, he would do it, when both were falſe; that he ſhould ſay to her let me go, when it was ſhe that adviſed him to go, and that if ſhe refuſed he would kill her; which lies were framed by her to excuſe herſelf, at the expence of her huſband's reputation.

℣. 18. So David fled, and eſcaped, &c.] Fled from his own houſe, and eſcaped falling into the hands of the meſſengers of Saul, and ſo of Saul himſelf: and came to Samuel to Ramah; the place where Samuel dwelt; to him David choſe to come, by whom he had been anointed king, that his faith might be ſtrengthened by him with reſpect to the kingdom, which might be weakened by what had happened to him; and that he might have ſome advice and direction from him, what he ſhould do, and what courſe he ſhould take in his preſent circumſtances, and that he might receive ſome comfort from him under his preſent troubles: and told him all that Saul had done to him; how he had ſpoken to his ſervants to kill him, had caſt a javelin at him himſelf, and had ſent meſſengers to his houſe to ſlay him: and he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth; which was in or near to Ramah, as appears by the following verſe; which perhaps was a more retired place, and ſo choſen for the ſake of converſation between them, or reckoned a more ſafe place. Here being a ſchool or college of the prophets, might be a kind of an aſylum, and where it might be thought Saul would not attempt to lay hands on David, ſhould he know where he was; for if the Philiſtines gave no diſturbance to the hill of God, and the prophets in it, ch. x. 5. it might be reaſonably concluded Saul would not; ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, he and Samuel went and dwelt in the houſe of doctrine, or in the ſchool, the ſchool of the prophets. R. Abimi the Nathite, or Naiothite, mentioned in the Talmud[i], is ſuppoſed[k] to be of this place; it is ſaid[l] to be ſix miles from Jeruſalem to the north.

℣. 19. And it was told Saul, &c.] By ſome officious perſons who ſaw David at Ramah, and obſerved that he and Samuel went together to Naioth: ſaying, behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah; or near it; according to R. Iſaiah, Ramah was the name of a hill, or mountain, ſo called from its height, and Naioth the name of a place on it; it ſignifies paſtures and pleaſant places, as meadows and paſtures are; and here in the fields near Ramah was the houſe of doctrine, as the Targum calls it, or the ſchool of the prophets, being pleaſant, and retired, and fit for ſtudy.

℣. 20. And Saul ſent meſſengers to take David, &c.] Notwithſtanding the ſacred place he was in, ſo bent was he upon his deſtruction: and when they ſaw the company of the prophets propheſying; or praiſing, as the Targum; ſinging hymns and ſongs of praiſe to God, under the inſpiration and influence of the Spirit of God, who indited theſe ſongs for them, and excited them to ſing them; theſe prophets belonged to the ſchool or college of prophets at Naioth, whom the meſſengers ſaw when they came thither, and found them thus employed; or when he ſaw[m], for the word is ſingular, that is, the chief of the meſſengers, or every one of them, ſo Kimchi: and Samuel ſtanding as appointed over them; he was preſident of the college, and he ſtood to to inſtruct and teach them in the knowledge of divine things; ſo the Targum, "ſtanding, teaching over them, or by them," and to direct and aſſiſt them in ſinging their ſongs of praiſe: the Spirit of the Lord was upon the meſſengers of Saul, and they alſo propheſied; or praiſed, as the Targum; ſung hymns and ſongs of praiſe as the prophets did, and were ſo taken up with theſe religious exerciſes, that they forgot, or were inattentive to the buſineſs they were ſent to do. Ben Gerſom thinks, they foretold things to come, and ſo Abarbinel; and particularly that they propheſied, that David ſhould rule over all Iſrael, and that God would not ſuffer Saul to ſlay him; and ſo were indifferent to, and negligent of doing the errand they were ſent on, yea purpoſely avoided it.

[g] Ut ſupra. [h] Vid. Hudſon. not. in ib. [i] T. Bab. Sabbat, c. 1. fol. 17. 2. Avodah Zarah, c. 2. fol. 36. 1. [k] Aruch in voce נוית fol. 98. 4. Juchaſin, fol. 74. 2. [l] Adrichom, Theatrum T. S. fol. 28. 2. [m] וירא & vidit, Montanus, Vatablus, Tigurine verſion; & vidit quiſque vel unuſquiſque illorum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 21. And when it was told Saul, &c.] That the meſſengers he had ſent, inſtead of ſeizing on David, were propheſying of him, or however were attending to ſervices of a different nature than what they were ſent upon: he ſent other meſſengers, and they propheſied likewiſe; when they came to the ſame place: and Saul ſent meſſengers again a third time, and they propheſied alſo; joined the reſt in ſinging praiſes, or foretelling future events.

℣. 22. Then went he alſo to Ramah, &c.] That is Saul; his meſſengers not returning to him, when he ſent one after another to take David, at length he ſet out himſelf from Gibeah to Ramah: and came to a great well that is in Sechu; which was either the name of a man, the owner of the well, or a place near to which the well was, and is commonly thought to be the ſame with Shochoh, ch. xvii. 1. at ſuch places there was generally a concourſe of people at certain times, to fetch water for the inhabitants of the place, and for the watering of flocks and herds, and ſo a proper place to ſtop at, and aſk the following queſtions: and he aſked and ſaid, where are Samuel and David? for his meſſengers not returning to him, he could not be ſure where they now were, though he had heard they were at Naioth: and one ſaid, behold, they be at Naioth in Ramah; at the houſe of doctrine, or ſchool in Ramah, as the Targum; thus one at the well replied, in anſwer to his queſtion, who had ſeen them go there, or knew they were there.

℣. 23. And he went thither to Naioth in Ramah, &c.] He went on from the well towards the place: and the Spirit of God was upon him alſo; as well as upon his meſſengers; even the ſpirit of prophecy, as the Targum: and he went on and propheſied until he came to Naioth in Ramah; in this he differed from his meſſengers; they did not propheſy till they came to that place, but Saul began to propheſy before he came thither, as he was in his way from the well to it.

℣. 24. And he ſtript off his clothes alſo, &c.] Not all his clothes, but his upper garments, as men in ſuch circumſtances uſed to do, as the prophets ſometimes did, and as it ſeems his meſſengers had done; according to Jarchi, R. Iſaiah, and others [n], he ſtript himſelf of his royal robes, and put on the habit of the ſcholars, the diſciples, and ſons of the prophets: and propheſied before Samuel in like manner; as the meſſengers had done, ſinging ſuch-like ſongs, or foretelling ſuch-like things as they did; he and they ſpeaking not of themſelves, but as they were moved by the holy ſpirit of prophecy; for ſuch gifts have ſometimes been beſtowed on men that were deſtitute of the grace of God, as Balaam, Caiaphas, and others: and lay down; or fell down [o], as perſons in an extaſy or trance: and lay naked all that day, and all that night; not entirely naked, but without his upper garment or royal robes, or elſe his armour; ſo an unarmed man is ſaid to be naked, though otherwiſe he has his clothes on: thus Gelon having conquered the Carthaginians, and made himſelf maſter of all Sicily, went into the forum naked, (i. e. unarmed) and declared he would reſtore the government to the citizens, wherefore a naked ſtatue for him was erected in the temple of Juno [p]; ſo Quinctius Cincinnatus was found plowing naked [q], who can't be ſuppoſed to be without any clothes on him. Jarchi, from Menachem, reports, that he had heard from an Arabian, that the word the Targum makes uſe of for naked, ſignifies, in the Arabic language, one that is furious or mad, as perſons in an extaſy, or under a prophetic ſpirit ſometimes ſeemed to be; now Saul was kept and held in ſuch circumſtances a whole day and night, that David might have an opportunity of making his eſcape, and getting at ſuch a diſtance from him, that he could not overtake him: wherefore they ſay, is Saul alſo among the prophets? this became a common ſaying, a proverbial expreſſion, at leaſt was now revived and obſerved with admiration; that Saul who had behaved himſelf in ſo ill a manner, as an enemy to ſo good a man, ſhould be found among the prophets of the Lord, and propheſying as they did.

CHAP. XX.

DAVID fleeing from Naioth came to Jonathan, and acquainted him with his circumſtances, and intreated his favour, ℣. 1—8. which Jonathan promiſed, and renewed the covenant with him, ℣. 9—17. a ſcheme was formed between them, by which David might know whether Saul was reconciled to him, and he might come to court, ℣. 18—23. which being tried, Jonathan found it was not ſafe for him to appear, ℣. 24—34. of which he gave notice by the ſignals agreed on, ℣. 35—40. and they took their leave of one another with ſtrong expreſſions of affection and attachment to each other, ℣. 41, 42.

℣. 1. And David fled from Naioth in Ramah, &c.] Whilſt Saul was propheſying, or lay in a trance there: and came; to Gibeah, where Saul dwelt, and had his palace, and kept his court: and ſaid before Jonathan; whom he found there, and for whoſe ſake he thither fled to have his advice, and to uſe his intereſt with his father, and be his friend at court: what have I done? what is mine

[n] Vid. Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 76. G.

[o] ויפל & cecidit, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus; & corruit, Vatablus.

[p] Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 11.

[q] Aurel. Victor. de vir. illuſtr. c. 20.

mine iniquity? and what is my ſin before thy father, that he ſeeketh my life? ſurely, as if he ſhould ſay, I muſt have been guilty of ſome very great crime, and yet I am not ſenſible of it; canſt thou tell me what it is that has ſo provoked thy father, that nothing will ſatisfy him but the taking away of my life, which he ſeeks to do?

℣. 2. And he ſaid unto him, God forbid, thou ſhalt not die, &c.] He could not believe his father had any ſuch intention; and that if he diſcovered any thing of that kind, it was only when he was in a phrenſy, and a melancholy diſorder had ſeized him; and that David had nothing to fear on that head, and that he would ſecure him from all danger in that reſpect; the thing was too groſs and deteſtable to be credited: behold, my father will do nothing either great or ſmall, but that he will ſhew it me; ſuch an intereſt had he in him, and in his favour, being his ſon and heir to his crown, and having done many warlike exploits, which had the more endeared him to him, that he made him privy to all his ſecret deſigns, and took his opinion in all matters of moment and importance: and why ſhould my father hide this thing from me? his deſign of taking away the life of David, if he had really formed one: it is not ſo; Jonathan concluded from his ignorance of it, there was nothing in it, and that it was only a ſurmiſe of David's; and yet it is ſtrange that Jonathan ſhould know nothing of the meſſengers being ſent to David's houſe to take him, and of others ſent to Naioth after him, and of Saul's going there himſelf with ſuch a deſign; and if he did know any thing of the matter, he made the beſt of it to David, partly to allay his fears, and partly that his father might not appear ſo black and vile as he really was.

℣. 3. And David ſware moreover, and ſaid, &c.] To aſſure Jonathan of the truth of it, that he did moſt certainly ſeek after his life, of which, as he had no doubt himſelf, by an oath he endeavoured to remove any that might be in Jonathan, who was not willing to believe his father could be guilty of ſo foul a crime: thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes; that he was high in his favour, that he had a great value for him, and he had a large ſhare in his love and friendſhip, and that was the reaſon why he hid from him his baſe intentions: and he ſaith, let not Jonathan know this, leſt he be grieved; as he would be, both for the evil his father would be guilty of, and the danger David, his beloved friend, would be in: but truly as the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, there is but a ſtep between me and death; as appeared by his caſting a javelin at him, ſending meſſengers to his own houſe to ſlay him, and others to Naioth to ſeize him, and coming himſelf thither with an intention to kill him, and in each of theſe inſtances he had a narrow eſcape for his life; and this he declared in the moſt ſolemn manner by an oath, for the confirmation of the truth of it to Jonathan.

℣. 4. Then ſaid Jonathan unto David, &c.] Now giving credit to what he had ſaid, and in order to comfort and ſupport him under the apprehenſions he had of danger: whatſoever thy ſoul deſireth, I will even do it for thee; for the preſervation of his life, by ſpeaking to his father on his behalf, endeavouring to diſſuade him from his evil intentions, or by hiding and concealing him in ſome obſcure place, that he might not execute his evil deſigns upon him, or by any method he could point out to him.

℣. 5. And David ſaid unto Jonathan, &c.] Moved that the following method might be taken as a trial of the diſpoſition of Saul's mind towards David: behold, to-morrow is the new moon; the firſt day of the month, which was kept ſolemnly with burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, ſee Numb. x. 10. and xxviii. 11. Some ſay[r], this feaſt was not kept for the new moon, but becauſe it was the day of the feaſt of trumpets, or the firſt day of the new year, which fell together on that day; the calends, or firſt day of the month was with the heathens ſacred to deity[s], in imitation of the Jews: and I ſhould not fail to ſit with the king at meat; it had been uſual for him at ſuch a time to ſit at table with the king; next to him, as Jarchi interprets it, either as his ſon-in-law, or as one of his princes; the cuſtom being for the king, and his family and nobles to eat together on that day upon the peace-offerings; and it was the duty of David to attend at that time, and it might be expected he would: but let me go; he aſked leave of Jonathan, who had power in his father's abſence to grant it, he not being yet returned from Naioth: that I may hide myſelf in the fields, unto the third day at even; or until the time of the evening of the third day, as the Targum, which was the evening of the ſecond day of the month; for that was the third from that evening they were diſcourſing together, as Ben Gerſom obſerves; the fields he propoſed to hide himſelf in were near to Gibeah, and he doubtleſs meant ſome cave in thoſe fields, where he might be and not be ſeen by men; though it can't be thought that he remained, or propoſed to remain, in ſuch a place during that time, where he would be in want of food, but that he would abide incognito among his friends ſome where or another, until the feſtival was over.

℣. 6. If thy father at all miſs me, &c.] Or diligently enquires after me: then ſay, David earneſtly aſked leave of me, that he might run to Bethlehem his city; the place of his birth, called the city of David, where he was born and had lived, Luke ii. 4. John vii. 42. which was not far from Gibeah, and whither he could ſoon run; and which ſhews the haſte he propoſed to make, and his eager deſire to be there, and which alſo is ſignified by his earneſt and importunate requeſt; for all this might be true, and no lie of David, framed for an excuſe; and after he had hid himſelf ſome time in the field, until it was evening, he might go to Bethlehem, and return ſoon enough to meet Jonathan in the field at the time fixed by them on the third day: for there is a yearly ſacrifice there for all the family; it was cuſtomary for the family of Jeſſe one day in a year, and as it ſhould ſeem on a firſt day of the month, and perhaps the firſt day of the firſt month, or new year's day, to have an anniverſary feaſt by way of gratitude and thankfulneſs for the mercies of the year paſt, and for the continuance of them for time to come; in which the family rejoiced together at the great goodneſs of God unto them, ch. ix. 12.

℣. 7. If he ſay thus, it is well, &c.] It is very well, it is very good and right in him to do ſo: thy ſervant ſhall have peace; it will be a token that the wrath of the king was removed, and that his mind was well diſpoſed towards David, and things had taken an happy turn, and would iſſue in his peace and proſperity: but if he be very wroth; with Jonathan for giving leave, and with David for going away: then be ſure that evil is determined mined by him; that he has a ſettled obſtinate malice in his heart, which is become implacable and inveterate, and confirmed in him; and that it is a determined point with him to ſlay David if poſſible, which he hoped to have an opportunity of doing at that time; in which he was diſappointed, and cauſed ſuch wrath in him.

[r] Weemſe's Expoſ. Ceremon. Law, c. 22. p. 100, 101. Genial. Dier. l. 3. c. 18. in fine.

[s] Macrob. Saturnal. l. 1. c. 15. Alex. ab Alex.

℣. 8. Therefore thou ſhalt deal kindly with thy ſervant, &c.] By informing him how his father's mind ſtood affected to him, that he might conduct himſelf accordingly, either by appearing at court, or by providing for his ſafety by flight: for thou haſt brought thy ſervant into a covenant of the Lord with thee; a covenant of friendſhip between Jonathan and David, of which Jonathan was the firſt mover, and ſo is ſaid to bring or perſuade him into it; called the covenant of the Lord, becauſe made in his name and fear, and before him as a witneſs of it; and this David pleads as an argument with Jonathan, to deal kindly and faithfully by him in the preſent caſe: notwithſtanding, if there be in me iniquity, ſlay me thyſelf; or paſs ſentence upon him to be ſlain; which, if guilty, he might have power to do in his father's abſence, and which David deſires might be done, notwithſtanding the covenant of friendſhip between them, ſhould he appear to deſerve it by any action of his, of which he was not conſcious; this expreſſes the ſtrong ſenſe he had of his own integrity, and ſerved to confirm Jonathan in his opinion of it: for why ſhouldſt thou bring me to thy father? deliver him up into his hands to be put to a cruel death by him, or give him the trouble of doing it, when he might as well diſpatch him at once.

℣. 9. And Jonathan ſaid, far be it from thee, &c.] To entertain ſuch a thought of me, or to have the leaſt ſuſpicion of me, that I ſhould conceal my father's ill intentions againſt thee, if known to me: for if I knew certainly that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, then would I not tell it thee? certainly I would; canſt thou doubt of my kindneſs and fidelity? ſurely thou haſt no reaſon, when ſuch a covenant of friendſhip ſubſiſts between us, and there has not been the leaſt breach of it on either ſide.

℣. 10. Then ſaid David to Jonathan, who ſhall tell me? &c.] The diſpoſition of Saul's mind towards him, whether he gave a kind anſwer to the report of Jonathan concerning him: or what if thy father anſwer thee roughly? or hard words, as the Targum, whether he anſwers in a kind, loving and ſmooth manner, or whether in a rough and angry one: the queſtion is here, how he ſhould be informed of this, ſince eſpecially, if in the latter, it would not be ſafe for Jonathan to come himſelf to him, nor could he well truſt the meſſage with any other. Abarbinel thinks, that the firſt of theſe expreſſions is by way of queſtion, who ſhould declare to him his father's will and intention, whether good or bad; and the latter by way of outcry, wo unto me, if thy father ſhould anſwer thee roughly; I greatly fear he'll chide thee for my ſake; my heart will be filled with ſorrow if thou ſhouldſt ſuffer reproach and rebuke on my account.

℣. 11. And Jonathan ſaid unto David, come, and let us go out into the field, &c.] That they might more fully, and freely, and familiarly talk of this affair between them, without any danger of being over-heard by the ſervants of Saul, as they were in his palace, where they now were: and they went out both of them into the field; which belonged to Gibeah.

℣. 12. And Jonathan ſaid unto David, O Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] Or by the Lord God of Iſrael I ſwear unto thee; for this is the form of the oath, as Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve: when I have ſounded my father, about to-morrow any time, or the third day; ſearched, enquired, and found out how his diſpoſition is: and behold, if there be good toward David; if he is well diſpoſed to him, as may appear by ſpeaking reſpectfully of him, or kindly enquiring after him, and by being ſatisfied with the account given him: and I ſend not unto thee, and ſhew it thee; then let the vengeance of God fall upon me in ſome remarkable manner or another, as follows; or ſhall I not then ſend unto thee, and ſhew it thee[1]? certainly I will; that is, I will ſend a meſſenger to thee to acquaint thee with it, who ſhall tell it, and cauſe thee to hear it, as from myſelf.

℣. 13. The Lord do ſo and much more to Jonathan, &c.] Recompenſe evil more than can be thought of and expreſſed, ſhould he neglect to inform David of the good diſpoſition of Saul unto him: but if it pleaſe my father to do thee evil; if he ſeems determined upon it to take away thy life: then I will ſhew it thee; not by a meſſenger, by whom it would not be ſafe to communicate it, leſt by that means Saul would know where he was, and come and ſlay him; but Jonathan would come himſelf, and acquaint him with it: and ſend thee away, that thou mayſt go in peace; give him leave, and adviſe him to depart, and provide for his own ſafety, adding his bleſſing on him, and prayer for him: and the Lord be with thee, as he hath been with my father; in the beginning of his reign, giving him counſel and advice in all things, and victory over his enemies, ſucceeding and proſpering him in whatſoever he engaged in; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord be for thy help, &c." Jonathan ſeemed to be fully apprized, that David was to ſucceed in the kingdom.

℣. 14. And thou ſhalt not only, while yet I live, ſhew me the kindneſs of the Lord, &c.] Such kindneſs as is well-pleaſing in the ſight of God, and imitate what he ſhews to men, and which was covenanted, promiſed and agreed to in the preſence of the Lord, when David and Jonathan entered into covenant with each other; this Jonathan did not doubt of, and therefore did not make this a requeſt: that I die not; he had no fear nor dread on his mind ſhould David come to the throne whilſt he was alive, that he would take away his life; which was uſually done by tyrants and uſurpers, when there were any that had a fairer title, and better claim to the throne than they.

℣. 15. But alſo thou ſhalt not cut off thy kindneſs from my houſe for ever, &c.] His family ſhould partake of it as well as himſelf: no not when the Lord hath cut off the enemies of David, every one from the face of the earth; Saul and his ſons, and every one that ſhould oppoſe his ſettlement in the kingdom; Jonathan's meaning is, that the covenant between them ſhould not be only between them perſonally, but include their poſterity, as follows.

℣. 16. So Jonathan made a covenant with the houſe of David, &c.] Not with David himſelf only, which was now renewed, but with his family alſo: ſaying, let the Lord even require it at the hand hand of David's enemies; take vengeance on Jonathan, or on any of his poſterity, ſhould they break this covenant, by ſhewing themſelves enemies to David, and his crown; and, on the other hand, alſo on David, and his poſterity, ſhould they not ſhew kindneſs to Jonathan and his ſeed, according to the tenor of this covenant.

[1] ולא אן אשלח אליך an non tunc mitterem? Junius & Tremellius; nonne tunc mittam ad te? ſo ſome in Vatablus.

℣. 17. And Jonathan cauſed David to ſwear again, &c.] Or Jonathan added to make David ſwear [u]; having ſworn himſelf to make a covenant of friendſhip with David and his family, he moved and inſiſted on it, that David ſhould ſwear to keep covenant with him, and his family: becauſe he loved him; it was not ſo much for the good and ſafety of his offſpring, that he made this motion, and was ſo deſirous of renewing and enlarging his covenant with David, as it was his ſtrong love and affection for him; being on that account deſirous that there might be the ſtricteſt friendſhip imaginable retained between the two families; or he made him ſwear by his love to him, as ſome underſtand it, which is not ſo likely; the former ſenſe is beſt, for he himſelf ſware by the Lord, ℣. 12, 13. for he loved him as his own ſoul; or with the love of his ſoul [w]; with the moſt cordial affection, with a truly hearty, and ſincere love, ſee ch. xviii. 1.

℣. 18. Then Jonathan ſaid to David, to-morrow is the new moon, &c.] The firſt day of the month, as David had before obſerved, ℣. 5. and thou ſhalt be miſſed, becauſe thy ſeat will be empty; or be enquired after, becauſe not in his uſual place at mealtime.

℣. 19. And when thou haſt ſtayed three days, &c.] From court, either at Bethlehem, which ſeems moſt probable, or in ſome other place incognito; however, not in the field he propoſed to hide himſelf in, where he could not continue ſo long for want of food: then thou ſhalt go down quickly, and come to the place where thou didſt hide thyſelf; which makes it clear that he did not continue there during that time, but went elſewhere; from whence he was to come in haſte at the expiration of three days, to the place he firſt hid himſelf in, and which was fixed upon to meet at: when the buſineſs was in hand; when the affair was diſcourſed of, about getting knowledge how Saul was affected to David, and of informing him of it; or on the day of work [x]; or buſineſs, on a working day, as the Septuagint; and ſo the Targum, on a common day; when, as the Vulgate Latin, it was lawful to work on it; and ſuch was the day when Jonathan and David converſed together about the above affair; it being the day before the new moon, or firſt day of the month, on which day they uſed not to work: ſome render it, thou ſhalt three times go down [y] to that place; and the ſenſe is, that he ſhould come on the morrow, and if he found not Jonathan there, he might conclude that as yet he knew nothing of his father's mind, and therefore ſhould come the day following that; and if he found him not then, to come on the third day, that ſo he might be on the ſpot, let him come on which day he would: and ſhalt remain by the ſtone Ezel; which, becauſe it ſignifies going, the Jewiſh commentators generally underſtand it as a ſign to direct travellers which way to go; but one would think this ſhould be an improper place for David to be near, ſince it muſt be where two or more ways met, and ſo a public frequented place; others think therefore it had its name from David and Jonathan often going thither, to diſcourſe with each other; the Septuagint calls it Ergab; and ſo the place where Jonathan, the ſon of Saul, exerciſed himſelf by ſhooting darts, is called by Jerom; it is ſaid by Joſephus [z], to be 150 furlongs from Jeruſalem, and from Jordan 60.

℣. 20. And I will ſhoot three arrows on the ſide thereof, &c.] On the ſide of the ſtone Ezel; three are pitched upon, according to the number of the days David was miſſing: as though I ſhot at a mark; as if he made the ſtone the mark he ſhot at; ſo that his ſhooting would not be taken notice of.

℣. 21. And behold I will ſend a lad, &c.] That attended on him, and carried his bow and arrows, and fetched his arrows when he had ſhot them; ſaying, go find out the arrows; where they are fallen, and return them: if I expreſsly ſay unto the lad, behold, the arrows are on this ſide of thee, take them; on one ſide of him, whether the one or the other, which he would bid him take up, and bring them to him: then come thou; David, out of the place where he hid himſelf: for there is peace to thee, and no hurt, as the Lord liveth; he might appear, and not be afraid of being ſeen by any, ſince by this ſign he might be aſſured that Saul was well affected to him, and would ſhew him favour, and do him no injury; and that he might promiſe himſelf proſperity and ſafety, and be aſſured of it for the preſent.

℣. 22. But if I ſay thus unto the young man, behold, the arrows are beyond thee, &c.] Being ſhot to a greater diſtance than where the young man was: go thy way, for the Lord hath ſent thee away; then he was to depart directly, without ſtaying to have any converſation with Jonathan, which would not be ſafe for either of them, and ſo make the beſt of his way into the country, and eſcape for his life; for ſo it was ordered by the providence of God, that he muſt not ſtay, but be gone immediately: the ſignals were theſe, that if things were favourable, then he would ſhoot his arrows on one ſide of the lad, and David might come out and ſhew himſelf at once; but if not, he would ſhoot them beyond him, by which he might know, that he muſt flee for his life.

℣. 23. And as touching the matter which thou and I have ſpoken of, &c.] The covenant they had made between them and their families: behold, the Lord be between me and thee for ever; as a witneſs of the covenant, and a revenger of thoſe that ſhould break it; ſo the Targum, "behold, the Word of the Lord be between me and thee a witneſs for ever."

℣. 24. So David hid himſelf in the field, &c.] Not directly, but at the time appointed; for he went to Bethlehem, and returned from thence before that time: and when the new moon was come; the firſt day of the month, which was a ſolemn feſtival: the king ſat him down to eat meat; Saul ſat down at his table to eat of the proviſions that were ſet upon it; which it is very probable were the peace offerings for that day, which he, his family, and nobles feaſted on together; it is in the Hebrew, he ſat down at the bread [b], which is put for all the food on the table, and the proviſions of it.

℣. 25.

---

[u] ויסף & addidit, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; ſo the Tigurine verſion.
[w] אהבת נפשו ſecundum dilectionem animæ ſuæ, Pagninus; amore ſui ipſius, Junius & Tremellius.
[x] ביום המעשה die feſto, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; die profeſto, Tigurine verſion.
[y] שלשת תרד מאד tertiabis, deſcendes valde, Montanus; deſcendes ter, vel tertiabis deſcendere, Caſtalio; ſo Patrick.
[z] De loc Heb. fol. 91. apud Adrichom. Theatrum T. S. p. 17.
[b] על הלחם ad vel juxta panem, Pagninus, Montanus.

℣. 25. And the king ſat upon his ſeat as at other times, &c.] Upon the ſeat he uſually ſat on: even upon a ſeat by the wall; on a couch by the ſide of the wall; or, as Jarchi and R. Iſaiah ſay, at the head of the couch by the wall, which was the moſt honourable place; and Kimchi obſerves, it was the cuſtom in thoſe days to eat meat ſitting on beds or couches, ſee ch. xxviii. 23. and Jonathan aroſe; either in reverence to his father, when he came in and took his ſeat, or in reſpect to Abner upon his coming in, being the ſon of Saul's uncle, and general of the army; for though he aroſe, he did not depart, it is plain he ſat down again, ℣. 34. Kimchi thinks, that after Jonathan had ſat down at the ſide of his father, he aroſe and placed Abner there, becauſe he would not be near his father, that if he ſhould be wroth with him on account of David, he might not be near him to ſmite him: and Abner ſat by Saul's ſide; according to Joſephus[c], Jonathan ſat at his right-hand and Abner on the left, and it was uſual for the maſter, or principal perſon, to ſit in the middle; ſo Dido in Virgil[d]. Abarbinel places them thus, Saul was at the head of the table, and David was uſed to ſit by him, and Jonathan by David, and Abner by Jonathan; and now the king ſat in his place, and Jonathan in his place, and Abner after him; and David's place being empty, Jonathan was left next to his father, without any between; wherefore he now aroſe from his place, and Abner ſat on that ſide where Saul was, ſo that Abner was between Jonathan and Saul: and David's place was empty; where he uſed to ſit at table, he not being there, and no one taking it.

℣. 26. Nevertheleſs, Saul ſpake not any thing that day, &c.] About David's abſence, took no notice of it, ſaid nothing about it: for he thought ſomething had befallen him; ſome impurity, ſome nocturnal pollution, ſee Lev. xv. 16. he is not clean, ſurely he is not clean; which he repeated in his mind for the confirmation of it, and in contempt, and to the reproach of David; and in this way he accounted for his abſence the firſt day, and ſo was eaſy, it not being lawful and fitting for an unclean perſon in a ceremonial ſenſe, to eat of the peace-offerings, which Saul and his family were now partaking of.

℣. 27. And it came to paſs on the morrow, which was the ſecond day of the month, &c.] The Targum is, "and it was on the day after it, which was the intercalation of the ſecond month," when the beginning of the month was judged of by the appearance of the moon, and there was a difficulty about that, what day it appeared on, two days were kept for it; and Abarbinel[e] is clear for it, that two days were kept in this month; but if this was not the caſe, ſince the remainder of peace-offerings might be eaten the next day, Lev. vii. 16. Saul and his gueſts might meet on the ſecond day for that purpoſe: that David's place was empty; on that day alſo: and Saul ſaid to Jonathan his ſon; who he knew was David's friend and confident, and could give the beſt account of him: wherefore cometh not the ſon of Jeſſe to meat, neither yeſterday nor to-day; he accounted for his not coming yeſterday, becauſe he ſuppoſed he might be under ſome ceremonial uncleanneſs; but then that only laſted to the evening of that day; but not coming the ſecond day when he was clean, he enquires after him; and not owning him for his ſon-in-law, by way of contempt, and to leſſen him in the eſteem of all at table, he calls him the ſon of Jeſſe.

℣. 28. And Jonathan anſwered Saul, &c.] In reply to Saul's queſtion, and to excuſe David, he ſaid, David earneſtly aſked leave of me to go to Bethlehem; his own city, his native place, where his family lived, whom he was deſirous to ſee, and yet choſe not to go without aſking leave; and as Saul was not at home, he aſked leave of Jonathan, who was next to him, and acted for him; and he was very preſſing and importunate in his ſuit, and therefore Jonathan could not well deny him it; and he hoped this would be a ſufficient excuſe for his abſence, eſpecially when what follows ſhould be obſerved.

℣. 29. And he ſaid, let me go, I pray thee, for our family hath a ſacrifice in the city, &c.] In the city of Bethlehem where they lived, a peace-offering on account of the new moon, and as an anniverſary thankſgiving for the mercies of the year, ℣. 6. and ſeeing, though he was not at the feaſt in one place, he obſerved it in another, his abſence at court was the more excuſable; and the rather, ſince it was kept by him with his own family, in his own city: beſides, it is added, and my brother he hath commanded me to be there; his elder brother Eliab, whoſe commands, as a younger brother, he judged he ought to obey; 'tis probable his father was now dead, ſince no mention is made of him, and his elder brother took upon him the command of the family: and now if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and ſee my brethren; he ſhould take it as a favour to have leave to depart, and be free for the preſent from waiting upon the king at court, and ſo have an opportunity of ſeeing his brethren, for which he had a great deſire; having not ſeen them a long time, not even ſince he ſaw them in the camp, when he ſlew Goliath: therefore he cometh not to the king's table; this was the reaſon of it, at leaſt one reaſon of it, and Jonathan was not obliged to tell the whole.

℣. 30. Then Saul's anger was kindled againſt Jonathan, &c.] For giving David leave to go, and for excuſing him in this manner: and he ſaid unto him, thou ſon of the perverſe and rebellious woman; moſt of the Jewiſh commentators ſupply it as we do, but the ſupplement of woman may as well be left out, and be read, thou ſon of perverſe rebellion[f]; thou perverſe and rebellious wretch, perverſe in thy temper, and rebellious in thy conduct; for the deſign of the expreſſion is not to reproach his mother, for which there ſeems no provocation, but Jonathan only; and the next clauſe confirms it, which expreſſes a concern for his mother's honour and credit; the Targum is, "an obſtinate ſon, whoſe rebellion is hard," or intolerable; according to which, Abarbinel ſays, it may refer to David: do not I know that thou haſt choſen the ſon of Jeſſe to thine own confuſion, and unto the confuſion of thy mother's nakedneſs? The above writer obſerves, that he does not ſay to his own confuſion, becauſe David would not reign in his life-time, only after his death, but to the ſhame of Jonathan and his mother; to Jonathan's ſhame, who would be reckoned by men an arrant fool, to be ſo friendly to

[c] Antiq. l. 6. c. 11. §. 9.
[d] —— mediamque locavit. Æneid. 1. prope finem. Vid. Servium in ib.
[e] Comment. in Exod. xii.
[f] בן נערות המרדות fili perverſæ rebellionis, Pagninus, Montanus.

to a rival, and who in all probability would joſtle him out of the throne; and what would men ſay of him, that either he was not fit to reign, or had no right to the throne, that a ſon-in-law took place before him; and that his mother had played the whore, and he was no ſon of Saul, having nothing of his genius, temper and diſpoſition in him, as appeared by loving ſuch his father hated; and beſides, his mother would not have the honour ſhe expected, to be the mother of a king.

℣. 31. For as long as the ſon of Jeſſe liveth upon the ground, thou ſhalt not be eſtabliſhed, nor thy kingdom, &c.] He would not, though heir to the crown, be ſure of it; it would be precarious to him, he would be in great danger of being deprived of it on the death of his father; and therefore it would be his higheſt wiſdom to deliver David up to be ſlain, as it was his greateſt folly to protect him, and provide for his ſafety: wherefore now ſend and fetch him unto me; ſend to Bethlehem for him to come to court directly: for he ſhall ſurely die; or he is the ſon of death[g]; guilty of death, as the Targum, deſerves to die, and Saul was determined upon his death if poſſible.

℣. 32. And Jonathan anſwered Saul his father, and ſaid unto him, &c.] Making no anſwer to the charges of perverſeneſs, rebellion and folly brought againſt himſelf, which he bore with patience, but could not bear to hear his dear friend ſpoken againſt, and as worthy of death: and therefore in anſwer to that ſays, wherefore ſhall he be ſlain? what hath he done? has he attempted to take away thy life? to deprive thee of thy crown? to ſettle himſelf upon the throne? what overt act of treaſon has he been guilty of, that he ſhould die? on the contrary, has he not done many things worthy of immortal honour, for the good of the nation, and the glory of thy reign? and if God has determined the kingdom for him, and anointed him to it, what blame can be laid upon him? nay, ſhould he not be the rather reſpected and honoured?

℣. 33. And Saul caſt a javelin at him to ſmite him, &c.] So provoked to wrath was he by what he ſaid. It ſeems by this, that Saul always had a javelin or ſpear in his hand, which is to be accounted for by the cuſtom of thoſe times; in other countries, as well as in this, the kings uſed to carry ſpears in their hands inſtead of ſcepters, and which they uſed as ſuch; ſo Juſtin[h], ſpeaking of the times of Romulus, ſays, that kings in thoſe times had ſpears, as an enſign of royalty, which the Greeks call ſceptres; and ſo the Greeks called ſceptres ſpears[i]: whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to ſlay David; for ſince he attempted to ſmite him, his own ſon, for ſpeaking on his behalf, it might be well concluded, that ſuch was his ſettled wrath and malice, that he would if poſſible kill David, could he get him into his hands.

℣. 34. So Jonathan aroſe from the table in fierce anger, &c.] Reſenting his father's attempt to ſmite him, and his reſolution to ſlay David: and did eat no meat the ſecond day of the month; not then at that meal he was juſt ſat down to, nor at another time that day, his ſtomach was ſo full through indignation at his father, and grief for his friend David; and beſides, being a mourner on the above accounts, he might not eat of the ſacrifices: for he was grieved for David; that his death ſhould be determined upon by his father, and he in ſo much danger of it; as alſo, that he himſelf muſt be parted from and loſe ſo dear a friend, which was one reaſon he eat no meat that day: and another follows, becauſe his father had done him ſhame; the copulative and being wanting; and this he did by calling him a perverſe and rebellious ſon, and repreſenting him as an arrant fool, and particularly by caſting a javelin at him to ſmite him.

℣. 35. And it came to paſs in the morning, &c.] The next morning, the morning of the third day of the month: that Jonathan went out into the field at the time appointed with David; he went to the place in the field, or near it, where David hid himſelf, and at the time agreed between them; which, Abarbinel ſays, was the time the nobles agreed on for walking, and motion, and for hunting, and caſting of arrows, ſo that Jonathan could go forth without ſuſpicion: and a little lad with him; to carry his bow and arrows, and fetch his arrows when caſt.

℣. 36. And he ſaid unto his lad, run, find out now the arrows which I ſhoot, &c.] He no doubt told him the mark which he ſhould ſhoot at, the ſtone Ezel, and bid him look out about that for them: and as the lad ran; before he had got to the mark: he ſhot an arrow beyond him; or it; beyond the lad, or beyond the mark he ſhot at; purpoſely ſhooting with great ſtrength, that he might exceed, and thereby give notice to David how things ſtood, which was the ſign agreed on.

℣. 37. And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had ſhot, &c.] To the mark which he told him he ſhould ſhoot at, and whereabout he might expect to find the arrow: Jonathan cried after the lad, and ſaid, is not the arrow beyond thee? he cried with a loud voice and ſaid this, not ſo much that the lad might hear him, but that David, who lay hid near the place, might hear him; ſo that if they had no opportunity of ſeeing and converſing with each other through any perſon going by at that time, David might know by this ſign that evil was determined againſt him, and muſt flee for his life; the Syriac and Vulgate Latin verſions read, behold, the arrow is beyond thee; ſo Noldius[k].

℣. 38. And Jonathan cried after the lad, make ſpeed, haſte, ſtay not, &c.] But bring the arrows to him directly, that he might diſmiſs him; for obſerving that no man was paſſing by, he was deſirous of embracing the opportunity for a few minutes to have an interview with David alone before he fled: and Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows; for though the textual reading is ſingular, the marginal is plural, to ſhew, as Kimchi obſerves, that he caſt three arrows, as he ſaid he would, ℣. 20. and came to his maſter; with them.

℣. 39. But the lad knew not any thing, &c.] What was meant by ſhooting the arrows, and by ſhooting them beyond where he was, and by bidding him make haſte to bring them: only Jonathan and David knew the matter; what was ſignified by them, thoſe being ſigns agreed upon between them.

℣. 40. And Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad, &c.] His veſſels[l] or inſtruments; his arms, as the Targum, his quiver, bow and arrows: and ſaid unto him, go carry them to the city; to Gibeah, to Jonathan's houſe, or to his apartments at court there.

℣. 41.

[g] בן מות filius mortis, V. L. Montanus, Vatablus, Piſcator; reus mortis, Junius & Tremellius. [h] E Trogo, l. 43. c. 3. [i] Pauſanias in Bœoticis, ſive, l. 9. p. 606. Vid. Barthii Animadv. ad Claudian. in nupt. Honor. ℣. 119. [k] Concord. Ebr. Part. p. 265. N°. 1141. [l] את כליו vaſa ſua, Montanus; inſtrumenta ſua, Piſcator; arma ſua, V. L. Tigurine verſion.

℣. 41. And as ſoon as the lad was gone, &c.] Which David could obſerve from his lurking place: David aroſe out of a place toward the ſouth; to the ſouth of the field in which he was hid, or to the ſouth of the ſtone Ezel, near which he was; and ſo the Targum, "and David aroſe from the ſide of the ſtone Atha, which was towards the ſouth;" Jonathan ſhooting his arrows to the north of it, leſt the lad ſhould have diſcovered David when he ran for them: and fell on his face to the ground; in reverence of Jonathan, as the ſon of a king, and in reſpect to him as his friend, who had ſo faithfully ſerved him, and was ſo concerned to ſave his life: and bowed himſelf three times; this was before he fell proſtrate on the ground. Abarbinel obſerves, that bowing three times was fit and proper to be done to a king; once at the place from whence they firſt ſee him, the ſecond time in the middle of the way to him, and the third time when come to him; but though this may have been a cuſtom in more modern times, it is a queſtion whether it obtained ſo early; however it is certain bowing was as antient, and therefore Xenophon [z] is miſtaken in aſcribing it to Cyrus as the firſt introducer of this cuſtom; and be it that he was the firſt that began it among the Perſians, it was in uſe with others before, as this behaviour of David ſhews: and they kiſſed one another; as friends about to part; and wept one with another; as not knowing whether they ſhould ever ſee each other's face any more: until David exceeded; in weeping more than Jonathan; he having more to part with, not only him his dear friend, but his wife and family, and other dear friends and people of God, and eſpecially the ſanctuary and ſervice of God, which of all things lay neareſt his heart, and moſt diſtreſſed him; ſee ch. xxvi. 19. and many of his pſalms on this occaſion. Ben Gerſom ſuggeſts, that he wept more than was meet, through too much fear of Saul; but that ſeems not to be the caſe.

℣. 42. And Jonathan ſaid to David, go in peace, &c.] In peace of mind, committing himſelf, his family, and affairs, to the providence of God, who would take care of him, and keep him in ſafety from the evil deſigns of Saul; and particularly he would have him be eaſy with reſpect to what had paſſed between them two, not doubting but it would be faithfully obſerved on both ſides: foraſmuch as we have ſworn both of us in the name of the Lord; had made a covenant with each other by an oath, in the name and preſence of God as a witneſs to it: ſaying, the Lord be between me and thee, and between my ſeed, and thy ſeed for ever; as a witneſs of the agreement between them, including them and their offſpring, and as a revenger of ſuch that ſhould break it. The Targum is, "the "Word of the Lord be between thee and me, &c." and he aroſe and departed; that is, David aroſe from the ground, and took his leave of Jonathan, and departed into the country for the ſafety of his perſon and life: and Jonathan went into the city; into the city of Gibeah, where Saul dwelt and had his court.

CHAP. XXI.

THIS chapter relates that David went to Nob, and pretending he was on ſecret buſineſs for the king, got ſhew-bread, and the ſword of Goliath, from Ahimelech the prieſt, ℣. 1—9. and that paſſing from thence to Gath, where he was known, through fear feigned himſelf mad, and ſo eſcaped from thence, ℣. 10—15.

℣. 1. Then came David to Nob, to Ahimelech the prieſt, &c.] The high-prieſt, as Abarbinel rightly calls him; he was the brother of Ahijah, the ſon of Ahitub, who being dead he ſucceeded him; though ſome ſay [a] he was the ſame; ſee ch. xiv. 3. and xxii. 9. who was now at Nob, the tabernacle being there, whither probably it was removed by Saul, and where and at Gibeon, according to the Jews [b], it continued 57 years; as in the times of Joſhua it was in Shiloh, in the tribe of Ephraim, of which tribe he was; and in the times of David it was placed in the tribe of Judah, to which he belonged; ſo in the times of Saul it was in Nob, a city of his tribe, 12 miles from Gibeah, according to Bunting [c]; for that it was in the tribe of Benjamin appears by its being mentioned along with Anathoth, Neh. xi. 32. and according to Jarchi and Kimchi [d], it was near Jeruſalem, and ſo near that it might be ſeen from thence; ſome ſay they are the ſame [e]; Jerom [f] ſpeaks of it as near Dioſpolis or Lydda. David before he departed farther off, was willing to ſee the tabernacle once more, and there worſhip his God, and enquire of him by the high-prieſt, as he did, ch. xxii. 10. to direct him what way he ſhould take, and that he would proſper and ſucceed him in it, grant him his preſence, and keep him in ſafety: and Ahimelech was afraid at the meeting of David; hearing that he was come or coming, he went out to meet him, but when he ſaw him alone he trembled; eſpecially if he had heard of his having fallen under the diſpleaſure of Saul, and that he now fled from him, therefore he might fear that he ſhould fall into diſgrace and danger ſhould he entertain him: and he ſaid unto him, why art thou alone, and no man with thee? he might well wonder at it, and put ſuch a queſtion, ſeeing he was ſo great a man, both in the court and camp, and the king's ſon-in-law; he might therefore reaſonably ſuſpect ſomething more than ordinary was the caſe, and which occaſioned his fears.

℣. 2. And David ſaid unto Ahimelech the prieſt, &c.] In reply to his queſtion, and to account for ſuch an appearance he made without an equipage: the king hath commanded me a buſineſs, and hath ſaid unto me, let no man know any thing of the buſineſs whereabout I ſend thee, and what I have commanded thee; he pretended he was upon a ſecret expedition, by the order of Saul, which none were to know of, no not his own ſervants, and that was the reaſon why he came to him alone; which was a downright lie, and was aggravated by its being told only for the ſake of getting a little food; and eſpecially told to an high-prieſt, and at the tabernacle of God, and when he was come to enquire of the Lord there; and was attended with a dreadful conſequence, conſequence, the ſlaughter of the Lord's prieſts there, which afterwards lay heavy on David's mind, ch. xxii. 22. and is the very ſin he is thought to refer to in Pſ. cxix. 28, 29. This ſhews the weakneſs of the beſt of men, when left to themſelves; David, who as much hated lying as any man did, fell into it himſelf: and I have appointed my ſervants to ſuch and ſuch a place; to ſuch a place, of ſuch an one, not naming place nor perſon, that they might not be known; ſo the Targum calls it a place hidden and kept; and that David had ſome ſervants, though not now with him, who eat of the ſhew-bread, appears from Matt. xii. 3. whom Jonathan might ſend after him, to a place agreed on and appointed between them; ſo that this might be true.

[z] Cyropædia, l. 8. c. 23. [a] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 76. H. [b] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Zebachim, c. 14. §. 7. [c] Travels, &c. p. 136. [d] Comment. in Iſ. x 32. [e] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 8. 1. [f] Epitaphium Paulæ, fol. 59. A.

℣. 3. Now therefore what is under thine hand? &c.] Meaning what food had he in his houſe? give me five loaves of bread in mine hand; to take with him, for him and his ſervants in ſuch a place: or what there is preſent; or to be found [g] in the tabernacle; if not five loaves, two, or three, or four, or what food ſoever he had by him.

℣. 4. And the prieſt anſwered David, and ſaid, there is no common bread under mine hand, &c.] In the tabernacle, though he might have ſuch in his own houſe; which was common for any man to eat of, even ſuch as were not prieſts; but he had none there, and David was in haſte to be gone becauſe of Doeg, and could not ſtay till ſuch was fetched: but there is hallowed bread; ſuch as was devoted to ſacred uſe. Kimchi's father thinks this was the bread of the thank-offering, to which Ben Gerſom inclines; otherwiſe the Jewiſh writers in general underſtand it of the ſhew-bread; and it is clear it was that from ℣. 6. and from what our Lord ſays, Matt. xii. 4. Now this the prieſt had under his hand, being juſt taken off of the ſhew-bread-table, and was the perquiſite of the prieſts; and which though it was not lawful for any but prieſts to eat of, yet in this caſe of neceſſity he ſeemed willing to give it to David and his men, on this condition: if the young men have kept themſelves at leaſt from women; from their wives or others, and from any pollution by them, in any way or manner; but as this was alſo only of a ceremonial kind, it might as well have been diſpenſed with, had this been the caſe, as the other.

℣. 5. And David anſwered the prieſt, and ſaid unto him, &c.] In reply to the caſe of the young men his ſervants, and of himſelf too, who alſo was intended by the prieſt, though out of reverence to him not mentioned: of a truth women have been kept from us theſe three days ſince I came out; reckoning either from the time he fled from Saul at Naioth, or from the time he left Jonathan, during which time both he and his men could have no converſe with women, and receive no pollution by them; and this was the time which according to the law was required for the ſanctifying of perſons in this way, Exod. xix. 15. and the veſſels of the young men are holy; their garments, as Kimchi, not being defiled with any ceremonial uncleanneſs, as by the touch of any unclean perſon; or what inſtruments ſoever they were provided with for their journey; or rather their bodies; ſee 2 Cor. iv. 7. 1 Theſſ. iv. 4. and with reſpect to the prieſt's ſaying that the bread he had was hallowed or ſacred, and ſo not for common uſe, David replies, and the bread is in a manner common; inaſmuch as it was taken off of the ſhew-bread-table, and was now common to the prieſt and his family, though not to others, yet in caſe of neceſſity thro' hunger might be allowed to ſtrangers: yea, though it were ſanctified this day in the veſſel; even though it had been ſet but that day on the ſhew-bread table, and ſo became holy to the Lord; and yet even in ſuch a caſe and circumſtances as David and his men were in, it might be taken from thence and eaten of; for, as Abendana obſerves, nothing ſtands in the way of preſervation of life, but idolatry, adultery, and murder; every thing elſe may be done for the ſake of that but them; or as in the margin of our bibles, eſpecially when there is this day other ſanctified bread; that is, ſince other bread is this day put upon the ſhew-bread-table, in the room of that which has been taken away, whereby it is become holy to the Lord; then that which is removed may be eaten, and be allowed to us in our circumſtances. It ſeems by this that this was the ſabbath-day; for on that day the removal of the ſhew-bread-loaves was made, Lev. xxiv. 8. and R. Iſaiah ſays, that it was at the going out of the ſabbath that David came there; and which ſtill makes it a more appoſite caſe, as produced by our Lord to juſtify his diſciples in plucking ears of corn on the ſabbath-day, Matt. xii. 1—4.

℣. 6. So the prieſt gave him hallowed bread, &c.] Being ſatisfied with the account he gave of himſelf, and his young men, and of the lawfulneſs of it in caſe of neceſſity, acts of mercy being to be preferred to ritual ſervices. Whether he gave him five loaves, as he deſired, is not ſaid; but the reaſon of his giving him ſuch ſort of bread is obſerved, for there was no bread there; in the tabernacle, whatever might be in the houſe of the prieſt: but the ſhew-bread that was taken from before the Lord; from off of the ſhew-bread-table; and it ſeems to have been juſt taken off, it being ſabbath-day, and not as yet carried to the houſe of the prieſt, and divided among the other prieſts as uſual; and which was then removed, to put hot bread, in the day that it was taken away; that is, new bread, 12 freſh cakes; for when the 12 that had ſtood a week on the ſhew-bread-table were removed, 12 more were immediately put in their room, and it ſeems by this they were put hot there; but here ariſes a difficulty, how they could be put hot there, when it was not lawful to bake on a Sabbath day. About this the Jews are divided; ſome ſay they were baked on the ſabbath-day, but the greater part ſay that baking did not drive away the ſabbath, or it was lawful on the ſabbath-day; but others ſay that they were baked on the evening of the ſabbath, and kept in the oven until the time of their being ſet upon the table [h]; and as Abarbinel obſerves, the mouth of the oven might be ſtopped up till that time to keep in the heat; but others ſay [i] this heat was miraculous, or that a miracle was wrought for the ſake of it; which is not probable.

℣. 7. Now a certain man of the ſervants of Saul was there that day, &c.] When David came to Nob, and aſked bread of the prieſt, and had it, which this man was an eye-witneſs of, ch. xxii. 9, 10. detained before the Lord; either becauſe it was ſabbath-day, and ſo he might not travel, at leaſt no more than 2000 cubits; or by ſome vow of his, which he was obliged to ſtay and perform; or on account of ſome impurity he had contracted, which he came to be cleanſed from; or this detention was voluntary, in order to offer ſacrifice to the Lord,

[g] הנמצא quicquid inveneris, V. L. inventum, Montanus; quicquid inventum fuerit, Tigurine verſion. Bab. Menachot, fol. 95. 2.

[h] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 21. 1. Menachot, fol. 96. 2.

[i] T.

Lord, or pray unto him, or to ſtudy the law of God in the tabernacle, pretending to be a very religious man: and his name was Doeg an Edomite; being by birth an Idumean, but a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion; or he was of the ſeed of Iſrael, but becauſe he had dwelt in Edom, he was called an Edomite, as Kimchi thinks; juſt as Uriah is called for a like reaſon the Hittite: the chiefeſt of the herd-men that belonged to Saul; Saul had his herds and men to look after them, and this man was ſet over them all, to ſee that they faithfully diſcharged their truſt. The ſame officer the Romans called the præfect, or maſter of the cattle [k]; ſee the note on 1 Chron. xxvii. 29, 31. though this man was not only over the king's cattle, but over thoſe that kept them; and was in the ſame office as Phorbas was, under Laus king of Thebes [l], and Melanthius in Homer [m], and Fauſtulus to Amulius [n]: but Abarbinel is of opinion, that this is to be underſtood not of the keepers of herds and flocks, but of the ſhepherds or rulers of the people; and that this man was ſet over all the other magiſtrates and rulers of the people, hence ſaid to be ſet over the ſervants of Saul, ch. xxii. 9. and ſo Jarchi calls him Ab Beth Din, or father of the ſanhedrim, or great court of judicature; who was detained in the tabernacle to learn the law there, that he might be the better qualified for his office; but Kimchi interprets it as we do, the chief of the keepers of the herd, and both the Septuagint and Joſephus [o] ſay that he fed the king's mules.

ẏ. 8. And David ſaid unto Abimelech, &c.] After he had given him ſome of the loaves of the ſhew-bread: and is there not here under thine hand ſpear or ſword? any weapon, meaning in the tabernacle, and in his keeping, and at his diſpoſe; he knew the ſword of Goliath was there, and perhaps had a principal view to it, and put this queſtion in order to get that in his poſſeſſion: for I have neither brought my ſword, nor my weapons with me; neither his ſword, nor any part of his armour, but was come quite naked and unarmed; and as he pretended, becauſe the king's buſineſs required haſte; ſtill continuing his lie; whereas the true reaſon was, he was let down in haſte by his wife through a window of his houſe, and could not ſtay to take his armour with him; and had lain hid for ſome time, and paſſed incognito from place to place, and without armour, that he might be the leſs known and obſerved, and leaſt ſuſpected; though it may ſeem ſtrange that Jonathan had not provided him with a ſword.

ẏ. 9. And the prieſt ſaid, the ſword of Goliath the Philiſtine, whom thou ſleweſt in the valley of Elah, &c.] See ch. xvii. 2, 51. behold, it is here wrapt in a cloth behind the ephod; the garment of the high-prieſt, in which were the Urim and Thummim, and the breaſt-plate, or the linen veſtments of the prieſts; ſee ch. xxii. 18. which were laid up in a chamber for their uſe; and behind them the ſword of Goliath was wrapt up in a linen cloth, and reſerved as a monument of the goodneſs of God to Iſrael, and the ſalvation of them wrought by the hands of David, who ſlew Goliath with this his own ſword, and brought it with him. The Targum underſtands this word rendered behind, not of the place where the ſword was, but of the time when the prieſt ſaid this, and paraphraſes the words, "after he had enquired for him by the ephod;" ſee ch. xxii. 10. if thou wilt take that, take it; as if he ſhould ſay, it is not mine to give thee, but thou mayeſt take it if thou pleaſeſt; none has a better right to it; it is what thou tookeſt from the Philiſtine, and may take it again for thy uſe if thou art ſo inclined; and thou muſt either take this or none: for there is no other ſave that here; in the tabernacle, nor even in the prieſt's houſe, nor in the city; for it was a city of prieſts, who did not wear ſwords: and David ſaid, there is none like that, give it me; and which, as he was capable of wielding and making uſe of, as it is plain he was by cutting off Goliath's head with it; ſo it might ſerve to ſtrengthen his faith in God, as often as he looked upon it, that he would keep and preſerve him, and in due time deliver him out of the hands of Saul, and all his enemies.

ẏ. 10. And David aroſe and fled that day for fear of Saul, &c.] He had fled before for fear of him, both from his own houſe, and from Naioth, ch. xix. 18. and xx. 1. but now he fled out of the land of Iſrael, for fear of him; or it may be the reaſon of his fear and flight on this day was becauſe of Doeg the Edomite, leſt he ſhould go directly to Saul, and tell him where he was; and therefore through fear of him would not ſtay any longer, but the ſame day he came, he fled: and went to Achiſh the king of Gath; Gath, according to Bunting [p], was 24 miles from Nob. Achiſh, the king of it, is called Abimelech in the title of the 34th pſalm, that name being common to the kings of the Philiſtines, as Pharaoh was to the kings of Egypt. It may ſeem ſtrange that David ſhould go into an enemy's country, and eſpecially to the country of the Philiſtines, by whom he was mortally hated for the victories he had obtained over them, and the numbers of them he had ſlain; and particularly that he ſhould go to Gath, the place of Goliath, their champion, whom he had ſlain, and whoſe ſword he now had with him: but this is to be ſaid for him, that ſuch was the fury of Saul againſt him, and his reſolution to ſlay him, that he was as ſafe in an enemy's country as in the land of Iſrael; and that if he muſt die, he might as well die in one place as another; and that he went particularly here, the reaſon might be, becauſe all other lands were at peace with Saul, and ſo would have delivered him up to him, had he went elſewhere; but this people were at war with him, and he might hope not to be known by them; and if he was, that they might think it their intereſt to detain ſuch a perſon that was ſo ſerviceable to Saul, and ſo hurtful to them; and being Saul's enemy, they might hope to engage him on their ſide againſt him; and beſides, he might know that Achiſh was well diſpoſed towards him, as he ſeems to be, and might like him never the worſe for cutting off Goliath's head, who might not be heartily in the intereſt of Achiſh. After all, as impolitic as this ſtep of David's may ſeem to be, it is what great men have taken in their diſtreſs, to go over to their enemies, as Themiſtocles to the Moloſſians, and Alcibiades to the Lacedæmonians.

ẏ. 11. And the ſervants of Achiſh ſaid unto him, &c.] Who knew who David was, and perceiving that that he was reſpected by Achiſh: is not this David the king of the land? of the land of the Philiſtines; ſo ſome render the words, the king of this land [q]; which belongs unto him for his conqueſt of Goliath; for this was what was propoſed by him, that whoever was the conqueror ſhould poſſeſs the kingdom; and ſeeing it belongs to him, O Achiſh, why doſt thou admit him to court; thou wilt be driven from the throne, and we ſhall be his ſervants, and not thine [r]: but rather they mean the king of the land of Iſrael, having heard that he was anointed king by Samuel, and was to ſucceed Saul; or rather, they called him ſo becauſe he led out the armies of Iſrael as their general, and being victorious was more reſpected than even Saul was; for they had heard what the women ſung in their ſongs as follows: did they not ſing one to another of him in dances, ſaying, Saul hath ſlain his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands? which are the burden of their ſong, ch. xviii. 7. and from whence the ſervants of Achiſh concluded, that he was in greater authority or honour, and in greater eſteem, than Saul their king was.

[k] Vid. Pignorium de ſervis, p. 539. [l] Senecæ Œdipus, Act. 4. v. 815, 816, 839. [m] Odyſſ. 20. ẏ. 21. [n] Aurel. Victor. orig. Gent. Roman. [o] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 12. §. 1. [p] Travels, &c. p. 136.

℣. 12. And David laid up theſe words in his heart, &c.] Pondered upon them, and thought them over in his mind, finding that he was known, and his character alſo, and conſidered with himſelf what might be the conſequence of this; and was ſore afraid of Achiſh the king of Gath; leſt he ſhould be ſet againſt him, and be prevailed upon by his ſervants to take away his life, or deliver him up into the hands of Saul.

℣. 13. And he changed his behaviour before them, &c.] Behaved like a fool, or a madman: or changed his taſte [s]; which ſome underſtand of his reaſon, acted as if he was deprived of it; and others of his ſpeech, his words and the accent of them, drawled them out, as ſuch perſons do: and feigned himſelf mad in their hands; for in their hands he was, being taken by them, as the title of the lvith pſalm ſhews; and this ſtratagem he uſed to get himſelf out of their hands, acting the part of a madman, delirious, and out of his ſenſes: and ſcrabbled on the doors of the gate; as if he was writing ſomething there, and making marks upon them: and let his ſpittle fall down upon his beard; ſlavered, as ideots and mad-men do; and however mean this may ſeem in David to act ſuch a part, it cannot be condemned as wicked, ſince it was only a ſtratagem to deliver himſelf out of an enemy's hand, and ſtratagems are always allowed to be uſed againſt an enemy; and ſuch a method as this has been taken by men of the greateſt ſenſe and wit, as by Brutus [t] and Solon [u]; and yet according to the Vulgate Latin and Septuagint verſions, this caſe of his was real and not feigned; that through the ſurprize of being known in the court of Achiſh, he was ſeized with an epilepſy; that his countenance was changed, and his mouth diſtorted, as perſons in ſuch fits are; that he fell among them as one convulſed, and fell at, and daſhed againſt the doors of the gates, and foamed at the mouth, as ſuch perſons do; ſee Luke ix. 39. and ſo in the following words the Greek verſion is, ye ſee the man is an epileptic; I don't want epilepticks; but the 34th and 56th pſalms, compoſed by him at this time, ſhew that as he was of a ſound mind, ſo in good health of body, and not ſubject to ſuch fits as here repreſented; which would have rendered him unfit for ſuch compoſures.

℣. 14. Then ſaid Achiſh to his ſervants, lo, you ſee the man is mad, &c.] Which he ſaid, as willing his ſervants ſhould think ſo, and therefore rather the object of their pity than of their rage and malice; or as really believing he was ſo, which he and they might conclude not merely from theſe his actions, before deſcribed, which they might judge real and not feigned; but they might ſuppoſe this was truly his caſe, brought upon him by the ill uſage of Saul, who purſuing him from place to place, and ſending after him to take away his life, had really brought him to diſtraction; and this they might rather conclude from his coming to Gath, an enemy's country, and whoſe champion he had ſlain, and many others of them; which it might be thought no man in his ſenſes would have done: wherefore then have ye brought him to me? for if he was brought to be employed in his ſervice, he ſeemed very unfit for it, whether in the camp, or in the court; and if to be tried and condemned as an enemy, ſince he was a madman, he was rather to be pitied.

℣. 15. Have I need of madmen? &c.] Or fools, do I want them? han't I enow of them already at my court? I want wiſemen, and not fools and madmen. The Jews ſay [w] that the wife and daughter of Achiſh were mad; that whilſt David was playing the fool and madman without, they were acting the ſame part within; ſo that Achiſh had enough of that ſort of diverſion, if it was to be reckoned ſuch; as it was according to the taſte of ſome perſons who uſed, as in later ſo in earlier times, to keep fools in their houſes to make them ſport; but Achiſh had enough of that, and too much, at leaſt needed no more: that ye have brought this fellow to play the madman in my preſence? or act the part of a fool before me: ſhall this fellow come into mine houſe? court or palace, and have a poſt there; you need be in no pain about it; he's neither agreeable to me, nor fit for any; and therefore Achiſh drove him away as a fool or madman, inſtead of impriſoning him as an enemy, or taking away his life; ſee the title of pſalm xxxivth.

CHAP. XXII.

THIS chapter gives us an account of the flight of David from place to place, from Gath to the cave of Adullam, where his relations came to him; from thence to Mizpeh in Moab, where he got leave of the king of Moab for his father and mother to dwell there; and from thence by the advice of Gad the prophet, departed into the land of Judah, and came to the foreſt of Hareth, ℣. 1—5. and of the complaint of Saul to his ſervants of their unfaithfulneſs to him, and indolence and unconcern at the behaviour of Jonathan and David to him, ℣. 6, 7, 8. when Doeg the Edomite informed him of David being ſeen by him at Nob, and of his receiving food and a ſword from Abimelech

[q] מלך הארץ rex hujus regionis, Vatablus. [r] Vid. Jarchium & Jeſaiam in loc. [s] טעמו ſenſum ſuum, Montanus, Vatablus; ſermonem ſuum, Pagninus. illuſtr. c. 13. [t] Liv. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 56. Aurel. Victor. de vir. [u] Juſtin e Trogo, l. 2. c. 7. [w] Midraſh Tillim apud Abarbinel. in loc.

melech the prieſt, who enquired of the Lord for him, ℣. 9, 10. upon which Saul ſent for Abimelech and all the prieſts at Nob, and charged them with a conſpiracy againſt him; and notwithſtanding the defence the prieſt made, Saul ordered him and the reſt of the prieſts to be ſlain by his guards; which they refuſing, Doeg became the executioner of them, and of all the inhabitants of the city of Nob, and the cattle in it, ℣. 11—19. only Abiathar a ſon of Ahimelech eſcaped and fled to David with the ſorrowful news; which greatly affected David, looking upon himſelf to be the occaſion of this ſad diſaſter, and he took Abiathar under his protection, and promiſed him ſafety, ℣. 20—23.

℣. 1. David therefore departed from thence, &c.] From Gath, being driven by Achiſh from his court, and let go by his ſervants, and glad he was of the deliverance: and eſcaped to the cave Adullam; which was no doubt near to a city of the ſame name in the tribe of Judah, of which ſee the note on Joſh. xv. 35. this being a ſtrong place, and in his own tribe, he might hope to be in greater ſafety; here he penned his 142d pſalm: and when his brethren and all his father's houſe heard it; that he was come thither: they went down thither to him; to viſit and comfort him, counſel and aſſiſt him all they could; and chiefly to ſecure themſelves from the rage and malice of Saul, who they might fear would fall upon them, and avenge himſelf on them for David's ſake.

℣. 2. And every one that was in diſtreſs, &c.] In ſtraitened circumſtances, through the oppreſſion of men, through poverty, and afflictive providences in their families: and every one that was in debt; and not able to pay their debts, and whoſe creditors were preſſing upon them: and every one that was diſcontented; with Saul's government and conduct: or bitter in ſoul[x]; diſtreſſed and uneaſy in their minds, being pinched with want, or preſſed with ſore afflictions, which made them very diſconſolate: theſe gathered themſelves unto him; to help him, or rather to be helped by him; hoping in time things would take a favourable turn with him, and he ſhould be advanced to the throne, and ſo their circumſtances would be mended thereby: and he became a captain over them; they enliſted themſelves in his ſervice, and he took the command of them; he might not know the circumſtances of thoſe in debt, nor of any of them thoroughly, nor their views in joining him; however he meant not to ſhelter them from paying their juſt debts if able, nor to encourage them in diſloyalty to their king, only to make uſe of them for his own preſervation for the preſent. In this he was a type of Chriſt, who receives ſinners diſtreſſed with a ſenſe of ſin, diſcontented in their preſent ſtate, and in debt, and unable to pay their debts; ſee Matt. xi. 28. Luke vii. 41, 42. and xv. 2. and there were with him about 400 men; among whom ſome think were the three mighty men ſpoken of in 2 Sam. xxiii. 13, 14. 1 Chron. xi. 15, 16.

℣. 3. And David went thence to Mizpeh of Moab, &c.] So called to diſtinguiſh it from a place of the ſame name in the land of Iſrael; which Junius ſays is the ſame with Malle, and ſignifies a fortified place, and refers to 1 Maccab. v. 26. here he might think himſelf ſafer, though in an enemy's country, than in the land of Iſrael: and he ſaid unto the king of Moab, let my father and my mother I pray thee come forth; out of the land of Iſrael, or out of the cave of Adullam, whither they were come to him: and be with you; if not with the king of Moab at his court, yet in ſome part or other of his country, where they might be ſafe from the rage of Saul: till I know what God will do for me; on whoſe power and providence he wholly relied, and not upon the men that flocked to him, nor upon his own power and policy, courage, and wiſdom; he knew the promiſe of God to him, and he put his truſt in him for the performance of it; but knew not the time, nor way, and manner, in which it would be performed; and expected in the mean while to be obliged to remove from place to place; and conſidering that his aged parents were not fit for ſuch quick and ſudden motions, and long flights, he provided as well as he could for their ſettlement; which was an inſtance of his filial affection for them, and piety towards them. His father's name is well known, Jeſſe, but his mother's name is no-where mentioned; the Jews ſay her name was Natzbet, the daughter of Adal[y].

℣. 4. And he brought them before the king of Moab, &c.] Having leave from him for it, and left them with him; ſo the Targum, "cauſed them to remain before him:" and they dwelt with him all the while that David was in the hold; either in the cave of Adullam, as ſome think; or rather at Mizpeh in Moab, which might be a fortified place; or the ſenſe may be, whilſt he was in any hold in thoſe parts, as he might go from one to another; what became of David's parents afterwards, we no where elſe read. The Jews[z] ſay the king of Moab ſlew his father and his mother, and his brethren, all but one, whom Nabaſh the Ammonite preſerved; and is the kindneſs David ſpeaks of 2 Sam. x. 2. and if this was the caſe, now it was that his father and mother forſook him, and God took him up, Pſ. xxvii. 10.

℣. 5. And the prophet Gad ſaid unto David, &c.] Who either accompanied him in his exile, or was ſent unto him on this account, being one of the company of the prophets, over whom Samuel was preſident, ch. xix. 20. abide not in the hold, depart and get thee into the land of Judah; this ſeems to confirm it that the hold David was in was not the cave of Adullam, becauſe that was in the tribe of Judah; but rather ſome hold in the land of Moab, which he is directed by the prophet to quit, and go into the country of Judah, his own tribe, where Saul would not be ſo forward to purſue him, and where he would be among his friends, and in the way upon Saul's death to be anointed king over Judah; beſides appearing more openly would ſhew the innocence of his cauſe, and his confidence in the Lord, more than to lurk about in a foreign land: then David departed from Mizpeh in Moab; or however from the hold in which he was: and came into the foreſt of Hareth; where he would have places and opportunity enough to hide himſelf as he ſaw fit. Jerom[a] ſpeaks of a village called Arath, where David abode, to the weſt of Jeruſalem. Kimchi ſays this was a dry barren place, but for the ſake of David it was made by the Lord a well watered and fruitful one.

℣. 6. When Saul heard that David was diſcovered, and the men that were with him, &c.] That it

[x] מר נפש amarus animo, Pagninus, Montanus. Bemidbar Rabba, §. 14. fol. 212. 1. Tanchuma apud Jarchium in loc.

[y] T. Bab. Bava Bathrâ, fol. 91. 1.

