SATURDAY MORNING, SEPT. 11, 1897.

FOURTEEN PAGES.

Probably very few members of the (unofficial) currency commission will need an introduction to Secretary O'Connell. Certainly ex-Senator Edmunds and ex-Secretary Fairchild will not. He knows them already. So does President McKinley.

Mr. Bryan never appeared to better advantage than in that Western railroad wreck. It is a fresh reminder of the truth that the most perverse and mischievous opinions may co-exist with really fine and attractive traits of character.

Beth Low's letter of acceptance is awaited in New York with something more than curiosity. It is awaited with alert, impatient public expectancy. There is a general feeling that it will act immediately and powerfully upon the situation; perhaps bring unexpected things to pass.

If Lieutenant Sobral of the Spanish Legation at Washington, or any other inquisitive Spaniard, has been snooping around our new coast defenses in a surreptitious, suspicious manner, the duty of the government is plain. The offender has forfeited his right to hospitality by abusing it. No alien spies are wanted in the United States. As fast as they are caught, they should be headed for home and made to "walk Spanish."

It isn't at Brown University alone that the right of free scholarly investigation and free opinion has been vindicated this year. For months past a great pressure has been brought to bear upon the trustees of the University of the South (at Sewanee, Tenn.) for the dismissal of the professor of history, Mr. Trent, because of irreverent utterances of his about the old slaveholding South, its ideas, politics and leaders. At their meeting, the other day, the university corporation promptly re-appointed Professor Trent to the chair of history for a term of five years. "We sincerely hope his election will do the university no harm," says a surprised and relieved contemporary at Charleston, S. C. "Perhaps its trustees are wise to disregard the feeling of the South, expressed through its press, without a known dissent."

THE SHAKING UP AT HARRISBURG.

If the boss of New York isn't getting, in this crisis of his fortunes, all the sympathy he feels entitled to from the boss of Pennsylvania, he must make allowances. The boss of Pennsylvania has troubles of his own. Governor Hastings is on the war path again.

When the late Quay Legislature—the Legislature of scandals and second-classness—convened at the state capital, the pay-rolls of the two houses were loaded up with the names of political heifers. Mr. Corey of Pittsburg called notice to the fact in open session, and said that it meant the use of thousands of dollars of the state's money for the payment of purely (impurely) political debts; that many of the so-called legislative employees had not done an hour's work for the state. None of the Quays cared to answer Mr. Corey. After a while the heifers became clamorous for their pay. State Treasurer Haywood was urged to "advance" it to them. He declined to do the risk; where would he be if the governor should draw the veto pen through all those off-color items in the general appropriation bill? The politicians said they would fix that all right; they would give him an indemnity bond. So General Reeder, secretary of the commonwealth, Mr. Elkin, deputy attorney-general, one of two state senators and other solvent Quays, signed an agreement to pay Haywood $20,000 if the governor vetoed the items. With this document in his pocket, Haywood was happy to oblige. The heifers got their money, the items were vetoed, and the signers of the indemnity bond are out the $20,000.

The other day Governor Hastings curiously asked Secretary Reeder to send in his resignation. No reason was given for the request; it wasn't necessary. The resignation was sent in on one. Yesterday Mr. Elkin, deputy attorney-general, sent in his resignation. He tells the reporters that the governor asked for it, and stops right there. Reeder exists to do the will of Quay, sneezing whenever the senator takes snuff and always ready to jump at the crook of his finger. Reeder wrote the platform at the last republican state convention. "We heartily endorse," he wrote, "the intelligent, businesslike and efficient administration of our fiscal affairs under the management of the accounting officers of the commonwealth. Auditor General Mylin and State Treasurer Haywood deserve the thanks of the people." Elkin is Quay's vicar in the chairmanship of the republican state committee.

Quay himself is in Florida this fall, but he has probably heard the news. Trust the faithful and now martyred Reeder and Elkin for that. It's mighty interesting news. It contains the promise and potency (if we may be permitted to fish up an alliterative phrase out of the past) of another monkey and part of time in Pennsylvania politics.

THE PRICE OF NEGLIGENCE.

A combination of burglars was broken up by the New York police the other day and various letters of the gang were found. In one, a robbery of a house was projected and the burglar closed with this statement: "I also think it would be a profitable job if executed for no man would put a safe in his house unless he had something very valuable."

glars, who was tied, gagged and plundered as reported in yesterday's "Courant," is quoted as saying: "I myself fortunately in so small a loss as he had a box full of bonds and other valuable papers stored in his bedroom which were not located by the burglars."

