and a start of the start of the

MY EVER HONOURED FELLOW-CITIZENS,

T is not without the most humiliating conviction of my want of ability that I now appear before you : But the fense I have of the obligation I am under to obey the calls of my country at all times, together with an animating recollection of your indulgence exhibited upon for many occasions, has induced me once more, undeferving as I am, to throw myself upon that candor which looks with kindness on the feeblest efforts of an honest mind.

You will not now expect the elegance, the learning, the fire, the enrapturing strains of eloquence which charmed you when a LOVELL, a CHURCH, or a HANCOCK spake; but you will permit me to fay that with a fincerity, equal to their's, I mourn over my bleeding country; With them I weep at her her diftress, and with them deeply resent the many injuries the has received from the hands of cruel and unreasonable men.

THAT perfonal freedom is the natural right of every man; and that property or an exclusive right to dispose of what he has honeftly acquired by his own labor, necessarily arises therefrom, are truths which common fense has placed beyond the reach of contradiction. And no man or body of men can, without being guilty of flagrant injustice, claim a right to dispose of the perfons or acquisitions of any other man, or body of men, unless it can be proved that such a right has arisen from some compact between the parties in which it has been explicitly and freely granted.

IF I may be indulged in taking a retrofpective view of the first fettlement of our country, it will be easy to determine with what degree of justice the late parliament of Great Britain have assumed the power of giving away that property which the Americans have earned by their labor.

Our fathers, having nobly refolved never to wear the yoke of defpotifm, and feeing the European world, at that time, thro' indolence and cowardice, falling a prey to tyranny ; bravely threw themfelves upon the bofom of the ocean ; determined to find a place in which they might enjoy their freedom, or perifh in the glorious attempt. Approving Heaven beheld the favourite ark dancing upon the waves, and gracioufly preferved preserved it until the chosen families were brought in fafety to these western regions. They found the land fwarming, with favages, who threatned death with every kind of tor-But favages, and death with torture, were far lefs terture. rible than flavery :---Nothing was fo much the object of their abhorence as a tyrant's power :---They knew that it was more fafe to dwell with man in his most unpolished state than in a country where arbitrary power prevails. Even anarchy stfelf, that bugbear held up by the tools of power (though truly to be deprecated) is infinitely lefs dangerous to mankind than arbitrary government. Anarchy can be but of short duration; for when men are at liberty to purfue that courfe which is most conducive to their own happines, they will foon come into it, and from the rudeft ftate of nature, order and good government must soon arise. But tyranny, when once established, entails its curse on a nation to the latest period of time; unless some daring genius, inspired by Heaven, shall unappalled by danger, bravely form and execute the arduous defign of reftoring liberty and life to his enflaved, murdered country.

THE tools of power in every age have racked their inventions to justify the FEW in sporting with the happiness of the MANY; and, having found their sophistry too weak to hold mankind in bondage, have impioufly dared to force religion, the daughter of the king of Heaven, to become a profititute in the fervice of Hell. They taught that princes, honoured honoured with the name of christian, might bid defiance to the founder of their faith, might pillage pagan countries and deluge them with blood, only because they boasted themselves to be the disciples of that teacher who strictly charged his followers to do to others as they would that others should do unto them.

THIS country, having been discovered by an English subjeft in the year 1620, was (according to the fystem which the blind fuperstition of those times supported) deemed the property of the crown of England. Our anceftors, when they refolved to quit their native foil, obtained from King James a grant of certain lands in North-America. This they probably did to filence the cavils of their enemies, for it cannot be doubted, but they despised the pretended right which he claimed thereto. Certain it is that he might, with equal propriety and justice, have made them a grant of the planet Jupiter. And their fubsequent conduct plainly shews that they were too well acquainted with humanity and the principles of natural equity to suppose that the grant gave them any right to take possession; they therefore entered into a treaty with the natives and bought from them the lands: Nor have I yet obtained any information that our anceftors ever pleaded, or that the natives ever regarded the grant from the English crown: The business was transacted by the parties in the same independent manner that it would have been, had neither of them ever known or heard of the island of Great Britain. HAVING