[z] Be-

[a] De loc. Heb. fol. 88. L.

was known where David was, and what number of men were gathered to him, and that they now openly appeared in the tribe of Judah; for some time Saul had heard nothing of him, but now a report had reached his ears, that David was in arms, and at the head of a number of men; which now greatly alarmed Saul, and possessed him with fears and jealousies of his people, and all about him: now Saul abode in Gibeah, under a tree in Ramah; this was Gibeah of Saul, and in or near which was a place called Ramah, or an high place, as the word signifies, on which was a remarkable tree, and under that Saul abode, being a proper shelter for him from any inclemency of the weather; for this was not Ramah where Samuel dwelt, though the Jews in the Talmud [b] so think, and metaphorically understand the tree in it of Samuel in Ramah praying for him, by means of which he continued two years in the height of his kingdom; but this was a tree in a literal sense. R. Jonah [c] says it is possible it might be the same which in Arabia is called Ethel, and is like to a tamarisk-tree: having his spear in his hand; ready to defend himself, and revenge his enemies; or rather which he held as a sceptre in his hand; see the note on ch. xx. 33. and all his servants were standing about him; in reverence of him, and honour to him, waiting upon him, and ready to obey his orders; these were his courtiers, or his guards, or both.

℣. 7. Then Saul said unto his servants that stood about him, &c.] He took this opportunity of addressing them in the following manner, upon the report of David being at the head of a certain number of men: hear now ye Benjamites; for Saul being of the tribe of Benjamin, his courtiers and his body-guards chiefly, if not altogether, consisted of persons of that tribe; and therefore as they were under obligation to him, and ought to abide by him, and adhere closely to him, so it was the more ungrateful in them, as he thought, not to be concerned for his honour and interest: will the son of Jesse give every one of you fields and vineyards; as Saul had done, or was capable of doing, and would do if they were faithful to him; whereas it was not in the power of David, whom in contempt he calls the son of Jesse, to do it; and even should he ever be king, and in his power to make such donations, it can't be thought he would give them to them, but to the favourites of his own tribe: and make you all captains of thousands and captains of hundreds? which he now could not do, since he had with him but 400 men in all; and should his army increase, and the kingdom come into his hands, so far would all of them be from being advanced to posts in the army, that it was probable none of them would, but those of his own tribe and party.

℣. 8. That all of you have conspired against me, &c.] For though they had not revolted from him, and been guilty of overt-acts of treason, yet since they did not discover to him what he supposed they knew, and shewed no concern for the circumstances in which he was, he interpreted this a conspiracy against him: and there is none that sheweth me, that my son hath made a league with the son of Jesse; Saul did not know this certainly, he only suspected it from the strict and close friendship between them, and imagined that some of his servants were acquainted with it, though they kept it from him; whereas none knew of it, but Jonathan and David themselves: and there is none of you that is sorry for me; concerned, troubled, and grieved, that he should be in such circumstances, his own son and his son-in-law in league against him: or, as De Dieu renders it, were not solicitous for him, cared not how things went with him, or against him: or sheweth unto me that my son hath stirred up my servant against me to lie in wait, as at this day; which he concluded was the case, from Jonathan's not appearing at court, since Saul cast the javelin at him; or however if he did, his countenance shewed he was uneasy and discontented, and displeased with Saul; and besides he could not think that David with such a handful of men he had with him, would ever attempt to invade his kingdom, and seize his crown and throne, unless he was privately encouraged by his own son; and David's being either in the cave of Adullam, or forest of Hareth, which ever of them Saul heard of, he interpreted as lying in wait for him, whereas it was only for the security of himself; and what Saul took ill of his servants was, that none of them apprized him of his son's concern in this matter.

℣. 9. Then answered Doeg the Edomite, &c.] Josephus [d] calls him a Syrian, and so the Septuagint version; see ch. xxi. 7. being full of enmity to David, and willing to curry favour with Saul, and eager of further preferment, which Saul seemed to promise; and being more forward than the rest of his servants, prevented them and spoke first: (which was set over the servants of Saul); over his herdsmen; see ch. xxi. 7. and said, I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob to Ahimelech the son of Ahitub; in imitation of Saul, he calls David by way of contempt the son of Jesse; and signifies that what he had to say of him was not by report, but he himself was an eye-witness of his coming to Nob, a city of the priests, and to Ahimelech the high-priest there, and of what passed between them.

℣. 10. And he enquired of the Lord for him, &c.] Which not being expressed before, some have taken it to be a lie of Doeg's, he being charged with lying by David, Ps. lii. 3, 4. and cxx. 2, 3. but it is not at all improbable that David should desire him to enquire of the Lord for him, and that he did; and he seems to acknowledge it, ℣. 15. but according to the Jewish writers Doeg meant by this to prove a charge of treason both against David and Ahimelech; that the former made himself king, and the latter owned him to be so, since enquiry by Urim and Thummim was not made for a private person, but for a king [e]: and gave him victuals; hallowed bread, loaves of shew-bread, which none but priests might eat of; such was his kindness to him: and gave him the sword of Goliath the Philistine; which David took from him, and slew him with it. All this was true, but then he acted the deceitful part, with which he is charged in the above psalms, in not declaring how David had imposed upon the priest, by pretending he was sent in haste on the king's business; which was the reason he was so ill provided with servants, food, and armour; which if Doeg had reported faithfully, as he ought to have done, would have saved the credit and life of the priest, and of his family.

℣. 11. Then the king sent to call Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, &c.] Sent messengers to him, and summoned him to appear before him: and all his father's house; the family of Eli, which God had threatened to destroy, and now the time was hastening on: the priests that were in Nob; in which dwelt none but priests, at least these were the

[b] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 5. 2. [c] Apud Ben Melech in loc. [d] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 12. §. 1, 4. [e] Misn. Yoma, c. 7. §. 5.

the chief of the inhabitants, and therefore called the city of the priests, ℣. 19. and they came all of them to the king; not being conscious of any evil they had committed, or that could be charged upon them; or otherwise they would not have appeared, but would have fled to David for protection.

℣. 12. And Saul said, hear now, thou son of Ahitub, &c.] The charge exhibited against him; in contempt of him, he does not so much as call him by his name, nor give him the title of his office, as high-priest; though he was the second person in the kingdom, and to whose office a few years ago the civil government was annexed: and he answered, here I am, my Lord; giving due honour to Saul, though he received none from him, and appearing with great boldness, as having a clear conscience, and so ready to hear what was to be said unto him.

℣. 13. And Saul said unto him, why have ye conspired against me, thou, and the son of Jesse? &c.] No less than treason and rebellion is he charged with, in conjunction with David; the proof follows: in that thou hast given him bread and a sword; the shew-bread, and the sword of Goliath, and so had furnished him with food and arms; one that he suggests was in rebellion against him, and therefore he must be involved in the same crime; but the stronger proof follows: and hast enquired of God for him, that he should rise against me, to lie in wait as at this day; enquired of the Lord for him by Urim and Thummim, to know his mind in this affair, and thereby encouraged him to rise up in rebellion against him, and to lie in wait, as he did at the present time, watching for an opportunity to seize his crown and kingdom.

℣. 14. Then Ahimelech answered the king and said, &c.] First with respect to David, and then with regard to himself; with respect to David as follows, and who is so faithful amongst thy servants as David; I considered him, as if he should say, as a servant of thine, upon an errand of thine, and doing thy business; and as a faithful one, none more so, and as such I valued and regarded him, not as a rebel to thee, having no such thought of him: which is the king's son-in-law; who has behaved himself so well, and thou hast entertained such an opinion of him, as to take him into thy family, and marry thy daughter to him; wherefore shewing him favour, and doing him honour, was doing honour to thee and thy family, and surely there can be no blame in that: and goeth at thy bidding; has always been ready to execute thy commands, and obey thine orders, let them be what they will; as to go out against an enemy, and fight Saul's battles for him: and is honourable in thine house; behaved honourably there, and highly esteemed by all, as well as had the honour bestow'd upon him to be the king's son-in-law, and made captain of a thousand; and therefore who could think that shewing respect to such a man could be deemed treason and conspiracy, or he be thought to be a traitor to the king? and then with respect to himself he answers.

℣. 15. Did I then begin to enquire of God for him? &c.] Was this the first time of enquiring of God for him? no; I have done this many a time, when he has been going upon the king's business, engaging in war with his enemies; he has then consulted the Lord by me, and I have enquired of the Lord for him, as I now did; and which I did as innocently, and as much for the king's service, as ever I did any. Kimchi observes it may be read without the interrogation, that day I began to enquire of God for him; it was the first time I ever did, and I did not know it would have been grievous to thee, or have given thee any disturbance or uneasiness. I did not know that he fled from thee, or was not in thy service, and upon thy business; had I known it. I would never have done it, and as it is the first time it shall be the last: be it far from me; from doing such a thing, had I known it to be disagreeable to thee, or how David stood with thee: let not the king impute any thing unto his servant, nor to all the house of my father; charge me or them with the crime of treason, or conspiracy against him, or with aiding, assisting, and abetting traitors and conspirators: for thy servant knew nothing of all this, less or more; was entirely ignorant of this affair; which plain, honest account of things, one might have thought would have been satisfying to Saul; but it seems it was not by what follows.

℣. 16. And the king said, thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech, &c.] He pronounces the sentence himself, without taking the opinion and advice of others, or farther time; which was an act of arbitrary power, and upon an innocent person, which was an act of great injustice: thou and all thy father's house; more unrighteous still; but God suffered him to do this to fulfil his will, and execute his threatenings against the house of Eli, which was this priest's father's house, for former wickedness; but this is no excuse for, nor extenuation of the sin of Saul.

℣. 17. And the king said unto the footmen that stood about him, &c.] Or the runners[f]; the running footmen, that used to run before him when he went out from place to place, and were here waiting on him, ready to set out whenever he should give the orders to go elsewhere. The tradition of the Jews is, that these were Abner and Amasa[g]; but as Kimchi observes, they were not footmen, but princes, captains in the army, and the first of them the general of it: turn and slay the priests of the Lord; he owns them to be the priests of the Lord, and calls them so, and yet gave orders to put them to death, though innocent; one would have thought this their character would have flown in his face, and stung his conscience, and deterred him from so foul a fact: because their hand also is with David; as well as Ahimelech; which did not at all appear, nor that they had so much as seen him at Nob, only Ahimelech; and still less that they had entered into a conspiracy with him: and because they knew when he fled, and did not shew it to me; which also was false; they knew nothing of the flight of David, and therefore could not discover it to the king: but the servants of the king would not put forth their hand to fall upon the priests of the Lord; their consciences would not suffer them to do it; they refused to obey the king's orders, and chose rather to expose themselves to his resentment, than to be guilty of such a crime. Saul's footmen had more sense of honour, justice, and truth, than he himself had, and were worthy of praise; but they would have been deserving of more, if they could not have prevailed upon him by intreaties and remonstrances to have forborne such a bloody execution, instead of being the tame spectators of it, they had taken him, and bound him him as a madman, and ſo facilitated the eſcape of the prieſts, and prevented this ſhocking ſcene of wickedneſs.

[f] רצים cursoribus, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.
[g] Midrash Tillim apud Abarbinel. in loc.

℣. 18. And the king ſaid to Doeg, turn thou and fall upon the prieſts, &c.] For determined he was they ſhould die; if one would not put them to death, another ſhould, and who ſo fit for this bloody work as the falſe accuſer of them, and falſe witneſs againſt them: and Doeg the Edomite turned; immediately, he at once obeyed the king's orders, as bruitiſh as they were: and fell upon the prieſts; with his ſword in hand: and ſlew on that day 85 perſons that did wear a linen ephod; not the ephod of Urim and Thummim, which was only worn by the high-prieſt, but a garment wholly linen worn by common prieſts; the Targum is, "who are fit to be clothed with a linen ephod;" not that they were clothed with it, but were deſerving of it; or it deſigns the great and more honourable among the ſervants of the Lord, as Kimchi obſerves, for ſuch were clothed with this garment, as Samuel and David; and he thinks it ſuggeſts, that more were ſlain than theſe; and the Septuagint verſion makes them to be 305, and Joſephus [h] 385; in the ſlaying of whom, as the ſame writer ſays, Doeg was aſſiſted by ſome wicked men like himſelf; and the ſlaughter did not end here, as the next verſe ſhews.

℣. 19. And Nob, the city of the prieſts, ſmote he with the edge of the ſword, &c.] Either Doeg or Saul; who, as Joſephus [i] ſays, ſent men thither to ſlay all the inhabitants of it: both men and women, children and ſucklings; not ſparing ſex nor age: and oxen, and aſſes, and ſheep, with the edge of the ſword; Saul, who was ſo tender-hearted and merciful in the caſe of the Amakelites, when his orders from the Lord were utterly to deſtroy them, that he ſpared their king, and the beſt of their cattle, yet now ſo cruel to a city of the prieſts, as to deſtroy all the inhabitants of it, and cattle in it; and yet this bloody affair of Saul's is not taken notice of afterwards, only his ſlaughter of the Gibeonites, 2 Sam. xxi. 1. and Abarbinel is of opinion, that the inhabitants of this place were Gibeonites, who were hewers of wood, and drawers of water to the houſe of the Lord here. Now Saul was the more ſevere on this city, to deter others from joining with David, who, if they did, muſt expect the ſame treatment.

℣. 20. And one of the ſons of Ahimelech, the ſon of Ahitub, named Abiathar, eſcaped, &c.] Who very probably was left by his father to take care of the ſanctuary, and the holy things in it, when he and the reſt of the prieſts were ſummoned to appear before Saul; who having heard of his bloody execution of them, before his meſſengers could get to Nob, took the ephod, with the Urim and Thummim, and made his eſcape, as appears from ch. xxiii. 6—9. this man ſucceeded his father in the high-prieſthood, and continued in it until the times of Solomon: and fled after David; who was now removed, or removing from the foreſt of Hareth to Keilah, whither Abiathar followed him, and came to him there, ch. xxiii. 6. and with whom only he could be ſafe, and therefore it was right to flee unto him.

℣. 21. And Abiathar ſhewed David that Saul had ſlain the Lord's prieſts.] Of which perhaps he had not as yet heard; though tidings of ſuch a nature generally fly ſwiftly; and a ſorrowful, ſhocking account he had to give, and which was ſo to David.

℣. 22. And David ſaid unto Abiathar, I knew it that day, &c.] That is, he thought in his mind at that time: when Doeg the Edomite was there at Nob; in the tabernacle, at the ſame time that David was there: that he would ſurely tell Saul; that he ſaw David there, and what paſſed between him and Ahimelech; he knew he was a ſpiteful, miſchievous man; that he was a true Edomite, though a proſelyte, and bore hatred and enmity in his mind againſt an Iſraelite, and eſpecially an Iſraelite indeed, as David was: I have occaſioned the death of all the perſons of thy father's houſe; or have been the cauſe of all the evils that befel them, and the death they were put unto, not with deſign but by accident; and it grieved him, that he ſhould be any ways an acceſſory thereunto, though without intention.

℣. 23. Abide thou with me, fear not, &c.] He appeared to be in a fright; which is not to be wondered at, as not knowing what to do, and where to go and provide for his ſafety; when to allay his fears, and make him eaſy, David invites and encourages him to ſtay with him, and not be afraid of Saul, nor any other: for he that ſeeketh my life, ſeeketh thy life; or, as Kimchi obſerves, it may be interpreted, my life he ſeeks, who ſeeks thy life; we are in the ſame circumſtances, and have the ſame common enemy, and therefore it is beſt and ſafeſt to be together; as the Targum, "he that ſeeks to kill me, ſeeks to kill thee;" and as Jarchi adds, he that loves me, will love thee, and he that keeps my life, will keep thine: but with me thou ſhalt be in ſafe-guard; intimating, that he would be as careful of him as of himſelf; and that for this reaſon, as Ben Gerſom ſuggeſts, becauſe he brought the Ephod with the Urim and Thummim with him, by which he could enquire of God for him; but this was the thing David was confident of, that God would preſerve him, and raiſe him to the kingdom, and therefore Abiathar might be ſure of ſafety with him: at this time he penned the 52[d] pſalm, which ſhows the frame of ſpirit he was now in.

CHAP. XXIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of David's relieving Keilah, when it had like to have fallen into the hands of the Philiſtines, ℣. 1—6. and of Saul's deſign to ſurprize him there, which David having notice of, and enquiring of the Lord, departed from thence; which when Saul heard of, he forbore to come forth, ℣. 7—13. and of David's being in the wilderneſs of Ziph, where, in a wood there he had an interview with Jonathan, ℣. 14—18. and of the Ziphites offering to deliver him up to Saul, for which he commends them, and gives them inſtructions how they ſhould behave to him in that affair, ℣. 19—23. and of his ſeeking him in the wilderneſs of Maon, where David and his men were in great danger of being taken; which was prevented by the news of the Philiſtines invading the land coming to Saul juſt at the nick of time, ℣. 24—29.

℣. 1.

[h] Antiq. l. 6. c. 12. §. 6.

[i] Ibid.

℣. 1. Then they told David, &c.] Either the men of Keilah ſent to him, being near them, or ſome well-wiſhers of theirs, and of their country, acquainted him with their caſe: behold, the Philiſtines fight againſt Keilah; had laid ſiege to it, being a fortified place, ℣. 7. it was a city in the tribe of Judah, on the borders of the Philiſtines; of which ſee the note on Joſh. xv. 44. and they rob the threſhing-floors; took away the corn upon them, which they were threſhing and winnowing, which were uſually done without the city for the ſake of wind, ſee Judg. vi. 11. Ruth. iii. 2, 15. it was harveſt-time when the three mighty men came to David in the cave of Adullam, and ſo now it might be the time of threſhing, harveſt being over, ſee ch. xxii. 1. compared with 2 Sam. xxiii. 13.

℣. 2. Therefore David enquired of the Lord, ſaying, ſhall I go and ſmite theſe Philiſtines? &c.] For though David was well diſpoſed to ſerve his country, and was deſirous of freeing them from their enemies the Philiſtines, he might have ſome doubts in his mind whether it would be right for him to engage with them now; partly becauſe he could not act under a commiſſion from his prince, Saul the king; and partly becauſe he had ſuch a ſmall number of forces with him, that it might be hazardous for him to attack the armies of the Philiſtines with them, and attempt to raiſe the ſiege of Keilah; and therefore he thought it adviſeable, as doubtleſs it was, to enquire of the Lord what was his mind and will in this matter: how and by what means he enquired, it is not ſaid, very probably it was by the prophet Gad, who was with him, ch. xxii. 5. for as for Abiathar, he was not yet come with the Ephod, the Urim and Thummim, to enquire by them, ℣. 6. though ſome think that is obſerved there to ſhew in what way David did enquire, namely, by Urim and Thummim; and ſo Kimchi and Abarbinel underſtand it; and it is ſuppoſed that he came to David when he was about Keilah, and near unto it, and ſo before he came thither, and time enough for him to enquire by him, whether he ſhould go thither or no: and the Lord ſaid unto David, go, and ſmite the Philiſtines, and ſave Keilah; which was not only giving him leave to go, and ſignifying it was his mind and will he ſhould; but that he ſhould be ſucceſsful, and rout the Philiſtines, and raiſe the ſiege of Keilah, and ſave the city from falling into their hands.

℣. 3. And David's men ſaid unto him, behold, we be afraid here in Judah, &c.] Of Saul and his army falling upon them, and cruſhing them, tho' they were in the tribe of Judah, where they had many friends, and in the heart of that tribe: how much more then if we come to Keilah; which, tho' in the ſame tribe, yet in the farther parts of it, and on the borders of the Philiſtines: and there engage againſt the armies of the Philiſtines; too numerous and powerful for them, and ſo by this means be driven out of their place of ſafety, the foreſt of Hareth, where they could hide themſelves upon occaſion; to be expoſed not only to the Philiſtines, before them, on the edge of their country, from whence they could have ſuccours eaſily, but to Saul and his army behind them; and ſo being between two fires, would be in danger of being cut off.

℣. 4. Then David enquired of the Lord yet again, &c.] Not for his own ſake, who firmly believed it was the will of God he ſhould go and ſucceed, but for the ſake of his men, and to remove the doubts and fears that hung on their minds: and the Lord anſwered him and ſaid, ariſe, go down to Keilah; immediately, make no ſtay, nor heſitate about it, but go with all haſte to the relief of the place: for I will deliver the Philiſtines into thine hands; which is ſtill more explicit, and is a promiſe not only of delivering Keilah out of the hands of the Philiſtines, but of delivering them into David's hands, and ſo of an entire victory; and therefore none of David's men had any thing to fear after ſuch a declaration of the will of God.

℣. 5. So David and his men went to Keilah, &c.] Animated by a commiſſion from God, and a promiſe of ſucceſs by him: and fought with the Philiſtines; encamped before Keilah: and brought away their cattle; which they had brought with them for the ſupport of their army; or having routed them, they purſued them into their own country, and brought off their cattle from thence: and ſmote them with a great ſlaughter; killed great numbers of them, and put the reſt to flight: ſo David ſaved the inhabitants of Keilah; from falling into the hands of the Philiſtines, by timely raiſing the ſiege of the city.

℣. 6. And it came to paſs when Abiathar the ſon of Ahimelech fled to David to Keilah, &c.] Either when he was there, or near the place: that he came down with an ephod in his hand, not with a linen ephod on his back, which the prieſts in common wore, but the ephod with the Urim and Thummim in his hand, which was peculiar to the high-prieſt; and his father the high-prieſt being dead, it belonged to him, and therefore he took care to bring it with him; though the words may be literally rendered, the ephod came down in his hand [k], as it were by chance, and not with deſign; and ſo ſome Jewiſh interpreters [l] underſtand it, that in his fright and flight, among his garments and other things he took hold of to carry with him, and not minding well what he took, this happened to be, being ſo ordered by the providence of God; tho' the Targum renders it, "the ephod he made to deſcend in his hand," or brought it in his hand; and ſo Kimchi and Abarbinel obſerve it may be interpreted, though they ſeem to incline to the other ſenſe.

℣. 7. And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah, &c.] No doubt it was told him what he came thither for, to relieve it, and deliver it out of the hands of the Philiſtines, and what ſucceſs he had; which one would have thought would have reconciled his mind to him, and made him think well of them; but inſtead of that, it only led him to contrive miſchief againſt him: and Saul ſaid, God hath delivered him into mine hand; as if the ſucceſs he had given to David was againſt him, and in favour of Saul: for he is ſhut in, by entring into a town that hath gates and bars; whilſt he betook himſelf to caves, and fields, and woods, he had no great hopes of finding him out, and coming up with him, and ſeizing him; but now he had got into a fortified place, encloſed with walls, and that had gates to it, kept bolted and barred; when he brought his army againſt it, and ſurrounded it, he imagined he would not be able to get out, and eſcape his hands.

℣. 8. And Saul called all the people together to war, &c.] Or cauſed them to hear [m], ſummoned them by an herald, whom he ſent into all parts of the the kingdom to proclaim war, and require them in his name to attend him; which was the prerogative of a king to do: to go down to Keilah, to beſiege David and his men; that was what he privately intended, but the pretence was to make war againſt the Philiſtines.

[k] אפוד ירד בידו Ephod deſcendit in manu ſua, Pagninus, Montanus; Ephod deſcendebat in manu ſua, Munſterus; ſo Tigurine verſion and Piſcator. [l] Kimchi & Ben Melech. [m] ישמע fecit audire, Montanus, Piſcator.

℣. 9. And David knew that Saul ſecretly practiſed miſchief againſt him, &c.] That is, plotted and contrived it, formed ſchemes in order to do him miſchief, giving out one thing, and deſigning another; ſo he pretended war againſt the Philiſtines, but his intention was to come againſt Keilah, and take David there: and he ſaid to Abiathar the prieſt, bring hither the ephod; not for David to put on, but for the prieſt himſelf, that being clothed with it, and the Urim and Thummim in it, he might enquire for him of the Lord.

℣. 10. Then ſaid David, &c.] By the prieſt, for it was he that put the queſtions for and in the name of the enquirer: O Lord God of Iſrael; the great Jehovah, the Covenant-God of his people, who always has a merciful regard unto them: thy ſervant hath certainly heard; had good information of it, on which he could depend: that Saul ſeeketh to come to Keilah; that was his intention and reſolution: to deſtroy the city for my ſake; to beſiege it, and demoliſh it, if that was neceſſary, in order to take him.

℣. 11. Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hands? will Saul come down as thy ſervant hath heard? &c.] That is, if David continued there, which is the ſuppoſition all proceeds upon. The queſtions are not orderly put, as may eaſily be obſerved, the laſt ſhould have been firſt; which ſhows ſome perturbation of mind David was in upon hearing the deſign of Saul againſt him: O Lord God of Iſrael, I beſeech thee, tell thy ſervant; give an anſwer by Urim and Thummim, as he did: and the Lord ſaid, he will come down; if David abode there; that was in his thoughts, in his purpoſe and deſign, which the Lord, being omniſcient, full well knew, who knows all future contingencies: hence the Jews[n] gather, that two things are not to be aſked together; and if they are aſked, only anſwer is made to one, and the anſwer is only made to that which it was proper to aſk firſt; and that which is aſked out of order ſhould be aſked again, which was the caſe here, as follows.

℣. 12. Then ſaid David, will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? &c.] That is, the lords and great men of the place, the governor of the city, and the heads of it, the chief magiſtrates in it: and the Lord ſaid, they will deliver thee up; that is, provided he ſtayed there; for the Lord knew the diſpoſitions and affections of their minds, that they were inclined to do it, and would do it, if he continued among them till Saul came down; which ſhewed the great ingratitude of this people to their deliverer.

℣. 13. Then David and his men, which were about 600, &c.] Having had an increaſe of 200 ſince he was at the cave of Adullam, and upon his relief of Keilah; ſo that he ſuſtained no loſs of men by fighting with the Philiſtines, but had an addition to his ſmall forces: aroſe and departed out of Keilah, and went whitherſoever they could go; not knowing whither they ſhould go, having no particular place in view; but went where they thought they could be ſafeſt, or that appeared the moſt proper place for them; ſo the Targum, "they went to a place which was fit to go unto;" which was fitteſt for their purpoſe, and moſt for their ſafety and ſecurity, be it where it would: and it was told Saul that David was eſcaped from Keilah; very likely ſome of the inhabitants informed him of it, ſince they were diſpoſed to deliver David to him, had he ſtayed among them, and Saul had come down: and he forbore to go forth; from the place where he was, in order to come to Keilah.

℣. 14. And David abode in the wilderneſs in ſtrong holds, &c.] In the wilderneſs of Ziph, in high and ſtrong rocks there, as it ſeems to be explained by what follows: and remained in a mountain in the wilderneſs of Ziph; which had its name from a city in the tribe of Judah, of which ſee the note on Joſh. xv. 55. and Saul ſought him every day; for though he did not go forth from the place where he was to Keilah, yet hearing which way he went, and whereabout he lurked, he ſought after him continually, if haply he might find him: but God delivered him not into his hand; which ſuggeſts, that it was only the providence of God that ſecured him, or, in all probability, ſuch was the diligence of Saul, that he would have found him out, and he muſt have fallen into his hands, as he expected.

℣. 15. And David ſaw that Saul was come out to ſeek his life, &c.] Either he ſaw him with his bodily eyes from the top of the mountain where he was, ℣. 14. or he perceived, he underſtood by informations given him by his friends, it may be by Jonathan, or by ſpies he ſent to obſerve his motions: and David was in the wilderneſs of Ziph in a wood; where he and his men could hide themſelves among the trees in it; ſometimes he was in a mountain in this wilderneſs, and ſometimes in a wood, where he thought himſelf the ſafeſt; thus was this great man obliged to ſhift about for his ſafety.

℣. 16. And Jonathan Saul's ſon aroſe, &c.] And came from Gibeah, which, according to Bunting[o], was 22 miles from the place where David was: and went to David into the wood; having had intelligence where he was, this being a proper place to have an interview with him privately: and ſtrengthened his hand in God; and his heart too, his hand of faith to lay hold on God, as his Covenant-God, and lean and rely upon him; he ſtrengthened him in his power, and in his providence, and in his promiſes to him; the Targum is, "he ſtrengthened him in the Word of the Lord;" not only in his word and promiſe, but in Chriſt the eſſential Word of God, who ſhould ſpring from him according to the fleſh.

℣. 17. And he ſaid unto him, fear not, &c.] Diſtruſt not the power, providence and promiſes of God, nor dread the wrath of Saul, or fear falling into his hands: for the hand of Saul my father ſhall not find thee; to lay hold on him, ſeize him, and do him any hurt: and thou ſhalt be king over Iſrael; meaning after the death of his father; which he knew either by ſome ſpecial revelation made to him; or rather by being informed he had been anointed by Samuel, and which he had either from Samuel or from David himſelf; and this he moſt firmly believed, though David was now in ſo low a condition: and I ſhall be next unto thee; not ſucceed him in the kingdom, but if living when he came to the throne, he ſhould be the ſecond man in civil affairs, as he now was, and that he ſhould be content with: and that alſo Saul my father knoweth; having knowledge of the anointing of David by Samuel; or he might, and did conclude this from various circumſtances, that David was his neighbour Samuel had told him of, God had given his kingdom to, ch. xv. 28.

℣. 18.

[n] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 73. 1, 2.

[o] Travels, &c. p. 134.

℣. 18. And they two made a covenant before the Lord, &c.] Renewed the covenant they had before made in the name and fear of God, and before him as a witneſs of it. Kimchi and Abarbinel interpret this phraſe, before the Lord, of the covenant being made before Abiathar, with the Urim and Thummim in his hand; and ſo Jerom [p], before Gad the prophet, and Abiathar who wore the ephod: and David abode in the wood; being a proper place for him for ſecrecy and ſafety: and Jonathan went to his houſe; in Gibeah; and theſe two dear and cordial friends never ſaw one another more, as is highly probable.

℣. 19. Then came up the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah, &c.] Who though he had been out in queſt of David, yet was now returned to Gibeah, the place of his reſidence, and where he kept his court; and hither came the Ziphites, the inhabitants of Ziph, in the wilderneſs of which David hid himſelf, with a propoſal to deliver him to Saul; for though they were of the ſame tribe with David, yet being terrified with what Saul had done to Nob, they thought it beſt for their own ſecurity to inform Saul where he was, and make an offer to deliver him to him. Some interpreters, as Kimchi, think, that this was done before Jonathan was with Saul, and ſhould be rendered, the Ziphites had come up to Saul; and hence it is before ſaid, and David ſaw, &c. for he had heard that the Ziphites ſhould ſay to Saul, that David had hid himſelf there; and at this time it was that David wrote the 59th pſalm: ſaying, doth not David hide himſelf with us in the ſtrong holds in the wood; which is in the wilderneſs of Ziph, in their neighbourhood; they were informed he had hid himſelf there, and they thought it their duty to let the king know of it: and particularly in the hill of Hachilah, on the ſouth of Jeſhimon? Hachilah is by Jerom [q] called Echela; and he ſpeaks of a village of that name ſeven miles from Eleutheropolis, and of Jeſhimon as ten miles from Jericho to the ſouth, near the dead ſea; on the top of this hill, which was an aſcent of 30 furlongs, Jonathan the high-prieſt built a caſtle, and called it Maſada, often ſpoken of by Joſephus; who ſays [r], that Herod built a wall about it of ſeven furlongs, twelve cubits high, and eight broad, and thirty-ſeven towers of fifty cubits ſtood in it.

℣. 20. Now therefore, O king, come down, &c.] From Gibeah to Ziph, and the wilderneſs of it, where David was: according to all the deſires of thy ſoul to come down; to ſeize ſuch a prey which he was greatly deſirous of, and of nothing more ſo than of that. According to Abarbinel, the ſenſe is, that the thing was ready in whatever way he ſhould deſire it; if he choſe to come down himſelf, and lay hold on him, they invite him to come down; but if he did not chuſe to come down himſelf, they would ſeize him, and bring him to him, and deliver him up into his hand, and ſo he would be under no neceſſity of going down after him: and our part ſhall be to deliver him into the king's hand; this we will take upon us to do, and ſave the king the trouble of coming down.

℣. 21. And Saul ſaid, bleſſed be ye of the Lord, &c.] He highly commends them for the offer they made to him, bleſſes God for them, and deſires the bleſſing of God upon them for it: for ye have compaſſion on me; pitied him on account of the troubles he met with from his ſon-in-law, were ſorry for him, and ſympathized with him, which others did not, of which he complained, chap. xxii. 8.

℣. 22. Go, I pray you, prepare yet, &c.] That is, go home, return to their habitations, and get things in a greater readineſs for him; enquire more diligently after David, get more intelligence of him, and inform themſelves more exactly about him: and know and ſee his place where his haunt is; or foot [s] is, where that ſteps and walks moſt frequently; not only get knowledge of it by information, but if they could get ſight of it with their own eyes, that they might deſcribe it more exactly: and who hath ſeen him there; not only ſeen the place, but him in the place, and that often, that it may be certain it is the place he uſually reſorts to: for it is told me that he dealeth very ſubtilly; ſometimes he is ſeen in one place, and ſometimes in another; he is here to-day, and elſewhere to-morrow; and by ſuch crafty methods it is not eaſy to know where the place is, and where to be found; this Saul had information of from ſome, who knew the methods David took to keep it unknown where it was; or it ſays to me; my heart ſays ſo to me, as R. Iſaiah interprets it; my mind ſuggeſts this to me, knowing the man, that he uſes ſuch wiles as theſe: or he ſaid to me, ſo Kimchi; when he was with me, and we were intimate, when I uſed to aſk him how he ſmote the Philiſtines, ſo and ſo, and preſerved himſelf from them; his anſwer was, that he dealt very ſubtilly, he uſed a good deal of craftineſs; and ſo I imagine he does now.

℣. 23. See therefore, and take knowledge of all the lurking places where he hideth himſelf, &c.] Which he moſt frequents, that ye may be able to deſcribe them, and the way to them, and eaſily find them when neceſſary: and come ye again to me with the certainty; of time and place, when and where he may be certainly found: and I will go with you; upon ſuch certain intelligence: it is very much he did not ſeize this opportunity, and go directly with them; for by this delay, David being informed of the Ziphites coming to Saul to betray him, had time to depart elſewhere: and it ſhall come to paſs, if he be in the land; in the land of Iſrael, or rather in the land that is in the tribe of Judah: that I will ſearch him throughout all the thouſands of Judah; through all the diviſions of that tribe, which, as others, were divided into thouſands, ſee Mic. v. 2.

℣. 24. And they aroſe, and went to Ziph, before Saul, &c.] Not before his perſon, as if he went with them, and they before him leading the way; but they went thither before he went, to prepare things more exactly, and with more certainty, before he came, and in order to return to him again and go with him: but David and his men were in the wilderneſs of Maon; for by the time the Ziphites returned home, David had intelligence of their deſign, and therefore removed from the wilderneſs of Ziph to the wilderneſs of Maon; which though in the ſame tribe, was a diſtinct place; ſee the note on Joſh. xv. 55. in the plain on the ſouth of Jeſhimon; the ſame as in ℣. 19. only David was now farther to the ſouth of it, and in a plain, whereas before he was on an hill.

℣. 25.

[p] Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 76. K. [q] De loc. Heb. fol. 91. C. [r] De bello Jud. l. 7. c. 8. §. 3. Vid. Adrichom. Theatrum T. S. p. 38. 2. & 39. 1. [s] רגלו pes ejus, Pagninus, Montanus.

℣. 25. And Saul alſo and his men went to ſeek him, &c.] Whether the Ziphites returned to him with better intelligence, or ſent him word where David was, is not ſaid, however Saul with his army came out in ſearch of him: and they told David; or it was told him, that Saul was come in queſt of him: wherefore he came down into a rock; either into a cave, in it, or he came down from the hill Hachilah to a plain or valley, in order to go up to a rock, the ſame with the mountain in the next verſe: and abode in the wilderneſs of Maon; in which was the rock or mountain he came to: and when Saul heard that, he purſued after David in the wilderneſs of Maon; for upon the intelligence of the Ziphites, he came out to ſeek for him in the wilderneſs of Ziph, but hearing that he was removed to the wilderneſs of Maon, he purſued him there.

℣. 26. And Saul went on this ſide of the mountain, and David and his men on that ſide of the mountain, &c.] Saul with his army came to the very mountain where David and his men were, the one was on one ſide of it, and the other on the other ſide; there was only one mountain between them: and David made haſte to get away for fear of Saul; he fled on one ſide of the mountain, whilſt Saul was purſuing him on the other, and haſtening to get round unto him: for Saul and his men compaſſed David and his men round about to take them; he took methods by dividing his troops, and ſending them different ways to ſurround David and his men, and had very near effected it.

℣. 27. But there came a meſſenger unto Saul, &c.] From his court, by order of his council there; though the Jews [t] ſay it was an angel from heaven; but be it which it will, it was certainly the providence of God that directed this affair, that a meſſenger ſhould come to Saul juſt at that very time, that David was like to fall into his hands: ſaying, haſte thee, and come, for the Philiſtines have invaded the land; were come into it, and ſpread themſelves in it, as the word ſignifies, which expreſſes their numbers they had poured in, the force they came with, and the poſſeſſions they had already got; perhaps they had taken the advantage of Saul's departure in queſt of David, to penetrate into the tribe of Benjamin, where his patrimony, reſidence and court were, and which were liable to fall into their hands; and therefore his preſence was immediately required, and haſte was neceſſary.

℣. 28. Therefore Saul returned from purſuing after David, &c.] Stopped ſhort at once, as ſoon as ever he received the meſſage: and went againſt the Philiſtines; to ſtop them in their progreſs, and drive them out of his country: therefore they called that place, Selah-hammahlekoth; which ſignifies the rock of diviſions. David and his men, very probably, gave it this name, not only becauſe it divided between Saul and his men, and David and his men, when they were one on one ſide of it, and the other on the other ſide of it; but becauſe Saul was, by the providence of God, divided and ſeparated from David here, whereby he eſcaped falling into his hands. The Targum is, "therefore they called that place the rock of diviſion, the place where the heart of the king was divided to go here and there:" he was divided in his own mind, and at a loſs what to do; he was in two minds, as Jarchi ſays, and did not know which to follow, whether to return and deliver his country from the hands of the Philiſtines, or to purſue and take David; and others repreſent the ſoldiers of Saul as divided, ſome ſaying that ſince the ſon of Jeſſe was juſt falling into their hands, they ſhould not leave him; others, that the war of Iſrael ſhould be regarded before him, who might be found at any time [u].

℣. 29. And David went up from thence, &c.] From the wilderneſs of Maon, having had a narrow eſcape for his life: and dwelt in ſtrong holds in Engedi; another place in the tribe of Judah, and which lay in the wilderneſs of Judah, and from whence that is called the wilderneſs of Engedi; and here Dr. Lightfoot [w] thinks he penned the 63d pſalm, the wilderneſs about Engedi being the moſt deſart of all other places, that being upon the borders of the dead ſea; of this place, ſee the note on Joſh. xv. 62.

CHAP. XXIV.

SAUL being returned from following the Philiſtines, renews his purſuit after David, ℣. 1, 2. and they meeting in a cave, where David had the opportunity of taking away the life of Saul, which his men preſſed him to, yet only cut off the ſkirt of his robe, ℣. 3—8. which, calling after him, he held up to him, to convince him he had his life in his hands, but ſpared it, ℣. 9, 10. upon which he very pathetically reaſons with him about the unreaſonableneſs and unrighteouſneſs of his purſuit after him, to take away his life, ℣. 11—15. which ſo affected Saul, that he confeſſed he was more righteous than he, and owned that the kingdom would be his, and only deſired him to ſwear to him not to cut off his offſpring, which David did, and ſo they parted, ℣. 16—22.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when Saul was returned from following the Philiſtines, &c.] Having, as it ſhould ſeem, got the victory over them, and driven them out of his country, and purſued them to their own: that it was told him, ſaying, behold, David is in the wilderneſs of Engedi; in the ſtrong holds of it, the high rocks and mountains in it, ch. xxiii. 29.

℣. 2. Then Saul took 3000 choſen men out of all Iſrael, &c.] Out of his army, with which he had been purſuing the Philiſtines: and went to ſeek David, and his men, upon the rocks of the wild goats; which were in the wilderneſs of Engedi; thoſe rocks were exceeding high and terrible to look at, full of precipices, and ſo prominent, that to travellers they ſeemed as if they would fall into the adjacent vallies, that it even ſtruck terror into them to look at them; [x] called the rocks of wild goats, becauſe theſe creatures, called from hence rupicapræ, or rock-goats, ſee Job xxxix. 1. delighted to be there; and are, as Pliny [y] ſays, of ſuch prodigious ſwiftneſs, that they will leap from mountain to mountain, and back again at pleaſure; theſe mountains David

[t] Midraſh apud Yalkut in loc. Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 47. & Brocard. in ib.
[u] Ibid.
[w] Works, vol. 1. p. 58.
[x] Adrichom.
[y] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 53.

David and his men chose for safety, and the height and craggedness of them did not deter Saul and his men from seeking him there.

℣. 3. And he came to the sheep-cotes by the way, where was a cave, &c.] For the sheep to be led into at noon, to shelter them from the heat; such was the cave of Polyphemus, observed by Bochart [z], in which sheep and goats lay down and slept; see the note on Zeph. ii. 6. and Saul went in to cover his feet; the Targum is, to do his necessaries; and so Josephus [a]; and the Jewish commentators generally understand it of easing nature; and as the Eastern people used to wear long and loose garments, these, when they performed such an action, they used in modesty to gather them close about them, that no part of the body, their feet, and especially the parts of nature which should be concealed, might be seen; but the Syriac and Arabic versions render it, and there he lay or slept; which suggest, that his going into the cave was in order to take some sleep and rest, when it was usual to cover the feet, both to prevent taking cold, and the private parts of the body being exposed to view; and this accounts better for Saul not hearing David's men in the cave, and for his being insensible of David's cutting off the skirt of his garment, and best agrees with the use of the phrase in Judg. iii. 24. the only place besides this in which it is used; see the note there: and David and his men remained in the sides of the cave; unseen and unobserved by Saul, even 600 of them; nor need this seem strange, since in those parts of the world there were caves exceeding large, made so either by nature or art. Vansleb [b] speaks of a cave in Egypt so extraordinary large, that, without hyperbole, 1000 horse might there draw up in battle-array, and of another larger than that; and Strabo says [c], that towards Arabia and Iturea are mountains difficult to be passed, and in which are deep caves, one of which would hold 4000 men: and as the mouths of these caves were generally narrow, and the farther parts of them large, and also dark, persons at the entrance of them could be seen, when those in the more remote parts could not; and this cave is said to be extremely dark [d]; which accounts for Saul's being seen when he came into the cave, whereas David and his men could not be seen by him.

℣. 4. And the men of David said unto him, &c.] Some of his principal men, who were about him, and near him, such as Joab and Abishai: behold, the day of which the Lord said unto thee; now the time was come that he spoke of to him by Samuel, or Gad, or to himself directly: behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand; and such was Saul, as appeared by his seeking to take away his life; and now he was in the hand of David to take away his life, if he pleased: that thou mayest do to him as it shall seem good unto thee; an opportunity of this kind now offered: then David arose; from that part of the cave in which he was, the farther part of it: and cut off the skirt of Saul's robe privily; unawares to him, and unobserved by him, which might be easily done, if Saul was asleep, and it is probable he was; and by the same way it may be accounted for, that he did not hear the discourse that passed between David and his men.

℣. 5. And it came to pass afterward, that David's heart smote him, &c.] His conscience accused him, and he repented of what he had done: because he had cut off Saul's skirt; which though less than what his servants put him upon, and he might have thoughts of doing, yet was considered by him as a great indignity to his sovereign, and therefore sat uneasy on his mind.

℣. 6. And he said unto his men, &c.] When he returned and brought the skirt of Saul's garment in his hand; or else he said this before that, tho' here mentioned, when they moved it to him to dispatch him, as he had a fair opportunity of doing it: God forbid that I should do this thing unto my master, the Lord's anointed; and which he could not think of but with detestation and abhorrence, since he was his sovereign Lord and master, and he a subject of his, and was anointed by the order of God, and his person sacred: to stretch forth my hand against him; to take away his life; to cut off the skirt of his garment gave him uneasiness, but to slay him, the thought of it was shocking to him: seeing he is the anointed of the Lord; anointed by Samuel to be king, by order of the Lord.

℣. 7. So David stayed his servants with these words, &c.] Or pacified them, as the Targum, and made them quiet and easy in that he had not slain him, and reconciled their minds to his conduct, and restrained them from laying hands on him, by observing to them, that he was the anointed of the Lord: and suffered them not to rise against Saul; to take away his life; he not only argued with them, but laid his commands on them that they should not slay him: but Saul rose up out of the cave, and went on his way; he rose from his sleep, and went out of the cave unhurt, and proceeded on in the way he came to the sheep-cotes, and which led on farther, ℣. 3.

℣. 8. David also arose afterward, &c.] After Saul was gone: and went out of the cave; where he had been all the time that Saul had been in it: and cried after Saul; with a loud voice: my lord the king; by which titles Saul would know that he was called unto: and when Saul looked behind him; to see who it was that called unto him: David stooped with his face to the earth, and bowed: giving reverence and honour to him as a king; see the note on ch. xx. 41.

℣. 9. And David said to Saul, wherefore hearest thou mens words, &c.] The false charges and accusations, that some of Saul's courtiers brought against David, as Doeg the Edomite, and such like sycophants and flatterers, to whom Saul hearkened, and believed what they said, and acted upon it. David chose rather to lay the blame on Saul's courtiers than on himself; and he began with him in this way, the rather to reconcile him to him, and cause him to listen to what he had to say: and represents them as saying to him, behold, David seeketh thy hurt? seeks to take away thy life, and seize upon thy crown and throne; than which nothing was more foreign from him.

℣. 10. Behold, this day thine eyes have seen, &c.] Or may see; there is full proof and evidence of it, and which will be presently shown: how that the Lord had delivered thee to-day into mine hand in the cave; from whence they were both just come: and some bade me kill thee; some of the men that were with David, some of his officers or principal friends put him upon it, having a fair opportunity, and thinking it no evil, since he was his enemy, and sought his life: or it said, kill thee; my heart prompted me to it, that said so at first, as Ben Gersom interprets it; some refer it to God, who in his providence said so, or so it might be underunderſtood by David, as if providence directed him to it, by giving him ſuch an opportunity of doing it: but mine eye ſpared thee; had pity on him, and notwithſtanding the ſuggeſtions of friends, and of his own heart at firſt, or the ſeeming direction of providence, yet he had mercy on him, and forbore ſlaying him: and I ſaid, I will not put forth my hand againſt my lord; and king, whoſe ſubject I am: for he is the Lord's anointed; the Lord has raiſed him to this dignity; inveſted him with the office of a king, and as ſuch I regard him, and therefore have refrained mine hand from him, from hurting him.

[z] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 45. col. 467, 468. [a] Antiq. l. 6. c. 13. §. 4. [b] Relation of a Voyage, p. 227. [c] Geograph. l. 16. p. 520. [d] Le Bruyn's Voyage to the Levant, ch. 51. p. 199.

℣. 11. Moreover, my father, &c.] So he was in a natural ſenſe, as having married his daughter; and in a civil ſenſe, as he was a king, and was, or ought to have been, the father of his country, and to treat his ſubjects as his children, and David among the reſt: ſee, yea ſee, the ſkirt of thy robe in my hand; look on it again and again; view it with the eyes of thy body intently, that thou mayeſt be ſatisfied of it, and behold with the eyes of thy mind and underſtanding, and conſider that I could as eaſily have had thine head in my hand, as the ſkirt of thy robe; and here ſee an inſtance and proof of the integrity and ſincerity of my heart, and cordial affections to thee, and an evidence againſt all the charges and accuſations of my enemies, and that I have no ill deſign upon thy perſon and life, and am far from ſeeking thy hurt, as they ſay: for in that I cut off the ſkirt of thy robe, and killed thee not; not only did that to ſhew that he was in his power, but did not cut off his head, as he could: know thou, and ſee, that there is neither evil nor tranſgreſſion in mine hand; this might be a full conviction to him, that he had no ill, neither in his heart nor hand to do unto him: and I have not ſinned againſt thee; done nothing to offend him, never acted againſt his will, nor diſobeyed any of his commands, or had been guilty of one overt act of treaſon or rebellion, but all the reverſe: yet thou hunteſt my ſoul, to take it; purſued him from place to place, hunted him in the wilderneſſes of Ziph and Maon, and upon the rocks of Engedi, as a partridge on the mountains; and lay in wait for him to kill him, as the Targum: he may be thought to have penned the ſeventh pſalm at this time, or on this occaſion; at leaſt there are ſome paſſages in it, which ſeem to refer to his preſent circumſtances.

℣. 12. The Lord judge between me and thee, &c.] And make it appear who is in the right, and who in the wrong: and the Lord avenge me of thee; if he continued thus to perſecute him: but mine hand ſhall not be upon thee; to kill thee, though it may be in my power again to do it, as it has been; but this I am determined upon, let me ſuffer what I will, I will not lay hands on thee to do thee any hurt, but leave thee with God to requite all the evil done to me by thee.

℣. 13. As ſaith the proverb of the ancients, &c.] It is an old ſaying, has been long in uſe, and may be applied to the preſent caſe; or the proverb of the ancient one; of the oldeſt man, the firſt man Adam, and of all others after him, ſo Kimchi; or of the ancient one of the world, the ancient of days, the Lord himſelf; ſo in the Talmud [d]: wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked; as is a man, ſo are his actions; if he is a wicked man, he'll do wicked things; a corrupt tree brings forth evil fruits, an evil man out of the evil treaſure of his heart brings forth evil things; and as if David ſhould ſay, if I had been the wicked man as I am repreſented, I ſhould have committed wickedneſs; I ſhould have made no conſcience of taking away thy life when it was in my power; but my heart would not ſuffer me to do it: but or and my hand ſhall not be upon thee; as it has not been upon thee, becauſe of the fear of God in me, ſo neither ſhall it be hereafter: or the ſenſe of the proverb may be, the wickedneſs that comes from a wicked man, that will kill him, or be the cauſe of his ruin, or he will be ſlain by wicked men ſuch as himſelf; and this may be thy caſe, O king, unleſs thou repenteſt: but be that as it may, which I leave with the righteous judge, this I am determined on, mine hand ſhall not be upon thee; to take away thy life.

℣. 14. After whom is the king of Iſrael come out? after whom doſt thou purſue? after a dead dog; as David was in the opinion, and according to the repreſentation of his enemies, a dog, vile, men, worthleſs, of no account; a dead dog, whoſe name was made to ſtink through the calumnies caſt upon him; and if a dead dog, then as he was an uſeleſs perſon, and could do no good, ſo neither could he do any hurt, not ſo much as bark, much leſs bite; and therefore it was unworthy of ſo great a prince, a leſſening, a degrading of himſelf, as well as a vain and impertinent thing to purſue after ſuch an one, that was not worthy of his notice, and could do him neither good nor harm: after a flea? a little contemptible animal, not eaſily caught, as it is obſerved by ſome, and when caught good for nothing. David by this ſimile fitly repreſents not only his weakneſs and impotence, his being worthleſs, and of no account, and beneath the notice of ſuch a prince as Saul; but the circumſtances he was in, being obliged to move from place to place, as a flea leaps from one place to another, and is not eaſily taken, and when it is, of no worth and value; ſignifying, that as it was not worth his pains to ſeek after him, ſo it would be to no purpoſe, he ſhould not be able to take him.

℣. 15. The Lord therefore be judge, and judge between me and thee, &c.] Signifying he did not deſire to be judge in his own cauſe, but leave it with God to determine it for him in his providence: and ſee, and plead my cauſe; look with pity upon him, take his cauſe in his hand, plead it, and do him juſtice: and deliver me out of thine hand; which was a prayer of faith, believing he would do it in due time, ſee Pſ. vii. 6, 8, 9, 10, 11.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs when David had made an end of ſpeaking theſe words unto Saul, &c.] And wonderful it is that Saul, ſo full of wrath and fury, and ſo eager of David's life, ſhould ſtand ſtill and hear him out, and not fall upon him; this muſt be owing to the reſtraining providence of God, and to the ſurprize Saul was in at the ſight of David coming out of the cave, whom he expected not; and eſpecially what awed and quieted him, was the ſight of the ſkirt of his robe in his hand, which was a ſure token he had his life in his hand, and ſpared it, which made him liſten attentively to all he ſaid: that Saul ſaid, is this thy voice, my ſon David? he changes his language; before, when he ſpoke of David, it was only the ſon of Jeſſe, now my ſon David, as he was by marriage to his daughter, and as appeared by his filial affection to him; and though he was at ſuch a diſtance from from him, that he was not able to discern his countenance, yet he knew his voice, at least supposed it to be his, as his question implies, and which he might conclude from the whole of his discourse: and Saul lift up his voice, and wept; being affected with the kindness of David to him, and with his deliverance from the danger he was in, and yet without true repentance of his sins; for there may be many tears shed, where there is no real repentance, as in the case of Esau.

[d] T. Bab Maccot, fol. 10. 2.

℣. 17. And he said to David, thou art more righteous than I, &c.] By which it appears he thought himself righteous, though David was more so; the righteousness of David was so glaring, that his enemy himself being judge acknowledges it, but will not confess his own wickedness, having no true sense of sin, nor real sorrow for it: for thou hast rewarded me good; in times past, and now; heretofore in killing Goliath, fighting his battles for him against the Philistines, driving the evil spirit from him, by playing on the harp before him, and now by sparing his life, only cutting off the skirt of his garment, when he could with equal ease have cut off his head: whereas I have rewarded thee evil; in seeking to take away his life at various times, by casting a javelin at him more than once, sending messengers to kill him, and hunting after him from place to place, to take him and slay him.

℣. 18. And thou hast shewed this day how that thou hast dealt well with me, &c.] The cutting off of the skirt of his robe only, when his life was in his hand, was a clear proof and full demonstration of his dealing well with him, and might sufficiently convince him he had no ill design upon him: forasmuch as when the Lord had delivered me into thine hand, thou killedst me not; this was a plain proof and evidence of his kindness to him, which he owns, and also the providence of God in this affair, which had delivered him into the hands of David; by which he might see the Lord was for David, and against him, and might have deterred him from seeking David's hurt hereafter; but it did not.

℣. 19. For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away? &c.] Or in a good way[e], in peace and safety, without doing him any hurt; this is not usual among men, and yet this was the present case; David had found his enemy Saul, which Saul tacitly owns, and yet had let him go well away from him, without hurting him: wherefore the Lord reward thee good, for that thou hast done unto me this day; he does not promise to reward him himself, but prays the Lord to reward him; and had he been sincere in it, he could not have done better for him. Some connect the former clause with this, after this manner, if a man find his enemy, and let him go away, the Lord will reward him, the Lord reward thee, &c. so the Syriac and Arabic versions.

℣. 20. And now, behold, I know well that thou shalt surely be king, &c.] Not merely by the common report, that he was anointed by Samuel, to which yet he might give credit; but by the providence of God prospering and preserving him, and by his princely spirit and behaviour, and by calling to mind what Samuel had said to him, that his kingdom should be given to a neighbour of his better than he, and so David was by his own confession, ℣. 17. and the cutting off the skirt of his garment might put him in remembrance of the renting of the skirt of Samuel's mantle, upon which he told Saul his kingdom should be rent from him; though some think that was Saul's skirt, and so now he knew thereby, when David cut off his skirt, that the kingdom would be his; and it is a tradition of the Jews[f], that Samuel said to him at that time, that he that cut off the skirt of his garment, should reign after him: and that the kingdom of Israel shall be established in thine hand; and not be rent from him; and yet notwithstanding after this he sought to destroy him.

℣. 21. Swear now therefore unto me by the Lord, &c.] By the Word of the Lord, as the Targum: that thou wilt not cut off my seed after me; as was usually done in despotic governments in the eastern countries, and is at this day, when one is advanced to the throne of another, by whom issue is left, who may be rivals and competitors with him: and that thou wilt not destroy my name out of my father's house; by cutting off his seed, the same thing in different words repeated, for the confirmation of it; children bear the names of their fathers, and by them their memory is perpetuated, and cutting off them is destroying the name of their parents.

℣. 22. And David sware unto Saul, &c.] That he would not cut off his posterity; which oath he religiously observed, in sparing Mephibosheth, and in punishing the murderers of Ishbosheth; and as for the seven sons of Saul, delivered up to the Gibeonites, it may be questioned whether they were his genuine legitimate offspring; and if they were, it was by the appointment and command of God, and according to his will and pleasure they were executed, who is not bound by the oaths of men, and to whom they must be submitted, 2 Sam. xxi. 1, 14. and Saul went home; to his palace in Gibeah: but David and his men got them up unto the hold; in Engedi, ch. xxiii. 29. not trusting to Saul, whose inconstancy, perfidy, cruel hatred and malice, David full well knew; and therefore thought it not safe to return to his own house, nor to dwell in the open country, but in the wilderness, and among the rocks, and in the caves there, such as were in the wilderness of Engedi; and here, and at this time he penned the 57th psalm.

[e] בדרך טובה in via bona, Pagninus, Montanus.

[f] Midrash Tillim apud Abarbinel. in loc.

CHAP. XXV.

THIS chapter gives an account of the death of Samuel, and of the ill treatment David met with from Nabal; it begins with the death of Samuel, which was greatly lamented in Israel, ℣. 1. it draws the character of Nabal, and his wife, ℣. 2, 3. records a meſſage of David to him, by his young men deſiring he would ſend him ſome of his proviſions made for his ſheep-ſhearers, ℣. 4—9. and Nabal's ill-natured anſwer to him reported by the young men, which provoked David to arm againſt him, ℣. 10—13, 21, 22. and this being told Abigail, the wife of Nabal, and a good character given of David and his men, and of the advantage Nabal's ſhepherds had received from them, and the danger his family was in through his ingratitude, ℣. 14—17. ſhe prepared a preſent to pacify David, went with it herſelf, and addreſſed him in a very handſome, affectionate and prudent manner, ℣. 18—31. and met with a kind reception, ℣. 32—35. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of the death of Nabal, and of the marriage of Abigail to David, ℣. 32—44.

℣. 1. And Samuel died, &c.] In the interval, when Saul and David were parted, and before they ſaw each other again; according to the Jewiſh chronology [g], Samuel died four months before Saul; but other Jewiſh writers ſays [h], he died ſeven months before; Abarbinel thinks it was a year or two before; which is moſt likely and indeed certain, ſince David was in the country of the Philiſtines after this a full year and four months, if the true ſenſe of the phraſe is expreſſed in ch. xxvii. 7. and Saul was not then dead; and ſo another Jewiſh chronologer [i] ſays, that Saul died two years after Samuel, to which agrees Clemens of Alexandria [k]; and according to the Jews [l], he died the 20th of Iyar, for which a faſt was kept on that day: and all the Iſraelites were gathered together, and lamented him; his death being a public loſs, not only to the college of the prophets, over which he preſided, but to the whole nation; and they had reaſon to lament his death, when they called to mind the many good offices he had done them from his youth upwards; and when the government was in his hands, which was adminiſtred in the moſt prudent and faithful manner; and after that they had his wiſe counſel and advice, his good wiſhes and prayers for them; and the rather they had reaſon to lament him, ſince Saul their king proved ſo bad as he did, and at this time a difference was ſubſiſting between David and him: and buried him in his houſe at Ramah; where he lived and died; not that he was buried in his houſe, properly ſo called, or within the walls of that building wherein he dwelt; though the Greeks [m] and Romans [n] uſed to bury in their own dwelling-houſes; hence ſprung the idolatrous worſhip of the Lares, or houſhold gods; but not the Hebrews, which their laws about uncleanneſs by graves would not admit of, ſee Numb. xix. 16, 18. but the meaning is, that they buried him in the place where his houſe was, as Ben Gerſom interprets it, at Ramah, in ſome field or garden belonging to it. The author of the Cippi Hebraici ſays [o], that here his father Elkanah, and his mother Hannah, and her two ſons, were buried in a vault ſhut up, with monuments over it; and here, ſome ſay [p], Samuel's bones remained, until removed by Arcadius the emperor into Thrace; Benjamin of Tudela reports [q], that when the chriſtians took Ramlah, which is Ramah, from the Mahometans, they found the grave of Samuel at Ramah by a ſynagogue of the Jews, and they took him out of the grave, and carried him to Shiloh, and there built a large temple, which is called the Samuel of Shiloh to this day: and David aroſe and went down to the wilderneſs of Paran; on hearing of the death of Samuel, there to indulge his mourning for him; or rather that he might be in greater ſafety from Saul, being farther off, this wilderneſs lying on the ſouth of the tribe of Judah, and inhabited by Arabs, and theſe called Kedarenes; and now it was that he dwelt in the tents of Kedar, Pſ. cxx. 5.

℣. 2. And there was a man in Maon, &c.] A city of the tribe of Judah, from whence the wilderneſs had its name, before mentioned; of which place, ſee Joſh. xv. 55. though Ben Gerſom takes it to ſignify a dwelling place; and that this is obſerved to ſhew, that he did not dwell in a city, but had his habitation where his buſineſs lay, which was in Carmel, where his fields, gardens and vineyards were: wherefore it follows, whoſe poſſeſſions were in Carmel; not Carmel in the tribe of Iſſachar, but in the tribe of Judah, not far from Maon, and are mentioned together, Joſh. xv. 55. ſee the note there; his cattle were there, his ſheep particularly, for they are afterwards ſaid to be ſhorn there; or his work [r], his agriculture, his farming, where he was employed, or employed others in ſowing ſeed, and planting trees: and the man was very great; in worldly ſubſtance, though not in natural wiſdom and knowledge, and eſpecially in true religion and piety: and he had 3000 ſheep, and 1000 goats; ſo the ſubſtance of men in thoſe times was generally deſcribed by the cattle they had, whether of the herd or flock, in which it chiefly lay: and he was ſhearing his ſheep in Carmel; which was the cuſtom in Judea and Syria, and was a very ancient one, as early as the times of Judah, yea of Laban, ſee Gen. xxxi. 19. and xxxviii. 12, 13. though the old Romans uſed to pluck off the wool from the ſheeps backs; hence a fleece of wool was called vellus a vellendo, from the plucking it off; and Pliny ſays [s], in his time, that ſheep were not ſhorn every where, but in ſome places the cuſtom of plucking off the wool continued; and who elſewhere obſerves [t], that the time of ſhearing was in June or July, or thereabouts; at which times a feaſt was made, and it is for the ſake of that this is obſerved.

℣. 3. Now the name of the man was Nabal, &c.] Which ſignifies a fool; one would think his parents ſhould not give him this name, though it is a name proper enough to men in common; and Kimchi thinks this was a nick-name, which men gave gave him, agreeable to his genius and conduct, and which is not improbable: and the name of his wife Abigail; which signifies my father's joy, he delighting in her for her wit and beauty, as follows: and she was a woman of good understanding, and of a beautiful countenance; she was not only of a good understanding in things natural, civil and domestic, but in things spiritual, as her speech to David shews, and which, with her external form, compleated her character, and greatly recommended her; which is the character Ælianus [u] gives of Aspasia, wife and fair: but the man was churlish and evil in his doings; morose and ill-natured in the temper and disposition of his mind, and wicked in his conversation, and fraudulent and oppressive in his dealings with men: and he was of the house of Caleb; or he was a Calebite [w], a descendant of that great and good man Caleb the son of Jephunneh; which was an aggravation of his wickedness, that he should be the degenerate plant of such a noble vine: some interpret it, he was as his heart, as his heart was bad, so was he; some men, their outside is better than their inside; but this man was no hypocrite, he was as bad outwardly as he was inwardly: the word Caleb sometimes signifies a dog; hence the Septuagint version renders it, a doggish man, a Cynic; and to the same purpose are the Syriac and Arabic versions; and so some Jewish writers interpret it; but the Targum, Jarchi and Kimchi supply it as we do, that he was of the house or family of Caleb, and so of the tribe of Judah, as David was.

[g] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 13. p. 37. [h] In Kimchi & Abarbinel in loc. [i] Juchaſin, fol. 11. 1. [k] Stromat. l. 1. p. 325. [l] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 580. §. 2. [m] Plato in Minoë. [n] Servius in Virgil. Æneid. l. 6. p. mihi, 1011. [o] P. 30. [p] Heidman. apud Hottinger. in ib. [q] Itinerar. p. 50. [r] מעשׂהו opus ejus, Montanus, Vatablus; cujus opus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [s] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 48. [t] Ibid. l. 18. c. 27.

℣. 4. And David heard in the wilderness, &c.] In the wilderness of Paran, where he was, and a wilderness it was to him, being in want of food, as the following relation shews: that Nabal did shear his sheep; when there was generally good living, and so a proper person, and a proper time for David to apply for the relief of his wants.

℣. 5. And David sent out ten young men, &c.] Such persons, and such a number of them he sent to shew honour and reverence to Nabal: and David said unto the young men, get ye up to Carmel; which lay higher than the wilderness, in which he was: and go to Nabal, and greet him in my name; ask him of his peace and welfare, as the Targum; wish all health and happiness in my name, present my service and best respects to him.

℣. 6. And thus shall ye say to him that liveth in prosperity, &c.] That lives, whilst others, as David and his men, might be rather said to starve than live; they lived in great meanness, but he in great abundance, and therefore in a capacity to give to others, and particularly to relieve them: or the sense is, they should say to him, thus shall it be, or may it be for life; for the time of life, for the year to come; at this time next year, at next sheep-shearing, mayest thou be in as great prosperity then as now, and even all the days of thy life: peace be both to thee, and peace be to thine house, and peace be unto all that thou hast; that is, all prosperity to thy person in soul and body, to thy family, wife, children and servants, and let the same attend thy estate, cattle, farms, fields, vineyards, and all that belong to thee; and wish for a blessing on him, and his, and all that were his, or he had; a more extensive one could not well be made.

℣. 7. And now I have heard that thou hast shearers, &c.] Men employed in shearing his sheep, which was a time of feasting and gladness, and therefore David sent his young men to him at this time with his compliments upon it; and in order to obtain what he intended by this message to him, he observes the favours he and his men had done to his servants, and the advantages which they had received from them: now thy shepherds which were with us; feeding their sheep near the wilderness of Paran, which was not far from Carmel and Maon: we hurt them not; by taking any of their sheep and lambs from them, or by abusing, beating them, or giving them ill language; or did not put them to shame [x], by denying them any thing they asked of them, which was in their power to grant; nor mocked and scoffed at them, and jeered them on account of their occupation: neither was there ought missing unto them; they did not steal a sheep or lamb from them, as was common for soldiers to do; nor did they suffer any of the Arabs, that dwelt in the wilderness of Paran, to rob them, who lived upon plunder, or any of the wild beasts to hurt them, as much as in them lay; so careful were they of them, and were a wall unto them by night and day, as Nabal's servants owned, ℣. 16. and this was the case, all the while they were in Carmel; or in the fields, ℣. 15 which were joining to the wilderness of Paran.

℣. 8. Ask thy young men, and they will shew thee, &c.] The shepherds before mentioned, who kept their flocks hard by them: wherefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes; the ten young men David sent to Nabal: for we are come in a good day; a day in which Nabal made a feast for his shearers, as was usual then, and still is, see 2 Sam. xiii. 23—28. and at such times as persons are generally chearful and merry, so free and liberal; and as there were plenty of provisions, not only enough for the guests and shearers, but to spare, and there was no need for an increase of expence, it might upon the whole be concluded, it was a proper time for David to apply for accommodations for himself and his men: give, I pray thee, whatsoever cometh to thine hand unto thy servants, and to thy son David; he did not request any thing extraordinary of him, or to put him to any expence, but what was at hand, and he could spare; he prayed him to deliver to the young men he sent, for their use, and the use of other his servants, and particularly David, who stiled himself his son, being of the same tribe with Nabal, and Nabal his senior.

℣. 9. And when David's young men came, &c.] To Carmel: they spake to Nabal according to all those words in the name of David; they delivered their message punctually and exactly, in the very words, or however according to the purport of them, in David's name, as he enjoined them: and ceased; from speaking, waiting for Nabal's answer; or they rested [y], from the fatigues of their journey; which they did not until they had delivered their message to Nabal, and then they took the liberty to sit down and rest themselves; but the former sense seems best, and is preferred by Maimonides [z].

℣. 10. And Nabal answered David's servants, and said, &c.] In a very haughty manner, in great wrath, just as churlish, covetous persons do, when they don't care to give what is asked of them: who is David? and who is the son of Jesse? his two questions which relate to the same person don't well agree together, since by both he would suggest, as [u] Var. Hist. l. 12. c. 1.

[w] כלבו keri, כלבי Calibita, Pagninus, Montanus; Calebita, Tigurine version, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.
[x] לא הכלמנום non afficimus verecundia eos, Montanus; so some in Vatablus.
[y] וינוחו & quieverunt, Pagninus, Montanus, Munster.
[z] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 67.

as if he knew not the perſon they came from, and whoſe name they made uſe of: had he ſtopped at the firſt queſtion, it might have gone ſo, but his ſecond queſtion betrays him, and plainly ſhows he did know him, though he ſpeaks with contempt of him, calling him the ſon of Jeſſe, as Saul often did. Abarbinel, of all interpreters, is of opinion only, that Nabal did not ſay this diſreſpectfully of David, and to his diſhonour, he knew he was the Lord's anointed, and the king's ſon-in-law; but the ſenſe, according to him, is, who is David? and who is the ſon of Jeſſe? are they not one man? but though he is the ſon of Jeſſe, and prides himſelf, ſaying, I ſhall be king, I ſhould not regard that, but would ſend him corn, and bread, and food, as much as is needful for his own uſe; but what can I do when there are ſo many ſervants? for they are 600 of them, and they are too many to relieve: there be many ſervants now a-days, that break away every man from his maſter; which words alſo the ſame writer thinks have no reference to David, only to his men; but they ſeem plainly to ſtrike at David himſelf, and ſuggeſt that he had revolted from and rebelled againſt Saul his maſter, as well as received and protected fugitives and run-agates, ſuch as fled from their maſters and from their creditors, ſee ch. xxii. 2.

℣. 11. Shall I then take my bread, and my water, &c.] Which include all food and liquors, every thing eatable and drinkable; and water may be particularly mentioned, becauſe very ſcarce in the wilderneſs, and ſo precious; though the Septuagint verſion has wine inſtead of water: and my fleſh which I have killed for my ſhearers; whether oxen, or ſheep, or lambs, as there might be of each ſort, for an entertainment made on ſuch an occaſion: and give it unto men whom I know not whence they be? which is another argument Abarbinel makes uſe of, that he meant not David, but his men only, becauſe he did not know who and from whence they were.

℣. 12. So David's young men turned their way, &c.] Their backs on him, without making any reply; and though they did not return railing for railing, they treated him with ſilent contempt; and though they did not offer to do any injury to his perſon, nor to take any thing away by force, yet they were determined to report this uſage to David, who they doubted not would avenge the affront put on him and them: and went again; to the wilderneſs from whence they came: and came and told him all theſe ſayings; rude and reproachful ones, juſt as they were delivered.