There's a lesson in these two paragraphs that ought to be taken home by every thrifty person—that a house, the home of a family, is not the suitable, as it is no longer the necessary, place for especially valuable things. "Every city of any size has now one or more institutions provided with safe deposit vaults. For a very small price anybody of respectable character can get a box in such a vault. It can put his valuables there and they will be guarded by every form of protection that experience has developed, including combination locks, time locks, electric alarms, special watchmen, etc."

Everybody knows this by this time. Those who neglect the opportunity for safety invite robbery, and are very apt to get it. Their own carelessness or stinginess contributes largely to their misfortunes. The trouble needn't come at all.

LOOKING FOR A SIGN.

"The Courant" discussed the other day the unnecessary misfortune that befalls travelers through the lack of any rule as to entrance and departure from railroad cars. We have yet to find a traveler who isn't interested, or a railroad man who is interested, to have some system established and to end the present rough and tumble rushing. And there's another matter, in which travelers are much inconvenienced, though the railroads are only incidental and minor offenders in this case. That is the absence of all indications of the names of towns that trains pass through. Nearly always the railroad company has a little gilt or wood sign nailed up on the station, but these are out of the way places usually shaded by a roof, and seldom legible to one in a fast moving train. A passenger on a local train that stops at all stations can hunt these out and read them, but he probably knows them already, and, further, the brakeman shouts them to him, as he approaches. This last, however, doesn't count for much, for he shouts in brakeman's language, which is generally less intelligible than Chocoway.

But the traveler on the through train dashes through city after city, past beautiful towns, and in sight of noteworthy parks or buildings, and he has no way to learn what it is that he is seeing. Signs abound and they bespeak pitifully our paucity in the resources of language. There's a line of stork titles for saloons, hotels and similar establishments that exhibit their names, but seldom do these use the name of their own town. Even on our New York, New Haven & Hartford road, it is often impossible to tell between here and New York what place you are at. It is the same between New York and Washington or Chicago.

Truly there is a sign here at home. As you whiz into this city you read the astonishing statement:—

HARTFORD TIRES.

But that leaves the stranger to think he is approaching New Haven, which is publicly exhibiting its old time prejudice against the latter day capital. Hartford tires? Never. It's simply inexhaustible, abounding in resources, infinite in variety, active to the point of restlessness, and incapable of being tired itself, though possibly a trifle wearying to other communities that have not the forward impulses which keep Hartford on the go.

But that's another matter. What we started in to do was to recall attention to the annoying fact that all over the country town upon town is losing its identity, losing its opportunity to be known, through the neglect to bring its name into conspicuous position near the railroad. It should be done not less for the convenience of the traveler than for the advancement of local interests.

WHY THERE IS NO PANIC IN NEW ORLEANS.

Half a century ago, a third of a century ago, the news that yellow fever had broken out in a town only 84 miles distant would have paled every face in New Orleans, and sent all the wealthier citizens hurrying northward. Yet the New Orleans papers tell us that the people have taken the news from Ocean Springs, and the discovery of suspicious cases in their own town, with admirable coolness and courage. There has been more or less of anxiety, of course, and it may be that some of the timider citizens are now well on their way to the New Jersey or New England coast. But there has been no such epidemic of mental and physical terror as would have been seen fifty years ago—no panic and no general flight. The New Orleans papers explain why.

Fifty years ago the yellow fever and the cholera were mysterious diseases. The doctors did not understand them, or know how to fight them. Even thirty years ago, as the "Pionyear" reminds us, an eminent physician wrote learnedly about the journey of a cholera cloud across the Atlantic and up the Mississippi valley. For all practical intents and purposes the germ theory was unknown. Modern scientific research had not yet armed the doctors with the weapons now so familiar and so effective. The precautions against pestilence were primitive, feeble and futile. When it arrived, the truth was kept from the people as far and as long as possible, under the mistaken idea that it would increase their terror.