Bur

HAVING become the honest proprietors of the foil, they immediately applied themselves to the cultivation of it; and they foon beheld the virgin earth teeming with richeft fruits, a grateful recompence for their unwearied toil. The - fields began to wave with ripening harvests, and the late barren wilderness was seen to blossom like the rose. The favage natives faw with wonder the delightful change, and quickly formed a scheme to obtain that by fraud or force, which nature meant as the reward of industry alone. But the illustrious emigrants soon convinced the rude invaders that they were not lefs ready to take the field for battle than for labor; and the infidious foe was driven from their borders as often as he ventured to difturb them. The crown of England looked with indifference on the conteft; our anceftors were left alone to combat with the natives.----Nor is there any reason to believe, that it ever was intended by the one party, or expected by the other, that the grantor should defend and maintain the grantees in the peaceable poffession of the lands named in the patents. And it appears plainly from the history of those times that neither the Frince nor the people of England thought themfelves much intercfted in the matter. They had not then any idea of a thousandth part of those advantages which they fince have and we are most heartily willing they should still continue to reap from us.

AN O'R A T I O N. 10

Bur when at an infinite expence of toil and blood, this: widely extended continent had been cultivated and defended: When the hardy adventurers justly expected that they and their defcendants should peaceably have enjoyed the harvest of those fields which they had fown, and the fruit of those vineyards which they had planted, this country was then thought worthy the attention of the British ministry; and the only justifiable and only fuccessful means of rendering the colonies ferviceable to Britain were adopted. By an intercourse of friendly offices, the two countries became so united in affection that they thought not of any distinct or seperate interests, they found both countries flourishing and happy. Britain faw her commerce extended and her wealth increased; her lands raised to an immense value, her fleets riding triumphant on the ocean, the terror of her arms fpreading to every quarter of the globe. The colonist found himself free, and thought himself secure : He dwelt under his own vine and under his own figtiee and had none to make him afraid : He knew indeed that by purchasing the manufactures of Great Britain he contributed to its greatnefs: He knew that all the wealth that his labour produced centered in Great Britain : But that far from exciting his envy filled him with the highest pleasure; that thought fupported him in all his trials. When the business of the day was past, he solaced himself with the contemplation or perhaps entertained his listening family with the recital

of fome great, fome glorious transaction which shines confpicuous in the history of Britain : Or perhaps his elevated fancy led him to foretell, with a kind of enthusiastic confidence, the glory, power and duration of an empire which should extend from one end of the earth to the other : He faw, or thought he faw, the British nation risen to a pitch of grandeur which cast a veil over the Roman glory, and, ravished with the praview, boasted a race of British Kings, whose names should eccho through those realms where Cyrus, Alexander, and the Cæsars were unknown;

Princes for whom millions of grateful fubjects redeemed from flavery and pagan ignorance, fhould with thankful tongues offer up their prayers and praifes to that transcendantly great and beneficent being by whom Kings reign and Princes decree justice.

THESE pleafing connections might have continued; these delightfome profpects might have been every day extending, and even the reveries of the most warm imagination might have been realized; but unhappily for us, unhappily for Britain, the madness of an avaricious minister of state has drawn a sable curtain over the charming scene, and in its stead has brought upon the stage, discord, envy, hatred and revenge, with civil war close in their rear.