℣. 13. And David ſaid unto his men, &c.] Provoked to the laſt degree to have ſuch a rude, churliſh anſwer returned, to ſuch a civil and humble meſſage he had ſent: gird you on every man his ſword; and prepare to march and chaſtize Nabal for his inſolence: and they girded on every man his ſword; in obedience to David, and in vindication of his honour and their own: and David alſo girded on his ſword; in order to march at the head of them, fired with indignation at the affront given him: and there went up after David about 400 men; out of the 600 he had with him, ch. xxiii. 13. and 200 abode by the ſtuff; the baggage in their camp; the Targum is, they "were left to watch the veſſels;" the things neceſſary for their uſe, for the dreſſing of their food, their bedding, &c.

℣. 14. But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, &c.] Not one of David's young men, as what follows ſhows, but one of Nabal's young men or ſervants, one of thoſe David directs him to for the truth of what he ſaid, ℣. 8. this was one of thoſe that had been employed in feeding ſheep in the wilderneſs, where David was, and knew him, but was now at Carmel, and was preſent when David's meſſengers came to Nabal, and was privy to what paſſed: ſaying, David ſent meſſengers out of the wilderneſs to ſalute our maſter; in a very kind and handſome manner, to aſk of his peace and welfare, and to wiſh him all happineſs and proſperity; or maſters[y], maſter and miſtreſs, including both Nabal and Abigail: and he railed on them; gave them very abuſive language, repreſented David and his men as a parcel of ſcoundrels, fugitives and run-away ſervants; or he flew at them[z], or upon them, in great wrath and fury, calling them hard names, bidding them be gone about their buſineſs; the alluſion is to a ravenous bird, which will fly at perſons when it apprehends its young in any danger.

℣. 15. But the men were very good unto us, &c.] Very kind and civil, yea very uſeful and ſerviceable, even all the meſſengers David ſent, and Nabal railed on, yea all David's men, and therefore deſerved better treatment than they met with from Nabal: and we were not hurt; neither by them nor others: neither miſſed we any thing; of our flocks, or any thing belonging to us; they neither robbed us themſelves, nor ſuffered others to rob us: as long as we were converſant with them, when we were in the fields; feeding the ſheep by them; thus he confirms every thing that David ſaid of himſelf and his men, ℣. 7. ſee the note there; and ſays even more of them to their commendation, as follows.

℣. 16. They were a wall unto us both by night and day, &c.] Protecting and defending them againſt the Philiſtines, who, as they robbed the threſhing-floors of Keilah, would have plundered the flocks of Nabal; or it may be rather againſt the incurſions of the Arabs in the wilderneſs of Paran, the poſterity of Iſhmael, who lived by plunder, and againſt the wild beaſts of the deſert, who otherwiſe would have carried off many of their ſheep and lambs, by night or by day: all the while we were with them keeping the ſheep; all which ſhewed how reaſonable it was that Nabal ſhould have uſed them well, and given them a portion of his entertainment at his ſheep-ſhearing; for had it not been for them, he would not have had ſo many ſheep to ſhear as he had.

℣. 17. Now therefore know and conſider what thou wilt do, &c.] For the preſervation of her family: for evil is determined againſt our maſter, and againſt all his houſhold; which he concluded, either from ſomething that dropped from David's meſſengers, as they turned away from Nabal; or from the martial ſpirit of David himſelf, who would never put up ſuch an affront and indignity caſt upon him; or from ſome intelligence he had of David's arming his men, and marching to take vengeance: for he is ſuch a ſon of Belial, that a man cannot ſpeak to him; meaning Nabal, who was ſuch a worthleſs, paſſionate and ill-natured man, ſuch a lawleſs and imperious one, that he would not ſuffer a man to ſpeak to him about any thing; and it was to no purpoſe to attempt it, which was a reaſon this ſervant did not chuſe to ſpeak to him about this affair, but to Abigail; and ſuggeſts, that it would ſignify nothing for her to ſpeak to him about it, but but it would be moſt adviſeable for her to conſider with herſelf what was to be done immediately, without conſulting him: the words may be rendered, for he is a ſon of Belial that ſpeaks unto him [a]; or when he ſpeaks unto him, or it is told him; meaning not the ſervant that reported to David what Nabal ſaid; for Abarbinel obſerves, there were ten of them, and therefore it could not be ſaid of them, he is a ſon of Belial; but rather David himſelf, as he, and Kimchi obſerve, it may be interpreted of; that tho' he was ſo good and upright a man, yet when it ſhould be told him how Nabal had treated him, he would be ſo provoked at it, that he would become and act like a ſon of Belial; ſtorm and rage, and vow deſtruction to Nabal and his family, and come out with his whole army to deſtroy them; but the firſt ſenſe is beſt.

[y] אדנינו dominos noſtros, Malvenda. [z] ויעט בהם & involavit in eos, Coccei Lex. col. 607.

℣. 18. Then Abigail made haſte, &c.] As the caſe required, her family being in imminent danger: and took 200 loaves; of bread; of what bigneſs or weight they were is not ſaid; though it may be reaſonably concluded they were pretty large, ſince they are not called cakes but loaves, and ſince they were to be a preſent to David and his men, who were numerous: and two bottles of wine; not ſuch as ours are, which would have born no proportion to the reſt of the proviſion; but theſe were leathern bags which held a large quantity, in which they put and carried wine in thoſe times and countries; the Septuagint verſion is, two veſſels or caſks of wine: and five ſheep ready dreſſed; killed and dreſſed by the butcher, or made ready by the cook, boiled or roaſted; the word which the Targum uſes, according to the interpretation of Jarchi, from one of their Rabbins, ſignifies ſuch as were ſtuffed with ſmall pieces of meat, and eggs in them, or, as it ſhould ſeem, made into paſties: and five meaſures of parched corn; or five ſeahs, a meaſure which held, according to biſhop Cumberland [b], two wine gallons, four pottles, and a little more; of this parched corn, ſee the note on ch. xvii. 17. where mention is made of an ephah of it; and the Septuagint verſion has the ſame meaſure here, and calls them five ephahs of flour: and 100 cluſters of raiſins; or dried grapes, as the Targum; the Septuagint is, one omer of them, which was the tenth part of an ephah: and 200 cakes of figs; which were dried, and preſſed, and made into lumps, and ſhe took 200 of theſe; or, as the Targum, 200 pound weight of them: and laid them on aſſes; one not being ſufficient to carry all this proviſion.

℣. 19. And ſhe ſaid to her ſervants, go on before me, &c.] With the preſent, the ſight of which ſhe wiſely conſidered would in a great meaſure pacify David, and prepare him to hear patiently what ſhe had to ſay to him: behold, I come after you; ſignifying it would not be long ere ſhe came up to them, and overtook them: but ſhe told not her huſband Nabal; neither the danger he and his family were in through his conduct, nor the preparations ſhe had made to prevent it; knowing his perverſe and obſtinate diſpoſition, that it would take up too much time to reaſon with him, and perſuade him, and bring him into proper meaſures; and which may be obſerved to excuſe the conduct of Abigail, in doing what ſhe did, and taking and diſpoſing of her huſband's goods, without his knowledge and leave; the caſe required haſte, and it was done to preſerve him and his family from imminent ruin; and beſides, he might not be in a fit condition to be ſpoken to, being drunk with paſſion, or with wine, or both, ſee ℣. 36. and no doubt ſhe was directed by the Spirit of God to do what ſhe did, and this being an extraordinary caſe, is not to be drawn into an example.

℣. 20. And it was ſo as ſhe rode on the aſs, &c.] After her ſervants: that ſhe came down by the covert of the hill; by the ſide of it, which was covered with buſhes, and ſhe rode among them, in a way that led through them, and ſo was not ſeen by David and his men; or by the ſhadow of the hill, toward the bottom of it, where by reaſon of that, and the oppoſite hill, it was darkiſh, and they could not ſee each other: and behold, David and his men came down againſt her; came down a hill oppoſite to that ſhe came down: and ſhe met them; in the valley between two hills.

℣. 21. Now David had ſaid, &c.] When the meſſengers returned and told him how they had been uſed by Nabal; or he ſaid [c], or was ſaying within himſelf, or to his men, what follows, juſt as Abigail met him: ſurely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderneſs; which ſhows that he was in a violent paſſion, and had Nabal in the utmoſt contempt and indignation, in that he mentions not his name, only ſays this, this man or fellow; leaving a blank to be filled up with the moſt ignominious name and character that could be thought of; and repents, that he had taken ſo much care of his flocks when they were feeding by him in the wilderneſs: ſo that nothing was miſſed of all that pertained unto him; and ſeems to have wiſhed he had ſuffered his flocks to have been robbed by the Arabs, or worried by wild beaſts, ſince he had been ſuch an ungrateful wretch to him: and he hath requited me evil for good; he had requited evil to him by denying to ſend him any of his proviſions, and by abuſing him and his men with opprobrious language; and this was done in return for the good deeds he had done in protecting his ſervants and his flocks in the wilderneſs, and for the good words and reſpectful meſſage he had ſent unto him.

℣. 22. So, and more alſo do God unto the enemies of David, &c.] Give them as much health and proſperity, as much wealth and riches as Nabal has, and much more: if I leave of all that pertain to him by the morning light, any that piſſeth againſt the wall; which is generally underſtood of a dog, that he would not leave him ſo much as a dog; but it is better, with Ben Gerſom, to interpret it of the males in his houſe, himſelf, his ſons, and ſervants; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it of reaſonable creatures, of ſuch "that know knowledge," or are knowing and underſtanding creatures; it ſeems to have been towards the evening of the day, when David was marching towards Nabal's houſe, deſigning to fall upon him and his, amidſt their jollity that night, and cut them all off before morning. This muſt be imputed to the ſudden and violent paſſion David was thrown into when off his guard, through the neceſſity he was in, the diſappointment he met with, and the opprobrious language he was treated with; but in this, his conduct was not as it uſed to be, and as it was towards Saul his enemy. Nor is his rage and paſſion to be vindicated, or the raſh vow he made to deſtroy Nabal and his family; his crime, tho' great, yet not to be puniſhed with death; his ingratigratitude and insolence deserved resentment, but were not capital crimes worthy of death, and especially of the destruction of his whole family; the Jews indeed make him to be guilty of treason, in that he knew that David was anointed king, and yet both abused him, and disobeyed his commands, and therefore being guilty of overt acts of treason, he and his were deserving of death; but David was not yet king.

[a] מדבר אליו loquens ad eum. [b] Of Scripture-weights and meaſures, ch. 3. p. 86. [c] אמר ait, V. L. dixit, Pagninus, Montanus; dicebat, Vatablus.

v. 23. And when Abigail saw David, &c.] Whom she either knew personally, or rather supposed who he was by the number of men that followed him: she hasted, and alighted off the ass; on which she rode: and fell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground; in respect to, and reverence of so great a person as David was.

v. 24. And fell at his feet, &c.] As an humble supplicant, having a favour to ask of him; it is very probable David was on foot: and said, upon me, my lord, upon me let this iniquity be; which her husband had been guilty of; she desires it might be transferred from him to her, and be reckoned as if done by her; she would have it imputed to herself, and all the blame lie upon her, and the punishment for it be inflicted on her; for iniquity may be put for the punishment of iniquity: this was very artfully said, as well as expressed great affection for her husband, and care of his life; for she knew, if she could get the fault removed from him to her, she would be able to vindicate herself, and her innocence would soon appear; nor would this strong affection for her husband fail of answering some good purpose, as she full well knew: and let thine handmaid, I pray thee, speak in thine audience, and hear the words of thine handmaid; as it was but reasonable she should be heard, since she stood now as the criminal, taking all the blame of her husband's conduct on herself.

v. 25. Let not my lord, I pray thee, regard this man of Belial, even Nabal, &c.] He is a worthless man, it must be owned, a weak, foolish man, rather to be despised than regarded by him; what either he says or does is unworthy of the notice of any, and much less of so great a person, as David was: for as his name is, so is he; his natural disposition, genius and conduct agree with his name; when any one knows his name, he may judge what is to be expected from him: Nabal is his name; which signifies a fool: and Nebalah, folly is with him; attends all his words and actions. This character of her husband, though no doubt a just one, yet it would not have been right in her to have given it, whose folly she should rather have concealed, but that it was his well-known character; and she observes it not to reproach him with it, but to excuse his sin, his rudeness and ingratitude, and preserve his life; and suggests, that what he had done was not to be imputed to malice in his heart, but to his stupidity and folly, and so not to be regarded, and was not a peculiar single action of his, but what he was daily more or less guilty of; his folly was with him where-ever he went, and appeared in every thing he said or did, and therefore to be overlooked and despised: but I thine handmaid saw not the young men of my lord, whom thou didst send; as she had taken the blame upon herself, now she answers for herself, and pleads ignorance of his messengers, and their message; she had not so much as seen them with her eyes, and much less heard their message when reported; had she, she would have taken care, she intimates, that it should have been attended to; having so much interest in her husband, that she could have prevailed on him to have used them with civility, and granted their request.

v. 26. Now therefore, my lord, as the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, &c.] Which is an oath, and respects either what goes before, that she never saw the young men that were sent to Nabal, or to what follows, the providence of God in preventing David from shedding blood, which she was sure of, by an impulse on her own mind, and by observing a change in David's countenance: seeing the Lord hath with-holden thee from coming to shed blood, and from avenging thyself with thine own hand; she does not impute this to her prudence, and the provision she made to appease David, and prevent him from shedding the blood he intended, and taking the vengeance he had resolved on; but to the Lord, and the interposition of his providence, which she knew would have its weight on the mind of so good a man as David was; who upon reflection would be thankful that he had been prevented from shedding innocent blood, as the Targum calls it: now let thine enemies, and they that seek evil to my lord, be as Nabal; meaning Saul, and those with him, wishing they might be as inconsiderable as Nabal; as unable, as weak and impotent as he to do him any hurt, and as short-lived, and cut off by the hand of God, as he would be; for, according to Jarchi, she prophesied under the direction of the Holy Spirit. It may be observed that in this, and the preceeding verses, she frequently gives David the title of my lord, in reverence of him, and to atone for the rudeness and insolence of her husband, in speaking of him as a run-away servant.

v. 27. And now this blessing, which thine handmaid hath brought unto my lord, &c.] The present consisting of the things mentioned in v. 18. which came as a blessing from God, and with good-will from her: let it even be given unto the young men that follow my lord; the servants of David: in the original it is, that walk at the feet of my lord; and which the Targum paraphrases, who minister before my lord; and so Abigail's damsels are called pedisequæ, or that walked at her feet, v. 42. and with the Romans, in after-times, servants were called à pedibus and pedisequi[a]. This also is very artfully said, as if the present was not good enough for David, and worthy of his acceptance, but might be agreeable to his men, and of service to them.

v. 28. I pray thee, forgive the trespass of thine handmaid, &c.] The trespasses, as the Targum, either the sin of her husband, she had taken upon herself, or her boldness in troubling him with her petitions and solicitations, and even with the present she had brought: for the Lord will certainly make my lord a sure house; or a firm kingdom, as the Targum; would raise him to the kingdom of Israel, and establish it in his posterity, that it should not be taken from him, as it would be from Saul: because my lord fighteth the battles of the Lord; the battles of the people of the Lord, as the Targum, of the people of Israel against the Philistines; which he had often done with success, the Lord being with him, and prospering him, and therefore would firmly settle him on the throne, and continue the kingdom in his posterity: and evil hath not been found in thee all thy days; no unjust action had been committed by him against his king and country, however he had been reproached and calumcalumniated; and she hoped, that therefore none would be done by him now to stain so fair a character.

[a] Vid. Pignorium de Servis, p. 140, 248, 293.

℣. 29. Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul, &c.] His life, to take it away, meaning Saul, whom she chose not to name, because he was king: but the soul of my lord shall be bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God; should be dear unto the Lord, precious in his esteem, and be carefully preserved by him, among other his chosen ones, and should be safe with him, in his hands, and under his care and keeping; the Jews refer this to eternal life in the world to come, and the safety and security of his soul hereafter; so the Targum, "the soul of my lord shall be treasured up in the treasury of eternal life, before the Lord thy God:" hence they speak of the souls of the righteous being laid up under the throne of glory[e], in proof of which they produce this text; and so Maimonides[f] understands it of what should be after death, see Rev. vi. 9. Col. iii. 3. and the souls of thine enemies, them shall he sling out, as out of the middle of a sling; that is, remove them swiftly and suddenly, and with force, out of the world, as a stone is slung out of the middle of a sling; see Jer. x. 18.

℣. 30. And it shall come pass, when the Lord shall have done to my lord according to all the good that he hath spoken concerning thee, &c.] Performed his promise, especially with respect to his kingdom, as follows: and shall have appointed thee ruler over Israel; that is, actually raised him to be, and settled him as king upon the throne of Israel; for he was both appointed and anointed already; and this Abigail knew, and was now well known in Israel, and the common talk of the people.

℣. 31. This shall be no grief unto thee, nor offence of heart unto my lord, &c.] It would give him no trouble, nor distress of mind, or sit uneasy on his conscience: either that thou hast shed blood causeless, or that my lord hath avenged himself; which she suggests it might do, if he had shed the blood of Nabal's family, his children and servants, who were no ways concerned with him in his rudeness and ingratitude; or had avenged himself on him for the same, by taking away his life, which such crimes, however great and aggravated, did not deserve; but, on the contrary, it would be a satisfaction and pleasure to him to reflect upon it, that he had passed over such an offence, and shed no blood on account of it: but when the Lord shall have dealt well with my lord; by delivering him out of the hands of all his enemies, and have raised him to, and settled him on the throne of Israel, of which she made no doubt: then remember thine handmaid; the advice she gave not to shed blood, and take vengeance, for which he would then be thankful, and gratefully remember: some, as Ben Gersom, think, she said this under a spirit of prophecy, that Nabal should die quickly, and she should be David's wife; but rather her meaning is, that when he should be king, and she should apply to him on any account, to have justice done her, and to be assisted and relieved when oppressed, that he would then remember her, and shew her favour.

℣. 32. And David said to Abigail, &c.] Having heard her out, and being overcome with her rhetoric and powerful arguments: blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me; who put it into her heart to come out and meet him, and endeavour to avert him from his bad design, which his heart was set upon; he saw plainly the hand of God in it, and in the first place acknowledges the goodness of divine providence, in directing her to take the step she did.

℣. 33. And blessed be thy advice, &c.] Thanks be to God, and to thee for it, being wise, good and seasonable; or thy taste[g], thy good sense, knowledge, as the Targum, discretion, prudence and understanding: and blessed be thou which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood; he came out with a full resolution to shed the blood of Nabal, and of all the males in his house, but was stopped by Abigail; who by her arguments so prevailed upon him, as to cause him to desist from his design, and thankful he was to God for it; for tho' he had vowed he would destroy Nabal and his family, yet being a rash sinful vow, he saw it was better to break it than to keep it: and from avenging myself with mine own hand; which to do would have been sinful, vengeance only belonging to God; and now he leaves it to him, and is very thankful that he was prevented doing it himself.

℣. 34. For in very deed, as the Lord God of Israel liveth, &c.] An oath for the confirmation of what he was about to say: which hath kept me back from hurting thee; from doing any ill to her family, as he intended, though not to her person, his resolution being only to slay the males; but that would have been an hurt, an evil, an affliction to Abigail, from which the Lord in his providence restrained him, and that through her good advice: except thou hadst hasted, and come to meet me; if she had not made quick dispatch in preparing her present, or had stayed to persuade her husband into her measures; if she had delayed a little longer, David would have been at Nabal's house, executing his vengeance on him and his: surely there had not been left unto Nabal, by the morning light, any that pisseth against the wall; see the note on ℣. 22.

℣. 35. So David received of her hand that which she had brought him, &c.] Her present, ℣. 18. and which he kindly took for his own use, as well as for his men; for it was a present for a prince: and said to her, go up in peace to thine house; in peace of mind, having her request granted, and nothing to fear from David and his men, and so might return home with the greatest safety in her own person, with those that were with her, and be under no apprehensions of danger and destruction to Nabal and his family: see, I have hearkened to thy voice; to her arguments and reasonings, which were powerful; to her petitions, which were granted; and to her good counsel and advice, which he took; and have accepted thy person; done as she desired, forgave the offence, and so lifted her up, as the word signifies, and made her countenance cheerful; received her present kindly, and took well all she said and did, and promised to grant her, for the future, any thing that lay in his power, whenever she should apply to him, see Job xlii. 8, 9.

℣. 36. And Abigail came to Nabal, &c.] Having sped with David, and taken her leave of him, she returned home to her husband Nabal: and behold, he held a feast in his house like the feast of a king; both for the number of dishes on his table, and of guests at it, though only on the account of sheep-sheep-shearing; but very probably there were others that were invited to this entertainment, besides the shearers; covetous men are generally very profuse when they make feasts: and Nabal's heart was merry within him, for he was very drunken; which was a very ill example for the master of the feast to set, and was one instance among others of his folly, and of his conduct answering to his name: wherefore she told him nothing less or more until the morning-light; where she had been, and what she had been about, the danger that he and the whole family were in through his rude and churlish behaviour towards David and his men; and how she had prevented it by a timely application to David, meeting him when in full march, and in a great passion, and with a firm resolution to destroy him and his; but finding Nabal in such a condition, bereaved of his reason, and uncapable of attending to what she should say, said not one word about it till the next morning.

[e] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 152. 2.
[f] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 41.
[g] טעמך sapor tuus, ficator, discretio tua, Montanus.

ver. 37. But it came to pass in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, &c.] When he had slept, and was become sober, and so capable of attending to, and understanding what might be related to him: and his wife had told him these things; recorded in this chapter, before observed: that his heart died within him, and he became as a stone; he swooned away, became as cold as a stone, and remained as senseless, spoke not a word, but lay in a stupor; the Jewish writers generally say, this was occasioned by the distress and uneasiness the present his wife carried to David gave him; but it is more likely the sense of the danger that was impressed upon his mind, which he had been exposed to through his carriage to David and his men; who, he feared, notwithstanding all his wife said, would return and take vengeance on him.

ver. 38. And it came to pass about ten days after, &c.] After he had lain in this stupid and senseless manner for ten days: that the Lord smote Nabal that he died; with some disease, or increased the grief of his heart, and the fears of his mind, that he died therewith.

ver. 39. And when David heard that Nabal was dead, &c.] As he soon might, Maon and Carmel not being far from the wilderness where David was: he said, blessed be the Lord that hath pleaded the cause of my reproach from the hand of Nabal; not that he rejoiced at the death of Nabal, simply considered, or from a private spirit of revenge; but because of the glory of divine justice, which he had shewn to him in vindicating him from the reproach Nabal had cast upon him, and particularly was thankful for what follows: and hath kept his servant from evil; from slaying Nabal with his own hand, and doing hurt to his family: for the Lord hath returned the wickedness of Nabal upon his own head; and upon no other, none of his family suffered but himself, and which was another cause of thankfulness to David; had he been suffered to have done as he in his wrath determined, not only Nabal, but all the males in his house had been cut off; but now thro' the righteous judgment of God only Nabal suffered, and not any of his family: and David sent and communed with Abigail; by his messengers to her; or concerning her [h], about marrying her: to take her to him to wife; for being both a beautiful and wise woman, he thought her a proper person to be his wife; which she might lawfully become, Nabal being dead, and Michal, David's wife, being taken from him, and given to another man, with whom she lived in adultery; or as divorced by David, as the Jews say, David by the law of God was free from her. These messengers were sent by David at a convenient time, at a proper distance from the death of Nabal; and he chose rather to send messengers than to go himself, lest being denied he should be put to shame, she being a rich widow, and he a poor persecuted man, and that her answer might be entirely free and unawed by him, and that it might appear that she was not taken to him by force; and besides, such a method has been always reckoned most honourable with great personages.

ver. 40. And when the servants of David were come to Abigail to Carmel, &c.] For though Nabal lived in Maon, yet having possessions in Carmel, he had no doubt an house there also; and here Abigail was, and perhaps chose to be after his death, rather than at Maon: they spake unto her; delivered the message to her they were sent with by David: saying, David sent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife; that is, to treat with her about his marriage to her, to propose it to her, and if they could prevail upon her, to bring her with them, that David might espouse her.

ver. 41. And she arose, and bowed herself on her face to the earth, &c.] As she did before David, ver. 23. and did as she would have done had he been present, considering his messengers as personating him, and therefore shewed the same respect and reverence, and did the same honour, as if he had been there in person: and said; expressed herself in such language as if David had been before her: behold, let thine handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my lord; which she said through her great humility, this being one of the meanest services she could be put to; intimating, that she was so far from being worthy to be the wife of such a man, that she was only fit, and it would be honour enough to her, to perform the meanest services to those that waited upon him; or her sense is, that it would be enough for her to be the wife of one of David's servants, and not his; it being the business of a wife, as Ben Gersom observes, to wash the feet of her husband.

ver. 42. And Abigail hasted and arose, &c.] She had no objection nor hesitation in her mind about marrying David, but at once consented, and immediately prepared for her journey, having as high an opinion, and as great an esteem of David, as he of her; and tho she was rich, and he poor, this was no obstacle in the way, she knew and believed he would be king of Israel, ver. 30, 31. and tho' he could not support her, she had enough to support herself, and supply him, till he came to the throne: and rode upon an ass, with five damsels of hers that went after her; whom she took with her, partly to wait upon her, and partly for her honour, and the honour of David, whom she was going to marry: and she went after the messengers of David; not following them directly, but some time after they were gone; partly for the sake of decency, and partly that they going before might acquaint David with the success of their message, and he might prepare to receive Abigail when she came: and became his wife; he espoused and married her according to the custom of the times.

ver. 43. And David also took Ahinoam of Jezreel, &c.] A city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 56. that is, he took her to wife, and as it seems before Abigail became his wife; see 2 Sam. iii. 2, 3. and they

[h] באביגיל περι Αβιγαιας, Sept. de Abigail, Vatablus.

they were also both of them his wives; polygamy, though not agreeable to the law of nature, nor the law of God, was a custom which prevailed in those times, which good men gave into, though not to be commended for it.

℣. 44. But Saul had given Michal his daughter, David's wife, to Phalti the son of Laish, &c.] Or for Saul, &c. [1] which is a reason for his marrying again, but no reason for marrying more wives than one. Michal was his first wife, and they lived lovingly together, until David was obliged to flee from Saul, and then he gave her to another; partly to vex David, and partly if he could to break the relation between him and David, that he might not be thought to be his son-in-law, and he to persecute one in such a relation to him; and that this might not give David any shew of claim, or be the means of his rising to the throne. This Phalti, to whom he gave her, is called Phaltiel, 2 Sam. iii. 15. which was of Gallim; which very probably was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, since it is mentioned with several cities of that tribe, and as near Gibeah of Saul, Is. x. 29, 30.

CHAP. XXVI.

THIS chapter relates that Saul, upon the information of the Ziphites, went out again with an armed force to seek David, ℣. 1, 2, 3; of which David having intelligence, and of the place where he pitched, came with one of his men and reconnoitred his camp, and finding Saul and his men asleep, took away his spear, and the cruse of water at his head, and departed, without taking taking away his life, though solicited to it by his servant, ℣. 4—12. which spear and cruse of water he produced to the reproach of Abner, Saul's general, and as a testimony of his sincere regard to Saul, and that he had no design upon his life, ℣. 13—20. of which Saul being convinced, blessed David, and returned home again, ℣. 21—25.

℣. 1. And the Ziphites came unto Saul to Gibeah, &c.] Of Benjamin, called sometimes Gibeah of Saul, because it was the place of his birth and residence; hither Saul had returned after his last interview with David; whether notwithstanding what had passed between him and David, he had privately encouraged the Ziphites to watch David, and give him information of him where he was, and when it was a proper opportunity to seize him; or whether the Ziphites were so officious as of themselves to acquaint him with it, is not certain; the latter is probable, since having attempted to betray David, they might fear, that should he come to the throne, he would remember it, and therefore they might be desirous of having him cut off by the hand of Saul: saying, doth not David hide himself in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon? the same place where he was, when the Ziphites before gave information of him, ch. xxiii. 19. here he might chuse to be, supposing that the Ziphites now would not meditate any thing against him, since Saul had declared he would be king after him, and had made him swear that he would not cut off his posterity; and as he thought it his wisdom to provide against the worst, knowing the inconstancy of Saul, he might judge this the most proper place of safety, and from whence he could, on occasion, easily retreat into the wilderness; and it may be also, because it was near to Abigail's estate and possessions, which were now a good resource for him.

℣. 2. Then Saul arose, &c.] Immediately, glad of an opportunity to seize on David, having the same disposition towards him as ever; and perhaps had repented he had not laid hold on him when he followed him out of the cave: and went down to the wilderness of Ziph; or towards it: having 3000 chosen men of Israel; young men, so called, because usually chosen for business, and for war particularly, rather than old men; the same number he took with him when he sought him at Engedi, ch. xxiv. 2. to seek David in the wilderness of Ziph; where or whereabouts he was informed by the Ziphites he was.

℣. 3. And Saul pitched in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon by the way, &c.] To the wilderness; the very same place where the Ziphites suggested David was: but David abode in the wilderness; not in the hill of Hachilah, but in the wilderness of Ziph itself: and he saw that Saul came after him into the wilderness; he understood by some information he had, that Saul had set out from Gibeah, and was coming to seek for him in the wilderness of Ziph; perhaps Jonathan had given him intelligence; however he was not quite certain, as appears by what follows.

℣. 4. David therefore sent out spies, &c.] To observe if he was coming or come, and where he was, that he might not be surprized by him; for though David knew the Lord was, and would be his protection, he thought proper to be upon his guard, and to make use of means for his safety: and understood that Saul was come in very deed; that he was most certainly come, and come to some certain place; which he himself went to reconnoitre, as in the following verse.

℣. 5. And David arose, and came to the place where Saul had pitched, &c.] Came near it, within sight of it; so that he could take a view of it with his naked eye, and observe where, and in what manner he was incamped: and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and Abner the son of Ner, the captain of his host; where he and his general had their quarters in the camp: and Saul lay in the trench; or circuit; not in the fosse or ditch thrown up, in which an army sometimes lies intrenched; but this is to be understood either of the camp itself, so called, as Ben Gersom, Abarbinel and Ben Melech think, because it lay in a circular form, that all comers to it on every side might be seen; or else a sort of fortress all around the camp, made of carriages joined together; and, as the word signifies, a carriage, cart or chariot, it may design the chariot in which Saul slept, as kings have been used to do when not in their houses; and to this the Septuagint agrees, which uses a word that Procopius Gazæus says signifies one kind of a chariot, and is used of a chariot drawn by mules, in the Greek version of Is. lxvi. 20. Grotius observes, kings used to sleep in chariots where there were no houses; see ſee ch. xvii. 20. though he rather ſeems to have ſlept, ſub die, in the open air: and the people pitched round about him; both for the ſake of honour, and for his greater ſecurity; this ſhows it could not be the foſs he laid in, for then they could not pitch around him.

[1] ושאול Saul enim, Tigurine version; nam Saul, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so Pool and Patrick.

℣. 6. Then anſwered David, &c.] Or addreſſed himſelf to the two following perſons: and ſaid to Ahimelech the Hittite; who was either an Hittite by birth, but was become a proſelyte, or he was an Iſraelite that had dwelt among the Hittites, and ſo had this name given him; the former ſeems moſt probable; ſome ſay [k] this was Uriah the Hittite: and to Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah, brother to Joab; Zeruiah was the ſiſter of David, 1 Chron. ii. 15, 16. and theſe were two ſons of hers, who very probably joined David at the cave of Adullam, ch. xxii. 1. ſaying, who will go down with me to Saul to the camp? that is, which of you two: and Abiſhai ſaid, I will go down with thee; the other being timorous, or Abiſhai being moſt forward ſpoke firſt.

℣. 7. So David and Abiſhai came to the people by night, &c.] Joſephus [l] wrongly ſays, that he took with him both Abiſhai and Ahimelech; he choſe to have but one for the greater ſecreſy. This was a bold enterprize, for two men to go into a camp of 3000 men, though it was in the night; when tho' they might ſuppoſe the greater part of them were aſleep, yet they could not well ſuppoſe this of all, and eſpecially of the guards or centinels; but no doubt David was moved to this, not merely by the dint of his natural courage, but by the ſpirit of God, by whom he might be aſſured of protection, and that Saul and the people were caſt into a deep ſleep by the Lord, as they were, ℣. 12. and this the Lord moved him to, that he might have an opportunity a ſecond time to convince Saul of his innocence, and that he had no deſign upon his life: and behold, Saul lay ſleeping within the trench; ſee the note on ℣. 5. and his ſpear ſtuck in the ground at his bolſter; ready to take up and defend himſelf, ſhould he be ſurprized; or this was his ſcepter, which he always carried about with him, as an enſign of royalty, and by which very probably David knew which was Saul's tent or couch, where he ſlept: but Abner and the people lay round about him; as in ℣. 5.

℣. 8. Then ſaid Abiſhai to David, &c.] Seeing Saul faſt aſleep, and a ſpear ſo near him: God hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day; or at this time, properly it was night: now therefore let me ſmite him I pray thee with the ſpear; with Saul's own ſpear, which was ſtuck in the ground at his bolſter. He remembered that David would not put forth his hand to ſlay him before, when he had an opportunity; and ſince now another offered, he did not move it to him to do it, but begged leave to do it himſelf; which he might think would be granted, ſince there was ſuch a remarkable hand of providence in it, which ſeemed to direct to ſuch a ſtep: even to the earth at once, and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time; ſignifying, that he would give ſuch a home blow or thruſt, that the ſpear ſhould pierce thro' him, and faſten him to the ground, that there would be no need to repeat it.

℣. 9. And David ſaid to Abiſhai, deſtroy him not, &c.] He laid his commands upon him not to hurt him: for who can ſtretch forth his hand againſt the Lord's anointed, and be guiltleſs? ſince Saul was king, and appointed to that office by the Lord, and was anointed by his order for it, and inveſted with it by him, his perſon was ſacred, and not to be touched; nor could his life be taken away by any without being guilty of a very great crime indeed, which it might be juſtly expected the Lord would reſent and puniſh.

℣. 10. And David ſaid furthermore, &c.] In order to make Abiſhai eaſy, and prevent his doing what he propoſed: as the Lord liveth; which was the form of an oath, made to aſſure Abiſhai of the truth of what follows, and therefore he need not be haſty to put Saul to death, ſince it would not be long ere he ſhould die, in one or other of the three following ways: either the Lord ſhall ſmite him; ſuddenly, which the Jews call cutting off, or death by the hand of heaven, by the immediate hand of God: or his day ſhall come to die; the time appointed for him to die a natural death, of ſome diſeaſe common to men: or he ſhall deſcend into battle, and periſh; which was commonly reckoned death, caſual or accidental, and in which laſt way Saul did die, ch. xxxi. 3, 4.

℣. 11. The Lord forbid that I ſhould ſtretch forth mine hand againſt the Lord's anointed, &c.] Or ſuffer any about him to do it; he ſpeaks of it with the utmoſt deteſtation and abhorrence: but, I pray thee, take thou now the ſpear that is at his bolſter; not to ſmite him with, as he deſired, but to carry off, and was no other than his ſceptre; ſee the note on ch. xx. 33. and the cruſe of water; which ſtood in the ſame place, as appears by the next verſe. Some take this to be a pot to make water in; others an hour-glaſs, to know the time of night, in which not ſand, but water flowed for that purpoſe: but rather this was for his refreſhment, ſhould he be hot and thirſty in the night, or to purify him from any nocturnal pollution that might happen; for, according to Clemens of Alexandria [m], it was a cuſtom of the Jews often to purify themſelves in bed: though Fortunatus Scacchus [n] thinks, Saul had this pot or cup for a religious uſe; which he had with him, and with it gave thanks to God the author of all good, whenever he ſat down to a meal; ſuch as the golden cup Philip king of Macedon always had under his pillow when he ſlept [o]: and let us go; and do nothing more; which would be ſufficient to convince they had been there, and to ſhew what was in their power to do, had they been ſo inclined.

℣. 12. So David took the ſpear, and the cruſe of water from Saul's bolſter, &c.] Abiſhai either refuſing to take them, ſince he might not take away his life; or it may be rather, David thought better of it, and took them himſelf, leſt Abiſhai ſhould be tempted, when ſo near to Saul, and his ſpear in his hand, and ſhould thruſt him with it; tho' David may be ſaid to take them by the hands of Abiſhai: and they gat them away; with the above things along with them: and no man ſaw it, nor knew it; ſaw them in the camp, or knew what they did: neither awaked; at their talking together, at the motion of their feet, and taking away the ſpear and cruſe: for they were all aſleep; which was very extraordinary, that among 3000 men none ſhould be awake, not even the centinels; which might ſeem impoſſible in a natural way, but it is accounted for by what follows: becauſe a deep ſleep from the Lord was fallen upon them; or

a

[k] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 76. M.
[l] Elæochriſm. Myrothec. l. 1. c. 44. col. 224.
[l] Antiq. l. 6. c. 13. §. 9.
[m] Stromat. l. 4. p. 531.
[n] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 33. c. 3.

a ſleep of the Lord[p]; a very great one, an uncommon one; ſo great trees, mountains, &c. are called trees and mountains of God; or, according to our ſupplement, it was from the Lord, he was the cauſe and author of it; he caſt them into this ſleep, or cauſed it to fall upon them, and locked them up in it, that they might not hear David and his ſervant when they came among them.

℣. 13. Then David went over to the other ſide, &c.] To a hill on the other ſide, oppoſite to Hachilah, where Saul lay incamped; or paſſed over the paſſage[q], the valley that lay between the two hills, and perhaps paſſed over a brook that ran in the valley, which is not unuſual; ſo Joſephus[r] ſays, that he went over a brook and came to the top of a mountain: and ſtood on the top of an hill afar off; he choſe the top of an hill, that his voice might be heard at a diſtance, as it might in a clear air, and ſtill night; and to be afar off, that he might the better make his eſcape, ſhould an attempt be made to purſue him: a great ſpace being between them; a large valley lying between the two hills.

℣. 14. And David cried unto the people, &c.] To the army of Saul with a loud voice, that he might be heard: and to Abner the ſon of Ner; particularly to him, becauſe he was general of the army: ſaying, anſwereſt thou not Abner? it ſeems he had called to him more than once, and he had returned no anſwer; perhaps not being thoroughly awake, or not knowing whoſe voice it was, and from whence it came: then Abner anſwered and ſaid, who art thou that crieſt to the king? but it does not appear that David called to the king, only to the people, and to Abner their general, and therefore may be better rendered, by the king[s]; that is, near him, or before him[t], in his preſence. Kimchi and Ben Melech explain it, upon the king, or over him; and the Targum is, at the head of the king; the meaning is, how he could act ſuch a part as to call ſo loud within the king's hearing, as to diſturb the king's reſt, and awake him out of his ſleep.

℣. 15. And David ſaid to Abner, art not thou a valiant man? &c.] Or a man[u], a man of great fame for courage and valour, a man of great authority, who had the next poſt in the army under Saul, but had not behaved like a man, worthy of his character and office: and who is like to thee in Iſrael? none that bare ſo great a name, or was in ſo high an office, who therefore ſhould have been careful to have acted according to both: wherefore then haſt thou not kept thy lord the king? took care to have ſet a guard about his perſon while he ſlept; which perhaps was neglected through a contempt of David and his men, as being in no fear of them: for there came one of the people in to deſtroy the king thy lord; that is, there had been one in the camp that night, who had entered there with that view to have deſtroyed him, had he an opportunity, and which did offer; this was true of Abiſhai, who no doubt went down with David into the camp with that intent, though David did not, and therefore he ſays one of the people, not more; for though two went in, only one with that view: David obſerves to them the danger the king was in, his carefulneſs of him to preſerve his life, to whom only it was owing, and the negligence of Abner, and thoſe under his command.

℣. 16. This thing is not good that thou haſt done, &c.] Yea, it was very bad, a great fault, and very blame-worthy, if he had neglected to ſet a watch over the king, whoſe buſineſs it was as a general; the words are expreſſed in a figure called meioſis, in which leſs is ſaid than was intended: as the Lord liveth, ye are worthy to die, becauſe ye have not kept your maſter, the Lord's anointed; if a watch was ſet, and theſe had fallen aſleep, and neglected their duty, or had deſerted their poſt; which to do was a capital crime, and deſerving of death; wherefore he does not ſay this of Abner, but of the watch: and now ſee where the king's ſpear is, and the cruſe of water that was at his bolſter; which he then held up as proofs and evidences of the truth of what he ſaid, that one had been in the camp and had carried off theſe, and who could as eaſily have deſtroyed the king, as to have taken theſe away; and as he came hither with an intent to deſtroy him, would have done it, had he not been prevented by David; all which likewiſe plainly proved the negligence of Abner, in not ſetting a watch about his maſter, or the negligence of the watch that was ſet.

℣. 17. And Saul knew David's voice, &c.] Tho' Abner at firſt did not, as appears by his words, but Saul did, being by this time thoroughly awake through the diſcourſe that paſſed between David and Abner: is this thy voice, my ſon David? the ſame queſtion he put before, when he followed him out of the cave, ch. xxiv. 16. ſee the note there: and David ſaid, it is my voice, my lord, O king; he not only owns him to be king, whom he ſought not to depoſe, but his own liege lord and ſovereign, whoſe commands he was ready to obey.

℣. 18. And he ſaid, wherefore doth my lord thus purſue after his ſervant? &c.] Suggeſting, that it was both below him to do it, and againſt his intereſt; for David was his ſervant, and he would gladly have continued in his ſervice, and done his buſineſs, but he drove him from it, and purſued him as a traitor, when he had not been guilty of any offence to his knowledge: and therefore puts the following queſtions: for what have I done? or what evil is in mine hand? what crime had he committed, that he was purſued after this manner, and his life ſought for? what had he done worthy of death? having a clear conſcience, he could boldly aſk theſe queſtions.

℣. 19. Now therefore, I pray thee, let my lord the king hear the words of his ſervant, &c.] Whether David waited for an anſwer to his queſtion, is not certain; probably he did, and obſerving none returned, deſired audience of what he had farther to ſay: if the Lord have ſtirred thee up againſt me; if he had put it into his heart to perſecute him after this manner, for ſome ſin he had committed againſt him, tho' not againſt Saul: did that appear to be the caſe, let him accept an offering; my offering, as the Targum; or my prayer, as Jarchi; I would offer a ſin-offering according to the law, to make atonement for my offence, and might hope it would be accepted; or I would make my ſupplication to God, and intreat him to forgive mine iniquity, and ſo an iſſue be put to theſe troubles; or ſhould it be a capital crime deſerving of death he was guilty of, he was content to die, and ſatisfy for his fault in that way; or if both of them had ſinned, in any reſpect, he propoſed to join in an acceptable ſacrifice to God, and ſo reconciliation be made, and matters adjuſted in ſuch a religious way; if it was the evil ſpirit from the Lord, that had entered tered into Saul, or God had ſuffered a melancholy diſorder to ſeize him, which had put him upon thoſe meaſures, let an offering agreeable to the will of God be offered, or ſupplication made for the removal of it: but if they be the children of men; that incited him to ſuch violent methods, as Abner his general, or Doeg the Edomite, and others: curſed be they before the Lord; an imprecation of the vengeance of God upon them: for they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord; meaning not from his own houſe and family, nor from the palace of Saul, but from the land of Canaan the Lord had given to his people Iſrael for an inheritance, and from the worſhip of God in it, which made it dear and precious to him; he knew if Saul went on purſuing him in this manner, he muſt be obliged to quit the land, and go into a foreign country, as he quickly did; ſo the Targum renders it, the inheritance of the people of the Lord: by being driven out of the land which was their inheritance, he ſhould be deprived of their company and converſation, and of all ſocial worſhip; the conſideration of which was cutting to him, and cauſed the above imprecation from him on thoſe who were concerned in it, and who in effect by their actions were ſaying, go ſerve other gods; for by being forced to go into an idolatrous country, he would be in the way of temptation, and be liable to be corrupted by ill examples, and to be perſuaded and enticed into idolatrous practices; and if he was kept from them, it would be no thanks to them, they did all they could to lead him into them; and if he was preſerved, it would be owing to the power and grace of God; the Targum is, "go David, among the people that worſhip idols;" the Jews have a ſaying, that he that dwells without the land of Iſrael, it is as if he had no God, and as if he ſerved an idol[q].

[p] תרדמת יהוה ſopor Domini, V. L. Montanus, Munſterus; altus ſopor Jehovæ, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [q] ויעבר העבר & tranſivit tranſitum, Montanus. [r] Antiq. l. 6. c. 13. §. 9. [s] אל המלך juxta regem, Vatablus. [t] Coram rege, Noldius, p. 58. N°. 284. [u] איש vir, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator.

℣. 20. Now therefore let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the Lord, &c.] For ſhould it be ſpilled, God, who is omniſcient, will ſee it, and take notice of it; and being righteous, and to whom vengeance belongs, he will avenge it: ſome render it, my blood ſhall not fall to the earth before the face of the Lord[r]; I am continually under his eye and care, and he will protect and defend me; and in vain is it for thee to purſue after me; I ſhall never fall into thine hands, though I may be obliged to quit my country, and go into an idolatrous nation, againſt my will: for the king of Iſrael is come out to ſeek a flea; which leaps from place to place, and is not eaſily taken: or this may denote what a mean, poor, weak, inſignificant perſon David was; and how much it was below Saul to come out with an army of choſen men in purſuit of him; ſo the Targum, "the king of Iſrael is come out to ſeek one that is weak or feeble:" as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains; as kings for their delight uſed to do, as Abarbinel obſerves; but this being a buſineſs of pleaſure, and this a bird of worth, ſome other is thought to be here intended. Indeed the partridge is repreſented as worth no more than an obolus, or five farthings, though 50 drachma's or drams were ordered to be paid for one[s]; the Septuagint renders the word an owl; the word is Kore, and from the etymology of it, one would think it was the raven or crow. Jarchi on Jer. 17. 11. takes it to be the cuckow, though here the partridge as others; Bochart[t] will have it to be the wood-cock, ſnipe or ſnite. Some chuſe to read the words, "as the Kore or partridge on the mountains hunts;" which, it is ſaid, hunts and ſeeks after the neſts of other birds, and ſits on their eggs[u]; ſee Jer. xvii. 11. ſo Saul hunted after David, though he could not take him; ſeveral naturaliſts[w] obſerve, that the partridge is very difficult to be taken by the hunter.

℣. 21. Then ſaid Saul, I have ſinned, &c.] Which is more than he acknowledged before, and yet it is to be feared he had no true ſenſe of his ſin, and real repentance for it; but, like Pharaoh, his guilty conſcience for the preſent forced this confeſſion from him; ſee Exod. ix. 27. return my ſon David; meaning to his own houſe, or rather to his palace, ſince he had diſpoſed of his wife to another man: for I will no more do thee harm; or ſeek to do it by purſuing him from place to place, as he had done, which had given him a great deal of trouble and fatigue: becauſe my ſoul was precious in thine eyes this day; and therefore ſpared, when he could have taken it away; which ſhewed that his life was dear to him, of great worth and value in his account; and therefore he would neither take it away himſelf, nor ſuffer another to do it: I have played the fool, and erred exceedingly; in ſeeking after his life, and purſuing him again, when he had ſuch a convincing proof of his ſincerity and faithfulneſs, and of his cordial affection for him, when he only cut off the ſkirts of his garment in the cave, and ſpared his life.

℣. 22. And David anſwered and ſaid, behold the king's ſpear, &c.] And which perhaps was his ſceptre, and which David therefore would not keep, leſt it ſhould be thought or ſaid that he had deprived him of an enſign of his royalty, and be interpreted as a token of his deſign to ſeize his crown and throne: and let one of the young men come over and fetch it; for notwithſtanding the acknowledgment Saul had made of his ſin and folly, David did not chuſe to carry the ſpear to him; not caring to truſt him, and put himſelf into his hands, leſt the evil ſpirit ſhould return and come upon him ſuddenly, and alter his diſpoſition and carriage; nor would he ſend any of his men with it, whoſe lives were dear to him, leſt they ſhould be ſeized as traitors, but deſires one of Saul's men might be ſent for it.

℣. 23. The Lord render to every man his righteouſneſs, and his faithfulneſs, &c.] Or recompenſe every man that deals juſtly and faithfully with others, as he had done with Saul; or the Lord who is juſt and faithful to his promiſes, reward the men that act the good and upright part; and this was a prayer of faith; for David doubted not, that tho' Saul might fail, yet God could not: for the Lord delivered thee into my hand this day; or, into an hand[x]; into the hand of Abiſhai, who had it in his power to ſlay him, when he went and took the ſpear that was at his bolſter, and would have done it, but David ſuffered him not: but I would not ſtretch forth my hand againſt the Lord's anointed; nor ſuffer another to ſtretch forth his hand againſt him; ſo careful and tender was he of his life.

℣. 24. And behold, as thy life was much ſet by this day in mine eyes, &c.] Or magnified[y]; and made great account of, as being the life of the king

[q] T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 110. 2. [r] אל יפל דמו non effundetur, Martyr. and to this ſenſe are Syr. Ar. verſ. [s] Laert. l. 2. in vita Ariſtippi. [t] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 1. c. 12. col. 81. [u] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 140. 2. Jarchi & Abarbinel in loc. [w] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 8. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 33. Æliam. Hiſt. Animal. l. 3. c. 16. [x] ביד in manum, Pagninus, Montanus. [y] גדלה magnificata eſt, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus.

king of Iſrael, and the Lord's anointed, and ſo ſpared: ſo let my life be much ſet by in the eyes of the Lord; he does not ſay in the eyes of Saul, as it ſhould have been by way of retaliation, and as it might have been expected he would have ſaid; but he had no dependence on Saul, nor expected juſtice to be done him by him; but he prays that his life might be precious in the ſight of the Lord, and taken care of, and protected by him, as he believed it would: and let him deliver me out of all tribulation; for as yet he did not think himſelf quite out of it, notwithſtanding all that Saul had ſaid, but believed the Lord would deliver him in due time; from him alone he looked for it, and on him he depended.

℣. 25. Then Saul ſaid to David, bleſſed be thou, my ſon David, &c.] He deſired God to bleſs him, and pronounced him bleſſed himſelf, believing he would be a happy and proſperous man: thou ſhalt both do great things; he had done great things already, in ſlaying Goliath, obtaining victories over the Philiſtines, and eſcaping the hands of Saul, and keeping out of them with ſo ſmall a force; and he ſhould do greater things yet: and alſo ſhalt ſtill prevail againſt Saul; and all his enemies; the Targum is, "even in reigning thou ſhalt reign, and even in proſpering thou ſhalt proſper;" he believed he would be king, ſo he had ſaid before, ch. xxiv. 20. ſo David went on his way; to the wilderneſs again very probably, putting no truſt and confidence in Saul, knowing how fickle and unſtable he was: and Saul returned to his place; to Gibeah, where his palace was.

CHAP. XXVII.

DAVID fearing he ſhould periſh by the hand of Saul at one time or another, went into the land of the Philiſtines, which Saul hearing of, ſought no more after him, ℣. 1—4. and finding favour in the eyes of the king of Gath, deſired a place in his country might be given him to reſide in; and accordingly Ziklag was given him, ℣. 5, 6, 7. from whence he made excurſions into the land of the Amalekites, and others, and utterly deſtroyed them; but impoſed on the king of Gath, pretending he had made his road into the ſouthern parts of Judah, ℣. 8—12.

℣. 1. And David ſaid in his heart, &c.] Within himſelf, and to himſelf; whilſt he was pondering things in his own mind, and conſidering the circumſtances in which he was, and things appearing very gloomy to him, he falls into a fit of unbelief, and thus addreſſes himſelf: I ſhall now one day periſh by the hand of Saul; for though he was returned to his palace, he knew he was reſtleſs and uneaſy, very unconſtant and unſtable, and not at all to be depended on; yea, he might conclude that Saul obſerving that God was with him in protecting and defending him, and by delivering him into his hands once and again, he would be the more jealous of him, and envious at him, and ſeek all opportunities and advantages againſt him; and he feared that one time or another ſuch would offer, and would be taken, and ſo he ſhould periſh by him: this was a ſtrange fit of unbelief he was ſunk into, and very unaccountable and unreaſonable it was; had he but conſidered his being anointed king by the Lord, the promiſe of God to him, which could not fail, and the providence of God that watched over him from time to time: there is nothing better for me than that I ſhould ſpeedily eſcape into the land of the Philiſtines; which may ſeem ſtrange, when he was adviſed by the prophet Gad to depart from the land of Moab, and go into the land of Judah, and where he had been ſo wonderfully preſerved; and when he was in ſo much danger, when in the land of the Philiſtines before, inſomuch that he was obliged to feign himſelf mad; and ſeeing this alſo was the very thing he lately dreaded, and curſed the men that ſhould be the cauſe of his going out of his own land into an idolatrous one: and Saul ſhall deſpair of me, to ſeek me any more in any coaſt of Iſrael; hearing that he was gone into a foreign country, would ſeek for him no more in any part of the land of Iſrael, and ſo deſpair of ever getting him into his hands, would lay aſide all thoughts about him for the future: ſo ſhall I eſcape out of his hand; and be for ever ſafe: theſe were the carnal reaſonings of his mind, under the prevalence of unbelief; and ſhews what poor weak creatures the beſt of men are, and how low their graces may ſink as to exerciſe, when left to themſelves.

℣. 2. And David aroſe, &c.] From the place where he was: and he paſſed over; the borders of the land of Canaan: with the 600 men that were with him; having neither loſt any, nor had any added to him, ſince he was at Keilah, ch. xxiii. 13. unto Achiſh, the ſon of Maoch, king of Gath; whether this was the ſame Achiſh David was with before, ch. xxi. is not certain; it ſeems as if he was not the ſame, ſince he is deſcribed as the ſon of Maoch, as if it was to diſtinguiſh him from him; though it is not improbable that he was the ſame perſon. Some think [a] that he is deſcribed not from his father, but from his mother, whoſe name was Maacha. The circumſtances of David were now very much altered from what they were when he went to Gath before; then he went ſecretly, now openly; then as a perſon unknown, now as well known; then alone, now with 600 men; then when diſcovered he was ſeized by the princes of Gath, and brought before the king, and was driven from his preſence; but now he came either at the invitation of Achiſh, hearing how he had been treated by Saul, and thinking to attach him to his intereſt, and make him more and more the enemy of Saul, and ſo free himſelf from a very powerful one, and of whoſe wiſdom and prudence, and military ſkill, and courage, and valour, he might hope to avail himſelf; or David ſent an ambaſſy to him, to treat with him about his coming into his country, and ſettlement in it, and terms to mutual ſatisfaction were agreed upon.

℣. 3. And David dwelt with Achiſh at Gath, &c.] The metropolis of his kingdom, called ℣. 5. the royal city: he and his men, every man with his houſhold; or family; which they brought with them, to ſecure them from the malice of Saul; who in their abſence might have deſtroyed them, as being being the families of traitors and fugitives, and might be the more readily received by Achiſh, as he might hope for ſome advantage from them; and beſides were pledges of their fidelity to him, and of their deſign to continue with him: even David with his two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs, and Abigail the Carmeliteſs, Nabal's wife; who had been the wife of Nabal; of theſe ſee ch. xxv. 43.

[a] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 78. E.

℣. 4. And it was told Saul, that David was fled to Gath, &c.] Who very probably had his ſpies out to watch his motions, and report to him where he was, and what he was doing: and he ſought no more again for him; by which it ſeems as if he would have ſought after him again, had he continued in the land of Iſrael; but now being gone, and in an enemy's country, and having nothing to fear from him whilſt there, he laid aſide all thoughts of ſeeking after him.

℣. 5. And David ſaid unto Achiſh, &c.] After he had been ſome time with him: if I have now found grace in thine eyes; or was in favour, as he thought himſelf to be, by various inſtances of reſpect ſhewn him: let them give me a place in ſome town in the country, that I may dwell there; he does not aſk for a city or town, but a place in one of them, though one was given him; but of whom he aſks it, it is not eaſy to ſay; though it is certain that Achiſh gave it him, ℣. 6. Perhaps he might deſire it might be given him by Achiſh, with the conſent of his princes and nobles, or at leaſt of his privy-council; that ſo it might be to general ſatisfaction, and the grant more authentic; though it may be imperſonally read, as in the Vulgate Latin verſion, let there be given me, &c. David's view in this might be partly to prevent the envy of the courtiers of Achiſh, who might think that David was too near the king, and might have too great an intereſt in him, and receive too many of his favours, and become his chief confident and prime miniſter; and partly to preſerve himſelf and people from all temptations to idolatry, and corruptions in religion; as alſo that he might have an opportunity, without the knowledge of Achiſh, to fall upon the enemies of Iſrael; though the excuſe he made was as follows, for why ſhould thy ſervant dwell in the royal city with thee? for ſo Gath was; and 600 men and their families might ſeem to croud the city; and this reaſoning of his might ſuggeſt, that he and his men were a ſtraitening of him, and a burden on him; and it might ſeem as if he was a rival with him in ſtate and dignity, when he was no other than a ſervant of his.

℣. 6. Then Achiſh gave him Ziklag that day, &c.] A city which in the diviſion of the land, was given to the tribe of Judah, and after that to the tribe of Simeon, Joſh. xv. 31. and xix. 5. though it ſeems not to have been poſſeſſed by either of them, at leaſt not long, but ſoon came into the hands of the Philiſtines, who kept it till this time, and now it returned to its right owners; according to Bunting[g] it was 12 miles from Gath: wherefore Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day; not to the tribe of Judah, though it originally belonged to it, but to the kings of it, it being granted to David, who quickly after this became king of Judah; and this was annexed to the crown-lands, and ever after enjoyed by the kings of the houſe of Judah; for this was not given for a temporary habitation, but for perpetual poſſeſſion. This clauſe ſeems to be added by the continuator of this hiſtory, after the death of Samuel; who might be Gad or Nathan, ſome ſay Ezra, and Abarbinel that Jeremiah was the writer of it.

℣. 7. And the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philiſtines, &c.] At Gath and Ziklag: was a full year and four months; or days and four months; days being ſometimes put for a year, Judg. xvii. 10. though ſome interpret it not of a year, but of ſome few days out of the fifth month, beſides the four months; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi; and Joſephus[h] makes his abode to be 4 months and 20 days; but according to the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, it was only four months; and ſo it may be rendered days, that is, four months; for according to the Jewiſh chronology[i] Samuel died 4 months before Saul, and this flight of David was after the death of Samuel, and when Saul died he left the land of the Philiſtines, and took the throne of Judah; ſee the note on ch. xxv. 1.

℣. 8. And David and his men went up, &c.] From Ziklag, where they dwelt: and invaded the Geſhurites; ſome of the old inhabitants of the land of Canaan, the remains of the Amorites, whoſe land was given to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, but could never be expelled; and therefore David had a juſt right to invade them, and if he could, either expel or deſtroy them; ſee Deut. iii. 14. Joſh. xii. 5. and xiii. 11, 13. theſe are the Geſhurites which are joined with the Philiſtines, Joſh. xiii. 2. and the Gezrites; the inhabitants of Gezer, which place fell to the tribe of Ephraim; but that tribe could not drive out the inhabitants of it, and therefore David now fell upon them as the enemies of Iſrael, and ſeized on their country as belonging to them, Joſh. xvi. 3. Judg. i. 29. and the Amalekites; the ſworn and implacable enemies of Iſrael, and whoſe memory they were laid under obligation to root out. Theſe were ſuch as had eſcaped the ſword of Saul, and had fled to the more diſtant parts, againſt whom David now went; and perhaps theſe had fled to, and mixed themſelves with the people here mentioned: for theſe nations were of old the inhabitants of the land; of the land of Canaan: as thou goeſt to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt; ſee ch xv. 7.

℣. 9. And David ſmote the land, &c.] In which the above-mentioned people dwelt, that is, the inhabitants of it: and left neither man nor woman alive; for theſe being the old Canaanites and Amalekites, according to the law of God were not to be ſpared, but utterly deſtroyed; which may be obſerved to take off the charge of cruelty that might be brought againſt David on this account, Deut. vii. 2. and xxv. 19. though this muſt be underſtood of ſuch that came within his reach; for it is certain there were people of theſe ſeveral names after this; ſee ch. xxx. 1. 2 Sam. iii. 3. 1 Kings ix. 15. and took away the ſheep, and the oxen, and the aſſes, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned, and came to Achiſh; at Gath, to make a report of what he had been about and done; and what he brought was a good booty for the ſupport of his men and their families.

℣. 10. And Achiſh ſaid, whither have ye made a road to-day? &c.] Or whither had they ruſhed in, or poured in and ſpread themſelves? or where had they made their excurſion to fetch in the prey and booty they now brought? and David ſaid, againſt the ſouth of Judah; he meant againſt ſome people that lay to the ſouth of the land of Judah, without without it; but expreſſed himſelf ſo that Achiſh might think he meant the ſouthern parts of Judah within the country; which though not a downright lie, was an equivocation, and made with a deſign to deceive; and was by no means agreeable to the character of David, nor to be defended nor imitated: and againſt the ſouth of the Jerahmeelites; theſe were the deſcendents of Jerahmeel, the ſon of Hezron, the grandſon of Judah, and ſo inhabited in the tribe of Judah, and very probably in the ſouthern part of it, 1 Chron. ii. 9, 25, 26. and againſt the ſouth of the Kenites; the poſterity of Jethro; theſe, at leaſt ſome of them, at the firſt ſeating of the children of Iſrael in the land of Canaan, went with the children of Judah into the wilderneſs of Judah, which lieth in the ſouth of Arad, Judg. i. 16.

[g] Travels, &c. p. 136. [h] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 13. §. 10. [i] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 13. p. 57.

℣. 11. And David ſaved neither man nor woman alive to bring tidings to Gath, &c.] How David had fallen upon theſe people, and deſtroyed great numbers of them, and carried off their ſubſtance; which would have given great offence to Achiſh, and cauſed him to have driven him out of his country once more; though Abarbinel is of opinion, that theſe Geſhurites, &c. were haters and enemies of Achiſh, and therefore were ſmitten and ſpoiled by David; or otherwiſe it would have been ſuch a piece of perfidy, rebellion, and ingratitude, as muſt have made the name of David to ſtink, ſince it could not but be known ſooner or later; but being the enemies of Achiſh, no notice was taken of it afterwards, nor enquiry made about it, nor complaint made of it, by any of their neighbours: nor does he ſuppoſe they were all cut off, and much leſs that this was done that it might not be told in Gath what deſtruction he had made; but that the ſenſe is, that he did not carry the captives to Gath, to be diſpoſed of there; for they would have told from whence they came, and ſo have contradicted what David ſaid, and what he would have Achiſh underſtand, as if he had been out againſt and ſmote ſome of the cities of Judah, that he might place the greater confidence in him; which end would not have been anſwered, if he had brought any of them to Gath; and ſo the words may be read without the ſupplement we make, ſpared neither man nor woman alive to bring to Gath; and ſo could tell no tales. Tho' Joſephus expreſsly ſays [k], that David ſpared the men, and abſtained from the ſlaughter of them, fearing leſt they ſhould declare to the king what he had done in plundering them: ſaying, leſt they ſhould tell on us, ſaying, ſo did David; in ſuch and ſuch places, ſuch numbers of people he deſtroyed; and ſuch quantities of cattle and goods he carried off: and ſo will be his manner all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philiſtines; this is what may be expected will be done by him in one place or another, as long as he ſtays here; nothing will be heard of but deſolation and deſtruction, in ſome part of the country of the Philiſtines or another; or among thoſe that were tributaries to them; ſo that it was not ſafe that he ſhould be allowed to abide in it.

℣. 12. And Achiſh believed David, &c.] As he would have him underſtand his ſtory; impoſing upon him by ambiguous terms; inſinuating he had been againſt the ſouthern parts of Judah, when he had been againſt foreign nations that lay to the ſouth of Judah: ſaying, he hath made his people Iſrael utterly to abhor him; they'll never forgive him the deſtruction of their cities, and the inhabitants of them, and the plunder of their goods and cattle; his name will be had in the utmoſt deteſtation and abhorrence, and he muſt never return thither any more: therefore he ſhall be my ſervant for ever; would be glad to continue with him as a ſervant, and be obliged to ſerve him faithfully and truly, ſince his own people, and even thoſe of his own tribe, would never more receive him; it being, as he underſtood it, the ſouth of Judah that he had been plundering.

CHAP. XXVIII.

THE Philiſtines gathering together, to fight with Iſrael, Saul trembled at it, not being able to get any anſwer from the Lord about it in any way whatever, ℣. 1—6. upon which he applies to a woman that had a familiar ſpirit to bring him up Samuel, which ſhe did, ℣. 7—14. and what paſſed between Saul and Samuel, or at leaſt the apparition in his form, is recorded, ℣. 15—19. which ſo ſtruck him, as to make him ſtrengthleſs, and ſo melancholy, that he refuſed to eat until perſuaded; or rather compelled by the woman and his ſervants, ℣. 20—25.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs in thoſe days, &c.] That David was in the country of the Philiſtines: that the Philiſtines gathered their armies together; out of their five principalities or lordſhips: for warfare to fight with Iſrael; with whom they were continually at war, and though ſometimes there was a ceſſation of arms, yet never any ſettled peace; and the Philiſtines took every opportunity and advantage againſt them, as they now did; when David was among them, and ſo had nothing to fear from him, but rather expected his aſſiſtance; and Samuel was dead, and Saul in a frenzy: and Achiſh ſaid unto David; who ſeems to have been at the head of the combined armies of the Philiſtines: know thou aſſuredly, that thou ſhalt go with me to battle, thou and thy men; againſt Iſrael; which was a trying thing to David, and whereby he was like to be drawn into a dilemma; either to fight againſt his country, which he could not do conſcientiouſly; or be guilty of ingratitude to Achiſh, and incur his diſpleaſure, and be liable to be turned out of his country, or treated in a worſe manner, even he and his men, to be ſeized on and cut to pieces by the forces of the Philiſtines, ſhould he refuſe.

℣. 2. And David ſaid to Achiſh, Surely thou ſhalt know what thy ſervant can do, &c.] By which he would have Achiſh underſtand, and ſo he did, that he would exert himſelf in favour of the Philiſtines, and againſt Iſrael, and do great and brave things, of which Achiſh would be made ſenſible, through his heroic courage and valour; tho' he meant rather what he could and ſhould do for Iſrael againſt the Philiſtines, if he had an opportunity; but it ſeems beſt of all to conſider David as quite undetermined, and at a loſs what to do, hoping that God in his providence would extricate him out of this difficulty, and direct him what he ſhould do, which then Achiſh would would know; and accordingly he was delivered out of it: and Achiſh ſaid to David; putting confidence in him on account of his anſwer, and believing he was hearty in engaging in the war with the Philiſtines againſt Iſrael: therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever; the captain of his body-guard, which poſt he ſhould hold for life; or he propoſed to put him into this poſt, that he might be with him, near his perſon, and under his eye, that he might obſerve how he behaved himſelf; which may ſhew ſome ſuſpicion of him.

[k] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 13. §. 10.

ver. 3. Now Samuel was dead, &c.] Had been ſo for ſome time, which is mentioned before, ch. xxv. 1. and here repeated, partly to obſerve the reaſon of the Philiſtines renewing the war, and partly to account for the conuct of Saul, in ſeeking to a witch to raiſe Samuel, and for the ſake of that ſtory: and all Iſrael lamented him; as they had great reaſon to do; ſee the note on ch. xxv. 1. and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city; there being two Ramahs, as Kimchi obſerves, it is added, in his own city, to ſhew that he was buried in that Ramah, which was his native place, and where his conſtant reſidence was; though as he ſays it may mean that he was buried within the city, and not without it; but the Targum gives a different ſenſe, "and they buried him in Ramah, and mourned for him every man in his city:" and Saul had put away thoſe that had familiar ſpirits, and the wizards out of the land; out of the land of Iſrael; had by an edict baniſhed them, or had given orders that neither witches nor wizards ſhould abide in the land; but ſhould be taken up, and proſecuted according to the law of God; which he had done either at the inſtigation of Samuel; or, as ſome think, from a conceit that the evil ſpirit he had been troubled with, was owing to them; or to make ſome appearance of a zeal for religion, and the honour and glory of God: this is obſerved to ſhew the inconſtancy of Saul, and his folly in applying after this to a perſon of ſuch a character, and to account for the fears of the woman when applied to, and afterwards when ſhe was engaged, when ſhe found it was by Saul.

ver. 4. And the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together, &c.] From different parts, and formed a conſiderable army: and came and pitched in Shunem; a city in the borders of the tribe of Iſſachar, of which ſee the note on Joſh. xix. 18. and Saul gathered all Iſrael together, and they pitched in Gilboa; a range of mountains, near Jezreel, and which Jerom[b] calls the mountains of the Philiſtines, ſix miles from Scythopolis, where there is a large village called Gelbus.

ver. 5. And when Saul ſaw the hoſt of the Philiſtines, &c.] From the mountains of Gilboa, where he had pitched his camp: he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled; on ſight of the numbers of them, and thinking perhaps of the death of Samuel, and of the loſs of David; who was now among the Philiſtines, and might poſſibly fight againſt him, and for the Philiſtines, of which he might be informed; however he was not with him, and his conſcience might accuſe him of various ſins he had been guilty of, for which he might fear the Lord would now reckon with him.

ver. 6. And when Saul enquired of the Lord, &c.] And this being not done truly and heartily, nor continued in, it was as if he had not enquired, and eſpecially after he had enquired of one that had a familiar ſpirit, as Kimchi obſerves; for ſo it is ſaid, 1 Chron. x. 14. the Lord anſwered him not, neither by dreams; which he dreamed himſelf, from whence he could not conclude any thing relating to the will of God; ſo the Targum, "the Lord did not receive his prayer even by dreams;" or by dreamers, diviners, who pretended to give anſwers by dreams: nor by Urim; there being no prieſt to conſult in this way, Abiathar having fled with the ephod, in which were the Urim and Thummim, to David; though ſome think that he ſent to Abiathar, who was with David, to enquire for him; and others that he made another ephod with Urim, and appointed another prieſt to conſult by them; neither of which are probable: nor by prophets; of which there was a ſchool not far from him, even at Naioth in Ramah, of which Samuel in his life-time was preſident; but neither by the one nor the other could Saul get an anſwer from God, who for his ſins had departed from him.

ver. 7. Then ſaid Saul unto his ſervants, &c.] That waited upon him, to ſome of them, to ſuch as he could place moſt confidence in to keep a ſecret; perhaps only the two after-mentioned: ſeek me a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit, that I may go to her, and enquire of her; that was miſtreſs of the bottle, a ventriloquiſt, that ſpoke out of her belly, or ſeemed to do; who had the ſpirit of Python or divination, converſed with the devil, and by his aſſiſtance pretended to bring up a dead perſon, and thereby foretell things to come; ſee the note on Deut. xviii. 11. a woman is pitched upon, becauſe ſuch were moſt addicted to thoſe wicked arts, and being of the weaker ſex, were more eaſily impoſed upon by Satan; and Saul ſhewed himſelf to be as weak, to ſeek after ſuch perſons; but being left of God, he acted the part of a madman, as well as of a bad man: and his ſervants ſaid to him, behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit at Endor; a city in the tribe of Manaſſeh, of which ſee Joſh. xvii. 11. it was not far from Gilboa. Mr. Maundrell ſpeaks[c] of it as near Nain, at the foot of mount Hermon; and turning a little ſouthward, he ſays, you have in view the high mountains of Gilboa. It is a tradition of the Jews[d], that this woman was the mother of Abner, the wife of Zephaniah; ſome ſay her name was Zephaniah; but, as Abarbinel obſerves, if ſo ſhe would have known Saul, and alſo Saul would have known her, and what ſhe was, if, as they ſay, ſhe was ſpared becauſe of her relation to him; nor needed he to have enquired of his ſervants for ſuch a woman.

ver. 8. And Saul diſguiſed himſelf, and put on other raiment, &c.] Stripped himſelf of his royal robes, or military apparel, as ſupreme commander, and clothed himſelf in the habit of a peaſant or a common ſoldier; and this not only that he might not be known by the woman, but that he might paſs from his army incognito, and it might not be known that he was gone, and eſpecially whither he was gone: and he went and two men with him; theſe according to the tradition of the Jews[e] were Abner and Amaſa; but it is not probable that Saul ſhould leave his army deſtitute of their general at ſuch a time as this: and they came to the woman by night; not only that they might not be ſeen, but becauſe it was a work of darkneſs they were going about, and it was only in the night-ſeaſon that ſuch perſons, [b] De loc. Heb. fol. 92. D. Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 8. 1. Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 77. B.