All that is changed now. The yellow fever is no longer a mysterious, awful scourge of God; it is a disease, like any other. It has been studied, and the way to fight it has been studied. Quarantine, isolation, disinfection—these words have a meaning now that they did not have fifty years ago. Instead of hushing up the truth about fever cases, boards of health and newspapers publish it. "The old policy of concealment, of calling the yellow fever by different names, or not reporting it at all, it was epidemic here, brought New Orleans to the verge of ruin," says one of the journals. "The policy of vigor and truth destroyed the last seeds of the disease and made New Orleans the healthy city it is to-day." Again and again, in recent years the fever has made its appearance in New Orleans, in Jacksonville, in other coastal cities, only to be grappled, isolated and stamped out. It is the remembrance of this, in their confidence in the sanitary methods, the medical science and the efficient men of to-day, that is now keeping the people calm and of a good courage.

The New Orleans papers call attention to one matter that certainly deserves it, viz., the urgent importance of loyal co-operation among the governors and legislatures of the Gulf states in keeping the watch of the coast. The "Times-Democrat" says that it is now nearly twenty years since the yellow fever or any other tropical disease has slipped through the vigilant quarantine at the mouth of the Mississippi. The "Pionyear" says that hitherto it has zealously advocated state quarantines (as against federal quarantine) both on principle as a state right and from an unwillingness to run any risk of a sacrifice of the interests of New Orleans to those of the great Northern seaports. "But," it says, "if Southern ports, for the sake of gaining a little commercial advantage, shall jeopardize the health and safety of New Orleans and the great valley of which it is the ocean gateway, federal interference might be more objectionable."

WHAT THE RUSSIANS MEAN TO DO.

A correspondent of the "Birmingham Post" of England states on the authority of a Russian official that work is soon to be begun in earnest on the great canal to connect the Baltic and the Black Seas, between which there is already an imperfect communication by the head-waters of the Volga. The canal will cost about $50,000,000 and will be 1,110 miles long and twenty-seven feet deep and will admit of the passage of the largest iron-clad; it will be more to the purpose it will carry steamers laden with wheat to the ocean. The government and the districts through which it passes will build this great waterway. It behooves us to hurry up with the Niagara ship canal if we wish to compete with Russia in supplying the English market. The Russians seem to have the ability to plan great enterprises and to carry them out, too. Witness the Trans-Siberian Railway.

CONCRETENESS.

Miss Floyd of Jersey City has written a parody on Rudyard Kipling's "Vampire," treating the question of a life made miserable by the unworthiness of the loved one from the woman's side. There is such a side and in real life it is quite as often presented as is the opposite one. Perhaps it is more pathetic to see a woman of delicate nature sacrificed to a hard, selfish man than to see a sensitive and refined man waste his love on a narrow, selfish woman, but there is little to choose between the cases. They are both tragedies. The contrast, however, brings out one element of Kipling's power, the better that Miss Floyd's "Reveries" is an excellent piece of verse. Kipling takes up a special case and illustrates it with concrete images. Miss Floyd is general in her expressions and does not seem to have a particular case of suffering present to her imagination.

GUNS FOR GREAT GULL.

Yoyagers through the Race, at the eastern end of the Sound, who know Great Gull Island as a desolate, barren stretch of rock and sand, eight miles from the mainland, desire to take life from the island, the birds from which it takes its name, will see the place, should they sight it within a few days, teeming with human activity and industry. Buildings will cover the inhospitable waste, smoke from engine furnaces will rise from tall chimneys and deeply laden boats will discharge their cargoes at the pier.

Uncle Sam, long the owner of the uninviting strip, is preparing to transform it into a strong fortification. Two powerful 12-inch guns will soon be in place. They will be pointed toward the shore to shoot. It is estimated that twenty thousand cubic yards of earth will have to be removed before the foundations of the emplacement turned to the sea. The trenches excavated will be filled with concrete, mixed with salt water and pounded down in twelve-inch layers. Upon this foundation will be constructed the heavy masonry necessary for the guns in places twenty-five feet square and so solid as to be all enduring.

No Clue to the Westport Mystery. Westport, Sept. 10.—Mrs. Daniel O'Brien, the woman who was found unconscious Wednesday in the house in which she lived with her husband, is yet living, but hope of her recovery has been abandoned by Dr. Boy, Connecticut physician. Deputy Sheriff Kemper is still at work on the case and while he has little to say for publication, his attitude seems to be indicative of his belief in the sanity of the president.

Neighbors tell of frequent quarrels between Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien and these are those who think an arrest should speedily be made.