Some demon in an evil hour suggested to a short sighted financier the hateful project of transfering the whole property of the King's subjects in America to his subjects in Britain. The claim of the British parliament to tax the colonies can never be supported but by such a TRANSFER; for the right of the house of commons of Great Britain to originate any tax or to grant money is altogether derived from their being elected by the people of Great Britain to act for them, and the people of Great Britain cannot confer on their representatives a right to give or grant any thing which they themselves have not a right to give or grant perfonally. Therefore it follows that if the members. chosen by the people of Great Britain to represent them in parliament have by virtue of their being fo chofen, any right to give or grant American property, or to lay any tax upon the lands or perfons of the colonists, it is because the lands and people in the colonies are bona fide, owned by, and justly belong to the people of Great Britain. But (as has been before observed) every man has a natural right to perfonal freedom, confequently a right to enjoy what is acquired by his own labor. And as it is evident that the property in this country has been acquired by our own labor, it is the duty of the people of Great Britain to produce fome compact in which we have explicitly given up to them a right to dispose of our persons or property. Until this is done every attempt of their's, or of those whom they have deputed to act for them to give or grant any part of our property is directly repugnant to every principle of realon reason and natural justice. But I may boldly fay that such a compact never existed, no, not even in imagination. Nevertheless the representatives of a nation, long famed for justice and the exercise of every noble virtue, have been prevailed on to adopt the fatal scheme; and although the dreadful confequences of this wicked policy have already shaken the empire to its center ; yet still it is persisted in. Regardless of the voice of reason----deaf to the prayers and fupplications----and unaffected with the flowing tears of fuffering millions, the British ministry still hug the darling idol; and every rolling year affords fresh instances of the absurd devotion with which they worship it. Alas ! how has the folly, the diffraction of the British counfels blasted our fwelling hopes and fpread a gloom over this western hemisphere. The hearts of Britons and Americans, which lately felt the generous glow of mutual confidence and love, now burn with jealoufy and rage. Though but of yefterday I recollect (deeply affected at the ill boding change) the happy hours that past whils Britain and America rejoiced in the prosperity and greatness of each other, (Heaven grant those halcyon days may foon return.) But now the Briton too often looks on the American with an evious eye, taught to confider his just plea for the enjoyment of his earnings as the effect of pride and stubborn opposition to the parent country. Whilst the American beholds the Briton as the ruffian, ready first to take away his property, and next, what is is dearer to every virtuous man, the liberty of his country.

WHEN the measures of administration had disgusted the colonies to the highest degree, and the people of Great Britain had by artifice and falfhood been irritated against America, an army was fent over to enforce fubmillion to certain acts of the British parliament, which reason scorned to countenance, and which placemen and penfioners were found unable to support.

MARTIAL law and the government of a well regulated "City are so entirely different, that it has always been considered as improper to quarter troops in populous cities, as frequent disputes must necessarily arise between the citizen and the doldier, even if no previous animofities fubfift. And it is further certain from a confideration of the nature of mankind, as well as from conftant experience, that ftanding armies always endanger the liberty of the fubject. But when the people on the one part, confidered the army as fent to enflave them, and the army on the other were taught to look on the people as in a ftate of rebellion, it was but just to fear the most disagreable consequences. Our fears, we have seen, were but too well grounded.

THE many injuries offered to the town I pais over in filence. I cannot now mark out the path which led to that unequaled scene of horror, the fad remembrance of which, takes the full possession of my soul. The fanguinary theatre again opens itself to view. The baleful images of terror croud around me, and discontented ghosts with hallow groans appear to solemnize the anniversary of the FIFTH of MARCH.

APPROACH we then the melancholy walk of death. Hither let me call the gay companion, here let him drop a farewel tear upon that body which fo late he faw vigorous and warm with focial mirth----Hither let me lead the tender mother to weep over her beloved son----Come widowed mourner, here fatiate thy grief; behold thy murdered husband gasping on the ground, and to complete the pompous show of wretchedness bring in each hand thy infant children to bewail their father's fate---Take heed, ye orphan babes, least whilst your streaming eyes are fixed upon the ghastly corpse, your feet slide on the stones bespattered with your fathei's brains. * Enough? This tragedy need not be heightened by an infant weltering in the blood of him that gave him birth. Nature reluctant shrinks already from the view, and the chilled blood rolls flowly backward to its fountain. We wildly stare about, and with amazement, ask, who fpread this ruin round us? What wretch has dared deface the image of his God? Has haughty France or cruck Spain fent forth her myrmidons? Has the grim favage rushed again from the far distant wilderness? Or does fome fiend, fierce from the depth of Hell, with all the rancourous

No. None of the fe---but, how aftonishing ! It is the hand of Britain that inflicts the wound. The arms of George our rightful King have been employed to flued that blood which freely would have flown at his command when justice or the honour of his crown had called his fubjects to the field.

But pity, grief, aftonifhment, with all the fofter movements of the foul muft now give way to ftronger paffions. Say, fellow-eitizens, what dreadful thought now fwellsyour heaving bofoms---You fly to arms----Sharp indignation flafhes from each eye----Revenge gnafhes her iron teeth----Death grins an hideous finile fecure to drench his greedy jaws in human gore--Whilft hovering furies darken all the air.