[c] Journey from Aleppo, p. 115.

[d] Pirke Eliezar, c. 33. fol. 35. 2.

[e] Vajikra Rabba, §. 26. fol. 167. 1. Shalſhalet ib.

persons exercised their black art; though the Jews [a] say it was day, only because of their distress it was like to night with them; but the literal sense is best: and he said, I pray thee divine unto me by the familiar spirit; exercise her art of divination, by the assistance of the familiar spirit she conversed with: and bring me him up whom I shall name unto thee; that is, from the dead; for necromancy was the kind of divination she professed; and such persons pretended to have a power to bring up a deceased person, and consult with him about secret and future things.

℣. 9. And the woman said unto him, &c.] Not knowing who he was: behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done; for by his speech and habit she perceived he was an Israelite, and so must be acquainted with what had passed in the nation, especially of a public nature, and which made a great noise, as doubtless this did: how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land; as many of them as he had knowledge of, or information about; and by this it appears, that he did not merely expel them his dominions, but he put them to death, according to the law of God, Exod. xxii. 18. Lev. xx. 27. so the putting them out of the land ℣. 3. was putting them to death, and the woman's after reasoning confirms this: one should think for Saul to be told this to his face must fill him with shame and confusion, and his conscience must accuse him of sin and folly to make this attempt; and he must stand self-convicted and self-condemned; and it was enough to have deterred him from pursuing his scheme, had not his heart been strangely hardened: wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die? she suspected that Saul and his men were persons that came to trepan her; that when they had prevailed upon her to exercise her art, would turn informers against her, to the taking away of her life, it being death to practise it.

℣. 10. And Saul sware to her by the Lord, &c.] By the Word of the Lord, as the Targum; it is much that Saul, being about such a work of darkness and wickedness, could take the name of the Lord into his mouth, and swear by him in such a solemn manner; which must surely put him in mind of His omniscience, from whom this wicked action could not be hid: saying, as the Lord liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing; the tenor of the oath was, and so the woman understood it, that he would never make any discovery of what she did, and so she would be safe from punishment; though as he was the supreme governor, and a very arbitrary prince, had it been discovered, he could have screened her from justice, though contrary to the law of God; however, he could not secure her from eternal punishment.

℣. 11. Then said the woman, whom shall I bring up unto thee? &c.] For such persons, according to their profession, pretended they were able to bring up any of the dead, that he who enquired of them should name: and he said, bring me up Samuel; the prophet Samuel he meant, and no doubt the woman so understood him, whose name was well known; he had been an old acquaintance and friend of Saul's, his counsellor and adviser in many things; and though he greatly neglected him in the latter part of his life, was very desirous of an interview with him now dead, that he might be advised by him how to get out of the straits and difficulties in which he was involved; but it argued extreme folly and madness in him to imagine, that the manes of this great and good man was at the beck of a witch, and he to be called out of the state of the dead by her inchantments; or that God would permit him to appear to him, and by him give him an answer, when he would not answer him by living prophets, nor any other way.

℣. 12. And when the woman saw Samuel, &c.] The appearance of him whom she took for Samuel; no mention is made of the methods she used to raise him, to check the curiosity of such as might be desirous to know them, and to prevent the imitation of them; though some think that Samuel, or the apparition, was seen before she made use of any, which surprized her; but this seems not so probable, and is only observed for the sake of an hypothesis; though it must be owned the word when is not in the text: she cried with a loud voice; not so much frightened at what she saw, and the manner of his appearing, and as thinking the resurrection of the dead was come, as say the Jews [b]; as what she feared would be the consequence to her, even death by the hand of Saul; for though he had sworn no punishment should come upon her, she might begin to fear she was not safe, perceiving who he was: and the woman spake to Saul, saying, why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul; how she knew this is a question; it could not be by the appearance of Samuel, for it was Samuel she was to bring up; unless with Ben Gersom it can be thought that she understood him of another man, whose name was Samuel, and not Samuel the prophet; and so when she saw him, concluded he was Saul, because of the intimacy between them in his life-time; but this is not probable, nor does it appear that she as yet knew who it was, but rather she was told by her familiar spirit, or by the apparition, so Josephus [c], that it was Saul that enquired of her; or she guessed at it by some gesture of the apparition to Saul, by way of homage and honour; and so Abarbinel thinks that the clause in ℣. 14. respects not Saul's bowing to Samuel, but Samuel bowing to Saul; and so by this means the woman knew who he was.

℣. 13. And the king said unto her, be not afraid, &c.] Meaning not of the apparition, but of him; since he had sworn no punishment should come upon her, and he should inviolably observe his oath: for what sawest thou? for as yet Saul himself saw not any thing, the woman being between him and the apparition; or she might be in another room with her familiar spirit performing the operations when Samuel appeared: and the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth; a great personage, one of a majestic form, like the gods, or judges and civil magistrates, sometimes so called, as Kimchi and R. Isaiah rightly interpret it; and so the Targum, "I saw an angel of the Lord;" a person that looked like one; for not many came up with him, and particularly Moses, as say some Jewish writers [d].

℣. 14. And he said unto her, what form is he of? &c.] Of what stature is he? or rather of what age does he seem to be? and what clothes has he on? as appears from the answer: and she said, an old man cometh up, and he is covered with a mantle; such as either priests or judges wore; and Samuel did

[a] Tanchuma apud Jarchium in loc.
[b] Pirke Eliezer, c. 33.
[c] Antiqu. l. 6. c. 14. §. 2.
[d] T. Bab. Chagigah, fol. 4. 2. Pirke Eliezer, c. 33.

did in his life-time: and Saul perceived that it was Samuel; by the deſcription ſhe gave of him, by his age and apparel; for as yet it is not certain that he himſelf ſaw him, though it ſhould ſeem as if he did by what follows: it is in the original, that it was Samuel himſelf; which ſeems to make for thoſe who think the real Samuel appeared, and no doubt Saul thought it was really he himſelf: and he ſtooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himſelf; either in reverence to Samuel, and from whom he hoped relief, and therefore was all obeyſance; or he put himſelf in this poſture, that he might liſten and hear what ſhould be ſaid; it being a general notion that ſuch ſpirits gave their reſponſes whiſpering and muttering, Iſ. viii. 19. tho' Abarbinel, as before obſerved, is of opinion, that this is to be underſtood of Samuel, that he bowed to Saul in reverence of him as a king; which does not ſo well agree with the connexion of the words. Some have thought that it was the true Samuel, or the ſoul of Samuel, that appeared; ſo Joſephus [e], and many other writers: but to this may be objected, that that would not have aſcended out of the earth, but come down from heaven; and that it can't reaſonably be ſuppoſed that it was in the power of the witch, by the aſſiſtance of the devil, to fetch it from heaven; nor be thought that God would ſend it from thence on ſuch an errand, to give Saul an anſwer, when he would not anſwer him by any prophet on earth, nor in any other way; and eſpecially it ſeems quite incredible, that he ſhould ſend it at the motion of a witch, and through her inchantments, who, according to a law of his, ought not to live; whereas nothing could have given greater countenance to ſuch a wicked profeſſion than this; nor would the true Samuel have admitted ſuch worſhip and homage to be paid him, as is expreſſed in this laſt clauſe, which angelic ſpirits have refuſed, Rev. xix. 10. and xxii. 9, 10. though perhaps no more than civil reſpect is intended: but rather this was a diabolical ſpectre, or apparition, or the devil, that appeared in the form and ſhape of Samuel, and mimicked him; and was one of thoſe deceiving ſpirits Porphyry ſpeaks [f] of, that appear in various ſhapes and forms, and pretend to be gods or dæmons, or the ſouls of the deceaſed. Some [g] think all this was the cunning and impoſture of the woman alone, or that ſhe was aſſiſted with a confederate, who acted the part of Samuel; but this is not probable.

℣. 15. And Samuel ſaid to Saul, why haſt thou diſquieted me to bring me up? &c.] This makes it a clear caſe, that this was not the true Samuel; his ſoul was at reſt in Abraham's boſom, in the ſtate of bliſs and happineſs in heaven, and it was not in the power of men and devils to diſquiet it; nor would he have talked of his being brought up, but rather of his coming down, had it been really he; much leſs would he have acknowledged that he was brought up by Saul, by means of a witch, and through the help of the devil: and Saul anſwered, I am ſore diſtreſſed; in mind, being in great ſtraits and difficulties, preſſed hard upon by men, and forſaken of God, as follows: for the Philiſtines make war againſt me; ſo they had many times, and he had been victorious, and had no reaſon to be ſo much diſtreſſed, if that was all: but he adds, and God is departed from me; and therefore he feared he ſhould be left to fall into their hands; and that he had forſaken him he concluded from hence, and anſwereth me no more, neither by prophets, nor by dreams; ſee the note on ℣. 6. he makes no mention of Urim, either becauſe they were not with him to enquire by, being carried away by Abiathar when he fled to David; or, as the Jews ſay [h], through ſhame, he ſaid nothing of the Urim before Samuel, as he took this appearance to be, becauſe he had ſlain the prieſts at Nob, and becauſe of this ſhame, they ſay, his ſin was forgiven him: therefore have I called thee, that thou mayeſt make known unto me what I ſhall do; which was downright madneſs and folly to imagine, that ſince God had forſaken him, and would give him no anſwer, that a prophet of his ſhould take his part; or when he could get no anſwer from a prophet of God on earth, that he could expect an agreeable one from one fetched down from heaven; one would be tempted to think that he himſelf believed it was the devil he was talking to, and whom he had called for under the name of Samuel, and expected to ſee; for from whom elſe could he expect advice, when he was forſaken of God, and his prophets?

℣. 16. Then ſaid Samuel, wherefore then doſt thou aſk of me, &c.] Whom thou knoweſt to have been a prophet of the Lord, and therefore can ſay nothing more or leſs than what comes from him, and is according to his will, if any thing at all; the devil perſonating Samuel, whom Saul had called for, and reaſons in ſuch language as might be thought to be his own, though ſometimes he betrays himſelf: ſeeing the Lord is departed from thee; as Saul himſelf owned: to which he adds, and is become thine enemy; to make his caſe appear ſtill more deſperate; for his whole view is to lead him to deſpair, which ſhows what ſort of ſpirit he was: though ſome underſtand this as ſpoken of David, and read the words, and he is with thine enemy [i]; is on his ſide, and favours his cauſe; ſo the Targum, "and he is for the help of a man, whoſe enmity thou ſhareſt in;" or who is at enmity with thee, meaning David; but now the true Samuel would never have ſaid this, or ſuggeſted it, that David was an enemy to Saul, for he was not.

℣. 17. And the Lord hath done to him, &c.] To David, Saul's enemy, as he inſinuated he was: as he ſpake by me; pretending to be the true Samuel, and wearing the guiſe of him, he ſpeaks his very words, which he was well acquainted with, and could deliver exactly as he did: for the Lord hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to thy neighbour; which words are expreſſed by Samuel, ch. xv. 28. even unto David; which is added by the apparition, by way of explanation, interpreting the words of David; which he might ſafely venture to do, ſeeing ſuch a train of circumſtances had occurred ſince the delivery of theſe words, which plainly made it appear he was intended.

℣. 18. Becauſe thou obeyedſt not the voice of the Lord, &c.] At Gilgal, as Abarbinel thinks; which is the firſt thing for which the kingdom was threatened to be taken from him, ch. xiii. 13, 14. nor executedſt his fierce wrath upon Amalek; in ſparing Agag, and the beſt of the cattle, ch. xv. 9, 28. therefore hath the Lord done this thing unto thee this day; forſaken him, rent his kingdom from him, and would deliver him into the hands of the Philiſtines, as follows: had he been the true Samuel, he would have told him of ſome other ſins of his pro-

[e] Ut ſupra.
[f] De abſtinentia, l. 2. apud Grotium in loc.
[g] See Webſter's Diſplaying of ſuppoſed Witchcraft, &c. ch. 8. p. 166, &c.
[h] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 12. 2.
[i] רעך עמך & eſt cum inimico tuo, Pagninus, Vatablus; ſo V. L.

provoking to the Lord; as his ſlaughter of the prieſts at Nob, his cruel perſecution of David, and eſpecially of his aſking counſel of one that had a familiar ſpirit at this time, of which not a word is ſaid, and yet was the very tranſgreſſion for which Saul died, 1 Chron. x. 13, 14.

℣. 19. Moreover, the Lord will alſo deliver Iſrael with thee into the hands of the Philiſtines, &c.] Not a word of comfort does he ſpeak unto him; it being the buſineſs of this foul ſpirit to drive him to deſpair by the permiſſion of God; had he been the true Samuel, he would have directed him to have altered his courſe of life, and eſpecially his behaviour toward David, and adviſed him in thoſe difficulties to ſend for him, who might have been of ſingular uſe unto him; he would have exhorted him to repentance for his ſins, and humiliation before God on account of them, and given him hope on this, that God would appear for him, and work deliverance, as he had done; but inſtead of this, tells him, that he and his army would be delivered into the hands of the Philiſtines, which he might make a ſhrewd gueſs at, and venture to ſay from the circumſtances of things, and the ſituation Saul and his people were in; the armies of the Philiſtines were very numerous, and thoſe of Iſrael comparatively weak; Saul was quite diſpirited, and God had forſaken him: and to-morrow ſhalt thou and thy ſons be with me; which if underſtood in what ſenſe it may, ſeems to be a lie of the devil, and at beſt an ambiguous expreſſion, ſuch as he has been wont to give in the heathen oracles; if he meant this of himſelf as an evil ſpirit, it could not be true of Saul and all his ſons, that they ſhould be with him in hell, eſpecially of Jonathan, who appears throughout the whole of his life to have been a good man; if he would have it underſtood of him as perſonating Samuel, and of their being with him in heaven, it muſt be a great ſtretch of charity to believe it true of Saul, ſo wicked a man, and who died in the act of ſelf-murder; though the Jews [k], ſome of them, underſtand it in this ſenſe, that his ſins were pardoned, and he was ſaved; and if it is taken in the ſenſe of being in the ſtate of the dead, and in the earth, from whence he is ſaid to aſcend, and where the body of Samuel was, which ſeems to be the beſt ſenſe that is put upon the phraſe, with me; yet this was not true, if he meant it of all the ſons of Saul, as the expreſſion ſeems to ſuggeſt; for there were Iſhboſheth, and his two ſons by Rizpah, which ſurvived him; nor was it true of Saul and his ſons that they were cut off, and that they died the next day; for the battle was not fought till ſeveral days after this, ſee ℣. 23. ch. xxix. 1, 10, 11. and xxx. 1, 17. and xxxi. 8, 9. if it ſhould be ſaid, that to-morrow ſignifies ſome future time, and not ſtrictly the next day, this ſhows the ambiguity of the expreſſion uſed, and the inſignificancy of it to the preſent purpoſe; for who knew not that Saul and his ſons would die ſome time or another? the Lord alſo ſhall deliver the hoſt of Iſrael into the hand of the Philiſtines; which is only a repetition of what is ſaid in the firſt clauſe.

℣. 20. Then Saul fell ſtraightway all along on the earth, &c.] Fell at his full length at once, as if he had been thunder-ſtruck, or pierced through with a dart or ſword: and was ſore afraid, becauſe of the words of Samuel; as he ſuppoſed they were, whoſe words never failed: and there was no ſtrength in him; to riſe up again, he was quite diſpirited and ſtrengthleſs: for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night; which contributed the more to his weakneſs; not only his fears, but not eating any food, occaſioned his weakneſs, and that thro' want of an appetite, by reaſon of the great concern of his mind in his preſent troubles.

℣. 21. And the woman came unto Saul, &c.] Having left him and the apparition in a room by themſelves to converſe together, and perhaps on hearing him fall to the ground came in: and ſaw that he was ſore troubled; by his lying on the ground, and the agonies he ſeemed to be in, and the uneaſineſs that ſat upon his countenance: and ſaid unto him, behold, thine handmaid hath obeyed thy voice; in divining by her familiar ſpirit for him, and in bringing up Samuel to him, as he deſired: and I have put my life in my hand; expoſed it to the utmoſt danger, ſince a perſon of her profeſſion, and taken in the exerciſe of it, was puniſhable with death; and eſpecially ſhe was in the greater danger, as it was Saul himſelf, who had by an edict expelled all ſuch perſons from his dominions, who now employed her, as ſhe perceived: and have hearkened unto thy words which thou ſpakeſt unto me; to the oath he had taken, that no hurt ſhould come to her, which ſhe confided in, and relied upon, and to what he bid her do, according to her art of divination.

℣. 22. Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou alſo unto the voice of thine handmaid, &c.] She argues, that as ſhe had hearkened unto him to the endangering of her life, it was but reaſonable, and might be expected, that he would hearken to her in a caſe that would be to the preſervation of his life: and let me ſet a morſel of bread before thee, and eat, that thou mayeſt have ſtrength, when thou goeſt on thy way; which ſhe might urge, not merely out of reſpect to the king, but for her own ſake, leſt ſhould he die in her houſe, ſhe might be taken up, not only for a witch, but as being acceſſory to the death of the king; and therefore ſhe moves, that he would take ſome food for refreſhment of nature, that he might be able to depart her houſe, and go on his way to his army.

℣. 23. But he refuſed, and ſaid, I will not eat, &c.] Chuſing rather to die with famine than by the ſword of the Philiſtines; though perhaps his meaning is, he could not eat, his ſtomach loathed it, being overwhelmed with grief and trouble: but his ſervants, together with the woman, compelled him; not by force, but by arguments; they over-perſuaded him, and prevailed upon him to try to eat: and he hearkened unto their voice; and agreed to eat, if he could; ſo he aroſe from the earth; on which he lay at his full length: and ſat upon the bed; or couch, it being now the cuſtom to recline on couches at eating; though ſome deny that this cuſtom obtained ſo early.

℣. 24. And the woman had a fat calf in the houſe, &c.] This was reckoned a very dainty diſh in thoſe countries, and fit for any gueſts, ſee Gen. xviii. 7. Joſephus ſays [l], ſhe vouchſafed to feed and take care of it in her houſe, and it was very familiar with her; and he highly commends the liberality of the woman, and as worthy of imitation: and ſhe haſted and killed it; and dreſſed it in ſome way or another, and which in thoſe times was done ſpeedily: and took flour and kneaded it, and did bake unleavened bread therewith; which was ſooneſt made, ſhe not having time to leaven it.

℣. 25. And ſhe brought it before Saul, and before his ſervants, and they did eat, &c.] Of the fatted calf, and unleavened bread, which ſhe ſet upon a table before before them, in the beſt manner ſhe could: then they roſe up, and went away that night; that it might not be ſeen in what houſe they had been, and that they might get to the camp without being diſcovered by the Philiſtines, or known by the Iſraelites that they had been out.

[k] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 12. 2.

[l] Antiq. l. 6. c. 14. §. 3, 4.

CHAP. XXIX.

THIS chapter gives an account of David's going forth with the armies of the Philiſtines, ℣. 1, 2. of his being objected to by the princes of the Philiſtines, who inſiſted upon his being ſent back, ℣. 3, 4, 5. of the report Achiſh made of it to David, and the diſcourſe that paſſed between them upon it, ℣. 6—10. whereby David had a way unexpectedly opened for him to be freed from this ſervice, which he gladly embraced, ℣. 11.

℣. 1. Now the Philiſtines gathered together all their armies to Aphek, &c.] Not the city in the tribe of Judah of that name, Joſh. xv. 53. where the Philiſtines had a camp in the time of Samuel, ch. iv. 1. but rather that in the tribe of Aſher, Joſh. xix. 30. unleſs there was one of this name in the tribe of Iſſachar, not mentioned, ſince it ſeems to have been near Jezreel and Shunem, which were both in that tribe, Joſh. xix. 18. and the Iſraelites pitched by a fountain which is in Jezreel; in the valley of Jezreel; of which ſee the notes on Joſh. xix. 18. and Hoſ. i. 5.

℣. 2. And the lords of the Philiſtines paſſed on by hundreds, and by thouſands, &c.] Not that there were ſo many lords, for there were but five of them; but theſe marched, ſome at the head of hundreds with them, and others at the head of thouſands: but David and his men paſſed on in the rereward with Achiſh; who being the generaliſſimo brought up the rere, and David, whom he had appointed captain of his life-guards, attended him with his men, which in point of gratitude he could not refuſe; and yet was in the greateſt ſtrait and difficulty how to act, it being both againſt his conſcience and his intereſt to fight againſt Iſrael, and was waiting and hoping for ſome appearance of providence to deliver him out of this dilemma, and which was quickly ſeen; but Abarbinel thinks David had no other notion in going to the battle, but of being the body-guard of Achiſh, and accompanying him, and that he ſhould not fight againſt Iſrael, nor for the Philiſtines; neither hurt the one, nor help the other.

℣. 3. Then ſaid the princes of the Philiſtines, &c.] To Achiſh; not thoſe of the court of Achiſh, who were his ſubjects, but the confederate princes with him in this war, the lords of the other principalities, as appears by the freedom they took with him, ℣. 4. what do theſe Hebrews here? or Jews, as the Targum; what haſt thou to do with them, or they to be with thee? men of another nation and religion, and known enemies to the Philiſtines: and Achiſh ſaid unto the princes of the Philiſtines; in order to ſoften them, and reconcile them to theſe men, and their being with him: is not this David the ſervant of Saul the king of Iſrael; between whom there had been a quarrel, and the former had fled from the latter to him: which hath been with me theſe days, or theſe years; had been with him many days, and he might ſay years, as he had been with him one whole year, and part of another, ſee ch. xxvii. 7. and he might have known him longer, if he was the ſame Achiſh David firſt fled to; Kimchi interprets it, that he knew him as well as if he had been with him as many years as days: and I have found no fault in him ſince he fell unto me unto this day? the affair of David's going againſt the Geſhurites, &c. not being yet known by him, or if it was, he approved of it, they being enemies of his; this ſhews, that David behaved with a great deal of prudence to have ſuch a character as this from a king of the Philiſtines.

℣. 4. And the princes of the Philiſtines were wroth with him, &c.] With Achiſh, for giving ſuch a character of David, and taking his part, in order to detain him, if poſſible: and the princes of the Philiſtines ſaid unto him, make this fellow return; they ſpeak of him with contempt, and inſiſt on it, that Achiſh order him to turn back, and go no farther with them: that he may go again to his place which thou haſt appointed him; to Ziklag, the place that Achiſh had given him for his reſidence; they did not deſire to have him ſent to his own country, and to Saul, ſince ſhould a reconciliation be made between them, he would be of great ſervice to Saul againſt them: and let him not go down with us to battle; into the valley of Jezreel, where the Iſraelites had pitched: leſt in the battle he be an adverſary to us; and fall upon them behind, being in the rere, whilſt they were engaging in the front with Iſrael: for wherewith ſhould he reconcile himſelf unto his maſter? to Saul he had offended, and fled from: ſhould it not be with the heads of theſe men? the Philiſtines; or unleſs by the heads of theſe men[n]; he had no other way of making his peace with his maſter, but by cutting off the heads of the Philiſtines; and therefore he was a dangerous man to take with them into the battle.

℣. 5. Is not this David, of whom they ſang one to another in dances, &c.] Long ago: ſaying, Saul ſlew his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands; ſo that he is an old ſworn enemy of ours; and the more valiant and victorious he has been, the leſs is he to be truſted; ſee ch. xviii. 7. and xxi. 11.

℣. 6. Then Achiſh called David, &c.] Being ſo near him, that he could call unto him himſelf, or he ſent ſome perſon to him, to require his preſence with him: and ſaid unto him, ſurely, as the Lord liveth; or Jehovah liveth; an oath by the true God, of whom Achiſh might have ſome knowledge, as he alſo had of angels, from his converſation with David; though the heathens had a notion of a ſupreme being, and yet worſhipped other gods, and whom they called Jove, from this name of Jehovah. Kimchi obſerves, that all confeſs a firſt cauſe; and therefore when he ſwore to David, he ſwore by him in whom David believed, perhaps out of complaiſance to him, or that David might pay the greater regard to his oath: thou haſt been upright; ſincere, honeſt, faithful and juſt in all his deportment; yet not ſo ſincere as he thought him to be, witneſs the road he pretended he had taken againſt the ſouth of Judah, ch. xxvii. and thy going-out and thy coming-in with me in the hoſt is is good in my ſight; his behaviour in the army, attending him as the keeper of his head, or captain of his life-guard, was exceeding agreeable to him, and he could wiſh to have him continued: for I have not found evil in thee, ſince the day of thy coming unto me unto this day; whatever he had done before to the Philiſtines, having greatly afflicted and diſtreſſed them in his wars with them, of which this ſeems to be an exception: nevertheleſs, the lords favour thee not; or thou art not acceptable to them, yea, very offenſive and diſagreeable.

[n] דלא בראשי ת aiſi per capita, Noldius, p. 257. N°. 1147.

℣. 7. Wherefore now return, &c.] To Ziklag: and go in peace; not only in a peaceable manner, eaſy and ſatisfied, as David was at his very heart to hear this, but all proſperity and happineſs attend thee; the Jews [n] diſtinguiſh between wiſhing perſons to go in peace, and to go to peace; the former they obſerve has not iſſued happily, when the other has, and they inſtance in the wiſh of Jethro to Moſes, and of David to Abſalom: that thou diſpleaſe not the lords of the Philiſtines; and what would be the conſequence of that he could not ſay, but ſuggeſts it would be moſt for his peace and ſafety to depart.

℣. 8. And David ſaid unto Achiſh, what have I done? &c.] This queſtion is anticipated by the ſpeech of Achiſh, who had declared he had found no evil in him; but David muſt ſay ſomething to put on an appearance of concern for being diſmiſſed, when he was heartily glad of it: and what haſt thou found in thy ſervant, ſo long as I have been with thee unto this day, that I may not go fight againſt the enemies of my lord the king? which cannot be excuſed of great diſſimulation, ſince nothing was more foreign from his heart, and againſt his will, than fighting againſt the Iſraelites, and which he determined to avoid if poſſible; and glad at heart he was to be thus excuſed, and freed from the ſtraits and difficulties he was involved in; but that the Philiſtines might have no cauſe of ſuſpicion of him, and that he was warmly attached to their intereſt among whom he was ſtill to continue, he put on theſe airs. Abarbinel is of opinion, that the lords of the Philiſtines were only afraid of David, but not of his men, and therefore were not ſolicitous about their going, but his, which gave David a concern; and ſince he was particularly ſingled out, he deſired to know what ſpecial evil had been found in him; but when he underſtood by the following anſwer of Achiſh, that his ſervants were to go with him, he was content, and ſaid no more; but the princes aſked, what do theſe Hebrews here? ℣. 3.

℣. 9. And Achiſh anſwered and ſaid unto David, &c.] In reply to the queſtions: I know that thou art good in my ſight as an angel of God; for his great wiſdom, and graceful behaviour, and inoffenſive carriage: notwithſtanding the princes of the Philiſtines have ſaid, he ſhall not go up with us to the battle; though Achiſh had ſo good an opinion of him, and had declared it in council, yet an order had paſſed there, that he ſhould not go to battle with them; there were but five of them, and Achiſh was one of the five, ſo that there were four to one for the diſmiſſing him; and Achiſh, tho' a king, was obliged to ſubmit.

℣. 10. Wherefore now riſe up early with thy maſter's ſervants that are come with thee, &c.] Meaning his 600 men, who were conſidered as the ſervants and ſubjects of Saul, though with David; and which tacitly carried in it the objection of the Philiſtine lords unto them, that ſince they were the ſervants and ſubjects of Saul, they were not to be truſted in a battle with him; leſt finding an opportunity, they ſhould ſeize it, and thereby ingratiate themſelves into his favour again: and as ſoon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart; he adviſes them to get away as ſoon as they could, leſt the Philiſtines ſhould fall upon them, and force them, and he could not ſay what miſchief might befal them; wherefore for their ſafety it was beſt to depart as ſoon as they could ſee their way.

℣. 11. So David and his men roſe up early to depart in the morning, &c.] Being as willing and ready to go, as the Philiſtines were deſirous they ſhould: to return into the land of the Philiſtines; for now they were in the land of Iſrael, at Aphek, near Jezreel, from whence they went back to Ziklag, which was within the principality of Gath; and, according to Bunting [o], was 88 miles from the place where the army of the Philiſtines was; but it ſeems not very likely that it ſhould be ſo far off: and the Philiſtines went up to Jezreel; where the army of the Iſraelites lay encamped, in order to fight them. By the diminſion of David from the army of the Philiſtines, he was not only delivered from a ſad plunge he was in, either of acting an ungrateful part to Achiſh, or an unnatural one to Iſrael; but alſo by the preſſing charge of Achiſh to get away as early as poſſible in the morning, he came time enough to reſcue the prey the Amalekites had taken at Ziklag his city, as in the following chapter; and the providence of God in this affair is farther obſervable, as by ſome repreſented, ſince if David had ſtayed in the camp of the Philiſtines, it would not have been ſo eaſy for him on the death of Saul to have got from them, and ſucceed in the kingdom, as he could and did from Ziklag.

CHAP. XXX.

THIS chapter relates the condition Ziklag was in, when David and his men came to it, the city burnt, and their families carried captive by the Amalekites, which occaſioned not only a general lamentation, but mutiny and murmuring in David's men, ℣. 1—6. the enquiry David made of the Lord what he ſhould do, who is bid to purſue the enemy; and being directed by a lad where they were, fell upon them, and routed them, and brought back the captives with a great ſpoil, ℣. 7—20. the diſtribution of the ſpoil, both to thoſe that went with him, and to thoſe who through faintneſs were left behind, ℣. 21—25. and the preſents of it he ſent to ſeveral places in the tribe of Judah, who had been kind to him when he dwelt among them, ℣. 26—31.

℣. 1.

[n] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 64. 1. Sepher Alphes, par. 1. fol. 421. 2.

[o] Travels, &c. p. 137.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when David and his men were come to Ziklag on the third day, &c.] Either from their departure from thence, when they went out with Achiſh, or rather from the time of their leaving Achiſh, and the camp of the Philiſtines; ſo long they were upon their march homewards, ſee 2 Sam. i. 1, 2. and no wonder, if it was the diſtance of 88 miles, ſee the note on ch. xxix. 11. that the Amalekites had invaded the ſouth, and Ziklag; the ſouthern parts of the land of the Philiſtines, and of Judah, as appears from ℣. 14. taking the opportunity of the Philiſtines being gone into the land of Iſrael, and particularly of David's abſence from Ziklag, to whom they bore a grudge for his invaſion, deſtruction and ſpoil of them not long ago, ſee ch. xxvii. 8. and ſmitten Ziklag, and burnt it with fire; not that they ſmote the inhabitants of it, there were no men in it, and the women and children they carried captive; but they demoliſhed the buildings in it, pulled down the houſes after they had rifled them, and burnt them with fire, that David and his men might dwell there no more.

℣. 2. And had taken the women captives, that were therein, &c.] There being no other to take, the men were gone with David: they ſlew not any, either great or ſmall; that is, of the women, whether married or unmarried, old, or maidens, or children; which was very much, ſince David deſtroyed all that came within his reach, men and women, when he invaded them, ch. xxvii. 9. but perhaps this was not owing to their humanity, but to their covetouſneſs, deſigning to make an advantage of them by ſelling them for ſlaves; no doubt they were reſtrained by the providence of God: but carried them away, and went on their way; homewards with their captives.

℣. 3. So David and his men came to the city, &c.] Or however to the place where it had ſtood, and where it now lay in ruins: and behold, it was burnt with fire; the whole city was laid in aſhes: and their wives, and their ſons, and their daughters, were taken captives; as it appeared afterwards; for upon their firſt coming they knew not but they were all deſtroyed; and which they might reaſonably ſuppoſe from their former treatment of them, unleſs there were any left upon the ſpot which could inform them how things were, which does not appear, and which muſt make their diſtreſs the greater.

℣. 4. Then David and the people that were with him liſt up their voice, &c.] In doleful ſhrieks, and loud lamentations: and wept, until they had no more power to weep; till nature was quite exhauſted, and no moiſture left; ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion, till tears failed in them; they could ſhed no more.

℣. 5. And David's two wives were taken captives, &c.] Which is obſerved as one cauſe of his particular diſtreſs, and another follows in the next verſe: Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs, and Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite; that is, who had been his wife; for he was now dead, and was ſo before ſhe was married to David; both theſe came with him to Gath, and were left at Ziklag when he went with Achiſh, and here they were taken; ſee ch. xxv. 42, 43. and xxvii. 3.

℣. 6. And David was greatly diſtreſſed, &c.] Partly for the loſs of his two wives, and partly becauſe of the mutiny and murmuring of his men: for the people ſpake of ſtoning him; as the Iſraelites did of Moſes and Aaron, Numb. xiv. 10. the reaſon of this was, becauſe, as they judged, it was owing to David that they went along with Achiſh, and left the city defenceleſs, and becauſe he had provoked the Amalekites by his inroad upon them, who took this opportunity of avenging themſelves. Abarbinel is of opinion, that it was his exceſs of ſorrow for his two wives, and his remiſſneſs and backwardneſs to take vengeance on their enemies, that provoked them, and put them on talking after this manner: becauſe the ſoul of all the people was grieved, every man for his ſons and for his daughters; as well as David; and they were very deſirous of recovering them if poſſible, and of taking vengeance on thoſe who had carried them captive: but David encouraged himſelf in the Lord his God; took all patiently, and exerciſed faith on his God; he encouraged himſelf in the power and providence of God; in the promiſes of God, and his faithfulneſs in keeping them; in a view of his covenant-relation to God; in remembrance of the grace, mercy and goodneſs of God, and his former experiences of it; hoping and believing that God would appear for him in ſome way or another, and work ſalvation for him. The Targum is, "he ſtrengthened himſelf in the Word of the Lord his God;" in Chriſt the Word of God, and in the power of his might, and in the grace that is in him, Eph. vi. 10. 2 Tim. ii. 1.

℣. 7. And David ſaid to Abiathar the prieſt, Abimelech's ſon, &c.] The ſon of Ahimelech, who was ſlain at Nob by the order of Saul; and Abiathar his ſon, who fled to David with the ephod, on the death of his father, was now high-prieſt in his room; and who it ſeems was with David when he went with Achiſh, and returned with him; for had he been left at Ziklag, he and his ephod, in all probability, had been carried off by the Amalekites, unleſs we can ſuppoſe him under the protection of a ſpecial providence: it is much David had not enquired of the Lord by him about his going with Achiſh; perhaps the preſent diſaſter brought to mind that neglect, and made him the more diligent now: I pray thee, bring me hither the ephod; not to put it on himſelf, but that the high-prieſt might put it on, and enquire by it before him of the Lord: and Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David; for the ſake of David, that enquiry might be made before him of the Lord, by Urim and Thummim.

℣. 8. And David enquired of the Lord, &c.] That is, by Abiathar, who reported his queſtions to the Lord in his name: ſaying, ſhall I purſue after this troop? the large company of the Amalekites, as it appears by what follows they were: ſhall I overtake them? two queſtions are here put together, and anſwers returned to them, contrary to a notion of the Jews; ſee the note on ch. xxiii. 11. and he anſwered him, purſue; which reſpects the firſt queſtion: for thou ſhalt ſurely overtake them; which is an anſwer to the ſecond queſtion, and a full one, giving full aſſurance of overtaking; to which is added, more than what was enquired about: and without fail recover all; their wives, ſons and daughters, and the ſpoil that was taken; or in delivering thou ſhalt deliver [p], out of the hands of the Amalekites, whatſoever they had taken.

℣. 9. So David went, he and the 600 men that were with him, &c.] Encouraged by the oracle of the Lord: and came to the brook Beſor; which Adrichomius [q] places in the tribe of Simeon; it is thought thought to be near Gaza. Ariſtæus[r] ſpeaks of brooks that flowed by Gaza and Aſhdod, places that belonged to the Philiſtines; ſome take it to be the river of the wilderneſs in Amos vi. 14. ſee the note there: where thoſe that were left behind ſtayed; or a part of them were left, as the Targum; all the 600 came to this brook, but 200 of them were left here, as the following verſe ſhows, and ſtayed here till the reſt returned; for this is not to be underſtood of any that were left behind at Ziklag, for all came from thence to this brook.

[p] הצל תציל eruendo erues, Pagninus, Montanus; eripiendo erepturus es, Piſcator. [q] Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 133.

℣. 10. But David purſued, he and 400 men, &c.] Not diſcouraged with being obliged to leave a third part of his little army behind; tho' it was doubtleſs a trial of his faith, with theſe to purſue an enemy, whoſe numbers he knew not, which muſt greatly exceed his; for after the rout and ſlaughter of them, as many eſcaped on camels as David had with him, ℣. 17. for 200 abode behind, which were ſo faint; through their grief and ſorrow for the loſs of their wives and children, and through their march from the camp of the Philiſtines to Ziklag, and from thence hither, that they looked like a corps, as the word ſignifies; Procopius Gazæus has it, only 70 men: ſo that they could not go over the brook Beſor; being ſo weak and feeble; for this was not owing to fear of their enemies, and faintheartedneſs on that account, then it would rather have been ſaid, they would not go over; the Targum renders the word faint, by reſtrained or prohibited, as if they were forbid by David to go over, but were ordered to tarry here by the ſtuff, whilſt the reſt purſued; and, according to the Syriac and Arabic verſions, they were placed there, that none might go over the brook; and it ſeems, by ℣. 22. that they had a good will to go over, but were made to abide there; or as all Gideon's army, but 300, were ſent back, and not ſuffered to go with him, being too many.

℣. 11. And they found an Egyptian in the field, &c.] As they paſſed along, lying there, having been ſick, and was half-ſtarved, almoſt dead: and brought him to David; to know what was to be done with him; being in the habit of a ſoldier, they concluded he might be one of the company they were in purſuit of; but whether they ſhould kill him, or make uſe of him as an intelligencer and guide, could they bring him to himſelf, they knew not, and therefore brought him to David: and gave him bread, and he did eat, and they made him drink water; both which they had with them for their own uſe; had he been an Amalekite, and not an Egyptian, they might not have relieved or ſpared him, but muſt have deſtroyed him at once; ſee Deut. xxiv. 19.

℣. 12. And they gave him a piece of cake of figs, &c.] That were dried and preſſed together, and made into cakes: and two cluſters of raiſins; or dried grapes, as the Targum: and when he had eaten, his ſpirit came again to him; he ſeemed to be quite diſpirited, almoſt lifeleſs, but upon eating ſome food he was refreſhed, and his ſpirits revived, and he was capable of converſing: for he had eaten no bread, nor drank any water, three days and three nights; that is, one whole day, and part of two days, as appears from the next verſe.

℣. 13. And David ſaid unto him, to whom belongeſt thou? &c.] To what country or people? and to whom among them? and whence art thou? of what nation? where waſt thou born? what countryman art thou? for his being called an Egyptian before ſeems to be by anticipation, unleſs it was gueſſed at by his habit; for until he had eaten and drank, he could not ſpeak, and ſo could not be known by his ſpeech: for he ſaid, I am a young man of Egypt; that was the country he belonged to, and came from; he was an Egyptian by birth: ſervant to an Amalekite; one of thoſe that had invaded the country, and burnt Ziklag, as it follows: and my maſter left me, becauſe three days agone I fell ſick; which was very barbarous and cruel to leave him at all, when they had camels with them, ℣. 17. and no doubt carriages for their arms, proviſion, and ſpoil, and men; and more ſo to leave him without any body with him to take care of him, and without any food, was he capable of eating any; but ſo it was ordered by the providence of God, that he ſhould be left to be the inſtrument of the juſt ruin of his maſter, and of the whole troop.

℣. 14. We made an invaſion upon the ſouth of the Cherethites, &c.] The Philiſtines ſo called, or at leaſt one nation of them, ſuch that dwelt to the ſouth of the land, ℣. 16. ſee the note on Zeph. ii. 5. and upon the coaſt which belongeth to Judah; the ſouth of Judah, where David pretended he had been, and had ſpoiled, and which was now actually done by the Amalekites, ch. xxvii. 10. and upon the ſouth of Caleb; that part of the tribe of Judah which belonged to Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, and his poſterity, and which was the ſouthern part of it, Joſh. xv. 19. and we burnt Ziklag with fire; and then departed.

℣. 15. And David ſaid unto him, canſt thou bring me down to this company? &c.] That is, ſhew him, or direct him where they were: and he ſaid, ſwear unto me by God; the Targum is, by the Word of the Lord; but it is highly probable this man had no notion of Jehovah, and his Word, or of the true God; only that there was a God, and that an oath taken by him was ſolemn, ſacred and inviolable, and might be truſted to and depended on: that thou wilt neither kill me; for he found now he was in the hands of thoſe, whoſe city he had been concerned in plundering and burning, and ſo might fear his life was in danger: nor deliver me into the hands of my maſter; who had been a cruel one to him, and therefore would gladly be clear of him; and if he had nothing elſe againſt him, his late uſage of him was ſufficient to raiſe his reſentment of him: and I will bring thee down to this company; or ſhew him where they were, having heard them ſay where they would ſtop, and make merry, and divide their ſpoil; and perhaps his maſter might tell him they would be at ſuch a place at ſuch a time, where, if he was better, he might come to them; the Vulgate Latin verſion adds, and David ſware to him; which, though not expreſſed in the original text, was no doubt done by him; and the Syriac and Arabic verſions begin the following verſe thus, when David had ſworn to him.

℣. 16. And when he had brought him down, &c.] To the place where the company of the Amalekites were, or near it: behold, they were ſpread abroad upon all the earth; they were not in any regular order, and much leſs in any military form, but lay about in the fields, ſcattered here and there, were in detached parties: ſome eating and drinking; in one place: and others dancing; in another place, expreſſing their joy, and perhaps their thankfulneſs to their idols: becauſe of the great ſpoil they had taken out of the land of the Philiſtines, and out of the land of Judah; from Ziklag, and from the ſouth ſouth of the Cherethites, and the ſouth of Judah, they had invaded, ℣. 14. and here they were in the greateſt ſecurity; knowing that the armies of the Philiſtines were gone into the land of Iſrael, and were about to engage in battle with the Iſraelites, and David they ſuppoſed was with the Philiſtines, ſo that they had nothing to fear from any quarter; and thus it is often, that when men cry peace, peace, ſudden deſtruction comes upon them.

[r] Hiſt. 72 Interpret. p. 41.

℣. 17. And David ſmote them from the twilight, even unto the evening of the next day, &c.] As there are two twilights, the twilight of the morning, and the twilight of the evening; this is differently underſtood; ſome take it for the twilight of the morning, and that it was night when David came to them, and let them alone till they were drunk and aſleep, and then early in the morning fell upon them, and ſmote them until the evening; ſo Joſephus[s] relates it; but others take it to be the twilight of the evening, and that he fell upon them that night, and continued the ſlaughter of them to the evening of the next day, with which agrees the Targum; nay, ſome take the next day, or the morrow, to be, that which followed after the two evenings; ſo that this ſlaughter was carried on to the third day: and there eſcaped not a man of them, ſave 400 young men that rode upon camels, and fled; that ſort of camels called dromedaries, according to Joſephus[t], and which were very ſwift, and much uſed by the Arabians, near whom theſe people dwelt, ſee Iſ. lx. 6. Jer. ii. 23.

℣. 18. And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away, &c.] The wives and children of the Iſraelites, and their goods, excepting the proviſions they had ate: and David reſcued his two wives; which is particularly obſerved, becauſe a ſpecial concern of his.

℣. 19. And there was nothing lacking to them, neither ſmall nor great, neither ſons nor daughters, &c.] Not any of the leaſt or youngeſt, nor any of them that were grown up; for as theſe were not ſlain, but carried captive, ſo they were brought back, and not one miſſing, ſee ℣. 2. neither ſpoil, nor any thing they had taken to them; except the food they had ate, and the liquor they had drank, as before obſerved; and perhaps what they had ate and drank were none of theirs, but the Philiſtines: ſo that David recovered all; taken in the utmoſt extent.

℣. 20. And David took all the flocks, and the herds, &c.] Which they had taken from the land of the Philiſtines, or which belonged to the Amalekites properly: which they drave before thoſe other cattle; which had been carried from Ziklag; firſt went the ſpoil taken from other places, and then thoſe taken from David and his men, or what was found at Ziklag. Abarbinel ſuppoſes the meaning to be this, that the herds were driven before the flocks, that the oxen were led out firſt, and then the ſheep followed, as being the weaker ſort, and more eaſily to be driven, and carried off; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt: and ſaid, this is David's ſpoil; either the whole of it, it being owing to him that it was got or brought back; or this may reſpect ſome peculiar part of it made a preſent of to him; or it may deſign what the Amalekites had taken from others, which was at the diſpoſal of David, as diſtinguiſhed from what was taken from Ziklag, and was reſtored, or to be reſtored to the proper owners: it may be taken in the firſt and more general ſenſe, as being the ſong, or the burden of the ſong, ſung by David's men as they returned with the ſpoil, giving him all the honour of it, of whom, but a little before, they talked of ſtoning.

℣. 21. And David came to the 200 men, &c.] Left at the brook Beſor: who were ſo faint that they could not follow David; or, as the Targum, were reſtrained from going over after him; either through faintneſs of ſpirits, and weakneſs of body, or through the order of David that they ſhould not follow him; and which ſeems to receive ſome countenance from what follows: whom they had made alſo to abide at the brook Beſor; to guard the paſſage there, and to tarry by and keep the ſtuff: and they went forth to meet David, and to meet the people that were with him; to congratulate them upon the victory they had obtained, and to ſee and receive their wives and children, and what portion of the ſpoil might be divided to them: and when David came near to the people, he ſaluted them; aſked them of their welfare, whether they were in better health, and recovered of their faintneſs and weakneſs, as it ſhould ſeem they were, by their coming forth to meet him.

℣. 22. Then anſwered all the wicked men, and men of Belial, of thoſe that went with David, &c.] Who were ill-natured men, and of covetous diſpoſitions, as what is called their anſwer ſhews; and it ſeems by that, as if the 200 men had moved, that they might have their ſhare in the ſpoil, or that David had given ſome intimation that they ſhould: and ſaid, becauſe they went not with us, we will not give them ought of the ſpoil that we have recovered; which was very unreaſonable not to let them have what was before their own, which was recovered; and indeed it was but right they ſhould have their ſhare in the ſpoil that was taken, which was of others, as will appear hereafter: but they were of opinion, and were come to a reſolution they ſhould have no more, ſave to every man his wife and his children; which was very unkind and ungenerous: that they may lead them away, and depart; but whither? Ziklag was burnt, the land of Iſrael they would not return unto, where they muſt fall a ſacrifice to Saul; theſe men cared not where they went, ſo that they were rid of them, that they might not have any ſhare with them in the ſpoil.

℣. 23. Then ſaid David, ye ſhall not do ſo, my brethren, &c.] Tho' he ſaw through their wickedneſs, and diſapproved of the bad ſentiments they had embraced, yet he deals gently with them, calling them brethren, being of the ſame nation and religion, and his fellow-ſoldiers; yet at the ſame time keeps up and maintains his dignity and authority as a general, and declares it ſhould not be as they willed, and gives his reaſons for it, that it was not fit they ſhould do as they pleaſed: with that which the Lord hath given us; what they had was given them, and therefore as they had freely received, they ſhould freely give; and what was given them, was not given to them only, but to the whole body, by the Lord: who hath preſerved us, and delivered the company that came againſt us into our hand; it was not by their own power and might that they got the victory over the enemy, and the ſpoil into their hands, but it was through the Lord only; and therefore as they ſhould not aſſume the honour of the victory to themſelves, ſo neither ſhould they claim the ſpoil as wholly belonging to them.

℣. 24. For who will hearken unto you in this matter? &c.] No wiſe and juſt man will take on your your ſide of the queſtion, and join with you in excluding your brethren from a ſhare in the ſpoil: but as his part is that goeth down to the battle, ſo ſhall his part be that tarrieth by the ſtuff; as theſe 200 men did; they were placed to abide by and watch the carriages, the bag and baggage the reſt had left there, that they might be the lighter, and make their purſuit more ſwiftly: beſides, they guarded the paſs here, and were alſo expoſed to danger; for if the 400 had been cut off, and the enemy had returned, they muſt all have periſhed; and therefore as they had their poſt aſſigned them, and were liable to danger, it was but juſt and reaſonable they ſhould have the ſhare in the ſpoil; eſpecially ſince it was not want of will in them they did not go with them, but weakneſs of body: they ſhall part alike; this was David's determination and deciſion, and it was an equitable one: ſomething ſimilar to this was directed by the Lord in the war of Midian, Numb. xxxi. 25, &c. and was practiſed in the times of Abraham, Gen. xiv. 24. and is agreeable to the light of nature, and what has been practiſed by the heathens, particularly the Romans, as Polybius [u] relates; who tells us, that every man brought booty into the camp, when the tribunes divided it equally to them all; not only to thoſe which remained in battle, but to thoſe that guarded the tents and the baggage, to the ſick, and to thoſe that were appointed to any ſervice, ſee Pſ. lxviii. 12. and ſo the Turkiſh hiſtorian ſays [w], that the Piſidians, who lived on ſpoil, gave a part not contemptible to thoſe that abode at home with their wives.

[s] Antiq. l. 6. c. 4. §. 6.

[t] Ibid.

℣. 25. And it was ſo from that day forward, &c.] Or upwards [x], of old, formerly; and ſo may refer either to what was done at the war with Midian, Numb. xxx. 27. or in the times of Abraham, Gen. xiv. 23, 24. and ſo Jarchi obſerves, it is not ſaid, hence forward, but upwards, it being a ſtatute and cuſtom in the days of Abraham; the ſame he notes on Gen. xiv. 24. where he, David, learnt this from thence; though Joſephus [y] is expreſs for it, that this law obtained from the time of David; and ſuch was his authority, though as yet not king, but a wiſe and juſt commander: that he made it a ſtatute and an ordinance for Iſrael unto this day; it appeared ſo reaſonable and equitable, that it was always regarded and attended to.

℣. 26. And when David came to Ziklag, &c.] Perhaps with an intention to rebuild it, and make it ſtill the place of his reſidence; and it is poſſible there might be ſome houſes that eſcaped the flames, and if not, tents might be pitched until the city was rebuilt, and it appears that he continued there ſome time: he ſent of the ſpoil to the elders of Judah; of that part of it which belonged to himſelf as a general: even to his friends; ſuch as had been kind to him when he ſojourned among them; ſo that this was a piece of gratitude, as well as of policy in him, to make his way to the throne the eaſier, he perceiving the time drawing on for the expiration of the kingdom in the family of Saul; and beſides, ſome in thoſe parts he ſent of the ſpoil to, might have been ſufferers by the Amalekites, ſo that it was but a point of juſtice to reſtore to them what had been taken from them; for they had invaded the ſouth of Judea, and took ſpoils from thence, ℣. 14—16. it was to his friends in thoſe parts he ſent, not to the inhabitants of Ziph and Keilah, which were places in the tribe of Judah; but theſe having attempted to betray him, were not intitled to his favours, though they were not the objects of his vengeance: ſaying, behold, a preſent for you, of the ſpoil of the Lord's enemies; or a bleſſing [z], which he ſent them with a good-will, wiſhing health and happineſs to them; which they might without heſitation receive, ſeeing it was not the ſpoil of private enemies, or of what was taken from them in a way of private revenge, but the ſpoil of the enemies of the Lord, his and their common enemies; nor need they ſcruple eating and enjoying it, though the ſpoil of thoſe that curſed the Lord, as Abarbinel obſerves, ſince this they had with the bleſſing of the Lord.

℣. 27. To them which were in Bethel, &c.] One part of the ſpoil was ſent to them; not to thoſe in Bethel, in the tribe of Benjamin, but in Kirjath-jearim, called Bethel, or the houſe of God, becauſe the ark was there, ſee ch. vii. 1. and x 3. moreover, this place was alſo called Baalah, which ſome think is referred to here, ſee Joſh. xv. 9. and to them which were in ſouth Ramoth; a city of the tribe of Simeon, which lay within the lot of Judah; of which ſee Joſh. xix. 8. and to them which were in Jattir; a city in the tribe of Judah, mentioned in Joſh. xv. 48. ſee the note there.

℣. 28. And to them which were in Aroer, &c.] Not Aroer in the tribe of Gad beyond Jordan, where David is never ſaid to be, but ſome city of this name in the tribe of Judah; the Greek verſion of Joſh. xv. 22. inſtead of Adadah has Arouel: and to them which were in Siphmoth; which very probably was in the tribe of Judah, though no where elſe mentioned: and to them which were in Eſhtemoa; a Levitical city given to the Levites by the children of Judah, Joſh. xxi. 14.

℣. 29. And to them which were in Rachal, &c.] Another city of the tribe of Judah, but no where elſe ſpoken of: and to them which were in the cities of the Jerahmeelites; which lay to the ſouth of Judah, ch. xxvii. 10. and to them which were in the cities of the Kenites; who dwelt in the wilderneſs of Judah, in the ſouth of Arad, Judg. i. 16.

℣. 30. And to them which were in Hormah, &c.] This was a city alſo in the tribe of Judah; of which ſee Joſh. xv. 30. and to them which were in Chor-aſhan; or the lake of Aſhan, which was in the ſame tribe, ſee Joſh. xv. 42. and to them which were in Athach; no where elſe mentioned; the Greek verſion has Nombe inſtead of it, which ſome take to be the ſame with Nob; but that was in the tribe of Benjamin.

℣. 31. And to them which were in Hebron, &c.] A noted city in the tribe of Judah, in the mountainous part of it, and a city of refuge, and where David was afterwards anointed, firſt king over Judah, and then over Iſrael, 2 Sam. ii. 4. and v. 3. and to all the places where David himſelf and his men were wont to haunt; where they had their walks, and went to and fro when perſecuted by Saul; all ſuch places, and the inhabitants of them, David had a grateful remembrance of, who ſheltered and relieved him in the times of his diſtreſs.

CHAP.

[u] Hiſt. l. 10. p. 365.
[w] Chalcocondyl. de reb. Turc. l. 5. p. 161.
[x] ומעלה & ſupra, Pagninus, Montanus; & jam olim, Tigurine verſion.
[y] Antiq. l. 6. c. 14. §. 6.
[z] ברכה benedictio, Pagninus, Montanus.

CHAP. XXXI.

THIS chapter gives an account of the battle between the Philiſtines and the Iſraelites, which had been preparing for, and the iſſue of it; in which Saul, his three ſons, and his ſervants, were ſlain, upon which his army fled, and ſeveral of his cities were taken, ℣. 1—7. what the Philiſtines did with his body and his armour, ℣. 8—10. the former of which, together with the bodies of his ſons, the men of Jabeſh-gilead reſcued, and burnt them, and buried their bones under a tree at Jabeſh, expreſſing great ſorrow and concern, ℣. 11—13.

℣. 1. Now the Philiſtines fought againſt Iſrael, &c.] Being come to Jezreel, where Iſrael pitched, ch. xxix. 1, 11. they fell upon them, began the battle: and the men of Iſrael fled from before the Philiſtines; at the firſt onſet, as it ſhould ſeem: and fell down ſlain in mount Gilboa; which was near, and whither fleeing they were purſued and ſlain, at leaſt great numbers of them.

℣. 2. And the Philiſtines followed hard upon Saul, Stuck to him, puſhed him cloſe, bore hard upon him in that part of the army where he was, having a deſign upon his perſon: and upon his ſons; who were with him: and the Philiſtines ſlew Jonathan; who is mentioned firſt, being the eldeſt ſon, and perhaps firſt ſlain; and this was ſo ordered by the providence of God, that David's way to the throne might be more clear and eaſy; for though Jonathan would not have oppoſed him himſelf, yet the people, fond of him, would, at leaſt many of them, been for ſetting him on the throne; and though he would have refuſed it, knowing David was the Lord's anointed, and have made intereſt for him, this would have looked as if he had made him king, and not the Lord: and Abinadab, and Malchiſhua, Saul's ſons; theſe alſo were ſlain; the former of theſe is called Iſhui, ch. xiv. 49. Iſhboſheth either was not in the battle, being left at home, as unfit for war, or to take care of the kingdom; or elſe he fled with Abner, and others, and eſcaped, and who was to be a trial to David.

℣. 3. And the battle went ſore againſt Saul, &c.] Preſſed heavy upon him; he was the butt of the Philiſtines, they aimed at his perſon and life: and the archers hit him; or found him [a]; the place where he was, and directed their arrows at him: and he was ſore wounded of the archers; or rather, he was afraid of them, as the Targum, for as yet he was not wounded; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; and is the ſenſe Kimchi and Ben Melech give of the word: he was not afraid of death, as Abarbinel obſerves, he choſe to die; but he was afraid he ſhould be hit by the archers in ſuch a way, that he ſhould not die immediately, and ſhould be taken alive and ill uſed; the Philiſtines, eſpecially the Cherethites, were famous for archery; ſee the note on Zeph. ii. 5.

℣. 4. Then ſaid Saul unto his armour-bearer, &c.] Who, the Jews [b] ſay, was Doeg the Edomite, promoted to this office for ſlaying the prieſts: draw thy ſword, and thruſt me through therewith; for if he was wounded, yet not mortally, and it is certain he did not ſo apprehend it. It is much the ſword of the armour-bearer ſhould be ſheathed in a battle; but perhaps he was preparing for flight, and ſo had put it up in its ſcabbard: leſt theſe uncircumciſed come and thruſt me through, and abuſe me; leſt they ſhould not diſpatch him at once, but put him to a lingering and torturing death, and inſult him, and mock at him, as they did Samſon: but his armour-bearer would not, for he was ſore afraid; to lay his hand on the king, the Lord's anointed, to take away his life, being more ſcrupulous of doing that, if this was Doeg, than of ſlaying the prieſts of the Lord; or he might be afraid of doing this, ſince, ſhould he ſurvive this action, he would be called to an account by the Iſraelites, and be put to death for killing the king: therefore Saul took a ſword, and fell upon it; or rather the ſword, the ſword of his armour-bearer, and ſo was a ſelf-murderer: the Jews endeavour to excuſe this fact of Saul, becauſe he knew he ſhould die in battle from the words of Samuel; and being preſſed ſore by the archers, he ſaw it was impoſſible to eſcape out of their hands, and therefore judged it better to kill himſelf, than to fall by the hands of the uncircumciſed; but theſe excuſes will not do. Joſephus [c] denies he killed himſelf; that though he attempted it, his ſword would not pierce through him, and that he was killed by the Amalekite, and that that was a true account he gave to David in the following chapter; though it ſeems rather to be a lie, to curry favour with David, and that Saul did deſtroy himſelf.

℣. 5. And when his armour-bearer ſaw that Saul was dead, &c.] By his own hands, and not by the hands of the Amalekite, which the armour-bearer would ſcarcely have ſuffered: he fell likewiſe upon his ſword, and died with him; ſome think that Saul, and his armour-bearer, died by the ſame ſword, which was the armour-bearer's; and if he was Doeg, they fell probably by the ſame ſword with which the prieſts of the Lord were murdered at Nob, ch. xxii. 18. and it is obſerved by an hiſtorian [d], that the murderers of Julius Cæſar ſlew themſelves with the ſame dagger they deſtroyed him.

℣. 6. So Saul died, and his three ſons, and his armour-bearer, &c.] Only with this difference, his three ſons died honourably in the field of battle, but he and his armour-bearer deſtroyed themſelves. Joſephus ſays [e], he reigned 18 years in the life of Samuel, and after his death 22 years, which make the forty years the apoſtle aſcribes to him, Acts xiii. 21. Eupolemus [f], an heathen writer, makes him to reign 21 years; but of the years of his reign, both before and after the death of Samuel, chronologers are not agreed, ſee ch. xxv. 1. and the note on Acts xiii. 21. and all his men that ſame day together; not all the ſoldiers in his army; for many of them fled and eſcaped, and even Abner the general of the army, but his houſhold-ſervants, or thoſe that were near his perſon, his body-guards.

℣. 7. And when the men of Iſrael that were on the other ſide of the valley, &c.] The valley of Jezreel; of which ſee the note on Hoſ. i. 5. and they that were on the other ſide Jordan; or rather on that ſide;

[a] ויכוצאהו & invenerunt eum, Pagninus, Montanus. [b] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Reg. fol. 77. B. [c] Antiq. l. 6. c. 14. §. 7. [d] Sueton. Vit. Cæſar. c. 89. [e] Antiq. l. 6. c. 14. §. 9. [f] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 30. p. 447.

ſide; for the phraſe will bear to be rendered either way, and ſo may mean that ſide of Jordan on which the battle was fought; for as for the other ſide, or that beyond it, the Iſraelites there could not be in ſuch fear of the Philiſtines, nor do we ever read of their inhabiting any cities there; tho' as the phraſe is uſed of the valley, as well as of the river, it may be rendered about the valley, and about Jordan [g], and ſo deſcribes ſuch that dwelt near to each of them: ſaw that the men of Iſrael fled, and that Saul and his ſons were dead; that is, had information and intelligence of thoſe facts, for it is not to be ſuppoſed they ſaw them with their eyes: they forſook the cities, and fled; fearing they ſhould be put to the ſword, or carried captive: and the Philiſtines came and dwelt in them; having nothing more to do than to come and take poſſeſſion.

℣. 8. And it came to paſs on the morrow, &c.] The day after the battle, which perhaps was fought till night came on: when the Philiſtines came to ſtrip the ſlain; of their clothes, and take from them whatever was valuable, as their booty: that they found Saul and his ſons fallen in mount Gilboa; to which they had betaken themſelves, when the battle went againſt them in the valley; of which, ſee ch. xxviii. 4.

℣. 9. And they cut off his head, &c.] And faſtened it in the temple of Dagon, 1 Chron. x. 10. perhaps that which was at Aſhdod, one of the principalities of the Philiſtines, ch. v. 1, 2. and ſtripped off his armour; or veſſels [h], his clothes as well as his armour, and what he had about him; as for his crown on his head, and the bracelet on his arm, the Amalekite took them before the Philiſtines came, 2 Sam. i. 10. and ſent into the land of the Philiſtines round about; not his head and his armour, for they were placed in the temple of their idols; unleſs we can ſuppoſe theſe were firſt carried about for ſhow, and as proofs of the victory: but rather meſſengers, who were ſent expreſs with the news, to publiſh it in the houſe of their idols, and among the people; that ſo they might be glad and rejoice, and give praiſe to their idols, to whom they aſcribed the ſucceſs they had.

℣. 10. And they put his armour in the houſe of Aſhtaroth, &c.] A temple dedicated to their deities, called by this name; of which ſee the note on Judg. ii. 13. Nothing was more common with the Gentiles than to place in their temples the arms they took from their enemies, as is ſtrongly expreſſed by Homer [i] and Virgil [k]; and indeed the Jews did the ſame, as appears by the ſword of Goliath being laid up in the tabernacle, ch. xx. 9. Here alſo the heathens [l] hung up their own arms when the war was ended: and they faſtened his body to the wall of Bethſhan; which Joſephus [m] ſays is the ſame which in his time was called Scythopolis, from the Scythians that poſſeſſed it, before called Nyſa, according to Pliny [n]: it was given to the tribe of Manaſſeh, but they could not drive out the inhabitants of it, ſo that it was always in the poſſeſſion of others, Joſh. xvii. 11. Judg. i. 27. where it is called Bethſhean; to the wall of the city they faſtened the body of Saul with nails, as it is commonly underſtood; but it is more likely they hung it on a gibbet without, and near the walls of the city; ſo the Targum, they hung his body; or, as Joſephus [o], they crucified it there; and ſo they did alſo the bodies of his ſons, as appears from ℣. 12.

℣. 11. And the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead, &c.] Who lived on the other ſide Jordan, about eight miles from Bethſhan, according to Fuller [p]: heard of that which the Philiſtines had done to Saul; not only that they had got the victory over him, and routed his army, but had abuſed his body, and hung it up by way of reproach and ignominy; which they could not bear to hear of, remembering with gratitude the kindneſs he had ſhown to them, in delivering them out of the hands of Nahaſh the Ammonite, ch. xi.

℣. 12. All the valiant men aroſe, &c.] Of the city of Jabeſh-gilead, fired with indignation at the Philiſtines ill uſage of Saul and the bodies of his ſons: and went all night; not only for ſecrecy, but for haſte: and took the body of Saul and the bodies of his ſons from the wall of Bethſhan, and came to Jabeſh; brought them with them thither, the Philiſtines either having no knowledge of it, or not daring to oppoſe them: and burnt them there; that is, the fleſh of them, for the bones they buried, as in the next verſe; and this they did, contrary to the common uſage of the country, which was not to burn; but this they did, that if the Philiſtines ſhould come to recover them, they would not be able to do it: tho' the Targum is, "they burnt over them, as they burn over their kings there;" they made a burning for them of ſpices over them; or of their beds, and other houſhold-goods, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve, though they prefer the other ſenſe; ſee 2 Chron. xvi. 14. and xxi. 19. perhaps the true reaſon might be, becauſe they were putrid and infectious.

℣. 13. And they took their bones, and buried them under a tree at Jabeſh, &c.] For though they burned the bodies, yet ſo as to preſerve the bones; and theſe, together with the aſhes of the parts burnt, they gathered up, and buried under a tree near this city; this tree is ſaid to be an oak, 1 Chron. x. 12. ſo Deborah, the nurſe of Rebekah, was buried under an oak, Gen. xxxv. 8. The Jews generally interred their dead under ſome oak, as a fore-mentioned writer obſerves [q]; pleaſed perchance with the parallel, as he expreſſes it, that as theſe plants, ſeemingly dead in winter, have every ſpring an annual reſurrection, ſo mens dry bones ſhall have new ſap put into them at the day of judgment: and faſted ſeven days; not that they ate and drank nothing all that time, but they faſted every day till evening, as the Jews uſed to do; ſo long it ſeems a man may live without eating, but not longer; ſee the notes on Exod. xxiv. 18. 1 Kings xix. 8. this they did, as Kimchi thinks, in memory of the ſeven days Nahaſh the Ammonite gave them for their relief, in which time Saul came and ſaved them, ch. xi. 3.

[g] בעבר העמק—בעבר הירדן circa convallem illam—circa Jordanem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Noldius, p. 205. N°. 936. [h] את כליו vaſa ejus, Munſter, Montanus. [i] Τευχεα ζωλησας, &c. Iliad. 7. ℣. 83. [k] Multaque præterea ſacris in poſtibus arma, &c. Æneid. 7. ℣. 183. So Perſius, Satyr. 6. ℣. 45. [l] Meſſal. Corvin. de Auguſt. Progen. [m] Ut ſupra, l. 8. [n] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 18. Vid. Solin. Polyhiſtor. c. 49. [o] Ut ſupra. [p] Piſgah-ſight of Paleſtine, b. 2. ch. 2. p. 82. [q] Ibid.

The

The Second Book of SAMUEL, otherwiſe called, The Second Book of the KINGS.

THIS book, in many copies of the Hebrew Bible, is carried on without any new title put unto it; the reaſon of it is, becauſe, by ſome, this, with the preceding, has been reckoned but one book: hence the Jews ſay [a], Samuel wrote his book, not his books; in others it is called Samuel ſecond; and by the Vulgate Latin, the ſecond book of Samuel, which we call the ſecond of Kings; tho' why his name ſhould be put to it at all, I ſee not, ſince it neither concerns him, nor could it be written by him, being an hiſtory of events after his death. The Greek verſion calls it the ſecond of Kings; and the Syriac verſion, the ſecond book of the kings of Iſrael; whereas there is but one king of Iſrael it makes mention of, and of whoſe actions only it is an hiſtory; and therefore with greater propriety it is called, as the Arabic verſion, the book of David the prophet, of whoſe reign, from the beginning to the end of it, it gives an account: wherefore Iſidore [b] thinks it was written by David; and if ſo, it has this mark of ſimplicity and integrity, that the writer does not ſpare himſelf, nor conceal his own faults, and particularly that very capital one, the affair of Bathſheba, and alſo his numbering of the people; but it is moſt probable, that it was written by Nathan and Gad [c], ſee 1 Chron. xxix. 29. but whoever was the penman of it, there is no doubt to be made of its being written by inſpiration, or that it is canonical; which has never been queſtioned, ſince there ſtands in it a famous prophecy concerning the building of the temple by a ſon of David, which had an exact accompliſhment, ch. vii. 12, 13. as well as of the family of David, for a great while to come, which alſo was fulfilled, ℣. 19. and an eminent paſſage concerning the Meſſiah, the ſon of David, and of his divine ſonſhip, ℣. 14. quoted by the apoſtle Paul in proof of it, Heb. i. 5. It contains an hiſtory of above forty years, for ſo long David reigned, ſeven years and ſix months in Hebron, over Judah, and 33 years in Jeruſalem, over all Iſrael and Judah; and this book relates his laſt words.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter contains an account of the death of Saul and Jonathan, as related to David by an Amalekite, ℣. 1—10. of the ſorrow he and his men were filled with at the news of it, ℣. 11, 12. of his order to put to death the meſſenger that brought the tidings, for his concern in the death of Saul, according to his own teſtimony, ℣. 13—16. and of a lamentation compoſed by David on this occaſion, ℣. 17—27.