Twenty-fifth Regiment Reunion. The Twenty-fifth C. V. held its thirty-second annual reunion at Ansonia Thursday. The attendance was a representative one, 130 in number, many coming from neighboring states. The following officers were elected: George W. Holman, president; Captain Ezra Sprague, first vice president; Henry J. Wood, second vice president; William S. Ward, chaplain; A. E. Smith, secretary.

The next reunion will be held in conjunction with the 57th Connecticut Veterans at a place to be decided upon later.

A Home Question. (The Evangelist.) Whose man are you? Do you own yourself? Or are you owned by a boss, who tells you to think on every question, and whom to vote for? If you are the latter, then you are like so much putty, or as clay in the hand of a potter. He can make of you what he will give up the claim to be a man at all. If you have no opinions of your own, then you are a slave indeed, only fitted to be driven, with all your cowardly bred, like a drove of cattle.

Hot in New Haven. New Haven, Sept. 10.—At 1 p. m. the official thermometer at the local office of the United States weather bureau registered a temperature which is a record here for the season. The mercury at that hour stood at 89 degrees, one degree hotter than yesterday, which was the hottest of the year up to that time.

ENTERTAINMENT COURSE.

Low Prices for a Series of First-Class Performances. The Eastern Entertainment Company, with offices at Boston, Worcester, Springfield and Hartford, has arranged a series of ten entertainments to be given in Foot Guard Hall this season. The president of the company, George W. Brit, is the New England representative of the Redpath Bureau, and this largely accounts for the low price at which the tickets for this course are sold. The admission ticket to the ten entertainments costs $1, that is 10 cents an evening, reserved seats cost 15 cents or 20 cents extra each evening, which makes the best seats in the house, cost 30 cents for each entertainment. Reservations for the course will be made which entitle the holder to the same seat through the entire course. The cost is at the same rate as for single entertainments; that is $2.50 or $3 for the entire course. There is surprise that so much first-class talent can be furnished for so little money; but when you know that this company is co-operating with two other companies in the same business and engages performers for three weeks, instead of for single dates, the reason is apparent. The course may be arranged at the Brook's Chicago Marine Band will be one of the musical features of the season.

SELLING WINDOW FRAMES.

Ceremony in Connection With a Synagogue Now Holding. The congregation of the Children of Israel had another ceremonial at its new synagogue lot on Market street near Chicago's silk mill, Thursday night. About two weeks ago nearly 2,000 Hebrews, including the members of the congregation, gathered on the lot to buy the window frames and around the lot to buy the window frames. The lot was beautifully decorated with Chinese lanterns and the only entrance to it was through an archway of flowers. At the front end of the lot at the financial committee, Mendel Orenstein, Abraham Hias and Israel Brody, around a large round table on which stood the long candles and plates for subscriptions, were seated. Two young men, Herman Kopelman of No. 23 Pawtucket street and Charles Fein of No. 89 Morgan street, both hard workers for the synagogue, were selected to receive the money. The money was delivered short addresses. The selling of the window frames began about 9:30 o'clock and First Trustee Isaac Rosenfeld of the congregation was selected as auctioneer. The weather being very warm a number of the wealthier members of the congregation were not present and only two window frames were sold. The rest of the window frames were sold in the same manner in about two weeks. The two window frames brought about $35. One of the financial committee took a "Courant" reporter that about $75 was taken in from donations.

HONORS ITS HEROES.

Barkhamsted Dedicates an Imposing Shaft. BARKHAMSTED, Sept. 10. To-day was a red letter day in the history of this good old town and its usual quietude was dispelled by the voices of many visitors who came to help the townspeople indulge in an occasion which does honor to the town. A soldiers' monument was dedicated, and a particularly interesting feature of the occasion was that not only were the patriots who gave up their lives in the late war honored, but those who had gone to the front in the three previous wars and who had been slain because of their country's liberty and honor, were especially honored to such an extent that their names are established in the memories of the present generation and will be held sacred by the generations that are to come by being placed on bronze tablets on the monument. The victories of Monmouth and Saratoga, of New Orleans, of Chancellorsville, and of Antietam, Bull Run and Gettysburg are all placed on an equal footing, respected and revered by all.