But flop, my bold adventurous countrymen, flain not your weapons with the blood of Britons. Attend to reafon's voice----Humanity puts in her claim---and fues to be again admitted to her wonted feat, the bofom of the brave. Revenge is far beneath the noble mind. Many perhaps, compelled to rank among the vile affaffins, do from their inmost fouls, deteft the barbarous action. The winged death, flot from your arms, may chance to pierce fome breast that bleeds, already for your injured country.

And could it have been conceived that we again fhou'd have feen a British army. in our land, fent to inforce obedience to acts of parliament deftructive of our liberty. But the royal ear far distant from this western world, has been affaulted by the tongue of flander; and villains, traiterous alike to king and country, have prevail'd upon a gracious prince' to cloath his countenance with wrath, and to erect the hostile banner against a people ever affectionate and loyal to him and his illustrious predecessors of the house of Hanover. Our streets are again filled with atmed men: Our harbour is crouded with so f war; but these cannot intimidate us; our liberty must be preferved; it is far dearer than life, we hold it even dear as our allegiance; we must defend it against the attacks of friends as well as enemies; we cannot fuffer even BRITONS to ravish it from us.

No longer could we reflect with generous pride on the heroic actions of our American fore-fathers,—no longer boalt our origin from that far famed island, whole warlike fons have fo often drawn their well-tried fwords to fave her from the ravages of tyranny; could we but for a moment entertain the thought of giving up our liberty. The man who meanly will fubmit to wear a fbackle, contemns the noblest gift of Heaven, and impiculty affronts the God that made him free.

IT was a maxim of theRoman people, which eminently conduced to the greatness of that state, never to despair of the common-wealth. The maxim may prove as falutary to us now, as it did to them. Short fighted mortals see not the numerous links of small and great events, which form the chain on which the fate of kings and nations is suspended. Ease and prosperity, tho' pleasing for a day, have often funk a people into effeminacy and floth. Hardships and dangers, (tho' we forever strive to shun them,) have frequently call'd forth such virtues, as have commanded the applause and reverence of an admiring world. Our country loudly calls you to be circumspect, vigilant, active and brave. Perhaps, (all gracious Heaven avert it) perhaps, the power of Britain, a nation great in war, by some malignant influence, may be employed to enflave you : But let not even this difcourage you. Her arms, 'tis true, have fill'd the world with terror : her troops have reap'd the laurels of the field : her fleets have rode triumphant on the sea-And when or where did you, my Countrymen, depart inglorious from the field of fight ?* You too can

* The Patience with which this People have borne the repeated Injuries which have been heap'd upon them, and their unwillingness to take any fanguinary Measures, has very injudicioully been alcribed to Cowardice, by Perlons both here and in Great-Britain. I most heartily wish that an Opinion fo erroneous in itself, and so fatal in its consequences, might be utterly removed before it be too late : And I think nothing further necessary to convince every intelligent Man, that the Conduct of this People is owing to the tender Regard which they have for their Fellow Men, and an ulter Abhorrence to the shedding of human Blood, than a little Attention to their general Temper and Disposition, discovered when they cannot be supposed to be under any Apprehension of Danger to themselves.-I will only mention the universal Detestation which they shew to every Act of Cruelty, by whom and upon whomsoever committed. The mild Spirit of their Laws, the very few Crimes to which capital Penalties are annexed, and the very great Backwardness which both Courts and Juries discover, in condemning Persons charged with capital Crimes. ---- But if any should think this Obfervation not to the Purpose, I readily appeal to those Gentlemen of the Army who have been in the Camp, or in the Field, with the Americans.

can shew the trophies of your forefather's victories and your own; can name the fortresses and battles you have won; and many of you count the honourable scars of wounds received, whilst fighting for your king and country.

WHERE juffice is the standard, Heaven is the warrior's shield : But confcious guilt unnerves the arm that lifts the fword against the innocent. Britain united with these colonies, by commerce and affection—by interest and blood, may mock the threats of France and Spain : May be the seat of universal empire. But should America either by force, or those more dangerous engines, luxury and corruption, ever be brought into a state of vassage, Britain must lose her freedom also. No longer shall she fit the empress of the sea :---Her ships no more shall wast her thunders over the wide ocean :---The wreath shall wither on her temples :---Her weakened arm shall be unable to defend her coasts : and she at last must bow her vencrable head to fome proud foreigner's despotic rule.