℣. 1. Now it came to paſs after the death of Saul, &c.] The third day after, as appears from the next verſe: when David was returned from the ſlaughter of the Amalekites; as related in 1 Sam. xxx. 17. and David had abode two days in Ziklag; which, though fired by the Amalekites, was not utterly conſumed, but there was ſtill ſome convenience for the lodging of David and his men; within this time he ſent his preſents to ſeveral places in the tribe of Judah, of which mention is made in the chapter before quoted, and at the ſame time it was, that ſo many mighty men came to him from ſeveral tribes ſpoken of in 1 Chron. xii.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs on the third day, &c.] After the battle was fought, in which Saul was ſlain: that behold, a man came out of the camp from Saul; that is, from them who were in the camp with Saul, for he was dead. Some ſay [d] this was Doeg the Edomite, which is not likely that he ſhould come with ſuch tidings to David; beſides, if he was Saul's armour-bearer, as others ſay, ſee 1 Sam. xxxi. 4. he died with Saul; nor his ſon, as others [e], which is not at all probable, though his being an Edomite is no objection, ſince the Amalekites were of the race of Edom: with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head; in token of mourning, and was the bringer of bad tidings, ſee 1 Sam. iv. 12.

[a] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 14. 2. [b] Origin. l. 6. c. 2. [c] Alting. Theolog. Hiſt. loc. 2. p. 86.
[d] Peſikta in Jarchi in loc. [e] Tanchuma in Yalkut in loc. Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 lib. Reg. fol. 77. C.

12. and ſo it was when he came to David, that he fell to the earth, and did obeiſance; as being the riſing ſun, Saul's ſucceſſor, and now king.

℣. 3. And David ſaid unto him, from whence comeſt thou? &c.] It is very likely by his appearance, and circumſtances he ſuſpected from whence he came: and he ſaid unto him, out of the camp of Iſrael am I eſcaped; which plainly ſuggeſted that that was in danger, confuſion and diſtreſs.

℣. 4. And David ſaid unto him how went the matter? I pray thee tell me, &c.] That is, how went the battle? on which ſide the victory? and he anſwered, that the people are fled from the battle; meaning the people of Iſrael, they had given way, and turned their backs upon their enemies, and were fled: and many of the people alſo are fallen and dead; fell by the ſword in the purſuit of them, and were not only wounded, but were ſlain, and theſe great numbers of them: and Saul and Jonathan his ſon are dead alſo; which are mentioned laſt, becauſe they fell ſome of the laſt; and this part of the account is reſerved by the meſſenger to the laſt, becauſe it was the article of the greateſt importance; the death of theſe two perſons, the one the enemy, and the other the friend of David, and the death of both made way for his acceſſion to the throne.

℣. 5. And David ſaid unto the young man that told him, &c.] Theſe tidings: how knoweſt thou that Saul and Jonathan his ſon be dead? this he particularly enquired after, as what moſt affected him, and was moſt material for him to know; and his meaning is, whether he had this of his own ſight and knowledge, or by report.

℣. 6. And the young man that told him, &c.] So it ſeems he was, and therefore could not be Doeg, more likely his ſon of the two; but there is no reaſon to believe he was either of them, who can't be thought to be well diſpoſed to David: ſaid, as I happened by chance upon mount Gilboa; who was either a paſſenger that came that way juſt as the army was routed, and part had fled to Gilboa; or if a ſoldier, was not one of thoſe that attended Saul, and was of his body-guard, but happened on the flight to come to the ſame ſpot on Gilboa where Saul was: behold, Saul leaned upon his ſpear; that that might pierce him through and die; but this ſeems not true, for he fell upon his ſword for that purpoſe, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4. and lo, the chariots and horſemen followed hard after him; the charioteers and cavalry, of which part of the Philiſtine army conſiſted; though this alſo does not agree with the account in the above place; for according to that they were the archers that preſſed him hard, and hit him.

℣. 7. And when he looked behind him, &c.] To ſee how near the enemy was, and who were purſuing him: he ſaw me, and called unto me; by which it ſhould rather ſeem that he belonged to the Philiſtines than to the Iſraelites, and as his being an Amalekite ſhews; for ſuch an one would hardly be admitted among the latter, though it is moſt likely he was with neither, but happened to come that way juſt at that time: and I anſwered, here am I; ready to hear what thou haſt to ſay, and do thy pleaſure.

℣. 8. And he ſaid unto me, who art thou? &c.] Being willing to know whether a friend or an enemy, which by his coming behind him he could not tell: and I anſwered him, I am an Amalekite; which he might be; but it is not likely he ſhould tell Saul he was, which would not recommend him to him; though indeed he was now in ſuch circumſtances, that the Amalekites had nothing to fear from him; and if he was ſlain by him, as Joſephus[f] affirms he was, it ſeems to be a juſt retaliation on him for ſparing any of that race, contrary to the will of God.

℣. 9. And he ſaid unto me again, ſtand, I pray thee, upon me, and ſlay me, &c.] Which it can hardly be thought Saul would ſay; ſince he might as well have died by the hands of the uncircumciſed Philiſtines, which he endeavoured to avoid, as by the hands of an Amalekite: for anguiſh is come upon me; or trembling, as the Targum, not through fear of death, but through fear of falling into the hands of the Philiſtines, and of being ill uſed by them. Some render the words, my embroidered coat, or breaſt-plate, or coat of mail, holds me[g], or hinders me from being pierced thro' with the ſword or ſpear; ſo Ben Gerſom[h]: becauſe my life is yet whole in me; for though he had been wounded by the archers, yet he did not apprehend he had received any mortal wound, but he was ſtill heart-whole; and therefore feared he ſhould fall into their hands alive, and be ill treated by them.

℣. 10. So I ſtood upon him, and ſlew him, &c.] Preſſed with all his weight upon his body, that ſo the ſpear might pierce through him, and ſlay him; thus he repreſents his death to be brought about: becauſe I was ſure that he could not live after that he was fallen; this is not conſiſtent with what he had ſaid before, both that he was leaning on his ſpear, and not fallen to the ground, and that his life was whole in him: and I took the crown that was upon his head; which made him conſpicuous, and therefore the Philiſtines aimed at him, and preſſed hard after him, ℣. 6. tho' ſome think that this was not on his head, but carried into the field of battle, ready to be put on if victory was on his ſide; and others ſay it was in the poſſeſſion and care of Doeg, who at his death gave it to his ſon to carry to David, and thereby gain his favour: and the bracelet that was on his arm; of gold no doubt, ſo Joſephus[i]; ſuch as great perſonages uſed to wear, men as well as women, ſee Gen. xxxviii. 18. Ezek. xxiii. 42. eſpecially military men[k]. Jarchi takes them to be the totaphot or phylacteries on the arm, which is not probable: and have brought them hither unto my lord; as enſigns of royalty, fit only for a king, Saul's ſucceſſor, as this perſon, by calling him lord, owned him to be, and thought by bringing thoſe to him to be highly honoured and rewarded.

℣. 11. Then David took hold on his clothes, &c.] Not on the young man's but his own: and rent them; on hearing of the death of Saul and Jonathan, ſee Gen. xxxvii. 34. from whence the Jews[l] gather, that a man is bound to rend his clothes for a prince, and for the father of the Sanhedrim, ſince Saul, they ſay, was the prince, and Jonathan the father of that court: and likewiſe all the men that were with him; rent their clothes alſo, in imitation of him; the ſame cuſtom obtained among the Gentiles on mournful occaſions[m].

℣. 12.

[f] Antiq. l. 6, c. 14. §. 7.
[g] חישבני tunica ſcutulata, Braunius; ocellata chlamys, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; thorax villoſus ſeu pelliceus, Texelii Phœnix, p. 219, [h] Vid. Braunium de Veſt. Sacerdot. Heb. l. 1. c. 17. §. 9.
[i] Ut ſupra.
[k] Vid. Liv. Hiſt. Decad. 1. l. 10. c. 44.
[l] T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 26. 1.
[m] —— it ſciſſa veſte Latinus. Virgil. Æneid. 12. prope finem.

℣. 12. And they mourned and wept, &c.] Inwardly mourned, and outwardly wept, no doubt ſincerely: and faſted until even; eat no food all that day until it was evening, the manner in which faſts uſed to be kept: for Saul and for Jonathan his ſon; it is no wonder that David and his men ſhould mourn for Jonathan, a good man, and a valiant one, and a dear and faithful friend of David's; but it may ſeem not ſo clear a thing, that they ſhould mourn for Saul a wicked man, and a perſecutor of David without cauſe: but it ſhould be obſerved, that he had been reconciled to David, and had not ſince attempted any thing againſt him; beſides, he was his prince, his father-in-law, and the rather he might be grieved for his death, and his men with him, becauſe it was matter of joy to the Philiſtines, and they would endeavour to avail themſelves of it; and eſpecially the manner of his death, that he ſhould be the cauſe of it himſelf, and die without repentance, as it might be feared, and quickly after conſultation with a witch, and when left of God, if theſe particulars were known to David: and for the people of the Lord, and for the houſe of Iſrael; that is, the people of the Lord, even the houſe of Iſrael, or who were of the houſe of Iſrael; or if they are to be diſtinguiſhed, the former may reſpect the people of the Lord who died in battle, for whom mourning was made; and the latter the people that ſurvived, the whole kingdom of Iſrael, which had ſuſtained a great loſs by the ſlaughter made in this battle, as it follows: becauſe they were fallen by the ſword; ſo many of them.

℣. 13. And David ſaid unto the young man that told him, whence art thou? &c.] From what place, or of what people and nation art thou? though Abarbinel thinks it neither reſpects place nor people, but that David thought he was another man's ſervant; ſo that the ſenſe of the queſtion is, to what man did he belong? and he anſwered, I am the ſon of a ſtranger, an Amalekite; he was not any man's ſervant, but the ſon of a proſelyte, of one that was by birth and nation an Amalekite, but proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion; he might know of what nation he originally was, by the account he had given of what paſſed between him and Saul, ℣. 8. tho' the mind of David might be ſo diſturbed as not to advert to it; or if he did, he might be willing to have it repeated for confirmation ſake.

℣. 14. And David ſaid unto him, how, waſt thou not afraid to ſtretch forth thine hand, &c.] By which it ſhould ſeem that he did more than ſtand upon him, and preſs his body, that the ſpear might pierce through him, but that he drew his ſword, and ſlew him; ſo David underſtood him, and is the ſenſe of the phraſe in 1 Sam. xvii. 51. to deſtroy the Lord's anointed; a reaſon why David did not deſtroy him, when it was in the power of his hands, and which he made uſe of to diſſuade others from it; and here charges it not only as a criminal, but a daring action in this young man, at which he expreſſes his admiration how he could do it; hereby repreſenting it as a very ſhocking and deteſtable action; ſee 1 Sam. xxiv. 6. and xxvi. 9, 11.

℣. 15. And David called one of the young men, &c.] His ſervants that attended on him: and ſaid, go near, and fall upon him; by ſmiting him with his ſword: and he ſmote him that he died; his orders were inſtantly obeyed. Kings and generals of armies had great power in thoſe times and countries to execute a man immediately, without any other judge or jury: what may ſerve, or David might think would ſerve, to juſtify him in doing this, is what follows.

℣. 16. And David ſaid unto him, thy blood be upon thy head, &c.] The blood that he had ſhed, let him ſuffer for it; for as he had ſhed blood, his blood ought to be ſhed, according to the law of God; and for proof of this, that he had ſo done, he appeals to his own confeſſion: for thy mouth hath teſtified againſt thee, ſaying, I have ſlain the Lord's anointed; and what might ſerve to confirm the truth of what he had ſaid, were the crown and bracelet which he brought along with him; and beſides, he was an Amalekite, of a nation that was devoted to deſtruction; and, as Abarbinel thinks, David might ſuppoſe, that he killed Saul to take vengeance on him for what he had done to their nation; but after all, both he and Maimonides[n] allow the puniſhment of him was not ſtrictly according to law, but was a temporary decree, an extraordinary caſe, and an act of royal authority; for in common caſes a man was not to be condemned, and put to death upon his own confeſſion, ſince it is poſſible he may not be in his right mind[o]; but David choſe to exerciſe ſeverity in this caſe, partly to ſhew his reſpect to Saul, and to ingratiate himſelf into the favour of his friends, and partly to deter men from attempting to aſſaſſinate princes, who himſelf was now about to aſcend the throne.

℣. 17. And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul, and over Jonathan his ſon.] Compoſed the following elegy on account of their death, and ſung it in a tune agreeable to it, he and the men that were with him.

℣. 18. (Alſo he bad them teach the children of Judah the uſe of the bow, &c.] Theſe words, with what follow in this verſe, are rightly put into a parentheſis, ſince they don't begin nor make any part of the elegiac ſong, or lamentation of David; and are here inſerted to ſhew, that amidſt his ſorrow and lamentation, he was not unmindful of the welfare of the people, and to provide for their defence and ſecurity; and therefore gave orders that care ſhould be taken, eſpecially in the tribe of Judah, which was his own tribe, and where he had the greateſt authority, and for whom he might have the chiefeſt concern, that they ſhould be trained up in military exerciſes, learn the art of war, and the uſe of every weapon of war, particularly of the bow, which being a principal one, may be put for all; and which may be the rather mentioned, becauſe the Philiſtines were expert in the uſe of it, and ſeemed to have done much execution with it in the late battle, ſee 1 Sam. xxxi. 3. They are ſaid[p] to be the inventers of it; tho' Pliny[q] aſcribes it to others; and it may be the people of Iſrael and of Judah had of late neglected to learn the uſe of it, and to make uſe of it, and inſtead of that had taken to other ſort of arms in fighting; for that that was not unknown to them, or wholly diſuſed, is clear from this ſong, ℣. 22. ſee alſo 1 Chron. xii. 2. Moreover, as the Philiſtines, eſpecially the Cherethites, were expert in archery, David found ways and means to get ſome of them afterwards into his ſervice, and by whom he might improve his people in the art, ſee ch. viii. 18. though ſome[r] are of opinion, that the word word Keſhet or bow, was the title of the following lamentation or ſong, taken from the mention of Jonathan's bow in it; which ſong the children of Judah were to be taught to ſing; but then, as has been obſerved by ſome, for this there would have been no need of the following reference, ſince the whole of this ſong is here recorded: behold, it is written in the book of Jaſher); which the Targum calls the book of the law; and Jarchi and Ben Gerſom reſtrain it to the book of Geneſis, the book of the upright, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and ſuppoſe reſpect is had to the prophecy concerning Judah, Gen. xlix. 8, 9. but Kimchi extending it to all the five books of Moſes, adds his bleſſing, in Deut. xxxiii. 7. In the Arabic verſion, it is explained of the book of Samuel, interpreted the book of ſongs, as if it was a collection of ſongs; which favours the above ſenſe. Jerom [s] interprets it of the ſame book, the book of the righteous prophets, Samuel, Gad and Nathan: but this book ſeems to have been a public regiſter or annals, in which were recorded memorable actions in any age, and had its name from the uprightneſs and faithfulneſs in which it was kept; and in this were ſet down the order of David for the teaching the children of Judah the uſe of the bow, and perhaps the method which he directed to for inſtruction in it; ſee the note on Joſh. x. 13.

[n] Hilchot Sanhedrin, c. 18. §. 6. [o] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 25. 2. Maimon. ibid. [p] Bedford's Chronology, p. 245. [q] Nat. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 56. [r] See Gregory's Notes and Obſervations, &c. ch. 1. and Weemſe of the Judicial Laws, c. 44. p. 171.

℣. 19. The beauty of Iſrael is ſlain upon the high places, &c.] The high mountains of Gilboa, where Saul their king, and Jonathan his ſon, a prince of the blood, and natural heir to the crown, and multitudes of young men, the flower of the nation, were wounded and ſlain. Here begins the lamentation, or the elegiac ſong: how are the mighty fallen! mighty men of war, ſtrong and valiant, as Saul and his ſons were, and the ſoldiers in his army.

℣. 20. Tell it not in Gath, &c.] One of the five principalities of the Philiſtines, and the chief of them, being raiſed to a kingdom, and whoſe king was at the head of the armies of the Philiſtines that engaged with Saul. This is not to be underſtood of a command of David, who could not hinder the victory the Philiſtines had got over Iſrael being known at Gath, and talked of with pleaſure there, but a wiſh it had not: publiſh it not in the ſtreets of Aſkelon; another of the principalities of the Philiſtines, and the ſenſe the ſame as before: leſt the daughters of the Philiſtines rejoice, leſt the daughters of the uncircumciſed triumph; it being uſual in thoſe times and countries for women, young women more eſpecially, to expreſs their joy on occaſion of victories obtained, by ſinging and dancing, Judg. xi. 34. 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7.

℣. 21. Ye mountains of Gilboa, &c.] On which fell Saul and his ſons, and many of the people of Iſrael, ℣. 6. 1 Sam. xxxi. 1. let there be no dew, neither let there be rain upon you; which is not to be underſtood as a real imprecation; for David would never curſe any part of the land of Iſrael, for which he had ſo great a regard; but only as a poetical figure, expreſſing his concern for, and abhorrence of what happened on thoſe mountains; much leſs did this in reality take place, as ſome have feigned, as if never dew nor rain deſcended on them [t] afterwards; which has been confuted by travellers, particularly Borchard [u], who ſpeaking of this mountain, ſays, that as he was upon it, there was ſuch a violent ſhower fell, that he was wet through his clothes; and in the year 1273, lying all night upon this hill, there was a great dew fell upon him: nor fields of offerings; of heave-offerings; the meaning is, that he could wiſh almoſt that thoſe hills were not fruitful, and that they brought no fruit to perfection, ſo much as that heave-offerings for the ſervice of the ſanctuary might be taken; which is expreſſive of great ſterility and ſcarcity, ſee Joel i. 13, 16. for there the ſhield of the mighty is vilely caſt away; mighty men were obliged to caſt away their ſhields and flee, which were greatly to their reproach and ſcandal, and to that of the whole nation: it was always reckoned very ſcandalous, and a great crime, even puniſhable with death, to caſt away a ſhield, both with the Greeks and others [w]: yea alſo the ſhield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil; as if he was not the anointed king of Iſrael, but a common ſoldier; or elſe this reſpects his ſhield, as if that was not anointed, as ſhields uſed to be, that they might be ſmooth and glib, and miſſile weapons, as arrows and others might not paſs through them, but ſlide off, ſee Iſ. xxi. 5. though Gerſom gives a different turn, that Saul's ſhield being in continual uſe, needed not to be anointed, as thoſe did which for a time had been laid aſide. Abarbinel interprets theſe words thus, that he, who was the ſhield of the mighty, even Saul himſelf, was vilely caſt away, or become loathſome; and that his ſhield was anointed, not with oil, but with the blood of the ſlain, and the fat of the mighty, connecting them with the words following.

℣. 22. From the blood of the ſlain, from the fat of the mighty, the bow of Jonathan turned not back, &c.] That is, it always did execution, the arrows ſhot from it pierced into men, ſhed their blood, and ſlew them; even they entered into the fat of the mighty, or mighty ones, that were fat, and brought them down; ſo the arrows of the Medes and Perſians, the expert men among them, are ſaid not to return in vain, Jer. l. 9. and the ſword of Saul returned not empty; but was the means of ſlaying many; though Abarbinel obſerves alſo, that this may be interpreted of the blood of the ſlain, and of the fat of the mighty men of Iſrael; and that though Saul and Jonathan ſaw many of theſe fall before their eyes, yet for or becauſe of their blood, they were not intimidated and reſtrained from fighting; the bow of the one, and the ſhield of the other, turned not back on that account.

℣. 23. Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleaſant in their lives, &c.] To one another, had no quarrel or difference with each other, only on the account of David; otherwiſe they agreed together in the court, and in the camp, in their councils, and in their conduct: and in their death they were not divided; neither from the people, nor from one another; Jonathan ſtuck cloſe by his father to the laſt; which is obſerved to clear him from any imputation of conſpiracy againſt him: they were ſwifter than eagles; in the quick diſpatch of buſineſs, in haſting to the relief of the diſtreſſed, as Saul to the men of Jabeſh-gilead, and in the purſuit of their enemies, as of the Philiſtines, more than once: they were ſtronger than lions; in fighting with their enemies, who became an eaſy prey to them; and what is ſtronger than a lion among among beaſts? Judg. xiv. 18. Prov. xxx. 30. or ſwifter than an eagle among birds, which is ſaid to cut the air with its wings [x]?

[s] Trad. Heb. in 2 lib. Reg. fol. 77. D. [t] Cippi Heb. p. 34. [u] Apud Hottinger. not. in ib. ſee Bunting's Travels, p. 131. [w] Iſocrates de Pace, p. 364. Horat. Carmin. l. 2. ode 7. Tacitus de Mor. German. c. 6. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 13.

℣. 24. Ye daughters of Iſrael, weep over Saul, &c.] In their mournful elegies; who clothed you with ſcarlet, with other delights; not only with ſcarlet, but with other fine and delightful apparel, ſuch as were very pleaſing to the female ſex, eſpecially young people, who are delighted with gay apparel; this Saul was the means of, through the ſpoil he took from his enemies, and by other methods taken by him to the enriching of the nation, whereby huſbands and parents were enabled to provide rich clothes for their wives and children: who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel, broidered work, jewels of gold, &c. See Iſa. iii. 18—23. Ezek. xvi. 10—13.

℣. 25. How are the mighty fallen in the midſt of the battle! &c.] The mighty and valiant men of war, the common ſoldiers as well as their general officers, whoſe loſs David mourns, and the repetition of it ſhews how much it affected him: O Jonathan, thou waſt ſlain in thine high places; in the high places of the land of Iſrael, the mountains of Gilboa; which though high, and in his own country, could not protect him from his enemies, and from falling by their hands; he who had been ſo valiant and victorious a prince, and yet he fell, not in an enemy's country but his own.

℣. 26. I am diſtreſſed for thee, my brother Jonathan, &c.] So he was not only by nation and religion, but by affinity, having married the ſiſter of Jonathan; and ſtill more ſo by affection and friendſhip, he being a friend of David's, that ſtuck cloſer to him than a brother, and who loved him as his own ſoul; he was diſtreſſed for him, not on account of his ſpiritual and eternal ſtate, which he doubted not was happy, but for the manner of his death, his loſs of him and want of his pleaſant converſation, of his counſel and advice, and aſſiſtance in his preſent circumſtances: very pleaſant haſt thou been unto me; in their friendly viſits of, and converſation with, one another; many a pleaſant hour had they ſpent together, but now muſt ſee each others faces no more in this world: thy love to me was wonderful; as indeed he might well ſay, being towards one of a mean extract in compariſon of his, to one who was not his own brother, but a brother-in-law; and to one that was a rival to the crown he was heir to, and would take it before him; and who ran the riſque of loſing his father's affection, and even his life, for eſpouſing his cauſe: ſee 1 Sam xviii. 1, 3, 4. and xix. 2, 4. and xx. 30, 33. paſſing the love of women; either that which they are loved with by men, or that with which they love their huſbands and children; which is generally the ſtrongeſt and moſt affectionate. The Targum is, "more than the love of two women," than his two wives, Ahinoam and Abigail; ſo Kimchi; meaning that he was more ſtrongly and affectionately loved by Jonathan than by them, who yet might love him very well too.

℣. 27. How are the mighty fallen, &c.] This is the burden of this elegiac ſong, being the third time it is mentioned; and the weapons of war periſhed; not only the valiant ſoldiers were killed, but their arms were loſt; and particularly he may mean Saul and Jonathan, who as they were the ſhields of the people, ſo they were the true weapons and inſtruments of war, and with them all military glory periſhed; which muſt be underſtood as a poetical figure, exaggerating their military characters; otherwiſe David, and many mighty men with him, remained, and who revived and increaſed the military glory of Iſrael, as the following hiſtory ſhews.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter relates, that David, upon enquiring of the Lord, was directed to go up to Hebron, and did, where he was anointed king of Judah, ℣. 1—4. And that being told of the kindneſs of the men of Jabeſh-gilead in burying Saul, he ſent them thanks, and promiſed to remember it, and took the opportunity to let them know he was anointed king over Judah, ℣. 5, 6, 7. It alſo relates that Abner ſet up Iſh-boſheth, the ſon of Saul, to be king over Iſrael, ℣. 8—11. and that there was a rencounter between 12 of Abner's men and 12 of David's, which brought on a ſore battle between them, in which Abner was beaten, ℣. 12—17. and Aſahel, who was of David's party, was ſlain in the purſuit by Abner, ℣. 18—25. when a retreat was ſounded by Joab, at the influence of Abner, who, with his men, betook themſelves to Mahanaim, where he had left Iſh-boſheth, ℣. 26—29. And the chapter cloſes with an account of the ſlain on both ſides, the burial of Aſahel, and the return of Joab with David's men to Hebron, ℣. 30, 31, 32.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs after this, &c.] After David had heard of the death of Saul and Jonathan, and made a lamentation over them, perhaps the next day; ſince David and his men are only ſaid to mourn, and weep, and faſt till even, ch. i. 12. that David enquired of the Lord; of the Word of the Lord, as the Targum, by Abiathar the prieſt, and through the Urim and Thummim, in the ephod he had put on on this occaſion: ſaying, ſhall I go up into any of the cities of Judah? though the Lord had promiſed him the kingdom, and he had been anointed by Samuel by his appointment, yet he was not haſty to take it into his hands, but was deſirous of acting according to the will of God, and by his direction, and wait his time when and where he ſhould go and take poſſeſſion of it; he mentions Judah becauſe it was his own tribe, and where he had the moſt friends: And the Lord ſaid unto him, Go up; from Ziklag into the tribe of Judah, but did not mention any particular place whither he ſhould go; hence another queſtion was put: And David ſaid, Whither ſhall I go up? To what town or city in the tribe of Judah? Whether Jeruſalem or any other? And he ſaid, Unto Hebron; a city of the prieſts, a city of refuge, 20 miles from Jeruſalem, or more, which is not directed to, becauſe it was then chiefly in the hands of the Jebuſites, and becauſe, as Procopius Gazæus ſays, Hebron was now the metropolis of Judah.

℣. 2. So David went up thither, &c.] From Ziklag to Hebron, which was 16 miles according to Bunting [y]; and his two wives alſo, Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs, and Abigail Nabal's wife the Carmelite; who were beloved by him, and who had ſhared with him him in his troubles, and which he took with him to partake of his honour and grandeur, wealth and riches; in which he was now a type of Chriſt. See Rom. viii. 17. 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12.

[x] Ælian. Hiſt. Animal. l. 15. c. 22. Vid. Ciceron. de divinatione, l. 2. prope finem.

[y] Ut ſupra, p. 137.

℣. 3. And his men that were with him, did David bring up, every man with his houſhold, &c.] They and their families, and no doubt provided well for them when he was ſettled on the throne, who had ſhewn themſelves to be his faithful friends, cloſely attached to his intereſt, and had run the riſque of their all on his account. See Matt. xix. 28. And they dwelt in the cities of Hebron; in the towns and villages about it; for that itſelf being a city of refuge, and inhabited by prieſts, there was not room enough for all David's men, who were now increaſing, perſons from various tribes flocking to him. See 1 Chron. xii.

℣. 4. And the men of Judah came, &c.] The inhabitants of the tribe of Judah came from the ſeveral parts of it to Hebron, that is, the principal of them, the elders of each city; and there they anointed David king over the houſe of Judah: they did not take upon them to make him king over all Iſrael, but left the reſt of the tribes to act for themſelves; and no doubt in this they had the mind of David, who was not willing to force himſelf upon the people at once, but by degrees get the whole government into his hands, as providence ſhould make his way; theſe men knew the kingdom was promiſed to their tribe, from Gen. xlix. 10. and were quite clear in what they did, and, without queſtion, knew that David had been anointed by Samuel: but as that anointing was only a declaration of the Lord's choice of him, and of his will that he ſhould be king after Saul's death, he is again anointed by the people, as an inauguration into his office: and they told David, ſaying, That the men of Jabeſh-gilead were they that buried Saul. It is highly probable, that as ſoon as David was anointed king, the firſt thing he thought of was to enquire after the body of the late king, and give it an honourable interment, and upon enquiry was told, that the men of Jabeſh-gilead had buried him already. See 1 Sam. xxxi. 11, 12, 13.

℣. 5. And David ſent meſſengers unto the men of Jabeſh-gilead, &c.] To return them thanks for their courage and boldneſs, in reſcuing the bodies of Saul and his ſons out of the hands of the Philiſtines, and for their civility in the burial of them: and ſaid unto them, Bleſſed be ye of the Lord; which may be conſidered either as a wiſh, the Lord bleſs you for it, or as a prediction, the Lord will bleſs you; that ye have ſhewed this kindneſs unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him. To bury the dead, with the Jews, was always reckoned an inſtance of humanity and kindneſs, and indeed of piety; an act done in imitation of God [z], who buried Moſes, and ſo it might be expected the divine bleſſing would attend it.

℣. 6. And now the Lord ſhew kindneſs and truth unto you, &c.] Or true kindneſs; confer real favours, beſtow upon you good and ſubſtantial bleſſings, bleſſings indeed! and I alſo will requite you this kindneſs, becauſe ye have done this thing. He not only prayed to God to bleſs them and reward them for it, but would remember them himſelf, and at a proper opportunity would ſhew favour to them for this act of kindneſs to Saul. De Dieu propoſes to conſideration, whether it may not be as well interpreted to this ſenſe, and I alſo do you this kindneſs becauſe of it; that is, have done you this honour by ſending meſſengers to you, to thank you for it, and by wiſhing a bleſſing upon you on account of it, and by praiſing and commending you for it; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt.

℣. 7. Now therefore let your hands be ſtrengthened, and be ye valiant, &c.] And not be afraid of the Philiſtines, who might reſent their conduct in taking away from them the bodies of Saul and his ſons, whom they had hung up in triumph; and theſe men might fear they would bring their armies againſt them, and deſtroy them; but David bids them be of good heart and courage, and not be afraid of them; for your maſter Saul is dead; or rather though [a] he is dead; for that he was dead they knew full well, having buried him, and needed no information of it; but being dead, they might be diſcouraged, as having none to protect and defend them, or come to their relief as he did, ſhould they be attacked: and alſo the houſe of Judah have anointed me king over them; or for even, or notwithſtanding [b]; and this therefore being the caſe, he would take their parts, and help and aſſiſt them; and which he ſuggeſts to them, to invite them to own him as their King alſo, and put themſelves under his protection.

℣. 8. But Abner, the ſon of Ner, captain of Saul's hoſt, &c.] This man's father, Ner, was Saul's uncle, and he was his own couſin, and being general of his army, a poſt he was willing to keep, might be the reaſons for doing what he did, as follows; took Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul; and who ſeems to be his only ſon left, except what he had by his concubine. This man's name is Eſh-baal in 1 Chron. viii. 33. and ix. 39. Baal is the name of a ſhameful Idol, and which was therefore ſometimes called Boſheth, ſhame. See Hoſea ix. 10. wherefore ſuch names of men, which had Baal in them, were changed for Beſheth or Boſheth, as the names of Jerub-baal and Merib-baal, who were called Jerub-boſheth and Mephi-boſheth. See Judg. viii. 35. compared with 2 Sam. xi. 21. and 2 Sam. iv. 4. with 1 Chron. viii. 34. and ix. 40. The latter of theſe, a ſon of Jonathan, bid faireſt for the crown by lineal ſucceſſion, but he being but five years of age, and lame, this man Abner judged fitteſt for his purpoſe; and though he knew it was the will of God, and he had ſworn that David ſhould be king, yet ſo blind and obſtinate was his ambition, that he ſet up another againſt him: and brought him over to Mahanaim; a city on the other ſide Jordan, in the tribe of Gad, on the border of the half tribe of Manaſſeh; ſee Joſh. xiii. 26—30. Gen. xxxii. 2. and hither Abner had Iſh boſheth, partly to keep the men of Jabeſh-gilead in awe, to whom David had ſent meſſengers, acquainting them with his being king of Judah, and prevent their joining with him; and partly that he might be at a proper diſtance both from the Philiſtines and from David, till he could form his meaſures, and gradually carry his point, as he did.

℣. 9. And he made him king over Gilead, &c.] Which lay beyond Jordan, and included the tribes of Gad and Reuben, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; theſe he prevailed upon to acknowledge Iſh-boſheth their king, and proclaimed him king over them: and over the Aſhurites; that is, thoſe of the houſe or tribe of Aſher, as the Targum, and indeed none elſe can well be thought of; ſome indeed read the Geſhurites, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; but theſe were [z] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 30. 2. and Sotah, fol. 14. 1.

[a] כי licet enim, V. L. quamvis, Piſcator. So Pool and Patrick.

[b] גם tamen, V. L. nam ſimiliter, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

were never expelled by the Iſraelites, and had at this time a king over them, chap. iii. 3. ſee Joſh. xiii. 13. and over Jezreel; the great plain which went along the borders of Zebulun, Iſſachar, and Naphtali, and included theſe tribes; and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin; the tribes of Ephraim and Benjamin; and over all Iſrael, excepting the tribe of Judah; that is, he prevailed firſt on one of theſe, then on another, until he got all the tribes of Iſrael to own him for their king; David all this time being ſtill and quiet, and not oppoſing him, waiting God's own time to open the way for his poſſeſſion of the kingdom over all Iſrael, and having a ſtrict regard to his oath to Saul, 1 Sam. xxiv. 21, 22.

℣. 10. Iſh-boſheth Saul's ſon was forty years old when he began to reign over Iſrael, &c.] Being born the ſame year his father began to reign. See the note on 1 Sam. xxxi. 6. And reigned two years; which ſome underſtand of theſe, and no more; and whereas David reigned ſeven years and a half over Judah, before he reigned over all Iſrael, it is thought by the Jewiſh chronologer [c], that there was a vacancy in the throne of Iſrael for the ſpace of five years, and ſo ſays Kimchi; which vacancy was either before the reign of Iſh-boſheth, it being a matter in diſpute whether he or Mephiboſheth ſhould be ſet up, or after his death; the tribes of Iſrael being ſo long ere they acknowledged David their king; or Iſh-boſheth's reign of two years muſt be in the middle of David's reign over Judah; but there is no need to ſuppoſe either of theſe, for the text ſays not that Iſh-boſheth reigned only two years; but the meaning is, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, that he had reigned two years when the following things happened, and a war began, and not by him but by Abner, and carried on by him; and he being an inactive prince, the reſt of his reign was reckoned as no reign, whereas he lived and reigned the ſame length of time David did over Judah; ſee chap. iii. 1. but the houſe of Judah followed David; kept cloſe to him as their king, yielding a chearful obedience to him.

℣. 11. And the time that David was king in Hebron over the houſe of Judah, &c.] And over them only, was ſeven years and ſix months; to which being added thirty-three years he reigned over all Iſrael in Jeruſalem, made 40 years and 6 months; and which, for the roundneſs of the number, is uſually called 40 years. See chap. v. 4. 1 Kings ii. 11.

℣. 12. And Abner the ſon of Ner, &c.] Who was before captain of Saul's hoſt, and now of Iſh-boſheth's: and the ſervants of Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul; who ſeem to be not only his domeſtic ſervants, that waited upon him, or his courtiers, but his whole army by what follows: went out from Mahanaim to Gibeon; came from the city on the other ſide Jordan, where perhaps they had been two years paſt, concerting ſchemes to bring all Iſrael under the government of Iſh-boſheth; in which they had ſucceeded, only Judah ſtood out with David, and in order to reduce that tribe, they paſſed over Jordan and came to Gibeon, a city in Benjamin. See Joſh. xviii. 25.

℣. 13. And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah, &c.] A ſiſter of David, and this her ſon was general of David's army: and the ſervants of David went out; that is, his army went out from Hebron to Gibeon, which was 24 miles [d], to meet that under Abner; for though he had but one tribe with him, and Iſh-boſheth had all the reſt, yet Judah was a numerous, powerful, and warlike tribe; and beſides many out of the other tribes had joined them, and above all, God was on their ſide, and they had his promiſe to rely upon with reſpect to the eſtabliſhment of the kingdom in the houſe of David, and his power and providence to truſt in, and therefore went out boldly and chearfully to meet the armies of Iſrael under Abner: and met together by the pool of Gibeon; the ſame perhaps with the great waters in Gibeon, Jer. xli. 12. and they ſat down, the one on the one ſide of the pool, and the other on the other ſide of the pool; facing one another, and watching each other's motions.

℣. 14. And Abner ſaid to Joab, &c.] Perceiving he made no motion towards an engagement with him, his orders from David being only to act on the defenſive, and avoid as much as poſſible the effuſion of blood: Let the young men now ariſe, and play before us; with their ſwords, after the manner of gladiators or duellers; that it might appear who were beſt ſkilled in the uſe of the ſword, and who were the braveſt, ſtouteſt, and moſt courageous; and this he propoſed in a way of bravado, and in order to bring on a battle, or to decide the quarrel between them; and this bloody barbarous exerciſe Abner calls play, as if it was a diverſion and paſtime to ſee men wounding and killing one another: and Joab ſaid, Let them ariſe; he accepted the challenge, not caring to be hectored and bullied by Abner.

℣. 15. Then there aroſe and went over by number twelve of Benjamin, &c.] Whom Abner had picked out of that tribe, being his own, and whom he knew to be ſtout and courageous men, and cloſely attached to him. It ſeems by this, as if Abner's men, which pertained to Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul, paſſed over the pool of Gibeon unto Joab's men; ſo forward were they to engage in this duel, and it makes it ſtill more appear that they were the aggreſſors: and twelve of the ſervants of David; of his army under Joab, whom Joab either ſelected, or they offered themſelves as willing to engage with the twelve that were come over.

℣. 16. And they caught every one his fellow by the head, &c. By the hair of his head with his hand: and thruſt his ſword in his fellow's ſide; which he had in the other; ſo they fell down together: the 12 on each ſide, all the 24; ſome think only the 12 on Abner's ſide fell; but to me it ſeems that they all fell dead as one man, ſince they thruſt their ſwords in each others ſides: wherefore that place was called Helkath-hazzurim; the field of rocks, or of mighty men as ſtrong as rocks, who ſtood as immoveable, and would not give way, but fell and died in the field of battle; the Targum interprets it, the inheritance of the ſlain.

℣. 17. And there was a very ſore battle that day, &c.] When the twenty-four men fell together, and no deciſion could be made thereby, or any triumph on either ſide, both armies drew up in battle-array, and fought very furiouſly: and Abner was beaten, and the men of Iſrael before the ſervants of David; the army under him had the worſt of it, and were routed, and obliged to flee before the army of David under the command of Joab.

℣. 18. And there were three ſons of Zeruiah there, &c.] In the battle, Joab, and Abiſhai, and Aſahel. Joab was the general of the army, Abiſhai was he who went into Saul's hoſt at night, and took away his ſpear and cruſe of water at his head, 1 Sam. xxvi. 6, 7. and it is for the ſake of the third, Aſahel, [c] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 13. p. 37.

[d] Bunting's Travels, p. 146.

Aſahel, that the account is given, the ſtory of his death being about to be told. And Aſahel was as light of ſoot as a wild roe; ſwiftneſs of foot, as well as courage, for which this man was famous, 1 Chron. xi. 26. was a very great qualification for a warriour [c]. So Achilles, in Homer [f], is often ſaid to be ſwift of foot, and others of his Heroes are commended for their ſwiftneſs. Harold, ſon of King Canutus, was from his ſwiftneſs [g] called Harefoot; as wild here this man for the ſame reaſon, is compared to a roe, which is a very ſwift creature, or to one of the roes that are in the field, as in the original text. See Cant. ii. 7, 17, and viii. 14. one ſort of which, called Kemas, is ſaid to run as ſwift as a tempeſt [h].

℣. 19. And Aſahel purſued after Abner, &c.] Ambitious of the glory of taking or ſlaying the general of the army of Iſrael; truſting to his ſwiftneſs, not conſidering that the race is not always to the ſwift, and that he had to do with a veteran ſoldier, and he a raw young man though valiant. And in going, he turned not to the right hand nor to the left in following Abner; he kept his eye upon him, and purſued him cloſely, diſregarding perſons on the right or left he could have made priſoners; but thoſe he neglected, being bent on taking Abner if poſſible.

℣. 20. Then Abner looked behind him, &c.] Perceiving one at his heels, and making haſte up to him. Art thou Aſahel? for it ſeems he knew him perſonally, being well acquainted with his family: and he anſwered, I am; ſo that they were very near to each other, as to diſcourſe together, and be heard and underſtood by each other.

℣. 21. And Abner ſaid unto him, &c.] Having a reſpect for him, and conſulting his good, and however fearing his brother Joab ſhould he ſlay him: Turn thee aſide to thy right or to thy left; he does not adviſe him to go back, which would have been to his diſgrace, having engaged in the purſuit, but to turn to the right or left, as if purſuing ſome other perſon and not Abner: and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his armour; one of the common ſoldiers, or an attendant on Abner, a young man like himſelf, whom he might be able to cope with, and take him a priſoner, and diſarm him, when he was not a match for ſuch an old experienced officer as he was; and this Abner ſeems to ſpeak as a friend, conſulting the young man's ſafety and his honour too. But Aſahel would not turn aſide from following him; fired with the ambition of taking him, and not content with any prey ſhort of him; and perhaps was the more animated by what he ſaid, as ſuppoſing it aroſe from fear of him.

℣. 22. And Abner ſaid again to Aſahel, &c.] Being loth to diſpatch him: Turn thee aſide from following me, wherefore ſhould I ſmite thee to the ground? which was giving him fair warning, and letting him know what he muſt expect, if he did not deſiſt from his purſuit: How then ſhould I hold up my face to Joab thy brother? the general of David's army, a ſtout valiant commander, a man of ſpirit and reſentment, whom Abner knew full well, and that ſhould he ſlay his brother, he would never be friendly with him, or look pleaſantly on him; he would never forgive him, but ſeek ways and means to avenge his blood on him: and by this it ſeems as if Abner was conſcious to himſelf, that he was in a wrong cauſe, that the kingdom was of right David's, and would be his, and he muſt be obliged to make peace with him; when he ſhould ſtand in need of Joab as his friend, which he could not expect, if he ſlew his brother, nor to live in favour and friendſhip with him hereafter.

℣. 23. Howbeit he refuſed to turn aſide, &c.] Determined on making him his captive if poſſible. Wherefore Abner with the hinder end of the ſpear; he had in his hand, which ſeems to have had a pike at both ends; ſo that with the hinder end of it, next to Aſahel, he thruſt it at him, without turning to him: and ſmote him under the fifth rib; the place where hang the gall and liver, as the Jewiſh commentators from their Talmud [i] obſerve. There are twelve ribs, ſeven of which are called true ones, and five ſpurious; if this was the fifth of the ſeven, the ſpear muſt pierce the breaſt [k], and ſtrike the ſeat of life, the heart and lungs; if the fifth from the eighth and firſt of the ſpurious ones, then wounding the hypochondria, it muſt paſs to the vital bowels of the abdomen, which ſeems to be the caſe here [l]: according to ſome [m] this is meant of the inferior ribs, which we call the ſhort ribs, and any of theſe five are called the fifth rib; and Abner muſt ſtrike him in the right ſide, becauſe he was behind him, and which ſtroke muſt be deadly, becauſe he ſtruck him through the liver: that the ſpear came out behind him; the thruſt was ſo violent that the ſpear went through him, and came out at his back: and he fell down and died in the ſame place; he fell at once, and died on the ſpot immediately: and it came to paſs, that as many as came to the place where Aſahel fell down and died, ſtood ſtill; that is, ſuch of David's men who were in the purſuit after the Iſraelites, when they came to the ſpot, and ſaw Aſahel dead, they had no power to proceed in the purſuit, being ſo troubled and grieved at the death of him.

℣. 24. Joab alſo and Abiſhai purſued after Abner, &c.] Or rather but Joab, &c [n]. They ſtood not ſtill as the reſt, but, filled with indignation and reſentment, purſued after Abner, to be avenged on him: and the ſun went down when they came to the hill of Ammah; a hill by the ſide of which was a pool of water, as Kimchi thinks, and from thence ſo called: that lieth before Giah; a place near Gibeon, but no where after mentioned: by the way of the wilderneſs of Gibeon; very likely not far from the city from which it had its name.

℣. 25. And the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together after Abner, &c.] Either thoſe that were with him before, who upon the battle were diſperſed, but now got together again; or others of that tribe, who hearing of the defeat of Abner, went out of the ſeveral cities after him, to ſtrengthen his hands, and renew the fight with Joab: and became one troop; were united together in a body, and became a regular troop: and ſtood on the top of an hill; which was ſome advantage to them, and from whence they could take a view of Joab's army, and obſerve its motions.

℣. 26. Then Abner called to Joab, &c.] For having now a troop of men with him, he could ſtop with the greater ſafety; and being on an hill, and perhaps Joab on one oppoſite to him, could call to him, ſo as to be heard: and ſaid, Shall the ſword devour for ever? ſlay men, and devour their blood. See Jer. xlvi. 10. That he was not thoughtful of, nor concerned about, when he ſet the young men to

[c] Cornel. Nepos, Epaminond. l. 2. [f] Ποδας ωκυς, Iliad. I. lin. 15. [g] Rapin's Hiſtory of England, vol. I. p. 128. [h] Ælian. Hiſt. de Animal. l. 14. c. 14. [i] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 49. 1. [k] Tranſadigit coſtas, & crates pectoris enſem. Virgil. Æneid. l. 12. v. 506. [l] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. Vol. III. p. 501. [m] Weemſe's Portrait of Man, p. 24. [n] Autem, V. L. Tigurine verſion; ſed, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Kimchi.

to fighting before the battle, and called it play to wound and shed the blood of each other; but now the battle going against him, he complains of the devouring sword; and though it had been employed but a few hours, it seemed long to him, a sort of an eternity: knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? since it might issue in the death of himself, or of Joab, or of both, as it had in Asahel, or however, in the death of a multitude of others; and which at last would cause bitter reflection in the prosecutors of the war: how long shall it be then ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren? he pleads relation, that the men of Israel and the men of Judah were brethren; so they were by nation and religion, and therefore should not pursue one another to destruction; but who was the aggressor? It was Abner, that brought his forces against Judah, the men of David acted only on the defensive.

v. 27. And Joab said, As God liveth, &c.] Which was the form of an oath, swearing by the living God: unless thou hadst spoken; that is, these words in v. 14. Let the young men arise and play; that he had not given the challenge to fight: surely then in the morning the people had gone up every one from following his brother; they would have gone away and never fought at all; they were not desirous of shedding their blood, and following after them to slay them: thus he lays the blame upon Abner, and makes him to be the cause and beginner of the war. Some render the particle by if, and give the sense, that if he had spoken what he last did, sooner, the people would long before this time have desisted from pursuing them; for it was not from a thirst after their blood, and a desire to take vengeance on them, that they pursued them, but to bring them to submission, and lay down their arms; for they could not in honour retreat until they desired it; but the former sense seems best, and is the general sense of the Jewish commentators.

v. 28. So Joab blew a trumpet, &c.] Or caused one to be blown as a signal of a retreat; and all the people stood still, and pursued after Israel no more; as soon as they heard the trumpet sound, the meaning of which they understood, they stopped at once, and left off their pursuit: neither fought they any more; that day, and perhaps no pitched battle afterwards; for none we read of, though the war continued after this a long time, and there might be often skirmishes, which greatly weakened Abner's party. See chap. iii. 1.

v. 29. And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, &c.] The plain of Jordan. He marched with his men all night, lest Joab should return, and pursue him, and take vengeance on him for the death of his brother: and passed over Jordan; at one of the fords of it: and went through all Bithron; the name of a province or country, as Jarchi, called so perhaps from its being separated from the rest of the tribes of Israel by the river Jordan; some think the mountains of Bether were in this country, Cant. ii. 17. From Gibeon, where the battle was fought, to Bithron, according to Bunting [o], was 28 miles, the which he says was in the tribe of Gad, 28 miles from Jerusalem north-eastward, lying between Dibon and Jordan: and they came to Mahanaim; from whence they came, and where they had left Ish-bosheth, v. 8, 12. From Bithron to this place, according to the same writer [p], was 16 miles.

v. 30. And Joab returned from following Abner, &c.] It being in his commission from David to shed as little blood as he could: and when he had gathered all the people together; who had been pursuing the Israelites, some one way and some another: there lacked of David's servants 19 men, and Asahel; who is particularly mentioned, because a very honourable man, valiant and courageous, a relation of David, and brother of Joab the general, and the loss of him was greater than all the rest. This has made some think that the 12 men of the servants of David were not killed in the duel, or otherwise there must be but seven slain in the battle; though that is not more strange than that in the battle with Midian not one should be slain, and yet a terrible slaughter was made of the Midianites, Numb. xxxi. So in a sharp battle between the Spartans and Arcadians, 10,000 of the latter were slain and not one of the former [q]. Stilicho killed more than 100,000 of the army of Rhadagaisus, king of the Goths, without losing one of his own men, no not so much as one wounded, as Austin affirms [r]. At the battle of Issus the Persians lost 110,000 men, and Alexander not 200 [s]. Julius Cæsar killed in the three camps of Jubæ, Scipio, and Labienus 10,000 men with the loss of 50 men only [t]. After these instances, not only the case here, but that between the Israelites and Midianites cannot be thought incredible, for the sake of which the above are produced. This account, according to Josephus [u], was taken the day following.

v. 31. But the servants of David had smitten of Benjamin, and Abner's men, &c.] Of those of the tribe of Benjamin that joined him, and of those that he brought with him from Mahanaim; so many of them were smitten, as appeared by their bodies lying on the field of battle, that 360 men died; the number of the slain on each side was very unequal.

v. 32. And they took up Asahel, &c.] From the place where he fell; that is, Joab and Abishai, his brethren, as Josephus [w] relates; after they had buried the dead in the field of battle, they took up him: and buried him in the sepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem; not in the city of Bethlehem, but without it, on the south side of it; so says Fuller [x], "southward, i. e. of Bethlehem, we find Asahel's sepulchre, who was buried in the grave of his father." What was his father's name is not known, only his mother's name, Zeruiah, is mentioned in scripture, a sister of David, and daughter of Jesse the Bethlehemite. Beth-lehem was 16 miles from Gibeon, according to Bunting [y]. And Joab and his men went all night; not the night following the battle, but the night following the next day, after he had been to Beth-lehem, and buried his brother there; wherefore, lest David should think it long ere he came, he travelled all night: and they came to Hebron at break of day; where David was, which, according to the same writer [z], was 20 miles from Beth-lehem.

[o] Travels, &c. p. 145, 146. [p] Ibid. [q] Diodor. Sic. l. 15. p. 383. [r] De civitate Dei, l. 5. c. 23. [s] Curtius, l. 3. c. 11. [t] Hirtius de bello African. c. 86. [u] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 1. §. 3. [w] Ibid. [x] Pisgah-sight of Palestine, B 2. c. 14. §. 21. p. 301. [y] Travels, ut supra. [z] Ibid.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter begins with the continuation of the war between the houſe of Saul and the houſe of David, ℣. 1. and gives an account of the wives of David, and his ſons by them, ℣. 2—5. of a quarrel between Iſhboſheth and Abner, ℣. 6—11. and of Abner's propoſal to make a league with David; but David would not ſee his face unleſs Michal his wife was returned to him, who was accordingly, ℣. 12—16. and of the intereſt Abner made with the elders of Iſrael in favour of David, which he reported to him, and promiſed to make more, ℣. 17—21. but Joab returning from a purſuit, and with great ſpoil, juſt as Abner departed, and hearing of it, chid David for letting him go, and privately ſent for him back, and treacherouſly murdered him, ℣. 22—27. from which murder David cleared himſelf and his kingdom, and for it made dreadful imprecations on Joab and his family, ℣. 28, 29, 30. and buried Abner with great lamentation, expreſſing much concern for his death, and the high opinion he had of him, ℣. 31—39.

℣. 1. Now there was a long war between the houſe of Saul and the houſe of David, &c.] The late battle, though ſo much in favour of David, did not put an end to the war between him and Iſhboſheth, which laſted five years longer; for it was when Iſhboſheth had reigned two years that that battle was fought, and he reigned five years longer; for not till his death, and when David had reigned above ſeven years in Hebron, was he made king over all Iſrael; and during this time peace was not made, but the war carried on; though perhaps not in pitched battles, of which we no more read, but in ſkirmiſhes: but David waxed ſtronger and ſtronger; he having the advantage in all ſuch ſkirmiſhes, and perſons continually coming over to his ſide from the ſeveral tribes: and the houſe of Saul waxed weaker and weaker; being always worſted whenever they ſkirmiſhed with David's men, and by continual revolts from them. This is reckoned an emblem of the kingdoms of Chriſt and Antichriſt, the one increaſing more and more, as it has and will do, and the other decreaſing, and ere long will be conſumed; and of the two parties in a regenerate man, grace and indwelling ſin, the one as to its exerciſe growing ſtronger and ſtronger, and the other as to its influence on the outward converſation weaker and weaker.

℣. 2. And unto David were ſons born in Hebron, &c.] He was married before he came there, had wives in his ſtate of exile, but had no children by them there, at leaſt no ſons; if any, only daughters: and his firſt-born was Ammon of Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs; who being mentioned firſt, and her ſon his firſt-born, ſeems to have been his wife before he took Abigail; he had not much comfort of this firſt-born ſon of his; ſee ch. xiii.

℣. 3. And the ſecond Chileab, of Abigail the wife of Nabal, the Carmeliteſs, &c.] That is, who had been the wife of Nabal. This ſon's name is called Daniel, 1 Chron. iii. 1. and was the firſt name he had, and which his father gave him, becauſe as if he ſhould ſay, God hath judged me, and pleaded the cauſe of his reproach from Nabal, 1 Sam. xxv. 39. but why he ſhould be called Chileab is not eaſy to ſay; the name is commonly thought to ſignify like unto his father, or all father; had all the features of his father, and was exceedingly like him; the Jews have a fabulous ſtory concerning this [w], not worth relating: and the third Abſalom the ſon of Maacah, the daughter of Talmai king of Geſhur; in 1 Sam. xxvii. 8. we read of David's invading the land of the Geſhurites; and the Jews ſay [x] that he then took the daughter of this king captive, and ſhe being a beautiful woman married her, after made a proſelyte according to the law in Deut. xxi. but it ſhould be obſerved that David ſlew all the women of that country, and left not any alive; and beſides that lay to the ſouth of Judah, whereas this Geſhur of which Talmai was king, was a part of Syria, ch. xv. 8. and lay to the north of the land of Iſrael; and with this king David hereby entered into an alliance, to ſtrengthen his intereſt againſt Iſhboſheth in thoſe parts; of the trouble he met with from Abſalom ſee ch. xiii. &c. contrary to the expectations he had raiſed when he gave him the name of Abſalom, or Leabſalom, as in 1 Chron. iii. 2. that is, one given for his father's peace.

℣. 4. And the fourth Adonijah the ſon of Haggith, &c.] The ſame that uſurped the throne before his father's death, to anticipate Solomon, and died by his order, 1 Kings i. 5. and ii. 25. and the fifth Shephatiah the ſon of Abital; of whom we read no where elſe.

℣. 5. And the ſixth Ithream by Eglah David's wife, &c.] Who alſo is not ſpoken of in any other place; only in a like chronological account as the former, it is remarked that the mother of this only is called David's wife; the reaſon of which is ſuppoſed to be, either becauſe ſhe was a perſon of no note, and had nothing elſe to diſtinguiſh her; but the ſame may be ſaid of the two foregoing; or becauſe ſhe was his beloved wife, his heifer, as her name ſignifies; hence the Jews [y] take her to be Michal his firſt wife, whom he greatly loved, and who though ſhe had no children after her contempt of David for playing before the ark, unto the day of her death, yet might have before: but it ſhould be obſerved, that as yet ſhe was not returned to David in Hebron; and when ſhe was returned, did not ſeem to continue there long enough to have a ſon there; and beſides being his firſt wife, would not be reckoned laſt; but ſtill more foreign is another notion of the Jews [z], that ſhe was Saul's widow, who though ſhe might not be married to another, might be married to a king, as David was; and this they ſuppoſe receives ſome confirmation from ch. xii. 8. but after all, it may be this phraſe David's wife, as ſome have obſerved, by a figure the Rhetoricians call Zeugma, or Hypozeugma, is to be joined to every one of the women before mentioned, who were his wives, and ſo called to diſtinguiſh them from his concubines, by whom he had ſons alſo. Polygamy, or plurality of wives, which David gave into, is no favourable part of his character.

℣. 6. And it came to paſs while there was war between

[w] Jarchi, Kimchi, & Abarbinel in loc. [x] Tanchuma apud Abarbinel in loc. [y] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 21. 1. Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 77. F. [z] In Kimchi & Ben Gerſom in loc.

tween the houſe of Saul, and the houſe of David, &c.] As long as that continued, as it did until the following quarrel happened between Iſhboſheth and Abner: that Abner made himſelf ſtrong for the houſe of Saul; or was ſtrongly in the intereſt of that houſe, and uſed his utmoſt endeavours to ſupport and confirm it.

℣. 7. And Saul had a concubine, whoſe name was Rizpah, the daughter of Aja, &c.] By whom he had two ſons, ch. xxi. 8. Joſephus [a] calls her father's name Sibathus: and Iſhboſheth ſaid to Abner; though the word Iſhboſheth is not in the text, it is rightly ſupplied; for no other can be ſuppoſed to ſpeak: wherefore haſt thou gone in unto my father's concubine? and defiled her; though perhaps it was not ſo much the act of uncleanneſs that ſo much offended him, or the diſhonour reflected on him and his family thereby, as it diſcovered an ambitious view in Abner to get the kingdom into his own hands, to which this was the leading ſtep; ſee 1 Kings ii. 22. Whether Abner was really guilty of this ſin or no, is not eaſy to determine; though by his not abſolutely denying it, it looks as if it was not merely a jealouſy of Iſhboſheth, or a falſe report made unto him; tho', eſpecially if he was not fully ſatisfied of it, it would have been his wiſdom to have ſaid nothing of it to him, ſince his continuance on the throne ſo much depended on him.

℣. 8. Then was Abner very wroth for the words of Iſhboſheth, &c.] If falſe he had a good deal of reaſon for it; and if true, he thought he deſerved better at his hands, than to be reproved for and upbraided with what he might think was a very ſmall fault, and might eaſily be connived at, and eſpecially in one that had been ſo ſerviceable to him: am I a dog's head? ſuch a mean, vile, contemptible perſon with thee, as if no better than a dog, and as uſeleſs and as unſerviceable as a dead dog, the head of a dog cut off; ſee 1 Sam xxiv. 14. 2 Sam. ix. 8. or am I eſteemed and to be treated as a head of dogs, a keeper of a pack of hounds, and not as a general of the armies of Iſrael? ſo Jarchi and others; but it ſeems rather to reſpect the filthy nature of a dog, that will couple with any; and ſo the ſenſe is, am I ſuch a filthy luſtful creature that care not with whom I lie, no more than a dog: which againſt Judah do ſhew kindneſs to the houſe of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends; who in oppoſition to the tribe of Judah, which alone abode by David, had ſhewn reſpect to the family of Saul, and all his friends, by his cloſe attachment to Iſhboſheth: and have not delivered thee into the hand of David; when it was in his power to have done it many a time: that thou chargeſt me to-day with a fault concerning this woman; he neither denies nor owns the charge, and yet by his not denying it, tacitly owns it; though by his way of ſpeaking, he ſuggeſts as if it was no fault at all, at leaſt a very trifling one, and ſuch as ought not to have been mentioned to him, conſidering the ſervices he had done to Iſhboſheth, and his family.

℣. 9. So do God to Abner, and more alſo, &c.] He wiſhes the worſt of evils to himſelf, ſuch as he cared not to name; but left them to be ſuppoſed what he meant, as utter ruin and deſtruction of himſelf, ſoul and body: except as the Lord hath ſworn to David, even ſo I do to him; meaning if he did not do that for David, which God had ſworn ſhould be done, namely what follows, the tranſlation of the kingdom to him; by which it appears, that Abner knew of the promiſe and oath of God reſpecting this matter; and therefore acted againſt his conſcience, in ſetting up Iſhboſheth on the throne; which he knew would not proſper, and that he was fighting againſt God; which ſhews what a hardened wicked creature he was, and how far ambition, and being thought to be of conſequence, will carry a man.

℣. 10. To tranſlate the kingdom from the houſe of Saul, &c.] Which was what the Lord had ſworn to do, 1 Sam. xv. 28, 29. and which Abner now threatens to do, inſolently taking that to himſelf which belonged to the Lord, and as if he could not do it without him: and to ſet up the throne of David over Iſrael and over Judah; over the one as well as over the other; for it was ſet over Judah already: from Dan even unto Beerſheba; which were the utmoſt borders of the land of Iſrael, from north to ſouth, and ſo includes the whole.

℣. 11. And he could not anſwer Abner a word, &c.] That is, he would not, he durſt not; otherwiſe if it was fact he charged him with, he could have inſiſted on the truth of it, and aggravated the crime and ſcandal of it; and obſerved it to him, that the kindneſs he had ſhewn him was no excuſe for it; but ſuch things though he would, he durſt not ſay: becauſe he feared him; he had the army at his command, and could dethrone him when he pleaſed; and it has been the fate of greater men than Iſhboſheth to be awed by their generals, and even David himſelf; ſee ℣. 39.

℣. 12. And Abner ſent meſſengers to David on his behalf, &c.] On his own account, and not on the account of Iſhboſheth, or the people of Iſrael; but to obtain terms for himſelf, or in his own name, as repreſenting him and ſtanding in his ſtead; or ſecretly, as Kimchi explains it, unknown to Iſhboſheth, or the people of Iſrael. The Targum is, "out of his place;" he ſent them from the place where he was, from Mahanaim: ſaying, whoſe is the land? the land of Iſrael, is it not thine David? verily it is; to whom does it belong, but unto thee, to whom the Lord has given it? not to any of Saul's poſterity: this he ordered the meſſengers to ſay in the firſt place, in order to ingratiate himſelf to David, and gain his meſſengers an audience. The Targum is, "I ſwear by him that made the earth;" ſo Jarchi ſays, it is an oath by him whoſe the earth is, even by the living God, whoſe is the earth, and the fulneſs thereof: ſaying alſo, make thy league with me; he deſired to enter into a covenant of friendſhip with him, that every thing that had paſſed might be forgiven and forgotten: and behold, my hand ſhall be with thee, to bring about all Iſrael unto thee; he promiſes on his part to do his utmoſt to bring all Iſrael under his government, and to obedience to him.

℣. 13. And he ſaid, well, I will make a league with thee, &c.] He accepted of the offer, he was ready and willing to enter into a covenant of friendſhip with him, and forgive all paſt offences: but one thing I require of thee; as the condition of this covenant: that is, thou ſhalt not ſee my face; be admitted into my preſence, or have any mark of my favour and reſpect: except thou firſt bring Michal, Saul's daughter, when thou comeſt to ſee my face; he inſiſted on it, that Michal, Saul's daughter, and his wife, ſhould be brought along with him, and preſented to him; this was the preliminary to the league and covenant; if this was not complied with, the propoſal would not be attended to.

[a] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 1. §. 4.

to. This shews the great affection David retained for his first wife, though he had had six since, and though she had lived with another man; as also his great regard to the honour of Saul's family, that one of them might share with him in the grandeur of the kingdom; though this also might be a piece of policy in him, to gain the friends of Saul's family to him.

℣. 14. And David sent messengers to Ishbosheth, Saul's son, &c.] When Abner's messengers returned to him, and acquainted him with the condition of David's entering into a league with him, it is highly probable that Abner sent them or others to David, to let him know that he could not do this of himself; that it was advisable for him to write to Ishbosheth, whose sister she was, and demand her of him; and that then he would use his interest with Ishbosheth to grant it, and this method David took: saying, deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me for an hundred foreskins of the Philistines; two arguments he made use of to enforce his demand; one is, that it was his wife he required, to whom he had a right, and no other man; and the other is, that he had purchased her at a great expence, at the risque of his life, in slaying 100 Philistines, whose foreskins he paid in for her at the instance of Saul; he mentions but one hundred, though he gave two as her dowry, no more being required than one; see 1 Sam. xviii. 25, 27. Josephus very wrongly says 600 [b]; the Syriac and Arabic have here 200.

℣. 15. And Ishbosheth sent and took her from her husband, &c.] Her second husband, to whom Saul had given her, 1 Sam. xxv. 44. even from Phaltiel the son of Laish; he is called Phalti in the place referred to.

℣. 16. And her husband went with her along weeping behind her, &c.] Because of his great affection to her, unwilling to part with her, but forced to it at the command of the king her brother: to Bahurim; a city in the tribe of Benjamin, ch. xix. 16. perhaps the same with Almon, Josh. xxi. 18. these two words being of the same signification; and the Targum has it here Almuth; so Alemeth in 1 Chron. vi. 60. It seems to be the same Josephus [c] calls Bachures, and says it was not far from Jerusalem. Bunting [d] says it was something more than a mile towards the north-east, and at this time is a fair castle strongly fortified, standing in a high place, and in the valley near it, at the stone Bohan, Josh. xv. 6. see ch. xvii. 18. then said Abner to him, go, return, and he returned; by which it appears, that Abner came with her to introduce her to David, without whom he was not to see his face; and he did not chuse her husband should go with her any farther, and was at his orders obliged to go back, who otherwise would have gladly accompanied her farther still, through his great affection for her.

℣. 17. And Abner had communication with the elders of Israel, &c.] Had a conference with the chiefs of the several tribes about the affairs of the kingdom: saying, ye sought for David in time past to be king over you; that is, at the death of Saul, and not before; for it was pretty generally known throughout the kingdom, that David was anointed by Samuel; and Saul himself had declared that he knew the kingdom would come to him; so that upon his death, it was the general expectation and desire of the people, that the government would devolve upon him, as it doubtless would, if Abner had not set up one of Saul's house, and persuaded the Israelites to own him as their king.

℣. 18. Now then do it, &c.] Make him your king, and I shall no longer oppose it as I have done: for the Lord hath spoken of David; concerning his being king, and the saviour of his people Israel: saying, by the hand of my servant David I will save my people Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, and out of the hand of all their enemies; and which though no where recorded in so many words, yet was the sense of the promise of making him king, and the design of his unction; and besides they might have been spoken to Samuel, though not written; and which he might report, and so might pass from one to another to be generally known.

℣. 19. And Abner also spake in the ears of Benjamin, &c.] Of the inhabitants of the tribe of Benjamin, of which tribe he was, and among whom he had the greatest influence; and with whom it was necessary to take some pains, because of their attachment to the family of Saul, which was of that tribe; and being near to that of Judah, might give David a good deal of trouble, if they were not got over to him: and Abner went also to speak in the ears of David in Hebron; having sounded the elders of Israel, and got their thoughts about the change of government, and found them well disposed to David, and had prevailed upon them to consent to make him king, and had gained the tribe of Benjamin on his side, went and reported to David the success he had: all that seemed good to Israel, and that seemed good to the whole house of Benjamin; how agreeable it was to the elders of Israel, and particularly to the tribe of Benjamin, to have David king over them.

℣. 20. So Abner came to David to Hebron, and 20 men with him, &c.] Before he went privately to him, and conferred with him, but now having gained so many of the Israelites in favour of David, he appeared more publickly, and brought perhaps some of the principal of the nation with him, to join in the league and covenant to be made: and David made Abner and the men that were with him a feast; not only in honour to them, as great personages, especially Abner, and as expressive of reconciliation; but as a token of the covenant they were entering into, and for the confirmation of it; it being usual to have feasts, when covenants were made; see Gen. xxvi. 28, 30.

℣. 21. And Abner said to David, I will arise and go, &c.] Into the several parts of the land of Israel: and will gather all Israel unto my Lord the king; the princes of the several tribes, and the elders of the people, their heads and principal men: that they may make a league with thee; come into the league and covenant now made with Abner, and those with him: and that thou mayest reign over all that thine heart desireth; which he supposed reached to all the people of the house of Israel and of Judah, though David had not expressed any eager and impatient desire of government, but waited the Lord's time to be put into the possession of the whole kingdom of Israel: and David sent Abner away, and he went in peace; with inward satisfaction of mind, pleased that things were so well settled and adjusted to the content of all parties, and with outward safety of body, no insults or attempts being made upon him by any of David's vid's men; which perhaps would not have been the caſe, if Joab had been at court, as may be concluded from what follows.

[b] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 1. §. 4. [c] Ibid. c. 9. §. 7. [d] Travels, p. 144.

℣. 22. And behold the ſervants of David and Joab came from purſuing a troop, &c.] A troop of robbers, that made an incurſion into the land, taking the advantage of a civil war between Iſrael and Judah; ſuch as the Edomites, Amalekites, and eſpecially the Philiſtines; which Joab hearing of went out in purſuit of them, and overtook them: and brought in a great ſpoil with them; which they took from them: but Abner was not with David in Hebron; when Joab and his army entered the city with their booty: for he had ſent him away, and he was gone in peace; he had juſt diſmiſſed him, and he was gone off ſafely.

℣. 23. When Joab and all the hoſt that was with him were come, &c.] To Hebron, or rather to David's court; for their coming to the city is before mentioned; this muſt be underſtood not of the whole army, of all the common ſoldiers, but of the chief officers, who with Joab came to court, to wait upon David, and report their ſucceſs: they told Joab, ſaying, Abner the ſon of Ner came to the king; ſome of the courtiers informed him of it, who knew it would not be very agreeable to him: and he hath ſent him away, and he is gone in peace; inſtead of ſeizing him, and laying him in a priſon as his enemy, he has let him go with all the marks of friendſhip and good-will.

℣. 24. Then Joab came to the king, &c.] To the apartment where he was; perhaps he was told the above at his firſt entering into the king's palace, by ſome in waiting, before he came to the king, which filled him with wrath, ſo that he came to him in a paſſion: and ſaid to him, what haſt thou done? which was very inſolent in a ſubject to ſay to his prince: behold, Abner came unto thee; I have been credibly informed of it, and am aſſured it is a fact which cannot be denied; he repreſents it as if he had done a wrong thing to admit him to come to him; but perhaps the great fault was that he had let him go: why is it that thou haſt ſent him away, and he is quite gone; or going, is gone[c]; is clean gone off, when he ought to have been laid hold on as a traitor, and put in irons.

℣. 25. Thou knoweſt Abner the ſon of Ner, &c.] Thou canſt not be ignorant what a cunning deceitful man he is, nor of his deſigns; or doſt thou not know? art thou ignorant? ſo read the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, with an interrogation: that he came to deceive thee; with falſe hopes, or to lead into wrong meaſures with an intention to involve and ruin him: and to know thy going out, and coming in; the affairs of his court, the ſecrets of his government, to obſerve his conduct and behaviour, and all his actions, and improve them againſt him: and to know all that thou doeſt; he ſuggeſts that he came not as a friend, but as a ſpy, and therefore ought to have been taken up, and detained, and not diſmiſſed. This Joab ſaid to ſet David againſt him, fearing if he ſhould be received into favour, he would be a rival of his; and beſides his breaſt was full of revenge againſt him for the death of his brother.