The project of a soldiers' monument had its inception two years ago and from that time till the present the loyal citizens have been at work trying to further the scheme. Till at last they see the results of their labor in an imposing shaft on a slightly place overlooking the valley to the south. It is in the front of the cemetery, on a knoll that makes it prominent to view from the "Hollow" road. Early in the morning the people were up and doing, preparing for the entertainment of their expected guests, who began to arrive about 8 o'clock. From that hour on they flocked in until there must have been a crowd of about a thousand people present. In this crowd were to be noticed several of Barkhamsted's old "boys," all of whom have been more or less honored by their citizens. There were Governor Lorrin A. Cooke, who for twenty-seven years claimed Barkhamsted as his home; Walter S. Carter, the prominent New York lawyer, back at the scene of his boyhood days; the Rev. Lemuel Richardson of Brooklyn, William Wallace Lee of Meriden and Judge Slade of Bridgeport.

The Monument.

The monument is a tall shaft of dark Barre granite, about twenty feet in height, coming to an apex at the top, and located on a cap which rests on a pile set on four bases, the one above the other, the ground base being round. The shaft is plain. There is no decoration

SKINS ON FIRE

It was accepted by Wallace Case in behalf of the ladies of the town of Hartford, Conn., that the program of the "Our Heroes" closed the program. The unveiling of the shaft occurred during the exercises and the visitors were greatly pleased with its appearance.

The time between the breaking of ranks and 1:30 was taken up by the serving of the collation. Long tables set between the town hall and the school house were laden with refreshments which were most grateful, were loaded with the good things the women of that section can so well prepare and simple justice was done.

As the time for the afternoon exercises drew near the people began to fill the temporary seats between the hall and the church. A platform had been erected on the east side of the church for the speakers of the day, and there, about 1:30 o'clock President Ripley began the exercises by extending a most hearty welcome to all present and in so doing called special attention to the reason for the holding of the exercises.

These instances show the spirit which animated the great mass of the common people, a deep, earnest determination to maintain our national character and to preserve the honor of our country. There is not time to follow the long story of four weary years, the at times despairing walls when it almost seemed as if God had forsaken us, and the survivors returned to receive the welcome plaudits and congratulations of an undivided and redeemed nation.

Who Made the Historical Address.

of hope often deferred, we dedicate and set apart for all coming time, a monument bearing the names of those of our boys who helped to win that struggle. Let the morning sun touch it with its gladsome rays and its departing beams shed its mellow light. Here, near where the forefathers of the hamlet sleep, let it stand through all the coming years—here let children and children's children come to read the names and hear the story of the men who helped to make, defend and preserve the best government yet given to man.

The reading of the above was followed by the reading of an original poem composed by Emma Carter Lee, wife of the Rev. S. H. Lee, president of the French-American College of Springfield, who did the reading. An excerpt from it is:

"Thank God, these hills and valleys gave birth to the men who helped to win that struggle. Thank God, they rest among us here, and now again a voice rings clear, 'Remember the men who helped to win that struggle, and let it stand as a monument to our patriot band.'"

And now where the one church stood so long to teach God's love and hate of wrong, to worship, breathe the Sabbath rest, and live and die as the savior.

To mark two centuries' sacrifice, to make above the stars to call attention to the great event in the world's history, the landing of the Pilgrims being the bravest of all the world's deeds, and it is from such stock that the settlers of Connecticut came. The Pilgrims of American freedom was not in Independence Hall but in the Boston convention, when James Otis uttered his fierce denunciation of British writs of assistance in the house of Congress, in Virginia, where Patrick Henry thundered forth his opposition to the acts of oppression of the crown.

Following the history of the country along through various vicissitudes, from man to man, he came down to localities and touching upon the event of the day he said: "I rejoice with exceeding great joy that the sons and daughters of Barkhamsted have come at length to the performance of the duty of erecting, on this sacred spot, a fitting memorial to its savior dead. Many of our sister towns have reared monuments to the soldiers of our war; we hold this in all the massive simplicity and impressive dignity of those of Washington and Lincoln, to the memory of the soldiers of our war. For us, and our children and our children's children, the place shall ever be a cherished shrine; and as we gather around it we shall recall the valor and patriotism of those for whom it has been erected, and take our part in the grand pageant of whatever demand our beloved country may in turn make on us. The brave men whom it has risen to honor have men who will remain to tell the story of their deeds to succeeding generations, and point to a fame shining as the sun, radiant as the moon and enduring as the stars."

Governor Cooke's Remarks.

President Ripley thought that the crowd could ill afford to let an opportunity to hear Governor Cooke speak pass, and so introduced his excellency. The governor was quite facetious at the outset. He regretted that he had not been born in the town of Hartford, but that if he had to go through the operation again he would come to Barkhamsted.