Bur if from past events we may venture to form a judgment of the future, we justly may expect that the devices of our enemies will but increase the triumphs of our country. I must indulge a hope that Britain's liberty as well as ours, will eventually be preferved by the virtue of America.

THE attempt of the British parliament to raise a revenue from America, and our denial of their right to do it, have excited an almost most universal enquiry into the rights of mankind in general, and of British subjects in particular; the necessary result of which must be such a liberality of sentiment, and such a jealously of those in power as will, better than an adamantine wall, secure us against the future approaches of despotism.

THE malice of the Boston Port-Bill has been defeated in a very confiderable degree, by giving you an opportunity of deferving, and our brethren in this and our fifter-colonies an opportunity of bestowing those benefactions which have delighted your friends and aftonished your enemies, not only in America, but in Europe alfo. And what is more valuable still, the fympathetic feelings for a brother in distress, and the grateful emotions excited in the breast of him who finds relief, must forever endear each to the other, and form those indisfoluble bonds of friendship and affection, on which the prefervation of our rights fo evidently depend.

THE mutilation of our charter has made every other colony jealous for its own; for this, if once submitted to by us, would set on float the property and government of every British settlement upon the continent. If Charters are not deemed sacred, how milerably precarious is every thing founded upon them.

EVEN the fending troops to put these acts in execution is not without advantages to us. The exactness and beauty of their Difcipline infpire our youth with ardor in the pursuit of military knowledge. Charles the Invinsible, taught Peter the Great, the art.

art of war. The battle of Pultowa convinced Charles of the proficiency Peter had made.

OUR Country is in danger, but not to be defpaired of. Our enemies are numerous and powerful—but we have many friends, determine to BEFREE, and Heaven and Earth will aid the RESOLUTION. On you depend the fortunes of America. You are to decide the important queftion, on which reft the happinefs and liberty of millions yet unborn. Act worthy of yourfelves. The faltering tongue of hoary age calls on you to fupport your country. The lifping infant raifes its fuppliant hands, imploring defence against the monster flavery. Your fathers look from their cælestial feats with smilling approbation on their fons, who boldly stand forth in the cause of virtue; but sternly frown upon the inhuman miscreant, who, to fecure the loaves and fishes to himfelf, would breed a ferpent to destroy hisschildren.

BUT, pardon me, my fellow-citizens, T know you want not zeal or fortitude. You will maintain your rights or perifh in the generous ftruggle. However difficult the combat, you never will decline it when freedom is the prize. An independence on Great-Britain is not our aim. No, our wifh is, that Britain and the Colonies may like the oak and ivy, grow and increase in ftrength together. But whils the infatuated plan of making one part of the empire flaves to the other, is persisted in; the interest and fastery of Britain, as well as the Colonies, require that the wife measures recommended by the honourable, the continental Congress, be steadily pursued; whereby the the unnatural contest between a parent honoured, and a child beloved, may probably be brought to such an issue as that the peace and happinels of both may be established upon a lasting basis. But if these pacific measures are ineffectual, and it appears that the only way to safety is, thro' fields of blood, I know you will not turn your faces from your focs; but will undauntedly press forward, until tyranny is trodden under foot, and you have fixed your adored goddels LIBERTY, fast by a BRUNSWICK's side, on the American Throne.

You then, who nobly have espouled your Country's cause, who generously have facrificed wealth and ease-who have despiled the pomp and shew of tinfel'd greatness-refused the summons to the festive board, been deaf to the alluring calls of luxury and mirth, who have forfaken the downy pillow, to keep your vigils by the midnight lamp, for the falvation of your invaded country, that you might break the fowler's snare, and disappoint the vulture of his prey, you then will reach that harvest of renown which you so justly have deferved. Your country shall pay her grateful tribute of applause. Even the children of your most inveterate enemies, assaude to tell from whom they sprang, while they in fecret curse their stupid, cruel parents, shall join the general voice of gratitude to those who broke the fetters which their father's forg'd.

HAVING

AN O R A T I O N.

HAVING redeemed your Country, and fecured the bleffing to future generations, who fired by your example, shall emulate your virtues, and learn from you the heavenly art of making millions happy ;--with heart-felt joy, with transports all your own, you cry, the GLORIOUS WORK IS DONE. Then drop the mantle to fome young ELISHA, and take your feats with kindred spirits in your native skies.