℣. 26. And when Joab was come out from David, &c.] Which perhaps he did at once, as ſoon as ever he had ſpoken his mind, and flew out of the room in a great paſſion, not waiting for the king's anſwer, ſince we read of none returned; though it may be the king diſdained to give him one, or cared not to confer with him whilſt in his paſſion, until it ſubſided; or choſe not to provoke him more, for it is plain he had great power over him; which generals of armies at this time very much aſſumed, ſee ℣. 39. he ſent meſſengers after Abner; in the name of the king, as Abarbinel rightly ſuppoſes, and ſo Joſephus[f]; for otherwiſe it can hardly be thought he would have returned on a meſſage from Joab only, who he knew bore him ill-will: which brought him again from the well of Sirah; which might have its name from the thorns and briers that grew about it. Joſephus[g] calls it Beſira, and ſays it was 20 furlongs from Hebron: but David knew it not; that Joab had ſent meſſengers in his name after Abner to fetch him back; it was not done by his order, with his conſent or knowledge; this is obſerved, to clear David from any concern in the death of Abner, as follows.

℣. 27. And when Abner was returned to Hebron, &c.] Alone, and not the 20 men with him; not to David's court, but juſt to the city, to the gate of it: Joab took him aſide in the gate; where he was waiting for him, and met him; this was a public place, where people were continually paſſing and repaſſing, and where courts of judicature uſed to be held; wherefore Abner might think himſelf ſafe here with Joab, and have no ſuſpicion at all of his deſign, and ſhews how fearleſs Joab was of God or men: to ſpeak with him quietly; peaceably, in a friendly manner, as all his geſtures towards him ſhewed; ſo that Abner made no difficulty of turning aſide with him, ſuppoſing he had ſomething to communicate to him from the king, which he had forgot: and ſmote him under the fifth rib that he died; in the ſame place that Abner had ſmote his brother, of which ſee ch. ii. 23. and this he did: for the blood of Aſahel his brother; for Abner's ſhedding his brother's blood; but this was not the only reaſon, and perhaps not the chief; but, as Joſephus[h] obſerves, becauſe he was fearful if Abner was received into the friendſhip of the king, he would be preferred unto him, and take his place as general of the army, as being an older and more experienced officer; ſo Procopius Gazæus and Theodoret.

℣. 28. And afterward when David heard it, &c.] That Joab had ſent to fetch Abner back, and that he had ſtabbed him in the gate of the city, and he was dead; it was ſome time after it was done that the news of it was brought to David; this circumſtance is obſerved, the more to clear the king from any concern in this affair: he ſaid; in a public manner, in open court, before all his princes; he called God to witneſs, and, as Joſephus[i] ſays, ſtretching out his right hand to God, he cried aloud: I and my kingdom are guiltleſs before the Lord for ever from the blood of Abner the ſon of Ner; he was ſenſible it would be known that Abner had been with him, and that Joab his general had killed him; and therefore it might be ſuſpected that he had an hand in it, and that it was done by his order, with his privy council; and therefore to purge him and them from it, he made this public declaration, that neither he nor his council knew any thing of it; and that it was not done with their knowledge and conſent, and by their order, but through the reſentment of a ſingle perſon; and therefore hoped that no man would impute the ſhedding of this blood unto them, or that God would puniſh them for it; and he was the rather led to make this public declaration, becauſe cauſe he knew that the death of Abner in this way would be reſented by the friends of Saul's family, and be an obſtruction to the union of the two kingdoms, which it was known Abner was endeavouring to bring about.

[c] וילך הלוך & abiit eundo, Pagninus, Montanus. [f] Antiqu. l. 7. c. 1. §. 5. [g] Ibid. [h] Ibid. [i] Ibid. §. 6.

℣. 29. Let it reſt on the head of Joab, &c.] That is, the blood of Abner, who was the ſhedder of it; let the guilt of it be charged to him, and let puniſhment for it be inflicted on him: and on all his father's houſe; on Abiſhai his brother, and other relations that might be privy to the death of Abner, and adviſing to it, and ready to aſſiſt in it if neceſſary: and let there not fail from the houſe of Joab; let there be always in his family, and of his ſeed, one or other of the perſons deſcribed as follows: one that hath an iſſue; a gonorrhea, which was reckoned infamous, and very impure, according to the Jewiſh law, and rendered perſons unfit for ſociety; ſee Lev. xv. or that is a leper; whoſe diſeaſe was very loathſome and infectious, and ſhut him out of the company of men; ſee Lev. xiii. or that leaneth on a ſtaff; being blind, as Aquila renders the word; or through weakneſs of body, not being able to walk without one; or through ſome diſeaſe of the feet, as the Jewiſh writers generally underſtand it; and R. Iſaiah interprets it of the gout particularly: the word for ſtaff is rendered ſpindle, Prov. xxxi. 19. and to this ſenſe it is rendered here in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; and then the meaning is, let his poſterity, or ſome of them, be ſo poor, that they ſhall be obliged to get their livelihood in ſo mean a way as by ſpinning; or let them be of ſuch an effeminate diſpoſition, as to be more fit to handle the ſpindle, and do the work of women, than to uſe the ſword: or that falleth on the ſword; not by it honourably in the field of battle, but cowardly deſtroying themſelves with it: or that lacketh bread; and is obliged to beg it: all which David might ſay, not by a ſpirit of prophecy, but in a paſſion; and to ſhew with what horror he reſented the action, and how deteſtable it was to him, and how far it was from him to have any concern in it: but though it was a very wicked action in Joab to murder Abner in this manner, and for the reaſons he did; yet it was a juſt vengeance from the Lord on Abner for fighting againſt God, and acting againſt the dictates of his own conſcience; for his rebellion againſt David, and perfidy to Iſhboſheth, and for having been the cauſe of much bloodſhed in Iſrael.

℣. 30. So Joab and Abiſhai his brother ſlew Abner, &c.] For though it was only Joab that gave him the thruſt of which he died, Abiſhai was in the ſecret, and was conſenting and adviſing to his death, and ſo an acceſſary to it; and might be preſent, ready to aſſiſt in it, if occaſion required; and ſo Joſephus [k] expreſly ſays, that Abiſhai his brother was with him when he drew his ſword, and ſmote him: becauſe he had ſlain their brother Aſahel at Gibeon in the battle; which was no juſt reaſon at all; his blood was ſhed in war, this in peace, in cold blood, and under the guiſe of friendſhip; that was ſhed with reluctance, and after fair warning, and in defence of himſelf; but this wilfully in Joab, unawares to Abner, and in great deceit and hypocriſy; ſee 1 Kings ii. 5.

℣. 31. And David ſaid to Joab, and to all the people that were with him, &c.] To his whole court, Joab being preſent; for he did not flee, nor was he laid hold on in order to be brought to juſtice; which ſhows how great his power was, and that he was too hard for David, as in ℣. 39. however this he did, he enjoined his whole court, and Joab alſo, to expreſs public mourning on this account: rent your clothes, and gird you with ſackcloth; which were expreſſions of mourning uſed on various occaſions, and on account of the dead, and which with the heathens were carried to a greater exceſs, even to the tearing of their fleſh, &c. and mourn before Abner; before his corpſe as carried to the grave, when it was uſual to make great lamentations; ſee Acts viii. 2. and king David himſelf followed the bier; or bed [l] on which his body was laid, and carried to the grave. On theſe the rich and noble among the Greeks and Romans were carried, and thoſe of the meaner ſort on biers [n]; and ſo with the Jews; ſee the note on Luke vii. 14. ſome of which were gilded with gold, and were made of ivory, and had ivory feet [o]; that of Herod's was all of gold, inlaid with precious ſtones, and the body covered with purple, and followed by his ſons and kindred, the ſoldiers going before armed, and their leaders following [p]; the bier or bed with the Romans was ſometimes carried by ſix perſons, ſometimes by eight or more [q]. It was not uſual for kings, as the Jews ſay [r], to attend a funeral, to go out of the doors of their palace after their own dead, and much leſs others; but David did this to ſatisfy the people, and to root out of their mind all ſuſpicion of his having any hand in Abner's death; and to ſhew that he was not ſlain by his will, and with his conſent.

℣. 32. And they buried Abner in Hebron, &c.] According to the Jewiſh account of places of burial, [s] he was buried in the midſt of the city, though burying places were generally without; and ſo Fuller [t] places this in his map; whether the cave of Machpelah, which was near Hebron, was now uſed for a burying place, is not certain: and the king lift up his voice and wept at the grave of Abner; made a great outcry, a loud lamentation, ſo as to be heard by all the people; and which no doubt was real and hearty, and not done merely with political views: and all the people wept; thro' concern for the death of Abner, eſpecially on account of the manner in which it was, and in imitation of the king, and being affected with his tears and cries.

℣. 33. And the king lamented over Abner, &c.] Delivered an elegy, or funeral oration, which he had compoſed on this occaſion, as Joſephus [u] ſuggeſts; for he had cried and wept before, but now he expreſſed ſomething as follows: and ſaid, died Abner as a fool dieth? the meaning of the interrogation is, he did not; the Targum is, "did Abner die as wicked men die?" no, he did not; he did not die for any wickedneſs he had been guilty of; he did not die as a malefactor, whoſe crime has been charged and proved in open court, and ſentence of condemnation pronounced on him righteouſly for it; but he died without any thing being laid to his charge, and much leſs proved, and without judge or jury; he was murdered in a clandeſtine, clandeſtine, inſidious, and deceitful manner; ſo the word fool is often taken in ſcripture for a wicked man, eſpecially in the book of Proverbs; the Septuagint verſion leaves the word untranſlated, "died Abner according to the death of Nabal?" no; but it can hardly be thought that David would mention the name of any particular perſon on ſuch an occaſion.

[k] Ut ſupra. [l] דרגשה της κλινης, Sept. lectum, Piſcator. [n] Salmuth. ad Pancirol. par. 1. tit. 62. p. 343. Kirchman. de funer. Roman. l. 2 c. 9. p. 375. [o] Alſtorph. de lect. vet. c. 19. p. 149. [p] Joſeph. de bello Jud. l. 1. c. 33. §. 9. [q] Kirchman. ut ſupra. [r] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 2. §. 3. Maimon. in Hilchot Ebel. c. 7. §. 7. David de Pomis, Lexic. fol. 119. 4. [s] Cippi Heb. p. 8. [t] Piſgah ſight, &c. in the Map of Judah. [u] Ut ſupra.

✡. 34. Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters, &c.] As malefactors are when they are taken up for any crime, and eſpecially when proved upon them, and condemned for it, and brought forth to be executed. This was not his caſe, and had he been aware of the deſign againſt him, as his hands and feet were at liberty, he might have defended himſelf; or if he found he had too many to deal with, might have made uſe of his feet and fled: as a man falleth before wicked men, ſo fellеſt thou; as a man being before blood-thirſty and deceitful men, falls before them, through treachery and deceit, privately and unawares, ſo fell Abner before Joab and Abiſhai; this David ſaid in the preſence of Joab, and before all the people, to declare the plain fact how it was, to expreſs his deteſtation of it, and to ſhew he had no hand in it; and Joab muſt be an hardened creature to ſtand at the grave of Abner, and hear all this, and not be affected with it: and all the people wept again over him; over Abner, being laid in his grave; they had wept before, but hearing this funeral oration delivered by the king in ſuch moving language, and in ſuch a mournful tone, it drew tears afreſh from them.

✡. 35. And when all the people came to cauſe David to eat meat while it was yet day, &c.] The cuſtom was to bury in the day-time, and after the funeral was over to provide and ſend in food to the relations of the deceaſed, and come and eat with them; as was alſo the uſage with the Greeks and Romans [t]; ſee the notes on Jer. xvi. 5, 7. and kings themſelves uſed to attend thoſe feaſts; for the Jews ſay [u], "when they cauſe him (the king) to eat, all the people ſit upon the ground, and he ſits upon the bed;" but in this caſe David refuſed to eat with them: David ſware, ſaying, ſo do God to me, and more alſo; may the greateſt evils, and ſuch as I care not to mention, befal me; and even more and worſe than I can think of and expreſs: if I taſte bread, or ought elſe, till the ſun be down; perhaps the funeral was in the morning, as funerals with the Jews generally now are; for otherwiſe if it was now towards evening, his abſtinence from food till that time would not have ſeemed ſo much, nor required much notice, and ſtill leſs an oath.

✡. 36. And all the people took notice of it, &c.] Not only of his oath, that he would not eat food till evening, but of his whole conduct at the funeral of Abner; the ſorrow he expreſſed for his death, and the oration he made on account of it, in which he pretty ſeverely reflected on his murderer: and it pleaſed them; that he ſhewed ſuch a concern for his death, and that it was a clear caſe he had no hand in it: as whatſoever the king did pleaſed all the people; what he did at this time, burying Abner with ſo much pomp and ceremony; and indeed he had ſo much the hearts of the people, and ſuch a ſhare in their affections, and they had ſuch an high opinion of him, that all that he did in public and private affairs they reckoned well done; they were highly approved of by them, ſuch an intereſt had he in them.

✡. 37. For all the people and all Iſrael underſtood that day, &c.] Not the people of Judah only, but of Iſrael alſo, to whom the knowledge of theſe things came; they knew and were ſatisfied by his conduct and behaviour, by his words and actions: that it was not of the king to ſlay Abner the ſon of Ner; it was not by the counſel or advice of the king, as the Targum; it was without his knowledge and conſent, was contrary to his mind and will; that he had no manner of concern in it, and that if it had been in his power he would have prevented it.

✡. 38. And the king ſaid unto his ſervants, &c.] His courtiers, giving a reaſon why he mourned as he did; or had ſaid [w], and ſo is a reaſon why the people concluded, and were fully ſatisfied he had no hand in his death; but the firſt is beſt, becauſe what follows was ſaid not to the people at the grave, but to his ſervants at court: know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Iſrael? a prince, being of the royal family, his father was Saul's uncle, and he his own couſin; a great man, being general of the army, a very valiant and ſkilful commander, a man of great wiſdom and parts. David ſays nothing of his grace and virtue, only of his grandeur, his high birth and civil excellencies; he praiſes him in what he was commendable, and proceeds no farther; and this was ſufficient to ſhew there was juſt cauſe of mourning on civil accounts; and this they might eaſily know and perceive, that the fall or death of ſuch a man, which had that day happened in Iſrael, was a public loſs, and matter of lamentation; and the rather as he was employing all his excellent talents in civil affairs, and all his intereſt in the people of Iſrael, to unite them to Judah, and bring them under the government of David.

✡. 39. And I am this day weak, though anointed king, &c.] Which ſeems to be given as a reaſon, or for an excuſe why he did not inflict juſt puniſhment upon the murderer, according to the law of God, becauſe he was weak; not in body or mind, but with reſpect to the kingdom, that was like a tender branch, or in its infant-ſtate; and great care and caution were to be uſed that it was not overturned: he was a king by unction, not by birth; a ſon of the late king was ſet up againſt him, and was poſſeſſed of the far greater part of the kingdom; he was indeed anointed by Samuel to be king over all Iſrael; but as yet he was not put into the poſſeſſion of the kingdom he was anointed to; he was anointed and made king over Judah, and inveſted with the office of king there, and ſettled in it; and yet his power was not very great there, for as follows: and theſe men the ſons of Zeruiah, be too hard for me; his ſiſter's ſons, Joab and Abiſhai, they were a check upon him; he could not do what he would, their influence was ſo great, both in the court and in the camp; the one was general of the army, and the other a conſiderable officer in it, and both valiant men, and very reſpectable among the people, for their atchievements in war, and the ſucceſs they had; ſo that they were very much out of the reach of David to bring them to juſtice, without ſhaking his kingdom; and therefore in point of prudence he thought it

[t] Vid. Kirchman. de funer. Roman. l. 4. c. 5. & 6. nam dixerat, Junius & Tremellius.

[u] Miſn. ut ſupra. [w] David de Pomis ut ſupra.

ויאמר [w]

it beſt to connive at this fact until he was more eſtabliſhed in the kingdom. Whatever may be ſaid for this conduct, it is certain he was too dilatory, and which did not ſit eaſy upon his mind, and therefore gave it in charge to Solomon before his death, not to ſuffer Joab to go to his grave in peace, 1 Kings ii. 5, 6, 31, 32, 33, 34. Some take theſe words, weak and hard, in a different ſenſe, that David was weak or tender [x], as it may be rendered, tender-hearted, of a merciful diſpoſition, and therefore ſpared Abner when he was in his hands, though he had done him ſo much hurt, who was the Lord's anointed; but theſe men, his ſiſter's ſons, were of cruel tempers, more unmerciful than he, and therefore ſlew him; but the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt: the Lord ſhall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedneſs; which may be conſidered either as an imprecation of evil on Joab, or a prediction, that ſooner or later righteous judgment would be rendered to him by the Lord; with whom he leaves it to take vengeance on him, ſatisfying himſelf with this for the preſent, that though it was not in his power to do it, the Lord would in his own time and way: but after all that can be ſaid in favour of David, he ſeems to have been too much in fear of men, and too diſtruſtful of the power and promiſe of God to eſtabliſh him in his kingdom, and was too negligent of public juſtice; which, had it been exerciſed, might have prevented other ſins, as the murder of Iſhboſheth, to which the authors of it might be encouraged by this lenity.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter relates the concern the death of Abner gave to Iſhboſheth, and the men of Iſrael, ℣. 1. the murder of Iſhboſheth by two of his captains, who cut off his head, and brought it to David, ℣. 2—8. by whom they were rewarded according to their deſerts, he putting them to death, and expoſing their bodies to ſhame and ignominy, ℣. 9—12.

℣. 1. And when Saul's ſon heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, &c.] By Saul's ſon is meant Iſhboſheth, to whom tidings were ſoon brought of the death of Abner his general, and that he died in Hebron, where David his rival reigned, and was there murdered by Joab the general of his army: his hands were feeble; not only in a natural ſenſe, being quite diſpirited at hearing ſuch news; but in a civil ſenſe, having loſt his main ſupport and ſtrength, he being preſident of his council, and commander of his forces, and in whom he placed all his confidence: and if he knew nothing of his being at Hebron, it muſt ſurprize him to hear of his dying there; from whence he might conclude, that ſince he was there without his knowledge, it could not be in his favour, ſome plot was forming, and ſchemes laying with his rival to dethrone him; or if he knew of it, and underſtood it in this light, that he was endeavouring to make peace between him and David, and upon advantageous terms to him, of which now he might entertain no hopes; he was diſpirited, and might conclude that Joab was againſt any terms of peace, and therefore had diſpatched him: and all the Iſraelites were troubled; at the loſs of ſo great a man in their kingdom, and of whoſe deſigns to unite them to Judah, and put them under the government of David, they were not ignorant; but now were in the utmoſt confuſion, not knowing what ſtep to take, and whom to ſend to carry on the treaty, in which Abner was concerned; and whether it would be ſafe for any to go upon it, ſince he who had the management of it was murdered, and no juſtice done on the murderer, and therefore might queſtion David's ſincerity and uprightneſs in this affair; theſe things greatly diſtreſſed and embaraſſed them for the preſent, but Providence opened a way for their future eſtabliſhment and proſperity.

℣. 2. And Saul's ſon had two men that were captains of bands, &c.] Of troops in the army, or of guards about the perſon of Iſhboſheth ſon of Saul: the name of the one was Baanah, and the name of the other Rechab, the ſons of Rimmon a Beerothite, of the children of Benjamin; ſo that theſe men were brethren in nature, as well as in iniquity; they had the ſame father, who is deſcribed by his name and city, and their names are expreſsly mentioned and recorded to their infamy; and they were not only the ſervants of Iſhboſheth, who had commiſſions under him, but were of the ſame tribe with him; all which is obſerved as an aggravation of their crime: for Beeroth alſo was reckoned to Benjamin; the place from whom Rimmon their father is denominated, and where he dwelt, as well as Gittaim, where they had ſojourned, as in the next verſe. This place, Beeroth, originally belonged to the Gibeonites, and fell to the lot of Benjamin at the diviſion of the land, ſee Joſh. ix. 17. and xviii. 25.

℣. 3. And the Beerothites fled to Gittaim, &c.] At the death of Saul, when many of the Iſraelites deſerted their cities, and left them to the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. xxxi. 7. and ſo the inhabitants of Beeroth forſook their city, which was near the Philiſtines, and went to Gittaim, a city in the ſame tribe, tho' a little farther off, ſee Neh. xi. 33.

℣. 4. And Jonathan, Saul's ſon, &c.] His eldeſt ſon, who died at the ſame time with him: had a ſon that was lame of his feet; of both feet, which were broken or bruiſed by a fall, as after related: and was five years old when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of Jezreel; that is, when the tidings of their death came from Jezreel, the place where the battle was fought in which they died, to Gibeah, and the royal palace there; ſo that he was now 12 years of age: and his nurſe took him up, and fled; fearing the Philiſtines would come thither and deſtroy the family of Saul; and this child being the ſon of Jonathan, the eldeſt ſon of Saul, was by birth heir to the crown, his father and grandfather being both dead, and which might make the nurſe the more ſolicitous to ſave his life by flight: and it came to paſs as ſhe made haſte to flee, that he fell, and became lame; in her hurry and fright he dropt out of her arms, and had ſome bone broken or diſlocated, which was never rightly replaced, or had ſome contuſion, of which he was never cured, and his name was Mephiboſheth, called Merib baal, 1 Chron. viii. 34. and ix. 40. of the change of ſuch names ſee the note on ch. ii. 8. This ſtory of Mephiboſheth, and of his nurſe's flight with him, and what happened upon it, is here here inſerted on occaſion of the flight of the Beerothites, ℣. 3. but chiefly to obſerve in what condition Saul's family now was, and what encouraged the murderers of Iſhboſheth to be guilty of the crime they were, ſince when he was taken off, there was none but this lame child of that family; and as the removal of Iſhboſheth would be of ſo much ſervice to David, they doubted not but it would be very acceptable to him, and they ſhould be greatly rewarded and honoured; and which they might do with the greateſt ſafety, ſince the neareſt kinſman and avenger of blood was ſo young, and lame of both his feet: or rather this is mentioned to ſhew, that Iſhboſheth had no right to the throne, his eldeſt brother's ſon being living; ſo that thoſe murderers might think they did a right thing, to take away the life of an uſurper.

[x] רך tener, Pagninus, Montanus.

℣. 5. And the ſons of Rimmon the Beerothite, Rechab and Baanah, went, &c.] From Gittaim, where they were ſojourners, ℣. 3. or from the army, where they had commiſſions, where-ever it was: and came about the heat of the day; the middle of the day, at noon, as follows: to the houſe of Iſhboſheth; which was at Mahanaim: who lay on a bed at noon; as was uſual in hot countries, eſpecially for great perſonages, as kings; ſo the Targum, "and he was ſleeping the ſleep of kings;" or at a time when kings uſually ſlept; though this is remarked by ſome as an inſtance and proof of the ſluggiſhneſs and inactivity of this prince, who left the management of all affairs to Abner his general, and gave himſelf to ſloth and ſenſuality; which, when indulged, bring ruin on princes and their kingdoms.

℣. 6. And they came thither into the midſt of the houſe, &c.] They not only came unto it, but entered into it, and went into the inmoſt part of it; the guards being aſleep alſo perhaps, or not on duty, ſo that there were none to obſtruct them; or if there were, they deceived them, ſince they went in as though they would have fetched wheat; out of the king's granaries, for the payment and ſupport of the ſoldiers under them, who in thoſe days were paid in corn, as were the Roman ſoldiers [y] in after-times; and theſe granaries might not only be in the king's houſe, but near his bed-chamber; for in thoſe ancient ages of ſimplicity there was not ſuch grandeur in the courts of princes as now; the Targum is, "as ſellers of wheat," in the guiſe and habit of ſuch perſons, pretending they came to ſell wheat to the king's purveyors, who were at the granaries; or, as others interpret it, they went in along with the wheat-merchants as if they belonged to them, and ſo found their way to the king's bed-chamber: and ſmote him under the fifth rib; ſee the note on ch. ii. 23. and Rechab and Baanah his brother eſcaped; they got out of the palace after they had committed the murder undiſcovered and unſuſpected.

℣. 7. For when they came into the houſe, he lay on his bed in his bed-chamber, &c.] This is repeated to give a more particular account of the murder; though Abarbinel thinks they went in twice; when they went in firſt they ſmote him under the fifth rib, and made their eſcape; but fearing they had not left him dead, they returned, and did as follows: and they ſmote him, and ſlew him; ſo that it was out of all doubt with them that he was dead: and beheaded him; to make ſure work of it: and took his head; along with them, perhaps in one of the ſacks they had to fetch wheat in, and ſo paſſed undiſcovered, to carry to David to curry favour with him: and gat them away, through the plain all night; through the plain of Jordan; all the way from Mahanaim to Hebron, being for the moſt part a plain country till they came to Hebron, which was mountainous; the way from Mahanaim to Hebron was a ſpace of 68 miles, according to Bunting [z].

℣. 8. And they brought the head of Iſhboſheth unto David to Hebron, &c.] Suppoſing it would have been a very acceptable preſent to him: and ſaid to the king, behold the head of Iſhboſheth the ſon of Saul, thine enemy, which ſought thy life; all which, his relation to Saul, his enmity to David, and his deſigns upon his life, are artfully put together to raiſe the indignation of David againſt him, and make their preſent of his head to him the more agreeable: and the Lord hath avenged my lord the king this day of Saul, and of his ſeed; for all the evils and injuries they had done him; this being the laſt of the ſons of Saul by a lawful wife, the two remaining were by a concubine; and theſe men impiouſly aſcribe to the Lord what they with wicked hands had done.

℣. 9. And David anſwered Rechab and Baanah his brother, the ſons of Rimmon the Beerothite, &c.] In a manner they did not expect: and ſaid unto them, as the Lord liveth, who hath redeemed my ſoul out of all adverſity; ſpiritual and temporal, eſpecially the latter is meant, and particularly what he had been brought into by the perſecution of Saul, whilſt living, and by thoſe that adhered to his houſe ſince his death; which he aſcribes to the Lord, and doubted not that he would ſtill deliver him, and complete what he had deſigned for him, and that he needed not the aſſiſtance of ſuch wicked hands as theirs; the words contain the form of an oath made to teſtify the truth of the following narrative, concerning the man that brought the tidings of Saul's death to him, or for the certainty of what he would do to thoſe perſons for the murder of Iſhboſheth.

℣. 10. When one told me, ſaying, behold, Saul is dead, &c.] No more is related, not that he killed him, or aſſiſted in killing him, only that he was dead; by which it appears, as Abarbinel thinks, that the Amalekite did not ſlay Saul, and that David did not put him to death on that account, but for what follows: thinking to have brought good tidings; which would have been very acceptable to David, that he would have rejoiced and exulted at it as he did; but he was miſtaken; inſtead of that, I took hold of him, and ſlew him at Ziklag; that is, ordered one of his young men to lay hold on him, and ſlay him, as he did, ch. i. 15. who thought that I would have given him a reward for his tidings; a handſome preſent, as the Targum here, a gift, or raiſed him to ſome poſt of honour and profit.

℣. 11. How much more, when wicked men have ſlain a righteous perſon, &c.] As Iſhboſheth was in compariſon of the wicked men that ſlew him; tho' not with reſpect to David, if he knew of his divine deſignation to the throne; nor with reſpect to Mephiboſheth, his eldeſt brother's ſon, whoſe right to the throne was prior to his, which he muſt know; though with reſpect to his conduct towards David, in aſſuming the throne of Iſrael, it might not be owing to any bad principles of malice and injuſtice, but to his ignorance of David's having a right to the throne upon his father's death, and by by the advice of his friends he took it: the ſin of theſe men in murdering him is aggravated, in that they ſlew him in his own palace, upon his bed; in cold blood, and not in the field of battle, not being engaged in war with him; in his own palace, where he might juſtly think himſelf in ſafety; on his bed, aſleep, and ſo at an unawares, when inſenſible of danger, and not in a poſture of defence: and now David argues from the leſſer to the greater, that if the man that brought him the tidings of Saul's death, had no reward given him for bringing what he thought would be reckoned good tidings, then much leſs would any be given them who had actually ſlain their maſter, and that in ſuch a baſe and barbarous way; and if the above perſon, who only was a bringer of tidings, was taken and ſlain, then how much more did they deſerve to die, who had been guilty of ſuch a cruel and barbarous murder: ſhall I not therefore now require his blood of your hands, and take you away from the earth? avenge his blood on them, by putting them to death, out of the world, and from the land of the living, as men that deſerved to live no longer on it.

[y] Vid. Valtrinum de re militar. Roman. l. 3. c. 15. p. 236.

[z] Travels, p. 145, 148.

℣. 12. And David commanded his young men, and they ſlew them, &c.] He ordered ſome of his guards about him to fall on them, and put them to death; and they accordingly did: and cut off their hands and their feet; their hands which had ſmote Iſhboſheth, and cut off his head; and their feet which had been ſwift to ſhed his blood, and made haſte to bring his head ſo many miles to David; this was what the Jews call meaſure for meaſure: and hanged them up over the pool in Hebron; not their hands and their feet, but the trunks of their bodies, thus mutilated; ſo Theodoret; though others think their hands and their feet were hung up, and not their bodies, becauſe dead bodies were not to hang upon the tree more than a day; they were hung up over the fiſh-pool in Hebron, becauſe a public place, and where they were the more expoſed to their ſhame, and the terror of others: but they took the head of Iſhboſheth, and buried it in the ſepulchre of Abner in Hebron; by order of David no doubt, who it ſeems had made, or ordered to be made, a ſepulchre for Abner, ſee ch. iii. 32. all which David did to ſhew his regard to the family of Saul, his abhorrence of ſuch execrable murders, and to remove all ſuſpicion of his being concerned in them, and to conciliate the minds of the Iſraelites to him.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter we have an account of all the tribes of Iſrael coming to Hebron, and anointing David king over them, ℣. 1—5. of his expedition againſt the Jebuſites in Jeruſalem, and taking from them the ſtrong hold of Zion, ℣. 6—10. of his building an houſe for himſelf, and of his building up his family, by taking more wives and concubines, and having more children, whoſe names are given, ℣. 11—16. and of an invaſion of the land by the Philiſtines, and David's victory over them, ℣. 17—25.

℣. 1. Then came all the tribes of Iſrael to David unto Hebron, &c.] All the reſt of the tribes, ſave the tribe of Judah, who had made him king over them in Hebron ſeven years ago. Theſe were ambaſſadors ſent in the name of the ſeveral tribes to him, quickly after the deaths of Abner and Iſhboſheth; from having any hand in which David had ſufficiently cleared himſelf, and which had tended to reconcile the minds of the people of Iſrael to him: and ſpake, ſaying, we are thy bone and thy fleſh; for though he was of the tribe of Judah, yet as all the tribes ſprung from one man, they were all one bone, fleſh and blood; all nearly related to each other, all of the ſame general family of which David was; and ſo, according to their law, a fit perſon to be their king, Deut. xvii. and from whom they might expect clemency and tenderneſs, being ſo near akin to them.

℣. 2. Alſo in time paſt, when Saul was king over us, &c.] Even over all the tribes of Iſrael: thou waſt he that leddeſt out, and broughteſt in Iſrael; that led out the armies of Iſrael againſt their enemies, fought their battles for them, obtained victories, and brought the troops under his command home in ſafety; and the remembrance of theſe valiant acts of his, which then endeared him to the people, was now another reaſon for their chuſing him king: and another follows, the chiefeſt of them all: and the Lord ſaid to thee; when anointed by Samuel; for though what follows is not recorded in ſo many words, yet the ſenſe of it is expreſſed in the anointing him to be king, whoſe office, as ſuch, lay in doing the following things: thou ſhalt feed my people Iſrael; as a ſhepherd feeds his flock; hence kings were frequently called ſhepherds, and David particularly, in which he was an eminent type of Chriſt, ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 71, 72. Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. and xxxvii. 24. and thou ſhalt be a captain over Iſrael; the Targum is, "and thou ſhalt be king over Iſrael;" which gives the true ſenſe of the tribes, and which was the chief and prevailing reaſon with them to make him their king; and which they, at leaſt many of them, would have done before, even immediately upon the death of Saul, but that they were perſuaded by Abner to yield obedience to Iſhboſheth he ſet up.

℣. 3. So all the elders of Iſrael came to the king to Hebron, &c.] Which either explains what is meant by the tribes coming to him, ℣. 1. namely, coming by their elders as their repreſentatives; or elſe the meaning is, that the meſſengers the tribes ſent, when they returned and reported the favourable reception they had met with from David; the elders of the ſeveral tribes, the princes or principal men met, and came together to David in Hebron: and king David made a league with them before the Lord; the ſtates of the nation; he entered into a covenant with them; he on his part promiſing to rule them in juſtice and judgment according to the laws, and they promiſing to yield a chearful obedience to him in all things juſt and lawful: and this was done before the Lord; either before the ark of the Lord, as Abarbinel; but that was in Kirjath-jearim, from whence it was after this brought by David to this city; rather, as Kimchi obſerves, wherever all Iſrael, or the greater part of them, were aſſembled, there the divine Shekinah or majeſty dwelt; ſo that what was done in a public aſſembly was reckoned as done before the Lord, and in his preſence; or this covenant was made before the Lord, and each party appealed to him as witneſs of it, ſo that it was a very ſolemn one: and they anointed David king over Iſrael; that is, over all Iſrael, which was the third time of his being anoint-ed; the firſt was by Samuel, pointing out the perſon the Lord choſe and appointed king; the ſecond was by the tribe of Judah, when they inveſted him with the office of a king over them; and now by all the tribes, when he was inaugurated into the whole kingdom of Iſrael; and not only the elders came at this time, but great numbers of the people from the ſeveral tribes, and continued with David ſome days, eating, drinking and rejoicing, ſee 1 Chron. xii.

ver. 4. David was thirty years old when he began to reign, &c.] Over Judah, which was the age of his antitype Chriſt, when he entered upon his public miniſtry, Luke iii. 23. and he reigned forty years; and ſix months, as appears by the following verſe; but the months are not mentioned, only the round number of years given: two reaſons the Jews [a] give for this; the one, that he fled ſix months from Abſalom; the other is, that he was ill in Hebron ſo long, and therefore are not reckoned.

ver. 5. In Hebron he reigned over Judah ſeven years and ſix months, &c.] So long the kingdom of Iſrael continued in the houſe of Saul after his death; and by this it appears, that David was near 38 years of age when the elders of Iſrael came and made him their king: and in Jeruſalem he reigned 33 years over all Iſrael and Judah; which in all made 40 years and ſix months, ſee 1 Kings ii. 11. upon his being made king over all the tribes, as ſoon as he had taken the ſtrong hold of Zion, which he immediately attacked, as follows, he removed the ſeat of his kingdom from Hebron to Jeruſalem.

ver. 6. And the king and his men went to Jeruſalem, &c.] Which, at leaſt, part of it, belonged to the tribe of Benjamin; and therefore until all Iſrael, and that tribe, with the reſt, made him king, he did not attempt the reduction of it, but now he immediately ſet out on an expedition againſt it: unto the Jebuſites the inhabitants of the land; who inhabited the country about it, and even dwelt in that itſelf; for the tribe of Judah could not drive them out at firſt from that part of it, which belonged to them, nor the tribe of Benjamin from that part which was theirs; in ſhort, they became ſo much maſters of it, that it was called, even in after-times, Jebus, and the city of the Jebuſites; ſee Joſh. xv. 63. Judg. i. 21. and xix. 10, 11. which ſpake unto David; when he came up againſt them, and beſieged them: except thou take away the blind and lame, thou ſhalt not come in hither; which many underſtand of their idols and images, which had eyes but ſaw not, and feet but walked not, which therefore David and his men in deriſion called the blind and lame; theſe the Jebuſites placed for the defence of their city, and put great confidence in them for the ſecurity of it, and therefore ſaid to David, unleſs you can remove theſe, which you ſcornfully call the blind and the lame, you will never be able to take the place. And certain it is, the heathens had their tutelar gods for their cities as well as their houſes, in which they greatly truſted for their ſafety; and therefore with the Romans, when they beſieged a city, the firſt thing they attempted to do, was by any means, as by ſongs particularly, to get the tutelar gods out of it [b], believing otherwiſe it would never be taken by them; or if it could, it was not lawful to make the gods captives [c]: and to this ſenſe moſt of the Jewiſh commentators agree, as Kimchi, Jarchi, Ben Gerſom and R. Iſaiah, who take them to be images; ſome ſay, made of braſs, which were placed either in the ſtreets of the city, or on the towers; it was uſual with all nations to place on their walls both their houſhold and country gods, to defend them from the enemy [d]. A learned countryman of ours is of opinion, that theſe were ſtatues or images taliſmanically made, under a certain conſtellation, by ſome ſkilful in aſtrology, placed in the receſs of the fort, and entruſted with the keeping of it, and in which the utmoſt confidence was put: but it ſeems better with Aben Ezra and Abarbinel, and ſo Joſephus [f], to underſtand this of blind and lame men; and that the ſenſe is, that the Jebuſites had ſuch an opinion of the ſtrength of their city, that a few blind and lame men were ſufficient to defend it againſt David and his army; and perhaps in contempt of him placed ſome invalids, blind and lame men, on the walls of it, and jeeringly told him, that unleſs he could remove them, he would never take the city: thinking; or ſaying [g]; this was the ſubſtance of what they ſaid, or what they meant by it: David cannot come in hither; it is impoſſible for him to enter it, he cannot and ſhall not do it; and very probably theſe words were put into the mouths of the blind and lame, and they ſaid them frequently.

ver. 7. Nevertheleſs, David took the ſtrong hold of Zion, &c.] A fortreſs without the city, and ſeparate from it, and which was very ſtrong; and the taking it might facilitate the taking of the city, which yet, as appears, by what follows, was very difficult to do: the ſame is the city of David; it was afterwards ſo called, where he built an houſe, and dwelt.

ver. 8. And David ſaid on that day, &c.] On which he took the ſtrong hold of Zion: whoſoever getteth up to the gutter; where it is generally ſuppoſed the blind and lame were, whether images or real men: but what is meant by Tzinnur, we render gutter, is not eaſy to ſay; we follow ſome of the Jewiſh writers, who take it to be a canal, or water-ſpout, uſed to carry off the water from roofs of houſes into ciſterns, as the word is rendered in Pſ. xlii. 7. which is the only place beſides this, in which it is uſed in ſcripture; but R. Iſaiah takes it to be the bar or bolt of the gate, and the ſenſe to be, whoever got up to the gate, and got in at that, unbolting it, or breaking thro' it; the Targum interprets it of the tower of the city, or ſtrong fortreſs, and ſo Abarbinel; but Jarchi ſays, it was a ditch, agreeable to which Bochart [h] tranſlates the words, and indeed more agreeable to the order of them; "whoſoever ſmites the Jebuſites, let him caſt into the ditch, (next the wall) both the blind and the lame, extremely hated by David." But a learned modern writer [i] gives a more ingenious and probable interpretation of theſe words thus; "whoſoever (firſt) ſmiteth the Jebuſites, and through the ſubterraneous paſſages reaches the lame and the blind, &c." and which ſeems to be favoured by Joſephus, as he obſerves; who ſays [k], the king promiſed the command of the whole army to him who ſhould δια των υποκειμενων φαραγγων, through the ſubterraneous cavities, go up to the citadel, and take it: to which I would add, that the word is uſed in the Chaldee paraphraſe of Eccl. i. 7. of the ſeveral ſubterraneous paſſages, through which the rivers flow out of,

[a] Hieron. Trad. Heb. In lib. Reg. fol. 77. I. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 9. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 6. c. 4.
[b] Vid. Valtrinum de re militar. Rom. l. 5. c. 5.
[c] Vid. Gregory's Notes and Obſervations, &c. ch. 7. Montanus.
[d] Cornel. Nepot. Vit. Themiſtocl. l. 2. c. 7.
[f] Antiq. l. 7. c. 3. §. 1.
[g] לאמר dicendo, Pagninus,
[h] Phaleg. l. 4. c. 36. col. 304.
[i] Dr. Kennicot's Diſſert. 1. p. 35.
[k] Ut ſupra.

5

of, and reflow into the ocean: remarkable is the note of Theodoret, "a certain Hebrew says, Aquila renders it thro' a pipe; on which, he observes, David being willing to spare the walls of the city, ordered the citizens should enter into the city by an aquæduct;" according to the Jews, there was a cave under ground, which reached from the king's house in Jerusalem to Jericho, when it was taken by Nebuchadnezzar; see the note on Jer. xxxix. 4. in which story there may be a mixture of fable; yet it is not improbable that there was such a subterraneous passage; since Dio Cassius [l] speaks of several such, thro' which the Jews made their escape in the last siege of the city: and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind; or even the lame and the blind men the Jebusites had placed to mock David; and therefore it follows, that are hated of David's soul; because he was despised and jeered at by them, and through them: if these could be understood of their idols and images, the phrase would be easily accounted for, nothing being more abominable to David than idolatry: he shall be chief and captain; these words are not in the original text here, but are supplied from 1 Chron. xi. 6. that is, he shall be chief commander of the army, as Joab became, who was the first that went up and smote them: wherefore they said, the blind and the lame shall not come into the house; that is, either the Jebusites said this, that their images, called in derision by David the blind and the lame, if these did not keep David out, they should never be intrusted with the safety of their fort any more [m]; or rather because the blind and the lame men said this of David, he shall not come into the house, the fort, or citadel, therefore David hated them; which is the sense of the above learned writer [n].

℣. 9. So David dwelt in the fort, &c.] The strong hold of Zion, which he took: and called it the city of David; from his own name, to keep up the memory of his taking it, and of his habitation in it: and David built round about, from Millo and inward; built a wall about it, and enlarged the place, increased the buildings both within and without. Millo is supposed to be a ditch round the fort, full of water, from whence it had its name; or was a large hollow place which divided the fort from the lower city, and which afterwards Solomon filled up, and made it a level, and therefore is called so here by anticipation; tho' Jarchi says it was done by David. According to Dr. Lightfoot [o], it was a part of Sion, or some hillock cast up against it on the west-side; his first sense is best, Millo being no other than the fortress or citadel; which, as Josephus says [p], David joined to the lower city, and made them one body, and erecting walls about it made Joab superintendant of them; and this was the round-about, or circuit, which David made, reaching from Millo, or the citadel, to that again, which is meant by inward, or to the house [q], as it should be rendered; that is, to the house of Millo, as in 2 Kings xii. 20. and so it is said 1 Chron. xi. 8. that David built the city from Millo round about, that is, to the same place from whence he began [r].

℣. 10. And David went on, and grew great, &c.] In honour and wealth, in fame and reputation, in subduing his enemies, obtaining conquests over them, and enlarging his dominions: and the Lord God of hosts, of armies above and below, was with him; to whom all his prosperity and success was owing. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord God of hosts was for his help," or his helper.

℣. 11. And Hiram king of Tyre, &c.] This was father of that Hiram that lived in the times of Solomon, whose name was Abibalus before he took the name of Hiram, which became a common name of the kings of Tyre; his former name may be seen in the ancient historians quoted by Josephus [s]; of the city of Tyre, see the note on Is. xxiii. 1. which was built one year before the destruction of Troy [t]. This king, on hearing of David's being acknowledged king by all Israel, and of his taking Jerusalem out of the hands of the Jebusites, sent messengers to David; to congratulate him upon all this: and cedar trees, and carpenters, and masons; these might not be sent at first, but David intending to build himself an house, might, by the messengers, on their return, request of Hiram to send him timber and workmen for that purpose; the people of Israel being chiefly employed in cultivating their fields, and vineyards, and olive-yards, and feeding their flocks and herds, few of them had any skill in hewing timber and stone, and building houses, at least not like the Tyrians and Sidonians; see 1 Kings v. 6. and accordingly he sent him cedars from Lebanon, great part of which was in his dominions, and artificers in wood and stone, to build his house in the most elegant manner: and they built David an house; to dwell in, a stately palace, called an house of cedar, ch. vii. 2.

℣. 12. And David perceived that the Lord had established him king over Israel, &c.] By the prosperity and success which attended him in every thing he set his hand to: and that he had exalted his kingdom for his people Israel's sake; for their advantage and glory more than for his own.

℣. 13. And David took him more concubines and wives out of Jerusalem, after he was come from Hebron, &c.] He had six when he was at Hebron, and now he took more, which was not to his honour, and contrary to the law of God, Deut. xvii. 17. the concubines were a sort of half wives, as the word may signify, or secondary ones, and under the others: and there were yet sons and daughters born to David; besides those in Hebron, mentioned in ch. iii. 2—5.

℣. 14. And these be the names of those that were born unto him in Jerusalem, &c.] The names of his sons, for his daughters are not mentioned, and these seem to be such only that were born of his wives, see 1 Chron. iii. 9. Shammua, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon; these four were by Bathsheba; the first of these is called Shimea, 1 Chron. iii. 5.

℣. 15. Ibhar also, and Elishua, and Nepheg, and Japhia.] Elishua is called Elishama, 1 Chron. iii. 6.

℣. 16. And Elishama, and Eliada, and Eliphalet.] Seven more by some other wife or wives; nine are mentioned in 1 Chron. iii. 6—8. there being in that account two Eliphalets, and another called Nogah; which two, one of the Eliphalets, and Nogah, might die without sons, as Kimchi thinks, and so are not mentioned here.

℣. 17. But when the Philistines heard that they had anointed David king over Israel, &c.] That the civil war in the nation was now at an end, which they hoped would have issued in their destruction ſtruction, and therefore lay ſtill and quiet; but now being united under the government of David, and he hereby greatly ſtrengthened, and become powerful; and hearing alſo of his ſucceſs againſt Jeruſalem, and the friendſhip he had contracted with Hiram king of Tyre, they thought it was high time to beſtir themſelves, and put a ſtop to his power and greatneſs; and now it was, as Kimchi thinks, that David penned the ſecond pſalm, which begins, why do the heathen rage, &c. all the Philiſtines came up to ſeek David; in order to fight him, all the five principalities of the Philiſtines combined together againſt him; perhaps his old friend Achiſh king of Gath, was now dead, or had now entertained a different opinion of him: and David heard of it; that they had invaded his kingdom, and fought to fight him: and went down to the hold; ſome fortified place or ſtrong hold near Jeruſalem, which lay lower than the city, or than the ſtrong hold of Zion, in which David dwelt; hither he went, not ſo much for ſafety, or with an intention to abide there, but as a rendezvous for his men, and to prepare to meet the Philiſtines.

[l] Hist. l. 66. [m] Gregory, ut supra. [n] Dr. Kennicot, ut supra. [o] Works, vol. 2. Chorograph. Cent. c. 24. p. 25. [p] Antiq. l. 7. c. 3. §. 2. [q] וביתה & ad domum. [r] See Dr. Kennicot, ut supra, p. 49, &c. [s] Contr. Apion, l. 1. §. 17, 18. [t] Justin e Trogo, l. 18. c. 3.

℣. 18. The Philiſtines alſo came and ſpread themſelves in the valley of Rephaim.] Or of the giants, as Joſh. xv. 8. which lay to the weſt of Jeruſalem; of which, ſee the note on the above place; the Philiſtines ſpreading themſelves in it, ſhews that they were very numerous.

℣. 19. And David enquired of the Lord, &c.] By Abiathar, and the Urim and Thummim, in the ephod he had on: ſaying, ſhall I go up to the Philiſtines? who by this time were gone from the valley to an higher place, to mount Perazim, as in Iſ. xxviii. 21. wilt thou deliver them into my hand? here two queſtions are put together, and an anſwer returned to both, contrary to a notion of the Jews, ſee the note on 1 Sam. xxiii. 11. and the Lord ſaid to David, go up, for I will doubtleſs deliver the Philiſtines into thine hand; by which oracle he had both the mind of God that he ſhould go up, and was aſſured of victory.

℣. 20. And David came to Baal-perazim, &c.] As it was after called, for here it has its name by anticipation, and whither the Philiſtines were come from the valley of Rephaim; ſee 1 Chron. xiv. 11. which was at no great diſtance, the one being the hill, to which the other was the valley, computed to be about three miles from Jeruſalem, in the way to Bethlehem [u], between which places were two hours travel [w]: and David ſmote them there; there a battle was fought, in which David had the victory aſſured him: and ſaid, the Lord hath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters; as when waters, through their mighty force, break down the banks of rivers, and carry all before them; or as one breaks an earthen veſſel full of water, ſo the Targum on 1 Chron. xiv. 11. therefore he called the name of the place Baal-perazim; which ſignifies, the maſter of breaches, where the Philiſtines were broke in upon, and broken to pieces, of which God was the author, and which gave David the maſtery over his enemies; the Targum renders it, the plain of breaches, and ſeems to take it to be the ſame with the valley of Rephaim.

℣. 21. And they left their images, &c.] Their idol-gods, which they brought with them to protect and defend them, and give them ſucceſs; perhaps in imitation of the Iſraelites, who formerly brought the ark of God into their camp againſt the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. iv. 3—6. and it appears to have been the cuſtom of other countries, in later times, to bring their gods with them to battle [x]: and David and his men burnt them; that is, his men burnt them at his command, 1 Chron. xiv. 12. agreeable to the law of God, that ſo no profit might be made of them, Deut. vii. 5. the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, and others, render it, and took them, or carried them away [y]; as they might do, and after they had expoſed them in triumph, then burnt them.

℣. 22. And the Philiſtines came up yet again, &c.] And, as Joſephus ſays [z], with an army three times larger than the former: and ſpread themſelves in the valley of Rephaim; in the ſame place where they were before.

℣. 23. And when David enquired of the Lord, &c.] For though he had ſucceſs before, and got the victory, he would not engage again with them without having the mind and will of God, on whom he knew victory alone depended: he ſaid, thou ſhalt not go up; that is, directly, and in a ſtrait line: but fetch a compaſs behind them; and get to the rear of them, inſtead of falling upon them in the front: and come upon them over-againſt the mulberry-trees; which grew in the valley of Rephaim, and near where the Philiſtines had pitched.

℣. 24. And let it be when thou hearеſt the ſound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees, &c.] Of a going of the wind on the tops of theſe trees, making a ruſtling upon them, and that in ſuch a manner as to reſemble the going of men, or march of armies, as if they were moving in the air over the tops of the mulberry-trees; which Jarchi and R. Iſaiah interpret of angels being ſent of God, and moving at that time to help David, and deſtroy the Philiſtines; ſo the Targum on 1 Chron. xiv. 15. Theſe trees being in Judea, account for ſilk there, Ezek. xvi. 10. though ſome think that was not known ſo early; others ſuppoſe it was, and to be the Hebrew byſſus mentioned by Pauſanias [a], as being of a yellow colour: that then thou ſhalt beſtir thyſelf; or move towards the camp of the Philiſtines, and fall upon them in the rear, who by reaſon of the ſound in the trees, would not hear the motion of the Iſraelites; or if they heard it, would take it to be no other than the motion of the trees they heard, both ſounds being confounded together; or they would take the ſound they heard for the motion of the enemy in the front, and give way, and ſo fall into the hands of the Iſraelites in their rear, which muſt throw them into the utmoſt confuſion and conſternation: for then ſhall the Lord go out before thee to ſmite the hoſt of the Philiſtines; by an angel or angels; ſo the Targum, "for then ſhall go forth the angel of the Lord, to make thee proſperous to ſlay in the camp of the Philiſtines;" that being the preciſe time for the ſalvation of Iſrael, and the deſtruction of the Philiſtines, and the token of it.

℣. 25. And David did ſo as the Lord commanded him, &c.] In all things he was obedient to the command of God; Saul was not: he got behind the army of the Philiſtines, as he was directed; and when he heard the ſound in the mulberry-trees, he aroſe and fell upon his enemies: and ſmote the Philiſtines from Geba until thou come to Gazer; or from Gibeon, as in 1 Chron. xiv. 16. a city in the tribe of Benjamin, near to which this battle was fought, and where the purſuit began, which was car[u] Bunting's Travels, &c. p. 138.

[w] Maundrel's Journey from Aleppo, &c. p. 87. ed. 7.
[x] Omnigenumque Deum, &c. Virgil. Æneid. l. 8. Montanus; ſuſtulit, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[y] וישאם καὶ ἐλαβοσαν αὐτὰς, Sept. tulit, V. L. Tigurine verſion, [z] Antiq. l. 7. c. 4. §. 1.
[a] Eliac. five, l. 5. p. 294.

carried as far as Gazer, a city that lay on the borders of the Philiſtines, as Joſephus ſays [b]; and ſo far they were purſued, and were ſmitten as they fled; and, according to Dutting [c], it was a ſpace of 18 miles.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter we are told, that David fetched the ark from Baale of Judah, with an intent to bring it to his own city, ℣. 1—5. but Uzzah being ſmitten for his error concerning it, David was diſpleaſed, and left it at the houſe of Obed-edom, where it remained three months, and proved a bleſſing to his houſe, ℣. 6—11. which David hearing of, went and brought it from thence with great expreſſions of joy before it as it came along, and offered offerings to the Lord at the ſetting it in its place, and gave gifts to the people, ℣. 12—19. but Michal his wife was diſpleaſed with ſome of his geſtures on that occaſion, which made ſome difference between them, and which, on Michal's part, was reſented by the Lord himſelf; for ſhe became barren for it to the time of her death, ℣. 20—23.

℣. 1. Again, David gathered together all the choſen men of Iſrael, 30000.] Which was done by the advice of his officers, 1 Chron. xiii. 1. the word again refers either to the gathering of them, when they made him king in Hebron, as the Jewiſh writers generally obſerve; but then they gathered themſelves, and not David: or rather to his gathering them to fight the Philiſtines a little while ago; and as they were the choice and young men that were gathered for war, as being the fitteſt, ſo now to fetch up the ark with dancing and ſinging, and to protect it; the Septuagint verſion ſays, they were about 70,000; but the Targum, Syriac and Arabic verſions have 30,000, agreeable to the Hebrew text.

℣. 2. And David aroſe, and went with all the people that were with him, &c.] The 30,000 choſen men gathered together, and as many elſe as choſe to go: from Baale of Judah, to bring up from thence the ark of God; that is, they firſt went to this place, as in 1 Chron. xiii. 6. in order to fetch the ark from thence, as here expreſſed, and then they came from thence with it; this place is the ſame that is called Baalah and Kirjath-baal, a city in the tribe of Judah; hence Judah is added to it, and the ſame with Kirjath-jearim, Joſh. xv. 9, 60. the place where it was brought to when fetched from Beth-ſhemeſh, 1 Sam. vii. 10. and had been here now near 50 years; nor was it any where elſe during this time, only once at Gibeah of Saul with him, 1 Sam. xiv. 18. whoſe name he called by the name of the Lord of hoſts that dwelleth between the cherubim; not the ark, but the Lord, whoſe is the ark; his name is called by the name of Jehovah, the infinite, incomprehenſible, eternal and immutable Being, the Lord of armies above and below; whoſe habitation was between the cherubim that overſhadowed the mercy-ſeat, which was above the ark; all this is ſaid, not only to expreſs the greatneſs and majeſty of God, but for the honour of the ark, which belonged to him.

℣. 3. And they ſet the ark of God upon a new cart, &c.] Which was a great miſtake, ſince it ought not to have been put upon a cart old or new; it was to be borne upon mens ſhoulders, and carried by Levites only, and thoſe of the family of Kohath, to whom no waggons were given, when others had them, for the above reaſon, Numb. vii. 9. it is ſtrange that ſo many prieſts and Levites, and of the people of Iſrael gathered together on that account, and David alſo, ſo well verſed in the law of God, ſhould not advert to it; perhaps they were led by the example of the Philiſtines, who put it in a new cart, and ſet it forward towards Beth-ſhemeſh, and were not puniſhed for it; but it ſhould have been conſidered they were an ignorant heathen people, and who had no proper perſons among them to bear it, and ſo might be diſpenſed with. This miſtake was afterwards ſeen by David, and rectified, 1 Chron xv. 2. wherefore there is no reaſon to charge the text with an error or eſcape, and that the word Kirjath-jearim is wanting, and to be ſupplied, as Spinoſa [d] ſuggeſts: and brought it out, or after they had brought it out [e], of the houſe of Abinadab that was in Gibeah; or which was on the hill in Kirjath-jearim, 1 Sam. vii. 1. and Uzzah and Ahio the ſons of Abinadab drew the new cart; perhaps not only Abinadab himſelf was dead, but Eleazar alſo, his eldeſt ſon, who was ſanctified to keep the ark, as in the above quoted place; and theſe might be his younger ſons who at this time had the care of it, and it may be eſpecially Uzzah.

℣. 4. And they brought it out of the houſe of Abinadab, which was at Gibeah, &c.] That is, the new cart, which is the laſt thing ſpoken of, and the bringing of the ark out of his houſe, is mentioned before; though ſome take this to be the coffer in which were the preſents of the Philiſtines, which was now brought out along with the ark, ſee 1 Sam. vi. 8. accompanying the ark of God; or with the ark of God [f]; that is, they brought the new cart from the houſe of Abinadab on the hill, with the ark of God upon it: and Ahio went before the ark; guiding the oxen that drew it, and Uzzah might go behind, or on one ſide, to take care that the ark fell not out of it.

℣. 5. And David and all the houſe of Iſrael played before the Lord, &c.] That is, before the ark, which was a ſymbol of the preſence of the Lord: on all manner of inſtruments made of firwood; which is a general expreſſion, the particulars follow; though inſtruments of different ſorts are mentioned, and even ſome of metal, as cymbals, which were veſſels of braſs, they ſtruck one againſt another, and gave a very acute ſound, being hollow [g]; harps, pſalteries and timbrels are frequently met with; cornets, according to Kimchi, are ſuch ſort of inſtruments, that in playing upon them it required an agitation of the whole body. Now it was,

[b] Antiq. l. 7. c. 4. § 1. [c] Travels, &c p. 138. [d] Tractat. Theol. Politic. c. 9. p. 176.
[e] וישאוהו quum extulilſent, Piſcator. [f] עם ארון האלהים cum arca Dei, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator. [g] Suidas in voce κυμβαλα.

was, that David penned the 68th pſalm, which begins, let God ariſe, &c. words uſed by Moſes when the ark ſet forward, Numb. x. 35.

℣. 6. And when they came to Nachon's threſhing-floor, &c.] Who is called Chidon, 1 Chron. xiii. 9. he ſeems to have had two names; or it was a place that had two names, as ſay the Jews [h]; according to a tradition of theirs [i], Chidon is the name of the place where it was ſaid to Joſhua, ſtretch out the ſpear or ſhield in thine hand towards Ai, Joſh. viii. 18. ſo indeed the word ſignifies, nor was it unuſual to ſtretch out the ſhield as a ſignal on occaſion. Thus Æneas lift up his ſhield in his left-hand, as a token to his Trojans, that he was come to relieve them [k]: where this threſhing-floor was, is not ſaid; ſome ſay [l], it was the threſhing-floor of Araunah the Jebuſite; it could not be far from Jeruſalem, ſince Baale-judah or Kirjath-jearim was but about a mile from it, according to Bunting [m], from whence they fetched the ark: Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it; to keep it from falling: the reaſon was, for the oxen ſhook it; the ſame word is uſed in 1 Chron. xiii. 9. and there it is rendered, for the oxen ſtumbled; and by their ſtumbling the cart was ſhaken, and the ark in it, and in danger of falling, as Uzzah thought: or the oxen ſhook, for the word it is a ſupplement; they ſhook as if their members were plucking aſunder and parting, as Kimchi expreſſes it, becauſe of the holineſs of the ark; as if they were ſenſible it was wrong for them to draw it, when it ought to have been carried on the ſhoulders of Levites; and by this way, as well as by the death of Uzzah, the error committed was pointed out: but others render it, for the oxen ſtuck in the clay [n], and could not go on; which Uzzah obſerving, and fearing that in their ſtruggle to get out, the cart ſhould be overturned, or that the proceſſion would be retarded too much, took hold of the ark to take it out, and carry it the remainder of the way, it not being far from Jeruſalem.

℣. 7. And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Uzzah, &c.] And which was manifeſt by ſmiting him: and God ſmote him there for his error; committed at this time, which was complicated; as that the ark was put upon a cart, to which he might be the chief adviſer, as Procopius Gazæus notes, when it ſhould have been carried on the ſhoulders of the Levites; and that he touched it with his hand, which none but prieſts might do, ſuppoſing him to be a Levite, which it is not clear he was, however not a Kohathite; and he took hold of it in order to carry it in his arms, which even Levites, and thoſe Kohathites might not do, but with ſtaves put into it, which only they were to hold; and beſides, as Abarbinel obſerves, he ſhewed little faith in the power and providence of God, as if he could not take care of the ark without him: and there he died by the ark of God; directly, upon the ſpot, by the ſide of it; whether he was ſtruck by lightening, or in what way, cannot be ſaid; however, he died by the immediate hand of God, in token of his diſpleaſure: and this ſhows, that it is dangerous in matters of worſhip to act contrary to the command of God, even in things that may ſeem ſmall and trivial; and though what may be done, may be done with a good intention, as this was, yet that will not excuſe the ſin; nor are thoſe who are the moſt forward and zealous in religious matters, exempted from marks of God's diſpleaſure when they go wrong.

℣. 8. And David was diſpleaſed, becauſe the Lord had made a breach upon Uzzah, &c.] He could not eaſily ſubmit, and be reconciled to the providence; his heart was ready to riſe up againſt God, and murmur at him for ſtriking him dead in ſuch an awful manner, for ſo ſmall a matter as this might ſeem to be; and the rather, as this put a ſtop to the proceſſion, and caſt a damp upon their joy and mirth on this occaſion, and might ſeem to be an ill omen to David, and be improved by his enemies againſt him: and he called the name of the place Perez-uzzah unto this day; the name he gave the place, which ſignifies the breach of Uzzah, continued to the time of writing this book.

℣. 9. And David was afraid of the Lord that day, &c.] Leſt he ſhould be ſmitten for his error alſo, and eſpecially as he had diſcovered ſome reſentment at the Lord's dealing with Uzzah; when he ought to have been ſtill and quiet, and ſubmitted to the will of God, and owned his juſtice in it, confeſſed his own error, and been thankful for his ſparing mercy vouchſafed to him: and ſaid, how ſhall the ark come to me? the meaning of which is not, how it ſhould be brought to the place provided by him in Jeruſalem, now Uzzah was dead, for there were Levites enow to carry it, as they afterwards did; but as ſignifying that it would be either boldneſs and preſumption in him to do it, ſince God had ſhewn ſuch a mark of his diſpleaſure at their proceeding, that he might be in doubt whether it was the will of God it ſhould come to him; or as fearing it would be dangerous to him to have it with him, ſince he might be guilty of ſuch an error, of the ſame, or like it, that had been committed.

℣. 10. So David would not remove the ark of the Lord unto him into the city of David, &c.] As yet, but wait a little longer, until he had more thoroughly conſidered of it, and made himſelf acquainted with every thing relative to the ark, that he might know how to behave for the future, without giving offence: but David carried it aſide into the houſe of Obed-edom the Gittite; which was hard by, on one ſide of the place where they were; this man was a Levite, as appears from his being afterwards appointed to be door-keeper for the ark, and to ſing praiſe before it, and ſo a proper perſon to commit the care of it to, 1 Chron. xv. 18, 21, 24. and xvi. 5, 6. he is called a Gittite, either becauſe he had ſojourned in Gath ſome time, or rather becauſe he was of Gath-rimmon, a city of the Levites, Joſh. xxi. 24.

℣. 11. And the ark of the Lord continued in the houſe of Obed-edom three months, &c. David, and thoſe with him, returned to their habitations, where they continued during this time: and the Lord bleſſed Obed-edom, and all his houſhold; him, and all his family, with ſpiritual bleſſings, and with an affluence of temporal good things; for godlineſs has the promiſe of this life, and of that which is to come; men are not loſers but gainers, even in things temporal, for their attachment to the cauſe of religion, and the ſervice of God, and their regard to that in their own houſes, as well as in the houſe of God. Joſephus [o] ſays, that Obed-edom was very poor before, and in a low condition, out of which he ſoon emerged, and came into affluen-

ci

[h] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 35. 2. [i] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in lib. Paralipom. fol. 83. G. [k] Virgil. Æneid. 10. ℣. 261, 262. Vid. Diodor. Sic. l. 20. p. 787. [l] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 35. 3. [m] Travels, &c. p. 135.
[n] כי שמטו הבקר nam luto hæſerunt boves, Noldius, p. 396. N°. 1343. ſo Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 37. col. 374. ex Arabica Lingua. [o] Antiq. l. 7. c. 4. §. 2.

circumſtances; ſo as to be taken notice of by his neighbours, and reported abroad; by which means David came to the hearing of it, as follows.

℣. 12. And it was told king David, &c.] By ſome of his courtiers who had heard of it: ſaying, the Lord hath bleſſed the houſe of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him; becauſe of the ark of the Lord; it was ſo ſuddenly, in ſo ſhort a time, and ſo largely, that it could not eſcape the notice and obſervation of men that knew him; and this increaſe was not in any natural way by which it could be accounted for; ſo that it could be aſcribed to no other cauſe but the bleſſing of God, and that on account of the ark of God that was with him; nothing elſe could be thought of: ſo David went and brought up the ark of God from the houſe of Obed-edom in the city of David with gladneſs; being animated and encouraged by the bleſſing of God on the houſe of Obed-edom, becauſe of it, and thereby freed from thoſe ſlaviſh fears he was before poſſeſſed of, and filled with hopes of being bleſſed alſo on account of it; if not with temporal bleſſings, he needed not, yet with ſpiritual ones.

℣. 13. And it was ſo, that when they that bare the ark of the Lord, &c.] The Levites; for now David had ſeen the former miſtake, and rectified it, and ordered the Levites to carry it, as they did upon their ſhoulders, with the ſtaves therein, ſee 1 Chron. xv. 2, 12—15. when theſe had gone ſix paces, he ſacrificed oxen and fatlings; upon an altar, which was at once erected for that purpoſe; the number and kind of ſacrifices offered were ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams, 1 Chron. xv. 26. and theſe David offered, not by himſelf, but by the prieſts that were with him, and that as ſoon as they had gone ſix paces from the houſe of Obed-edom; whereby they perceived the Levites were able to carry the ark, with what was in it, the Lord helping them, as in the above quoted place, and without ſtumbling and falling, or any evil attending them; and Kimchi thinks, theſe ſix paces were juſt the meaſure of the ground Uzzah went before what befel him; but it is highly probable that he had gone farther; however, no doubt by the order of David, the Levites ſet down the ark, and ſacrifices were offered by way of thankſgiving to God, and for the continuance of his goodneſs, and for atonement for former errors. Some think theſe ſeven oxen and rams were offered, at ſeven ſeveral times and places, at every ſix paces an ox and a ram; but this is not very likely.

℣. 14. And David danced before the Lord with all his might, &c.] That is, before the ark of the Lord; not a ſet dance, or along with others; but he leaped and ſkipped as car, a lamb, does, and that for joy that the ark was like be brought home to his houſe, without any token of the divine diſpleaſure, as before; the Targum is, "he praiſed before the Lord with all his might;" exerted himſelf to the uttermoſt in ſinging the praiſes of God vocally, or by playing on an inſtrument; to which ſenſe are the Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions, which is approved of by Caſtel[p]; who obſerves, it no where appears to have been a cuſtom to dance before the ark; but it might be now done, though not uſual, and therefore was obſerved by Michal with contempt, ℣. 16. a later writer[q] ſhews, that dancing is the proper ſenſe of the word: and David was girded with a linen ephod; which others, beſides prieſts, ſometimes wore, as Samuel did, and which David might chooſe to appear in, rather than in his royal robes, as being more agreeable to the ſervice of God, and lighter for him both to walk and dance in on this occaſion.

℣. 15. So David and all the houſe of Iſrael brought up the ark of the Lord, &c.] The elders of Iſrael, and the captains over thouſands; 1 Chron. xv. 25. beſides the common people; there might be as large a number with him now, as before: with ſhouting, and with the ſound of the trumpet; with the ſhouts of the people in common, and with blowing of trumpets by thoſe who were appointed for that purpoſe, and with other inſtruments of muſic, ſee 1 Chron. xv. 27, 28. Joſephus ſays[r], that ſeven choirs went before the prieſts bearing the ark, as the king commanded, he himſelf playing on the harp; ſo the Septuagint verſion.

℣. 16. And as the ark of the Lord came into the city of David, &c.] Being brought thither on the ſhoulders of the Levites: Michal Saul's daughter looked through a window; in the King's palace, to ſee the proceſſion, which was very grand, and in great pomp, attended by a vaſt number of people, and with muſic of all ſorts. She is ſaid to be Saul's daughter, though David's wife, as having a good deal of her father's haughty temper and diſpoſition, as appears by what follows: and ſaw king David leaping and dancing before the Lord; the ark of the Lord, by theſe outward geſtures expreſſing the inward joy of his heart on this occaſion; and ſhe deſpiſed him in her heart; as acting a mean part, quite beneath himſelf, and unbecoming his royal dignity.

℣. 17. And they brought in the ark of the Lord, &c.] Into the city of David, the ſtrong hold of Zion; and ſet it in his place, in the midſt of the tabernacle that David had pitched for it; or ſtretched out: for this was not the tabernacle of Moſes, David pitched any where; that was at this time at Gibeon, where it continued to the time of Solomon, 1 Chron. xxi. 29. 2 Chron. i. 3, 4. but this was a curtain, or curtains, which he had ſtretched out or drawn around for the ark to be pitched in the midſt of; and this was not in his own houſe, for he is afterwards ſaid to go to that, but ſomewhere in Jeruſalem or the city of David: and David offered burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings before the Lord; that is, before the ark, and that by way of thankſgiving for its being brought ſafe thither, without any error or miſtake on the ſide of him, the Levites, and the people, and without offence to God, and any mark of his diſpleaſure as before. This muſt be ſuppoſed to be done by prieſts, and not by David himſelf, who was no prieſt.

℣. 18. And as ſoon as David had made an end of offering burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, &c.] Or theſe were performed according to his order: he bleſſed the people in the name of the Lord of hoſts; not as a prieſt, but as a prince, as the common father of them, wiſhing them all happineſs and proſperity outward and inward, praying to God to bleſs them with all bleſſings temporal and ſpiritual, who is the God of armies above and below, and can do what he pleaſes, and more than his people can aſk or think.

℣. 19. And he dealt among all the people, &c.] Gave a dole unto them, divided among them: even among the whole multitude of Iſrael; and if there were ſo many as at firſt, there were 30,000 of them, ℣. 1. and perhaps more, ſince it follows: as well to the women as men; to both the one and the other; and the women, it is very probable, were were not among thoſe that went to fetch the ark, but aſſembled to attend the entrance of it into the city, and were preſent at the ſolemnities of its ſettlement: to every one a cake of bread; or a loaf of bread, of what quantity is not ſaid, no doubt ſufficient for any one [illegible] more: and a good piece of fleſh; not only [illegible] was good in quality but large in quantity [illegible] piece of it; the Jews ſay [a] the ſixth [illegible] ſhock, they dividing into ſix parts as we [illegible] four quarters; but it is not likely that ſuch a quantity of fleſh ſhould be given to each perſon; and a flagon of wine; but what ſuch a veſſel held cannot be ſaid, though at leaſt we may ſuppoſe it equal to a bottle of ours, or more. See Cant. ii. 5. and Hoſ. iii. 1. ſo all the people departed every one to his houſe; to refreſh themſelves with the proviſions David had given them.

[p] Lexic. col. 1793. [q] Hackman. Præcidan. Sacr. p. 156, 157. [r] Antiq. l. 7. c 4. §. 2.

℣. 20. Then David returned to bleſs his houſhold, &c.] His wife, children, and ſervants, to wiſh all happineſs to them on this occaſion, and pray to God for bleſſings on them temporal and ſpiritual. This was done when he came from the place where the ark was ſet, and was come to his own palace: and Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David; before he had got quite to his own houſe: and ſaid, How glorious was the king of Iſrael to day; which ſhe ſpoke in an ironical jeering way, meaning the reverſe, how inglorious, mean, and deſpicable he had made himſelf to be, by his airs and geſtures: who uncovered himſelf to day in the eyes of the handmaids of his ſervants, as one of the vain fellows ſhamelеſly uncovereth himſelf! becauſe he had put off his royal robes, and put on a linen ephod; for that he had ſtripped himſelf naked cannot be ſuppoſed, nor do her words import ſo much, tho' a paſſionate exaggeration of the caſe.

℣. 21. And David ſaid unto Michal, It was before the Lord, &c.] Before the ark of the Lord, what was done was done there; ſhe upbraided him with his dancing and ſinging, which was deſigned for the honour and glory of God, and in thankfulneſs to him for the bringing the ark to his city, and therefore ſhe ought not to have reproached him with it, and he adds: which choſe me before thy father, and before all his houſe; which he obſerved to humble her pride, and mortify her, as well as to remark the diſtinguiſhing goodneſs of God to him, which laid him under obligation to expreſs his thankfulneſs to him in every ſhape: to appoint me ruler over the people of the Lord, over Iſrael; which was a high honour conferred upon him, and required the utmoſt gratitude: therefore will I play before the Lord; upon the harp, or praiſe before him, as the Targum, ſing his praiſe before the ark, unto any inſtrument of muſic, without once imagining I diſgrace myſelf, on the contrary think it to be the higheſt honour to me to be employed in ſuch ſervice.

℣. 22. And I will yet be more vile than thus, &c.] If this is to be vile, I'll endeavour to be viler ſtill; if to dance before the ark, and ſing the praiſes of God be reckoned a leſſening of me, I'll more and more be found in doing ſuch things, or what is ſimilar to them: and will be baſe in mine own ſight; humble himſelf, and lie low in his own eyes, admiring the grace and goodneſs of God to him, thinking he could never condeſcend too low to exalt the Lord, and magnify the riches of his goodneſs: and of the maid-ſervants which thou haſt ſpoken of, of them ſhall I be had in honour; who the more humble I am, and the more I condeſcend, by laying aſide all ſtate in acts of devotion and religion, the more ſhall I be honoured and ſpoken well of by them.

℣. 23. Therefore Michal the daughter of Saul had no child until the day of her death, &c.] The children ſhe brought up for Adriel were not her own, but adopted ones, or Adriel's by another woman, chap. xxi. 8. however, ſhe had none after this time, whatever ſhe had before, and it does not appear that ſhe had any, though the Jews ſay ſhe was Eglah, and Ithream her ſon, chap. iii. 5. ſee the note there. And thus ſhe that vilified David brought a reproach upon herſelf, as barrenneſs was always reckoned, and no one deſcending from her arrived to royal dignity, and ſat on the throne of David; and ſo it was ordered in providence, as Abarbinel obſerves, that the ſeed of David and of Saul might not be mixed.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter expreſſes David's concern for building an houſe for the ark of God, which he communicated to Nathan the prophet, and was approved of by him, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and who was that night ſent by the Lord to David, to acquaint him, that as he had for many years dwelt in a tent, and had never given directions to the tribes of Iſrael, and the rulers of them to build him an houſe, ſo neither ſhould David build him one; but his ſon that would ſucceed him in the throne ſhould; and alſo obſerves to him the many great things he had done for him, and promiſes him more, and particularly the eſtabliſhment of his throne and kingdom for ever, in which he has reſpect to the Meſſiah, that ſhould ſpring from him, ℣. 4—17. Then follows a prayer of David, in which he expreſſes the ſenſe he had of the greatneſs and goodneſs of God, and of his own unworthineſs to receive ſuch favours from him he had made, returns him thanks for the promiſes he had made, and prays for the performance of them, ℣. 18—29.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when the king ſat in his houſe, &c.] Which Hiram's ſervants had built for him, having no occaſion to go out to war: and the Lord had given him reſt round about from all his enemies; both at home and abroad; though this reſt and peace did not laſt long; for the next chapter gives an account of ſeveral people he was engaged in war with.

℣. 2. That the king ſaid unto Nathan the prophet, &c.] This is the firſt time this prophet is made mention of, but often afterwards, yet who he was, and from whence he came, is not known; he appears to be a man of great piety and prudence, as well as endowed with a prophetic ſpirit, and was very familiar with David, and perhaps dwelt in his palace; being a man on all accounts fit for converſation with princes, to whom David imparted what he had been meditating upon in his heart. The Jews have a tradition [t], that he was the ſame with Jonathan the ſon of Shimea, the brother of David, 2 Sam. xxi. 21. which is not very likely. See

[s] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 36. 2.

[t] Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 79. M. & in lib. Paralipom. fol. 89. B. F.

See now, I dwell in an houſe of cedar; made of the Cedars of Lebanon; ſee what a ſpacious palace it is: but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains; in a tabernacle within curtains, as the Targum; not the tabernacle of Moſes, for that was at Gibeon, 1 Chron. xxi. 29. but that which David had made for it, which conſiſted of curtains that were drawn around it, chap. vi. 17. It gave him a concern that he ſhould dwell in ſo magnificent a palace, and the ark of God ſhould have ſo mean an habitation; wherefore it was upon his mind to build a grand edifice for it, and this he ſuggeſted hereby to Nathan, and ſo he underſtood him as appears by what follows; and the rather he was led to ſuch a thought, being now at reſt and in peace; for then it was an houſe was to be built for God, in which he would cauſe his name to dwell, as David might eaſily learn from Deut. xii. 9, 10, 11. and who ſo proper to ſet forward ſuch a work as a king, and he when at reſt from his enemies?

℣. 3. And Nathan ſaid to the king, Go, do all that is in thine heart, &c.] He perceived it was in his heart to build an houſe for God; he knew an houſe was to be built at one time or another, by ſome perſon or another; he knew it was a good work, and fit for a king to do, and might think this was a proper time as any, he being at leiſure, and therefore encouraged him to it: but inaſmuch as the time when and the perſon by whom this was to be built were not pointed out particularly in the word of God; David and he ſhould have conſulted the Lord about it, in this they erred, and for which they were tacitly reproved; for as the event ſhews, this was not the time when, nor David the perſon by whom, it was to be built. Nathan ſaid this as a pious and good man, in a private capacity, not as a prophet, or under a ſpirit of prophecy; for prophets did not always ſpeak under ſuch an influence, but, as private men, ſaid ſome things ignorantly and through miſtake; ſee 1 Sam. xvi. 6. 2 Kings iv. 27. for the Lord is with thee; proſpering and ſucceeding him in all he undertook, giving him reſt from all his enemies; and he might think that this motion he now made of building an houſe was from the Lord; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall be for thine help," or thine helper, and ſhall aſſiſt thee in this work. David being thus encouraged by the prophet, his thoughts were more employed about it, and he was reſolute and eager to perform it; and now it was he penned the 132d pſalm, in which he expreſſes his oath and vow to find a place to build on.

℣. 4. And it came to paſs that night, &c] The ſame night following the day in which David and Nathan had had the above converſation, that neither of them might continue long in their error and miſtake, and eſpecially leſt David, in his great zeal and warm affection, ſhould take an haſty and improper ſtep: that the word of the Lord came unto Nathan; the word of prophecy, as the Targum; before he was not under a prophetic influence, but ſpoke in his own words, and had not the word of God; but now it came to him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 5. Go and tell my ſervant David, &c.] The Lord ſpeaks very honourably and reſpectfully of him, owns him to be his ſervant in other things, though he did not chuſe to employ him in this; and though he was not the perſon, nor this the time, to build the houſe of the Lord, yet as he ſhewed a good will towards it, ſo far it was acceptable to God: Thus ſaith the Lord, Shalt thou build me an houſe for me to dwell in? no, thou ſhalt not, as appears from 1 Chron. xvii. 4. which ſeems to be expreſſed with much ſpirit, and ſome degree of reſentment, to reſolve on ſuch a work, without ſeeking to know his mind in it. Eupolemus [u], an heathen, confirms this account, only inſtead of a prophet he ſpeaks of an angel, whoſe name he ſays was Dia-Nathan, who, when David was deſirous of building a temple for God, and very anxious to be ſhewn the place where the altar was to be erected, this angel appeared to him; and though he ſhewed him the place for the altar, forbad him building it, becauſe he was polluted with human blood, and had been engaged in wars many years, and bid him leave the building of it to his ſon.

℣. 6. Whereas I have not dwelt in any houſe, &c.] Fixed, ſtated habitation: ſince the time that I brought up the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, even to this day; a ſpace of 5 or 600 years, tho' he might before: but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle; moving from place to place while in the wilderneſs, and ſince in the land of Canaan, firſt at Gilgal, then at Shiloh, afterwards at Nob, and now at Gibeon. Tent and tabernacle are diſtinguiſhed, though they were but one building and habitation; the tent was the curtains of goats hair, and the tabernacle the linen curtains, ſee Exod. xxvi. 1. 6. 11, 12, 13. In 1 Chron. xvii. 5. it is from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another; which does not intend variety of tabernacles, but change of place.

℣. 7. In all the places wherein I have walked with all the children of Iſrael, &c.] Thoſe mentioned in the note on the preceding verſe: ſpake I a word with any of the tribes of Iſrael; or rather the ſceptres of Iſrael; ſo the word is rendered, Gen. xlix. 10. the ſceptre-bearers, rulers, and governors, whoſe cuſtom was to carry a ſceptre in their hands, as Ben Melech obſerves; and ſo in a parallel text, 1 Chron. xvii. 6. it is, to any of the judges of Iſrael; any of thoſe from the times of Moſes and Joſhua to the times of Saul and David, and this is confirmed by what follows: whom I commanded to feed my people Iſrael; that is, to rule and govern them, protect and defend them, which cannot be ſaid of the tribes but of the rulers of them; and the Lord aſks this queſtion, whether ever he had ſaid a word to any of thoſe in all that ſpace of time, expreſſing any thing of this kind: Why build ye not me an houſe of cedar? they never were bid to do it, or expoſtulated with why they did not, or ever reproved for not doing it; therefore why ſhould David think of doing it?

℣. 8. Now therefore, ſo ſhalt thou ſay unto my ſervant David, &c.] For it was taken well at his hands, in part, that it was in his heart, and he had a deſire to build an houſe for God, though he was wrong in determining upon it without ſeeking the Lord; and leſt he ſhould be diſcouraged by the prohibition of him from building, the following things are obſerved to aſſure him, it was not from diſregard unto him, or diſpleaſure at him, that he would not be employed in this ſervice; ſince the Lord had given ſufficient tokens of his favour to him, and with which he ſhould be content, as having honour enough done him; it was enough that God had raiſed him up from a low eſtate to great grandeur and dignity: Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I took thee from the ſheep-cote, from following the ſheep, to be ruler over my people, over Iſrael; for that was his employment, to keep his father's father's ſheep before he was taken into Saul's court, and married his daughter, when after his death he came to have the crown of Iſrael: now this is ſaid, not to upbraid him with his former meanneſs, but to obſerve the goodneſs of God unto him, and what reaſon he had for thankfulneſs, and to look upon himſelf as a favourite of God, who of a keeper of ſheep was made a ſhepherd of men, to rule and feed them; ſo Cyrus is called a ſhepherd, Iſ. xliv. 28. and Agamemnon, in Homer [w], is called the ſhepherd of the people.

[u] Apud Euſeb. Evangel. præpar. l. 9. c 30 p. 447.

℣. 9. And I was with thee whitherſoever thou wenteſt, &c.] When he went againſt Goliath, when he went forth againſt the Philiſtines, when in Saul's court, when he fled from Saul, and was obliged to go to various places, God was with him protecting and preſerving him, proſpering and ſucceeding him every where, and in every thing: and have cut off all thine enemies out of thy ſight; as Saul, and others in the land of Iſrael, and the Philiſtines, and other enemies round about him, ſo that he had reſt from them all: and have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth; a name for a mighty king, warriour, and conqueror, ſuch as ſome mighty kings and great men of the earth had obtained, and ſuch fame, being made king over all Iſrael; and his ſucceſs againſt the Jebuſites had got him a name, as well as former victories he had been favoured with; on account of all which his name and fame had been ſpread abroad in the world, and he was reckoned as one of the greateſt princes in it.

℣. 10. (Moreover, I will appoint a place for my people Iſrael, &c.] The land of Canaan; this the Lord had of old appointed to them, and had introduced them into and ſettled them in it, but not entirely and alone; in many places the Canaanites had inhabited; but now they ſhould be expelled, and the Iſraelites ſhould have the place to themſelves: and will plant them; ſo that they ſhall take root and flouriſh, and continue: that they may dwell in a place of their own; and not as they dwelt in Egypt, in a land that was not theirs; or under themſelves [x], under their own rulers and governors: and move no more; as they did in the times of the Judges, when ſinning againſt God, they were often delivered into their enemies hands, and carried captives: neither ſhall the children of wickedneſs afflict them any more, as beforetime; when in Egypt, and in the time of the Judges; all which is ſuppoſed, provided they did not depart from the Lord, but abode by his word, worſhip, and ordinances, and obeyed his will; for it was by their obedience they held their tenure of the land of Canaan, ſee Iſ. i. 19. or all this may reſpect future times, when they ſhall be converted to the Meſſiah, and return to their own land, and ever continue in it, and never more be haraſſed and diſtreſſed, Jer. xxxii. 41. Ezek. xxxvii. 25.

℣. 11. And as ſince the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Iſrael, &c.] Before the time the judges were raiſed they were greatly afflicted by one nation or another around them, and between judge and judge, but now they ſhould be no more ſo; here the parentheſis ſhould end: and have cauſed thee to reſt from all thine enemies;) this belongs to David perſonally, and intends the ſame as in ℣. 1. alſo the Lord telleth thee, that he will make thee an houſe; not only build up his family, and make that numerous, but eſtabliſh the houſe of his kingdom, as the Targum; that whereas he was deſirous of building an houſe for God, God would build up an houſe for him; which would be a clear proof, that though he did not think fit to make uſe of him in the building of his houſe, yet he was not caſt out of his favour, nor was it to be ſo interpreted by himſelf or others.

℣. 12. And when thy days be fulfilled, &c.] The days of his life, which were appointed by the Lord for him to live, and when he had filled up the common term of man's life, as he exactly did; for he lived juſt 70 years, ſee ch. v. 4. Pſ. xc. 10. and thou ſhalt ſleep with thy fathers; die and be buried; for this is a phraſe expreſſive of death, and the grave the common portion of men: I will ſet up thy ſeed after thee; ſons to ſucceed in the kingdom, as they did for the ſpace of 500 years; though here it reſpects one particular ſeed or ſon, even Solomon, as appears by what follows: which ſhall proceed out of thy bowels; be begotten by him, and born unto him, and has regard to a future ſon of his not yet born; not Abſalom nor Adonijah, nor any of the reſt born in Hebron were to ſucceed him in the kingdom, but one as yet unborn: and I will eſtabliſh his kingdom; ſo that he ſhall have a long and happy reign, as Solomon had.

℣. 13. He ſhall build an houſe for my name, &c.] For the honour of it, for the worſhip and ſervice of God, as it is well known Solomon did; and ſo his antitype the Meſſiah, Zech. vi. 12, 13. and I will ſtabliſh the throne of his kingdom for ever; that is, for a long time. Solomon's reign was 40 years, and the kingdom of Judah continued in his poſterity until the Babyloniſh captivity, and a prince that deſcended from him was the ruler of the people when they returned: this has its fulfilment more eminently in Chriſt, who was of his ſeed, to whom God has given the throne of his father David, and who ſhall reign over the houſe of Jacob for ever, Luke i. 32, 33.

℣. 14. I will be his father, and he ſhall be my ſon, &c.] That is, I will be as kind unto him, and careful of him as a father of a ſon; or he ſhall be, and appear to be my ſon, by adopting grace, as no doubt Solomon was, notwithſtanding all his failings. This is applied to Chriſt, the antitypical Solomon, who was, in an higher ſenſe, the ſon of God, even by natural and eternal generation; ſee Heb. i. 5. if he commit iniquity; which cannot be ſuppoſed of Chriſt; for though he was made ſin by imputation, he neither knew nor did any, but may be ſuppoſed of his ſpiritual offſpring, whom he repreſented as an head and ſurety, as of Solomon, who committed many ſins and tranſgreſſions: I will chaſten him with the rod of men, and with the ſtripes of the children of men; either with men themſelves, as Hadad the Edomite, Rezon the ſon of Eliadah, and Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, by all whom he was afflicted and diſtreſſed, after he fell into idolatry, 2 Kings xi. or with ſuch rods and ſtripes as men correct their children with, not to deſtroy them, but to chaſtiſe them for their good; and ſo the phraſes denote humane, kind, gentle, moderate corrections given in love, and which anſwer ſome good purpoſes.

℣. 15. But my mercy ſhall not depart away from him, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of ſpecial mercy and grace, though it is true of theſe with reſpect to Solomon, and ſo to all the adopted children of God, ſee Pſ. lxxxix. 32, 33. but then this here deſigns ſuch mercy as may be taken away from another, and as it was from Saul, as it follows: as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before ore thee; and therefore muſt be underſtood of his mercy and kindneſs, in giving him a kingdom, and ſetting him on the throne; this ſhould not be taken away from him, as it was from Saul, whom God rejected from being king; not him perſonally, but his poſterity; but ſo the Lord would not do, nor did he, to Solomon, in whoſe poſterity the kingdom of Judah continued to the Babyloniſh captivity.

[w] Iliad. 2.

[x] תחתיו, ſub ſe, Montanus.

℣. 16. And thine houſe, and thy kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever before thee, &c.] That is, both his family and his government ſhould be perpetuated, or he ſhould always have one of his family to ſit upon his throne; the accompliſhment of which, in the beginning of it, he ſaw with his eyes in his ſon Solomon, and with an eye of faith in his greater ſon the Meſſiah, in whom only theſe words will have their compleat fulfilment; and ſo Abarbinel ſays this viſion or prophecy is explained by ſome of the days of the Meſſiah; and this houſe and kingdom, in 1 Chron. xvii. 14. are called by the Lord my houſe, and my kingdom: thy throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever; which is a repetition of the ſame in other words for the confirmation of it.

℣. 17. According to all theſe words, and according to all this viſion, &c.] All the words of this prophecy, juſt as they were delivered to Nathan, were exactly expreſſed by him; he did not vary from them in the leaſt, but with the greateſt faithfulneſs related them: ſo did Nathan ſpeak unto David; though in the part which related to the hiſtory of the houſe of God, it was contrary to the advice which he had given; but he was not aſhamed to retract his ſenſe, when he was made acquainted with the mind of God.

℣. 18. Then went king David in, &c.] Into the tabernacle where the ark was, which he had prepared for it, ch. vi. 17. and ſat before the Lord; before the ark, the ſymbol of his preſence, and prayed, and gave thanks, as follows; from whence it appears, that a ſitting poſture was ſometimes uſed in prayer, of which we have other inſtances, Exod. xvii. 11, 12. 1 Kings xix. 4. It is ſaid [y] that Pythagoras, and alſo Numa, ordered that worſhippers ſhould ſit. So that this act of devotion is not to be limited to any particular poſture, though it ſeems moſt agreeable either to ſtand or kneel; and the Jews look upon this to be a peculiar caſe, and infer from hence, that none were allowed to ſit in the court but the kings of the houſe of Judah [z]; and ſome of them [a] will not allow that to them, ſince the Seraphim above are even ſaid to ſtand, Iſ. vi. 2. and ſuppoſe the meaning of this to be only that David ſupported himſelf in the court; and ſome render the words, he remained before the Lord [b]; he continued in meditation, prayer, and thankſgiving, and ſuch like acts of devotion for a conſiderable time; ſo the Targum, in 1 Chron. xvii. 16. "King David came and continued in prayer before the Lord:" and he ſaid, Who am I, O Lord God? a creature, a ſinful creature, a mean and unworthy one, undeſerving of a place in the houſe of God, and of acceſs unto him, and to receive any favour from him, leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, leſs than the leaſt of all mercies: and what is my houſe; or family of which he was, the family of Jeſſe; for though it ſprung from a prince in Iſrael, yet was but low and mean, in compariſon of ſome others, and eſpecially unworthy of the regard of the great God: that thou haſt brought me hitherto? to ſuch grandeur and dignity, as to be king over all Iſrael and Judah, to have all his enemies ſubdued under him, and to be at peace and reſt from them, and eſtabliſhed in his kingdom; and which he ſignifies the Lord alone had brought him to, through many difficulties and tribulations, and which he could never have attained unto by his own wiſdom and power, nor by the aſſiſtance of his friends; it was all the Lord's doing, and wondrous in his eyes.

℣. 19. And this was yet a ſmall thing in thy ſight, O Lord God, &c.] This of raiſing him to the throne, and ſettling him on it, was but a ſmall thing in compariſon of what he promiſed to do for him and his: but thou haſt ſpoken alſo of thy ſervants houſe for a great while to come; ſince he had not only ſpoken of a ſon that ſhould ſucceed him in the kingdom, but that he would make him an houſe, and eſtabliſh his kingdom; yea, that the throne of his kingdom ſhould be eſtabliſhed for ever, that a race of kings ſhould ſpring from him, and eſpecially the king Meſſiah, of whoſe kingdom there would be no end; and ſo the Targum, "thou haſt ſpoken of the houſe of thy ſervant unto the world to come," a phraſe often uſed by the Jews for the times of the Meſſiah; ſee Heb. ii. 5. and ſo Abarbinel thinks this clauſe has reſpect to Meſſiah the ſon of David: and is this the manner of man, O Lord God? to beſtow their favours on their inferiors, perſons of no worth and merit, and in a profuſe manner? it is not: and yet to one ſo much below thee, and ſo undeſerving, haſt thou moſt largely and liberally given ſuch great and unmerited mercies: or is it the manner, or cuſtomary to deal thus with men mean and abject, though it may with great perſonages that make a great figure in the world? it is not: and yet I am regarded by thee as if I was one of the greateſt monarchs on earth: this ſenſe agrees with the parallel text in 1 Chron. xvii. 17. and haſt regarded me according to the eſtate of a man of high degree; or, this is the law or doctrine of the man who is the Lord God [c]. This doctrine contained in the promiſe now made reſpects the ſeed of the woman, the promiſed Shiloh, the illuſtrious man, Jehovah's fellow, the incarnate God, the Meſſiah, who is Jehovah our righteouſneſs, the true God and eternal life.

℣. 20. And what can David ſay more unto thee, &c.] In a way of ſelf-abaſement, or in thankfulneſs for ſuch wonderful favours, or in prayer for more and other mercies; he wants words, as if he ſhould ſay, to expreſs his ſenſe of his own nothingneſs and unworthineſs, and to praiſe the Lord for all his benefits; and ſo large are the grants and promiſes made, that there is no room for him to aſk for more: for thou, Lord God, knoweſt thy ſervant; what a ſenſe he has of his own meanneſs and vileneſs, what gratitude his heart is filled with, and what his wants and neceſſities are, which God only can ſupply, and does abundantly, even more than he is able to aſk or think. The Targum is, "and thou haſt performed the petition of thy ſervant, O Lord God."

℣. 21. For thy words ſake, &c.] For the ſake of the promiſe he had made to him by Samuel, that he ſhould be king, and his kingdom ſhould be eſtabliſhed; or for the ſake of the Meſſiah, that ſhould ſpring from him; the Memra as the Targum, the eſſential Word of God; and ſo the Septuagint verſion, becauſe of thy ſervant, with which agrees the parallel text in 1 Chron. xvii. 19. and according to thine own heart; of his own ſovereign good will and pleaſure, of his own grace, as the Arabic verſion, and not according to the merits and deſerts of David: haſt thou done all theſe great things; in making

[y] Vid. D. Herbert. de Cherbury de relig. Gent. c. 7. p. 65. Miſn. Yoma, c. 7. §. 1. [z] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 69. 2. Maimon. & Bartenor. in [a] Midraſh in Abarbinel in loc. [b] וישב et manſit, Vatablus. [c] So Luther and Oſiander; or this is the delineation of the man who is the Lord, &c. So Hiller. Onomaſtic. ſacr. p. 447.

making him king of Iſrael, and ſettling the kingdom in his poſterity to the times of the Meſſiah, who ſhould ſpring from him: to make thy ſervant know them; as he now did by Nathan the prophet, what he and his ſhould enjoy for time to come; ſo that it is not only a bleſſing to have favours deſigned, purpoſed, and promiſed, but to have the knowledge of them, to know the things that are freely given of God.

℣. 22. Wherefore thou art great, O Lord God, &c.] In his name, nature, perſons, and perfections, purpoſes, promiſes, and works: for there is none like thee; for his eſſence and attributes, for his greatneſs and goodneſs, for what he is in himſelf, for what he is to his people, and has done for them: neither is there any God beſide thee; there is but one God, the living and true God, the former and maker of all things; all others are but fictitious and factitious Gods, ſee 1 Sam. ii. 2. according to all that we have heard with our ears; concerning what he did in the land of Egypt upon the Egyptians, and in the wilderneſs, in favour of the Iſraelites, and in the land of Canaan, by driving out the inhabitants before the people of Iſrael, and in the times of the judges, in raiſing them up to deliver his people.

℣. 23 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Iſrael, &c.] For the knowledge and worſhip of the true God among them, for laws and ordinances given them, and for bleſſings of goodneſs beſtowed upon them: whom God went to redeem for a people to himſelf, the words are plural, whom the Gods went to redeem; the Targum is, "they that were ſent from the Lord," meaning Moſes and Aaron, of whom Jarchi interprets them, of the firſt of which it is ſaid, I have made thee a God unto Pharaoh, Exod. vii. 1. but Kimchi and R. Iſaiah underſtand it of the true God, only ſuppoſe, as the former, that the plural expreſſion is uſed for the ſake of honour and glory; whereas, no doubt, reſpect is had to the three divine perſons in the Trinity, who were all concerned in the redemption of Iſrael, ſee Iſa. lxiii. 9, 10, 11, 12. where mention is made of the Lord, and of the angel of his preſence, and of his Holy Spirit as engaged therein: and to make him a name; either to get himſelf a name, and honour and glory in the world, to ſhew forth his power and might, as well as his mercy and goodneſs, or to make his people famous, great and glorious in the earth: and to do for you great things, and terrible; as he did in the land of Ham, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderneſs, and in the land of Canaan, great things for his people, and terrible ones to their enemies: for thy land; which is either ſpoken to God, whoſe was the land of Iſrael, and which he had choſen to dwell in, and had given to his people; or elſe to Iſrael, to whom the grant of this land was made, and who were put into the poſſeſſion of it: before thy people which thou redeemedſt to thee from Egypt; that is, the great and terrible things were done in their ſight, when they were redeemed from the bondage of Egypt, ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 12. from the nations, and their gods? meaning, that they were redeemed not only from Egypt, but the nations of the Canaanites were driven out before them; nor could their idols ſave them, but deſtruction came upon them as upon the gods of the Egyptians: ſome leave out the ſupplement from, and interpret this of the perſons redeemed, even of the nations and tribes of Iſrael, and their great men, their rulers and civil magiſtrates, ſometimes called gods.

℣. 24. For thou haſt confirmed to thyſelf thy people Iſrael to be a people unto thee for ever, &c.] So long as they were obedient to him, and obſerved his laws and ſtatutes, and abode by his worſhip and ordinances, otherwiſe he would write a Lo-ammi on them, as he has: and thou, Lord, art become their God; their covenant-God, they having avouched him to be their God, and he having avouched them to be his people, Deut. xxvi. 17, 18.

℣. 25. And now, O Lord God, &c.] From confeſſions of unworthineſs, and of the goodneſs of God, and a recital of favours conferred on him and the people of Iſrael, David proceeds to petitions: the word that thou haſt ſpoken concerning thy ſervant, and concerning his houſe, eſtabliſh it for ever; he prays for the ſure performance of the promiſe of God reſpecting himſelf and his family, and the ſtability and perpetual continuance of the kingdom in it, and has, no doubt, a ſpecial regard to the Meſſiah, the promiſed ſeed that ſhould ſpring from him: and do as thou haſt ſaid; for though God had purpoſed and promiſed to do thoſe ſeveral things, and would do them, yet it was expected by him, and it was right in David to pray for the performance of them; ſee Ezek. xxxvi. 37.

℣. 26. And let thy name be magnified for ever, &c.] David deſired the performance of the above things not ſo much for his own ſake, and for the ſake of his family, as for the glory of God; his great concern was, that God might be magnified, and his greatneſs diſplayed, in making him and his family great; and particularly, that he might be magnified and glorified in that famous ſon of his, the Meſſiah, as he has been, John xiii. 31, 32. and by all his people in ſucceeding ages: ſaying, The Lord of hoſts is the God over Iſrael; the Lord of armies above and below, is God over all, and in a ſpecial and peculiar manner God over Iſrael, literal and ſpiritual, that takes care of them, ſupplies, protects, and defends them: and let the houſe of thy ſervant David be eſtabliſhed before thee; as he had promiſed, ℣. 16.

℣. 27. For thou, O Lord of hoſts, God of Iſrael, &c.] As he is called in the preceding verſe: haſt revealed to thy ſervant; which he otherwiſe could not have known: ſaying, I will build thee an houſe; ſee ℣. 11. therefore hath thy ſervant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee; found his heart diſpoſed to this ſervice, or found freedom and boldneſs in him to put up this prayer to God; what encouraged and emboldened him to do it was the gracious promiſe of God, that he would build up his family, and eſtabliſh his kingdom; or otherwiſe he could not have taken ſuch liberty, and uſed ſuch boldneſs with God in prayer, as to have requeſted it of him.

℣. 28. And now, O Lord God, thou art that God, &c.] Who is the Lord of hoſts, and the God of Iſrael, that has promiſed and is able to perform, and is faithful to his promiſe: and thy words be true; are truly, punctually, and faithfully performed, never fail: and thou haſt promiſed this goodneſs unto thy ſervant; concerning building and eſtabliſhing his houſe. David repeats this promiſe as being greatly affected with it, and fully aſſured of the performance of it.

℣. 29. Now therefore let it pleaſe thee to bleſs the houſe of thy ſervant, &c.] Not according to the merits of him or his family, but according to the ſovereign will and pleaſure of God; the Targum is, begin and bleſs; let the promiſed bleſſings begin to deſcend, that there may be ſome appearance of the performance of the promiſe, which may give encouragement that the whole will be fulfilled: that it it may continue for ever before thee; under his care and protection: for thou, O Lord God, haſt ſpoken it; whoſe words never fall to the ground, but have a ſure accompliſhment: and with thy bleſſing let the houſe of thy ſervant be bleſſed for ever; even both with temporal and ſpiritual bleſſedneſs.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter gives a relation of the wars of David with his enemies, and his victories over them, particularly the Philiſtines, Moabites, Syrians, and Edomites, and of the ſpoils he took from them, and of the preſents made to him by others, ℣. 1—14. and of his righteous adminiſtration of government, and of the principal officers in his court and camp, ℣. 15—18.

℣. 1. And after this it came to paſs, &c.] After David had reſt from his enemies for a time, and after the converſation he had had with Nathan about building the houſe of God, and after the meſſage ſent to him from the Lord by that prophet, forbidding him to build, and David's prayer to the Lord upon it, the following events happened; and which are recorded to ſhew that David's reſt from his enemies did not laſt long, and that he had other work to do than to build the houſe of God: that David ſmote the Philiſtines, and ſubdued them; theſe had been long and implacable enemies of Iſrael; Samſon began to weaken them in his days; a war was waged between them and Iſrael in the times of Samuel and Saul, and the battle ſometimes went on one ſide and ſometimes on the other; but now David made an entire conqueſt of them: before they had uſed to come into the land of Iſrael, and there fight with Iſrael, but now David entered into their land, and took it from them: and David took Metheg-ammah out of the hands of the Philiſtines; the name of a province in Paleſtine, and from the parallel place in 1 Chron. xviii. 1. it appears to be Gath, and its adjacent towns; but why that was called the bridle of Ammah, or the bridle of a cubit, as it may be rendered, is not eaſy to ſay. The conjecture of Kimchi is, that there was a pool or river of water, ſo Ammah is thought to ſignify; and Aquila renders it a water-courſe, which paſſed through the city, having been brought from without it into it, the communication of which from place to place it may be David cut off, by ſtopping or turning its ſtream; but interpreters more generally ſuppoſe that Gath was built upon an hill called Ammah, ſee 2 Sam. ii. 24. thought to be the ſame with the Angaris of Pliny [d], though that is ſometimes read Angaris, a mountain he places in Paleſtine; and that it was called Metheg, a bridle, becauſe being a frontier city, and being very ſtrong and powerful, erected into a kingdom, it was a curb and bridle upon the Iſraelites; but now David taking it out of their hands, opened his way for the more eaſy ſubduing the reſt of their country: or the word may be rendered Metheg and her mother, i. e. Gath, the metropolis, ſince that and her daughters, or towns, are ſaid to be taken, 1 Chron. xviii. 1. and Metheg might be one of them.

℣. 2. And he ſmote Moab, &c.] He next went againſt that, and invaded it, the people of it being always troubleſome and diſtreſſing to the children of Iſrael; and though the king of it had ſhewn ſome favour to David, yet it was when he conſidered him as an enemy to Saul, and Saul to him; but things having taken a different turn, his and his people's enmity againſt David and his people appeared; wherefore he went and fought them, and made them his ſubjects, whereby was fulfilled the prophecy of Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 17. as it referred to David: and meaſured them with a line; either their country and fields, to diſtribute among his people, or rather the ſoldiers he took priſoners; which, as Procopius Gazæus ſays, were ſo numerous that they could not be told, and therefore they were ordered to lie proſtrate on the ground, and they were meaſured with a line, as it follows: caſting them down to the ground; or ordering them to lie down; though ſome underſtand this of caſting down their cities, towers, and ſtrong-holds, and levelling them with the ground: even with two lines meaſured he; with one, ſo it may be ſupplied, as the Vulgate Latin, to put to death, and with one full line, to keep alive: that is, in meaſuring them with his lines, he divided them into two parts, one he put to death, and the other, the full line, which contained the moſt, he ſaved alive; though it ſeems according to our verſion, and ſo moſt underſtand it, that David ſlew two thirds, and ſaved one, and ſo Joſephus [e]. This muſt be underſtood of the army of the Moabites that fell into his hands, ſo Joſephus, who perſiſted and refuſed to ſubmit, not of all the inhabitants of the land. The Jews ſay [f], that the reaſon of this ſevere treatment of them, was becauſe they ſlew the father, and mother, and brethren of David, whom he left to the care and cuſtody of the king of Moab, when he fled from Saul, ſee 1 Sam. xxii. 3. ſince after that they are heard no more of; though it ſhould rather be imputed to their enmity againſt the people of Iſrael. The phraſe of meting out the valley of Succoth ſeems to be an alluſion to this fact, Pſ. lx. 6. the pſalm being written on occaſion of the victories here related: and ſo the Moabites became David's ſervants; the inhabitants of the land who were left in it, perhaps that part of the ſoldiers preſerved alive were brought home captives: and brought gifts; payed a yearly tribute to king David, as they afterwards did to Solomon and to Rehoboam, until the revolt of the ten tribes, and then they paid it unto the kings of Iſrael, to the times of Ahab, ſee 2 Kings iii. 4, 5. though theſe gifts may be diſtinct from, and beſides the tribute paid, which is ſuppoſed in their being ſervants, ſee 2 Chron. xvii. 11. Thus the Arabians [g] carried gifts to the king of Perſia beſides tribute.

℣. 3. And David alſo ſmote Hadadezer the ſon of Rehob, king of Zobah, &c.] Called ſometimes Aram-Zobah, and was a part of Syria, as its name ſhews. Benjamin of Tudela [h] takes it to be the ſame with Haleb or Aleppo; Joſephus [i] calls it Sophene; but that is placed by Ptolemy [k] beyond the Euphrates; whereas this country muſt be between that river and the land of Iſrael, and was contiguous to it, and near Damaſcus; and it was ſo near the land of [d] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 13.

[e] Antiq. l. 7. c. 5. §. 1.
[f] Bemidbar Rabba, l. 14. fol. 212. 1.
[g] Herodot. Thalia, ſive, l. 3. c. 97.
[h] Itinerar. p. 59.
[i] Ut ſupra.
[k] Geograph, l. 5. c. 13.

of Iſrael, and being conquered by David, that it became a controverſy with the Jews, whether it was not to be reckoned part of it, and in ſeveral things they allow it to be equal to it [l]. Rehob was the firſt king of this part of Syria, and then his ſon the ſecond and laſt; he is called Hadarezer in 1 Chron. xviii. 3. the letters D and R being frequently changed in the Hebrew tongue: him David fought with, and overcame, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates; which ſome underſtand of Hadadezer, ſo Jarchi and Kimchi, who attempted to recover part of his dominions that had been taken by ſome one or another from him, which lay upon the river Euphrates; or he endeavoured to enlarge his dominions, and carry them as far as the river, and eſtabliſh the borders of them; and whilſt he was doing this, or attempting it, David fell upon him, and routed him; or rather this refers to David, who conſidering that the antient border of the land of Iſrael, as given to Abraham, reached to the river Euphrates, Gen. xv. 18. he ſet out on an expedition to recover this border, and whereas the country of this king lay in his way, he invaded that; upon which Hadadezer roſe up againſt him, and was conquered by him, and by this means the border was recovered to the kingdom of Iſrael, and reached ſo far, as is plain it did in Solomon's time, 1 Kings iv. 21—24.

℣. 4. And David took from him 1000 chariots, and 700 horſemen, &c.] Chariots are not in the text here, it is only 1700 horſemen; but it is ſupplied from 1 Chron. xviii. 4. where the word is expreſly mentioned, and there the horſemen are ſaid to be 7000, as in the Septuagint verſion here, and in Joſephus [m]; which may be reconciled by obſerving with Kimchi and Abarbinel, that here the chief officers are meant, there all the chariots and horſemen that were under their command are mentioned, which together made up that large number; or elſe here is meant the ranks and companies of horſe David took, which were 700; and theſe having ten in a company or rank, made 7000; and there the complement of ſoldiers in thoſe companies and ranks are intended: and 20,000 footmen; the ſame as in 1 Chron. xviii. 4. and ſo in Joſephus [n]: and David houghed all the chariot-horſes; or ham-ſtringed them, as Joſhua was ordered to do with reſpect to the Canaanites, Joſh. xi. 6. he did not kill them, which might ſeem cruel and unmerciful to the brute-creatures, but ham-ſtringed them, that they might be uſeleſs for war; and the reaſon of it was, that horſes might not be multiplied in Iſrael for that purpoſe, that ſo their truſt and confidence might not be placed in them; ſee Deut. xvii. 16. but reſerved of them for an hundred chariots; for his own uſe, not for war, but for grandeur; which accounts in ſome meaſure for the number of chariots and horſes Solomon had, 1 Kings iv. 26. 2 Chron. i. 14. the number of horſes reſerved is ſuppoſed to be 400, four horſes being uſed in a chariot, which Jarchi gathers from 2 Chron. i. 17.

℣. 5. And when the Syrians of Damaſcus came to ſuccour Hadadezer king of Zobah, &c.] Theſe ſeem to have had no king at this time, or, if they had, Hadadezer was their king, which is not improbable; and Nicholas of Damaſcus [o] an heathen writer, is clear for it, whom he calls Adad, who, he ſays, reigned over Damaſcus, and the other Syria without Phœnicia, who made war with David king of Judæa, and was routed by him at Euphrates: and he ſeems to be the firſt king of Damaſcus, which he joined to the kingdom of Zobah, and all the kings of Damaſcus afterwards were called by the ſame name; though Joſephus [p], who alſo ſpeaks of Adad being king of Damaſcus and of the Syrians, yet makes him different from this Hadadezer, to whoſe aſſiſtance he ſays he came: David ſlew of the Syrians 22,000 men; that is, of the Syrians of Damaſcus.

℣. 6. Then David put garriſons in Syria of Damaſcus, &c.] Which was Cœle-Syria, and lay between Libanus and Antilibanus, the chief city of which was Damaſcus; which Curtius [q] calls Damaſcus of Syria, being the head of it, Iſ. vii. 8, in the principal places of which he put garriſons of ſoldiers to keep the country in ſubjection to him; or he put commanders or governors, as the Targum, in the chief cities, and ſo Ben Gerſom and R. Iſaiah interpret it: and the Syrians became ſervants to David, and brought gifts; or paid him tribute by way of homage, acknowledging themſelves his ſubjects: and the Lord preſerved David whitherſoever he went; he covered his head in the day of battle, and ſaved him from the hurtful ſword.

℣. 7. And David took the ſhields of gold that were on the ſervants of Hadadezer, &c.] That were found with them, which they had in their hands; theſe muſt be ſuppoſed to be with the principal officers of his army; or golden chains, as Aquila, or golden bracelets on their arms, as the Septuagint; the Syriac verſion is quivers of gold, ſuch as they put arrows into, and ſo Jarchi and R. Iſaiah underſtand it of ſuch, and refer to Jer. li. 11. and ſo Joſephus [r]; and brought them to Jeruſalem; where they were laid up, and converted to the uſe of the ſanctuary Solomon built; ſee Cant. iv. 4.

℣. 8. And from Betah, and from Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, &c.] Which, in 1 Chron. xviii. 8. are called Tibhath and Chun, they having different names; or their names might be changed upon this conqueſt of them, and the one might be the names they went by with the Syrians, and the other the Iſraelites called them by; the latter is the ſame with Berothah in Ezek. xlvii. 16. and the Barathena of Ptolemy [s], placed by him near Meſopotamia; in the Arabic verſion of 1 Chron. xviii. they are called Emeſa and Baalbec, the former was a city of Cœle-Syria, the latter was at the foot of mount Lebanon; ſee the note on Amos i. 5. king David took exceeding much braſs; whereby he was furniſhed and able to give the large quantity he did for the ſervice of the temple, 1 Chron. xxix. 7. The Septuagint verſion adds here what is expreſſed in 1 Chron. xviii. 8. "wherewith Solomon made the brazen ſea, and the pillars, and the lavers, and all the veſſels."

℣. 9. When Toi king of Hamath, &c.] Which was another ſmall kingdom in Syria, perhaps lately erected to defend themſelves againſt Hadadezer, and this the firſt king of it, at leaſt the firſt we hear of; his name is Tou in 1 Chron. xviii. 9. where in the Targum he is called king of Antioch. Hamath lay to the north of the land of Canaan; ſee Numb. xxxiv. 8. and the note there: it is ſaid [t] to be three days journey from Tripoli, and that it ſtands in the mid-way to Aleppo, on a very goodly plain, repleniſhed with corn and cotton-wool, but much ruinated, and falls more and more to decay: at this day (ſays my author, who travelled in thoſe parts in the beginning of the laſt century) there is ſcarce one half of the wall ſtanding, which hath been very fair and ſtrong. The king of this place heard heard that David had smitten all the host of Hadadezer; the news of which soon reached him, being in the neighbourhood.

[l] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 8. 1. 2. Miſn. Demai, c. 6. §. 11. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.
[m] Ut ſupra. [n] Ut ſupra. [o] Apud Joſeph. ib. §. 2. [p] Ibid. [q] Hiſt. l. 3. c. 8. [r] Ut ſupra. §. 3.
[s] Geograph. l. 5. c. 19. [t] Cartwright's Preacher's Travels, p. 6.

℣. 10. Then Toi sent Joram his son unto king David, &c.] Who is called Hadoram in 1 Chron. xviii 10. though the Syriac and Arabic versions read Joram there: to salute him; to enquire of his welfare after his fatigue in the battles he had had with the Moabites and Syrians, and to wish him all happiness and prosperity for the future: and to bless him; to congratulate him on his victory, and to wish him success in all after wars he might be engaged in; and particularly to give him thanks for delivering him from so great an enemy as Hadadezer had been to him, as also to bring a present to him, which is sometimes called a blessing; see Gen. xxxiii. 11. because he had fought against Hadadezer, and smitten him; that is, David had, which had endeared him to Toi: for Hadadezer had wars with Toi; was an enemy of his, sought to take his kingdom from him, and had had many battles with him; and though he could not conquer him, he sadly harrassed him, being too mighty for him: and Joram brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass; as a present to David, in gratitude for his deliverance from his enemy by him, and as a token of his homage and subjection to him; at least as a sign that he put himself under his protection, and desired to be his friend and ally. The word Joram, though not in the Hebrew text, is rightly supplied; for none else can be supposed to bring the present.

℣. 11. Which also king David did dedicate unto the Lord, &c.] He devoted it to sacred uses, particularly to the building of the house of the Lord, as he also had the gold and the brass he took from Hadadezer: together with the silver and the gold he had dedicated of all nations which he subdued; who are after particularly mentioned; he did not convert the spoils he took to his own use, but observed the law God gave to the kings of Israel, that they should not greatly multiply to themselves silver and gold, Deut. xvii. 17. He set it apart, and laid it up for the service of the sanctuary; and this accounts for the abundance of gold, silver, and brass, which David had amassed together, and left to his son Solomon to build the temple with; see 1 Chron. xxviii. and xxix.

℣. 12. Of Syria, &c.] Of Syria of Damascus, as distinct from Syria-Zobah, Hadadezer was king of, after-mentioned; this is omitted in 1 Chron. xviii. 11. and of Moab; who brought him gifts and presents, and were tributaries to him, ℣. 2 and of the children of Ammon; who very probably joined the Moabites, and were conquered and spoiled at the same time: and of the Philistines; when Methegammah was taken from them, ℣. 1. and of Amalek; for though we have no account of any war of his with that people, since he was king, yet he doubtless had, and had been victorious and spoiled them; see Ps. lxxxiii. 7. and of the spoil of Hadadezer, son of Rehob, king of Zobah; see ℣. 3, 4, 5, 6. These conquests of David are confirmed by the testimony of Eupolemus, an heathen writer, who says that he overcame the Syrians by Euphrates, and the Assyrians in Galadene, (or Gilead) and the Phœnicians; that he fought against, the Idumeans, (or Edomites), the Ammonites, Moabites, Ituræans, Nabathæans, and Nabdæans; also against Syron king of Tyre and Phœnicia; all whom he obliged to pay tribute to the Jews [a].

℣. 13. And David got him a name, &c.] Fame and reputation in the several nations of the world for valour and courage, for the many and signal victories that he obtained; the Jewish writers generally refer this to his humanity in burying the dead bodies of his enemies slain in war, which gained him great esteem among all, and even his very enemies; but nothing of that kind is pointed at here, but his conquests: or he made himself a name; erected a triumphal arch [b] in memory of his victories: when he returned from smiting of the Syrians in the valley of salt; being 18000 men; in the relation of this fact in different places some difficulties arise, both as to the people smitten, and their numbers, and by whom; in this place they are said to be Syrians, but in 1 Chron. xviii. 12. and in the title of Ps. lx. which was composed on account of these victories, they are called Edomites, and said to be of Edom; which may be reconciled by observing, that the Syrians and Edomites were confederates in this war; and that whereas the latter were auxiliaries to the former, the whole body of the army might be called Syrians, of which 2,000 were slain that were properly Syrians, and 18000 Edomites, in all 40,000; which was a very great slaughter: or the sense is, that when he had smitten the 22,000 Syrians, and was upon the return, he met with a body of Edomites, who came to the assistance of the Syrians, and he slew 18,000 of them; and the Jews say, as Jarchi observes, there were two battles; and if so, this would remove all the difficulties started; as for the numbers slain, here 18000, and Ps. lx. 12000, it is reconciled by observing, that Abishai first began the attack upon the Edomites, and slew 6000 of them; and then Joab fell upon them, and slew 12000 more, in all 18000: in 1 Chron. xviii. 12. this slaughter is ascribed to Abishai, because he began it, even the whole number; and in Ps lx. to Joab, the 1200 slain by him, who seconded Abishai; and the whole is here attributed to David, because he was king, under whom Abishai and Joab served as generals: and no less difficult is it to ascertain the place where this slaughter was made, called the valley of salt; it seems by our text, that it was in Syria, but in other places as if it was in Edom; see 2 Kings xiv. 7. 2 Chron. xxv. 11. but in Edom itself is no such valley to be found, though there is in Syria; one traveller [c] tells us, that in the way from Aleppo to the banks of Euphrates are many villages, among which is one of note called Tedith, famous for a synod held here by the Jews, in the year from the creation 3498, of which Ezra was the scribe; when were placed the books of the old testament in the order in which they now are; and near this town, he says, is the valley of salt, memorable for the victory here recorded: others say [d] about three or four hours journey from Aleppo is the valley of salt, near which is a salt spring, whose waters running over the place leave, when dried by the sun, a great quantity of excellent salt; this salt is thrown together in the Gabboul, or salthouse; but by others [e] we are informed, that near about an hour's distance from the city of Tadmor (see 1 Kings ix. 18. 2 Chron. viii. 3, 4.) is to be seen a large valley of salt, affording great quantities thereof; and it is thought that this is more probably probably the valley of ſalt mentioned here, than another which lies about four hours from Aleppo, and has ſometimes paſt for it; and which the above accounts ſhew: but a modern writer [f], in his account of Palmyra, the ſame with Tadmor, ſpeaks of a great plain, all covered with ſalt, from whence the whole country round is ſupplied. This plain is about a league from Palmyra, and extends itſelf towards the eaſtern part of Idumea, (or Edom) the capital city of which was Bozra; and indeed this valley being both in Syria, and reaching to the borders of Edom, bids fair to be the valley here ſpoken of.

[a] Apud Euseb. præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 30. p. 447. [b] So Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 78. D.
[c] Cartwright's Preacher's Travels, p. 11. [d] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 2. p. 347. [e] See Lowthorp's Philosophical Transactions abridged, vol. III. p. 504.

℣. 14. And he put garriſons in Edom, &c.] To keep the inhabitants in ſubjection to him; as their forts and ſtrong-holds came into his hands, he placed companies of ſoldiers in them for the ſaid purpoſe; or governors, as the Targum, men of his own nation, into whoſe hands he put their principal cities, who governed them for him, and under him. Jarchi interprets it of officers appointed to collect the tribute he exacted of them: throughout all Edom put he garriſons; which is obſerved to ſhew, that the whole country was brought into ſubjection to him: and all they of Edom became David's ſervants; and hereby were fulfilled the oracle delivered to Rebekah, and the prophetic bleſſing of Iſaac, Gen xxv. 23. and xxvii. 29, 40. and the Lord preſerved David whitherſoever he went; ſee the note on ℣. 6.

℣. 15. And David reigned over all Iſrael, &c.] Not only over Judah, but over all the tribes of Iſrael, and over the whole land of Canaan, as promiſed to Abraham, Gen. xv. 18. reaching to the river Euphrates, as Syria did, now conquered by David: and David executed judgment and juſtice unto all his people; when he returned from his wars, he heard and tried all cauſes impartially, brought before him, and gave ſentence according to the law of God, and adminiſtered righteous judgment without any reſpect to perſons; all had juſtice done them that applied unto him, whether high or low, rich or poor; and indeed during his wars he was not negligent of the civil government of his ſubjects, and the diſtribution of juſtice to them by proper officers, in which he was a type of Chriſt; ſee Iſ. xi. 5. and Jer. xxiii. 5, 6.

℣. 16. And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah was over the hoſt, &c.] Which was not only owing to his relation to David, being his ſiſter's ſon, but to his promiſe that whoever ſmote the Jebuſites firſt, ſhould be chief and captain; that is, ſhould have the command of the army under him; this Joab did, and ſo was entitled to this office, and was put into it, and continued in it, 1 Chron. xi. 6. and Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud was recorder; of memorable events, who kept a diary of whatſoever remarkable happened, which were digeſted into a chronicle, hiſtory, or annals; ſee Eſth. vi. 1. ſo the Targum, he "was appointed over the memorials;" or book of memorials, as Kimchi interprets it; that is, to take care of it, and ſee that every thing worthy of notice was inſerted in it; or was remembrancer [g]; one that put the king in mind, what was to be done every day, or in certain caſes, and ſo R. Iſaiah explains it, the king's counſellor; ſome take him to be chancellor, as Luther and others [h].

℣. 17. And Zadok the ſon of Ahitub, and Ahimelech the ſon of Abiathar, were the prieſts, &c.] Not high-prieſts, as Joſephus [i] ſuggeſts, for there was only one high-prieſt at a time; indeed there was a ſagan, or deputy-prieſt, on occaſion; and ſo Abarbinel ſays, that Zadok was the high-prieſt and Ahimelech his ſecond or deputy; but the truth of the caſe was this, Abiathar was high-prieſt only, and continued ſo until the time of Solomon, when he was thruſt out of his office, and Zadok put into it; and Ahimelech his ſon and Zadok were the principal prieſts under him, the one of the family of Ithamar, the other of Eleazar; ſo the Targum on 1 Chron. xviii. 16. calls them ſagans, or deputies of the high-prieſthood. Zadok is mentioned firſt, though Ahimelech was the ſon of the preſent high-prieſt, becauſe he was in great favour with David, as afterwards with Solomon, in whoſe days the high-prieſthood was tranſlated to him; the family of Eli being now upon the decline, and near being removed from the high-prieſthood, as was foretold by Samuel it ſhould: and Seraiah was the ſcribe; or ſecretary of ſtate; in 1 Chron. xviii. 16. he is called Shauſha; he ſeems to have had two names.

℣. 18. And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over both the Cherethites and Pelethites, &c.] Theſe according to Joſephus [k], were the king's body-guards, and this man is expreſsly ſaid to be ſet over his guards, ch. xxiii. 23. and which ſome think were of the nation of the Philiſtines, famous for archery, and ſlinging of ſtones; and ſo the Targum renders it, "was appointed over the archers and ſlingers;" ſo Choriti in Virgil [l] are quivers for arrows; the great uſe of which in fighting David had obſerved, and therefore got a ſelect company of theſe men, partly to teach Iſrael, and partly to guard himſelf; but others are of opinion, that David would never ſuffer ſuch as were heathens to be ſo near his perſon, and therefore take them to be Iſraelites; and ſo ſome Jewiſh writers ſay they were two families in Iſrael; which is much better than to interpret them as others do of the Sanhedrim, and even of the Urim and Thummim, as in the Targum on 1 Chron. xviii. 17. ſee the note on Zeph. ii. 5. and it is moſt probable, that they were Iſraelites, who were David's guards, and conſiſted of the chiefs that were with him in Philiſtia, and particularly at Ziklag, which lay on the ſouth of the Cherethites, 1 Sam. xxx. 14. and ſo had their name from thence, and among the chief of thoſe that came to him at Ziklag, there was one named Peleth, from whence might come the Pelethites, and they were all of them archers; ſee 1 Chron. xii. 2, 3. and David's ſons were chief rulers; princes, princes of the blood, or chief about the king, as in 1 Chron. xviii. 17. they were conſtant attendants at court, waiting on the king, ready at hand to do what he pleaſed to order; they were the chief miniſters, and had the management of the principal affairs at court. Abarbinel thinks that this reſpects not only David's ſons, but Benaiah, and the family of the Cherethites and Pelethites, who had none of them particular poſts aſſigned them, which were ſettled and known as thoſe before mentioned had, but were always near at hand, to do whatſoever the king commanded them; and which ſeems better to agree with the literal order and conſtruction of the words; which are, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites and Pelethites, and the ſons of David, were princes, or chief rulers; or prieſts, who according to Guſſetius [m] brought the offerings or preſents to the king, and did that to him the prieſts did to the Lord.

CHAP.

[f] Halifax apud Calmet's Dictionary in the Word Salt.
[g] מזכיר commemorans, Montanus; commemorator, Syr Ar. memorans, ſive reducens in memoriam, Vatablus.
[h] Vid. Beckium in Targ. 1 Chron. xviii. 15.
[i] Ut ſupra, §. 4.
[k] Ibid.
[l] Æneid. 10.
[m] Ebr. Comment. p. 566.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter relates David's enquiry after the poſterity of Saul, whether any were living, and where they were, ℣. 1—4. and being informed of one, he ſent for him, and kindly received him, ℣. 5—8. and reſtored to him the land of his fathers, and appointed a perſon to till it for him, and bring him the fruits of it, and maintained him at his own table, ℣. 9—13.

℣. 1. And David ſaid, &c.] To ſome of his courtiers: is there yet any that is left of the houſe of Saul? which queſtion was put by him, not in order to deſtroy them, leſt they ſhould diſturb his government, as was uſual with other princes, and eſpecially ſuch who got their crowns by uſurpation; but to prevent any ſuſpicion of that kind in the perſons he enquired of, he adds, that I may ſhew him kindneſs for Jonathan's ſake? not for Saul's ſake, who had been his implacable enemy, though he had ſworn to him that he would not cut off his ſeed; but for Jonathan's ſake, his dear friend, whoſe memory was precious to him. Some of the Jewiſh writers have thought, becauſe this follows upon the account given of the officers of David, both in his camp and court, that this queſtion was occaſioned by a thought that came into his mind, while he was appointing officers, that if there were any of Saul's family, and eſpecially any deſcendent of Jonathan, that was fit for any poſt or office, he would put him into one; but this ſeems to be a long time after David had ſettled men in his chief offices; for Mephiboſheth, after an enquiry found out, was but five years of age when his father was ſlain, and ſo but 12 when David was made king over all Iſrael, and yet now he was married, and had a young ſon, ℣. 12. ſo that it was a long time after David was eſtabliſhed in the kingdom that he thought of this; which is to be imputed to his being engaged ſo much in war, and having ſuch a multiplicity of buſineſs on his hands.

℣. 2. And there was of the houſe of Saul a ſervant whoſe name was Ziba, &c.] Or there was a ſervant that belonged to Saul's family; not that any of Saul's family was a ſervant; and this ſervant the Jews commonly ſay was a Canaanitiſh ſervant, and who upon the death of his maſter was not made free, but became the inheritance and poſſeſſion of his children after him, Lev. xxv. 46. tho' Joſephus [m] ſays he was made free by Saul: and when they had called him unto David; who it ſeems was now at court, or in Jeruſalem, on ſome account or another; or was in David's ſervice, in ſome inferior poſt or another; however having been a quondam ſervant of Saul, it was thought he could give the beſt intelligence of his family, and whether any were living, and therefore was ſent for; and when he was come into the king's preſence, the king ſaid unto him, art thou Ziba? for he had been told before by ſome of his courtiers what his name was: and he ſaid, thy ſervant is he; or my name is Ziba, and I am at thy command.

℣. 3. And the king ſaid, is there not yet any of the houſe of Saul; that is, remaining or living: that I may ſhew the kindneſs of God unto him; great kindneſs, ſome large favour or benefit; for the word God added to things, as to trees, mountains, &c. ſerves to ſet forth the excellency of them; and this kindneſs is in imitation of God, or ſuch as he had ſworn in the preſence of God to ſhew; and that is expreſſed in the ſame language, 1 Sam. xx. 14. and Ziba ſaid unto the king, Jonathan hath yet a ſon; a ſon ſtill living: which is lame on his feet; on both his feet, as the Targum; the occaſion of which is recorded in ch. iv. 4. ſee the note there.

℣. 4. And the king ſaid unto him, where is he? &c.] In what part of the land, city, or town, does he dwell? and Ziba ſaid unto the king, behold, he is in the houſe of Machir, the ſon of Ammiel; a deſcendent of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, to whom the land of Gilead was given, which lay on the other ſide Jordan: in Lodebar; a place in that country, perhaps the ſame with Lidbir in Joſh. xiii. 26. Here it may be his mother's relations lived, and here he might dwell in obſcurity, and lie hid from the knowledge of David; who it might be feared by his friends, would have diſpatched him, had he known where he was. Some take it to be an appellative, and render it, as Abarbinel obſerves, without any thing; as if he was ſo poor that he had not any thing to ſupport himſelf with. No mention as yet is made of his name, perhaps becauſe the hiſtorian had given it before, ch. iv. 4.

℣. 5. Then king David ſent, &c.] Meſſengers; it may be Ziba, none being more proper than he that knew him, and where he was: and fetched him out of the houſe of Machir, the ſon of Ammiel, from Lodebar; they demanded him in the king's name, and being delivered to them, they brought him from thence to Jeruſalem.

℣. 6. Now when Mephiboſheth, the ſon of Jonathan, the ſon of Saul, &c.] For that was his name, though ſometimes called Merib-baal, 1 Chron. viii. 34. and this was his relation to Jonathan and Saul, the ſon of the one, and grandſon of the other: was come unto David; to his court and palace in Jeruſalem, being thither brought; for he could not go of himſelf, being lame: he fell on his face, and did reverence; to him as a king, in a civil way, and in the beſt manner he could, conſidering that he was lame on his feet: and David ſaid, Mephiboſheth! is it he? having learnt what his name was, this he expreſſed with great vehemency and affection, as glad that he had found one of Jonathan's poſterity: and he anſwered, behold thy ſervant; he anſwered to his name, and owned his ſubjection to David, and was ready to take the oath of allegiance to him, and give him homage, and ſerve him in what way he could.

℣. 7. And David ſaid unto him, fear not, &c.] He might obſerve a dejection in his countenance, a trembling in his limbs, and might diſcover ſigns of fear leſt David ſhould cut him off, becauſe he was of the ſeed royal: for I will ſurely ſhew thee kindneſs for Jonathan thy father's ſake; whom he loved loved as his own ſoul, and to whom he had ſworn that he would not cut off his kindneſs from his houſe for ever, and now remembring his oath was determined to obſerve it: and will reſtore thee all the land of Saul thy father; his grand-father, ſuch ſometimes being called fathers; which David had taken to him, as crown-lands, or in the right of his wife; or as being confiſcated by Iſhboſheth's rebellion: and thou ſhalt eat bread at my table continually; he gave him an apartment in the court, a place at his table, admitted him to be a gueſt with him as long as he ſhould live; which was a very great favour and high honour, and ſhewed what an unſhaken friendſhip he had for his father, and would maintain with him. This was the kindneſs of God he meant to ſhew to him.

[m] Ut ſupra, §. 5.

℣. 8. And he bowed himſelf, &c.] In token of gratitude, and as a ſign of humility, and of the ſenſe he had of his unworthineſs to enjoy ſuch a favour: and ſaid, what is thy ſervant that thou ſhouldſt look on ſuch a dead dog as I am? one ſo mean, and baſe, and worthleſs; which he might ſay with reſpect to the infirmities of his body, the rejection of his family by the Lord, their attainder of high treaſon for rebellion againſt David, and the low circumſtances he was brought into and now under; though one of the royal family, the ſon of a prince, and grandſon of a king; ſuch was his humility, and the ſenſe he had of his being undeſerving of any favour from the king, and ſays this with admiration and aſtoniſhment.

℣. 9. Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's ſervant, &c.] Who had been his ſervant: and ſaid unto him, I have given unto thy maſter's ſon; meaning either as ſome the ſon of Mephiboſheth, Micha after mentioned; or rather Mephiboſheth himſelf, the grandſon of Saul, whoſe ſervant Ziba had been: all that pertained to Saul, and to all his houſe; all his paternal eſtate, or what he had acquired, or in any wiſe belonged to him and his family; which David had in poſſeſſion, and which he readily and chearfully delivered up to Mephiboſheth, having ſo great a regard to the memory of his father.

℣. 10. Thou therefore, thy ſons, and thy ſervants, &c.] Which were many, and whoſe numbers are after given: ſhall till the land for him; manure it, plough it, ſow it, and reap it: and thou ſhalt bring in the fruits; the corn and oil, and wine, the land produces: that thy maſter's ſon may have food to eat; meaning either Micha, the ſon of Mephiboſheth, ſince Mephiboſheth ſeems to be diſtinguiſhed from him, and oppoſed to him in the next clauſe; and who would ſtand in no need of food from any other quarter, being a gueſt at the king's table continually; or elſe Mephiboſheth, who by this means would have a ſufficiency for his ſon and ſervants, and in which Ziba's family and ſervants would have a ſhare: but Mephiboſheth thy maſter's ſon ſhall eat always at my table; wherefore the land was to be tilled not for him perſonally, but for his family, and for what uſes he ſhould think fit to put the produce of it to: now Ziba had 15 ſons, and 20 ſervants; who were enough to cultivate a conſiderable quantity of land.

℣. 11. Then ſaid Ziba unto the king, according to all the king hath commanded his ſervant, ſo ſhall thy ſervant do, &c.] Till the land, and bring the fruits of it to Mephiboſheth, for the ſupport of his family; he promiſed very fair, had he been as faithful to his truſt: as for Mephiboſheth, ſaid the king, he ſhall eat at my table, as one of the king's ſons; which is repeated, for the confirmation of it, and to ſhew that he ſhould be treated with equal reſpect, and fare as the king's ſons themſelves did; though the clauſe ſaid the king is not in the original text, and the words are thought by Abarbinel and others to be the words of Ziba continued; who promiſed to do what the king had ordered, though Mephiboſheth had eaten at his table, as one of the king's ſons, and needed not any thing, and needed not to eat at the king's table; and if it was his pleaſure, he would maintain him out of this eſtate like the ſon of a king; but the phraſe my table ſeems to be too arrogant for Ziba to ſay, and rather fits the mouth of David the king.

℣. 12. And Mephiboſheth had a young ſon, whoſe name was Micha, &c.] What his age was is not ſaid; from him ſprung a progeny of ſeveral generations, 1 Chron. viii. 34—40. and all that dwelt in the houſe of Ziba were ſervants to Mephiboſheth; his ſons and his ſervants.

℣. 13. So Mephiboſheth dwelt in Jeruſalem, &c.] Either in ſome apartments in the king's palace, or in ſome houſe in the city provided for him; for he returned not to Lodebar, nor to any manſion-houſe upon the eſtate of Saul reſtored unto him: for he did eat continually at the king's table; to which he was invited, and he accepted of: and was lame on both his feet; or though he was[n], yet this was no objection to David, he admitted him notwithſtanding his infirmity; nor any obſtruction to Mephiboſheth, who found ways and means to be carried to the king's table daily.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter gives an account of the ill treatment of David's meſſengers to the king of Ammon, who were ſent to condole the death of his father, and were baſely uſed by him, which David reſented, ℣. 1—5. which the Ammonites perceiving prepared for war, and got the Syrians to be confederates with them; of which David being informed, ſent Joab and Abiſhai into their country, ℣. 6, 7, 8. who divided the army between them, and attacked the Ammonites and Syrians with great courage, and routed them both, and returned to Jeruſalem, ℣. 9—14. after which the Syrians gathered together again to fight with David, who went out to meet them, and got an entire conqueſt over them, and made them ſervants to him, ℣. 15—19.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs after this, &c.] After the wars with the Moabites, Syrians and Edomites, being friendly with the children of Ammon, David ſent an embaſſy to their king, after related; by which it appears what is ſaid concerning the ſpoils of the children of Ammon, ch. viii. 12. is by anticipation; for theſe ſpoils were not taken until the following war with them, the occaſion of which is here told: that the king of the children of Ammon died; whoſe name was Nahaſh, as is clear from the [n] והוא quamvis eſſet, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Patrick.

the next verſe, and probably might be the ſame that came againſt Jabeſh-gilead, from whom Saul delivered the inhabitants of that place, 1 Sam. xi. 1. and Hanun his ſon reigned in his ſtead; who being his ſon, was heir to his crown, and ſucceeded him in his kingdom.

℣. 2. Then ſaid David, I will ſhew kindneſs to Hanun the ſon of Nahaſh, &c.] Send him a friendly compliment of condolence on the death of his father: as his father ſhewed kindneſs unto me; when David was perſecuted by Saul, he ſent him ſuccours, and invited him into his country for protection it may be, and ſome way or other ſhewed reſpect unto him; though not out of real love and friendſhip to David, but in enmity to Saul, who had defeated him at Jabeſh-gilead, and had often wars with him: the Jews ſay [o], the particular kindneſs was, that when David left his father, mother and brethren with the king of Moab, he ſlew all but one, who fled to the king of the children of Ammon, and was by him ſaved alive: and David ſent to comfort him by the hand of his ſervants, for his father; for the death of his father; to condole the loſs of him, which was the cuſtom of kings in friendſhip and alliance in former times, and ſtill continues: and David's ſervants came into the land of the children of Ammon; even to Rabbah, the metropolis of the nation, and the royal city, where the king kept his court.

℣. 3. And the princes of the children of Ammon ſaid to Hanun their lord, &c.] His nobles and prime miniſters, the courtiers that were about him: thinkeſt thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath ſent comforters unto thee? could he imagine that David was ſincere, and that he really meant to do honour to the memory of his father, and comfort him under the loſs of him, by ſending his embaſſadors to him on ſuch an errand? there was no reaſon, they thought, to believe this, ſince an Iſraelite was forbidden to ſeek their peace and proſperity, or aſk of it, nor might an Ammonite enter into their congregation unto the tenth generation, Deut. xxiii. 3, 6. and indeed ſome have thought that David did not do a right thing in ſending this embaſſy, and was juſtly requited; but it is certain he acted according to the laws of friendſhip, and was cordial and ſincere in what he did, though theſe courtiers of Hanun put an ill conſtruction on his conduct, their minds being filled with enmity againſt the Iſraelites: hath not David rather ſent his ſervants unto thee, to ſearch the city, and to ſpy it out, and to overthrow it? to reconnoitre the place, to obſerve, as they walked about in it, which were the weakeſt and moſt defenceleſs parts of it, and what avenues there were to it, and which were moſt acceſſible, that they might the better know how to attack it, and deſtroy it; theſe ſurmiſes and ſuſpicions they endeavoured to fill the king's head with, to ſet him againſt them, and treat them ill.

℣. 4. Wherefore Hanun took David's ſervants, &c.] His embaſſadors: and ſhaved off one half of their beards; that is, he ordered them to be ſhaved off; than which a greater indignity could not have been well done to them and to David, whom they repreſented, ſince the Iſraelites ſhaved not their beards, and were very careful of preſerving them; for had it been the cuſtom to ſhave, they might have ſhaved off the other half, and then they would not have appeared ſo ridiculous; and with other people it has been reckoned a very great puniſhment as well could be inflicted, and as great an affront as could well be offered, to mar a man's beard, or ſhave it off in whole or in part [p]. The Lacedæmonians, as Plutarch [q] relates, when any fled from battle, uſed, by way of reproach, to ſhave off part of their beards, and let the other part grow long; and with the Indians, as biſhop Patrick obſerves from an ancient writer, the king uſed to order the greateſt offenders to be ſhaven, as the heavieſt puniſhment he could inflict upon them; but what comes neareſt to the caſe here, is what the ſame learned commentator quotes from Tavernier, who in his Indian travels tells us, that the Sophi of Perſia cauſed an embaſſador of Aureng-zeb to have his beard ſhaved off, telling him he was not worthy to wear a beard, and thereupon commanded it ſhould be ſhaved off; which affront offered him in the perſon of his embaſſador, was moſt highly reſented by Aureng-zeb, as this was by David: and cut off their garments in the middle, even to their buttocks; and as they wore long garments in thoſe countries, without any breeches or drawers under them, thoſe parts by theſe means were expoſed to view, which modeſty requires ſhould be concealed [r]; ſo that they muſt be put to the utmoſt ſhame and confuſion: and ſent them away; in this ridiculous manner, ſcoffing and jeering at them no doubt; that ſince they came with compliments of condolence, it was proper they ſhould appear in the habit of mourners, with their beards ſhaved, and their garments rent; cutting of garments, and ſtanding in them from morning to night, was a puniſhment of ſoldiers with the Romans, when they offended [s].

℣. 5. When they told it unto David, &c.] Not the embaſſadors, for they were not yet arrived, but ſome of their ſervants, perhaps, they ſent before them to acquaint David of the uſage they had met with: he ſent to meet them; he ſent men to meet them with proper garments to put on, and to aſſure them how much he reſented the indignity done to them and him, and would avenge it in due and proper time, and to direct them where to go for the preſent, as follows: becauſe the men were greatly aſhamed; to proceed on their journey, and come to court in the condition they were: and the king ſaid; gave orders by the meſſengers he ſent to them: tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, or bud [t], and then return; that is, to Jeruſalem; Jericho, though not yet built, might have ſome cottages at or near the ſpot on which it had ſtood, for the convenience of ſhepherds, and gatherers of fruit, in the plains of it; here the embaſſadors were directed to go, it being the firſt place they came to when they had paſſed over Jordan, from the country of Ammon; and being a place where there were ſcarce any inhabitants, or very few, was very proper for them in their preſent circumſtances; and this confirms what is before obſerved, that it was now the cuſtom of the Iſraelites not to ſhave their whole beards; or otherwiſe it was but ſhaving off the other half, and being now provided with other clothes, they would have had no need to have ſtayed at Jericho, but might have proceeded on in their journey.

℣. 6. And when the children of Ammon ſaw that they ſtank before David, &c.] Or had made themſelves odious to him, as it is rendered in 1 Chron. xix. 6. were abominable to him, that he was incenſed

[o] Tanchuma apud Jarchium in loc.
[p] Apollon. vit. Philoſtrat. l. 7. c. 14.
[q] In Ageſilao.
[r] Dimidiaſque nates Gallica palla tegit. Martial. Montanus.
[s] Valer. Maxim. l. 2. c. 2.
[t] יצמח germinet, Pagninus, Montanus.

censed against them, and enraged at them, and was determined to be avenged on them for the affront given, of which they had certain information: but instead of seeking to appease him, and give him satisfaction for the affront, the children of Ammon sent, and hired the Syrians of Beth-rehob; a place near Hamath, Numb. xiii. 21. there was a city of this name in the tribe of Asher, out of which the Canaanites could not be driven, and perhaps now inhabited by Syrians, or by a people so called, Josh. xix. 28. Judg. i. 31. and the Syrians of Zoba, 20,000 footmen; that is, out of both places; this place Hadadezer was king of, with whom David had fought before, and beat, and who owed him a grudge on that account, and was ready to assist the Ammonites against him, ch. viii. 3, 4, 5. and of king Maacah 1000 men; that is, of the king of Maacah, which was a place in the tribe of Manasseh, from whence the inhabitants could not be expelled, Josh. xiii. 11, 13. and seems now to have been inhabited by Syrians, and therefore is called Syria-maachah, 1 Chron. xix. 6. and of Ishtob 12,000 men; which is thought to be the same with the land of Tob, whither Jephthah fled and dwelt in it, when ill used by his brethren, Judg. xi. 3, 5. these mercenary soldiers were in all 33,000 men; in 1 Chron. xix. 6, 7. it is said, chariots and horsemen, even 32,000; these were hired with 1000 talents of silver.

℣. 7. And when David heard of it, &c.] Of the preparation made by the Ammonites to fight with him: he sent Joab and all the host of the mighty men; he sent out Joab his general, and an army under his command, consisting of men of strength, valour and courage; or all the host and the mighty men, as Kimchi and Ben Melech, the famous mighty men mentioned in ch. xxiii. 8. he did not think it advisable to wait for the Ammonites, but carried the war into their own country, and instead of suffering them to invade his dominions, he invaded theirs.

℣. 8. And the children of Ammon came out, &c.] Either out of Rabbah their metropolis, as Josephus [u]; or rather out of Medeba, as it seems from 1 Chron. xix. 7. a city that lay on the borders of their country, and was a frontier town, see Numb. xxi. 30. and put the battle in array, at the entering in of the gate; of the city of Medeba; they were first within the city, but upon the approach of Joab and his army, they came out and drew up in a line of battle at the gate of it: and the Syrians of Zoba, and of Rehob, and Ishtob, and Maacah were by themselves in the field; at some distance from the city, the Ammonites not chusing to trust mercenaries in it; and perhaps they placed these in ambush in the field, to get Joab between two fires, as we now express it.

℣. 9. When Joab saw that the front of the battle was against him before and behind, &c.] Or the face of it [w]; armies appeared both before and behind, about to attack him both in front and rear; the Targum is, "and Joab saw that the warriors, or those that made war, were strong against him before and behind:" he chose of all the choice men of Israel; the most eminent for strength, and valour, and military skill, who had been tried, and were famous for warlike exploits, the flower of the army: and put them in array against the Syrians; who might be the strongest party, and the best soldiers; though being but mercenaries, if hard beset, would sooner give way, as he might suppose, upon which the Ammonites would do the same.

℣. 10. And the rest of the people he delivered into the hands of Abishai his brother, &c.] Who was a commander under him, and a very valiant man; and thus, as his enemy had two armies, he divided his into two parts, that he might the better attack them: that he might put them in array against the children of Ammon; draw them up in a line, place them rank and file to meet the children of Ammon, and give them battle.

℣. 11. And he said, if the Syrians be too strong for me, &c.] Which he might perceive by Joab's forces giving way, or by some signal agreed on between them: then thou shalt help me; detach a part of his army to his support and assistance: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee; in the same manner.

℣. 12. Be of good courage, and let us play the men, &c.] This Joab said, not only to encourage Abishai and himself, but in the hearing of the rest of the officers of the army, and of many of the people, to hearten them to the battle; who might be somewhat intimidated with the number of their enemies, and the position they were in, being before and behind them; and therefore he thought proper to make such a speech to them to animate them to fight: for our people, and for the cities of our God; that the people of Israel might not be carried captive, and their cities spoiled and plundered; and instead of being cities where the people of God dwelt, and he was worshipped, would, if taken, become the habitations of idolatrous heathens, and where temples would be erected to idols, and the worship of them; these were the arguments he used to engage them to fight manfully for their country, the liberties and religion of it: and the Lord do that which seemeth him good; tacitly suggesting, that victory was of the Lord, and that it became them to do their part in fighting courageously, and leave the issue to the Lord, on whom alone success depended.

℣. 13. And Joab drew nigh, and the people that were with him, unto the battle against the Syrians, &c.] Fell upon them, attacked them first, began the battle with them; rightly judging, that if they, being hired soldiers, were closely pressed, they would give way, which would discourage the Ammonites, who depended much upon them; and the fight, according to Josephus [x], lasted some little time, who says, that Joab killed many of them, and obliged the rest to turn their backs and flee, as follows: and they fled before him; the Syriac and Arabic versions in this verse, and in all others in this chapter where the word Syrians is used, have Edomites, reading Edom instead of Aram, the letters R and D in the Hebrew tongue being very similar.

℣. 14. And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, &c.] In whom they put great confidence: then they fled also before Abishai; without engaging at all with him, as it seems: and entered into the city; out of which they came, either Rabbah or Medeba, for their safety: so Joab returned from the children of Ammon; did not stay to lay siege to their city, the season of the year not being proper for it, winter drawing near; see ch. xi. 1. and came to Jerusalem; in triumph, to report to David the victory he had obtained.

℣. 15. And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, &c.] Considered it in their minds, minds, and converſed with one another about it, and fearing what would be conſequence of it: they gathered themſelves together; not only the forces got together again, that fled before Joab, but all the kings of Syria united their forces together, as appears from ℣. 19. ſuppoſing that David would avenge himſelf on them for aſſiſting the Ammonites againſt him; and therefore judged it adviſeable to raiſe a large army, that they might be in a condition to receive him.

[u] Antiq. l. 7. c. 6. §. 2. [w] פני facies, Pagninus, Montanus, [x] Ut supra.

℣. 16. And Hadarezer ſent, &c.] The ſame with Hadadezer, ch. viii. 3. who was at the head of this confederacy, and to whom the reſt of the kings of Syria were ſervants, ℣. 19. and brought out the Syrians that were beyond the river; the river Phrat or Euphrates, as the Targum; ſo the Arabic verſion and Joſephus[y], who ſays, that he hired them: and they came to Helam; which, according to the ſame writer, was king of the Syrians beyond Euphrates; but it ſeems to be the name of a place, where was the general rendezvous of the Syrian army. Junius conjectures, that it is the ſame with the Alamatha of Ptolemy[z], which he places with the Trachonite Arabs near the Euphrates: and Shobach the captain of the hoſt of Hadarezer went before them; before the whole combined army, which, according to Joſephus[a], conſiſted of 80,000 foot, and 10,000 horſe: this general is called Shophach, 1 Chron. xix. 16. the letters B and P being of the ſame pronunciation in the Hebrew tongue, as Kimchi obſerves, though it is there read Shobach, in the Syriac and Arabic verſions; he was no doubt a very able, valiant and ſkilful general, ſince he is particularly mentioned by name, and whoſe name was then famous; the Arabic verſion calls him a ſpear-bearer of Hadarezer's.

℣. 17. And when it was told David, &c.] What preparations the Syrians were making to fight him, and where they were: he gathered all Iſrael together; all the fighting men in the country; and paſſed over Jordan, and came to Helam; which, according to Bunting[b], was 20 miles from Jeruſalem. David ſeems to have gone himſelf in perſon to this war: and the Syrians ſet themſelves in array againſt David, and fought with him; they formed themſelves in a line of battle, and attacked him firſt, being eager to fight, and perhaps confident of victory, becauſe of their numbers.

℣. 18. And the Syrians fled before Iſrael, &c.] After an obſtinate and bloody fight between them: and David ſlew the men of 700 chariots of the Syrians; the word men is rightly ſupplied, for chariots could not be ſaid to be ſlain, but the men in them; in 1 Chron. xix. 17. they are ſaid to be 7000, here 700; which may be reconciled by obſerving, that here the chariots that held the men are numbered, there the number of the men that were in the chariots given, and reckoning ten men in a chariot, 700 chariots held juſt 7000 men; though Kimchi takes another way of reconciling the two places; by obſerving that here only the choiceſt chariots are mentioned, there all of them, but the former way ſeems beſt: and 40,000 horſemen; in 1 Chron. xix. 17. it is 40,000 footmen, and ſo Joſephus[c]; and the ſame may be called both horſe and foot; becauſe though they might come into the field of battle on horſeback, yet might diſmount and fight on foot; and ſo one hiſtorian calls them horſemen, and the other footmen; or the whole number of the ſlain, horſe and foot mixed together, were 40,000: Kimchi makes uſe of another way of removing this difficulty, and which perhaps is the beſt, that here only the horſe are numbered that were ſlain, and there the foot only, and both true; an equal number of each being ſlain, in all 80,000, beſides the 7000 in the chariots: and ſmote Shobach the captain of their hoſt, who died there; of his wounds upon the ſpot.

℣. 19. And when all the kings that were ſervants to Hadarezer, &c.] That were ſubject to him, and at his beck and command, at leaſt were hired by him into his ſervice: ſaw that they were ſmitten before Iſrael; could not ſtand their ground againſt them, being too powerful for them: they made peace with Iſrael, and ſerved them; became tributaries to them, whereby the promiſe of the land of Canaan, made to Abraham and his ſeed, as reaching to the river Euphrates, had its accompliſhment, Gen. xv. 18. ſo the Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon any more; who ſtanding by themſelves, they were ſoon and eaſily conquered by David's forces, as recorded in the following chapters.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter begins with the deſtruction of the Ammonites, and the ſiege of Rabbah their chief city, ℣. 1. and enlarges on the ſins of David in committing adultery with Bathſheba, ℣. 2—5. in contriving to conceal his ſin by ſending for her huſband home from the army, ℣. 6—13. in laying a ſcheme for the death of him by the hand of the Ammonites, ℣. 14—25. and in marrying Bathſheba when he was dead, ℣. 26, 27.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs, that after the year was expired, &c.] Or at the end of the year, as the Targum, which concluded with the month Adar or February, the ſpring of the year: at the time when kings go forth to battle; in the month Niſan, as the Targum on 1 Chron. xx. 1. adds, the ſame with Abib, which was the firſt month of the year, Exod. xii. 2. and xiii. 4. a fit time to go out to war; when, as the Jewiſh commentators obſerve, the rains were over, and there were graſs in the fields, and fruit on the trees, and corn ripe, and ſo food for horſe and men. This month was called Niſan, as ſome think[d], from נסים the military banners then erected; ſo by the Romans it is called Martius, and by us March, from Mars, the god of war; though ſome[e] take this to be the month Tiſri, anſwering to part of September, and part of October, when all the fruits of the earth were gathered in, and ſuppoſed to be a fit time for war, when the heat of the year was declining: that that David ſent Joab and his ſervants with him, and all Iſrael; his whole army under Joab as general, in 1 Chron. xx. 1. it is the power of the army; the whole body of it: and they deſtroyed the children of Ammon; burnt their cities, and ſlew the inhabitants of them, and laid their land waſte wherever they came: and beſieged Rabbah; their chief city, called Rabathamana by Polybius[f], that is, Rabbah of Ammon, and afterwards Philadelphia, from Philadelphus, king of Egypt, as it was in the times of Jerom[g]: but David tarried ſtill at Jeruſalem; which is obſerved for the ſake of the following hiſtory; it would have been well for him if he had gone forth with the army himſelf, then the ſin he fell into would have been prevented.

[y] Ut ſupra, §. 3. [z] Geograph. l. 5. c. 15. [a] Ut ſupra. [b] Travels, &c. p. 140, 141.
[c] Ut ſupra. [d] Vid. Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 50. col. 557. [e] Weemſe of the Judicial law, c. 28. p. 106.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs in an evening-tide, &c.] Some time in the afternoon, when the ſun began to decline; not in the duſk of the evening, for then the object he ſaw could not have been ſeen ſo diſtinctly by him: that David aroſe from off his bed; having taken a nap in the heat of the day after dinner; indulging himſelf more than he uſed to do, to ſloth and luxury, which prepared him, and led him on the more eagerly to the luſt of uncleanneſs: and walked upon the roof the king's houſe; to refreſh himſelf after his ſleep, it being the cool of the day, and the roof of the houſe being flat and fit to walk upon, as the houſes of Judea were; ſee Deut. xxii. 8. and from the roof he ſaw a woman waſhing herſelf; in a bath in her garden, or in an apartment in her houſe, the window being open: and the woman was very beautiful to look upon; of a fine ſhape and good complexion, and comely countenance; all which were incentives to luſt, at which his eye catcht, and his heart was enſnared therewith.

℣. 3. And David ſent and enquired after the woman, &c.] Who ſhe was, what her name, and whether married or unmarried; if the latter, very probably his intention was to marry her, and he might, when he firſt made the enquiry, deſign to proceed no farther, or to any thing that was diſhonourable; but it would have been better for him not to have enquired at all, and endeavoured to ſtifle the motions raiſed in him at the ſight of her: and one ſaid, is not this Bathſheba, the daughter of Eliam; who in 1 Chron. iii. 5. is called Bathſhua, and her father Ammiel, which is the ſame with Eliam reverſed: the wife of Uriah the Hittite? who either was of that nation originally, and became a proſelyte; or had ſojourned there for a while, and took the name; or had it given him, for ſome exploit he had performed againſt that people, as Scipio Africanus, and others among the Romans; this was ſaid by one, that David enquired of, or heard him aſking about her, and was ſufficient to have ſtopped him from proceeding any farther, when he was informed ſhe was another man's wife: ſome ſay[h], ſhe was the daughter of Ahithophel's ſon; ſee ch. xxiii. 34.

℣. 4. And David ſent meſſengers, &c.] To invite her to his palace: and took her; not by force, but through perſuaſion: and ſhe came in unto him; into the apartment where he was: and he lay with her; ſhe conſenting to it, being prevailed upon, and drawn into it through the greatneſs and goodneſs of the man, which might make the ſin appear the leſſer to her. This is recorded to ſhew what the beſt of men are, when left to themſelves; how ſtrong and prevalent corrupt nature is in regenerate perſons, when grace is not in exerciſe; what need the ſaints ſtand in of freſh ſupplies of grace, to keep them from falling; what caution is neceſſary to every one that ſtands, leſt he fall; and that it becomes us to abſtain from all appearance of ſin, and whatever leads unto it, and to watch and pray that we enter not into temptation; and ſuch a record as this is an argument for the integrity of the ſcriptures, that they conceal not the faults of the greateſt favourites mentioned in them, as well as it ſerves to prevent deſpair in truly penitent backſliders: for ſhe was purified from her uncleanneſs; this clauſe is added in a parentheſis, partly to ſhew the reaſon of her waſhing herſelf, which was not for health and pleaſure, and to cool herſelf in a hot day, but to purify herſelf from her menſtruous pollution, according to the law in Lev. xv. 19. the term of her ſeparation being expired; and partly to give a reaſon why ſhe the more eaſily conſented, and he was the more eager to enjoy her; and in this he ſinned, not that he did not lie with an unclean perſon but, then, as ſome obſerve, he did that which was much worſe, he committed adultery; alſo this may be added to obſerve, that ſhe was the more apt for conception, as Ben Gerſom notes, and to account for the quickneſs of it with which the philoſopher [i] agrees: and ſhe returned unto her houſe; whether that evening, or next morning, or how long ſhe ſtayed, is not ſaid.

℣. 5. And the woman conceived, &c.] Whereby the ſin would be diſcovered, and ſhame and diſgrace, or worſe, would follow upon it: and ſent and told David, and ſaid, I am with child; this meſſage ſhe ſent to David, that he might think of ſome ways and means to prevent the ſcandal that would fall both upon him and her, and the danger ſhe was expoſed unto; fearing the outcries of the people againſt her, in acting ſo unfaithful a part to her huſband, ſo brave a man, who was now fighting for his king and country; and the rage and jealouſy of her huſband when he ſhould come to the knowledge of it, and the death which by the law ſhe was guilty of, even to be ſtoned with ſtones, ſee John viii. 5.

℣. 6. And David ſent to Joab, &c.] Who was with the army beſieging Rabbah, which, according to Bunting[k], was 64 miles from Jeruſalem: ſaying, ſend me Uriah the Hittite; the ſcheme David had contrived in his mind, was to get Uriah home to his wife for a few days, that it might be thought the child ſhe had conceived was his, whereby the ſin of David, and her own, might be concealed: and Joab ſent Uriah to David; not knowing his buſineſs, and beſides it was his duty to obey his command.

℣. 7. And when Uriah was come unto him, &c.] To David, to whom he came firſt, before he went to his own houſe, deſirous of knowing what was the ſpecial buſineſs of the king with him: David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war proſpered; he aſked of the welfare of Joab the general, and of the common ſoldiers, and of the warriors, as the Targum, the mighty men that went along with Joab, ch. x. 7. and xi. 1. David ſeems to have been at a loſs what to ſay to him. Theſe queſtions were ſo mean and trivial, that it might juſtly give Uriah ſome ſuſpicion, that it could never be on this account that he was ſent for; ſince David could not want in-

[f] Hiſt. l. 5. p. 414. Hiſt. Animal. l. 7. c. 2.
[g] De loc. Heb. fol. 94. C.
[k] Travels, &c. p. 146.
[h] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 8. 2.
[i] Ariſtot.

intelligence of such things, expresses being daily sending him.

℣. 8. And David said to Uriah, go down to thy house, and wash thy feet, &c.] For his refreshment, and to prepare for bed, which was what he wanted to get him to: and Uriah departed out of the king's house; in order as it might seem to the king to go to his own: and there followed him a mess of meat from the king; no doubt a delicious dish, to eat with his wife before he went to bed, to excite him the more to desire the enjoyment of her. This mess consisted, according to Abarbinel, of bread, wine and flesh; and who also observes, after Ben Gersom, that the word may be interpreted of a torch to light him home to his house, it being night.

℣. 9. But Uriah slept at the door of the king's house, with all the servants of his lord, &c.] The life-guards, which were placed there to watch the palace in the night-season; Uriah first fell into a conversation with these, as is highly probable, to whom he was well known, and who might enquire of one and another of their friends in the army; and he being weary, laid himself down among them, and slept: and went not down to his house; whether the trifling questions David asked him, or the information the guards might give him of his wife being sent for to court, made him suspect something, and so had no inclination to go to his own house; or however so it was ordered by the providence of God, which directed him to act in this manner, that the sin of David and Bathsheba they studied to hide, might be discovered.

℣. 10. And when they had told David, &c.] The next morning, either those that went with the mess of meat, or the guards with whom he slept all night: saying, Uriah went not down to his house; as the king had ordered him; which those persons being acquainted with, informed him of it, as an act of disobedience to him: David said unto Uriah; having sent for him upon the above information: camest thou not from thy journey? and which was a long one, of above 64 miles, as before observed, and therefore might well be weary, and want refreshment and rest, and his own house was the most proper place for it; for which reason David suggests he had sent him thither, and did not require nor need his service among his guards: why then didst thou not go down unto thine house? which was the fittest place for him in such circumstances.

℣. 11. And Uriah said unto David, &c.] As an apology for his conduct: the ark, and Israel, and Judah abide in tents; meaning not the people of Israel and Judah in the land of Canaan; for they did not now dwell in tents, though indeed the ark of the Lord did, ch. vii. 2. which some think is here referred to; but the armies of Israel and Judah besieging Rabbah, with whom it seems the ark was, which sometimes was carried with them when they went out to war, 1 Sam. iv. 4. and xiv. 18. though Abarbinel thinks this was not the ark in which were the two tables of stone, and therefore is not called the ark of the covenant, but an ark which was made to put the ephod, and Urim and Thummim in, that they might upon occasion enquire of the Lord by them: and my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord are encamped in the open fields; around Rabbah they were besieging; he calls Joab his lord, because he was the chief general under whom he served, and the rest of the commanding officers he calls the servants of his lord, as distinguished from the common soldiers. The Jews, who are for excusing David from blame in the case of Uriah, observe [1], that he was guilty of rebellion against David, and so worthy of death, not only because he disobeyed his command, in not going to his house when he ordered him, but by calling Joab my lord in his presence: but this was only a respectable character of his general, and no overt act of treason to his king; nor did David so understand it, nor in the least resent it: now seeing such great men, who were far superior to him in rank and office, were obliged to lie on the bare ground, he argues: shall I then go into mine house, to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife? if he had any suspicion of David's crime, he might purposely add the last clause; and if not, it was enough to awaken the conscience of David, and cut him to the quick, had he not been greatly hardened thro' the deceitfulness of sin, to observe, that a faithful subject, and a soldier of his, would not allow himself the enjoyment of lawful pleasures, when his fellow-soldiers were exposing their lives to danger for their country; and yet he, under such circumstances, indulged to sinful lusts and criminal pleasures: as thou liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing; he swears to it, for the confirmation of it; this he did to prevent any farther solicitations from the king, or his wife, unto it, who were both anxiously desirous of it; for tho' no mention is made of his wife, yet no doubt she did all she could to prevail upon him to come to his house, but all to no purpose; his mind was so bent to the contrary, through the over-ruling providence of God, to which it must be ascribed.

℣. 12. And David said to Uriah, tarry here to-day also, &c.] In his court, when he found he could not persuade him to go to his own house: and to-morrow I will let thee depart; after he had tried one method more with him: so Uriah abode in Jerusalem, that day and the morrow; not in his own house, but the king's palace.

℣. 13. And when David had called him, &c.] Invited him to sup with him: he did eat and drink before him; very freely and plentifully: and he made him drunk; this was another sin of David's, done in order to make him forget his oath and vow, and that being inflamed with wine, desires might be excited in him to go home and lie with his wife; but even this scheme did not succeed: and at even he went out to lie on his bed with the servants of his lord; in the guard-room, where he had lain before: but went not down to his house; for he was not so drunk but he remembered his oath, and kept his resolution not to go down to his own house; the Lord no doubt working upon his mind, and disinclining him to it.

℣. 14. And it came to pass in the morning, &c.] When David was informed that Uriah did not go to his own house, but slept with his servants, satan put it into his head and heart to take the following wicked and cruel method: that David wrote a letter to Joab, and sent it by the hand of Uriah; to have him cut off by the sword of the enemy. If Uriah suspected David's criminal conversation with his wife, he was so true and trusty a servant to him, that he would not open his letter to Joab, which had he, it would have betrayed the base design. No one that knows the story of Bellerophon, can read this without thinking of that, they are so much alike; and indeed that seems to be founded upon this, and taken from it with a little little alteration. Bellerophon rejecting the ſolicitations of Sthenobœa, who was in love with him, ſhe prevailed upon her huſband Prætus to ſend letters by him to Jobates (a name ſimilar to Joab) the general of his army, which contained inſtructions to take care that he was killed; who ſent him upon an expedition for that purpoſe[m].

[1] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 56. 1.

℣. 15. And he wrote in the letter, ſaying, &c.] Giving the following orders to Joab: ſet ye Uriah in the fore-front of the hotteſt battle; over-againſt that part of the city where the enemy was ſtongeſt, and the battle the fierceſt, and the ſtones and arrows were caſt the thickeſt: and retire ye from him; leave him to himſelf to combat the enemy alone; who ſeeing him deſerted, would ſally out upon him, and the few that might be with him, and ſlay him: that he may be ſmitten, and die; thus he ſought to add murder to adultery, and that in the baſeſt manner, and which he accompliſhed; and this is often the caſe, that murder follows adultery, either by way of revenge for it, or in order to cover it, as here.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs when Joab obſerved the city, &c.] Where lay its greateſt ſtrength, and where it was beſt defended; or beſieged it, as the Targum: that he aſſigned Uriah unto a place, where he knew that valiant men were; who would not eaſily give way, and when they ſaw an opportunity would ſally out. Joab cannot be excuſed from ſin, unleſs he thought that Uriah had been guilty of death, and that David took this way of diſpatching him for ſome political reaſon; however David was king, and to be obeyed.

℣. 17. And the men of the city went out, &c.] Made a ſally out, as Joab expected they would, when they appeared before them at that part of the city where valiant men were: and fought with Joab; at leaſt with part of his army poſted with Uriah: and there fell ſome of the people of the ſervants of David; which made David's ſin the more hainous, that ſeveral lives were loſt through the ſtratagem he deviſed to procure the death of Uriah; who could not be placed in a dangerous poſt alone, and therefore others muſt be ſacrificed with him, as were: and Uriah the Hittite died alſo; which was the thing aimed at, and the end to be anſwered by this ſcheme.

℣. 18. Then Joab ſent, &c.] Meſſengers to David, as ſoon as Uriah was killed: and told David all the things concerning the war; how the ſiege had been carried on; what ſucceſs they had had, good or ill; what their advantages and diſadvantages; what men they had loſt, and eſpecially in one ſally of the enemy upon them, for the ſake of which the expreſs was ſent.

℣. 19. And charged the meſſenger, &c.] Gave him a particular direction and inſtruction, what he ſhould ſay at the cloſe of his narrative, according as he ſhould obſerve the king's countenance to be: ſaying, when thou haſt made an end of telling the matters of the war unto the king; giving an account of all the events that happened ſince the ſiege was begun to that time.

℣. 20. And if ſo be that the king's wrath ariſe, &c.] Which might be ſeen in his countenance, or expreſſed in his words: and he ſay, wherefore approached ye ſo nigh unto the city when ye did fight? as to expoſe the king's troops to the enemy on the wall, who by ſtones or darts greatly annoyed them, or ſallied out on them, and killed many of them: knew ye not that they would ſhoot from the wall? they muſt have known that, and therefore ſhould have kept out of the reach of their ſhot.

℣. 21. Who ſmote Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbeſheth? &c.] The ſame with Jerub-baal, who was Gideon, Judg. vi. 32. Baal, one part of his name, was the name of an idol, and ſometimes called Boſheth or Beſheth, which ſignifies ſhame, being a ſhameful idol; Gideon had a ſon called Abimelech, who was ſmitten, and it is here aſked by whom? did not a woman caſt a milſtone upon him from the wall, that he died in Thebez? which ſhould have been a warning not to go too near the wall of an enemy; the hiſtory is recorded in Judg. ix. 52, 53. why went ye nigh the wall? expoſing your lives to ſo much danger, and by which ſo many lives were loſt: then ſay thou, thy ſervant Uriah the Hittite is dead alſo; the whole has not been told, the worſt of all is, as the meſſenger was to repreſent it, that brave gallant ſoldier Uriah is dead; this Joab ordered to be told laſt, as knowing very well it would pacify the king's wrath, and was the agreeable news he wanted to hear.

℣. 22. So the meſſenger went, &c.] From Joab, from the army before Rabbah: and came; to David in Jeruſalem, a courſe of 64 miles: and ſhewed David all that Joab had ſent him for; all the events of the war hitherto.

℣. 23. And the meſſenger ſaid unto David, &c.] The particulars of his account follow: ſurely the men prevailed againſt us; the men of the city of Rabbah, the beſieged there, in one onſet they made upon them: and came out unto us in the field; the beſiegers that lay encamped there; they ſallied out upon them: and we were upon them, even unto the entering of the gate; rallied upon them, and drove them back, and purſued them to the gate of the city.

℣. 24. And the ſhooters ſhot from off of the wall upon thy ſervants, &c.] Arrows out of their bows, or ſtones out of their engines; the Iſraelites following them ſo cloſely to the gate of the city, came within the reach of their ſhot from the wall: and ſome of the king's ſervants be dead; killed in the ſally upon them, and by the ſhot from the wall: and thy ſervant Uriah the Hittite is dead alſo; the meſſenger did not entirely obey the orders of Joab to wait and obſerve if the king's wrath aroſe, but was in haſte to tell him the laſt piece of news; perhaps he had ſome ſuſpicion from the manner of Joab's telling him what he ſhould ſay, that this would be acceptable to the king.

℣. 25. Then David ſaid to the meſſenger, &c.] Whom he diſpatched again to Joab upon the delivery of his meſſage: thus ſhalt thou ſay to Joab; in the name of David: let not this thing diſpleaſe thee; be not grieved, and caſt down, and intimidated at the repulſe he had met with, and the loſs of ſo many brave men, and eſpecially Uriah: for the ſword devours one as well as another; officers as well as ſoldiers, the ſtrong as well as the weak, the valiant and courageous, as well as the more timorous; the events of war are various and uncertain, and to be ſubmitted to, and not repined at, and laid to heart. David's heart being hardened by ſin, made light of the death of his brave ſoldiers, to which he himſelf was acceſſory; his conſcience was very different now from what it was when he cut off the ſkirt of Saul's robe, and his heart in a different frame from that in which he compoſed the lamentation over Saul and Jonathan: make make thy battle more ſtrong againſt the city, and overthrow it; more cloſely beſiege it, more vigorouſly attack it; aſſault it, endeavour to take it by ſtorm, and utterly deſtroy it, razing the very foundations of it: and encourage thou him; which words are either ſaid to the meſſenger to encourage and animate Joab in David's name, which is not ſo likely that a meſſenger ſhould be employed to encourage the general; or rather the words of David to Joab continued, that he would encourage it, the army under him, who might be diſheartened with the rebuff and loſs they had met with; and therefore Joab is bid to ſpirit them up, to carry on the ſiege with vigour.

4

[m] Apollodorus de Deorum Orig. l. 2. p. 70.

℣. 26. And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her huſband was dead, &c.] The news of which were ſoon ſent her by David, though it is very probable ſhe knew nothing of the plot to take away his life; and beſides, David choſe to have his death publiſhed abroad as ſoon as poſſible, the more to hide his ſin: ſhe mourned for her huſband; expreſſed tokens of mourning by ſhedding tears, putting on a mourning habit, ſeeing no company, and this continued for the ſpace of ſeven days, it may be, 1 Sam. xxxi. 7. as little time as poſſible was ſpent in this way, and the marriage haſtened, that the adultery might not be diſcovered.

℣. 27. And when the mourning was paſt, &c.] The ſeven days were at an end, or ſooner; for he ſtayed not 90 days from the death of her huſband, which the Jews in after-times enjoined [n], that it might be known whether with child by her former huſband, and ſo to whom it belonged; and becauſe David did not wait this time, Abarbinel charges it upon him as an additional ſin: David ſent, and fetched her to his houſe; took her home to his palace to live with him: and ſhe became his wife; he married her according to the uſual form of marriage in thoſe days: and bare him a ſon; begotten in adultery: but the thing that David had done diſpleaſed the Lord; or was evil in the eyes of the Lord [o]; for though it was not done in the eyes of men, being ſcarcely or very little known, yet was in the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro throughout the earth, and ſees all things that are done: the adultery he had been guilty of with another man's wife, was abominable to the Lord, and for which, according to the law, both he and ſhe ought to have been put to death, Lev. xx. 10. the murder of her huſband, which he was acceſſory to, as well as the death of many others, and the marriage of her under ſuch circumſtances, were all diſpleaſing to God, and of ſuch an hainous nature, that his pure eyes could not look upon with approbation: the Jews [p] endeavour to excuſe David from ſin; from the ſin of murder, by making Uriah guilty of rebellion and treaſon, as before obſerved; and from the ſin of adultery, by affirming that it was the conſtant cuſtom for men, when they went out to war, to give their wives a bill of divorce; ſo that from the time of giving the bill, they were not their wives, and ſuch as lay with them were not guilty of adultery; but for this there is no foundation: it is certain David was charged with it by the Lord; he himſelf owned it, and bewailed it, both that and his blood-guiltineſs, and the following chapter abundantly proves it.

CHAP. XII.

NATHAN is ſent to David to charge him with his ſin, and convince him of it by a parable, ℣. 1—6. which being accommodated and applied to David's caſe, brought him to a conviction and acknowledgment of it, and repentance for it, which was forgiven him, ℣. 7—13. though he is told the child begotten in adultery ſhould die, and it was quickly ſtruck with ſickneſs, and died; and David's behaviour during its ſickneſs, and at its death, is recorded, ℣. 14—23. after which Solomon was born to him of the ſame woman, and had the name of Jedidiah given him by the Lord, which ſignifies the beloved of the Lord, and as a token of reconciliation, and a confirmation of his ſin being forgiven him, ℣. 24, 25. and the chapter is concluded with the taking of the city of Rabbah, and the ſpoil in it, and the uſage of the inhabitants of it, ℣. 26—31.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſent Nathan unto David, &c.] Quickly after the child was born begotten on Bathſheba, and when it was known and became the public talk of people, and the enemies of religion were full of it, and blaſphemed on account of it, ℣. 14. ſo that David was nine months or more without any true ſenſe of his ſin, his heart hardened, his graces dormant, the joys of ſalvation taken from him, and he without any communion with God, and having little concern about it; though perhaps he might have ſome pangs at times, which quickly went off; tho' ſome think he exerciſed repentance in a private way before; acknowledged his ſin to the Lord, and had a ſenſe of pardon, and before this time penned the 32d and 130th pſalms on this occaſion; but Nathan is ſent to awaken and arouſe him, to expreſs a ſenſe of his ſin, and repentance for it in public, which he did by penning and publiſhing Pſ. li. after Nathan had been with him; for though the Lord may leave his people to fall into ſin, and ſuffer them to continue therein ſome time, yet not always; they ſhall riſe again through the aſſiſtance of his Spirit and grace, in the acts of repentance and faith, both in private and public: and he came unto him, and he ſaid unto him; he came as if he had a caſe to lay before him, and to have juſtice done, and he told the ſtory as if it was a real fact, and ſo David underſtood it: there were two men in one city; pointing at David and Uriah, who both lived in Jeruſalem: the one rich, and the other poor; David the rich man, king over all Iſrael, Uriah a ſubject, an officer in his army, comparatively poor.

℣. 2. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds.] In which the wealth of men lay in thoſe times and countries; theſe in the parable ſignify David's wives and concubines, which were many; he [n] Miſn. Yebamot, c. 11. §. 6. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 56. 1. Gloſſ. in ib.

[o] רע בעיני יהוה malum in oculis Domini, Montanus.

[p] T.

he had ſix wives in Hebron, and he took more wives and concubines out of Jeruſalem, when he was come from Hebron, ch. iii. 2—5. and v. 13. and beſides his maſter's, or Saul's wives, given to him, ℣. 8.

℣. 3. But the poor man had nothing ſave one little ew-lamb, &c.] Uriah had but one wife, who was much younger than he, called a lamb, an ew-lamb, a little one. Abarbinel thinks, Uriah had been a widower, and had children by another wife, ſuppoſed in the parable, and was much older than Bathſheba: which he had bought; for men in thoſe times and countries did not receive portions with their wives, but gave dowries to them, and for them: and nouriſhed up; as his own fleſh, as huſbands ſhould their wives, Eph. v. 29. and it grew up together with him, and with his children; which Kimchi alſo ſuppoſes Uriah had by a former wife: it did eat of his own meat, and drink of his own cup, and lay in his boſom, and was unto him as a daughter; all which are expreſſive of the care, kindneſs, love and tenderneſs of a loving huſband, whoſe affections are endeared to his wife, making her partaker of all he has, and to ſhare in whatever he eats and drinks, and in his deareſt embraces; and as there were inſtances of creatures, lambs and others, particularly cade lambs, uſed in this way in a literal ſenſe, to which the reference in the parable is, David had no ſuſpicion of its being a parable. Bochart [q] has given many inſtances of creatures nouriſhed and brought up in ſuch a familiar manner.

℣. 4. And there came a traveller unto the rich man, &c.] By which ſome underſtand Satan, who came to David, and ſtirred up his luſt by the temptations that offered; who is a walker, as the word uſed ſignifies, that goes about ſeeking whom he may devour, and is with good men only as a wayfaring man, who does not abide with them; and whoſe temptations, when they ſucceed with ſuch, are as meat and drink to him, very entertaining: but the Jews generally underſtand it of the evil imagination or concupiſcience in man, the luſtful appetite in David, that wandered after another man's wife, and wanted to be ſatiated with her: and he ſpared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd, to dreſs for the wayfaring man that came unto him; when his heart was inflamed with luſt at the ſight of Bathſheba, he did not go as he might, and take one of his wives and concubines, whereby he might have ſatisfied and repreſſed his luſt: but took the poor man's lamb, and dreſſed for the man that came to him; ſent for Bathſheba and lay with her, for the gratification of his luſt, ſhe being a young beautiful woman, and more agreeable to his luſtful appetite. The Jews, in their Talmud [r], obſerve a gradation in theſe words, that the evil imagination is repreſented firſt as a traveller that paſſes by a man, and lodges not with him; then as a wayfaring man or hoſt, that paſſes in and lodges with him; and at laſt as a man, as the maſter of the houſe that rules over him, and therefore called the man that came to him.

℣. 5. And David's anger was greatly kindled againſt the man, &c.] That had done this, taking it for a real fact: and he ſaid to Nathan, as the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing ſhall ſurely die; which he ſaid in the tranſport of his wrath and fury; otherwiſe a thief, according to the law of Moſes, was not to be put to death, but to make reſtitution; and if he was not able to make it, then to be ſold, but he was not to die for it; but David thought the crime was ſo greatly aggravated by being done by a rich man, and by the loſs the poor man ſuſtained, it being his all, and the fact, in all its circumſtances, ſo cruel and barbarous, that the guilty perſon ought to die: how much more vehemently, and indeed with juſtice, would he have paſſed the ſentence of death on him, or adjudged him to it, had it been put in the parable, that the rich man not only took the poor man's ew-lamb, but killed the poor man himſelf? but this Nathan left out, that David might not take his meaning, as Abarbinel thinks, who then would have been upon his guard, and not have condemned himſelf; and hereby alſo Nathan had this advantage againſt him, that if this man deſerved to die, who had only taken the poor man's ew-lamb, then how much more ought he to die, who had not only committed adultery with Bathſheba, but had ſlain Uriah.

℣. 6. And he ſhall reſtore the lamb four-fold, &c.] Which was according to the law in Exod. xxii. 1. but Kimchi thinks, becauſe the word is of the dual number, it ſignifies double the number, and that the ſentence was to reſtore eight lambs, becauſe he being a rich man ſtole from the poor man; ſo Mr. Weemſe [s] renders it, twice four, twice as much as was commanded in the law; for the Hebrews, he obſerves, double in the dual number till they come to ſeven: becauſe he did this thing; committed this theft: and becauſe he had no pity; on the poor man, but took his all. The Jews obſerve, that accordingly David was puniſhed with the loſs of four of his children, that which was born of Bathſheba, Ammon, Tamar and Abſalom; ſo moſt of the commentators, but Ben Gerſom, inſtead of Tamar has Adonijah.

℣. 7. And Nathan ſaid to David, thou art the man, &c.] The rich man, or who is deſigned by him in the parable, and anſwers to him [t]: thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, I anointed thee king over Iſrael; that is, ordered Samuel to anoint him, who did, 1 Sam. xvi. 1, 12, 13. to which this chiefly refers; and after that, he was anointed firſt by the tribe of Judah, and then by all the tribes of Iſrael, by the appointment and providence of God; and this was great dignity he deſigned for him, and raiſed him to: and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul; when he perſecuted him, and ſought to take away his life.

℣. 8. And I gave thee thy maſter's houſe, &c.] Not his palace at Gibeah, but rather his family, his wives, ſervants, wealth, and riches, all being confiſcated through the rebellion of Iſhboſheth; or rather his kingdom he ſucceeded him in: and thy maſter's wives into thy boſom; though we read of no more than one that belonged to Saul, if he is meant by his maſter, excepting Riſpah his concubine, nor ever of David taking them into his boſom and bed; wherefore this can be underſtood only of his having them at his diſpoſal, to give them to whom he pleaſed; the word may be rendered his women, as well as his wives, and may deſign his daughters, Merab and Michal, who were both given to David, though taken again and given to others: the Jews ſay, that Eglah, David's ſixth wife, was the wife of Saul, ch. iii. 5. ſee the note there:

---

[q] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 46. col. 521, 522.

[r] T. Bab. Succah, fol. 52. 2. Jarchi, Kimchi & Abarbinel in loc. Vid. Guſſet. Ebr. Comment. p. 776.

[s] Of the Moral Law, l. 2. ch. 10. p. 252.

[t] ——— mutato nomine, de te
Fabula narratur. ——— Horat. Sermon. l. 1. Satyr. 1. ℣. 69, 70.

there: and gave thee the house of Israel, and of Judah; the kingdom of both; gave him to be king over all the tribes of Israel: and if that had been too little; either his wives too few, as the Jews interpret it, or his kingdom too small: I would moreover have given unto thee such and such things; more and greater favours; and indeed such he had promised him, as a firm or stable house or kingdom, and that the Messiah should spring from him.

℣. 9. Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the Lord, to do evil in his sight? &c.] The commandment referred to is the law of God, particularly the sixth and seventh precepts of it; which David had shown no regard unto, and by his breaking them had slighted and despised them: thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword; and so had despised and broken the sixth command; for though he had not taken away his life with his own hand, he had plotted and contrived it, and had given orders to put him in such a position as would issue in it: and hast taken his wife to be thy wife; after he had defiled her, being another man's wife, and had taken such unlawful methods to make her his wife, whereby he had despised and broken both the sixth and the seventh commands: and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon; though he had not put him to death with his own sword, he had done that which was as bad or worse in some respects, he had exposed him to the sword of the Ammonites, by which it was taken away; and not his only, but that of some of the Israelites also, which gave that uncircumcised people reason to triumph over the children of Israel, and even to blaspheme the God of Israel.

℣. 10. Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house, &c.] During his life, and as appeared in the slaughter of his sons Ammon and Absalom before his death, and of Adonijah quickly after, and in his posterity through their wars with the children of Israel, and other nations: because thou hast despised me; his commandments, and that in effect was despising him the lawgiver: and hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife; which being repeated shews, that it was very displeasing to God, and a very hainous crime in his sight.

℣. 11. Thus saith the Lord, &c.] For what he said was not of himself, but under a spirit of prophecy: I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house; that is, evil persons, who should be guilty of evil things, and that as a chastizement of him for the sins he had committed, and those out of his own family, as Ammon and Absalom: and I will take thy wives before thine eyes; which is so expressed, because it was done in his life-time, and he knowing it, but not able to hinder it, tho' he did not, strictly speaking, see it with his eyes: and give them unto thy neighbour; or friend, meaning his son Absalom, as they were: and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun; pointing to the sun in the firmament, and which might be then shining in the room where they were; and which is represented by Homer[a], as seeing all things and eyes are ascribed to it here; in the original: the meaning is, that this fact should be done in the day-time, openly and publickly, and was fulfilled, when by the advice of Ahitophel a tent was spread on the top of the house, and Absalom went in to his father's concubines in the sight of all Israel, ch. xvi. 22.

℣. 12. For thou didst it secretly, &c.] Committed adultery with Bathsheba privately, and endeavoured to conceal it, by getting her husband killed in battle, and then marrying her as soon as he could, to hide the shame of it: but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun; as the above fact was; that is, he would suffer it to be done, and so order it in his providence, that every thing should concur to the doing of it; as David's leaving his wives behind him, Ahitophel's wicked counsel he was suffered to give, and the lustful inclination Absalom was left unto, and not any of the people of Israel, having religion, spirit and courage enough to remonstrate against it.

℣. 13. And David said unto Nathan, I have sinned against the Lord, &c.] Which confession, tho' short, was a full one, arising from a thorough conviction of the evil of the sin he had been guilty of, accompanied with real brokenness of heart, sincere humiliation, and a sorrow after a godly sort, as the 51st psalm, that penitential psalm composed upon this occasion, shews: and Nathan said unto David; being fully satisfied with the sincerity and genuineness of his repentance, of which he gave proof by words and deeds, and being under the direction and impulse of the Spirit of God: the Lord hath put away thy sin; would not charge it upon him, impute it to him, or punish him for it, but freely and fully forgive it, cast it behind his back, and into the depth of the sea; cause it to pass from him, and never more bring it against him; and which is the Lord's act, and his only, against whom sin is committed: thou shalt not die; though he should die a corporal death, yet not by the immediate hand of God, or by the sword of justice as a malefactor, a murderer and adulterer, as he, according to the law, deserved to die; nor should he die a spiritual death, though his grace had been so low, and his corruptions had risen so high; nor an eternal death, the second death, the just wages of sin.

℣. 14. Howbeit, because by this deed, &c.] This complicated wickedness, adultery with Bathsheba, and the murder of her husband, and occasioning the death of others: thou hast given great reason to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme; to insult over Israel, and the God of Israel, and to magnify their own idols on account of the advantage they got, when Uriah and other Israelites were slain; and to speak ill of God as a respecter of persons, who had cast off Saul and his family from the kingdom, and yet established David in it, guilty of crimes the other was not; and of the word, ways and worship of God, and of the true religion, as all hypocrisy and deceit, when men that made such pretensions to it were guilty of such atrocious crimes; wherefore, to let such see and know that the Lord did not approve of, and countenance such actions, but abhorred and resented them: the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die; which would be a visible testimony of God's displeasure at his sin, to all men that should hear of it, and know it; and being taken away in such a manner, would be a great affliction to him, and the more, as his affections were much towards the child, as appears by what follows; or otherwise the removal of it might have been considered as a mercy, since its life would have kept up the remembrance of the sin, and have been a standing reproach to him.

℣. 15.

[a] Odyss. 11. ℣. 119. & 12. ℣. 380.

℣. 15. And Nathan departed unto his houſe, &c.] His own houſe, which probably was in the city of Jeruſalem, having delivered his meſſage, and brought David to a ſenſe of his ſin, and declared to him, from the Lord, the forgiveneſs of it; yet for the honour of religion, and the ſtopping of the mouths of blaſphemers, the death of the child is threatened and foretold, and then Nathan took his leave of him, having nothing more from the Lord to ſay to him: and the Lord ſtruck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David; for ſo ſhe was, and not David's wife, when this child was begotten of her; and as a mark of God's diſpleaſure at the ſin of adultery, the child was ſtruck with a ſore diſeaſe by the immediate hand of God: and it was very ſick; even unto death, as the event ſhewed.

℣. 16. David therefore beſought God for the child, &c.] Perhaps went into the tabernacle he had built for the ark, and prayed to the Lord to reſtore the child, and ſpare its life; for though the Lord had ſaid it ſhould die, he might hope that that was a conditional threatening, and that the Lord might be gracious and reverſe it, ℣. 22. and David faſted; all that day: and went in; to his own houſe from the houſe of God: and lay all night upon the earth; would neither go into, nor lie upon a bed, but lay on the floor all night, weeping and praying for the child's life, and eſpecially for its eternal welfare; he having through ſin been the means of its coming into a ſinful and afflicted ſtate.

℣. 17. And the elders of his houſe aroſe, and went to him, to raiſe him up from the earth, &c.] To perſuade him to riſe up, and ſit upon a ſeat, and go to bed, after having taken ſome food; theſe were ſome of the chief officers at court, and had the management of the affairs of his houſhold: but he would not; they could not perſuade him to it: neither did he eat bread with them; that evening, as he had uſed to do; they being the princes of his court, who were wont to ſit at table with him.

℣. 18. And it came to paſs on the ſeventh day, that the child died, &c.] Not the ſeventh day from its being taken ill, but from its birth; for it can't be thought that David ſhould faſt ſeven days: and the ſervants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead; leſt he ſhould be overwhelmed with over-much ſorrow: for they ſaid, behold, while the child was yet alive, we ſpake unto him; to riſe from the ground, and eat food: and he would not hearken unto our voice; we could not prevail upon him to do the one nor the other: how will he then vex himſelf, if we tell him that the child is dead? or ſhould we acquaint him with it, he'll do miſchief[w] to himſelf, to his body; he'll tear his fleſh to pieces, and cut and kill himſelf; this they were afraid of, obſerving the diſtreſs and agony he was in whilſt it was living, and therefore they concluded theſe would increaſe upon hearing of its death.

℣. 19. And when David ſaw that his ſervants whiſpered, &c.] For they ſaid the above to one another with a low voice, that he might not hear them, though in the ſame room with them: David perceived the child was dead; he gueſſed it was, and that this was the thing they were whiſpering about among themſelves: therefore David ſaid unto his ſervants, is the child dead? and they ſaid, he is dead; for putting the queſtion to them ſo cloſely, they could not avoid giving the anſwer they did, and which he was prepared to receive, by what he had obſerved in them.

℣. 20. Then David aroſe from the earth, &c.] From the floor on which he lay: and waſhed, and anointed himſelf, and changed his apparel; neither of which he had done during his time of faſting: and came into the houſe of the Lord, and worſhipped; went into the tabernacle he had built for the ark of God, and then in prayer ſubmitted himſelf to the will of God, and acknowledged his juſtice in what he had done; gave thanks to God that he had brought him to a ſenſe of his ſin, and repentance for it, and had applied his pardoning grace to him, and given him ſatisfaction as to the eternal welfare and happineſs of the child, as appears from ℣. 23. then he came to his own houſe; from the houſe of God, having finiſhed his devotion there: and when he required; ordered food to be brought in: they ſet bread before him, and he did eat; whereas before, while the child was living, he refuſed to eat.

℣. 21. Then ſaid his ſervants unto him, what thing is this that thou haſt done? &c.] Or what is the reaſon of ſuch conduct and behaviour? they knew what was done, but they did not know the meaning of it, which is what they enquired after: thou didſt faſt and weep for the child, while it was alive; prayed with faſting and weeping for it, that it might live and not die: but when the child was dead, thou didſt riſe and eat bread; and appeared chearful; this ſeemed ſtrange to them, when they expected his ſorrow would be increaſed.

℣. 22. And he ſaid, while the child was yet alive, &c.] And ſo there was hope it might be continued: I faſted and wept; or ſought the Lord by prayer, and faſting, and weeping, that the threatening might not take place, that the child's life might be ſpared: for I ſaid; within himſelf, thus he reaſoned in his own mind: who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live? and in hope of this he kept praying, faſting and weeping; he could not tell but God might repent of the evil he had threatened, as in ſome caſes he has done; ſee Joel ii. 13, 14. Jon. iii. 9, 10. Abarbinel thinks, that David faſted and wept to hide this matter from his wife, and his ſervants, and did not let them know that this was in his puniſhment, that the child ſhould die.

℣. 23. But now he is dead, wherefore ſhould I faſt? &c.] And pray; it is to no purpoſe, no end can be thought to be anſwered by it: can I bring him back again? from the ſtate of the dead, bring him to life by faſting, and praying, and weeping; that is not to be expected: I ſhall go to him; to the ſtate of the dead, to the grave, where his body was, or would be; to heaven and eternal happineſs, where his ſoul was, as he comfortably hoped and believed: from whence it appears, that the Old Teſtament-ſaints did not ſuppoſe an annihilation at death; but believed the immortality of the ſoul, a future ſtate after death of eternal life and bliſs: but he ſhall not return to me; in the preſent mortal ſtate, though at the reſurrection they ſhould meet again.

℣. 24. And David comforted Bathſheba his wife, &c.] Which is the firſt time ſhe is ſo called, Uriah being dead, and David having married her; which though at firſt diſpleaſing to the Lord, becauſe of the circumſtances attending it, was afterwards confirmed by him. Bathſheba no doubt was very very much diſtreſſed, and greatly diſconſolate, on account of the ſin ſhe had committed, and becauſe of the wrath and diſpleaſure of God, and becauſe of the death of the child, which was a token of it; and ſhe might have ſome ſcruples in her mind, whether it was lawful to continue cohabiting with David. Now David comforted her, by telling her, that God had pardoned that iniquity they had been guilty of, and that he would give them another ſon, who ſhould ſucceed him in the throne, and build an houſe for his name: and went in unto her, and lay with her, as his wife; and ſhe bare a ſon; at the proper time: and he called his name Solomon; either the Lord called him ſo, or David by his direction; for this name was given before his birth, 1 Chron. xxii. 9. the Keri or marginal reading is, and ſhe called his name, &c. that is, Bath-ſheba, who had been informed by David that this was the name the Lord would have him called by, which ſignifies peaceable; and the birth of this ſon was a confirmation of the peace and reconciliation between God and them, and which his name carried in it; as well as pointed to the peaceable times that ſhould be during his reign, and in which he was a type of Chriſt, the prince of peace; who is the author of peace between God and men by the blood of his croſs, and from whom ſpiritual peace flows, and by whom eternal peace and happineſs is: and the Lord loved him; and was to him a father, and he to him a ſon, as was promiſed, ch. vii. 14. This love and affection of the Lord to Solomon was ſignified to David by Nathan, as follows.

[w] ועשתה רעה לו και ποιησει κακα, Sept. faciat malum, Pagninus, Montanus; malum ſibi inferet, Syr. Ar.

℣. 25. And he ſent by the hand of Nathan the prophet, &c.] Either David did; he ſent by him to Bathſheba, to acquaint her with the name of the child, that it was to be Solomon; which is not ſo likely: or he, David, delivered it into the hand of Nathan the prophet; to educate it, inſtruct it, and bring it up in the nurture of the Lord; or rather, the Lord ſent a meſſage by Nathan the prophet to David, that he loved Solomon: and he called his name Jedidiah, becauſe of the Lord; that is, David alſo called him by this name, becauſe of the love of the Lord unto him; for Jedidiah ſignifies the beloved of the Lord; a name and character which well agrees with the Meſſiah, Solomon's antitype, Matt. iii. 17. and xvii. 5.

℣. 26. And Joab fought againſt Rabbah of the children of Ammon, &c.] Of his being ſent againſt it, and of his beſieging it, we read in ch. xi. 1. but it can hardly be thought that he had been ſo long beſieging it, as that David had two children by Bath ſheba; but the account of the finiſhing of it is placed here, that the ſtory concerning Bath-ſheba might lie together without any interruption: and took the royal city; or that part of it in which the king's palace was, and which, as Abarbinel obſerves, was without the city, as the palaces of kings now uſually are.

℣. 27. And Joab ſent meſſengers to David, &c.] To acquaint him how he had proceeded, and what ſucceſs he had had: and ſaid, I have fought againſt Rabbah; laid ſiege to it, and ſkirmiſhed with parties that ſallied out upon them: and have taken the city of waters; the ſame with the royal city, and ſo the Targum here renders it; ſo called becauſe ſituated by the water-ſide; Adrichomius ſays [x] the river Jabbok flowed round about it: or it abounded with fountains of water, from whence the other part of the city, or what was properly the city Rabbah, was ſupplied with water; and which communication being cut off, it could not hold out long, which Joab being ſenſible of, therefore ſent for David. Junius and Tremellius render the words, I have intercepted the water from the city; with which the account of Joſephus [y] agrees, who ſays, that he cut off the water from them, and precluded other ſupplies, ſo that they were in great diſtreſs for want of food and drink; and in like manner it was taken by Antiochus ſome hundreds of years after; for the hiſtorian ſays [z] the ſiege by him laſted long, and they could not prevail, becauſe of the multitude of men in it, until one of the priſoners ſhewed them a ſubterraneous paſſage, through which they came and fetched water; which they ſtopt up with ſtones and ſuch like things, and then through want of water it yielded.

℣. 28. Now therefore gather the reſt of the people together, &c.] The reſt of the ſoldiers in the land of Iſrael, and come to Rabbah: and encamp againſt the city; inveſt it in form: and take it; upon a ſurrender, or by ſtorm; for it could not hold out long: leſt I take the city, and it be called after my name; ſo great a regard had Joab, though an ambitious man, to the fame and credit of David his king: ſo Craterus [a], at the ſiege of Artacacna, being prepared to take it, waited the coming of Alexander, that he might have the honour of it.

℣. 29. And David gathered all the people together, &c.] The ſoldiers that were with him, or near him; which was done partly to recruit Joab's troops, who, by the continuance of the ſiege, and the ſallies of the enemy on them, might be greatly diminiſhed, and partly to make conqueſts of other cities of the Ammonites, and to carry off the ſpoil of them: and went to Rabbah; which muſt be after the death of Uriah, and very probably during the time of Bath-ſheba's mourning for him: and fought againſt it, and took it; by aſſault.

℣. 30. And he took their king's crown from off his head, &c.] The crown of Hanun the king of the Ammonites, who now fell into his hands, and whom he ſtripped of his enſigns of royalty, who had ſo ſhamefully abuſed his ambaſſadors: (the weight whereof was a talent of gold with the precious ſtones:) or, and a precious ſtone, there might be more, as our verſion ſuggeſts, but there was one in it remarkably large and valuable; Joſephus [b] ſays it had in it a very precious ſtone, a ſardonyx; and this, according to the Talmud [c], was of the value of a talent of gold. A talent was equal to 3000 ſhekels, as appears from Exod. xxxviii. 25, 26. and was in value, according to Brerewood [d], of our money, 4500 pounds; but according to biſhop Cumberland [e] 5067 pounds three ſhillings and ten pence. This crown was of the ſame value with the golden candleſtick in the tabernacle, Exod. xxv. 39. and ſome think that value here is meant, and not the weight, a talent of gold being very heavy; according to biſhop Cumberland [f], 93 pounds 3 quarters; ſome ſay 113 pounds 10 ounces, and more; too great a weight to be borne on the head by Hanun or David; but what with the gold and precious ſtones about it, it might be equal in value to a talent of gold; but weight is expreſly mentioned, and the crowns of the eaſtern princes were of great bulk bulk and weight, as well as value: Athenæus [g] makes mention of one made of 10,000 pieces of gold, placed on the throne of king Ptolemy, and of ſome of two cubits, of ſix, yea, of ſixteen cubits. Some [h] are of opinion that this crown was not the crown of the king of Ammon, but of Milcom or Molec, their idol, and that the proper name ſhould be retained in the verſion, and that David had a crown made of it he could bear: but if, as others [i], the Syriac talent is meant, which was but the fourth part of an Hebrew one, the difficulty is greatly leſſened; for it ſeems to be the ſame crown David afterwards wore, as follows: and it was ſet on David's head; to ſhew that the kingdom was tranſlated to him, or was become ſubject to him; as Alexander, on the conqueſt of Darius, put the Perſian diadem on his own head [k], in token of that monarchy being tranſlated to him: though, after all, the phraſe, from off, may be rendered from above or over [l] his head, and ſo it was ſet above or over the head of David, being ſupported by ſome means or other, that its weight did not bear thereon. However, Paſchalius, who wrote a learned work de coronis, muſt be miſtaken, when he ſays [m] this ſeems to be the firſt uſe of a crown in the kingdom of Judah, there being no mention of a crown before, either of Saul or David, only of anointing; ſince expreſs mention is made of Saul's crown, ch. i. 10. though his obſervation may be juſt, that this crown, allowed to be worn by David, was a pledge of the renewal of his royal dignity, and of his acceptance with God upon his repentance for his above ſins: and he brought forth the ſpoil of the city in great abundance; which, or at leaſt part of it, was dedicated to the building of the ſanctuary, ch. viii. 11, 12.

[x] Theatrum T. S. p. 34. [y] Antiq. l. 7. c. 7. §. 5. [z] Polyb. hiſt. l. 5. p. 414. [a] Curt. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 6. [b] Ut ſupra. [c] T. Bab. Avodah Zarah, fol. 44. 1. [d] De ponder. & pret. vet. num. c. 4. [e] Of ſcripture-weights and meaſures, c. 4. p. 121. [f] Ib. p. 119.

℣. 31. And he brought forth the people that were therein, &c.] Not all the inhabitants of the place, but the princes of the children of Ammon, the counſellors of Hanun, who adviſed him to uſe David's ambaſſadors in ſo ſhameful a manner, and others that expreſſed their pleaſure and ſatisfaction in it: and put them under ſaws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron; whereby they were cut aſunder, as ſome were by the Romans and others [n], or their fleſh torn to pieces, and they put to extreme pain and agony, and ſo died moſt miſerably; ſee 1 Chron. xx. 3. and made them paſs through the brick-kiln; where they burnt their bricks, by which they were not only ſcorched and bliſtered, but burnt to death; ſo the word in the Keri, or margin, ſignifies, which we follow; but in the text it is, they cauſed them to paſs through Malcem, the ſame with Milcom or Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon, 1 Kings xi. 5, 7. unto which they made their children paſs through the fire, and burnt them; and now in the ſame place they themſelves are made to paſs through, and be burnt, as a righteous puniſhment of them for their barbarous and wicked idolatry. The word uſed in the Greek verſion, according to Suidas [o], ſignifies an army, or a battalion of men drawn up in a quadrangular form, like a brick; and in the ſame ſenſe Joſephus [p] uſes it; hence a learned man [q] conjectures that David's army was drawn up in the like form, through which the Ammonites were obliged to paſs, and as they paſſed were aſſailed with darts, and killed; a like puniſhment to which is what the Italians call paſſing through the piles: and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon; To the inhabitants of them; that is, the chief, who had expreſſed their joy at the ill uſage of his ambaſſadors: this he did to ſtrike terror into other nations, that they might fear to uſe his ambaſſadors in ſuch like manner. This action of David's ſhewing ſo much ſeverity, is thought by moſt to be done when under the power of his luſt with Bath-ſheba, in an hardened and impenitent ſtate, when he had no ſenſe of mercy himſelf, and ſo ſhewed none; which is too injurious to his character; for this was a righteous retaliation of this cruel people, 1 Sam. xi. 2. Amos i. 13. which may be obſerved in other inſtances, Judg. viii. 6, 7. 1 Sam. xv. 33. but the charge of cruelty in David will be eaſily removed, by following the tranſlation of a learned [r] man, and which I think the words will bear, and he obliged the people that were in it to go out, and put them to the ſaw, to cut ſtones; and to the iron-mines, to dig there; and to the axes of iron, to cut wood with; after he had made them to paſs with their king, out of the city. So David and all the people returned unto Jeruſalem; in triumph, and with great ſpoil.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter relates ſome of the evils that were to ariſe out of David's houſe, and which were ſimilar to the evils committed by him; the deflouring of his daughter, and the murder of his eldeſt ſon: the ſtory is this; Ammon falls in love with Tamar, his ſiſter, and grew lean upon it, which being obſerved by a friend of his, enquires the reaſon of it, which having got out of him, forms a ſcheme for obtaining his deſire, and which ſucceeded; for by it he had the opportunity of raviſhing his ſiſter, ℣. 1—14. the conſequences of which were extreme hatred of her, hurrying her out of doors, lamentation and mourning on her part, grief to David, and enmity in the heart of Abſalom to Ammon, which put him upon meditating his death, ℣. 15—22. and which was brought about after this manner. Abſalom had a ſheep-ſhearing, to which he invited the king and all his ſons, and to which they all came excepting the king, ℣. 23—27. when Abſalom gave orders to his ſervants to obſerve Ammon when he was merry, and at his word ſmite him and kill him, as they did, ℣. 28, 29. tidings of which ſoon came to the ears of David, and theſe aggravated, that all the king's ſons were killed, which threw the king into an agony; but Jonadab endeavoured to pacify him, by aſſuring him that only Ammon was dead, the truth of which ſoon appeared by the coming of the king's ſons, ℣. 30—36. but Abſalom fled to Geſhur, where he remained three years, when David's heart began

[g] Apud Paſchalium de coronis, l. 9. c. 8. p. 587. [h] Vid. Hieron. Trad. Heb. in 2 Reg. fol. 78. H. & in Paralipom. fol. 83. M. Weemſe of Jewiſh weights, p. 141. [i] Pfeiffer. difficil. ſcript. loc. cent. 2. loc. 87. [k] Diodor. Sic. l. 17. p. 549. [l] מעל deſuper, Montanus, ſupra caput David, Munſter. [m] Ut ſupra, l. 10. c. 10. p. 695. [n] Suetonius in vita Caii, c. 27. Vid. Herodot. l. 2. c. 139. [o] In voce πλινθιον. [p] Antiqu. l. 13. c. 5. §. 4. [q] Menochius de repub. Heb. l. 8. c. 3. col. 752. [r] Danzii Commentat. de mitigat. David in Ammon. crudel. Jenæ 1710, apud Michael. in 1 Chron. xx. 3. Vid. Stockium, p. 392.

4

began to be towards him, and to long for him, who was to bring more evil against him, ℣. 37—39.

℣. 1. And it came to pass after this, &c.] After the sin of David with Bath-sheba, his repentance for it, and pardon of it, and the birth of Solomon as a token of reconciliation; yet after all this the divine threatnings must take place; they had begun already in the death of the child begotten in adultery, and others here follow: that Absalom the son of David had a fair sister, whose name was Tamar; she was his sister both by father and mother's side; the mother of them was Maacah, the daughter of Talmai king of Geshur; she was a very comely person, her name signifies a palm-tree: and Amnon the son of David loved her; not in an honourable way, to make her his wife, but in a lustful manner, to make an harlot of her; he was David's eldest son by Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, ch. iii. 2.

℣. 2. And Amnon was so vexed, &c.] Distressed, straitned, and perplexed in his mind through unruly and unbridled lusts that raged in him: that he fell sick for his sister Tamar; as Antiochus son of Seleucus did for his mother-in-law Stratonice, who, to cure him of it, was delivered to him by his father [s]: for she was a virgin; and so kept very recluse from the company of men, that he could not come at her; so Philo [t], speaking of the Jewish women, and particularly virgins, says, that they were shut up in their chambers, and through modesty shun the sight of men, even those of their own house; hence they are called עלמות, from a word which signifies to hide; and Phocylides [u] the poet advises to the shutting of them up in like manner: and Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing to her; that it was difficult to have access to her, almost impossible, what he despaired of, and what, if attained to, would be wonderful and amazing; he was at his wits end how to contrive any scheme to get at her, and obtain his desire.

℣. 3. But Amnon had a friend, &c.] Though in the issue his friendship proved his ruin: whose name was Jonadab the son of Shimeah, David's brother; so that they were own cousins, the same with Shammah, 1 Sam. xvi. 9. and Jonadab was a very subtil man; a very penetrating man into the dispositions of men, and could judge by their countenances what they were, and the affections of their minds, and had a talent in forming schemes; he was wise to do evil, was wickedly cunning.

℣. 4. And he said unto him, Why art thou, being the king's son, lean from day to day? &c.] Or morning by morning [w]; he was the king's eldest son, heir to the crown, fed at his table, had every thing to make him gay and chearful, and yet pined away; his flesh wasted [x], his countenance waxed wan and pale, and especially in the mornings; in the day-time he met with diversions which, in some measure, took off his thoughts from the object his mind was impressed with, but in the night-season they were continually employed about it; so that he could have no rest and sleep, which made him look ruefully in the morning; and this man had a suspicion of his case, and therefore put this and the following question to him: Wilt thou not tell me? who am so nearly related to thee, and who have such a particular value and affection for thee: and Amnon said unto him, I love Tamar my brother Absalom's sister; he does not call her his sister, but Absalom's sister, to lessen his sin of unlawful love to her, which, being thus closely pressed, and by a friend, he could not conceal.

℣. 5. And Jonadab said unto him, &c.] Being a subtle man, he presently formed a scheme to relieve him, and open a way for the enjoyment of what he desired: Lay thee down on thy bed, and make thyself sick; feign thyself sick, pretend that thou art so, by lying down on the bed, and making complaints of one kind or another: and when thy father cometh to see thee; as he quickly would, after hearing of his illness, being very affectionate to his children: say unto him, I pray thee let my sister Tamar come, and give me meat; here he is directed to call her not Absalom's sister, but his own, the more to cover his ill design upon her: and dress the meat in my sight, that I may see it, and eat it at her hand; pretending that his stomach was very weak and squeamish, that he could not eat any thing which his servants dressed for him, and which he did not see done with his own eyes.

℣. 6. So Amnon lay down, and made himself sick, &c.] Took the advice of his cousin Jonadab, and acted according to it: and when the king was come to see him; as he quickly did, after he had heard of his illness: Amnon said unto the king; who perhaps enquired of his appetite, whether he could eat any thing, and what; I pray thee let my sister Tamar come; he calls her sister, as Jonadab had directed, the more to blind his design; though it is much that so sagacious a man as David was had not seen through it; but the notion he had of his being really ill, and the near relation between him and Tamar, forbad his entertaining the least suspicion of that kind: and make me a couple of cakes in my sight; heart-cakes, as the word may be thought to signify; called so either from the form of them, such as we have with us, or from the effect of them, comforting and refreshing the heart: that I may eat at her hand; both what is made by her hand, and received from it.

